BAYLE's

DICTIONARY.

Volume the Fourth.

P—Z

BRIT [illegible]

AN

Hiſtorical and Critical DICTIONARY.

BY

MONSIEUR BAYLE.

Tranſlated into Engliſh, with many ADDITIONS and CORRECTIONS, made by the Author himſelf, that are not in the French Editions.

VOLUME the FOURTH.

P—Z.

M. Vr Gucht Sculp.

LONDON:

Printed for C. Harper, D. Brown, J. Tonſon, A. and J. Churchill, T. Horne, T. Goodwin, R. Knaplock, J. Taylor, A. Bell, B. Tooke, D. Midwinter, B. Lintott and W. Lewis. MDCCX.

BRITISH MUSEUM

P.

PACHECO (Alvarez) a Spaniſh Colonel and Kinſman[*] of the Duke of Alba, ſerv'd under him in the Low-Countries, and was ſent to Fluſhing, to be Commander of the Place, and alſo to haſten the building of a Citadel there in 1572: But before he Landed there had been an Inſurrection in the City, and the Spaniſh Garriſon was driven from thence. He was then in a maze, and found himſelf in the Power of the Enemies, who cauſed him to be Hang'd, without any regard to his Petition, that he ſhou'd be Beheaded upon the account of his Nobility, ſince they were not willing to ſave his Life for the Price he offer'd for it. Treſlon being angry [†] with the Duke of Alba, wou'd abate nothing of the Sentence, but Pacheco muſt take his turn at the Gallows with two other Spaniards. Meurſius relates this Matter at large; but he has confounded this Pacheco with a famous [β] Ingineer whom the Duke of Alba had brought from Italy, who was call'd Paciotti; he ſuppoſes that he who was Hang'd was call'd Paciottus. Mr. du Maurier obſerves ſome other (A) Miſtakes concerning our Spaniard, who probably was of the Family of the Cardinals Pacheco, mention'd by Moreri.

PADILLA (Mary de) Miſtreſs to Peter the cruel King of Caſtile, was educated at the Houſe of Alfonſus d' Albuquerque, when that Monarch fell in Love with her, during the Expedition of Aſturia. One of the King's Brothers took up Arms in that Country; and this Rebellion being ſupported by another Brother in Arragon, might have been of a miſchievous Conſequence; wherefore the Court thought it neceſſary to put a ſtop to it very quickly, and the King march'd in Perſon with an Army towards Aſturia [γ]. The Wife of Dom Alfonſus d' Albuquerque was in this Journey; and Mary de Padilla, one of the Maids ſhe had in her Service, was there alſo, who, by her Beauty, ſmote the cruel Heart of the Monarch. She did not make him Sigh long for her, for they lay together [δ] during that Journey. John de Hiniſtroſa Uncle, by the Mother's ſide, to the Maid, ſerv'd them [ζ] as a Procurer and Confident: This was done in the Year 1352. The Prince was already Contracted to Blanche of Bourbon [η] the Daughter of Peter the Firſt of that Name, Duke of Bourbon, and Siſter to the [θ] Daughter-in-Law of the King of France; but altho' (A) the Perſon, to whom he was Contracted, was as Beautiful as his Miſtreſs, and of a Houſe infinitely more Illuſtrious, yet he made no great haſte to conſummate the Marriage; neither did he take it well of Albuquerque [ι] that he ſhould preſs hard upon this Point: Albuquerque, I ſay, who was afraid leſt the Kindred of Padilla ſhould be promoted to the higheſt degrees of Favour. At laſt, the Marriage was celebrated [*] *Strada Dec.*1. *l.*7. ad ann. 1572.

[†] Becauſe the Duke had put this Treſlon's Brother to Death in 1568.

[β] Se maxime Albanum lædere exiſtimabat, ſi munitionum artificem tam inſignem, belli egregium miniſtrum & propinquo ſanguinis nexu, tempore tam alieno eriperet. *Meurſ. Guill. Auriac. l.*5.

[γ] Mariana ubi infra.

[δ] Eo in itinere Regis animus Mariæ Padillæ quæ in Albuquerquii familia educabatur, eximia pulchritudine captus, cum ea ad S. Facundi oppidum ſtupri conſuetudinem habere cœpit, ſponſæ immemor, noviſque amoribus amens. *Mariana, de rebus Hiſpaniæ l.*16. *c.*17. p.m. 80. ad ann. 1352.

[ζ] Internuncius, pravæque conſuetudinis conciliator. Id. ibid.

[η] Father Anſelm, Hiſt. Geneal. p. 260.

[θ] She had married the Son of K. John, who was Charles V.

[ι] *Id. ib. c.*17. *p.*81.

(A) Some other Miſtakes.] Thus he expreſſes himſelf: (a) "As to this Pacheco, I cannot ſufficiently "admire the diverſity of Opinions which I have "obſerv'd among the moſt famous Hiſtorians, who "have written of the Affairs of the Low-Countries; "for Grotius ſays, that he was a Savoyard, altho' "Bentivoglio, Strada, Meurſius, and Emanuel de Meteren agree, that he was a Spaniard. Cardinal "Bentivoglio ſays, That he was Beheaded; and others write, That he was Hang'd. Again, Meurſius calls this executed Kinſman of the Duke of "Alba, Paciotti, altho' all the others call him Pacheco, confounding this Pacheco and Francis "Paciotti of Urbino, Count of Montefabro, who was "ſo skilful in Fortifications and warlike Engines, "(b) that having built the Citadel of Antwerp, his "Name was given to one of the five Baſtions of the "Fortreſs, by order of the Duke of Alba, that the "Name of ſo great a Man might be perpetuated "to Poſterity. The four other Baſtions were call'd "the Duke, Ferdinand, Toledo, and Alba, being the "ſeveral Names of this Duke, without calling any "of them by the Name of King Philip his Maſter. "In fine, To return to this Pacheco, Emanuel de "Meteren, altho' he be a very exact Hiſtorian, calls "him Peter Pacheco, whom Famianus Strada, being "better inform'd, calls Alvarez. Properly ſpeaking, Grotius cannot be rank'd among the Hiſtorians who ſay that Pacheco was Hang'd. Secuti Hollandiæ oppidum, ſays he, (c) Fliſſingani quos ſurgentis arcis aſpectus & præſidium adventans commoverat; Pacieco Allobroge, operum Albanicorum peritiſſimo curatore ad ſupplicium rapto, in cauſam deſcendunt. Perhaps he call'd him Savoyard, becauſe he had read, that the Duke of Alba had obtain'd him of the Duke of Savoy. (d) Impetraverat à Duce Sabaudiæ Franciſcum Paciottum Urbinatem, Montiſfabri Comitem, arcium bellicarumque machinarum peritiſſimum. Thuanus furniſhes us with a new Variation, for he ſays, (e) that Peter Paciottus was kill'd in a popular Commotion, and that his Head was firſt fix'd on the top of a Spear, and afterwards upon the Walls of the City. Who knows but he thought that it was the ſame Ingineer, whom he had nam'd (f) Paciottus Allobrox, ſpeaking of the Citadel of Antwerp? He informs us, That this Paciottus had built, a little before, the Citadel of Turin, by the Order of Duke Emanuel Philibert. From hence, perhaps, Grotius took the word Allobrox, which no ways agrees with this famous Ingineer, for he was of Urbino. Another Hiſtorian (g) gives the Name of Iſidorus Paciottus to him who built the Citadel of Antwerp; and remarks, that he left two Sons behind him, who were excellent Ingineers; one, nam'd Vido Ubaldus, was kill'd at the taking of Calais in 1556. the other nam'd Frederick (h) was in Amiens the next Year, when the French retook that Town.

(A) Altho' the Perſon, to whom he was contracted, was as beautiful and of a birth.] The words of Mariana are theſe: (i) Vix Caſtellæ Rex nuptiarum celebritate peracta, novam nuptam faſtidivit, in Padillæ amorem effuſus, ſi regiæ ſtirpi compararetur, ignobilis, neque majori formæ pulchritudine. Tanti plerumque eſt præpoſtera animum libidini mancipari. He ſays elſewhere, (k) that ſhe was very Beautiful, very Honeſt, and that the Ambaſſadors of the King made choice of her among the ſix Daughters of the Duke of Bourbon, as moſt worthy to be his Spouſe: (l) E ſex quas habebat, eam expetituri quam regio toro idoneam fore maximè judicarent. Blanca concedente patre delecta. Note, That this Duke of Bourbon had ſeven Daughters, but ſince the eldeſt (m) was already married, we muſt not blame Mariana for mentioning only ſix: Neither muſt we cavil, becauſe the other Siſters of Blanche were not all old enough to be

(a) Du Maurier's Memoirs, pag. 48.

(b) Du Maurier took this from Strada, Decad. 1. l. 7.

(c) *Annal. lib.*2. *p.*50. edit. in 12. *Ann.*1658.

(d) Strada *dec.*1. *l.*6.

(e) Petro Pacioto quem Albanus arci exſtruendæ præfecerat, in tumultu occiſo, cujus caput conto præfixum & pro mœnibus ſtatutum eſt. *Thua. l.*54.

(f) *Thuan. l.*41.

(g) Angelus Galuccius de bello Belg. part 1. l. 8. Thuan *l.*116. *p.*747. calls him alſo Iſidorus.

(h) Galluc. ib. l. 9.

(i) Mariana de rebus Hiſpaniæ, l. 16. *c.*18. init. p.m. 81.

(k) Lectiſſima forma, ſanctiſſimis moribus, prudentiaque. *Id. ibid. l.*17. c. 4. *p.*100.

(l) *Id. ib. l.*16. c. 17. *p.*79.

(m) She was married in 1337, to Charles of France, who was King Charles the Fifth. See F. Anſelm's Hiſt. Genealog. p. 260.

brated in the beginning of June 1353, without any Pomp ‖: Some time before the Miſtreſs was brought to Bed of a Daughter ‡. The King quickly conceiv'd a very great diſtaſte of his Spouſe, for the very third Day after his Marriage, he made himſelf ready to run to his Miſtreſs, whom he had left in a Fortreſs on the Banks of the Tagus. The Queen his Mother, and the Princeſs Eleonor his Aunt being advertis'd of his Deſign, conjur'd him not to do ſo, and repreſented to him (B) the conſequences of this Conduct. He was no ways mov'd with their Prayers or their Reaſons; but only deny'd that he had form'd any ſuch Deſign, and then immediately went away with great Secrecy. Many Courtiers follow'd him, reſolving rather to humour his Paſſion, than to remonſtrate to him what he ought to do: Yet there were ſome who earneſtly perſuaded him to return to his Wife, and at laſt prevail'd with him to do it: But after he had ſpent two Days with her, he was carried back again to his Concubine, by the Power of his Paſſion *. Some thought that there was (C) Witchcraft in the caſe, others believ'd that he was jealous of his Spouſe, and that for this reaſon he could not endure her. Every Day he added new degrees to his unworthy Treatment of her, and at laſt † caus'd her to be Poyſon'd in 1361. All the World deplor'd the Fate of this Princeſs, thus taken out of the World at the Age of 25 Years γ. The Miſtreſs died a little after at Sevil π, and was Interr'd in a Monaſtery ‡ which ſhe had built: Her Funeral was ſolemniz'd thro' all the Kingdom, as if ſhe had been a lawful Queen, and her Children were educated (D) as preſumptive Heirs to the Crown ‡. She was ſo much in (E) favour that ſhe could do what ſhe pleas'd with the King. Diego de Padilla her Brother was

‖ Id. ib.
‡ Id. ib. p. 80.
* Id. ib. cap. 18.
† Id. ib. l. 17. c. 4.
γ Id. ib.
π Id. ib. c. 5.
‡ In Stadilli Monaſterio. Id. ib.
‡ Id. ib.

Marriageable (n), for this could never hinder the Ambaſſadors from preferring one of the youngeſt before all the reſt, if ſhe had appear'd to them better made and more beautiful.

(B) And repreſented to him the conſequences of this Conduct.] They told him, that he run the hazard of loſing not only his Reputation, but alſo all his Dominions; That the French would make War againſt him to revenge the Injury his Spouſe had receiv'd; That this would give occaſion to the Caſtilians to riſe up in Arms; and, That Men never fear to attack ſuch People whom they fancy to be abandon'd by Heaven upon account of the Crimes they have committed. This is only a rough Draught of the Thoughts of Mariana, and therefore I will now ſet them down in his own words: (a) Regina mater, Eleonora amita regis conſilio indicato, cum remotis arbitris per omnia numina & quicquid in terris ſanctum eſt, ne ſe, regnum, fortunas, nominis exiſtimationem præcipiti temeritate perditum eat, profuſis lacrymis obteſtantur. Quid orbi ſermonem, Gallis arma injuriam non laturis, civibus diſſidiorum materiam daret! Ignorare videlicet integra probitatis fama humana imperia conſtare, quos deſtitui à numine, quibus infenſum cœlum eſſe, ſemel fuerit perſuaſum, in eos homines mala omnia quaſi facto agmine impetum dare.

(C) Some thought that there was Witchcraft in the caſe, others believed that he was Jealous.] A Report was ſpread abroad, that Don Pedro was Bewitch'd, and that a Girdle poyſon'd by the Inchantment of a Jew, diſcover'd to this Monarch the Figure of a Dragon, (b) Non amplius biduo apud eam (Blancam) ſubſtitit, tanto impudici amoris impatientia veſaniaque ut injectam carminibus amentiam fama vulgaverit: zona Judæi cujuſdam arte medicata draconis ſpecie regiis oculis objecta. Some ſuſpected that the King had not entertain'd an Averſion for the Queen without a juſt Cauſe, ſince ſhe had been debauch'd by Frederic, Dom Pedro's Brother, and had by him a Son, the Head of the Houſe of the Henriques. Mariana rejects theſe two Opinions, and looks upon (c) the ſecond as impudent and raſh (d): Neutrum nobis veriſimile viſum eſt: ac credam potius ubi tetri amoris flamma pectori inſederit, non alia philtra amatoria quærenda neque alias offenſionis cauſas præpoſtere excogitandas, ut juvenis animus in furorem agi & de poteſtate mentis exiiſſe videretur. He's in the right to ſay, That the Love this Monarch had conceiv'd for Padilla, was ſufficient to diſturb his Mind, and poſſeſs him with a hatred for his Spouſe. Such an Immorality as this is a fruitful Source from whence an hundred other diſorders may ariſe. I wonder that Mariana forgot what is ſaid of this Girdle. The King (e) offer'd a thouſand Indignities to Blanche, by the Perſuaſion of a Lady whom he kept, call'd Padilla, who gave him to underſtand, That the Queen, out of ſpite to her, had caus'd a Jewiſh Inchanter to make a Girdle, adorn'd with Buttons of Gold to be given to him, which was ſo Inchanted, that as ſoon as he ſhould tie it about him, on a ſudden he ſhould loſe all his Strength and Underſtanding; and by this means ſhould fall under the Power of his Wife, who, for the future, ſhould govern him and all the Kingdom entirely according to her own fancy. The Author of the Hiſtory of Favourites has (f) Paraphras'd this fine Tale wholly to his own Mind: He ſays, That the next Day after the Marriage the Queen gave the King (g) a Girdle of precious Stones of great value, and of an ingenious Workmanſhip; that (h) Mary Padilla having learn'd of whom Dom Pedro had it, deſir'd it of him, that ſhe might imitate the Workmanſhip of it; that for raiſing Ramparts againſt the Inconſtancy of the Hearts of Kings, ſhe made uſe of a Jew, a profeſs'd Magician, who by his black and abominable Art, committed Crimes as horrid as his Soul. It was with this Diſciple of the Devil, continues he, that ſhe entruſted the Girdle of Dom Pedro; and the Charm put upon it was ſuch, that when he wore it, he fanſied himſelf to be encompaſſed and hurt by a Serpent, whereupon he made terrible outcries. There was no need of ſuch wicked Arts to deſtroy a Queen already ſo unhappy; Mary Padilla and all her Creatures told the King, that this Preſent of his Spouſe was a deadly favour, which ſhe had not poyſon'd in a Day. This Diſcourſe and the terrible effect of the Girdle, redoubled his Averſion to the Queen, ſo that he reſolved to ſhun her eternally. I ſhould not have alledg'd ſo long a Paſſage out of the Hiſtory of Favourites, if I had not known, that the ſame thing is related in a meer Hiſtory, I mean in ſuch a Work as does only tranſcribe Hiſtorians, without taking the liberty of mixing with Matters of Fact the Fictions of the Author's Brain. Read this following Paſſage, (i) "Diego de "Valera writes, That among the many Ornaments "which Queen Blanche brought from France, there "was a rich Girdle, which ſhe preſented to her "Spouſe, and that Mary Padilla getting it into "her hands, found a Jewiſh Magician, who put "ſuch a Charm upon it, that when the King wore "it, he thought himſelf encompaſſed with a Ser"pent; and having complain'd of it to his Favou"rites, moſt of 'em Related to Mary Padilla, "they perſwaded him, that it was a pernicious "Preſent of the Young Queen; which encreas'd his "Averſion to her, and carried his Contempt of her "to the laſt Extremity.

(D) And her Children were educated as Heirs preſumptive to the Crown.] This is what Mariana ſays, (k) Filii regio cultu, & in ſpem paterni regni educati. I think ſhe had but one Son and three Daughters. The Son was call'd Alphonſus, and was born at Tordeſilla in 1359: his Birth occaſion'd an extraordinary Joy to the King, which was quickly chang'd into great Sorrow; for he liv'd not very long. Garſias de Toledo, Great Maſter of the Order of St. James, was deſign'd to bring him up. (l) Beatrice, the eldeſt of all the Children, was born at Corduba, in 1353. (m) Conſtantia the ſecond Daughter was born the next Year: She was married to the Duke of Lancaſter, Son to the King of England (n). The third Daughter was nam'd Iſabel, and was born at Tordeſilla in 1555 (o).

(E) She was ſo much in favour with the King, that ſhe could do what ſhe pleas'd with him.] Her Brothers and Kinſmen were preferr'd to Dignities, and had the (n) Mariana l. 17. c. 4. ſays, That Blanche was poyſon'd in 1361, at the Age of 25 Years. She was therefore but 10 years old when the Ambaſſadors of Dom Pedro, King of Caſtile, made choice of her, in 1352. and therefore ſome of her younger Siſters were not marriageable.

(a) Mariana, l. 16. c. 18. p. 81.

(b) Id. ib. p. 82.

(c) Quibuſdam ſuſpicio fuit temeraria ſane & impudens regem non ſine cauſa à Blanca uxore repente alienatum: vitiumque illi à Friderico fratre illatum. Id. ib.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Paulus Æmilius B. 9. in the Life of Charles V. p. m. 548. I make uſe of the tranſlation of John Regnart.

(f) Printed at Amſterdam 1697.

(g) The Hiſtory of Favourites p. 8.

(h) Ib. p. 9.

(i) A Chronological Hiſtory of Spain by Madam... To. 2. pag. 272, 273. of the Edit. at Roterdam, 1694

(k) Mariana l. 17. c. 5

(l) Id. ib. c. 5.

(m) Id. ib. l. 16. c. 17.

(n) Id. ib. c. 18. p. 84.

(o) Id. ib. c. 21. p. 90.

γ was prefer'd to the Office of Great Chamberlain in 1353; and to the Dignity of Great Maſter of the Order of Calatrava the next Year. John Padilla, his other Brother, ‡ was made Great Maſter of St. James, in the room of Dom Frederick, the King's Brother, in 1354. His Marriage was no obſtacle to his Promotion to this Maſterſhip, altho' there was no Precedent, that it had been poſſeſs'd by Married Men. Nevertheleſs, we muſt not think that Mary de Padilla enjoy'd his Favour without any mixture of Trouble; for in 1357, another Miſtreſs appear'd more amiable than ſhe in the Eyes of Dom Pedro the Cruel. This Prince † abandon'd himſelf ſo much to the Paſſion he entertain'd for Alfonſa Coronella that he thought no more of our Mary γ, which we may eaſily conceive was very grievous to the firſt Miſtreſs. What ſhall we ſay then of the Anxieties which ſhe muſt have endured, whilſt Dom Pedro was ſo enamour'd (F) of a lovely Widow, that to enjoy her he made her believe, that he was not married, and that he could eſpouſe her: In effect, he did eſpouſe her; and tho' he quickly forſook her, yet he muſt have given rude Shocks to the Heart of his Concubine. I ſhall not refer my Reader to the Hiſtory of Favourites, printed * in 1697, for what is there ſaid of our Padilla is a Legend made up of a thouſand Romantick Tales: We muſt not therefore ſearch for the Truth in ſuch Works, but in ſuch Authors as Mariana. He confeſſes, That this Woman wanted nothing but Chaſtity to merit the Crown: Fæminæ, ſays he, ‡ præter injuriam pellicatûs, magnis animi & corporis dotibus, dignæque imperio.

γ Id. ib. l.16. c.18.

‡ Id. ib. c.21. p.86.

† Id. ib. l.17. c.11 p.94.

γ In ea Urbe (Hiſpali) Alfonſæ Coronellæ amoribus ita indulſit ut præ illa Padilla contemptui eſſet. Id. ib.

* At Amſterdam, by Paul Marret.

‡ Id. ib. l.17. c.5. p.101.

PADILLA (John de) one of the Ring-leaders of the Sedition which was rais'd in Caſtile in 1520. 'Tis ſaid, that his Wife perſwaded him to this Revolt, and that ſhe engag'd in it, becauſe ſhe had (A) ſeen him in a Dream Great Maſter of St. James. Some add, That ſhe had a Maid-ſervant who (B) practiſ'd Witchcraft, and foretold to her ſome great Advancement. However that be, this is certain, that there was not in that Confederacy any Lord who teſtified more Zeal (C) than this Lady, to deprive Charles V. of the Crown. She robb'd the Churches to get Money for maintaining the greateſt Intereſt at Court (p). Nothing was done in the Kingdom but according to their Proſpects: The Grandees and even the King's Brothers endeavour'd to inſinuate themſelves into the Good-liking of this Favourite, and ſpar'd neither for Preſents nor Submiſſions to obtain it. (q) Omnino ſe Rex & rempublicam Mariæ propinquis gubernandum tradiderat: eorum arbitratu belli & pacis conſilia gerebantur: proceres ipſique Regis fratres tempori ſervire, atque ad fortunæ motum ſe movere: ad Mariæ gratiam donis, officiis, aſſentatione aditum certatim captare. In favour of this Woman the moſt ancient Cuſtoms were trodden under Feet, even when they had great affinity with the Principles of Religion. Was it not for her ſake, that the Great Maſterſhip of the Order of St. James was made conſiſtent with Marriage (r)? It muſt be confeſs'd, this was a great Irregularity, and a great occaſion of Scandal and Diſcontent to the People. Thoſe who read ſuch kind of things are much leſs offended than moſt of thoſe who ſee them. But you muſt take notice, that I place this oppoſition between thoſe who read much, and thoſe who ſcarce read any thing at all. The latter fancy to themſelves that the Corruption of their Time is ſomething extraordinary; they imagine that other Countries are not ſubject to the like, and that other Ages have been preſerv'd from it. This is that which makes them Murmur the more; but thoſe who know by the reading of Hiſtory, that the Diſorders of their Times are common to all Ages, and to all Nations, more or leſs; thoſe, I ſay, lay hold of Patience, they are uſed to Toils, and harden themſelves againſt Matters of Scandal. To ſuch the domineering of the Concubines of Princes is no cauſe of Indignation, they know too many Examples of it: But thoſe who read nothing are furiouſly offended to ſee, that an unchaſte Favourite ſhould be Idoliz'd by Courtiers, becauſe ſhe beſtows all Offices. See (a) the Article of Diana of Poitiers.

(F) Don Pedro was ſo enamour'd of a lovely Widow.] (b) She was call'd Joan de Caſtro, and had been married to Don Diego de Haro. (c) Her Beauty and her Chaſtity were extraordinary: The King fell in Love with her, and having no hopes of ſatisfying his Paſſion but in the quality of a Husband, he feign'd that he was not married, and produc'd Proofs of the Averſion wherewith he had married Blanche of Bourbon. Two Biſhops were conſulted, who declar'd, That this Marriage was null. In purſuance of this Sentence he made haſte to eſpouſe the Widow; but he was quickly diſguſted at her, and did not continue with her but a few Days. Some ſay, that he forſook her the next Day after the Marriage (d). Nevertheleſs ſhe was with Child, and had a Son, who was a Comfort to her, tho' he proved the Sport of Fortune. (e) Copia faſtidium ut antea faciente, paucis apud novam nuptam diebus moratur, ſunt qui una tantum noſſe dicant. . . . Joannes filius ex iis nuptiis procreatus eſt, matri ſolamen, fortunæ ludibrium futurus.

(A) Becauſe ſhe had ſeen him in a Dream.] Let us ſee what Antony de Guevara wrote to her. (f) I know very well, that the firſt Aſſembly was held in your Houſe, in which place the Fire was kindled, which you did always blow up: Which made me many times enquire, what occaſion you had thus to diſturb the Kingdom; and I was anſwer'd by ſome of your Relations and Friends, that it was becauſe you dream'd or fancy'd you ſaw your Husband Great Maſter of the Order of St. James: And if this be true, it was in you great folly and madneſs; for 'tis poſſible, that inſtead of giving him this Commandery, or the Order, which is a Croſs, we ſhall give him another Croſs. Is it not a deplorable thing, that the Dream of a Woman ſhould be able to produce ſo great Tumults and Outrages through a whole Kingdom? The firſt that gave the riſe to this great Revolt was Dom Ferdinand d' Avalos; and he gain'd the Lady we have mention'd. The Lady ſeduc'd her Husband, who having brought over Don Pedro Giron, put all things in ſuch a Commotion, that they (g) talk'd of nothing leſs than erecting every great City of Caſtile into a Commonwealth. (h) Ferdinand d' Avalos was the firſt Inventor of the Rebellion, and I am well inform'd that it began in your Houſe; ſo that he furniſh'd the Wood, but you put the Fire under it. This Civil War, therefore, is one of thoſe which proceeded from frivolous Cauſes.

(B) A Maid-ſervant who practiſ'd Witchcraft.] This is what Guevara objects to her. (i) By ſome on this ſide I have been told, That you have a Woman-Slave, a great Witch, who ſaid, and aſſur'd you, that you ſhall ſhortly be Queen, and your Husband King, and ſo you ſhall ſucceed to the Kings of Spain, Dom Carlos and Lady Iſabel: And if it be ſo, that you give heed to ſuch Follies, which I cannot believe, have a care of the Devil, and his Deceits and Frauds. In another Letter he ſpeaks to her after this manner: (k) 'Tis ſaid, moreover, that you have a white Woman-Slave, or rather a fooliſh Slave, who is a great Witch: And 'tis ſaid, that ſhe told and aſſur'd you, That in a little time the Title of Excellency ſhould be given to you as to a Princeſs; and the Title of Highneſs to your Husband: So that you pretend to ſucceed to the Queen our Sovereign Lady, and your Husband promiſes himſelf, that he ſhall take the Place of Charles the Fifth.

(C) More Zeal than this Lady to deprive.] 'Tis very much to ſay ſo; for Dom Antonio d' Acugna, Biſhop of Zamora, was as violent in this Revolt, at Seventy Years of Age, as the youngeſt and moſt reſolute Brigadeer of the Army could be. Dom Guevara wrote him a Letter, of which it may not be

(p) See Mariana c.18. B.15.

(q) Id. ib. p. 82, 84.

(r) Joannem Padilliam Villageræ regulum in Friderici fratris locum D. Jacobi Magiſtrum ſubſtituendum curavit, & quidem conjugem contra ſuperioris temporis exempla. Novum exemplum legibus, moribuſq; validius fuit. ab eoque initium ſuſceptum ut conjuges iidem & Magiſtri eſſent. Mariæ in gratiam quæ novi Magiſtri ſoror erat majorum inſtituta violata. Mariana l.16. c.20. pag. 86.

(a) At the Remark N.

(b) Marian. ubi ſupra l.16. c.18.

(c) Vidua, cui forma comparari nulla poterat, inſigni pudicitiæ laude viduitatis incommoda ſuſtentabat. Id. ib

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Golden Epiſtles, B.1. p. m. 135. This Letter is dated March 10. 1522. The ſame thing is found in a Letter of the 3d Book p. m. 21. dated Jan. 15. 1522.

(g) Brant. foreign Captains T.1. p.173 He took this from the Letter of Guevara p. m.171. B.1.

(h) Guev. B.3. p.71.

(i) Ibid. B.1. p.187.

(k) Guev. B.3. p.21.

taining the Sedition; but ſhe committed this Sacrilege (D) devoutly. The behaviour of a Prieſt towards (E) Padilla was ſuch, that it deſerves to be related. The Rebellion of this Man and his Spouſe, who were both of a very illuſtrious Family, prevail'd moſt at Toledo *. The Husband had ſcarce any Merit, and the Wife was little worth, tho' ſhe highly valued herſelf; for ſhe was extreamly proud †. He was defeated near Villalar, and fell into the hands of the Conqueror; and two Days after he was Beheaded ‖; but his Wife eſcap'd into Portugal ‡. She was call'd Mary Pacheco, and was the Daughter of Tendillos de Mendoza, if we may believe Paulus Jovius, § who ſays alſo, that ſhe was Learned.

* The Count de la Roca, Hiſt. of Charles V. p. m. 45.
† Id. ib.
‖ Id. ib. p. 54.
‡ Id. ib. p. 56.
§ Quum Maria Paceca Tendilli Mendocii filia erudita ingenii & virilis animi mulier, Padillæ conjugis vexillum ne concitatæ multitudini deeſſet dux gerendo bello ſuſtuliſſet. Paul. Jovius Hiſt. lib. 19. fol. m. 7. verſo.

PADILLA

unpleaſant to ſee ſome Paſſages. To make Soldiers Prieſts, as he writes to him, (l) is a thing that is tolerable; but to make Prieſts Soldiers is a ſcandalous Action, which we ſhall not ſay, your Lordſhip hath permitted, but rather, you yourſelf have done it: Since you have brought more than Three Hundred Prieſts of Zamora to fight Tordeſilla: And when a good Prelate ſhould have employ'd them in the beginning of Lent to take Confeſſions, you have carried them away to begin the War. In the Aſſault made by the Knights and Governours of the Kingdom againſt your Party, I ſaw, with my own Eyes, a Prieſt, who being behind a Battlement, ſtruck to the Ground eleven of our Men with a Harquebuſs; and it was pleaſant to ſee, that at the ſame time he aim'd to hit them, he bleſs'd them, with a Harquebuſs, and after that he diſpatch'd them with a Bullet. I ſaw likewiſe, that before the Battle was ended this Jolly Prieſt receiv'd a Blow with an Arrow in his Forehead, which kill'd him ſo ſuddenly, that he had no time to confeſs, nor ſo much as to Croſs himſelf. . . . . . (m) I often ſaw you having a Spear upon your Shoulders, and never ſaw you with a Book in your hand, nor a Stole about your Neck; and what I ſhould not omit to tell, to the Soldiers that batter'd the Fortreſs of Ampudia, and fell down from a high place, you ſaid thus: Courage, my Boys, Courage, get up, get up, mount, mount, and fight valiantly as brave Champions, and if you die, let my Soul be with yours, ſince you have ſo juſt a Cauſe and ſo holy a Pretenſion. Now you know very well, my Lord Biſhop, that the Soldiers who died in that place were excommunicated by the Pope, as Traytors to the King, diſturbers of the Kingdom, ſacrilegious Perſons, Robbers, Enemies to the Commonwealth, and the ſource of all the Seditions in it. Wherefore 'tis plain enough, that a Biſhop who purſues ſuch Deſigns, was not very fearful or ſcrupulous of loſing his Soul, ſince he lov'd to die like a Soldier; and I do not wonder, that a Man choſe to die like a deſperate Soldier, who never valued his State. The Lady Mary Padilla (n) therefore muſt have been very furious, if ſhe equall'd the Rage of this Prelate. There were ſome other Women engag'd in this Faction, and who were moſt violent, as we have ſeen, ſays Brantome, (o) in our Civil Wars of the League, for what reaſon I cannot tell, but that they were wheedled and drawn in by the Sermons and Perſwaſives of ſome Preachers. Give heed to theſe laſt words, and note, that the Biſhop of Zamora was at laſt taken and Strangled (a).

(l) Id. ib. B. 1. p. 170.
(m) Ibid. p. 171.
(n) Thus Guevara calls her: Others call her Donna Maria Padrecco, as Brantome informs us, ubi ſupra, p. 174. Probably Guevara gave her the Name of her Husband. The Count de la Roca, Hiſt. of Charles V. calls her Mary Pacheco, and to this we muſt hold.
(o) Brant. Ib. p. 174.
(a) The Count de la Roca, Ib. p. 56.

(D) She committed this Sacrilege devoutly.] It is better to hear Brantome himſelf relating this, than to tranſlate his Style. (b) "Another "ſuch like and more comical Exploit is related of "Donna Maria Padilla, one of the honourable La"dies of Spain, and who was well-affected to the "Rebellion rais'd in Spain, at the beginning of the "Reign of the Emperor Charles, as Dom Antony "Guevara relates, who wanting Money to pay her "Soldiers, took all the Gold and Silver from the "Reliques of Toledo. But this was done with a "ſanctimonious and pleaſant Ceremony; for when "ſhe enter'd the Church ſhe claſp'd her Hands, co"ver'd her Face with a black Veil, or, to ſpeak "more properly, with a wet Sack, according to "Rabelais, with a ſad and mournful Countenance, "beating her Breaſt, weeping and ſighing, having "two great Torches lighted carried before her; "and then having genteely committed the Robbery, "ſhe retir'd no leſs genteely with the ſame Cere"mony, believing moſt firmly, that upon the ac"count of this doleful Ceremony, God was nowiſe "diſpleaſed with her. They might very well laugh "who could ſee her Act this ſame Myſtery: But "the beſt of it was, ſays the Story, that Thieves, "when they rob any thing do it with great Joy and "Chearfulneſs, and when they are puniſh'd they "Mourn; but this Lady, on the contrary, when ſhe "was Robbing, ſhe wept, and conſequently, if ſhe "had been puniſh'd ſhe muſt have laugh'd, contrary "the cuſtom of other Robbers, as appears. The firſt words of this Paſſage diſcover, that the Author had been ſpeaking of ſuch another Exploit; and every curious Reader would be glad to know what it is; wherefore for their ſakes who cannot preſently conſult Brantome, I will here ſet down what he had related. Antony de Leve being at the Siege of Pavia, (c) and wanting Money to ſatisfy and pay his Soldiers, inſomuch that even the German Foot mutinied, he invented a Trick which is mention'd in Hiſtories, tho' I ſhould ſay nothing of it; but the moſt pleaſant, as the Spaniards relate, was thus: que tomò toda la plata conſagrada de los Templos, prometiendo todas vezes con voto ſolemne à los ſantos, que ſi quedava vencedor, coſas harto majores que las que tomava, de que hizo batir dinero groſamente. That is to ſay, he took the conſecrated Silver of the Temples, promiſing, nevertheleſs, to the Saints, with a ſolemn Vow, to give greater things than he took, if he ſhould be Conqueror; and then of this Silver he coin'd Money, after a courſe manner. But he acted according to the Proverb, Paſſato il pericolo, gabbato il ſanto, and never paid any thing of it. What a payer of Debts was he! And in my younger Days it was ſtill ſaid in Pavia, that he left the Debt to be paid, and the Vow to be perform'd by the Emperor, becauſe it was for his Intereſt that he borrow'd and ſpent it.

(b) Brant. Foreign Captains, To. 1. pag. 127, 128. He took this from a Letter which Don Antonio Guevara wrote to this Lady. It is in the 1ſt Book of his Golden Epiſtles, p. 184 of the French Tranſlation Printed at Ant. 1591.
(c) Brant. ib. p. 126, 127.

(E) The behaviour of a Prieſt towards Padilla.] We will continue to make uſe of the words of Brantome, (d) "A Prieſt of the Village of Mediana . . . . was "ſo well affected to Don Juan de Padilla, one of the "principal Seditious Captains, that every Sunday, "at his Exhortation to the People, he did not fail "to recommend him, and the Holy Sedition of "which he was the great Favourer, with a Pater-"noſter and an Ave-maria, and continu'd theſe Pray"ers for the ſpace of a Month; at the end of "which it happen'd by chance, that the Troops of "the ſaid Padilla paſs'd thro' the Village of the "Prieſt, who eat up all his Fowls and Bacon, and "drank up all his Wine, and which is more than all "that, they carried away his Maid. The Sunday "after he made his Complaint at his Exhortation, "and related to the People all the damage theſe "Troops had done him; above all, the taking a"way of his Maid Catherine, naming her openly, "and admoniſhing the People, not to follow any "more the Party of Padilla, but the King's: After "this he gave all his Seditious Partiſans to the De"vil, and conjur'd all his People to cry, Long live "the King, and let Padilla periſh; which was done, "and all the reſt were ſent to the Devil. Such "like Actions have we ſeen done alſo in our Civil "Wars of the League, according to the Malice and "Diſcontent of ſome Perſons who had been robb'd, "for they renounc'd this Holy League and goodly "Confederacy like a Devil. That it may appear whether Brantome took too much liberty either in abridging or amplifying the Authors he tranſcrib'd from, I ſhall relate, word for word, the Narrative of Guevara, tranſlated by the Phyſician Guterry. (e) "A Biſcain Prieſt, being a half-witted Fellow, "had ſo great an Affection for John de Padilla, that "every Sunday, in his Diſcourſe to the People, he was "wont to ſay thus: My Brethren, I recommend to "you one Pater and one Ave-maria, for the Holy "Sedition and popular Commotion, that it may "never ceaſe; and I recommend to you another "Pater for the Majeſty of King John de Padilla, that "God would proſper him, and as much for the "Queen his Wife; for to tell you the truth, theſe "are our true and natural Kings, and all others, to "this Day, have been Tyrants. When theſe pray"ers had laſted near three Weeks, at the expira"tion of them John de Padilla happen'd to paſs thro' "the Village with his Horſe-Guards, and becauſe "the Soldiers, who lodg'd in his Houſe, carried a"way his Maid, drunk up his Wine, and forgot

"not

(d) Brant. ubi ſupra p. 175. He borrow'd this from the Golden Epiſtles of Guevara, B. 1. p. m. 173.
(e) Guevara. B. 1. p. 173.

PADILLA (Louiſe de) Counteſs d' Aranda, in the Seventeenth Century, was extreamly commended by the Spaniards, as may be ſeen in a (F) Paſſage of Dom John Laſtanoſa, which I ſhall tranſcribe.

PAGEAU (N.) one of the moſt Illuſtrious Advocates of the Parliament of Paris, died in the Month of July, 1683, μ when he was not very ancient. His Elogium taken from a Manuſcript, Inticuled, Portraits des Avocats, is to be found ε in the Mercure Gallant, and in a Piece ‡ of Father Bouhours.

μ Mercure Gallant, Month of July, 1683, pag. 128.
ε Ibid. pag. 129, &c.
‡ Intitled, The Art of Thinking well, in the compoſing of Ingenious Works. p. 395, &c. of the Holland Edit.

PAYS (René le) paſs'd for a Wit: He was of Bretagne, but ſcarce ever appear'd except in the (A) Province of Dauphine. He was employ'd there in the Treaſury. His Amitiez, Amours, & Amourettes, Printed in 1664, were the admiration of the Provinces, and deſerv'd the (B) Applauſe even of the chief City. There were ſome Ladies of the firſt Quality who read them with much pleaſure, and enquir'd of the Bookſeller what kind of Perſon the Author was: After he knew that the Dutcheſs of Nemours had this obliging Curioſity he ſent her a deſcription of his Perſon. The Piece is Intitled, Portrait de l' Auteur des Amitiez, Amours, & Amourettes. It is a Miſcellany of Verſe and Proſe; the Style is merry, like that of the Piece which had pleas'd that Princeſs. The ſucceſs of this firſt Book encourag'd Mr. le Pays to employ the Printers; but his Zelotide having not been reliſh'd, he abated of his ardour, and appear'd in Print but ſeldom. The Letter which he wrote to Mr. du Gue, Intendant of Dauphine, when an enquiry was made after the falſe Noblemen, was well enough eſteem'd: In it he proves the (C) nobility of his Muſe to deſcend from that of Voiture, and he collects together divers curious Facts con-

" not to eat up his Bacon and Pullets, and all that " he had, he told them the next Sunday, at his Exhortation, You know, my Brethren, how John " Padilla paſs'd thro' here this Week, and I believe " you are not ignorant that the Soldiers who lodg'd " in my Houſe, have not left me ſo much as one " Pullet, that they have alſo eaten up my Bacon, " and drunk up my four Barrels of Wine; and, " above all, the Wretches have carried away, as " you know, my poor Catherine. I tell you this, " my Friends, to the end, that for the future you " may not pray for him, but for the King Dom " Charles, and the Queen, Madam Joan his Mother, " who are our natural Kings.

(F) In a Paſſage . . . which I ſhall tranſcribe.] (f) " I have heard two ſorts of Readers complain of " the Works of Balthaſar Gracian: Some complain " of the Matter, others of the Style; thoſe becauſe " they infinitely eſteem his Books, and theſe becauſe they wiſh they had been a little more to " their purpoſe. The former, and among them the " Phenix of our Age, the Learned Counteſs de " Aranda, (1) whoſe Name is written with ſix immortal Pens, are offended becauſe Matters ſo " high, and which are proper only for Hero's, " become common by Printing of them; ſo " that the meaneſt Citizen can have, for a Crown, " thoſe things, which, becauſe of their excellency, " cannot well be in ſuch hands. This Complaint puts me in mind of thoſe who were offended with Mr. du Pin for publiſhing in French a new Bibliotheque of Eccleſiaſtical Writers. See the laſt Page of his Preface, and the News from (g) the Republick of Learning.

(f) John Laſtanoſa Preface to the Treatiſe of Gracian. Intitled, The Diſcreet. See the Preface of Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie, upon the Courtier.
(1) Donna Luiſa de Padilla.

(g) The Month of June 1686 Art. 4. p. 658.

(A) Except in the Province of Dauphine.] For this reaſon Mr. Allard has put him in the Catalogue of the Writers of that Province: The greateſt part of his Works, ſays he, were written in (b) Dauphine, either in Grenoble or Valence. This he might do according to Cuſtom; for thoſe who write a Bibliotheque of a certain Country, do commonly place in it the Strangers who ſojourned in that Country, when they compoſed or publiſhed Books. The following Paſſage of the Author of Friendſhip and Amours will not be impertinent: † What probability is there that a Wit ſo ſublime as that of Your Highneſs, a Genius to whom all the fineſt Wits of our Age do daily pay their Homage, and who is accounted at Court a Fountain of Learning, could find any thing agreeable in the Collection of my Trifles, and in the Works of a Man brought up in an obſcure Province: That a Wit originally of Bretagne tranſplanted into Gaſcogne, and afterwards into the Mountains of Dauphiné, could produce ſuch Fruits as ſhould ſatisfy ſo fine and nice a Palate? No, Madam, I ought not to believe it, my Preſumption would be too great, and I ſhould be afraid of being rude to you.

(b) Allard Bibliotheq. of Dauph. p. 169.

† Pays in his Letter to the Dutcheſs of Nemours, wherein he deſcribes himſelf.

(B) Deſerv'd the Approbation even of the chief City.] The Pariſians eaſily pardon the publiſhing of a good Book in a Provincial who has made a long ſtay in Paris, but they take it very heinouſly, that any Perſon, who never went out of his Province, ſhould be a good Author. They look upon it as an Attempt of dangerous Conſequence; one wou'd think that they imagine it to be a breaking looſe from Order, and withdrawing oneſelf from the lawful Authority of one's Superiors, and erecting in the Republick of Learning a Sect of Independants, which is ſo odious in the Church: They were therefore little inclin'd to judge favourably of the Friendſhips and Amours of our Author; for it was a Book that came to them from the Country of the Allobroges, it was the Work of an Author born in Bretagne, and from thence tranſplanted firſt into Guienne, and after that into the Mountains of Dauphine. Theſe are the Schools in which he became the Diſciple of Voiture, and wherein he form'd the Deſign of ſetting up for his Succeſſor. Thus theſe Prejudices were no ways favourable to him, and yet his Book ſold mightily in Paris, and he found many that approv'd it, both at Court and in the City: But I do not pretend to affirm, that he was neither Cenſur'd nor Deſpis'd there by many Perſons. Read theſe words of Mr. Gueret, (a) Whilſt one ſhall make ſilly Love-Letters for his Miſtreſs, and another ſhall write wretched Raillery to his Butcher, they ſhall no wiſe be guilty of any Conſpiracy againſt the State. He points to the Letters of Mr. Pays, and thoſe of Mr. Montreuil. In the next Page he is not ſo diſobliging, but his Praiſes are very aukward: Becauſe, ſays he, Amours, Amitiez, & Amourettes, paſs'd for an agreeable Title, does it thence follow, that Fleurs, Fleurettes, & Paſſetemps, ſhould be receiv'd after the ſame manner? Mr. Deſpreaux ſaid ſomething againſt Mr. Pays. He receiv'd the Rebuke with a good Grace; and he was never obſerv'd to be tranſported, nor to fly out into Reproaches, as the greateſt part of his Companions in Diſgrace did; but he anſwer'd (b) Civilly and Modeſtly. What I have ſaid of Paris, I think to be true of ancient Rome: I do not believe that in the Age of Cicero or Pliny the younger, the Romans would have taken it well, that the Poets and Orators, who liv'd beyond the Alps and the Pyrenees, ſhould have written fine Pieces before they had quitted their Native Soil.

(a) Parnaſſus Reform'd, p. m. 113.

(b) See his Letter to Mr. Tiger. It is the firſt of the 2d Book of the 2d Part of his new Pieces.

To confirm, by an authentick Proof, what I have ſaid of the great Succeſs of the firſt Piece of our Author, I need only cite a Journaliſt, who does not flatter at all. Let us ſee the beginning of an Extract which he made of another Piece of the ſame (c) Writer: (d) The Amours, Friendſhips, and Love-Frolicks of Mr. Pays, were ſo well receiv'd by all polite Perſons, that the Publick will entertain an agreeable Idea of this Conteſt between Wit and Judgment, as ſoon as it is known that he is the Author of it. It was ſaid, That Love had given him a Feather of his Wing to write his Amours; and therefore he makes Love and Reaſon quarrel ſo ingeniouſly, that none of the Reaſons of Wit are forgotten in this Work.

(c) Intitl'd A Conteſt between Wit and Judgment, Printed at Paris 1688

(d) Baſnage de Beauval, Hiſt. of the Works of the Learned, Sept. 1688. Art. 15. p. 129.

(C) The nobility of his Muſe.] The Letter which he publiſh'd upon this Subject was inſerted afterwards in the Edition (e) of his new Works, it is Intitled, The Titles of the Nobility of the Amorous Muſe, to my Lord Gue, Counſellor in ordinary to the King, &c. One who had read it when it was newly come concerning the Genealogy of the Poets, conſider'd as Poets. He did but imitate one of the fineſt Epiſodes of the Clelia of Mademoiſelle de Scuderi. Some time after he publiſh'd a new Collection of Pieces. It appears by ſome of his Letters, that he had been in Holland and England. The Accounts he gives of theſe Countries are too waggiſh and very unjuſt; and there is a mixture of Reflections in them which are ſomewhat ſerious, (D) but very falſe. This does a prejudice to the whole French Nation. He was of the Academy (E) of Arles. He was honour'd with the eſteem (F) of the Duke of Savoy, who made him a Knight of St. Maurice. He wrote a very pretty (G) Letter upon come out, aſſur'd me, that the Intention of the Author was to prove, that he was Noble upon the Account of his Muſe, and that therefore none ought to demand of him other Titles of Nobility, nor pretend to tax him if he did not produce any other Title. But having read this Work, I found nothing in it which ſignified this Intention. I cannot ſay whether this Author was Noble or no, for it is ſo long ſince I read his Works, that I cannot remember the places where he might ſay either in expreſs words, or equivalent Terms, I am a Gentleman. I remember a place where he mentions a Quarrel of his Brother, whom he ſpeaks of as a Gentleman; but there are an infinite number of ignoble Men that live nobly, who would ſpeak upon ſuch an occaſion with no leſs aſſurance. Here is what he writes in Anſwer to a (f) Letter of Conſolation: (g) The Care you have taken of my Brother's Quarrel and your goodneſs in endeavouring to compoſe it, are ſo great Obligations, that I can never acknowledge them enough. I am very ſorry that this little diſaſter ſhould have happen'd to him: But ſince he ought to be ſo prudent as not to involve himſelf in ſuch troubleſome Affairs, he ought alſo to have the Courage to vindicate himſelf when any Injury is done him; and I will never pardon him, if he ſuffers any diſgrace to remain upon this Account.

(e) It is the 25th of the 2d Book of the 2d Part.

(D) Reflections . . . . very falſe.] (h) “It is a thing at which I am exceedingly troubl'd, that the Jews are tolerated at Amſterdam and not the Catholicks: At Paris the Bawdy-Houſes do not ſo much fear the Conſtables, as thoſe Houſes at Amſterdam do wherein the Holy Maſs is celebrated. Yet I have obſerv'd, that Policy here is the greateſt Enemy of our Religion. The Hollanders do not ſo much hate Rome as Madrid; and I believe they would ſooner obey Alexander the Seventh, than Philip the Fourth: This is ſo true, that in a certain Company where I was lately, one having ſaid in Jeſt, that a Miniſter had obtain'd leave, a little while ago, to preach at Madrid, that the Inquiſition was going to be ſuppreſs'd, and that the Catholick King was ready to declare himſelf a Huguenot; an ancient Hollander anſwer'd him briskly, and from the abundance of his Heart, That if Spain turn'd Huguenot, Holland muſt be forc'd to turn Catholick. After this, you may judge, Sir, whether they be very firmly fix'd in their Religion, or very averſe to ours. It may be affirm'd, that they hate nothing ſo much as the Spaniſh Tyranny.” The Letter from which I take theſe words is not dated, and this is a common defect (1) in this kind of Works; but by the Circumſtances it may be known, that it was written in 1652; and hence you may judge whether our Author underſtood well what he ſaid. Would not any one think, that he took this Relation from ſome Book, compos'd in the time of the Duke of Alba, or before the end of the Truce which Henry the Fourth concluded between Philip the Third and the United Provinces? For at that time the ſcurrilous Writers might pretend, that the Hollanders hated the Tyranny more than the Religion of the Spaniards; and I do not doubt but they ſaid ſo in many Books: But 'tis certain, that when Mr. Pays was in Holland, the hatred to the Spaniſh Nation was quite worn out; for the hatred laſted no longer than the fear, which is long ſince diſſipated. After the taking of Boiſleduc, Maeſtricht, and Breda, and after the War which was declar'd againſt Spain by Lewis the Thirteenth, the United Provinces were ſure, that they ſhould never fall again under the Yoke of the Spaniards; they were more troubled with the fear that they ſhould be too much humbled, and that France ſhould make an advantage of their too low Eſtate, than with the fear that they ſhould recover what they had loſt. This uneaſineſs contributed as much as any other thing to the Treaty which they concluded at Munſter with Philip the Fourth, and ſince that time they have had more true and cordial Affection for the Spaniards, than for the French: which was moſt natural, and moſt agreeable to true Policy. 'Tis needleſs to refute this Author, as to the Complaints he makes of the force us'd againſt the Catholicks at Amſterdam, and as to his ſatyrical Reflections againſt the (a) Engliſh and (b) Dutch Women.

(E) He was of the Academy of Arles.] This is an Academy of fine Wits, ſettled according to the Model of the French Academy. None is admitted into it, no more than into that of Paris, but upon requeſting it. Mr. Pays knowing that his Admiſſion was wiſh'd for, and that his Demand, which he muſt make to that end, according to the Statutes, would be favourably heard, wrote to thoſe Gentlemen, and was immediately receiv'd into their Society. His Letter is dated from Grenoble the 12th of May 1668. It is (c) in the ſecond Part of his new Works, with the (d) Thanks which he wrote to the Academy.

(F) The eſteem of the Duke of Savoy.] If I do rightly remember it, he dedicated his Zelotide to that Duke, who wrote him a very obliging Letter. The Anſwer he made to this Prince, March 9. 1666, is the 19th Letter of the Second Part of his New Works. He made a Journey to Turin, in 1670. and thus he relates the Honours he receiv'd. (e) “Without Vanity, or with Vanity, if you pleaſe, I can aſſure you, I was receiv'd very obligingly by their Royal Highneſſes; and in their Names I have been invited to ſee the Feaſt of S. Hubert at the Venerie. It will be a moſt magnificent Feaſt: The Ladies there hunt the Stag with Equipages all Embroider'd with Gold and precious Stones. After the taking of the Stag, there will be for the ſpace of two days Feaſting, Balls, Dancing, Muſick, and Plays; which things are prepar'd a long while before: But after all this, will you believe me when I ſhall tell you, that His Royal Highneſs caus'd a Chamber to be appointed for me in the Palace, and order'd that Horſes ſhould be given me out of his own Stables for Hunting.”

(G) A very pretty Letter upon this Subject.] He was made (f) a Knight by the hand of the Marquiſs of St. Damien: He had for Godfather, one of that Lord's Sons, and another of his Sons honour'd and regal'd him with a Feaſt. 'Tis of him that he merrily demanded the Revenue of a Commandery, becauſe otherwiſe he would be uncapable of accompliſhing the Vow of Hoſpitality. Here follow ſome Paſſages of his Letter, but we muſt remember that he writes to the Grand Prior of the Order of St. Maurice. Since you are my Superior, ſays he to him, (g) and that I have the Honour to be one of your Brethren, I ought from time to time to give your Excellency an exact Account of my Conduct. I ſhould be very unhappy if the Alps, which part us, ſhould deprive me of the light of your Guidance, when at this great diſtance I have more need of it than others; and therefore I pray you, Sir, for the quiet of my Conſcience, to aſſiſt me with your wholſome Counſel, and to remove ſome Scruples I have concerning the obſervation of my Vows: As to Chaſtity, thanks to the rigidneſs of the Fair Sex, I obſerve it religiouſly: As to Obedience, I have hitherto obſerv'd it very well, and my Superiors, who have Cammanded me nothing, have no reaſon to complain: As to Hoſpitality, this is the Point which occaſions my Scruples, and about which I am troubled with cruel remorſe; for, in ſhort, Sir, I do not obſerve it at all: Not but I have a great Inclination to be hoſpitable; but how can it be when I have neither Houſe-room to lodge my Gueſts, nor a Fund of Money to entertain them? I think, Sir, that in making this laſt Vow I did implicitly make a Vow to be a Commander, ſince I cannot obſerve it without a Commandery. This ſhould make you think of procuring me one, and even one of the beſt, that my Vow may be the better perform'd. . . . (h) Beſides, by making me a Commander, you will ſtop the Mouths of a thouſand ridiculous People who come to ask me impertinent Queſtions about the Croſs which I carry: Some are ſuch Fools as to come to me, and ask me, How much, dear Sir, do you get every Year for carrying this Croſs? I muſt confeſs to you, that then

I

(f) It was written to him while he was afflicted for the loſs of a Siſter. The manner of expreſſing his Grief and tenderneſs for the Deceas'd becomes a Perſon of Piety and Honour. See Letter 42 and 43 of the 2d Book

(g) Pays's Friendſhips Amours, and Frolicks, B. 2. Letter 42. p. 154. of the Holland Edit. 1665

(h) Pays Ibid. Lett. 38. of the 2d Book, p. 153, 154.

(1.) This Word muſt not be taken ſtrictly, for the date is ſometimes found in that ſort of Writings

(a) In Letter 35 of the 2d Book.

(b) In Lett. 38 of the ſame Book.

(c) It is Letter 28 of the 1ſt Book.

(d) Dated at Grenoble, June 12. 1668. It is Letter 29 of the ſame Book.

(e) Pays's New Works Part 2. B. 1. Letter 41. p. 105. of the Holland Edit.

(f) Idem Letter 43 of the ſame Book, p. 112 dated at Grenoble, May 20. 1671.

(g) Ibid. p. 110.

(h) Ibid. p. 112.

upon this occaſion. (H) He complains often of Fortune, and does no leſs reproach her than the Pagan Poets. Theſe are common places in which Vanity has commonly too great a ſhare. He was very willing that it ſhould be known

I don't know what to anſwer them; . . . . But when I ſhall have a Commandery, I ſhall have wherewith to ſatisfy all the World, I ſhall be able to perform my Vow of Hoſpitality, and I ſhall be no more troubled with impertinent Queſtions about the Revenue of my Croſs. Be ſo kind, Sir, as to anſwer my Reaſons, and Cure my Scruples, and you will give eaſe to the Soul of him who of all your Brethren is, with the greateſt reſpect.

(H) He complains often of Fortune.] This Fault is almoſt the epidemical Diſeaſe of the Republick of Learning: There are ſcarce any Authors who do not complain of the Ingratitude of their Age. Thoſe who are call'd fine Wits, do ſignalize themſelves above others by this kind of Complaint. They think that they ſhould not be in faſhion, if they ſhould agree that Fortune look'd upon them with a good Eye. One would think, that they are afraid, leſt if they ſhould appear contented with her Favours, the Publick would take it for a Confeſſion, that they have no Merit; for there is a Common-place, very ancient, which informs us that ſhe is blind, and that ſhe makes a bad choice of the Objects of her Love. Read all the Letters of Balzac, and you may learn from them two things, one is, that he had a pretty good Revenue, which allow'd him to treat his Friends, to give them excellent Soops, &c. and to have for himſelf all the Conveniencies of Life, in one of the pleaſanteſt places of the Kingdom; the other is, That he look'd upon himſelf as confin'd to a Deſert, and ſo perſecuted by ill Fortune, that one wou'd think her ſharpeſt and moſt poyſon'd Darts had been directed againſt him. What can be concluded from theſe two things, but that he had too good an Opinion of himſelf? for one that is truly modeſt, how great ſoever his Merit be, thinks himſelf very well rewarded, if he hath wherewithal to ſupply his Neceſſities. Thus all thoſe Common-places, which our fine Wits, and ſo many other Writers urge againſt Fortune, are, in troth, a pompous Commendation of the great and good Qualities they fancy themſelves poſſeſs'd of: there is therefore a little too much Vanity in them. I will add, That oftentimes theſe kind of Complaints are much more a ſign of the Ingratitude of the Authors towards their Age, than a teſtimony of the Ingratitude of the Age towards Authors; for commonly thoſe who are moſt at eaſe, are they who murmur moſt at the capriciouſneſs of Fortune, and the injuſtice of the Times.

I ſay this only in general; I ſhall make no Application to our Mr. Pays; for I am not ſo well acquainted with his Hiſtory as to be able to ſay, whether he had a Fortune wherewith he ought to have been contented. But I think he ſhould not have found it ſtrange, that other Men of buſineſs ſhou'd raiſe themſelves more than he did; for a Financier with Love-Letters, Songs, and Madrigals, ought not to pretend to merit the Favour of his Superiors, and their recommendation to be advanc'd to great Employments, as he might deſerve, if he would punctually follow, as others do, this Precept of Mr. Deſpreaux:

Chooſe (i) you the beſt part: leave all your Books.
A hundred Livres au denier cinq, how much make they? twenty Livres.
That's well ſaid. Get you gone, you know as much as needs to be known.
What Riches, what Honours are ready to befal you!
Exerciſe yourſelf, my Son, in this high Science.
Take, inſtead of Plato, the Book of Rates.
Enquire what Province enriches moſt the Farmers?
How much the Salt may bring to the King every Year.
Harden your Heart, be a Robber, a Plunderer, Unjuſt, Violent, Unfaithful, Double, Falſe.

To ſtudy polite Language, to employ whole Days in a Letter of Gallantry, to correct a Sonnet, or a Song a hundred times, till it have a happy Cadence, be well turn'd, very tender, and very paſſionate: This is not the way to ſupplant a Rival, or to hinder him from ſupplanting you; I mean, a Rival as to Employments, which depend upon the Directors of the Finances, or upon the General Farmers. If it were a Love-Rival, it wou'd be another thing: You will learn much better to ſupplant him, by ſpending your time in a Letter of Gallantry, than by ſpending it in a Rule of Arithmetick. But ſtill, in this Parallel, we muſt ſtop at the immediate effects; for if any one ſhould alledge to me, that by applying oneſelf to Caſting up of Accounts, one would be better qualify'd to grow Rich, than by applying oneſelf to a piece of Gallantry; and that a Rival who is richer, will be preferr'd to a fine Wit, I will not diſpute any more. I have read ſomewhere, That (k) Ludovicus Sforza ſaid, A good Wit was a bad Qualification for a Soldier, and that he would not eaſily receive ſuch into his Service as valued themſelves upon it. The Marſhal de Gaſſion was alſo of this Opinion, who was one Day ſo offended with the Reflections of the Abbot de la Riviere, who would have his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Orleans to raiſe the Siege of Courtray (l) "That being chaf'd into a ſudden Fit "of Anger, he told him theſe words: Mr. Abbot, "fine Wits are but mean Tools for War. Neither are they much fitter for the Finances, generally ſpeaking.

But at laſt, let us come to the Subject in hand, and ſay ſomething of the Complaints of our Author againſt his hard Fate: His chagrin Letter againſt (a) Fortune is well turn'd, and well furniſh'd with Thoughts; out of which I ſhall ſet down the following Paſſages: "I was born under a certain Star, "whoſe malignity cannot be overcome; and I am "ſo perſwaded of the Power of this malevolent Star, "that I accuſe it of all my Miſfortunes, and I never "lay the fault upon any body. And therefore, "Madam, tho' you ſhould not obtain for me what "you ſollicit with ſo much ardour and addreſs, I "ſhould nevertheleſs reckon myſelf oblig'd all my "Lifetime to your generous and active Friendſhip. "'Tis not only at this time that endeavours to ad-"vance me have prov'd unſucceſsful, you may re-"member, &c. In my younger Days I did like "others, and ſought after Fortune with a reſtleſs "Mind; I enquir'd for the places which ſhe haunts "for the moſt part, and endeavour'd to place my-"ſelf in her Paſſage. Going to meet her, I thought "that ſhe being blind would puſh me forward, even "without taking notice of me; but I fancy ſhe had "Eyes to ſee me, ſince ſhe knew ſo well how to ſhun "all my Approaches to her. I have done what I could "to make my Court to her: Obſerving in the World "that ſhe treated ill the Men of Learning, and ca-"reſs'd the Men of Buſineſs, to pleaſe her I offer'd "violence to my own Inclination; I addicted "myſelf wholly to the Finances, and made the Muſes "only my Recreation: Yet ſtill all my Cares and "Endeavours were fruſtrated, for unto this Day I "could never find her favourable. Since then For-"tune is made a blind Goddeſs, but yet ſuch a God-"deſs to whom all Men pay an Homage, which looks "ſomewhat like an Act of Religion, I fancy we "may believe, without Hereſy, that this Goddeſs "has, among her Creatures, ſome that are Elect, "and ſome that are Reprobate, who are happy or "unhappy by her choice, and without owing any "thing to their own Conduct. After I underſtood "that ſhe had plac'd me in the number of the "latter, I endeavour'd by all means to comfort my-"ſelf. . . . . If my Reflections were not tedious to "you, I would make many more before I concluded "this Letter; I would yet inveigh with greater "warmth againſt the Caprices of Fortune: But "withal you muſt know, that I do not hate her ſo "much becauſe ſhe has not preferr'd me, as becauſe "ſhe has degraded our incomparable Friend, whom "I find to be much more unhappy than myſelf; for "a Man cannot fall from ſo high a place without "feeling the bruiſe of ſuch a cruel Fall all his Life-"time. But as to me, who have always crept upon "the Ground, I never could fall; all the Miſchief "which happen'd to me, is ſome weakneſs that re-"mains ſtill, becauſe I have made ſome attempts to "advance myſelf. Our dear Friend has much more "cauſe to complain, and I am ſo much the more "ſorry for him, becauſe he leſs deſerv'd his Diſ-"grace. When I ſee a Fool abandon'd by For-"tune, I am no more ſurpris'd at it, than when I "ſee a Blind-Man fall into a Precipice, becauſe he "walks without a Guide. But when I ſee Fortune "overturn a Man that has a ſolid Foundation of Pru-"dence, I cannot ſufficiently exclaim againſt her "unjuſt Cruelty. The Miſchief is, that one can

"hard-

(i) Deſpreaux, Sat. 8.

(k) Silhon's Miniſter of State. B.1. ch.15.

(l) The Abbot de Pure, his Life of Marſhal de Gaſſion, To.4. c.4. p.35. ad an. 1645.

(a) 'Tis the firſt of the 1ſt Book of the 2d Part of his new Works. It is written to the Counteſs de . . . and is without Date.

known that he was a great (I) Fumbler. The Letter he wrote to a Lady, who boaſted of the Box on the Ear ſhe gave him, is ſpiteful enough *. It may very well be that it was an Epiſtle, which he compos'd for his pleaſure, and wrote to no body; and this is not the only Adventure which appears to be imaginary among the things which “ hardly put himſelf into ſuch a condition as to avoid her Injuſtice. She is a Goddeſs that makes ſport with her Adorers, as well as with her Enemies; ſhe often does Evil to thoſe who ſhun her: At Court ſhe ſtirs up an envious Perſon againſt you, who blackens your Actions; a Rival who does you ill Offices with the Prince: In the Country ſhe will ſtrike off a Stone from a Rock, or cauſe an Eagle to lift up a Tortoiſe into the Air, which ſhall cruſh you. She does almoſt equally ſlight the Altars which are built for her by the Courtiers, and the Contempt ſhe receives from the Philoſophers. Alas! if Wiſdom and Virtue could ſecure us from her Blows, good Men needed not fear her, and none but ſuch as are ſtupid or wicked would be found among the Unfortunate; but virtuous and witty Men ſeem to be moſt expos'd to her Power. All the Eyes of Prudence are not ſharp enough to penetrate into the ſecret Springs which ſet her Wheels in motion. Her Motions are conceal'd from us, and ſince we cannot know the cauſes of them, we cannot avoid their effects. This being ſo, it were folly to be griev'd for it; but we ought to endure her Motions, and look upon them as upon thoſe of the Stars. If any one ſhould torment himſelf becauſe of an Eclipſe of the Sun or Moon, he wou'd be look'd upon as a Madman; and he that is griev'd for a change of Fortune is little leſs unreaſonable. He wrote in another (b) Letter the Grief he endur'd at Fontainebleau in ſolliciting an Affair wherein he did not ſucceed: A thouſand Crowns were cut off from his Salary, and he could not revoke this Retrenchment. “Since I came to Fontainebleau, ſays he, “I have loſt every Day nine or ten Hours exactly in a very melancholy Hall, where indeed I have, for Companions, many Perſons more conſiderable than myſelf, who are receiv'd there with no more Ceremony, nor diſpatch'd with greater diligence. . . . . When I endeavour to allay my Grief, ſometimes I fancy, that if one who is altogether indifferent, and unconcern'd about any buſineſs, ſhould come into the Hall where all the People wait ſo impatiently, he would take a great deal of pleaſure in ſeeing our different Poſtures; ſome are Muſing, others Raging; ſome are Walking, others Leaning againſt the Wall; and when the Patron's Door makes the leaſt noiſe, preſently all caſt their Eyes that way; and tho' none comes out but a Lacquey, they all make a profound Reverence. If this Lacquey ſays the Patron is Indiſpos'd, all our Affairs fall ſick; and the miſchief on't is, that when he is well, mine are ſcarce ever the better. Sometimes, at length, he appears like Lightning, then all the People follow him, crowd about him, and deſire to be heard. I endeavour to be heard, among the reſt; but my weak Voice is loſt in the Crowd, and is not heard. Sometimes, to eaſe my Grief, I go to feed my Eyes with the Charms of Fontainebleau, and the Beauties of the Court: Sometimes I go to ſee the Queen's Maids of Honour, and ſometimes the Chambers and Galleries of the Caſtle: After this I walk along the Canals, and there I go a great way in the darkneſs of the Woods. But the retrenching of my thouſand Crowns embitters all the Pleaſure I would take, it tarniſhes the Eyes and Complexions of the Ladies Soubize, Briſſac, St. Geran, Lanois, la Mark, and Rouvroy: It defaces the Beauty of the Tapiſtry, the Painting, and Gilding of the richeſt Apartments; it troubles the Waters of the Canals, Fountains, and Caſcades; it dries up the Leaves and Bloſſoms of the Elm-Trees, the Linden and Orange-Trees.

I have not ſeen the Verſes which he made (c) upon a Decree, which cruſh'd him, by condemning him to be accountable for a Man who had ſpent His Majeſty's Money; but I have a good Opinion of them, when I conſider that they are a part of a Collection of Poems, in which there was a Piece which was highly eſteem'd by a good Judge, who is no ways prodigal of his Praiſes: To this we may add a third, ſays he, (d) which Mr. Pays wrote in Praiſe of Tobacco, which doubtleſs will contribute very much to augment the Sale of it, and the letting it out to Farm. He wrote two Poems upon this barren Subject, and he took the pains to mingle in them ſo many pleaſant things, and to extol its Virtues ſo much, that for the future this Plant will be ſeen among the Flowers of Parnaſſus. To underſtand all this Paſſage, we muſt know, that the Author had alledg'd two other Reaſons, which I ſhall relate, becauſe they are ſubſervient to the Hiſtory of him, who is the Subject of this Article: “Beſides the Reaſons taken from the Proceſs itſelf, there are two others, which ſeem'd to ſecure Mr. Pays from ſo terrible a Condemnation; one is, that he was never enrich'd in the ſpace of thirty Years, that he was concern'd in the King's Farms: the other is, That he was too great a Wit to engage in the Accompts and Calculations of the Treaſury. I am ſure, I may be allow'd to conjecture, that a Poet who had ſucceeded ſo well in writing the Praiſes of Tobacco, did expreſs very well in the ſame Tome, his Indignation againſt the Injuſtice of a cruel Decree. The Muſes are never more eloquent, more lively, nor more fruitful in Thoughts than upon ſuch like occaſions. Theſe are not ſuch Circumſtances to which we may apply that Phraſe, Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes ſtupent. Nevertheleſs, I leave it to thoſe who have read thoſe Pieces to determine, whether we ſhould ſay of Mr. Pays, what he wrote to a Count: (e) “It were pity, Sir, that you ſhould not have met with ſome Trouble, for you make ſo agreeable an uſe of it, and your Letter has given me ſo good a Picture of it, that I ſhould now be very ſorry, if you had gain'd the Suit which gives you diſturbance. Neque dii, neque deæ faciant ut te fortuna in deliciis habeat. If I were Seneca, you ſhould be my Lucilius, and I would make you the like Compliment as he did. In effect, Sir, would I not have reaſon to ſpeak after this manner, after I have read the chagrin and pleaſant things which your pretended Misfortune has cauſ'd you to write. . . . Yes, Sir, your Troubles have given me a great Diverſion, becauſe you treat of them ſo well, that ſurely they have ſcarce done you any hurt. If you were overwhelm'd with them, as you ſay, you would not ſpeak of them with ſo much eaſe as you do. Coſtar (f) was very near of the ſame Humour. There is but one thing, ſays he, which the moſt ſevere could blame, in the Complaint that Mr. Balzac made of his Diſeaſes and Diſgraces; and that is, That they are too eloquent, and too curiouſly ſought after. And truly, he has employ'd in them ſo great a number of merry Thoughts, that he brings to my Mind the Comedian Apelles, who, during the time that Caligula cauſ'd him to be whipt, cried with ſo harmonious a Voice, that this wicked Prince, (a) to prolong the Pleaſure he receiv'd by it, made the Puniſhment of this unhappy Man to continue the longer. None but Caligula was capable of ſuch a Barbarity. But, I think, there are ſome People to be met with, who, without being barbarous, are ſo addicted to their Pleaſure, that they would almoſt rejoice at the Sciatica and Stone of our Orator, when they read in ſome of his Letters, &c. Here he gives many Extracts of 'em, after which he ſays, (b) The greateſt part of all theſe things are ſo pleaſantly contriv'd, that I ſhould be a declar'd Enemy to the publick Joy, if it were true that I was offended with them, as my Adverſary affirms.

(I) That it ſhould be known that he was a great Fumbler.] He ought to have conceal'd this Fault, for it is ſomewhat contrary to Politeneſs. Conſult the Dictionary of Furetiere, and there you will find not only the Definition, but alſo the condemnation of this way of acting. The Definition contains theſe words: (c) 'Tis ſaid alſo, that a Woman is Fumbled, when her Arms, Boſom, &c. are handled. The Condemnation contains theſe: There are none but Country-Women and Servant-Maids that ſuffer themſelves to be Fumbled. Fumbling is not uſ'd by the finer ſort of People. . . . The Provincials are great Fumblers. Furetiere had reaſon to ſay this of the Provincials; he might have added, That this Fault reigns more or leſs in the Provinces of France; according as they are more or leſs diſtant from Paris; and that it is much more common in the Cities than in the Country, and yet more in the little Towns than in the great ones: Which proves, that this is not which he relates. 'Tis very probable, that he never ſaw his Miſtreſs as naked (K) as his Hand, and that he only forg'd it, that he might have occaſion to publiſh many Conceits. He was Caſt in a troubleſome † Suit a little before his Death, and died at Paris, April 30. 1690. There was a Satyr || publiſh'd againſt him in 1670.

---

* See the Remark I.

(b) The 30th of the 2d Book of the 1ſt part of his new Works. It is written from Fontainebleau Aug. 13. to the Count de Lionne, the Year is not ſet down. A DESCRIPTION of the ſollicitation of Affairs at Court.

(c) See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, for the Month of Sept. 1688. p. 132.

(d) Baſnage de Beauval Hiſt. of the Works of the Learned Ib. p. 132.

(e) Pays in his New Works, P. 2 B. 1. Let. 9. It is written to the Count du Bouchage, and dated June 12. 1668.

(f) Coſtar Apolog. p. 111.

(a) Suetonius does not ſay ſo, he ſays, only, Cum aſſiſtens ſimulacro Jovis Apellem tragœdum conſuluiſſet, uter illi major videretur, cunctantem flagellis diſcidit: collaudans ſubinde vocem deprecantis, quaſi etiam in gemitu prædulcem. Sueton. in Calig. c. 33.

(b) Coſtar ib. p. 113.

(c) Furet. Dictionary, at the word Patiner.

PALEARIUS (Aonius) one of the moſt virtuous Men in the World, and one of the good Writers in the ſixteenth Century, was born at Veroli, * an Epiſcopal City (A Δ) in the Campania di Roma. He was well ſkill'd both in the Latin and Greek; and to this knowledge of polite Learning he join'd the knowledge of Philoſophy and Divinity; and to improve himſelf the more in this Learning, he travel'd over the greateſt part of Italy, and ſtudied as a Scholar under the moſt excellent Philoſophers he could find there. He ſpent ſix whole Years at Rome, before † that City was taken by the Army of Charles the Fifth, and return'd thither ſeveral times after that Deſolation. He gave a publick Teſtimony of his Improvement, in a fine Poem which he wrote about the β Immortality of the Soul, for which he was highly eſteem'd by the Learned (A) and great Wits of that time. Having retir'd into Tuſcany, he choſe

† See the Remark H.

|| Printed, if I miſtake not, either at Grenoble or Lyons. He was very ill treated in this little Piece.

* From hence comes his ſurname Verulanus.

† Palearius Epiſt. 4. l. 1. p. 406.

β See the Remark E.

not regulated according to the Ideas of Morality, but according to thoſe of Politeneſs and of a genteel Carriage. There is another notable Proof of it, which is this, That Luſt is more commonly carried on to the finiſhing Act in Cities, than in Villages; and in great Cities than in little ones. We will add, en paſſant, that notwithſtanding the politeneſs of the Age of Auguſtus, the young Maids of Rome were obliged to beware of the Hands of Fumblers; they made uſe of their Nails, but they were well pared (d). I have (e) elſewhere quoted a Paſſage, which probably concerns a Provincial, who had ſtayed a long time at Paris, and who nevertheleſs was of Opinion, that to procure to himſelf the eſteem of the Marchioneſſes he muſt Fumble them. We will relate this again, and add to it what follows. (f) “M. M. was going into Bretagne with the Marchioneſs of Lavardin, to ſee Madam de Sevigny; he was in the Coach of the Marchioneſs, and by the way, per non parer troppo coglione, he cajol'd her, and took her by the Hand to kiſs it. Madam de Lavardin told him Smiling, Sir, You take me then for Madam de S. . . . The ſame Man being in Company with the Counteſs de la Suze, handled her Hands, and ſhe told him this Verſe of Scarron; Fumblers are an intolerable People. To which he anſwered immediately in the Verſe which follows; Even to thoſe Beauties which deſerve moſt to be Fumbled.

You do not prove, will ſome ſay, what muſt be prov'd. A little patience, ſay I, and it ſhall quickly be prov'd. The Proof appears in many Letters of Mr. Pays, and particularly in the firſt Book of his Amitiez, in the 24th Letter, where he ſays to his Caliſle; I was afraid of you, tho' you was (g) Naked and Diſarm'd, and tho' probably you had not that curſed Bodkin, wherewith you puniſh'd ſo often my little tranſports. What I am now to add, furniſhes a Proof yet more evident, which I ſhall take from a Letter which he wrote to a Lady, who boaſted of having given him a Box on the Ear. “I muſt diſabuſe you, dear Madam. The Glory of treating me ill is not ſo great as you think: I have had twenty Miſtreſſes, who were more fierce than you, who knew better how to repulſe my Attacks, and yet never boaſted of it. You are but a Novice in the point of Cruelty; and your very Maid could teach you a Leſſon about it. For leſſer Freedoms Catin hath treated me more cruelly; you gave me but a Box on the Ear, but ſhe gave me more than twelve; you tore only a Ribbon, but ſhe tore out half my Hair, and yet ſhe never told any thing to any body of it. You reſemble your Great Couſin for Vanity; he never ſaw any thing of War but one wretched Skirmiſh, and he makes a Relation of it to all the World: You, perhaps, have never treated any body ill but me, and you make a Story of it to all the City; but if you would tell how all things paſs'd, I could endure your Vanity, and not complain of your Indiſcretion. Why all this buſtle, and ſo much fierceneſs? Why do you diminiſh in your Diſcourſe the exceſs of the boldneſs that I us'd? Why do you encreaſe the ſharpneſs of your Reproaches, and the weight of the Blow you gave me? Ah! Madam, if you remember, the Reproaches were not very ſharp, and the Blow was ſcarce of any weight. In Juſtice I deſerv'd more; and if you had done all that you have ſaid, you would have done but half your Duty. Nevertheleſs, you know very well, that in your Heart you were afraid of having been in too great a Paſſion; you were afraid leſt I ſhould be more provok'd than you, and at laſt you aſſum'd ſuch an Air as might perſwade me, that you would be no more offended with my boldneſs: But your Gentleneſs did not pacify me; and when I ſaw your Reſiſtance grow ſo quickly faint, I deſpis'd a Victory ſo eaſy. Confeſs the truth, Madam, this was the Cauſe of your Rage, my Contempt offended you, and you thought it neceſſary to cloak it with the appearance of yours (h). The Letter which precedes this is no leſs ſpiteful; it was written to a Lady who found Mr. Pays too familiar; and it deſerves to be read, for it may ſerve for a Leſſon to many Perſons who ſtand in need of it.

(K) That he never ſaw his Miſtreſs as naked as his hand.] He affirms it without flinching. (i) “Laſtly, Caliſle, all your Wiles were in vain. I found out the place, yeſternight, where you bathed. . . . For God's ſake, why do you take ſo much care to hide yourſelf? In truth, you did not ſhow any parts that are ſhameful; and if there were any ſuch, they were the Knees and other Members of your Siſter and Couſin, which ſhould have been aſham'd to appear in the preſence of yours. But as to you, tho' you ſhowed all that you have, you ſhow'd nothing but what is very beautiful, nothing but what is glorious to you. I perceiv'd then that the Parts which you kept conceal'd, were not inferior to thoſe you ſuffer'd to be ſeen; and I thought with myſelf, that there are ſome of the Fair Sex, who had more reaſon to hide their Noſes, than you have to hide your Buttocks. The reſt of that Letter is a medley of pretty Thoughts; which makes me believe that he feign'd this Adventure, that he might have an opportunity to publiſh them. Whatever Privilege the Fair Sex may have in many Provinces of France, to allow themſelves with decency many Freedoms which would diſgrace them in Italy, I am certain that the Miſtreſs of Mr. Pays, nor the Siſter and Couſin of that Caliſle, did not bathe in a River without a Shift, or Linen Cover, in view of one another, and that with ſo little Precaution that a Man might ſurpriſe them in this Condition, and compare at his leiſure the moſt ſecret Parts of one with the moſt ſecret Parts of the others. I doubt whether even the Country Women allow themſelves ſo much liberty: Much more may we think, that thoſe Maids, who, without any great abuſe, had the Title of Demoiſelles, would never ſo far violate the Laws of Chaſtity and Decency. If they intended to ſtrip themſelves wholly of their Cloaths, that they might the better enjoy the cool Air, doubtleſs they waited for the darkneſs of the Night to do it in. There is no ſuch Cuſtom in our Days, as there was in the Days (k) of Diana. I may ſay therefore of this Letter, and of many other Pieces of the ſame Nature, that ſome things are publiſh'd in them as if they had really happen'd, which are only the Invention of the Author.

(A Δ) An Epiſcopal City in the Campania di Roma.] I do not at all underſtand theſe words of the Preface, which I ſhall quote here under: Natus eſt Aonius Verulis (oppidum id eſt Latii Epiſcopalis) and I conjecture, that he who ſpoke this had before his Eyes a Book, wherein there was, Urbs Latii Epiſcopalis, and that having put oppidum inſtead of Urbs, he forgot to put Epiſcopale inſtead of Epiſcopalis.

(A) He was highly eſteem'd by the Learned and great Wits.] The Preface prefix'd before the New Edition of the Works of Aonius Palearius, acquaints us with the Names of ſome Perſons by whom he was lov'd and

(d) Nos convivia, nos prælia virginum Sectis in juvenes unguibus acrium, Cantamus vacui. Hor. Ode 6. lib. 1. Elſewhere he ſays, that they would defend themſelves ill againſt thoſe that endeavour'd to kiſs them. Dum flagrantia detorquet ad oſcula Cervicem, aut facili ſævitiâ negat, Quæ poſcente magis gaudeat eripi, Interdum rapere occupet? Id. Od. 12. l. 2. See alſo Ode 9. l. 1.

(e) In the Article Lycurgus.

(f) A continuation of Menagiana, p. 378, 379. This is ſaid of M. Menage himſelf.

(g) He ſuppoſes that he ſurpris'd her at the Bath.

(h) Pays in his new Works, Par. 1. B. 2. Lett. 3. p. m. 107, 108.

(i) Pays's Amitiez, Amours, & Amourettes, B. 1. Letter 24. p. m. 22.

(k) See Ovid's Metamorph. l. 2. v. 461. & lib. 3. v. 173.

choſe the City of Siena for his fix'd Habitation; where he was made Profeſſor of Humane Learning, and had a great number of Scholars: And there he married at the Age of 34 Years, to a young Maid, whom he lov'd paſſionately all his Life, who brought him ɣ four Children. His Repoſe was a little diſturbed by a Quarrel he had with one of his Collegues, who was troubled to ſee his own Reputation obſcur'd by the luſtre of that of Palearius. But Peter Aretin quickly quell'd (B) this envious Man. After this there aroſe another Storm, which was much more terrible, Antony Bellantes, a Nobleman of Siena, being accus'd of many Miſdemeanors, deliver'd himſelf from this troubleſome Affair by means of Palearius's Pleading for him. Some time after he accus'd ſome Monks of having robb'd his Grandmother, and employ'd again the Eloquence of Palearius to maintain his Right. The Defendants having ſworn that they took nothing from the good Woman, were Acquitted by the Judgment of the Court; but they kept in their Minds a lively Reſentment againſt the Advocate of the other Party, and had recourſe to their common Artifices to deſtroy him: To which purpoſe they defam'd him as an impious Wretch, and preach'd againſt him on this Head: But he made an Apology for himſelf with ſo much Vigour and Eloquence, that the Accuſation vaniſh'd. Nevertheleſs, being wearied with the Perſecutions to which he ſaw himſelf expos'd, he left Siena, and went to ſettle at (C) Lucca; from whence, after a few Years, he remov'd to Milan. The Magiſtrates call'd him thither, and gave him Marks of their eſteem, by granting him * ſeveral Immunities, beſides a good Penſion. It happen'd unfortunately for him, that a Cardinal who had been a Dominican, and a ſevere Inquiſitor, became Pope † after the Death of Pius the Fourth. He had a mind to ſignalize himſelf by the Puniſhment of ſome famous Hereticks at the beginning of his Reign, and for that end he ordain'd that the Cauſe of Palearius ſhould be review'd. This Learned Man was ſeiz'd at Milan, and carried to Rome, where he was eaſily convicted of having ſpoken in (D) favour of the Lutherans, and againſt the Inqui-ɣ Two Sons and two Daughters.

* In the Year 1559.

† Under the Name of Pius V.

and eſteem'd. Summo in honore fuit Palearius apud viros ætatis iſtius principes: Petrum Bembum, Jacobum Sadoletum, Franciſcum Sfondratum, Ennium Philonardum, Eccleſiæ Romanæ Cardinales; Janum Benedictum Lampridium, Marcum Antonium Flaminium, Andream Alciatum. To know the Names of many others of his Friends, you need do no more but caſt your Eyes upon a Liſt which was Printed of them, at the end of his Letters in the laſt Edition: There we find the Names of thoſe who wrote to him, and of thoſe to whom he wrote. In the ſame Edition we find after the Preface, the good Teſtimony which many Learned Men gave him; but becauſe the following Verſes of Baptiſta Pigna, are not to be met with there, I think fit to ſet them down here.

Aoni (a) decus Aonum ſororum,
Quos mihi dedit aureos libellos
Riccius tuus, aureos libellos
Qui deſiderium omnibus relinquunt,
Quo magis relegunt magis legendi,
Intentis oculis libenter hauſi.
Immortalem animam probas in ipſis.
Ipſi ſecula ſempiterna, & eſſe
Immortalem operam tuam probabunt.

(a) Jo. Baptiſta Pigna, Carmin. l. 3. p. m. 81.

(B) Peter Aretin quickly quell'd this envious Man.] If I be not miſtaken, his deſign was not to revenge Palearius's Quarrel, but to revenge himſelf, or to ſatisfy his ſlandering Humour. (b) Senis primum exagitari cœpit inſanis contentionibus neſcio cujus profeſſoris, (ipſe Machum Blateronem vocat) qui putabat tantum decedere de ſuo honore, quantum Aonii virtutibus & meritis dabatur. Quamquam hunc morionem ignobilem brevi compeſcuit mordax ingenium Petri Aretini, qui ſtolidum pecus omnium ludibriis ſanniſque expoſuit in fabula quadam vulgari idiomate conſcripta, & Venetiis publico ſpectaculo exhibita. Palearius complains very much of this Enemy, of whom he ſpeaks as of a meer Ignoramus, who had taught the Latin Tongue at Siena, with ſo little Judgment that his own Scholars did very much deſpiſe him. When Palearius wrote this, that Man taught at Lucca, and endeavour'd, by his (c) Calumnies, to hinder his Adverſary from being call'd thither. We ſhall ſee in the following Remarks that his Efforts were fruitleſs. (d) Machus Blatero, is de quo hominibus noſtris fabula data eſt ab Aretino, lepidè & feſtivè ſcripta, homo impudentiſſimus, & puræ veræque Latinitatis tàm ignarus, quàm ii qui trans Taurum incolunt: Senis quam diu fuit, magnas mihi turbas fecit, veritus ne munus interpretationis ſcriptionum Latinarum mihi demandaretur: in qua cum ille infeliciter multos annos laboraſſet, apud eruditiores juvenes nihil aliud fuerat aſſequutus, quàm turpiſſimum infantiæ nomen: Is nunc Lucæ eſt, utinam tàm cognitus, quàm Venetiis, ubi & fabula acta eſt, & Machus ludibrio habitus.

(b) Præfat. operum Aonii Palearii Edit. 1696.

(c) Palearius Epiſt. 17. l. 3. p. 500.

(d) Ibid. p. 499.

(C) And went to ſettle at Lucca.] He was called thither by the Magiſtrates, to teach humane Learning; and if he accepted this Office (e) it was not upon the account of any pleaſure he took in teaching, but becauſe he had not a Revenue ſufficient to maintain the expences of his Family. His Wife lov'd to make a ſhew, his Children were not free from Vain-glory, and therefore, contrary to his own Inclination, he muſt turn a Teacher, tho' he was afraid leſt that exerciſe ſhould leſſen his Wit, and blunt the vigour he felt for more ſublime Studies. He is not the only Perſon who has been reduc'd to this Pinch, and whom domeſtick Expences forc'd to groan under the burden of Repetitions and Leſſons. Read the words of this Author, who expreſſes himſelf well: (f) Moriar ſi non me angunt putidiſſimæ interpretationes meæ, ſive Græcæ, ſive Latinæ, in quas veluti in piſtrinum detruſi me, non tàm imprudentiâ, quam neceſſitate. Ego enim, ut ex meis ſtudiis noſſe potuiſti, ſemper judicavi obſcurum & ſordidum iis, quorum ingenio aliquid fieri poteſt illuſtrius, ſi interpretandis ſcriptis aliorum humiles ac demiſſi, quaſi ſervitia ancillentur. Sed cùm mihi res domi eſſet anguſta, uxor lauta, liberi ſplendidi, & propterea magnos ſumptus facerem, mancipavi propè me iis ſtudiis, à quibus ſemper abhorrui.

(e) Cum Lucenſes homines honeſtiſſimi propoſitis præmiis invitarent me ſingulorum dierum unius horæ uſurâ ad interpretandum, accepi conditionem duram mihi & aſperam, & vero etiam odioſam. Palearius epiſt. 4. lib. 4. p. 509.

(f) Ibid.

(D) Of having ſpoken in favour of the Lutherans, and againſt the Inquiſition.] The Monks that endeavour'd to deſtroy him at Siena, decry'd him as an Heretick, becauſe he declar'd plainly enough, that he diſapprov'd certain Superſtitions. Beſides, they did not approve the Book he wrote about the Merits (g) of Jeſus Chriſt. In the Apology he was oblig'd to make he was not afraid to ſay, That the German Doctors who follow'd Luther were commendable in ſome things, and that the Inquiſition was deſign'd for putting Learned Men to Death. His Affair was (h) amicably concluded, and it was ſaid, that all the Copies of his Apology ſhou'd be thrown into the Fire. Nevertheleſs three of them were preſerv'd, whereof he kept one, his Adverſary had another, and the third was that which Peter Victorius had (a). The Copy which remain'd in the hands of his Accuſer, ſerv'd for the Conviction of Aonius; for the following words, in favour of the Proteſtants, are to be found in it. (b) Germanos vocas Oecolampadium, Rotherodamum, Melancthonem, Lutherum, Pomeranum, Bucerum, & cæteros qui in ſuſpicionem vocati ſunt? Ego verò ex Theologis noſtris tam ſtupidum arbitror eſſe neminem, qui non intelligat & fateatur, permulta eſſe in his quæ ab illis ſcripta ſunt, digna prorſus omni laude: ſunt enim graviter, accuratè & ſyncerè ſcripta, repetita vel ex patribus illis primis, qui præcepta nobis ſalutaria reliquerunt: vel ex commentationibus Græcorum, & noſtrorum hominum. Let us relate alſo what he ſays of

(g) This Work is loſt. It was in Italian. See the Plan of it in the Harangue of Palearius, pag. 90, 91.

(h) Preface to the Works of Palearius.

(a) Ibid.

(b) Palearius Orat. 3. p. 83.

Inquiſition. He was (E) condemn'd to the Fire, and the Sentence was executed without any Mercy in 1566.* There are many Pieces written by him both in Verſe and in Proſe; the beſt Edition of them is that of Mr. Wetſtein at Amſterdam 1696.

PALINGENIUS (Marcellus) is famous for a Poem divided into twelve Books, and entitled, (A) Zodiacus Vitæ. He ſpent † many Years in Compoſing it, and dedicated it to Hercules d'Eſt, the ſecond of the Name, Duke of Ferrara. Some ſay that he was (B) Phyſician to that Prince: Others place him ‡ in the number of thoſe Learned Lutherans, whom the Dutcheſs of Ferrara, Renata of France, receiv'd into her Court, and honour'd with her protection. 'Tis certain that he ſpoke againſt the Monks and the abuſes of the Church with extream freedom; and hence it comes to paſs that he is found in ‡ the Index librorum prohibitorum, among the Hereticks of the firſt Rank, as being a Lutheran. 'Tis ſaid alſo that his dead Body (C) was dug up and burnt under pretence of Hereſy. Nevertheleſs he declares himſelf a good Catholick at the end of his Epiſtle Dedicatory; for he ſubmits (D) his whole Doctrine of the Inquiſition. (c) Quid niſi indicti concilii ſpes bonis injecta eſſet, negotium felix & ſalutare à Pontificibus, à Cæſare, à Regibus unà ſuſceptum iri, ut magnis concurſibus omnium gentium, omnium nationum celeberrimi conventus peragantur, deſperaremus omnino tantarum perturbationum finem ullum unquam futurum: deſperaremus poſſe fieri, ut ſica iſta diſtricta in omnes ſcriptores, de manibus eorum extorqueatur, qui vel leviſſimis de cauſis crudeliſſimè ferire didicerunt: à quibus appetitus fuit aliquando vir omnium ſanctiſſimus & integerrimus, Sadoletus meus. When he made this Apology it was but (d) a little time after Ochinus had made his eſcape, and therefore we ought to believe that it was made in 1542. or 1543. Palearius was then a good Proteſtant, but he did not ſay all that he thought. A Book written with his Hand was found in 1596. entitled, Teſtimonium ad gentes & nationes quæ invocant nomen Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, to which is added a much longer Treatiſe, entitled, Actio ex Declaratione teſtimonii in Pontifices Romanos & eorum Aſſeclas. Ad Principes Chriſtianos, & Præfectos Concilii, in quibus habitat Spiritus Dei. He wrote this piece a little before the opening of the Council of Trent; his deſign was to have it preſented to that Aſſembly by the Ambaſſadors of the Emperor. It is a Plea in good form for the Cauſe of the Proteſtants, which was never publiſh'd till the Year (e) 1606. There are two Opinions in it which they do not approve of; one is, that Marriage is a Sacrament; the other is, that a Chriſtian ought not to ſwear at all, no, not before the Judges. (f)

(E) Condemn'd to the Fire . . . . in 1566.] He that publiſh'd the Actio in Pontifices in 1606. informs us, that Palearius was burnt at Rome about the Year 1558. (g) and that he declar'd publickly what was his Faith; but he is miſtaken as to the time. He that wrote the Preface to the new Edition ſhows plainly that we muſt hold with Thuanus (h), who ſays, that this Learned Man was burnt in 1566. This may ſerve to refute Simler, who ſays, (i) that this Martyr was beheaded in 1570. which is both an Error in Chronology and as to the kind of Death. I have heard ſome ſay, that he was burnt for his Book of the Immortality of the Soul, but this is falſe; for there is nothing in that fine Poem which the Roman Catholicks could condemn. A certain Perſon wrote from Italy to Marcus Velſerus, that this Piece was not Aonius Palearius's; but I know not what Anſwer he made to Velſerus, who demanded immediately to what Author it muſt be attributed (k). We have ſhewn above that Pigna praiſes Palearius for writing this Poem; and all the Catalogue Writers aſcribe it to him. I find in the Epitome of Geſner that it was Printed at Lyons in 1536. James Sadoletus, Biſhop of Carpentras, wrote to (l) Gryphius, to exhort him to print it. He wrote alſo a Letter to the Author (m) wherein he mightily commends this Piece. Palearius had ſent him a Copy of an Edition (n) that was uncorrect, and pray'd him to get Gryphius to reprint it. A Book cannot be more advantageouſly recommended to a Printer than Sadoletus recommends this to Sebaſtian Gryphius. I ſhall only relate part of his Elogium. (o) Numerus porro carminis is eſt, ut videatur Lucretium velle imitari, redolet enim antiquum illud; ſed ita ſapore humanitatis conditum eſt, ut aſperitate demiſſa, vetuſtatis tamen autoritas ſalva remaneat. Atque hæc in univerſum. Illa jam partium ſingularum propria, nihil non accuratè, quove judicium & diligentiam adhibitam eſſe non pateat: multaque præterea ubique nitentia ingenii & venuſtatis luminibus, &, quod ego pluris quam reliqua omnia facio, Chriſtiana mens, integra, caſtaque religio, erga Deum ipſum honos, pietas, ſtudium; in eo libro vel maximè, non ſolum docere mentes errantium, ſed etiam animos incendere ad amorem puræ religionis poſſint.

(A) Divided into twelve Books, and intitled, Zodiacus vitæ.] Hoc eſt de hominis vita, ſtudio, ac moribus optime inſtituendis libri 12. Each of theſe twelve Books has the name of one of the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, and I make no doubt but this is the reaſon why this Author calls himſelf poeta ſtellatus. Scaliger the Father (p) has cenſur'd it ſharply, and I think with very good reaſon, for the little reſemblance there is between the Matters of each Book, and the qualities of the Sign of the Zodiack, which is the Title of it. I obſerve, by the by, that Barthius has written a Poem (q) in imitation of this; the Title of it is, Zodiacus vitæ Chriſtianæ, Satyricon pleraque omnia veræ ſapientiæ myſteria ſingulari ſuavitate enarrans. He divided it into twelve Books, whereof each bears the name of a Sign of the Zodiack. He does not trouble himſelf to obſerve ſome reſemblance between the Matters of each Book, and the Virtue which is attributed to each of thoſe twelve Conſtellations.

(B) That he was Phyſician to that Prince.] Scævola de Sainte Marthe affirms it (r); I dare not deny it: I ſhall only ſay, that this Poet was not known to the Duke of Ferrara when he dedicated his Book to him; for he declares in his Epiſtle Dedicatory, that underſtanding by report the Learning of the Duke, he had taken the boldneſs to addreſs to him, after the hopes of a good reception which Braſavolus had given him. (ſ) Quid mihi cum principe qui alienis oculis videt? ore loquitur alieno? illum volo qui per ſe poſſit curvum diſcernere recto: cui non auſint maligni homines dicere candida de nigris, & de candentibus atra. Talem igitur cùm te eſſe omnes prædicent, Dux illuſtriſſ. audacter ad te profectus ſum: eo maximè quòd Antonius Muſa Braſavolus, vir ſingulari doctrina integritateque conſpicuus, qui excellentiam tuam fideliſſimè colit, mihi de te ſpem optimam attulit: quippe qui doctrinam, humanitatem, liberalitatemque tuam mirificè apud me commendavit. Cujus verbis tantum habeo fidei, quantum dici poſſit. Ego igitur ſuadente, &c. Note, that he is not in the Catalogue of Poetical Phyſicians compil'd by Bartholinus.

(C) That his dead Body was dug up and burnt.] I read this in Melchior Adam: Edidit præterea, ſays he (t) ſpeaking of Chriſtopher Wirſungus, Marcelli Palingenii ſtellatenſis (cujus cadaver, propter pietatis doctrinam in Italia exhumatum concrematumque fuit) poëmata doctiſſimis adjectis commentariis.

But I have a teſtimony more authentical; for Gyraldus, who liv'd in that time, and in the Country where the thing happen'd, affirms, That they dealt cruelly by the Aſhes of this Poet, (v) poſt ejus mortem in ejus cineres ſævitum eſt, ob impietatis crimen.

(D) He ſubmits all his Opinions to the cenſure of the Church.] He confeſſes that having related the Opinions of Philoſophers, he had perhaps ſaid ſome things that were falſe, but that he was not anſwerable for them. It will be better to hear him himſelf. (w) Si tamen in tanto opere aliquid fortè reperitur quod à noſtra religione aliquantum diſſentire videatur, mihi minimè imputandum cenſeo. Nam dum aliquando de rebus philoſophicis loquor, diverſorum philoſophorum opiniones refero, præſertim Platonicorum. Quæ ſi falſa ſunt, non ego, ſed ipſi reprehendi debent: cùm mea ſit intentio, à catholica fide nunquam declinare. Quocirca in omnibus quæ ſcripſi, orthodoxæ Eccleſiæ me humiliter ſubjicio: ejuſque cenſuram, ut virum Chriſtianum decet, libenter accipio. After this the Inquiſition could not in juſtice proceed againſt his Perſon, nor declare him an Heretick, which Cenſure could at moſt belong only to his Doctrine; for it is Dogmaticalneſs and not Error which is condemn'd in a Man.

(c) Ibid. p. 91.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Neither the Year nor Place of the Edition appear in the Title, but we learn from the Journal of Leipſick for the Month of January, 1696. p. 44. that it was printed at Leipſick in 1606.

(f) See the Advertiſement to the Reader.

(g) Circiter annum Domini 1558. (ut ejus amicus quidam mihi narravit) Mediolani captus, vinctus, & Romam miſſus eſt, ubi fidei ſuæ confeſſione fortiter edita, flammis adjudicatus eſt.

(h) Thuan Hiſtor. lib. 39. pag. m. 779.

(i) In Epitome Biblioth. Geſner.

(k) See the Letters of Velſerus, p. 878.

(l) His Letter is found in the Editi- of Aonius Palearius, 1696. p. 564.

(m) It is found ib. p. 562.

(n) See Letter 2. of B. 3. of Palearius, page 434.

(o) Sadolet. Epiſt. ad Gryph. p. 565. Operum Palearii edit. 1696. It is alſo among the Letters of Sadolet, p. 184. edit. Lugd. 1554.

* Taken from the Preface which is before the Works of Palearius, of the Amſterdam Edi. 1696.

† Opus noſtrum . . . . in duodecim libros digeſtum, multoſque per annos elaboratum, Celſitudini tuæ donamus. Epiſt. dedicat.

‡ See Seckendorf, Hiſt. Lutheran. l. 2. p. 122. n. 5. ad ann. 1528. He cites the Annals of Scultetus, p. 148.

† Pag. 765. edit. 1667. in Fol.

(p) Julius Cæſar Scaliger, Poet. l. 6. p. m. 731, 732.

(q) Printed at Francfort in 1623. in 8vo.

(r) In the Title of his French Tranſlation of ſome Paſſages of Palingenius, apud du Verdier Vau-Privas his French Bibliotheque. p. 842.

(ſ) Palingenius Epiſt. Dedicat.

(t) Melch. Adam in vitis Philoſophorum. p. 253.

(v) Gyrald. de Poet. ſuorum temporum dial. 2. p. m. 569.

(w) Palingen. Epiſt. dedicat.

Doctrine to the Cenſure of the Church. All his Opinions cannot be approved by the Proteſtants. He urg'd ſome Objections of the Libertines too far, and explain'd them after ſuch a manner as ſhow'd he did not condemn them. Excepting this, his Zodiack is fill'd with good Things, and contains a handſome Philoſophical Satyr * againſt Immoralities and falſe Prejudices. There is an infinite number of Editions (E) of this Poem; but I find no Body who knows that which Chriſtopher Wirſungus illuſtrated with a † Commentary. 'Tis ſomewhat ſtrange that a Poet of his Merit ſhould appear ſo little among the great number of Elogiums which the Italians have publiſh'd on the Writers of their own Nation; probably his Title of Heretick was the cauſe of it. However, the Life of this Perſon is ſcarce at all known. He was the favourite Author of Naudæus.

A Man of Letters thinks that Marcellus Palingenius is a falſe Name under which Marſilius Ficinus is diſguis'd; which conjecture he confirms by a paſſage wherein Ficinus ‖ aſſigns himſelf two Fathers, ſe duos habuiſſe patres, Ficinum Medicum, & Coſmum Medicen; ex illo natum, ex iſto renatum. He might eaſily perſwade me that the Name Palingenius was not the Name of the Family of the Author of Zodiacus vitæ, but a Name turn'd into Greek according to the mode of that time. Nevertheleſs, I cannot think that this Piece was compos'd by Ficinus, ſince we are inform'd by Giraldus § of the proceſs made againſt the Aſhes of the Author of this Poem.

PALLAVICINO (Ferrante) the Author of ſome Satyrical Pieces, which made him loſe his Head upon a Scaffold. I have nothing to add to what Moreri has ſaid of him, but that there is an Abridgment of his Life prefix'd to the new Verſion ¶ of his Celeſtial Divorce.

PANORMITA (Antony) a native of * Palermo in Sicily, and deſcended from the Illuſtrious Family ɔ of the Beccatelli, which had been illuſtrious a long time at * Bologna, was one of the ableſt Men of the XVth Century. He being a Perſon of great worth for his Virtue and Learning, offer'd his Service to Philip Duke of Milan, and was receiv'd by him with great teſtimonies of his Goodneſs and Liberality. He taught him Hiſtory, and made publick Lectures, for which he had a Salary of 800 Crowns a Year. He was afterwards Secretary to Alphonſus King of Naples, and the chief director (A) of his Studies. The Learned Diſputes he had with Laurentius Valla, occaſion'd a torrent of Reproaches on both ſides, wherewith their Common Enemies very much diverted themſelves. He waited till he was old before he Married (B), and then he eſpous'd a beautiful Maid, for whom he had a particular Tenderneſs; and by whom he had Children who left Poſterity ‡. He was a Man

(E) An infinite number of Editions of this Poem.] The Authors of the Index librorum prohibitorum quote that of Baſil 1537, and obſerve that it followed that of Italy; but they neither ſet down the Year nor the Place of the latter Edition (a). I make uſe of that of 1569. in Octavo, where there is neither the Name of the Printer, nor the Place of the Impreſſion. The Alphabetical Table of Matters in it is very large, which was in the former Edition of 1537. as Geſner (b) obſerves. His Abridger ſays nothing of the Commentary of Wirſungus, neither under the word Palingenius, nor under that of Wirſungus. Mr. Moreri affirms that this Book was tranſlated into French and other Languages. La Croix du Maine ſays only, that Scævola de Sainte Marthe promis'd an entire Verſion of this Author, having publiſh'd one part of it. His Words are theſe, (c) "As he hath ſhewn "by his fine and well-poliſh'd imitations of the "Learned Italian Poet Marcellus Palingenius, whom "he tranſlated with ſo much grace that this diverted many from ſetting about it, who before had "reſolved to tranſlate it into our Language. He promis'd to continue till he had made an intire Verſion of the Zodiack of the ſaid Palingenius; but "hitherto he has Printed but one part of it, with "his other French Poems, which he entitled, His firſt Works, containing four Books of Imitations "and Tranſlations of ſeveral Greek and Latin Poets "printed at Paris by Frederic Morel, in the Year "1569. Du Verdier agrees with this Account, "who ſays (d) "That Scævola de Sainte Marthe, publiſh'd a Collection of many Diſcourſes taken from "the Zodiack of Life, written by Marcellus Palingenius, Phyſician to the Duke of Ferrara, and "tranſlated by him into French Verſe. If any one ſhould have ask'd of Mr. Moreri, what are the other (e) Poems of this Italian, he would have been a little puzzled to give an Account of them.

(A) Secretary to Alphonſus . . . and chief Director of his Studies.] This is what may be gather'd from theſe Phraſes of Paulus Jovius, [(f) Panormita Alphonſo adhæſit, ſecretioris ſcrinii magiſter, & ſtudiorum, expeditionumque omnium terra marique perpetuus comes. See the Remark C of the Article of this Prince, and add to it if you pleaſe, this Paſſage of Jovianus Pontanus: (h)] Rex Alphonſus ſtatim poſt prandium, vel Antonium Panormitam, vel è doctis aliquem audiebat, ut qui dignum judicaret animum quoque cibo ſuo poſt paſtum corporis reficiendum eſſe. Note, That this Prince caus'd Letters of Naturalization to be drawn up for Panormita, and made him a Free-man of Naples; he made him alſo his Counſellor, and Preſident of the Royal Chamber (i).

(B) He waited till he was old before he married.] This is what Paulus Jovius remarks, Senex, ſays he, (k) uxorem duxit Arcellam ſibi magnopere dilectam, liberoſque ſuſcepit quorum honeſta ſoboles Neapoli viſitur. The King underſtanding that Panormita was about to marry, at firſt blam'd the Deſign; for he thought that his Secretary not being able for the future to mind both his Spouſe and his Books, he ſhould loſe the Pleaſure of Studying; but when he knew that his Spouſe was both Beautiful and Virtuous, he changed his Opinion, believing that the Pleaſures of this Marriage would compenſate thoſe of Studying. Panormita himſelf gives an Account of this particular: (l) Cum audiſſet Rex me uxorem eſſe ducturum, primo improbavit, arbitratus de cætero literis ſimul & uxori me operam dare non poſſe, ac proinde vera ſolidaque literarum voluptate cariturum. Sed cum mox audiſſet, me Leonoram Aureliam virginem probam, nobilem ac formoſam duxiſſe, approbavit, literarum commoda, & honeſti conjugii ſuavitatem in æquo ponens. I believe that Aureliam is a Fault either of the Tranſcriber or the Printer, for Arceliam; for the Epitaph of this Woman in the Poems of Jovius Pontanus, has this prefix'd to it, (m) Lauræ Arceliæ uxoris Antonii Panormitæ (tumulus). I know not whence Varillas took the particulars I ſhall here ſubjoyn. "Antony of Palermo . . . had been "very moderate the firſt 70 Years of his Life, but "at 71, he fell in love with a beautiful Maid of Naples, call'd Marcilla, and began to think of Marriage. He had many Children by her, and dyed "10 Years after, with ſo little Pain and Diſtraction, "that a Moment before he expir'd, he wrote his "own Epitaph (n). Mr. Varillas names not right the Miſtreſs of Panormita, and he ſpoils, by too bold an Hyperbole, what Paulus Jovius ſays concerning the time when Panormita wrote his own Epitaph: (o) Æger vitaque diffidens in ſupremo morbo hoc carmen compoſuit. Which ſignifies only, that the Author

* See Baillet's Judgment of Poets, tom. 4. p. 149.

† See the Remark C.

‖ Ficinus Epiſt. dedicat. ad Laurent. Medicen in lib. de vita, tom. 1. p. m. 482.

§ See the Remark C.

¶ Printed at Amſterdam 1696. and written by a Man of much Wit and Merit.

* Hieron. Raguſa, elog. Siculorum. p. 33.

ɔ Jovius elog. c. 12. pag. 33.

* For this he is call'd by ſome Authors Antonius Bononia.

‡ Jovius ibid.

(a) The ſame thing is to be ſaid of Geſner & his Abridgers.

(b) In Biblioth. fol. 492.

(c) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 452.

(d) Du Verdier Vau-Privas, Bibliotheque Françoiſe, pag. 842.

(e) He compos'd ſome Poems, and among the reſt, that which is intitled Zodiacus vitæ.

Moreri at the word Palingenius.

(f) *Paulus Jovius Elog. c.*12. p. 33.

(h) Jov. Pontanus de conviv. pag. 143. apud Leonard. Nicodemum Addiz. alla bibl. Napolet. pag. 21, 22.

(i) Nicolo Toppi, bibl. Napoletan. p. 24.

(k) Jovius ubi ſupra p. 34.

(l) Panormita de dictis & factis Alfonſi lib. 3. n. 27. p. 63. edit. Hanov. 1611.

(m) Jovian Pontan. tumulorum lib. 2. fol. m. 83. verſo.

(n) Varillas Anecdotes de Flor. pag. 165.

(o) Jovius ubi ſupra.

Man of a very good † humour, and one who made the Porticus of Naples (C) famous, wherein many Perſons of Wit aſſembled to diſcourſe with him about a hundred Things. He was the beſt Poet of his time, and (D) he receiv'd from the Emperor Sigiſmund a Poetical Crown, according to the ancient Ceremonies. Beſides, he underſtood the Civil Law; he wrote well in proſe, and was alſo a good Orator *. He was employ'd in Affairs (E) of State, as well upon account of his great Capacity as of his Reputation for Wiſdom. He was deputed to the Venetians in 1451. by King Alphonſus to demand of them the Bone of the Arm of Livy, ‡ which was granted him. He ſold a Farm (F) to purchaſe this Hiſtorian. He wrote an Epitaph for † Imprimis facet. Facius de rebus geſtis Alfonſi lib. 3. pag. 103.

* Id. ib.

‡ See the Article Titus Livius.

thor compos'd it during that Sickneſs of which he never hoped to be cured, and of which he really dyed. If it be true, as Jovianus Pontanus ſeems to ſay, (p) That Panormita and Theodorus Gaza dyed much about the ſame time, it may be thought that Varillas was not miſtaken as to the Age of Panormita, but he muſt be miſtaken as to the Continuance of the Marriage, ſince 'tis certain that Panormita married while Alphonſus was alive, and that this Prince dyed in the Year 1458, and Theodorus Gaza twenty Years after.

(C) Who made the Porticus of Naples famous] Jovianus Pontanus his Diſciple, in one of his Dialogues, introduces a Sicilian, who asks of an Inhabitant of Naples where this Porticus is, (a) Quænam quæſo, bone civis, Antoniana eſt Porticus? To whom Anſwer was made Antonium ne hoſpes requiris, an eam quæ ab illo Porticus Antoniana dicitur? We will ſet down the Reply of the Sicilian, wherein you will find the Character of the Converſations of Panormita, which reſembled thoſe of Socrates. (b) Et porticum ipſam noſſe, & Antonium videre cupio, audio enim pomeridianis horis illic conventum haberi literatorum hominum. Ipſum autem Antonium quanquam multa dicit, plura tamen ſciſcitari quàm docere ſolitum; nec tam probare quæ dicantur, quàm Socratico quodam more irridere diſſerentes. Auditores verò ipſos magis voluptatis cujuſdam eorum quæ à ſe dicuntur plenos domum dimittere, quàm certos rerum earum quæ in quæſtione verſentur. I add to this a Fragment of the Reply of the Neapolitan (c). Hæc illa eſt Porticus in qua ſedere ſolebat ille ſenum omnium feſtiviſſimus. Conveniebant autem docti viri, nobileſque item homines ſanè multi. Ipſe quòd in proximo habitaret, primus hic conſpici, interim dum Senatus, ut ipſe uſurpabat, cogeretur, aut jocans cum prætereuntibus, aut ſecum aliquid ſuccinens, quo animum oblectaret.] Since Panormita was a Man of witty Sayings, I believe it may be ſaid, that if the Mode of making Collections which end in Ana, had prevail'd in that time, as it prevails ſome time ſince (d), we ſhould have had a Book intituled Panormitaniana, which wou'd have taught us many things. The Aſſemblies of this Porticus may doubtleſs be compar'd to the Mercuriales of Mr. Menage. If you deſire a Proof that Panormita ſaid witty Things, read the Book of Pontanus de Sermone, and there you will ſee ſome of them, and among others, you will find there a Thought which is become very common, and it is this, That to make a good Agreement in a Family, you ſhould joyn together a blind Woman and a deaf Husband. (e) Antonius Panormita ſuavis admodum vir interrogatus ad rem uxoriam jucunde concorditerque agendam, quibusnam maximè opus eſſe duceret? ſumpto argumento à frequentia moleſtiarum ac magnitudine, quæ in vita contingerent conjugali: duobus tantum opus eſſe reſpondit, vir ut aurium ſurditate teneretur, uxor verò ut oculis eſſet capta: ne altera videlicet inſpiceret quæ à marito intemperanter fierent plurima, alter ne audiret obgannientem aſſiduo domi uxorem.

(D) The beſt Poet of his time . . . and he receiv'd a Poetical Crown.] He is eſteem'd the firſt (f) Reſtorer of Latin Poetry, and here follows the Compliment which Faccius made to him under the Perſon of Guarinus: (g) Quod in cæteris partibus te antecedam, in eo tibi planè non aſſentior, præſertim cum tu Juris conſultus & Eques ſis: cumque plures Rhetores his temporibus inveniuntur ſatis clari, poëta autem illuſtris præter te nullus, qui quidem Sigiſmundo Imperatore propter optimum de te judicium, conſenſu omnium excitatum, laurea corona more majorum donatus ſis, quæ res uſque adhuc noſtrum contigit nemini. Voſſius did not rightly underſtand theſe Words, for he thought that they ſignified that no Man before Panormita had receiv'd the Poetick Crown. This is a Miſtake; if Faccius had meant this, he would have publiſh'd a groſs Lye; for who is ignorant of the Solemnity of the Poetick Coronation of Petrarch? But the Compliment of Guarinus was this, The Emperor has crown'd you after the manner of our Anceſtors, and ſince that time none of us learned Men hath obtained that Honour. This Senſe is very different from that of Voſſius, which he thus expreſſes: (h) Panormita hic à Bartholomæo Facio initio lib. de humanæ vitæ felicitate poëta, atque eques præclarus nominatur: & mox, clarus & ſingularis poëta, & juriſconſultus. Ac paulo poſt ait Sigiſmundo Imp. laurea donatum corona, more majorum, quæ res uſque ad id tempus contigiſſet nemini.

(E) Employ'd in Affairs of State, as well upon the Account.] Read theſe Words of Faccius, (i) Miſit igitur Otolinus ad Alphonſum qui peteret ad ſe mitti quempiam ex iis quibus fidelioribus uteretur qui cum de deditione ageret, & nominatim Antonium Panormitam, quem poëtam non inſuetum Mediolani apud Philippum in magna gratia & dignitate cognoverat: cumque non tantum propter prudentiam, ſed multo etiam magis propter æquitatis opinionem, & quod illum ab Alphonſo apprime diligi acceperat. You will find in the Hiſtorian whom I cite, the Harangue which Panormita made to the Inhabitants of Gaeta, in the Name of Alphonſus, and that which he made to the Venetians, to congratulate them about the Peace.

(F) He ſold a Farm to purchaſe Livy.] (k) "It is "very well known, that Beccatelli, otherwiſe call'd "Bologna, of Palermo, was obliged to ſell a "Farm that he might purchaſe a Livy, written with "the Hand of Poggius Florentinus, who employ'd "this Price of his Book to purchaſe a Farm near "Florence, about the Year 1455. Theſe are the Words of Mr. Baillet, who quotes for it the 154 page of the Treatiſe of Libraries, compos'd by Mr. le Gallois. I have conſulted this Treatiſe, and found in it a French Tranſlation of the Letter which was written on this Subject to King Alphonſus, which follows: "(l) Sir, You have "acquainted me from Florence, that the Books of "Livy, written in a fair Hand, are to be ſold, "and that they asks for them 120 Crowns. I pray "your Majeſty to cauſe this Author to be brought "to me, which we are wont to call the King of "Books. And I intreat your Prudence to let me "know, whether Poggius or I does better, he who "to purchaſe a Farm near Florence, ſells Livy; or I "who to purchaſe the Book written with his own "Hand, ſell my Land. Your Goodneſs and Mo"deſty induce me to put this familiar Queſtion to "you. Farewel and triumph. If you would ſee the Reflections of Mr. Gallois, you need only read what follows: "(m) I think ſo great a King ſhould "not have ſuffered ſo honeſt a Man to ſell his Land "to purchaſe Livy. He ought, like a Prince, to have "generouſly given it to him. Neither do I ſee any "Cauſe why Pecatel (n) ſhould blame Poggius for "ſelling Livy, ſince he might have two Copies of "him, or at leaſt he might have read him ſo many "times over, that he had no further need of him.

I have three little Notes to make. Firſt, It is not true that Panormita declar'd, he purchas'd this Manuſcript from Poggius; on the contrary he intimates very plainly, that the M. S. of Poggius was already ſold, and that the Price of it was employ'd in purchaſing a Farm; let us here ſet down his Latine Letter, that the unfaithfulneſs of him who tranſlated it into French may appear. (o) Significaſti mihi nuper ex Florentia extare Titi Livii opera venalia, literis pulcherrimis, libro pretium eſſe cxx. aureos. Quare Majeſtatem tuam oro, ut Livium quem Regem librorum appellare conſuevimus, emi meo nomine, ac deferri, ad nos facias. Interim ego pecuniam procurabo quam pro libri pretio tradam. Sed illud à prudentia tua ſcire deſidero, uter ego an Poggius melius fecerit; is ut villam Florentiæ emeret, Livium vendidit quem ſua manu pulcherrimè ſcripſerat: ego ut Livium emam fundum proſcripſi. Hæc ut familiariter à te peterem ſuaſit humanitas & modeſtia tua. Vale & triumpha.

In

(p) See the laſt Remark. n. 7.

(a) Id. in dialogo Antonius init.

(b) Id. ib. p. 1196.

(c) Id. ib. p. 1198. See alſo de Sermone. l. 6. c. 4. pag. 1741.

(d) This I writ in the Year 1697.

(e) Jovian Pontanus de Sermone. lib. 3. c. 17. pag. 1645, 1646.

(f) Obliteratam nedum langueſcentem in Italia poëticam reſtituit in antiquam pene formam. Id. de Sermone. lib. 6. c. 4. p. m. 1738.

(g) Barthol. Faccius de hum. vitæ felicitate circa init. p. m. 108.

(h) Voſſius de hiſtor. Latin. lib. 3. p. 593.

(i) Faccius ubi ſupra pag. 102, 103. apud Leon. Nicodemum addit. alla bibliot. Napolet. p. 22, 23.

(k) Baillet, Jugem. des Sav. tom. 1. pag. 545.

(l) Gallois traité des Biblioth. pag. 154, 155.

(m) Id. ib. p. 155.

(n) It ſhould be Beccatel.

(o) Anton. Panormita epiſtol. lib. 5. apud Naudé addit. à l'hiſt. de Louis XI. pag. 23.

for himſelf (G) which is a proof of his Preſumption, and of his Orthodoxy at the ſame time. He ſuffer'd with much conſtancy long (H) pains by reaſon of a difficulty in making Urine, and diſcourſ'd admirably about Adverſity and Proſperity. The publick hath ſeen ſome of his † Writings, but his Latin Poem entitled Hermaphroditus, was never publiſh'd. It is a piece (I) ſo full of Obſcenity that even Poggius diſlik'd it. Mr. Moreri has not committed many (K) conſiderable Faults: Thoſe of Varillas are not very numerous; ſee them in the Remark B.

† There were printed at Venice 1553. five Books of his Letters, 2 Harangues, & ſome Verſes. See the laſt Remark.

PARA-

In the ſecond Place, 'tis not true that Panormita blames Poggius, he leaves it to King Alphonſus to judge, whether it be more Prudent to ſell a Book to purchaſe ſome Land, or to ſell Land to purchaſe a Book, and as to himſelf he determines nothing about the Matter. Thirdly, The Excuſe that Poggius might have read Livy ſo often, that he ſhould have no further need of him, is chimerical; for a Book of this Nature is not got by Heart, although it be read ſeveral times over, and it cannot be ſuperfluous, unleſs one had it almoſt by Heart.

(G) An Epitaph, which is a Proof of his Preſumption and of his Orthodoxy] It contain'd theſe four Verſes.

Quærite Pierides alium qui ploret amores,
Quærite qui Regum fortia facta canat.
Me Pater ille ingens hominum ſator atque redemptor,
Evocat & ſedes donat adire pias.

That's to ſay, Muſes, ſeek out another Poet who ſhould make Verſes of Love, and ſing the brave Actions of Kings, for as to me I am a going to Paradiſe; the great God, Creator and Redeemer of Mankind, calls me thither. Gyraldus conſider'd this Epitaph only on the wrong ſide, (p) he perceiv'd in it the Arrogance, but not the Faith of the Author. I do not think that he found any heterodox Principle in it, upon Pretence that Purgatory is excluded out of it.

(H) He ſuffer'd with much Conſtancy, long Pains, and he diſcours'd admirably about Adverſity.] Jovian Pontanus his Diſciple ſhall here be my Warrant, who ſpeaks as an Eye-witneſs. (a) Vidimus Antonium Panhormitam multos annos tormina & urinæ difficultatem tam ſedate ferre, ut etiam diſſimulare videri poſſet ægritudinem. He ſays in another Book, that Panormita was always cheerful, whether his Affairs went well or ill: His Principle was to refer all to God, and to ſuppoſe that the Cauſes of Good or Ill Fortune were hid from us; and that there are many Accidents which are thought unhappy, which are not, ſince they are only Occaſions which Providence offers us to ſhow our Conſtancy. (b) Quid erat lætiꝰ in rebus Antonio jucundius? quid rurſus in turbatis atque aſperis gratius? Incredibilis quædam in ejus oratione vis inerat res humanas contemnendi, ferendique fortuitos caſus æquo animo, quippe cum omnia referret ad Deum, diceretque latêre nos & bonorum, & malorum cauſas. Pleraque autem videri quæ non eſſent mala, ut quæ objecta nobis eſſent à Deo, quo humana in iis conſtantia fortitudoque eniteſceret. Quotum enim fortem inveniri, ſi quieta & ſecura omnia nobis forent? natos eſſe homines ad comparandam virtutem, ad excolendos animos, neminem autem ſine laboribus plurimis poſſe hoc aſſequi, ſed decipi opinione, nimiſque demiſſè, ac molliter nobiſcum nos ipſos agere: quæ fluant aquas ſalubriores eſſe, magiſque probari: quæ vero reſtagnent, noxias ac peſtilentes eſſe..... Optimo itaque & fortiſſimo cuique labores ac moleſtias offerri à Deo, eamque veluti materiam præberi in qua ſeſe exerceat, cum excellentia hominum cæterorum. Tum Imperatores ipſi quos præcipuè ament, & quorum virtus eſt proſpectior, iis graviſſima & periculoſiſſima quæque demandent. Atque hanc quidem ipſam, non quæ prædam quæritaret, maximè illuſtrem militiam eſſe. Et verò ignavi eſſe, imbecillis, deſidis, odiſſe labores, fugitare moleſtias, velleque in otio, ac ſub umbra marceſcere. There is nothing finer than theſe common Places; and they are very true according to the preſent Condition of humane Nature: But at the ſame time it muſt be acknowledg'd, that they ſuppoſe that it is a very odd Condition; for what can be more aſtoniſhing and incomprehenſible, than to ſee a Man reduc'd to ſuch a State, that he muſt be unhappy to avoid greater Evils? Why is he not conducted from one Good to another, until he arrive at Perfection? Why ſhould Vexation, Grief and Miſery, be the leaſt inconvenient Way that he can take? The Pagans could ſay nothing that was Good to this Difficulty, and they were ſtupid enough hardly to think of it: Revelation only can ſolve it.

(p) Senex diem obiit hocque ſibi moriens epitaphium arrogantiæ plenum condidiſſe legi. Gyraldus de poët. ſui tempor. dial. 1.

(a) Jovian. Pontanus de fortitudine lib. 2. fol. m. 51.

(b) Id. in Dialogo Antonius init. pag. m. 1197.

(I) His Hermaphroditus is a Piece ſo full of Obſcenity that even Poggius diſlik'd it.] It was dedicated to Coſmus de Medicis, who made many Copies of it (c) whereof ſome ſtill remain in the Library of St. Laurence. The Reaſon why it was dedicated to that great Man, was becauſe he regarded not the Opinion of the Vulgar, but pleas'd himſelf with reading this laſcivious Piece. The Author himſelf makes this Remark, for thus he begins, (d) Hermaphroditi libellus incipit ad Coſmum Florentinum ex illuſtri progenie Mediceorum virum clariſſimum. Quod ſpreto vulgo libellum æquo animo legat, quamvis laſcivum & ſecum una priſcos viros imitetur. Mr. Magliabecchi (e) has a manuſcript Copy of this Poem. At that time many Letters were written about that Poetry. (f) Guarin of Verona wrote one to John Lamola, wherein he gives great Praiſe to the Hermaphroditus and its Author; of which Letter Mr. Magliabecchi has a Copy. Gyraldus thought it very ſtrange, that this Poem ſhould be commended. Legi, ſays he, (g) ejus ætatis quorundam epiſtolas quibus Hermaphroditus illius multis laudibus commendatur, ſed quare neſcio. Dicam ego vobis ſanè quid ſentio, nec is mihi poëta bonus, nec bonus Orator, quæ enim ſoluto & pedeſtri ſermone ejus ſcripta legi, luxuriantis magis quam bonæ frugis referta videntur, ut impudicas & proſtitutas ejus Muſas mittam. You ſee that he does not only deteſt the Obſcenity of this Piece, but he deſpiſes alſo the Verſes themſelves. But the Cenſure of Poggius was not ſo, for he commended the Invention, the Wit, and the Ornaments of the Work; but he condemn'd the Obſcenity, and counſell'd the Author, for the future, to beſtow his Pains upon Subjects more becoming a Chriſtian. (h) Delectatus ſum, meherclè, varietate rerum & elegantia verſuum: ſimulque admiratus ſum res adeo impudicas, adeo ineptas tam venuſtè tam compoſitè à te dici, atque ita multa exprimi turpiuſcula, ut non enarrari ſed agi videantur: nec ficta à te jocandi cauſa, ut exiſtimo, ſed acta exiſtimari poſſint. Laudo ego doctrinam tuam, jucunditatem carminis, jocos ac ſales..... pro charitate tamen qua omnibus debitores ſumus, unum eſt quod te monere & debeo & volo, ut ſcilicet deinceps graviora quidem mediteris, hæc enim quæ adhuc edidiſti, vel ætati concedi poſſunt, vel licentiæ jocandi..... ſcis enim non licere idem nobis qui Chriſtiani ſumus, quod olim poëtis qui Deum ignorabant. Panormita anſwer'd Poggius, and alledged to him ſome Reaſons to juſtify or excuſe himſelf. (i) Poggius reply'd, and maintain'd, that a Man ought to be Virtuous, not only in his Actions, but in his Writings (k). From whence we may conclude, that he repented of having employ'd his Pen in laſcivious Writings during his youth (l). We will conclude with the Words of a Dutch Writer, who had read this obſcene Poem of Panormita: (m) de Hermaphrodito quod dicit (Gyraldus) non eſt de nihilo: ego enim legi manu deſcriptum, (neque enim unquam eſt typis excuſus) adeo ſpurcum, adeo abominabilem, ut nihil ſupra. Verſus deinde ipſi vix ſunt tolerabiles, tantum abeſt ut laudem aliquam mereantur. Inſcribitur autem Hermaphroditus, eo quod utriuſque ſexus membra genitalia utriuſque libelli omnem materiam faciunt. Hæc qui patienter legit, ne illum oportet eſſe hominem frugi.

(K) Mr. Moreri has not committed many Faults that are conſiderable.] 1. Inſtead of ſaying as he does, that Panormita was a Native of Bologna, and originally from Sicily, he ſhould have ſaid the quite contrary. Mr. Varillas (n) alſo makes him a Native of Bologna. 2. He ſhould not have affirm'd, that Philip, Lord of Milan invited him to his Houſe, but he ſhould rather have ſaid, that Panormita made an offer of his Wit to Philip Duke of Milan: (o) Quum Philippo Mediolanenſium principi fertilis ingenii induſtriam obtuliſſet, tanta liberalitate ſuſceptus eſt ut, &c. Theſe are the Words of Paulus Jovius, cited by Mr. Moreri. 3. Why does he ſay, that Panormita did not ſerve the King of Naples until after the Death of the Duke of Milan? Does not Paulus Jovius (p) intimate the contrary? 4. I have ſhown elſewhere the Falſhood of theſe Words of Moreri: He wrote with Care

the

(c) Leonardo Nicodemo ubi ſupra pag. 21.

(d) See Nicodemo ibid. p. 20.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) So I correct Gravino Veroneſe, which I find in Nicodemo. ibid.

(g) Lil. Gregor. Gyraldus de poëtis ſui tempor. dial. 1 pag. 385. apud Nicodemum ibid.

(h) Poggius epiſt. pag. 131. 132. apud Nicodemum ib. p. 21.

(i) Nicodem. ib.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Dal che ſi comprende ch'eſſo ſi pentiſſe delle facezie, e dell' altre coſe meno oneſte che in gioventu ſcritte avea. Nicodemo ib.

(m) Author Anonymus notarum ad poëmata Sannazarii pag. 202, 203. edit. Amſtel. 1689.

(n) Varillas, Anecdot. de Florence pag. 169.

(o) Jovius ubi ſupra.

(p) Verum eo (Philippo) graviſſimis bellis occupato Panhormita Alphonſo adhæſit. Id. ibid.

PARACLET, An Abbey of Nuns of the Foundation of Peter Abelard. This Learned Man being a Monk in the Abbey of St. Denys, after the Relations of Heloiſa had villainouſly caſtrated him, quarrell'd more than once with his Brethren; and at laſt it was to be fear'd that he ſhould be deliver'd over to the Secular Power, becauſe he had ſaid, that St. Denys the Areopagite had not converted France. He made his eſcape into the Territories of Thibaud, Earl of Champagne, and kept next to Provins in a Cell which did belong to the Monks of Troies. Some time after, having obtain'd leave from the Abbot of St. Denys to retire to any Hermitage he pleas'd, provided he ſhould not depend upon any Community; he made choice of a very ſolitary Retirement in the Dioceſs (A) of Troies. There he built β a Cottage on a piece of Ground that was given him, and, with the leave of the Biſhop, he made of that Cottage an Oratory, which he conſecrated to the Trinity. His Scholars knowing this, ran from all parts to this Deſart, and there built themſelves Huts, being well ſatisfy'd to live upon Herbs and Roots, and to ſubſiſt, as I may ſay, upon Bread and Water, provided they might enjoy the benefit of the Lectures of this famous Profeſſor. He could not dig the Ground, and he was aſham'd to beg, and therefore he thought it convenient to get a Subſiſtence by his Tongue, and by reaſſuming his ancient profeſſion, knowing that his Scholars would furniſh him with what was neceſſary for his Subſiſtence. And they did more than this, for they inlarg'd the Oratory, and built it of Wood and Stone: Then Abelard gave it the Name of Paraclet, to preſerve the memory of the Conſolations he had receiv'd in this Deſart. The jealouſie of Profeſſion,' which a long time before had ſtir'd up againſt him Alberic of Rheims, and Ludolfus of Lombardy, was furiouſly reviv'd, when they ſaw ſo many Scholars flock about him, notwithſtanding the Inconveniencies of the Place, and in contempt of the Maſters they could ſo conveniently find in the Cities. They ſought therefore for all Occaſions to vex him, and did not forget that which the Title of Paraclet did afford them. They ſaid, that it was an Innovation, and that it was not more lawful to conſecrate Churches to the Holy Spirit than to God the Father. The rumour of this was ſpread among a great number of People: But the Perſecution was infinitely more terrible, when the two Perſons above nam'd had prevail'd with St. Bernard and St Norbert to eſpouſe their Intereſt, who valued themſelves upon the Account of their great Zeal, and their Humour of Reformation. He could by no means ſtand againſt ſuch Adverſaries; Abelard therefore quitted that Place, and went into the lower Britain, where the Monks of the Abbey of St. Gildas of Ruys had choſen him for their Head. The Paraclet remain'd empty, until ſuch time as the Abbot of St. Denys drove away the Nuns of Argenteuil from their Convent. Heloiſa their Prioreſs, not knowing where to go, was overjoyed that her ancient Husband ſhould yield her the Paraclet. Pope Innocent II. confirmed this Donation † in the Year, 1131; and this was the Original of the Abbey of the Paraclet, whereof Heloiſa was the firſt Abbeſs. Great Riches γ were given to it in a little time. The Abbeſſes who ſucceeded her, were very often of the moſt ancient Houſes of the Kingdom; you may ſee a Catalogue of them in the Works * of Abelard, from the Hiſtory of this King. This pretended Hiſtory is nothing but a Collection of the Apophthegmes, and memorable Actions of Alphonſus, de dictis & factis Alfonſi Regis Aragonum libri quatuor. That Prince (r) rewarded the Author for it with 1000 Crowns. 5. He impoſes upon us when he ſays, That we have divers Editions of that Hiſtory, with the Remarks, and Commentaries of Æneas Sylvius; for theſe pretended Comentaries, are nothing but a Collection of the Actions and Sentences of other Princes like thoſe of Alphonſus. By the by obſerve a Fault of Voſſius, who thought that the Piece of Panormita, and that of Sylvius, had always been printed (ſ) apart, until Marquardus Freherus publiſh'd them as Parallels. This Miſtake he might have avoided, by conſulting the Bibliotheca of Geſner, where he might have ſeen, that in the Baſil Edition, 1538. what Panormita had done was interwoven Chapter by Chapter (t) with what Æneas Sylvius had collected. Paulus Jovius was not ignorant of this, for ſpeaking of Panormita's Book, he ſays, (v) Quem pius pontifex exemplis paribus INTERTEXTIS nobiliorem reddidiſſe videtur. I do not blame in Voſſius the Word Commentariis, which he makes uſe of, ſpeaking of the Book of Æneas Sylvius, for this Word in Latin is of a larger Extent than our Word Commentary. 6. Since none of the three Authors whom Moreri cites, ſays any ſuch thing, he had no Reaſon to ſay, That it is certain that Panormita ſurviv'd King Alphonſus, who dyed in 1458. and that 'tis probable he did not die till after 1460. 7. This Probability is not well prov'd by alledging a Letter written to Panormita by Philelphus in 1458, for without doubt he receiv'd many Letters the ſame Year that he died. Note, That I do not mean to deny that he liv'd till after the Year 1460; I only condemn the Raſhneſs of an Author, who affirms that which his Witneſſes do not affirm. I believe that Panormita died after 145[illegible], becauſe I find in the ſame Dialogue, where it is ſaid that he was lately (a) dead, that Theodorus the Grecian had departed this Life not long before: Now I fanſie that this Theodorus, (b) is not different from Theodorus Gaza, who died (c) in the Year 1478. therefore I do not alledge what we read in the ſame Dialogue, that it was a little more than an Age (d) ſince there had happen'd a Conflagration in the Iſle Ænaria, for the Calculation of Pontanus is not exact, ſince this Eruption of Fire happen'd (e) in the Year 1301. 8. He ſhould have cited Miraus in Auctario, and not in Aug. but this Fault I place to the Account of the Correctors of the Printing-Houſe; but that of having cited Miraus is to be reckon'd the Author's. It was very needleſs to cite him, ſince that little which he ſays of Panormita is to be found in Paulus Jovius. I could criticize upon the Place he has aſſign'd to our Panormita, for he ſpeaks of him under the Word Antony, which is not his proper Place.

(A) In the Dioceſs of Troies.] In favour of thoſe who would know the Particulars, I add, that the Paraclet was built in the Pariſh of Quincey, upon the little River of Arduzon, near to Nogent upon the Seine. The Letter of Pope Innocent II. to Heloiſa, touches on the greateſt part of theſe Particulars. (f) Heloiſa Abbatiſſæ cæteriſque ſororibus in Oratorio, quod in pago Trecenſi, in Parrochia Quinceii, ſupra fluvium Arduconem ſitum eſt. The Chronicle of William de Nangis ſays this of It, (g) Conſtruxerat Monaſterium in Epiſcopatu Trecenſi juxta Nogentum ſuper Sequanam, in quodam prato ubi legere ſolitus fuerat. This laſt Circumſtance is contrary to the (h) Narrative of Abelard, according to which 'tis certain, that he taught not in the Place where he built the Oratory, until after he had built It. I think three Stations of Abelard may be reckon'd in the Territories of the Earl of Champagne; for firſt, he retir'd to it with β Ibi a quibuſdam terra mihi donata, aſſenſu Epiſcopi terræ Oratorium quoddam in nomine Sanctæ Trinitatis ex calamis & culmo primum conſtruxi. Abelard. Oper. pag. 28.

† Taken from the Letter of Abelard, which contains the Hiſtory of his Misfortunes.

γ Plus ut arbitror uno anno in terrenis commodis ſunt multiplicatæ, quam ego per centum ſi ibi permanſiſſem. Ib. pag. 34.

* Not. Andr. du Cheſne in hiſtor. Calamit. Abælardi.

(r) Jovian. Pontanus de liberalitate, fol. m. 97.

(ſ) Utrumque opus SEORSIM antea excuſum παραλλήλως atque emendatius in Germania prodiit (Hanoviæ an. 1611.) cura Marquardi Freheri. Voſſius de Hiſtor. Latinis pag. 593.

(t) Cum Æneæ Sylvii commentariis quæ capitatim cum Alphonſinis contendunt. Geſn. bibl. fol. 62. verſo.

(v) Jovius ubi ſupra p. 34.

(a) Nuper paucos antequam morbo aggravaretur dies. Pontanus in dialago Antonius pag. 1198.

(b) Et Theodorus Græcus qui diem nuper obiit. Id. ib. pag. 1237.

(c) Geſner in Biblioth. fol. 611. verſo.

(d) Centum ante annis aut paulo amplius. Id. ibid. pag. 1231.

(e) Scipio Mazzella, de balneis Puteolanis p. m. 255.

(f) Du Cheſne, not. in hiſt. calamitat. p. 1177.

(g) Apud eumd. ib.

(h) See the Letter intitled Hiſtoria calamitatum from the firſt Foundation, which happen'd in the Year 1130, to the Year 1615. But it was not judg'd convenient to obſerve in it, that Jane Chabot, who died the 25th of June 1593, publickly profeſs'd the Proteſtant Religion, yet without marrying or quitting the Habit ‡ of a Nun, which ſhe always retain'd, tho' ſhe was driven from her Nunnery. To conclude, It is a difficulty which is look'd upon as a matter of conſequence, to know whether it muſt be call'd (B) Paraclet or Paraclit. Not to forget that Heloiſa underſtood much Greek, the Nuns are wont to have the Office read in that Language on Whitſunday †.

PARE (Ambroſe) in Latin, Paræus, a Native of Laval in the Country of Maine. I ſhall only add three things to the Article that Moreri has given of him, viz. That he was a Proteſtant, and that he was ſav'd from (T) the Maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's-Day, by the ſpecial Favour of Charles the Ninth; and that he had many obſtacles (Z) to remove, when he publiſh'd his Book about Phyſick. He had expreſs'd himſelf ſmuttily.

A modern Writer relates two things; one is, || That Ambroſe Pare being Surgeon to Francis the Second, putting a Confidence in Admiral Coligni, declar'd to him, that the Diſtemper in the Ear of that Monarch was extreamly dangerous. The other, That it was ſuſpected he had * put Poyſon in the Ear of this Prince when he dreſs'd it. The Author abovemention'd adds to each of theſe two things many Particulars; believe them who will, I find nothing of them in good Hiſtorians, only I know that Beaucaire has related the ſuſpicion concerning the Poyſon. Spondanus x relates it after him, and does not ſeem to believe it.

PAREUS (David) a famous Reform'd Divine, was born at Francoſtein in Sileſia, December 30. 1548. John Wængler, his Father, Son of a rich Countryman, z made him Study at Francoſtein, and then he put him out to an Apprenticeſhip in Breſlaw, with an Apothecary, and after that with a Shooemaker. But this Child ‡ Maimb. Hiſt. of Calvin. p. 454.

† Aub. Miræus in Schol. ad Henr. Gand. Lovenſ. de ſcript. Eccleſ. p. 155.

|| The Life of Gaſpar Coligni p. 220. Edit. 1686

* Ib. p. 221.

x Spondan. ad Ann. 1560. n. 10.

z Who liv'd more than 100 Years, and ſaw more than 20 Children alive. Philip. Pareus in vita Davidis Parei.

---

with the leave of the Monks of St. Denys, and there read Lectures to a great Number of Scholars. This was interrupted by the Thunder-clap which the Council of Soiſſons ſtruck him with in 1121. Being ſent back to his Cloyſter, and having there brought himſelf into Trouble about Denys the Areopagite, he eſcap'd by Night to Provins, and remain'd in a little Cell until ſuch time as his Difference with the Monks of St. Denys was ended; after which, having leave to live in any Solitude he pleas'd, he tranſported himſelf to the Place where he built the Oratory. It was known that he liv'd there very retiredly (i); the Scholars flock'd to him, and he begun again his Lectures. It does in no wiſe appear, that he retir'd to the ſame Place the firſt and the third time, and it may rather be inferr'd from his Narrative, that theſe two Places of Retreat, were remote from one another: Thus William de Nangis may very well be miſtaken.

(B) Whether it muſt be call'd Paraclet, or Paraclit.] This Queſtion had never been much diſcuſs'd, if this Word had not been found in the Divine Service. This was the ground of the Diſpute, ſome maintaining that it ſhould be pronounc'd Paracletus, while others thought it better to call it Paraclitus; the latter have publickly obtain'd a compleat Victory. Paſquier relates a curious thing, "The Ignorance of "the common People call'd (k) it Paraclit. So have I "ſeen in my younger Days, that in the Churches, "the Holy Spirit was call'd, Spiritum Paraclytum, "not Paracletum, two Words of quite contrary Sig"nifications, for the one ſignifies a Flatterer, and "the other a Comforter. Nay, a little after I came "to the Palace, one Maſter John Sabelat, a Canon "of Chartres, a Man brought up to Learning, hav"ing pronounc'd at the Celebration of his Maſs, "Paracletus, and not Paraclitus, was for that ſuſ"pended, à divinis, by the Biſhop, from which "Sentence he appeal'd as a Grievance, and in main"tainance of his Cauſe, he publiſh'd a very learned "Manifeſto, which I had in my Poſſeſſion ſome "time; and afterwards the Cauſe was compromis'd "between them by ſome Friends of the Biſhop, "that he might not be laugh'd at by the (a)People. There are two things to be reprehended in this Diſcourſe of Paſquier; 1. 'Tis falſe that thoſe who do not pronounce Paracletus, pretend to pronounce Paraclytus; for they pretend to pronounce Paraclitus, and to ſay the very ſame thing with thoſe who pronounce Paracletus. The Queſtion turns only upon this Grammatical Nicety, viz. Whether the η of the Greeks does anſwer to the e or i of the Latins. 2. παράκλυτος does not ſignify a Flaterer, but in general, a Man of a bad Name. Garaſſe (b) here does not ſpare Stephen Paſquier, but inſults him with his uſual Pride, and maintains againſt him, that the Greek Tongue has no ſuch Word as Paraclytus, and that if this Word might be made by Analogy, it would not ſignify a Flatterer, but it would ſignify either an Infamous Man, or one that is honour'd above his Merits. The Apologiſt of Paſquier did act a very ſilly Part, when he writ againſt this; for inſtead of confeſſing that his Client was miſtaken, he took upon him to defend him, and he did not ſo much as know how to invent many falſe Reaſonings; what he replied was equally ſhort and bad. He ſays, (c) that we find in the great Etymologicon, and in Scapula, that Paraclytus with an υ ſignifies a Flatterer. I have a Scapula in folio, Printed at Baſil in 1605, and there I find παράκλυτος at p. 810, and this refutes Father Garaſſe; but there I find that this Word ſignifies infamis, famoſus, which refutes the Defender of Stephen Paſquier. But to return to the general Diſpute, I ſay that Mr. Thiers has wrote a Treatiſe de retinenda in Eccleſiaſticis libris voce Paraclitus, wherein he teaches us many curious things, as that, (d) "In the Ninth Century, that Diſpute "was warmly debated by the Biſhops of France and "Germany, upon occaſion of a Greek who came "to Court, and who hearing in the King's Chappel "Paraclitus Spiritus Sanctus, remonſtrated, that "they ſhould ſay Paracletus. His Remonſtrances were to no Purpoſe; none durſt (e) change the pronounciation of this Word, becauſe it was the Cuſtom to read ſo, and there muſt be no Innovation. Mr. Thiers adds, that in 1526, the Faculty of Theology in Paris, having paſt a Cenſure upon Eraſmus's Works, condemned him among other things for this, that he maintain'd that we ought to write Paracletus.

(T) He was ſav'd from the Maſſacre.] What Brantome ſays upon this Subject is too remarkable to be here omitted (f) "The King, aſſoon as it was "Day, having put his Head out of his Chamber-"Window, whenever he ſaw any in the Suburbs of "St. Germains removing and making their eſcape, "took a great hunting Harquebuſs which he had, "and ſhot with full force at them, but in vain, for "the Harquebuſs would not carry ſo far, and cry'd "out continually, Kill, kill; and would have none "of them to eſcape but Mr. Ambroſe Pare, his firſt Sur"geon, and the beſt in Chriſtendom, and ſent to "ſeek for him, and bring him that Night to his own "Chamber and Wardrobe, commanding him not to "ſtir from thence; for he ſaid, that it was not rea"ſonable that he who could do great ſervice to a "great many People ſhould be thus maſſacred.

(Z) Many obſtacles to remove.] I change nothing in the Expreſſions of the Author, who informs me of this: "Ambroſe Pare, ſays he, (g) a Surgeon to three "Kings ſucceſſively, Learn'd and Experienc'd, who "hath publiſh'd many good and curious Books, "which were for ſome time ſtop'd from being prin"ted and publiſh'd by the College of Learned Phy"ſicians

(i) Oratorium quoddam in nomine Sanctæ Trinitatis ex calamis & culmo primum conſtruxi. Ubi cum quodam Clerico noſtro latitans, illud vere Domino poteram decantare, ecce elongavi fugiens & manſi in ſolitudine. Quod cum cognoviſſent ſcholares, cœperunt undique concurrere. Abal. p. 28.

(k) He ſpeaks of the Oratory of Abelard.

(a) Paſquier's Enquiries of France, l. 6. c. 17. p. m. 511.

(b) Enquiry of Enquiries, B. 3. ſect. 12.

(c) Defence for Steph. Paſquier, p. 795.

(d) See the Journal of the Learned, of the 16*th of* Decem. 1669.

(e) Ibid. ex Haimone Epiſcopo Alberſtad.

(f) Brantome's Memoirs, Tom. 4. Diſcourſe of Charles IX

(g) Louis Guyon divers Lectures, to. 2. b. 2. ch. 8. p. 298.

Child was not born for such little things; and as the Author of his Life says, the God who presides over the Muses did not abandon him to the Caprices of a Step-mother, who was the Cause of this unworthy Treatment. The good Man, John Wangler, order'd him to return to his Studies in 1564, and sent him to Hirschberg in the Neighbourhood, where there was a College, of which a Learned Man call'd Christopher Schilling † was Rector. There our young Scholar acquir'd the Name of Pareus (A) taken from the Greek by Allusion to that of his Family. This was the common Custom of that time, and particularly of Schilling. The bad Humour of the Step-mother, was a little pacified no doubt, because the Pension for David was not to be paid; for he maintain'd himself by means of (B) a Preceptorship, and by the Money he receiv'd from one of the principal Men ‡ of the Place, every time that he presented him with Verses. His Regent did not only take from him his Paternal Name, but also turn'd him from Lutheranism, by explaining to him the Nature of the Lord's Supper, as well as to the rest of his Scholars. This was of mischievous Consequence both to the Master and the Scholar; the former was turned out of his School, at the Importunity of the Minister of the Place; the latter was like to be disinherited by his Father, from whom he could very hardly extort leave to go to the Palatinate, altho he made use of a Reason, which is commonly most prevailing, to wit, that by this means he would make an end of his Studies without any expence to the Family. Having obtain'd this Leave at last, he follow'd his Master, who was invited by the Elector Palatine Frederick the III, to be Principal of the School of Amberg. The Allowance which his Father gave him for his Journey was so small, that he was forc'd sometimes to beg by the Way. A little after his Arrival at Amberg, in 1566, he was sent with Ten of his Comrades to Heidelberg, by their common Master, who gave them so good Recommendations, that they were all admitted into the College of the Sapience, whereof Zachary Ursinus, Professor of Divinity, was Director. The University of Heidelberg was then most flourishing in all the Faculties, and so Pareus wanted nothing to improve himself considerably in the Languages, in Philosophy and Divinity. He was admitted Minister in 1571, and sent in the Month of May into a Village call'd Schlettenbach, where he was much entangled, because the Protestants and Roman Catholicks (C) were there at Difference with one another. Nevertheless he was ready to marry there, before the Winter came on, when he was call'd back to Heidelberg, to be Regent of the third Class. This Call made his Project of Marriage vanish away, and he so well acquitted himself in his Employment, that at the end of two Years, he was promoted

† We shall speak of him in its proper Place.

‡ Albert Kindler Lord of Zackenstein, who was since Governour of Lusatia.

" ficians in Paris, not upon the account of any Er-" ror that was discover'd in them relating to the Art " of which he treated; but because in his Book of " Generation, thro' inadvertence, he had inserted " some Passages about it which were a little immo-" dest; and after he had corrected them he met " with no more opposition.

(A) The name of* Pareus taken from the Greek.] His Father was call'd Wangler. Now Wange in the German Tongue signifies the same thing with παρειὰ in Greek, i. e. the Cheek. Παρεὺς therefore was form'd ἀπὸ τῆς παρειᾶς, quasi dicas, GENIUS Wangler. The Son of Pareus, from whom I take this Remark, says, (b) That his Father opposed as much as he could this change of Name, but that he was forc'd at last to submit to it when Zachary Ursinus had approv'd it. He adds, That the greatest part of the People wrote Paræus, and that they did ill in it, Because, says he, τὸ ει Græcorum transit, in ē longum, apud Latinos, ut ἠλεῖοι Elēi, αἰνείας Ænēas, ἀλφειὸς Alphēus, λύκειον Lycēum, μουσεῖον Musēum, πρυτανεῖον Prytanēum & id genus alia non pauca. As to the Christian Name David, it was given to his Father, says he, because he was born on the 30th of December, which is a Day consecrated to David; Penultima Decembris die quæ DAVIDI est sacra . . . . & parentibus sic placuisset liberis suis, quotquot illis nascerentur, ea imponere nomina quæ præ se ferrent solemnes fasti ad ipsum nativitatis diem. Every body does not know that St. David's Day is in the Calendar.

(B) By means of a Preceptorship.] Here the Historian is not very exact: He says, That (i) David Pareus spent two Years at Hirschberg, two Months at the expence of his Father, and the rest of the time by being Preceptor in the House of an Honourable Citizen, whom he names. A little while after 'tis said, That the Lord of Zackenstein was very liberal to him, that he maintain'd him (k) gratis, upon the account of the Verses wherewith the Death of his eldest Son was honour'd by this Young-man; and that afterwards he gave him some Money for every Poem he order'd him to make. The same Historian mentions a Letter of that Lord, wherein he desired to know, whether that Pareus who had lodg'd in his House 25 Years ago, (l) Quem ante annos XXV. hospitem domesticum habuisset, was the same Person by whose care the German Bible had been Printed? Is not this to put a Body in two places at the same time? David Pareus was sent to Hirschberg in 1564, he receiv'd the Letter from this Lord in 1589, he lodg'd therefore with him in the Year 1564. He was not therefore Preceptor 21 Months in the House of James Schilder. There are every where such like Faults to be met with.

(C) The Protestants and Roman Catholicks were there at difference.] It became necessary to use force for maintaining the Pretensions of the Elector Palatine against those of the Bishop of Spire; the latter maintain'd, that the Collation of Benefices in the Community of Alsestad belong'd to his Chapter: The Elector granted this, but he maintain'd, that since the Patronage was his, the Collators were oblig'd, according to the Peace of Passaw, to present such Pastors whose Religion was agreeable to him. By virtue of this Right he settled the Reform'd Religion in that Community, and sent Pareus to Schlettenbach. The Catholicks shut up the Gates of the Church against him; but they were broke open, and then the Statues and Altars were overthrown; after which, the great Trouble of Pareus was to get the Church clean'd, for (a) every one turn'd over to another the Trouble of removing the Rubbish. The Rector of the University of Heidelberg, alludes to all this in his Program for the Obsequies of Pareus. Ad pastoratum, says he, (b) Schlettenbacensem . . . . . missus, ibidem cum statuis & altaribus acri duello primus conflictatus. Pareus was also the first Pastor of Hemsbach, and found there the People more teachable (c): for after the Elector Palatine, who as the Patron of this Parish, resolv'd to reform it, had broke open the Gates of the Church, Pareus remov'd all the Images, and burnt them with the Consent of the People. To this the Program of the Rector had Reference in these Words: (d) Hinc anno 73. Ecclesiæ Hemsbacensi (& hic iconomachus futurus LEO non imperator sed Pastor) Minister præfectus. The Occasion which induc'd the Prince to settle the Reformation in this Place is very singular. The Priest having drunk all the Night before Easter, slept upon his Wine, the next Morning, at the time of the Office; at last being awak'd by the Sexton, he went to Church, and after singing,

(b) Philip. Pareus in vita David Parei pag. m. 5.

(i) In ea Schola vixit biennium trimestri spatio sumptibus parentis, reliquo tempore pædagogi officio functus apud civem honestum Jacobum Schilderum. Id. ib. pag. 8. ad ann. 1564.

(k) Convictum, quod filio defuncto epicedio carmine parentasset, gratuitum facile dedit. Ibid.

(l) Ibid. pag. 45.

(a) Expurgationem ruderum ab his & ab illis frustra quærebat novus Pastor. Ib. pag. 24.

(b) Ibid. pag. 96.

(c) Nemine refragante è plebe quæ sese omnimodis docilem præbuit, idola templi consentienti populo removit & Vulcano obtulit. Ib. pag. 27.

(d) Ibid. pag. 96.

moted to the ſecond Claſs, but he abandon'd it at the end of ſix Months, that he might re-aſſume the Function of the Miniſtery, which he went to diſcharge at Hemsbach in the Dioceſs of Worms. Growing weary of lodging in a publick Houſe, he married four Months after his Arrival, with the Siſter of John Stibelius ‖ Miniſter of Heppenheim. The Marriage was celebrated on the 5th of January, 1574. He loſt that Church in 1577, becauſe after the Death of the Elector Frederick III. Louis his Son, being a great Zealot for Lutheraniſm, ſettled Lutheran Miniſters in his Dominions in the Room of the Reformed. Pareus retired into the Territories of Prince John Caſimir, Brother to that Elector, and was Miniſter at Ogerſheim near Franckental, for the Space of three Years, and then at Winzingen (D) near Neuſtad. This Neighbourhood was ſo much the more uſeful and agreeable to him, becauſe Prince Caſimir had founded a Schola illuſtris at Neuſtad in 1578. where he plac'd all the Profeſſors that were driven away from Heidelberg. The Elector Louis dying in 1583, Prince Caſimir had the ſole Guardianſhip of Frederick IV, his Nephew, and the Adminiſtration of the Palatinate. Then the Reform'd Miniſters were reſtor'd, and a ſecond Profeſſor's Place in the College of the Sapience, at Heidelberg, was given to Pareus; this was done in the Month of September, 1584. He began two Years after to ſet up for an Author, by Printing the Method Ubiquitariæ Controverſiæ. He Printed the German Bible at Neuſtad with Notes, in 1589, which occaſion'd a fierce Diſpute between him and a Lutheran of Tubingen nam'd James Andrew. He became the firſt Profeſſor of the College of the Sapience, in the Month of January, 1591, and Counſellor of the Eccleſiaſtical Senate in the Month of November 1592. The next Year he was ſolemnly admitted Doctor in Divinity. He had already had ſeveral Quarrels with the Writers of the Augsburg Confeſſion; but that of the Year 1596 was one of the moſt conſiderable. It produc'd an Apology for Calvin, who was accus'd of favouring Judaiſm, in the Interpretation of many Paſſages of Scripture. Two Years after he was honour'd with the Place of Divinity Profeſſor of the Old Teſtament in the Univerſity; whereby he was deliver'd from * the dreadful Fatigues, he had endur'd for the Space of fourteen Years, in governing the Youth which was entertain'd in the College of the Sapience; Fatigues ſo terrible, that the good Zachary Urſinus thought himſelf happy for being baniſh'd by the Lutherans, ſince that Baniſhment delivered him (*D*Δ) from that miſerable Place of Exerciſe. Pareus was advanc'd in 1602, to be Theological Profeſſor of the New Teſtament, after the Death of Daniel Toſſanus. His Reputation encreas'd daily, after ſuch a Manner, that many Students came from Hungary and Poland upon his account. He publiſh'd divers Commentaries on the Scripture, and particularly (E) one on the Epiſtle to the Romans, which was extreamly diſlik'd in England, becauſe it contain'd ſuch Maxims as were a little Antimonarchical. The Evangelical Jubile, was celebrated at Heidelberg in 1617, with great Pomp. There was nothing to be heard but Harangues, Diſputes, Poems and Diſcourſes, about the great Mercy of God ſhown to the Church 100 Years before, in delivering it from the Yoke of Popery. Pareus for his Part, wrote ſome Pieces upon this Subject, which expos'd him to the Attacks of the Jeſuits of Mentz, to whom he was oblig'd to reply; but this was not the moſt ‡ troubleſome Controverſy that he had. He was deſign'd to be ſent the next Year to the Synod of Dort, according to the Deſire of the States General; but he excus'd † himſelf from going upon the Account of the Infirmities of his old Age, which did not permit him to undertake a long Journey, nor to uſe a new Diet. He had otherwiſe

‖ See in the Remark C of the Article Urſinus (Zachary) a Miſtake of Time which concerns this Subject.

* Huic omnino invitus eam in ſe ſuſcepit, pertæſus ſcilicet Siſyphiarum moleſtiarum quas in annum decimum quartum ærumnabili prorſus cura in collegio volviſſet effrenem juventutem gubernando. Philip. Pareus in vita Dav. Parei pag. 53. edit. in 8. Gen. 1641. cum Comm. in Matthæum.

‡ See the Remark G.

† Idem ἐμπόδισμα ſenem emaciatum longinquioris itineris exoticæque diætæ impatientem D. Pareum in Academia domi ſervavit. Ib. pag. 65.

ſinging, he went up into the Pulpit, begun his Sermon, fell down upon his Knees according to Cuſtom to ſay (e) the Lord's Prayer, and then fell aſleep. The People thought that this long Kneeling proceeded from a very conſiderate Zeal, but the too long Continuance of it oblig'd the Sexton to pull the Prieſt by the Sleeve. He roſe being half aſleep, and cry'd out with an Oath, that he could not Preach, (f) ich kan beym Sacrament nicht predigen. The Biſhop of Worms being inform'd of this Scandal, caus'd the Prieſt to be impriſon'd, and in his Room ſubſtituted another who had ſeven Baſtards. The Marriage of Pareus being celebrated in the Face of the Church, was ſuch a ſhow as had never been ſeen in the Pariſh of Hemsbach: As for Concubines and Baſtards of Prieſts, none of theſe was a Show that was look'd upon as ſo Prodigious as the other. But the People were eaſily reconcil'd to the Novelty, when they underſtood what St. Paul orders concerning the Marriage of a Biſhop. (g) Celebratæ ſunt nuptiæ d. 5. Januarii Hemsbaci: ubi antehac nullus Eccleſiæ Miniſter ſponſus vel maritus fuit. Portenti igitur ſimile habebatur matrimonium Paſtoris Eccleſiæ ejus loci, ubi nunquam niſi ſacrificulorum concubinas, coquillas, & ſcortilla viderant. Verum percepta in Concionibus doctrina Apoſtoli: (1) Oportet Epiſcopum eſſe unius uxoris Virum: Et (2) Epiſcopus ſit unius uxoris Vir: liberos habens fideles: & vernaculis Sacramentorum liturgiis auditis, matrimonium & miniſterium novi Paſtoris cuncti approbaverunt.

(D) Winzingen near Neuſtad] Paul Freherus affirms, (h) that David Pareus was Miniſter of Neuſtad; but Philip Pareus, who aſſigns him only a Church in the Neghbourhood of Neuſtad, is more to be credited than the Continuator of Boiſſard cited by Freherus; I ſay he is more to be credited both as to this Matter, and as to the Honours of John Wangler, the Father of David Pareus. According to Freherus, John Wangler was Preſident of the Echevins in his Country, but he was only Echevin, aſſeſſor Scabinatus, according to Philip Pareus.

(D Δ) Delivered him from that miſerable Place of Exerciſe.] The Words which Philip Pareus uſes, are very emphatical. (a) Quantumvis pauper & debilis ſim & non proſpiciens ullum peregrinationis aut exilii portum, tamen gaudebo me dimitti ex meo ergaſtulo. Non poſſum amplius δυσμεταχείριστον & ἀχάλινον illam juventutem regere. Defeſſus enim ſum & infirmus factus.

(E) On the Epiſtle to the Romans which was extreamly diſlik'd in England.] King James caus'd it to be burnt by the Hands of the Hangman; the Univerſity of Oxford condemn'd it in the moſt diſgraceful manner. See their Proceedings in a Book of Grotius, intitled Votum pro pace Eccleſiaſtica. The Sieur Konig refers us to p. 754, of an (b) Abridgment of Univerſal Hiſtory, wherein I find only 544 Pages, altho' my Edition be the third, which is that of the Year 1661. Here I find a Fault in the Index, for under the Word David Pareus, we are referr'd

(e) It ſhould be the Ave Maria. Pareus the Son might well be Miſtaken in ſome other little Circumſtances, becauſe he knew not the Romiſh Ceremonies

(f) Per Sacramentum (that is the great Oath of the Germans) non poſſum concionari. Ib. p. 26.

(g) Ibid. pag. 32.

(1) 1 Tim. 3. 2.

(2) Tit. 1. 17.

(h) Paul. Freher. in Theatro. pag. 413.

(a) Phil. Pareus in vita Davidis Parei.

(b) 'Tis that of John Lætus. He publiſh'd it the firſt time in 1642. I am ſure the firſt Edition contains more Pages than the third.

wiſe been a very fit Man for that Aſſembly; for he was a great Enemy to all (F) Innovations in Point of Doctrine. After that time this venerable old Man had ſcarce ever any reſt. He was afraid of what might happen to the Elector his Maſter for having accepted the Crown of Bohemia. He fancied, I know not how many troubleſome Preſages, founded upon ſeveral Things he ſaw, either when Awake or in his Sleep; for he (G) gave Credit to Dreams; and while he ſaw People working at the Fortifications of Heidelberg, he ſaid that it was loſt Labour. Calling to mind the Books he had publiſh'd againſt the Pope, he look'd upon it as a dreadful Miſfortune to fall into the Hands of the Monks, and therefore he hearkned to thoſe who adviſ'd him to retire to a Place of Safety: And for his Retirement he made Choice of Anweil in the Dutchy of Deux-Ponts, near Landau, and arriv'd there in the Month of October, 1621. After ſome Months he went from thence to Neuſtad and reſolved to return from thence to Heidelberg, chooſing rather to die in his own (H) Pareanum, and to be buried near the Profeſſors of the Univerſity, than in any referr'd to pag. 715, 745, and 755. I know not whether the Sieur Konig was not deceived by this means; however the Places where I found David Pareus, which are at pag. 509, 535, and 536, ſay nothing of the Diſgracing of his Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans. There was an Engliſh Divine call'd David Owen, who refuted him. Philip Pareus anſwer'd him, and endeavour'd to juſtify his Father. See (c) the Anti of Mr. Baillet, and the Apology of (d) Mr. Arnauld for the Catholicks, where we find that David Pareus was juſtifyed among other means by that which the Jeſuits make uſe of, when they are accus'd of corrupting the Chriſtian Morality. They ſhow that they are neither the Firſt, nor the only Perſons, who have taught this or that.

(F) A great Enemy to all Innovations in Point of Doctrine.] See what will be ſaid in the next Remark concerning his Antipathy to the Ramiſts. That Temper of Mind link'd him in a moſt intimate Friendſhip to a certain Divine of Franeker, call'd Sibrandus Lubbertus, who vigorouſly oppoſed the Promoters of new Ways of Speaking and Teaching. Pareus call'd him (e) his Soul, and would not ſet him any bad Examples, for he would by no means permit that any ſhould depart from the Catechiſm of his Profeſſor Urſinus, as ſome Divines, I know not who, departed from it, who (f) added no fewer than three Kinds of Imputations, to that which was laid down by Urſinus, as the Matter of our Juſtification before God, viz. The Imputation of the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, the Imputation of his Actual Righteouſneſs, and Habitual Holineſs. There were alſo Diſſenſions in the Year 1604, about a Queſtion of the ſame Palatine Catechiſm, viz. the 76, which treats of the Efficacy of the Holy Supper. Pareus, like a brave Champion of the receiv'd Doctrine, would not ſuffer it to be chang'd. Theſe Innovations (g) according to him, were a removing of the Boundaries of Truth, which ought to be ſacred and immutable, like thoſe which part Lands of Inheritance; and he thought that theſe Attacks, which were made upon the Catechiſm, were the Preſage of an approaching Deſolation, which he (h) expreſs'd in theſe two Verſes.

Aula ruit: Politia ruit: ruet & Catecheſis;
Ante fores noſtram quis jam neget eſſe ruinam.

'Tis in vain to ſay, that Pareus by this means introduc'd the Principle of Authority in lieu of that of Enquiry, and that this was to employ the Engines of Popery againſt his Brethren, after he had inveigh'd againſt them as abominable. It is in vain to complain that this Conduct reſembles the Stratagem of the Trojans:

Mutemus (i) clipeos, Danaumque inſignia nobis
Aptemus. Dolus an virtus quis in hoſte requirat?

It is in vain, I ſay, to declaim thus, and to reproach others with a thouſand Contradictions; thoſe who know the powerful Virtue of diſtinguo, thoſe who remember, diſtingue tempora & conciliabis ſcripturas, thoſe who conſider, that there are certain Maxims which may be laid aſide at a certain time, and which muſt be taken up again at laſt, and that the Abuſe does not take away the Uſe, will ſuffer theſe Declaimers to cry out and ſtorm againſt them. Fancy to your ſelves a Circle hanging at the Entry of a Houſe, whereof one half is without, and the other half within; make it turn about upon its Centre, and you will ſee that exactly, as one half goes out of the Houſe, another will enter in; juſt ſo it is with certain Principles of Humane Society; it is a thing that muſt be done: And after all, the moſt intolerable Perſecution is not that of the ſecular Arm, but that of ſome reſtleſs Men, who very unſeaſonably ſet up for Reformers. Our Pareus (k) ſaid of ſuch People with Luther, A Doctore glorioſo, & Paſtore contentioſo, & inutilibus quæſtionibus liberet Eccleſiam ſuam Dominus.

(G) He gave credit to Dreams.] His Son informs us, that he found in the Journal of his Father, divers Dreams and other augural Obſervations. Take one Inſtance: Pareus (l) wrote in his Journal at the 25th of December, 1617. that he dream'd that a Cat ſcratch'd his Face, and that certainly this was an augural Dream, ſine dubio ominoſum. Two Days after having receiv'd the firſt Leaf of a Book that was Printing at Mentz, he ſaid this was the Cat that was to ſcratch him, and ſet down this Expoſition in his Journal. This is certain, that the Jeſuits of Mentz wrote bitterly againſt him; but what he ſuffer'd from Scaliger's Hand, was a much (m) heavier Blow. It had been better for him, that he had never engag'd his Pen againſt ſuch a Chronologer, impar congreſſus Achilli: but he was troubled a little with the Itch of medling with too many Affairs. His Comfort was to ſee his Adverſary ſuffer the Lex talionis; and then his Muſe awoke, and was deliver'd of this Epigram:

Nobiliore (n) canum jactans ſe ſtirpe Moloſſus
Forte viatorem dum petit ore minax,
A cane degenere incautus miſer ipſe necatur:
Hanc Nemeſin juſtam quis neget eſſe ſuam?

He means the Inſults of the Wicked Scioppius; about which let us hear alſo Philip Pareus. Nullus præterea fuit, ſays he (o), nobilem adverſarium in ſtudiis Chronologicis, ſuperciliſiſſimum Criticum JOSEPHUM SCALIGERUM Julii Cæſaris à Burden filium, qui ſatyrica protervia erga PAREUM uſus jure ἀντιπεπονθότος eo ipſo tempore infamia notam penè indelebilem ab Apoſtatico quodam Alaſtore coactus fuit ſubire (p). I muſt not paſs over in Silence, that Pareus attributes to his Father a great Meekneſs, and a notable Gentleneſs. We muſt confeſs indeed that he was not one of thoſe moroſe Divines, who would ſacrifice nothing for Peace ſake: The Irenicon which he wrote, ſhows the contrary. But to pretend that he did not write in a Style full of Reproaches, and violent Expreſſions upon many Occaſions, is certainly to be guilty of ſuch an Illuſion as is very common. Every one fancies, that there are no piquant Reproaches, but ſuch as are ſaid to him, and thoſe of his Party. Pareus was otherwiſe an Enemy to the ſmalleſt Innovations, as I have ſhown in the preceding Remark. Now although it be often the Cauſe of very great Miſchief in Matters of Religion, to depart in the leaſt from the common Opinions, yet it can never be ſaid, that thoſe who are ſo brisk againſt the leaſt Alterations, are endow'd with much Moderation, what ever other Commendations may be given to their Important Services. Ramus (a) was inſupportable to Pareus, for daring to remove the Boundaries of our Anceſtors, and therefore he regal'd him with this Epigram:

Quæ (b) mutas perdis, dixit Democritus, & quæ
Servas in phyſicis ſunt, Epicure, mea.
Nonne idem Ariſtoteles in Ramum maſtiga dicat
Quæ mutas, perdis: quæ retines mea ſunt!

In fine, Pareus had ſo many People to write againſt, that it was ſcarce poſſible but he muſt contract a Habit of reproachful Language. Thoſe who know what it is to whet the Pen in the Republick of Learning, will underſtand what I mean.

(H) In his Pareanum.] Having bought a Houſe in the Suburbs of Heidelberg, in the Year [illegible], he cauſ'd

(c) In Vol. 3. n. 138.

(d) In Ch. 4. of the III part.

(e) Animam ſuam appellavit. Amavit autem eum præcipuè ob rotundum ingenium in tuenda ὀρθοδοξίᾳ: quippe qui non paſſus fuerit à ſciolis mutari terminos doctrinæ receptos, intrepidoque animo iis ſeſe oppoſuerit, qui inconſueta forma loquendi ac docendi quicquam mutare præſumerent. Philip Pareus. pag. 106.

(f) Ibid. p. 102.

(g) Theologos illos qui καινοδοξίαν aut καινοτομίαν in dogmatibus vel phraſibus affectarent, nec ſervarent ex præcepto Apoſtoli ὑποτύπωσιν ὑγιαινόντων λόγων, dicere ſolebat movere veritatis terminos qui debeant eſſe immobiles atque ſacroſancti. Ib. pag. 101.

(h) Ibid. pag. 103.

(i) Virg. Æn. l. 2. v. 389.

(k) Ibid. pag. 103.

(l) Philippus Pareus ib. pag. 65.

(m) Eo conflictu non ſolum optimo patri ſed omnibus paſſim viris doctis, ſi palpones & canes venaticos alios excipias, nihil unquam ægrius indignuſve accidiſſe probe recordor. Ibid. pag. 107.

(n) Ibid. pag. 108.

(o) Ibid. pag. 107.

(p) See the new Letters againſt the Calviniſm of Maimbourg, tom. 1. pag. 182, 183.

(a) Novellam artem quæ a Ramo ſectario nomen jactat perpetuo rejecit. Huic nimium quantum ſuccenſuit ideò quod per eam diceret antiquos artis terminos moveri, nihil ſuo loco relinqui, ingenium juventutis ad αὐθάδειαν & θρασύτητα traduci. Philip. Pareus ubi ſupra pag. 21.

(b) Ibid. pag. 22.

any other Place. He had this Confolation, for, having yielded up the Ghoſt in his own Houſe, on the 15th of June 1622, at the Age of near 74 Years, he receiv'd ſuch an honourable Burial as the Univerſities of Germany beſtow upon their Profeſſors. His Exegetical Works were collected in three Volumes in Folio. He publiſh'd many Treatiſes againſt Cardinal Bellarmine, and left a Son call'd Philip, of whom we ſhall ſpeak afterwards, and who wrote his Father's Life, from which I have taken what has been ſaid. I find nothing in it concerning his Diſpute (H∆) with the Jeſuit, John Magirus.

PAREUS (Philip) † Son of the Preceding Pareus, was born at Hembach in the Dioceſs of Worms, May the 24th, 1576. He was one of the moſt laborious Grammarians that Germany ever produc'd. He begun his Studies at Neuſtad, and continued them at Heidelberg, and after that, * at the Expence of the Elector Palatine, in foreign Univerſities. He went to ſee that at Baſil, in 1599, and afterwards he went to Geneva, where he continued more than a Year. In his Paſſage he ſaw ſome others, and was much eſteem'd every where, as well upon the Account of his own Learning, as for the great Veneration they had for his Father. He convers'd very much at Paris with the Famous Caſaubon. ‡ He was made Rector of the College of Neuſtad in 1610, and poſſeſs'd that ‡ Office till the Spaniards, becoming Maſters of the City in 1622, ordain'd him to depart the Country immediately. His Library was robb'd. He had already publiſh'd many (A) Books, which ſhow his prodigious Application, and his peculiar Affection for the (B) Comedies of Plautus. It was a thing of bad Example, that there aroſe between him and John Gruterus (C), Profeſſor at Heidelberg, a fierce Diſpute occaſion'd by Plautus. I have already ſaid, * that our Pareus took in hand the Cauſe of his deceaſed Father againſt David Owen, who had printed at Cambridge in 1622, an Anti-Paræus. He anſwer'd him a little while after with an Anti-Owenus †. He was Rector of divers Colleges, and

† In his 1st Book he takes the Name of John Philip.

* Theatr. Freheri p. 501.

‡ Daniel Pareus, not. in Muſæum verſ. 1.

‡ Ipſe in Vita Davidis Parei.

* In the Remark E of the preceding Article.

† It is wanting in the curious Collection of Mr. Baillet.

caus'd an Apartment to be built in his Garden, wherein to place his Library and his Study; and this is what he call'd Pareanum. This was afterwards the Name of the whole Houſe, and all the City call'd it ſo. The Elector granted to this Houſe certain Privileges and Immunities. Pareus plac'd upon the Frontiſpiece of it two Inſcriptions, one Latin, the other German (c). Now ſince his Son hop'd, after the Ravage that was made by the Troops of the Catholick League in the Palatinate, that this Houſe ſhould (d) preſerve ſtill the Title of Pareanum, it muſt have continued ſound and entire. I know not what became of it ſince, but I believe that it is ruin'd at this time. The poor City of Heidelberg was made ſo deſolate by the Troops of France, in the Years 1689, and 1693, that there is no probability that the Houſe of Pareus ſhould ſtill continue. We may Remark, en paſſant, that Certain Cities ſeem to be built under a malignant Conſtellation, for they are equally unhappy, whatever Side gains the Day. Heidelberg ruin'd for being contrary to the Emperor, and for being faithful to him, is an Inſtance of it.

(H∆) Concerning his Diſpute with the Jeſuit Magirus.] Pareus ſpoke an Harangue at Heidelberg, the 23d of March 1602. de Jeſuitarum ſtrophis circa Canonem Sacræ ſcripturæ. He maintain'd alſo a Theſis, in 1603, about the Cononical Authority of the Scripture, and the Infallibility of the Church, and deſired the Jeſuits of Spire to be preſent at this Diſpute. Not one of them appear'd, but Magirus having written to Pareus September the 7th, 1603, this occaſion'd a Diſpute which was publiſh'd. The Superſcription and exordium of Magirus's Letter was thus: Doctiſſimo viro Domino D. Pareo Doctori & Profeſſori Facultatis pro tempore Decano in Academia Heydelbergenſi. Nudius tertius venit ad Collegium noſtrum adoleſcens, ingenio præfervido, moribus linguaque protervus: is ita narrabat à te miſſum ſe eſſe, ut & diſputationem primam de S. S. authoritate adverſus Jeſuitarum impoſturas quam examinandam propoſueras ad diem 26 Auguſti nobis redderet, ſimulque ad eam diſputationem nos humaniter invitaret. It is ſign'd, ſalutis tuæ cupidus Joannes Magirus. Pareus anſwer'd and us'd this Superſcription, Clariſſimo viro Domino Joanni Magiro Societatis Jeſu dictæ Concionatori apud Spirenſes, amico ſuo in Chriſto. He complains that Magirus had abus'd him in his Sermons by Invectives, and he obſerves that the Jeſuite had call'd him Pereus inſtead of Pareus. Si amanuenſis ſphalma eſt, tranſeat: ſi ſtudium tuum ut pereundi verbo me pungeres, illiberale eſt, ac ſi quis pro Magiro Megærum diceret. This Piece of Pareus was printed in 1604. typis Voegelianis, and contains diſceptatio epiſtolaris Joannis Magiri Jeſuitæ Concionatoris, & Davidis Parei Chriſtiani Theologi de authoritate Divina & Canonica S. S. deque abſoluta Eccleſiæ infallibilitate. De S. S. authoritate adverſus Jeſuitarum impoſturas. Exegeſis diſputationis de authoritate Divina & Canonica, adverſus Jeſuitarum ſtrophas & impoſturas. Mr. Bachelier des Marets furniſhed me with all that I have ſaid.

(A) Already publiſhed many Books.] Beſides thoſe whoſe Titles I mention in the next Remark, he had in 1616, publiſh'd Calligraphia Romana, ſeu Theſaurus phraſium linguæ Latinæ; and in 1615. Electa Symmachiana, Lexicon Symmachianum, Calligraphia Symmachiana, and ſome other Pieces at ſeveral times.

(B) A peculiar Affection for the Comedies of Plautus.] He did not only publiſh them with Notes in 1609, but he alſo publiſh'd a Lexicon Plautinum in 1614. Analecta Plautina in 1617, a Treatiſe de imitatione Terentiana, ubi Plautum imitatus eſt, in 1617. a 2d Edition of Plautus in 1619, and his Electa Plautina in 1620. I muſt explain what I have ſaid, of the firſt Edition of Plautus. I am not ignorant that it has in the Title the Year 1610. But ſince among the Thanks and Elogiums that were written to the Author, there are ſome which are dated in the Year 1609, there's no doubt but the Year 1610 was one of thoſe anticipations which the Bookſellers commonly make uſe of. If they did only this, they would not cauſe ſo much Confuſion to thoſe who collect ſeveral Editions: But how often do they Re-print the firſt Page of their Books, to make them paſs for new ones? Sometimes alſo they are ſo bold as to call this a new Edition, and this ſtrangely multiplies in our Opinion, and even in the Catalogue of Libraries, the Editions of a Book. He publiſh'd at Franckfort, in 1641, the third Edition of his Plautus. The Prolegomena which are in it, about the Life of that Poet, about the Character of his Verſifying, and the Quality of his Railleries, were all put together, before the Edition of Plautus in uſum Delphini.

THE CONFUSION caus'd by the Printers, who reprint the firſt Page of Books.

(C) Between him and John Gruterus.] Gruterus having attack'd Pareus, the latter quickly publiſh'd his Anſwer in 1620, under the Title of Provocatio ad Senatum Criticum pro Plauto & Electis Plautinis. They grew hotter and hotter, neither was the Conſideration of the Miſeries which hang'd over their Heads, by the Ruin wherewith the Palatinate was threatned, ſufficient to inſpire them with ſome kind of Moderation: ſo eaſily are theſe Philologers and Grammarians provok'd, and ſo difficultly appeas'd. The long Preface which our Pareus prefix'd to his Analecta Plautina, printed at Franckfort in 1623, is dated in the Month of October 1621, and conſequently he fill'd it with Gall and Animoſity, being upon the Brink of the Deſolations, which ruin'd both their Univerſities and their Libraries, and reduc'd their Perſons to the greateſt Extremities. Their Baniſhment did not abate this violent Humour, for thoſe Analecta, being printed ſince and particularly of that of Hanaw (D) in the Year 1645, as appears by the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Lexicon Criticum, printed that Year at Noremberg. It is but one thick Octavo, but it coſt much Pains, ærumnabili labore congeſtus, as the Author ſays. He wrote alſo ſome Commentaries upon the Scripture, and ſome Pieces of Theology. We will now ſay ſomething of his Son Daniel.

(c) Ibid. pag. 55.

(d) Quo nomine incolis civitatis ſtatim innotuit, & à poſteris, ſi bene ominor, eam gratiam retinebit. Ib. He wrote the Life of his Father in 1628.

PAREUS (Daniel) Son of the foregoing, walk'd in the ſteps of his Father, and applied himſelf, as he had done, with all his Heart to the Study of Humane Learning. He was a pretty good Grecian, and publiſh'd ſome (A) Books. He was (*A*Δ) unhappily kill'd by Robbers on the High-way, during the Life of his Father. Voſſius eſteem'd him (B) very much, and made it his Buſineſs to find out Bookſellers, who would print his Works.

PARRHASIUS (Janus) Born at Coſenza in the Kingdom of Naples * in the Year 1470. follow'd the Cuſtom of the Humaniſts at that time, who chang'd their Names into others much more agreeable to Paganiſm than to Chriſtianity. He caus'd himſelf to be nam'd † Aulus Janus Parrhaſius, in lieu of Johannes Paulus Pariſius. He underſtood very well polite Learning, and ‡ was Profeſſor in the City of Milan, with great Reputation. He had the Satisfaction to ſee in his Auditory General Trivulce, who was 60 Years of Age. His Pronunciation (A) was exceeding pleaſant. The Liberty he allow'd himſelf to cenſure thoſe who were Regents of the Claſſes in the Milaneze, provok'd them to ſuch a Degree, that they entered into a horrible Conſpiracy againſt his Reputation: They defam'd him as a Man that lov'd his Scholars unchaſtly. This bad Report which diſpleas'd the Milaneſe extreamly, forc'd him to quit his (B) Poſt. He was invited to Rome by Leo X. to ſince their Diſperſion, are every where ſtuff'd with groſs Reproaches againſt Gruterus. This was nothing but Repriſals, for Gruterus had us'd him after ſo violent a Manner, that there were reckon'd no fewer than 136 cruel Reproaches in one of his Books againſt Philip Pareus. The (a) Jeſuit James Gretſerus, pleas'd himſelf in writing this Liſt. There you will find Pareus call'd an Aſs, a Mule, a Boar, a Ram, a Goat, a Hog, ſtercoreus Grammaticalis cellæ inquilinus, &c. Gruterus had been a long time before diſpos'd to ſquabble with the other, for thus he writes to (b) Goldaſtus, June 19. 1601. Mirabeiis carmen tui Parei, qui me nondum inviſit ex quo à vobis abiit, nuper autem factus eſt Rector ſcholæ civitatis ſic ſatis magnæ, ut alios regat ſcilicet qui ſe regere non poteſt.

* Nicolo Toppi, Biblioteca Napoletana p. 112.

† Sertorio Quattromani, dell' origine e principii della Città di Coſenza apud Nicodemum, addizioni alla Biblioteca Napoletana pag. 80.

‡ Paulus Jovius, in elog. c. 127. pag. 270.

(D) Of Hanaw in 1645.] This ſhows that Paul Freherus is miſtaken, when he ſays (c) that Pareus died about the Year 1643. Probably the Sieur Witte, in the ſecond Part of his Diarium Biographicum, did only abrigde Freherus, as to what concerns our Philip; at leaſt he agrees with him, as to the time of his Death in 1643. If they had but caſt their Eyes upon the Lexicon Criticum, they had ſeen in the Frontiſpiece the Face of the Author when he was ſeventy Years old, from whence they might have concluded, that he did not die at the Age of ſixty ſeven Years, as they both ſay; and if they had conſulted the End of the Epiſtle Dedicatory, they had ſeen that he was ſtill alive, Auguſt 24. 1645. 'Tis a ſtrange thing that he appears leſs deform'd in the Figure of 1645, than in that of 1641, which is prefix'd to the third Edition of Plautus. Rivetus in a Book (d) which he wrote in 1646, ſpeaks of him as of a Man then alive. He was ſtill alive in 1647, as appears by the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Exegetical Works of his Father, which he caus'd to be printed that Year at Francfort, in three Volumes in Folio.

(A) He publiſh'd ſome Books] In the Year 1627, he printed the Poem of Muſæus about Hero and Leander with Notes, which are either ſtuff'd with Greek Citations and Phraſes, or taken from the old Latin. He publiſh'd alſo in the ſame Year, a thick Volume in Quarto, which he dedicated to the Univerſity of Oxford, and is intitled Mellificium Atticum: which is a Collection of Sentences reduc'd into common Places, and taken from Greek Authors. He publiſh'd in 1631 another Book (e) entitled Medulla Hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſticæ, and Notes with a Lexicon upon Lucretius; but the Life of Lucretius which he added, is not of his compoſing, for he did only take away ſomething from that which Giſanius wrote. If the Dauphin's Scholiaſt had minded this, he would not have ſtopt at Daniel Pareus as the Source, with reſpect to the Life of Lucretius, which he prefix'd to his Commentary upon this Poet, but would have mounted higher up to Giſanius. There is a Spicilegium ſubciſivum of Notes, by Daniel Pareus, upon Quintilian, in the Edition of Quintilian at London, 1641. in Octavo.

(*A*Δ) He was unhappily kill'd by Robbers on the Highway.] This I learn from William Frey, in the Verſes he made upon the Lexicon Criticum of Philip Pareus. Ceſſit avus fatis; ſurum ſcelerata nepotem, ſays he, trajecit mediis cuſpide turma viis. But others ſay, that he was kill'd at the taking of Keiſerſlauteren in the Palatinate. See Gisbert Voetius in Tome 3. of Politica Eccleſiaſtica. p. 164, 165.

(B) Voſſius eſteem'd him very much, and made it his Buſineſs.] This appears by a Letter (f) which he wrote, when it was ſaid, that in Holland many Cities would erect (g) Academies after the Example of Amſterdam. He gives him to underſtand, that in that Caſe he could procure him a Profeſſor's Place. He renew'd (h) the ſame offers of Service ſome time after; and gave him an Account of the Care he had already taken, and would ſtill take to find out a Printer for the Hiſtory of the Church; which was a Piece of Daniel Pareus. He confeſſes to him that le Maire had refuſed to take this Work upon him, upon Pretence that he did not know the Bigneſs of it, and that his Preſſes were already very full. (i) La-Merium conveni ipſe, ac poſtea idem filius fecit. Sed nihil promittere voluit, qui neſciret de magnitudine libri. Solet ille magis capi iis, quæ minoris ſunt molis: Addebat jam prælum ſudare multis & variis. He makes him hope that if this Printer ſhould perſiſt in his Refuſal, after the Declaration that was made to him, that he ſhould not be required to make haſte, others would be glad to ptint the Book. Nevertheleſs he lets him know, that there is no Country in the World where it is more difficult to find Printers than in Holland, except in theſe two Caſes: One is, if the Author pay the whole Expences of the Impreſſion; the other is, if the Copy be a Book of Controverſy, or a frivolous Pamphlet, for nothing ſells better than Books of that Nature. (k) Quod ſi is difficilem ſe præbeat, non deerunt, ut ſpero, alii, qui lubenter id facient. Diſſimulare tamen non poſſum, nuſquam difficilius eſſe typographum reperire quam apud nos, niſi quis ſuis ſumptibus librum edat. Fit hoc ob rerum omnium ſummam caritatem, quam cauſat grave & diuturnum bellum, quod nobis eſt cum hoſte potentiſſimo. Sola excipio ἐριστικὰ, & nugalia quibus nihil vendibilius, ut ipſi non diſſimulant typographi (l). This Letter of Voſſius informs us, that Daniel Pareus would quickly be Preceptor in the Houſe of the Count of Iſenburg. See the Letter 31, which ſhows that our Pareus dedicated a (m) Book to Voſſius.

(A) His Pronounciation was exceeding pleaſant]. 'Twas in this chiefly that he excell'd all the other Profeſſors. (a) Cunctos noſtri ſeculi doctores erudito rerum omnium (b) quæ explicaret apparatu, ac una præſertim rotundæ pronunciationis gloria ſuperavit. Pierius Valerianus obſerves, that (c) the fine Voice of Parrhaſius, enticed a great Concourſe of Auditors to come after him.

(B) Forc'd him to quit his Poſt. He was invited to Rome.] Paulus Jovius, whom I have follow'd in this Narrative, has left here a Gap which may be fill'd

(a) See Theoph. Raynaud Erotemat. pag. 115.

(b) See the Collection of Letters written to Goldaſtus, printed at Francfort, in the year 1688. pag. 73.

(c) Theat. pag. 501.

(d) Rivetus, Grot. Diſcuſſ. Oper. to 3. pag. 1163.

(e) See the Article (Henry) Alting, in the Remark F.

(f) It is the 100. p. 135. London Edit. 1693.

(g) In tranſlating word for word, the Terms us'd in Holland, you muſt ſay illuſtrious Schools.

(h) See his Letter 317, pag. 307.

(i) Voſſius, epiſt. 317. pag. 307.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) If Voſſius had written when I write this in 1696. he would have had yet more reaſon to ſay this. The Bookſellers may be excuſed as above in the Article Craterus.

(m) He dedicated to him his Lucretius.

(a) Paulus Jovius, elog. c. 127. pag. 270.

(b) It is a Soleciſm, I know not whether it eſcap'd Paulus Jovius or the Printers.

(c) Ad cujus jucundam vocem undique concurrebatur. Pier. Valerianus de infel. literat. pag. 25.

to be publick Profeſſor of Humane Learning. He carryed with him thither Baſil Chalcondylas his Wife's Brother, and Son of Demetrius Chalcondylas, Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue at Milan. He did not long enjoy the Office which the Pope gave him; but being grievouſly tormented with the Gout, he was forced to retire into his own Country, where he dyed a little after †. He left his Books to Antony * Seripande, his good Friend, who built a Tomb for him in the Convent of the Auguſtines of Naples ȝ. Poverty was one Cauſe which oblig'd him to depart out of Rome ♯. He was amply commended by Henry Stephens in an ɣ Epiſtle Dedicatory. He was accus'd of citing Authors whom he had never ſeen. You will find this Accuſation in a ‡ Letter of Andrew Alciatus, which was printed at Utrecht in 1697, with many others taken out of the Library of Mr. Gudius. The ſame Alciatus complained that he never ‖ received again a Manuſcript of Juvenal which he lent him. We have an Harangue (C), wherein he complains very much againſt Fortune. I ſhall relate (D) ſome other Matters of Fact in criticizing upon Moreri.

fill'd up by conſulting a Harangue of Parrhaſius. It informs us, that this Profeſſor went out of Milan, to go to Vicenza, where a better Sallary was offer'd him, and that when the Territoires of Venice were ravag'd by the Troops of the League, he retir'd into his own Country, from whence (d) Thomas Phedrus would have fetch'd him to Rome, if Pope Julius the 2d had not died. That which was but a Project under Julius II. became an effectual Call under Leo X. (e) Ut ex animo gaviſus eſt (Phaedrus) ubi certior à me factus audivit, in Gallia citeriore portum jam me tenere, Mediolanique publicè conductum profiteri. Quid? quum ſequutus uberiora ſtipendia, Vicetiam commigraſſem: Germanis, Gallis, Hiſpanis, cæteriſque barbaris nationibus, infeſtis ſignis irrumpentibus in Venetiam, dii boni, quàm de nobis erat anxius! quàm non aliter ſaluti noſtræ timebat quàm ſi ipſe vocaretur in partem diſcriminis! Extant ab eo ad me tum datæ epiſtolæ, teſtes inquietis animi, quouſque reſcivit elapſum me per medios hoſtes in patriam ſeceſſiſſe. Nec ita quidem de nobis cogitandi finem fecit, auctorque Julio ſecundo fuit ut nos huc evocaret. Sed eo maturè defuncto, Leoni decimo per Janum Laſcarim, virum ad promerendum homines natum, mihi jam conciliato, calcaria ſponte currenti (quod aiunt) admovit. In urbem reverſo quàm præſto mihi fuit! &c. He had ſaid, that being at Rome under the Pontificate of Alexander VI. he was like to be involved in the Misfortunes of Bernardin Cajetan, and Silius Sabellus, with whom he had held Correſpondence, and that Thomas Phedrus adviſ'd him to deliver himſelf from the Danger, by retiring to ſome other Place.

(C) An Harangue wherein he complains much againſt Fortune.] 'Tis that which has furniſh'd me the Matters of Fact in the preceding Remark. He ſays, That Fortune fought inceſſantly againſt him, to force him to confeſs that he was overcome; but that the Miſeries which oppreſs'd him, did not at all oblige him to make this Confeſſion. (f) Continenter enim (ſi neſcitis) aſſiduumque mecum Fortuna bellum gerit, obnixéque contendit oppreſſo mihi victoriæ confeſſionem extorquere. Rurſus ego, tametſi cumulatis ſtragibus obrutus, extrema tamen experiri malle quàm tantulum de jure meo remittere, nedum manus dare. He declares, that being unwilling to ſtudy the Civil Law, as his Anceſtors had done, he (g) had incurr'd the Indignation of his Father, who would no more furniſh Expences for his Studies. He affirms that he loſt five times his Library, that he was forced to abandon his Country, when the French invaded the Kingdom of Naples, that he loſt in a little time his Father, his Mother, his two Brothers, and all his Children. He regrets very much the Loſs of Theophilus, and Baſil Chalcondylas, his two Brothers-in-law, who died very young and promiſed great things (†).

There is a Letter publiſh'd, which he wrote to Baſil Chalcondylas, a little before the Affair of his Calling to Rome was concluded. In that Letter he declares two domeſtick Afflictions which had faln upon him; one was, that his Brother's Widow, after ſhe had refus'd all that courted her for the Space of three Years, like another Penelope, had at laſt married clandeſtinely one Caputus, and had robb'd her Children of all their Patrimony: (h) Expilata penitus hæreditate parvorum liberûm. The other was, that his Brother's Daughter had been got with Child by an Advocate, who was the Widower of her Siſter. To ſhun the Penalty of Death, which both of them had reaſon to fear in this Caſe of Inceſt, they were clandeſtinely married, no Body being admitted into the Secret of the Marriage, but the Mother of the Maid that was got with Child. This being inſufficient to ſecure them from Danger, unleſs the Pope would grant them a Diſpenſation, Parrhaſius employ'd all his Friends to obtain this Favour from Leo X. and to get the Expences moderated. (i) Itaque cum eo deducta res eſſet, ut utrique moriendum foret, conſcia tantum [illegible] matre concubitum confarreant, atque ſic honeſto nomine nefandum crimen velant. Verum ne ſic quidem, quin ferro cadant, effugient; niſi Deus aliquis eos aſpexerit, id eſt, à ſummo Pontifice veniam inceſtus inſcriptis impetraverint; ut furtivum dedecus profeſſo matrimonio diluatur. Ad hanc rem velim omnes ingenii tui nervos intendas, utariſque gratia ac authoritate Laſcaris, Phædri, Citrariique, & omnium denique amicorum, ut ex leges has nuptias, ad evitandum paratæ cædis periculum, Pontifex privilegio juſtas rataſque faciat, indicta pro copiarum facultate mulcta. Acceſſit hoc enim meis ærumnis, ut opes ne tantæ ſaltem ſint, quæ poſſint impendia ſuſtinere. Quas ob res abs te primum peto, ſuppliciterque (ſi poteris) oro, omni ſtudio ut cures impetrandam (quam dixi) veniam. Deinde ut quam minimum poteris impendas. He complains that his other Miſfortunes are accompanied with this, that he is too poor to bear the Expence of this Affair. He therefore does moſt earneſtly entreat his Brother-in-law Chalcondylas, to omit no Means neceſſary for obtaining a Diſpenſation at the moſt reaſonable Rate that is poſſible. He was anſwer'd, that the Diſpenſation was granted, and that he muſt haſten to Rome for the Profeſſorſhip, which the Pope had given him that was worth 200 Ducats a Year; that he muſt not forget to bring the Money at which the Diſpenſation was rated, and that perhaps when he comes, his Friends would take care to exempt him from ſo great an Expence (k).

Perhaps it may be demanded, how Parrhaſius came to inquire how much the Diſpenſation would coſt; for he might have known it by the Book of Rates of the Apoſtolick Chancery. But you muſt obſerve that beſides what is ſet down in that Book, there (l) muſt always be an Agreement with the Datary.

(D) Some other Matters of Fact in criticizing upon Moreri.] I. It muſt not be ſaid, that Parrhaſius being driven out of Milan, and troubled with the Gout, retired to Coſenza; for upon his going out of Milan, he went to Vicenza to teach there. The War made him go from thence, and then he retir'd to his own Country, and afterwards was Profeſſor at Rome. And there it was that he was ſo afflicted with the Gout, that it forc'd him to go from thence to Coſenza, if we believe Paulus Jovius. (m) In Urbem venit; ſed tanti ſuggeſtus honore diu perfrui non potuit, articulari morbo membra omnia ſæviſſimè deformante, unde ei maturatus in patriam reditus cum vita exitu contigit. Parrhaſius in the Harangue which I have cited, and which he ſpoke at Rome, informs us, that in the preceding Year, he was more tormented with the Gout than ever; he does not ſay, that this inſpir'd him with the thought of returning to his own Country. (n) Quum ſolito gravius articulari morbo torquerer anno ſuperiori, tuo hortatu T. Phedre, incredibiles omnium Membrorum cruciatus animi vigore ſuperavi: quumque mea magis intereſſet ex hoc ergaſtulo tetroque carcere primo quoque tempore emitti, in tuam gratiam pene revixi. I do not mention this to call in queſtion what Paulus Jovius ſays, for I know very well that the Pains of the Gout and Poverty conſtrained Parrhaſius to retire from Rome. The miſerable Condition to which he was reduc'd is contain'd in theſe Words of Valerianus. (o) Is dum aſſiduis vigiliis, & longe lectionis laboribus maceratur, in eam incidit articularis morbi truculentiam, ut per annos aliquot nil præter linguam in univerſo corpore haberet incolumem,

---

† Taken from Paulus Jovius.

* Brother of Cardinal Jerom Seripande.

ȝ See the Muſeum Italicum of Peter Mabillon tom. 1. pag. 115.

♯ See in the Remark D the Words of Pierius Valerianus.

ɣ In Lewis Caſtelvetro before the Book of Parrhaſius de quæſitis per epiſtolam, which Henry Stephens publiſh'd in 1567.

‡ Gudii epiſt. pag. 61.

‖ Ib. p. 85.

(d) Profeſſor of Rhetorick and Canon of Lateran.

(e) Janus Parrhaſius, in orat. ante prælectionem epiſtol. Ciceronis ad Atticum: It is in p. 142. of the Book de quæſitis per epiſtolam edit. 1567. See there pag. 145.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 142.

(g) Indulgentis alioqui in me patris animum depravarit (fortuna) ne ſumptus ad otia Muſarum ſuppeditaret tanquam relicta à majoribus trita ſemita degeneri quod, ut illi, leges ediſcere neglexiſſem. Id. ibid. pag. 143.

(†) See Barthius in Theb. Statii lib. 4. p. 1008.

(h) Epiſt. ad Gudium pag. 137. edit. Ultraj. 1697.

(i) Ibid. p. 137, 138.

(k) Ex epiſtola Baſilii Chalcondyla ad Parrhaſium ibid. pag. 139.

(l) Et præterea componendum ſemper eſt cum Datario. Taxa Cancel. p. 4. edit. 1701.

(m) Paul. Jovius in elog. p. 127. p. m. 271.

(n) Parrhaſius ubi ſupra pag. 145.

(o) Pierius Valerianus de litteratorum infelicitate lib. 1. pag. m. 25.

PARTHENAI, a City of Poitou under the Jurisdiction of the Presidial of Poitiers. It was often taken and retaken during the Wars about Religion in the XVI. Century. The Protestants retir'd thither on the Day of the Battel of † Moncontour; but because they thought they could not maintain it, they abandon'd it at the approach of the Troops of the Duke of Anjou. They had taken it in the preceding Year, and also caus'd Malo to be hang'd who commanded in the Castle ‡. The Reason of this Rigour was, because he had the Boldness to defend himself against an Army. The History of the Sieur d'Aubigné informs us, that they miscarried more than once in the Design of Surprizing that Place in the Year 1588. They have been there in great Numbers since the Edict of Nantes, as we may judge from the (A) Ill-grounded Complaint of the Clergy of France, and the Answer which Mr. Drelincourt made to this Complaint in 1656. The Lords of Parthenai are ‖ Honorary Secular Canons of St. Martin of Tours. We must not forget, that Parthenai * is the Capital City of the little Country of Gastine, and of the Duchy of Meilleraye.

The Lordship of Parthenai was reunited to the Crown in 1422, by the Death (B) of John l'Archeveque.

PARTHENAI, a Family. It continued a long time in Splendor. The last Male of that illustrious House, was John de Parthenai l'Archeveque, Lord of § Soubise, † October 3d. 1569.

‡ The true and compleat History of the Troubles l. 4. p. 151.
‖ Mercure Galant of February, 1684. p. 31.
* Du Val's Treatise of France, p. 155.
§ See his Article under the Word Soubise.

---

lumem, siderato propemodum utroque crure, ut nullo pedum officio uti posset, lacertisque præ dolore, & contractione redditis inutilibus, magna insuper inopia, & egestate oppressus, rerum demum omnium desperatione ductus, relicta Roma in Calabriam cum secessisset, in febrim subito incidit, qua diu vexatus, miserabilique ex cruciatu superatus expiravit. Note, That Mr. Moreri was so far from filling up the Gap which Paulus Jovius had made, that he made it greater. II. 'Tis false that Parrhasius publish'd only two Books, if we suppose, as Mr. Moreri does, that he publish'd some Commentaries upon Claudian, and upon Ovid's Poem in Ibin, for he publish'd some Fragments of Antiquity, when he was Professor at Milan. This Aldus Minutius (a) relates in the fourth Book of his Grammar. 'Tis a little strange that we can in no wise know by the large Additions of Nicodemo to the Bibliotheque of Naples of Nicolo Toppi, what are the Works which Parrhasius publish'd. Nay, we do not find very plainly there, that he publish'd a (†) Commentary upon Claudian. All the Editions which Nicodemo mentions of the Works of this Critick, are posthumous. That which we find sometimes clearly mention'd is, That one Part of Parrhasius's Works, was publish'd by the Care of others. Bernardin Martiranus publish'd the Commentary on the Poetical Art of Horace: The Title of the Book related by (b) Nicolo Toppi, informs us of this in express terms, and yet this Author affirms, that Parrhasius publish'd it. (c) Nicodemo takes Notice of that Fault. 'Tis not at all probable, that Parrhasius should have published a Commentary upon the Ibis of Ovid; there is none that ever boasted that he had seen this Commentary, and therefore (d) Nicodemo looks upon it as false what Paulus Jovius relates, (e) Edidit Commentarios in . . . . Nasonis Ibin. (f) John Matthew Toscanus, (g) Gaddi, (h) Barri. Mr. Moreri, and many others, follow Paulus Jovius in this. Another Reason which perswades me that they are mistaken is this, that Mr. Boissieu (i) having search'd carefully for all the Authors that wrote upon this Poem of Ovid, makes no mention of this Commentary of Parrhasius, although he gives a long List of other Commentators: So far is he from that, that he reckons Parrhasius to be only one of those Criticks, who corrected upon occasion some Passages of Ovid. Note, That Parrhasius wrote a great Number of Books, and that the greatest part of them were never printed. Consult the Additions of Nicodemo.

(A) The ill-grounded Complaint.] Lest you should believe that I make use of this Epithet out of a Prejudice for a Party, I shall here give you a Parallel of this Complaint, and of the Answer to it. The Archbishop of Sens, who spoke in the Name of the whole Clergy, expressed himself after this Manner. (k) "In the City of Partenai, Sir, the Piety of the Catholicks was forc'd the last Summer, to yield to the Violence of the Enemies of this holy Mystery; who by an Affectation altogether irreligious, undertook to make a Funeral pass by at the same Instant with the Procession, which is made to honour, according to the Laws of the Church, a Sacrament, which is the Centre of our Religion. They disturbed the whole Course of this holy Ceremony, by a Rencounter maliciously concerted; and the Catholicks who have a mind to signalize themselves by their Modesty, at the same time that their wicked Brethren endeavour to make themselves considerable for their Insolence, were forc'd to give Place to the Multitude of these profane and Impious Men, and to return into the Church with Sorrow and Sadness in their Countenance. . . . . Was there ever, Sir, such a Boldness, and can your Majesty suffer in your Kingdom, so outrageous an Injury to the Honour of the Son of God? No, Sir, we cannot believe it, and we ought to be perswaded that you will revenge, as we pray you to do, the Quarrel of the Living God. It will be sufficient to relate the Substance of the Answer: (l) On the 2d Sunday of April there was brought to Partenai from a Place two Leagues off the Body of a Gentleman, to be buried after the 2d Sermon. When the whole Company was going to the Interment, they perceiv'd by some Tapestry near the Citadel, that a Procession was to pass that way; they stopt short, but having no other Passage to go to the Burying-Place which is near the Castle, it was thought convenient to send with all possible Respect to the Parish of holy Cross, from whence the Procession was to come, to know of the Canons, whether they would have the People that attended the Funeral to stop, until the Procession was gone by; or whether their Procession not being yet ready to depart, they should think fit that the Company should go on: To which they answer'd, that they might finish the Interment, and that the Procession would not depart so soon: And in effect it did not set out from the Place, till half an hour after the whole Funeral was over; and to show an entire Deference, the Reform'd remain'd in the Burying-Place till the whole Procession was finish'd, and all the Hangings were taken down; and therefore it could not be truly said, that it return'd with great Trouble and Sorrow, for having met with the Funeral, since it was not come forth, and did not come forth till a long time after the Funeral was past. For many Days after there was not a Word heard of this Affair, but at last the Baylif of Partenai, being a violent Man, and heated by some Boutefeus, addressed himself to Mr. Filleau the King's Advocate at Poitiers, who gloried in persecuting the Protestants upon all Occasions; and then many of the Consistory of Partenai, were summoned to the Presidial at Poitiers, to be there fin'd for having disturb'd the Procession; but Mr. de la Meilleray stopt the Course of this unjust Prosecution, and even those who had commenc'd it were asham'd of it, insomuch that the thing ended there. I have retain'd the Expressions of the Author.

Would they have answer'd with such Confidence, if the thing had not been certain? Here is then an Error in Matter of Fact, which falls under our Cognizance. We leave to the Reader, the Trouble of Reflecting upon the horrible Storms which a vehement Orator is capable of exciting for nothing (m).

(B) By the Death of John l'Archeveque.] He (n) had sold this Lordship to the Duke of Berry, reserving the Profits of it while he liv'd. . . . He had no Children, and for this Reason in the Year of his above mention'd Decease, Messire James Harcourt, who had married his Niece, had a Mind to turn him out of the said Lordship and Castle of Partenai, but he was hindred by the Inhabitants, who defended themselves and kill'd the said Harcourt.

(a) Apud Barrium lib. 2. de antiquitate & situ Calabriæ pag. 1050. citante Nicodemo ubi supra pag. 88.

(†) Consult Barthius ubi supra pag. 1007.

(b) Nicolo Toppi, bibliot. Napolet. pag. 112.

(c) Nicodemo ubi supra pag. 87.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Jovius ubi supra pag. 271.

(f) In Peplo Italiæ l. 3. pag. 63, 64. apud Nicodemum ubi supra pag. 88.

(g) De scriptoribus non Ecclesiasticis tom. 2. p. 182. apud eund. ib. pag. 87.

(h) De antiquitate & situ Calabriæ apud eund. ib. pag. 88.

(i) Dionysius Salvagnius Boessius comment. in Ibin p. 2, & 3.

(k) Remonstrance of the Clergy of France in 1656. p. m. 20.

(l) See the Letter of an Inhabitant of Paris to one of his Friends in the Country, upon the Remonstrance of the Clergy. p. 133. &c. edit. in 8. Mr. Drelincourt, Minister of Paris is the Author of that Letter.

(m) See the Critical Answer to Maimburg*'s History of Calvinism. Letter 24. p. 93. &c. of the 3d. Edition.*

(n) John Bouchet Annals of Aquitain, part. 4. ch. 7. fol. m. 137.

Soubise, who left only one Daughter, viz. Catherine de Parthenai, Mother of the Duke of Rohan, General of the Huguenot Armies in France, under the Reign of Lewis the XIIIth. Hereafter I shall give an Article for this Lady. Some think that the Lords of Parthenai took the Surname of l'Archeveque, because they were descended from an Archbishop of Bourdeaux. Some think that this Archbishop of Bourdeaux was Josselin de Parthenai, who died in 1086, and that William de Parthenai, who took the Surname of l'Archeveque, was his Son. Others † refer this Original to one Archimbald Archbishop of Bourdeaux, Predecessor to Josselin; but seeing this Archimbald having been depos'd, became Lord of St. Maixent, and there is not found any Person of that Name, nor any Lord of St. Maixent in the Family of Parthenai, this Opinion is not very probable *. " The eldest Branch of Parthenai, " with all its Estate, fell into the House of Melun Tancarville, from whence is de" scended by Alliance that of Longueville; and the Lords of Soubise were parted from the " Stock about the Year 1330, when Guy l'Archeveque, youngest Brother of John Sire de " Parthenai was Lord of Soubise. It was always thought very probable that those of " Parthenai were of Lezignem, whose Arms they bore, rebated, upon the Account of " their being the younger Branch, with a Band of Gules; but they must be descended " thence before the Year 1000, for since that time we have the Succession of them, " until John l'Archeveque Lord of Soubise, Grand-father by the Mother's Side to the Duke of Rohan. It is observ'd in the Life of this Duke, printed in 1667, that his Mother was the principal Heiress of the House of Lusignan.

PARTHENAI (Anne de) The Wife of Antony de Pons, Count de Marennes, and Daughter of John de Parthenai-l'Archeveque, and of (A) Michelle de Saubonne, was a Lady of great Wit and Learning. She was one of the principal Ornaments of the Court of Renée of France, the Daughter of Lewis the XII. and Dutchess of Ferrara; and 'tis very well known, that there were few Courts in the World so polite as that was. Anne de Parthenai γ did not only study the Latin, but with great Application undertook the Study of the Greek Tongue; so that she might easily make use of Greek Books. Nay, her Curiosity prompted her to read even Books of Theology: And she was a great Proficient in Holy Writ, and took a great Delight in reasoning almost every Day about these Matters with Divines. The Authors of that time, did not spare their Elogies; they bestowed a thousand Praises upon her, and did not forget to ζ say that she sung divinely, and that she understood all sorts of Musick in perfection. See the Epistle Dedicatory which I have cited ✠. The Interest she had in the Dutchess of Ferrara, and the Knowledge of Theology wherewith she was furnished, will doubtless render her suspected of Calvinism to the Catholicks who shall read this. But because I would not have them to remain in bare Suspicions, I will cite to them an Author (B) who will convince them, that she was a good Huguenot, and a worthy Sister of Soubise, who was one of the Pillars of the Party. Her Spouse was oblig'd (C) to leave the Court of Ferrara.

PARTHENAI (Catharine de) the Daughter and Heiress of John de Parthenai l'Archeveque, Lord of Soubise, Niece of the above mentioned Anne, was married

* Duchesne Annot. upon the Works of Alain Chartier.

† Laboureur Addit. to the Memoirs of Castlenau. tom. 1. pag. 904.

γ Non modo in Latinis literis quibus ab ipsis incunabilis gnaviter operam dedisti, sed in Græcis quoque ita profecisti ut Græcos autores intrepide evolvas. Gyraldus epist. dedicat. Dialogi 2. Histor. Poet.

ζ Quid nunc memorem qualis sis in dignoscendis & modulandis carminibus, quasi venustate canas & gratia? Quantum denique in omni Musica profeceris id eius disciplinæ periti prædicant. Id. ibid.

✠ See also Clement Marrot in his Epistle lost at play against Madam de Pons. pag. 206, &c. of the Hague Edition. 1700.

(A) Of Michelle de Saubonne.] She was a Lady of Bretagne, who had been one of the Ladies of Honour to Queen Anne of Bretagne. She married by the Favour of that Queen in the Year 1507, John l'Archeveque, the 5th of the Name, Lord of Soubise, Head of the House of Parthenai. The same Queen chose her for the Governess of Renée of France her Daughter, Dutchess of Ferrara (a). There is in the third Letter of Rabelais something that concerns that Governess. " Monsieur de Limoges, who was " at Ferrara Ambassador for the King, seeing that " the said (b) Duke, without giving him Notice of " his Enterprize, was retired to the Emperor, is " return'd into France. There is Danger lest Madam " Renée should be troubled for it. The said Duke " has taken from her Madam de Soubise, her Go" verness, and will have her to be serv'd by Italian " Women, which is no good Sign. This Letter was written in the Year 1536.

(B) An Author who will convince them.] " As to " the City of Pons, the Lord of the Place, while " the Lady Anne de Parthenai his first Wife, and " Sister to the Lord of Soubise, liv'd, was a Lover " of Virtue and Truth, and improv'd so much in " the Knowledge of Holy Scripture, that there was " hardly a Man of the Robe who seconded him with " so much Zeal; for he himself took much Pains " to teach his poor Subjects, of whom he edified " many, as well Officers as others in his City of Pons. " But immediately after the Decease of that good " and virtuous Lady, God so took away his under" standing, that at his second Marriage, he espoused " one of the most infamous Ladies of France, viz. " Mary de Monchenu, call'd the Lady de Massy; and " then God depriv'd him of the remainder of his " Sense and Judgment, insomuch that without any " Occasion whatsoever, he became from that time, " in an instant an Enemy and Persecutor of the " Truth, which he had so well known and so much " advanc'd (c). To confirm what Theodorus Beza has said, concerning the Ascendant of the Virtuous Anne de Parthenai over her Husband, I will now relate a Passage of Gregory (d) Gyraldus, wherein he testifies that that Lady and the Count de Marennes, her Spouse, follow'd the same Studies with the same Success. Quid porro dicam qua charitate & amore, ac potius pietate prosequaris illustrem virum tuum, jure tuum, ut qui eisdem quibus tu studiis & virtutibus post militares artes sit ornatissimus? This Count was first Gentleman of the Chamber to the Duke of Ferrara; and Gyraldus dedicated to him the fourth Dialogue of his History of Poets.

(C) Was oblig'd to leave the Court of Ferrara.] It is of him doubtless, that these words of one of our Historians are to be understood (e). " If the King of " France thought, that there was just Cause for Ex" pelling Monsieur de Pons from Ferrara, because he " said he was of as good a House as those of (f) " Aest, it being unreasonable that he who liv'd by " the Bread of the Dutchess of Ferrara, and by her " Wages, should make such a Comparison, although " the aforesaid deceased King held the House of " Pons, as ancient as that of Aest; is it not as in" supportable that those of the House of Guise, who " are grown great and fat only with the Substance " and Fatness of the House of France, should offer " to compare themselves with the Princes of the " said House? 'Tis great imprudence in those who serve others to compare themselves to them. If they excel them in Nobleness of Blood, they should seem to know nothing of the Matter. And this is more especially necessary as to Soveraigns; their Relations ought to forget that they are their Relations.

(A) Aged

(a) See the Notes upon the Letters of Rabelais. pag. 85.

(b) That's to say the Duke of Ferrara.

(c) Theodorus Beza. hist. Ecclesiast. tom. 1. l. 2. pag. 201. (& not 199, as it is set down in the Book) at the year 1559.

(d) Gyrald. epist. dedicator. Dialogi 2. Histor. Poëtarum.

(e) The President de la Place, of the State of Religion l. 2. fol. 63.

(f) It should be Est.

married in the Year 1568 § to the Baron du Pont, and then in 1575 to René de Rohan, the second of the Name, whose Widow she remain'd µ in the Year 1585; and then she thought of nothing but of giving a good Education to her Family; and her Pains had all the Success she could promise her self; for the Eldest of her Sons was the famous Duke of Rohan, who maintain'd the Reformed Party in France with so much Vigour during the Civil Wars, under the Reign of Lewis XIII. Her second Son was the Duke of Soubise. She had three Daughters: Henrietta, who died in 1624, and was never married. Catharine, who married ‡ a Duke of Deux-ponts, and who made this fine Answer to Henry the IVth, upon his sighing for her, † I am too poor to be your Wife, and of too good a House to be your Mistress; and Anne, who was never married, and surviv'd all her Brothers and Sisters, and render'd her self very Famous for her Piety and Learning. It will be sufficiently understood that I mean the Famous Anne de Rohan †, who endur'd with so much Constancy all the Inconveniencies of the Siege of Rochelle. The Courage of her Mother was yet more wonderful, who notwithstanding her old Age, endur'd with a prodigious Constancy the Necessity to which she was reduc'd, of living for the Space of three Months upon Horse-flesh, and four Ounces of Bread a Day. And notwithstanding this miserable Condition, she wrote to her Son, that he should continue as he had begun; and that the consideration of the Extremities to which she was reduc'd, should not make him abate any thing to the Prejudice of his Party, whatever she should suffer by so doing *. She and her Daughter refused to be comprehended in the Capitulation, and were made Prisoners of War. They were ‡ carried to the Castle of Niort, November 2d 1628. There are some who say that Catharine de Parthenai was then Aged (A) 91 Years, but others assign her only 70. la Croix du Maine informs me, that she understood (B) Poetry very well. I must not forget the troublesome Suit (C) about Impotency, which her first Husband had upon his Hands. If what a learned ‡ Man has said be certain, that Mademoiselle de Parthenai Lady of Soubise was spoken of as being an Author, § Thuan. lib. 51.

µ Father Anselme and Moreri. [illegible] 1555. I have follow'd the Author of the Life of the Duke of Rohan.

‡ In the year 1[illegible] She died in the year 1[illegible]

† See the Observ. upon the Amours of Alcander and the Key.

‡ See the Article of him.

* Hist. of the Duke of Rohan, pag. 99. of the Holland Edit. 1667.

‡ Merc. Franc. tom. 14. p. 716.

‡ Baillet Authors disguis'd pag. 255.

(A) Aged 91 Years.] Father Anselme was of that Opinion, for in giving us (a) the Posterity of Peter de Rohan, call'd the Marshal de Gié, he sets in the Margin over against our René de Rohan II of that Name, that Catharine de Parthenai his Wife died at Paré in Poitou, October 26, 1631. Aged 94 Years. Moreri says the same thing, except that instead of Paré he has put Parc. But (b) the Author of the History of the Duke of Rohan, observes, speaking of the Siege of Rochel, and of the Famine she indured there, that she was Aged 70 Years. This was not a Place to take away Years from her, and he that would have flatter'd her, should rather have added to them, than taken from them. Neverthelefs 'tis very probable, that this Author made her younger than she was, for in the Year 1574, a Tragedy was acted of her composing. 'Tis rare to see Women of 16 Years write Tragedies; and when this happens la Croix du Maine would not be ignorant of it, nor conceal it. I insist less upon the Impotency whether true or false of the Baron du Pont, which was the Subject of a Suit in 1572. A Maid is more capable of bearing Children at 14 Years, than of writing Tragedies at 16. But what Varillas observes would not be a Proof to be rejected. He says, that in 1562, "(c) The Viscount de Rohan led the Troops of Languedoc and Dauphine, "which he had rais'd at the Sollicitation of Soubise, "who had promised him in Marriage his only "Daughter. Can a Man that is of Age to raise and command Troops, rely upon the Marriage of a Maid of four Years of Age. But that which follows would make the Argument much stronger. In the Year 1567, this only Daughter was married to the Baron du Pont, for we find among the Lords, who went to joyn the Admiral after the Battle of St. Denys, (d) one Soubise, who was no other than this Baron; I have said, that it wou'd make the Argument stronger, and not that it does make it so; for I trust more to a Letter I have receiv'd, which says, That the Heiress of Soubise was married to the Baron du Pont in 1568, than to the Exactness of Historians about such Niceties. This is certain, that good Father Anselme was mistaken; for the Marriage of John de Parthenai with Antoinette Bouchard of d'Aubeterre, Father and Mother to the Lady of whom we now speak, was celebrated May the 3d, 1553. She was born therefore at the soonest in 1554, and could not be above 77 Years of Age, when she died in 1631. On the other Side, since she was married in 1568, she must have been more than 70 Years old at the Siege of Rochel.

(B) She understood Poetry very well.] "This Lady, "says he, (e) is much to be esteem'd for the Ex-"cellency and Greatness of her Wit, of which "her Writings are a sufficient Proof, without any "other Testimony; for she hath compos'd many "Tragedies and Comedies in French, and among "the rest, the Tragedy of Holofernes, which "was publickly acted at Rochel in the Year 1574, "or thereabouts; it is not yet printed. She has "writ many Elegies or Complaints upon the "Death of the Baron du Pont, her first Husband, "and also upon the Admiral, and other great "Lords and illustrious Persons. She has transla-"ted the Precepts of Isocrates to Demonicus, not "yet printed. She flourishes, continues he, this "Year 1584. I have not her other Writings, be-"cause I have not had the Happiness to know "her.

(C) The troublesome Suit about Impotency.] This ought not to be plac'd to the Account of our Catharine de Parthenai, but to that of her Mother. It was not the Wife that sued her Husband, it was the Mother-in-law, who declar'd against her Son-in-law; and therefore, though none can reasonably doubt of the secret Confidence between the Daughter and the Mother, yet it must be granted, that the Reflection of Mr. Des Preaux (f), does in no wise concern the Heiress of Soubise.

Jamais la Biche en rut n'a pour fait d'impuissance
Trainé du fond des bois un Cerf à l'audience;
Et jamais Juge entr'eux ordonnant le congrés,
De ce burlesque mot n'a sali ses arrêts.

If on the one Side it is astonishing, that when the Protestant Ladies distinguish'd themselves by the Reformation of Manners, as well as of Doctrines, one of the Chief (g) of the Party should think fit to commence a Suit, which tended so little to Edification; on the other Side it ought to be consider'd, that the continual reading of the Bible was then more capable of communicating certain Inclinations; because then they studied with more Zeal to imitate the Temper of the Holy Patriarchs, and of their Spouses, among whom reign'd an earnest but very chast Desire of leaving Posterity behind them. The Lady of Soubise, besides this, might have a Motive of Zeal upon another Account. The Protestant Religion was not yet well settled, great Violence was us'd to destroy it; and therefore it was necessary to perpetuate Families by all due and reasonable Ways, which like her's were the Pillars of it. But what shall we say of the Curiosity of the Ladies of the Court of France, upon occasion of this Affair? Before I relate what the Historians have said of it, I ought to advertise you, that the Suit was ended by the Massacre on St. Bartholomew's Day, wherein the Son-in-law of Soubise lost his Life. Let us hear now what Mr. Varillas says; "(h) The Resistance of the "Baron du Pont-Kuellevé (i) was so long, that those "who saw he did not yield till after he was pierc'd "through like a Sieve, gave him this Testimony, that he

(a) Histoire des grands Offic. pag. 153.

(b) It is thought to be Mr. Fauvelet du Toc.

(c) Hist. of Charles IX. l. 3. init.

(d) D'Aubigne. tom. 1. p. 372. Thuanus l. 42. p. 854. Varillas Hist. of Charles the 9th. l. 7.

(e) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 478.

(f) Satyr 8.

(g) See in the Remarks of the Article Soubise, the great Zeal of that Lady.

(h) Hist. of Charles the IX. tom. 2. pag. 276. of the Holland Edit.

(i) It should be Quellenec. See the Article of this Name.

thor, before Madam de Rohan had been known in the World, ſhe (D) muſt have written ſomething when ſhe was very young. Some have thought, that ſhe wrote an Apology (E) for Henry the IVth, which at the Bottom was nothing but a ſharp Satyr.

PASCAL (Blaiſe) was one of the ſublimeſt Wits in the World, born at Clermont in Auvergne the 19th of June, 1623. He never had any Maſter but his Father, who was a very (A) learned Man, an able Mathematician, and Preſident of the Court of Aids in his Province, and one who had an extraordinary Tenderneſs for this Child, his * only Son. This Tenderneſs mov'd him to quit his Office, and ſettle at Paris in 1631, that he might the more uſefully ſpend his time in the Inſtruction of his Son, who from his Infancy gave Proofs of a Wit far above what is common; for "† he deſired to know the Reaſon of every thing ··· and he could not yield to any thing but "what appear'd to him evidently true; ſo that when good Reaſons for any thing were "not given him, he himſelf would ſearch about for better; and when he ſtudied to "know any thing, he would never leave it till he had found out ſomething that could "give him Satiſfaction. It was to be fear'd leſt having ſuch a Turn of Wit, he ſhould throw himſelf headlong into Libertiniſm, and yet he was always very far from that Fault. He diſtinguiſh'd exactly all his Life-time (B) the Laws of Faith from thoſe of

* He had 2 Daughters, whereof one was a Nun at Port-Royal, the other was married to Mr. Perier.

† The Life of Mr. Paſchal by Madam Perier, p. 5.

"he was more than a Man in a Fight, if he was "not Man enough in the Nuptial Bed. He had "married the Heireſs of Soubiſe, and his Wife's Mother had commenc'd a Suit againſt him for Impotency, which was not yet determin'd. His Body "was dragg'd as far as the Gate of the Louvre, "where the Pity which he ſhould have inſpir'd "did not hinder many of the Court-Ladies "from viewing him narrowly, to ſee if there appear'd any Mark of that Defect whereof he was "accus'd. Thoſe who underſtand Latin, may ſee in the Margin, with what noble Expreſſions (k) Thuanus relates this Fact. It ſeems at firſt, that d'Aubigne was guilty of a Miſtake, as if he had ſaid of Soubiſe what he ſhould have ſaid only of his Son-in-law. "Berni and Soubiſe were dragg'd dead, and plac'd "in Order before the Louvre, and expos'd to the "View of the Ladies, who lookt upon the latter to "know whether he was incapable of Marriage, be"cauſe he was at Law about it. But when we come to know that the Son-in-law had the ſame Name with the Father-in-law, this Hiſtorian can only be blam'd for not inſerting ſome Words of Diſtinction, as others have done. Mezerai would be altogether inexcuſable, Who can believe it, ſays he, at p. 156, of the 5 tome of his Chronological Abridgement, of ſo many valiant Men (he had nam'd the great Lords maſſacred on St Bartholomew's Day, and had not paſſed over in Silence Francis de Quellevé, Husband to the Heireſs of Soubiſe,) not one of them died with Sword in Hand but Guerchi. He is much more in Fault in his great Hiſtory, for he does not only call this Husband Charles de Quellevé-Pontivy, which is to confound two Perſons in one, but he attributes to the Wife the Proceſs for Impotency, which was commenc'd againſt the Baron du Pont. This is in ſome meaſure to affront her, which Thuanus was not guilty of; for he attributes this Accuſation and Proſecution only to the Mother-in-law. See the Article Quellenec.

(D) She muſt have written ſomething when ſhe was very young.] For ſhe loſt the Name of Mademoiſelle de Parthenai in 1568, by her Marriage with the Baron du Pont, and could be then but 14 years old, ſince the Marriage of her Father and Mother was ſolemnized in May 1553. See the Remark A towards the End.

(E) An Apology for Henry the IVth.] It was printed as a Work of the Dutcheſs of Rohan, in the new Editions of the Journal of Henry the III. See how d'Aubigné ſpeaks of this Piece. "(a) He that "would ſee this Matter more learnedly debated, let "him read the Apology for the King, written by Mr. "Cahier then Miniſter to Madam. The King ſhow'd "it to me as being the Style of Madam de Rohan. "It is a prevaricating Apology, which Roquelaure "hearing read cry'd out, Oh! how well the Authors "of that Piece are inform'd of what we do! Some "accuſe la Ruſſie of it, becauſe after he had diſcours'd "of the King's Humour, which is to puniſh Services, "and reward Offences, he ſays to thoſe who complain of his Majeſty, you ought to complain of "your ſelves and not of him, for knowing his "Temper, if you wou'd have Rewards, you ſhould "merit them by worthy Actions. Whoſoever compos'd this Apology, was a Perſon of Wit, and I doubt very much whether Peter Victor Cayet was capable of giving ſuch a Turn to his Railing. Mr. Varillas did not know who was pointed at in this Satyr, for ſpeaking of Antony King of Navarre, he ſays, "(b) that Catharine de Parthenai, Mother of the "famous Duke of Rohan, reproach'd him that "he never did good but to thoſe whom he fear'd. It was not to this Prince, but to Henry the IVth his Son, that this Reproach was made in the Satyr attributed to that Lady.

(k) Eadem calamitas Baudinetum Acierii fratrem, Pluviaſium & Bernium involvit, crudeliter à militibus ſegus occiſos, nec non Carolum Quellevetum Pontium Armoricæ Regulum qui Catharinam Parthenæam Joannis Subiſii filiam & hæredem in uxorem duxerat, ſed à Parthenæa matre frigiditatem generi cauſſata de diſſolvendo matrimonio lite aliquanto ante tempore intentata neque dum finita. Itaque cum corpora eorum ſicuti à percuſſoribus ſinguli occidebantur ante arcem Regiique Reginæ ac totius aulici comitatus conſpectum abjicerentur, frequentes è gynæceo Fœminæ, nequaquam crudeli ſpectaculo eas abſterrente, curioſis oculis nudorum corpora inverecunde intuebantur, & Pontio præcipue aciem defigebant, ſi qua ratione frigiditatis illius cauſſam aut notas perrimari poſſent. Thuan. 52. pag. m. 1076. (a) Confeſſ. Cathol. de Sancy B. 1 chap. 5.

(b) In the Advertiſement of Tom. 5. of the Hiſt. of Hereſy.

(A) His Father who was a very learned Man.] He was call'd Stephen Paſcal, and was born in the Year 1588, "(c) at Clermont in Auvergne, of one of "the good Families of the Province. His Father "was Treaſurer of France at Riom, and his Mother, "who bore likewiſe the Surname of Paſcal, was "the Daughter of the Seneſchal of Auvergne at Clermont. Stephen Paſcal (d) quitted the Province, "after he had delivered up his Office of Preſident "to one of his Brethren, and retir'd to Paris, as to "a Place favourable to his Deſign of giving a good Education to his Son. He joyn'd (e) with Mr. de Roberval, to anſwer the Objections of Deſcartes, againſt a Piece of Mr. Fermat, de maximis & minimis; but he had ſcarce any ſhare in the Conſequences of this Diſpute, for he removed from Paris, "(f) and retir'd far from publick Converſe, leſt "his Preſence ſhould provoke ſome offended "Powers, and move them to do ſomething to the "Prejudice of his Liberty. The Diſgrace into "which he thought he was faln, was nothing elſe "but the Conſequence of the Diſgrace of one of "his intimate Friends, who had been arreſted "and carried to the Baſtile, for making a Diſturbance in the Town-Houſe. Mr. Paſcal being "perſwaded of the Integrity of his Friend, had obſerv'd, that there was more Misfortune than "Crime in his Manner of occaſioning that Trouble. "He did not only ſpeak in favour of his Friend, "but he was alſo ſo bold as to take upon him the "Defence of ſeveral Perſons unjuſtly treated by "the Vexation of ſome intereſted Officers. Beſides "he had learn'd, that this Affair had been related "with very odious Circumſtances to the Chancellor "Seguier; wherefore the fear of having diſpleas'd "this prime Magiſtrate of the Kingdom, made him "depart to prevent the Effects of his Reſentment. "He continued about a Year in this Retirement, "untill Cardinal de Richelieu being inform'd of his "great Merit, and of the Occaſion of his Retiring by "the Dutcheſs of Aiguillon, and by the Chancellor himſelf, cauſed him to return in 1639, and "made him in a little time after Intendant of Normandy at Roan. He died (g) in 1651. He was become a Friend to Deſcartes.

(B) The Laws of Faith from thoſe of Reaſon.] This we are told, in his Life written by Madam Perier, his Siſter. "(h) He was hitherto (i) by a peculiar divine Protection, preſerv'd from all the "Vices of Youth, and which is yet more ſtrange to "a Wit of that Character, he was never enclin'd "to Libertiniſm, as to what concerns Religion, but "always confined his Curioſity within things natural. "He told me many times, that he added that Obligation to all the reſt he had to my Father; who "having

(c) Baillet. Life of Deſcartes, tom. 1. p. 331.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib. p. 331. ad ann. 1638.

(f) Id. ib. 339, 340.

(g) Id. ib. p. 331.

(h) Life of Paſcal. p. 12, 13.

(i) i. e. untill the Age of 24 Years.

of Reaſon. What is told of the Manner how he learn'd (C) the Mathematicks, ſeems to be miraculous, as well as the Progreſs which he made (D) in that Science in a very

having himſelf a very great Reverence for Religion inſpir'd it into him in his Infancy, giving him this for a Maxim, that every thing which is the Object of Faith cannot be the Object of Reaſon, and much leſs can be ſubject to it. This Maxim which was often repeated to him by a Father for whom he had a great Eſteem, and in whom he ſaw great Learning, with clear and ſtrong Reaſon, made ſo great an Impreſſion upon his Mind, that whatſoever Diſcourſes he heard from the Libertines, he was not at all moved by them; and although he was very young, he look'd upon them as a ſort of People who had a falſe Principle, and who thought that human Reaſon was above all things, and knew not the Nature of Faith. And thus that great Soul, ſo vaſt and ſo full of curious Learning, which enquir'd with ſo much Care into the Cauſes and Reaſons of all Things, was at the ſame time as ſubmiſſive in Matters of Religion, as a Child, which Simplicity prevail'd in him all his Life-time; inſomuch that even after he reſolv'd to ſtudy nothing but Religion, he never applied himſelf to any curious Queſtions of Theology; and us'd his moſt vigorous endeavours to know and practiſe the Perfection of Chriſtian Morality, to which he conſecrated all the Talents which God had given him.

(C) The Manner how he learn'd the Mathematicks ſeems to be miraculous.] His Father perceiving in him an extraordinary Inclination (k) to Matters of Reaſon, was afraid that the Knowledge of the Mathematicks would hinder his learning of the Tongues. He reſolv'd therefore to take from him, as much as he could, all Notions of Geometry; he lock'd up all the Books that treated of it, and refrain'd even to ſpeak of it in his Preſence, with his Friends. Yet he could not refuſe this general Anſwer to the importunate Curioſity of his Son: Geometry is a Science which Teaches the Way of making exact Figures, and of finding out the Proportions there are between them; but at the ſame time he forbad him to ſpeak or think of it any more. Upon this bare opening of the Matter, the Child (l) ſet himſelf to muſe at his hours of Recreation, and to make Figures upon the Chamber-floor with Charcoal. He ſought out the Proportions of Figures, he himſelf made Definitions and Axioms, and Demonſtrations, and he carried his Enquiries ſo far, that he came to the 32d Propoſition of the firſt Book of Euclid. For his Father having ſurpriz'd him one Day in the midſt of his Figures, and having ask'd him what he was doing, he told him he was ſearching for ſuch a thing, which was juſt that Propoſition of Euclid. He ask'd him afterwards, what made him think of this, and he anſwer'd, that it was becauſe he had found out ſuch another thing; and ſo going backward and uſing the Names of Bar and Round, he came at length to the Definitions and Axioms he had ſcan'd to himſelf. You will find all this more at large with the Conſequences of it in the Authors I quote in the Margin (m). I have elſewhere related a Matter of Fact which comes ſomething near to this, concerning Father Maignan. See the Remark D of his Article.

(D) The Progreſs which he made in a very little time.] Mr. le Pailleur knowing what is abovesaid, adviſ'd Mr. Paſcal, the Father, who told him of it, no longer to vex his Son. Mr. Paſcal follow'd this Advice, and gave Euclid's Elements to the Child, who " (a) underſtood it all by himſelf alone, without ever needing any Explication, and he improv'd in it at firſt ſo far, that afterwards he was conſtantly preſent at the Conferences which were held every Week, where all the moſt ingenious Men of Paris were aſſembled, either to bring there their own Works, or to examine thoſe of others. Young Mr. Paſcal, kept his Place there, as well as any other, either for examining or writing Books. He carried thither as often as any Man new Things, and ſometimes it happen'd, that he diſcover'd Faults in the Propoſitions that were examin'd, which the reſt did not perceive. Yet he employ'd only his time of Recreation in the Study of Geometry, becauſe he was learning the Languages which his Father taught him. But finding in thoſe Sciences the Truth, which he lov'd in all things with an extream Paſſion, he made ſuch Progreſs in the little time he ſpent upon them, that at the Age of 16 Years he wrote a Treatiſe of Conicks, which in the Judgment of the moſt learned was accounted one of the greateſt Efforts of Wit that can be imagin'd. And therefore Mr. Deſcartes, who had been in Holland for a long time, having read it, and having heard ſome ſay, that it was written by a Child of 16 Years of Age, choſe rather to believe, that Mr. Paſcal the Father, was the true Author of it, who willingly robb'd himſelf of that Glory which juſtly belong'd to him, to transfer it to his Son, than to be perſwaded, that a Child of that Age, was capable of writing a Book with ſuch ſtrength of Reaſon; and by this backwardneſs to believe a thing which was very true, he ſhewed that it was in effect a thing incredible and prodigious. At the Age of 19 Years he invented that (b) admirable Machine of Arithmetick, which was eſteemed one of the moſt extraordinary things that was ever ſeen: And afterwards at the Age of 23 Years, having ſeen the Torricellian Experiment, he invented and tried a very great number of other new Experiments. We muſt not forget an early Proof he gave of his great Wit. " (c) When he was yet but 11 Years old, one at Table, without thinking of it, having ſtruck a fine earthen Diſh with a Knife, he took Notice, that it made a great Sound, but as ſoon as the Hand was laid upon it, the Sound ceas'd. He had a mind at the ſame time to know the Cauſe of it; and this Experiment having led him to make many others about Sounds, he obſerv'd ſo many things about them, that he wrote a Tract upon that Subject, which was judg'd very ingenious and ſolid.

What follows is a thing that deſerves to be related. An ingenious Man, who rally'd finely (d) thoſe that made the Preface (e) which I have quoted, introduces Deſcartes making uſe of theſe Words: " (f) This Man is happy in point of Reputation; for formerly he made many People believe, that he wrote from his own Fund of Ingenuity a Book of Conicks at the Age of 16; which Book was ſent to me, and before I had read one half of it, I thought (1) he had learn'd very much from Mr. des Argues, in which Opinion I was preſently after confirm'd by the Confeſſion he made of it to me himſelf (g). The Author who brings in Deſcartes talking after this Manner, preſently makes this Anſwer to him. " (h) What you ſay ſurprizes me a little, for in the Preface to a Treatiſe of the Æquilibrium of Liquors, printed after the Death of Mr. P... your Teſtimony is alledged in this point, which is not altogether agreeable to that which you now give me; for there is no mention there of the Aſſiſtance he had from Mr. des Argues; but it is only ſaid, that the thing appear'd to you ſo incredible and prodigious, that you had no mind to believe it; that you perſwaded your ſelf, that Mr. P... the Father was in effect the Author of the Book, and that he had a mind to give the Honour of it to his Son. Mr. Deſcartes replies, " I know not what they make me ſay or think in that Preface; but I know very well that I ſay nothing now, but what I writ in expreſs terms to (2) F. Merſenne, as ſoon as I ſaw the Book. I may be without doubt allow'd to ſay, that the Author of this Dialogue does not relate exactly what was written by Mr. Deſcartes to Father Merſenne. The Words of the letter are theſe, " (i) I have receiv'd alſo the Eſſay concerning Conicks from Mr. Paſcal's Son, and before I had read over one half of it, I thought that he had learn'd of Mr. des Argues, in which Opinion I have been confirm'd preſently after, by the Confeſſion which he himſelf makes about it. This plainly ſignifies, that Mr. Paſcal a little after the half of his Book, confeſſes that he has receiv'd great Light from Mr. des Argues: But the Words of the Dialogue do plainly imply that Mr. Paſcal writing to Mr. Deſcartes, made him this Confeſſion, which makes one be apt to believe, that this young Man having heard that this Philoſopher ſuſpected him of having improved by the Inſtructions of Mr. des Argues, wrote to him a Letter, wherein he owned the Juſtice of this Suſpicion. Such are the natural Conſequences of the Relation made by this Dialogiſt; and therefore we muſt conclude, that

(k) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors. See alſo Madam Perier*'s Life of Mr.* Paſcal. p. 6.

(l) He was then but 12 years old. Madam Perier Ib. and the Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors.

(m) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors. Madam Perier in the Life of Paſcal. Mr. Baillet, famous Children. p. 305. &c.

(a) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors. See alſo Mad. Perier. p. 8. &c.

(b) He preſented one of them to the King, and one to the Chancellor, and then he gave one to Mr. Carcavi. See Baillets Life of Deſcartes. tom. 2. p. 378.

(c) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors.

(d) See the Book intitled a Voyage to the World of Deſcartes. *p.*191,192. of the Holland Edit.

(e) That of the Æquilibrium of Liquors.

(f) i. e. Mr. Paſcal.

(1) Tom. 2. Let. 38.

(g) Voyage to the World of Deſcartes. pag. 188.

(h) Ibid. pag. 189.

(2) Tom. 2. Let. 38.

(i) Deſcartes. Tom. 2. Let. 38. p. m. 217.

very little time. But that which we are told of (E) his Piety and Humility, is little leſs wonderful. After he had taken a great deal of Pains in (F) Experiments of the new Philoſophy, he forſook that Study, and all † his other Enquiries, to apply himſelf only to that one thing which JESUS CHRIST calls neceſſary. He was not yet 24 Years old, when the Reading of ſome pious Books, put him upon making this holy Reſolution. The Patience which he diſcover'd in his Diſeaſes, that were long and frequent he ſets the Reader out of the right Way, and prompts him to form a falſe Idea of the Fact. The Objection is nevertheleſs very ſtrong againſt the Preface to the Æquilibrium; For Mr. Deſcartes did not write any thing to Father Merſenne, whereby it may appear that he admir'd young Paſcal, he gave him no Elogium, he does not ſay that the Book of Conicks appear'd to him to be well done, he ſays nothing of it neither good nor ill. Where then is this Teſtimony that he is pretended to have given, (k) that the thing in effect was incredible and prodigious! It is, will ſome ſay, in another Letter that was never printed; it muſt be added, and which was never written to Father Merſenne; for if it had been written to him, Mr. Baillet would have cited it, and not have been contented to refer us to the Preface of the Æquilibrium of Liquors. Mr. Baillet informs us of 3 things. 1. That Mr. Roberval and Mr. le Pailleur, and other Friends of Mr. Paſcal, were ſorry for what Mr. Deſcartes had written to Father Merſenne, (l) And that they complain'd of his Opinion, which did not appear obliging enough for a Child of ſuch an extraordinary Merit; wherein they were follow'd by the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, who upon this Point gave their Opinion to Mr. Clerſelier, after he had publiſh'd this Teſtimony of Deſcartes in the firſt Edition of his Letters. 2. That this great Philoſopher, going upon Probability, could not be perſwaded that a young Child was the Author of ſo good a Book. He therefore acquainted his Friend with the thing, without any Artifice, as he believ'd it. He choſe rather to ſeek for that Book, an Author among the moſt accompliſh'd Mathematicians, than to venture to loſe in other Occaſions, the Credit he had obtain'd with thoſe who knew him to be ſincere, by his eaſineſs to believe a thing, which he could not make others believe upon his bare Word. And therefore when he ſaw upon the Account of ſome Circumſtances that clear'd up the Matter, that this Book could not with any probability be attributed to his Friend Mr. des Argues, " He (3) choſe rather to believe that Paſcal the Father, was the true Author of it, than to be perſwaded that a Child of that Age was capable of writing a Book with ſuch ſtrength of Reaſon. 3. (m) That Mr. Deſcartes might probably fall the more eaſily into an Error about this Fact, when he remembred the Correſpondence between Mr. des Argues and Mr. Paſcal, and when he ſaw in the Treatiſe of the young Author, ſuch things as he believ'd he had ſeen a little while before in a Piece of Mr. des Argues; for this might induce him to think that Mr. des Argues might have a Hand in that Treatiſe, and ſo much the rather, becauſe young Mr. Paſcal cited Mr. des Argues in it.

† Ibid. p. 11.

(k) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors.

(l) Baillet Life of Deſcartes. tom. 2. p. 92. ad an. 1639, 1640.

(3) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors.

(m) Id. Baillet. ib. pag. 41.

One cannot well judge of this Diſpute until two Things be explain'd; one is, Whether it be true, that Mr. Deſcartes renouncing his firſt Opinion, wrote that Mr. Paſcal the Father had transferr'd to his Son the Glory of his Conicks. This does not appear by his printed Letters, nor by his Manuſcript Letters which Mr. Baillet conſulted, nor by any other circumſtantial Proof. There is nothing about this Matter, but an uncertain Teſtimony of thoſe who publiſh'd the Æquilibrium of Liquors. The other thing which is to be cleared up, is the knowing of the Terms, in which Mr. des Argues is mention'd in the Treatiſe of Mr. Paſcal. If he be ſimply nam'd in it, Mr. Deſcartes is much to blame, to maintain that Mr. Paſcal confeſſes he had learn'd from Mr. des Argues. But if Mr. Paſcal does make this Confeſſion in it, his and his Father's Friends are much to blame to complain of Mr. Deſcartes.

(E) That which we are told of his Piety.] I ſhall ſpeak hereafter (n) more largely of this: Here I ſhall only mention one Proof of it, (o) In the 4 laſt Years of his Life; becauſe he was not able to take Pains, his chief Diverſion was to go and viſit the Churches, where there were ſome Reliques expos'd, or ſome Solemnity obſerv'd, and for that end, he had a ſpiritual Almanack, which inform'd him of the Places where there were particular Devotions. And this he did with ſo much Devotion and Simplicity, that thoſe who ſaw him were ſurpriz'd at it, which gave Occaſion to that fine Saying of a very virtuous and knowing Perſon, That the Grace of God diſcovers it ſelf in great Wits by little Things, and in common Wits by great Things.

(n) In the Remark G.

(o) Mad. Perier ubi ſupra p. 40.

(F) In Experiments of the new Philoſophy, he forſook that Study.] The firſt Experiment he made was that of Torricellius, which he repeated many times, " (a) and from it drew many Conſequences, for the Proof of which, he made many new Experiments, in the Preſence of the moſt conſiderable Perſons of the City of Roan, (b) where he then (c) was . . . He caus'd them to be printed in the Year 1647, and made a little Book of them, which he diſpers'd through all France, and afterwards he ſent it into foreign Countries. . . . . In the ſame Year he was inform'd of a Thought that Torricellius had, that the Air was heavy, and that its Weight might be the Cauſe of all the Effects which had been hitherto attributed to the Horror of a Vacuum. He look'd upon this as a very fine Thought; but ſince it was a meer Conjecture of which there was not any Proof, he made many Experiments to diſcover whether it were true or falſe, . . . which not being ſatisfactory, at the end of the ſame Year 1647, he meditated upon the famous Experiment which was tried in 1648. . . . . The Succeſs of that Experiment, which he repeated many times, confirm'd him altogether in the Thought of Torricellius about the Weight of the Air, and gave him Occaſion afterwards to draw from thence many very fine and uſeful Conſequences, and to make alſo many other Experiments, which he put into a large Treatiſe, which he wrote at that time, wherein he fully explain'd all that Matter, and anſwer'd all the Objections that were made againſt him. But this Treatiſe was loſt, or rather, becauſe he lov'd Brevity, he himſelf reduc'd it to a little Tracts, which appear'd after his Death, whereof one is entitled, the Æquilibrium of Liquors, and the other, the Weight of the Maſs of the Air.

(a) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors.

(b) His Father was Intendant there.

(c) i.e. in 1646. See Mr. Baillet's Life of Deſcartes, tom. 2. p. 328.

(d) A Voyage to the World of Deſcartes. p. 188.

Here we muſt take Notice of the Objection that was made againſt him, that he had not that Gratitude for Deſcartes that was due to him. And in ſpeaking to this, let us keep to the Dialogue of a modern Author. " (d) M. Deſcartes interrupted me in this Place, and asked me, what was that Experiment of M. P. . . . I anſwer'd him that it was that which was made in 1648, upon a Mountain call'd puy de Domme, with the Tube of Torricellius, wherein the Quick-ſilver was found of much leſs height on the Top of the Mountain, than in the middle, or at the Foot of it, from whence he clearly inferr'd the Weight of the Air. This is call'd, replied Deſcartes, the Experiment of M. P. . . . It is therefore becauſe he perform'd it, or cauſ'd it to be perform'd by Mr. Perier; for certainly, it is neither becauſe he invented it, nor becauſe he foreſaw the Succeſs of it. And if that Experiment ought to be call'd by the Name of its Author, it may more juſtly be call'd the (1) Experiment of Deſcartes; for it was I who deſired him (e) two Years before to try it, and aſſur'd him of Succeſs, as being altogether agreeable to my Principles, otherwiſe he had never thought of it, being of a contrary Opinion. Mr. Baillet has confirm'd this Reproach to be juſt, for thus he informs us under the Year 1647. (f) M. Deſcartes being very well pleaſed with the Diſcourſe of Mr. Paſcal, found that all theſe Experiments were very agreeable to the Principles of his Philoſophy, altho Mr. Paſcal oppos'd him, (2) as being of the ſame Opinion with Mr. Roberval and others, who maintain'd a Vacuum. But to make him amends for his Converſation, he adviſ'd him (3) to make other Experiments about the Maſs of the Air, to the Weight whereof, as we have already remark'd, he attributed all that the Vulgar Philoſophers had in vain attributed to the fear of a Vacuum, (4). He aſſured him of the Succeſs of theſe Experiments, altho he had not yet made them, becauſe he ſpoke of them agreeably to his own Principles. Mr. Paſcal who was not yet convinc'd of the Solidity of his Principles, and who had promiſ'd

ſome

(1) Letter 77. of Deſcartes. tom. 4.

(e) Mr. Deſcartes miſtakes one Year, he pray'd Mr. Paſcal at Paris in 1647. and the Experiment was made in 1648. See Mr. Baillet's Life of Deſcartes, tom. 2. pag. 330. I will cite his Words immediately.

(f) Baillet's Life of Deſcartes, tom. 2. p. 330.

(2) Letter M. S. to Merſenne of the 4th of April, 1648.

(3) Tom. 3. of Letters, pag. 443, and 438.

(4) Mr. Auzout pretends to have given the ſame Advice at the ſame time to M. Paſcal.

frequent, ought alſo to be matter (G) of aſtoniſhment: Neither ought we leſs to admire his Temper towards thoſe who offended him, and towards thoſe who fail'd in the obedience which was due to the King. He was inſenſible to the Faults of the ſome time after to make ſome Objections againſt his Materia ſubtilis, would, perhaps, have had no regard to his Advice, if he had not been acquainted, about the ſame time, with a Thought of Torricellius which was perfectly like this. The Experiments he made about the weight of (5) the Air in 1648, upon theſe Advices, were found very ſucceſsful. But he choſe rather to return Thanks to M. Torricellius, than to M. Deſcartes, who was depriv'd of his acknowledgment either in (6) his Letter to Mr. Ribeyre, firſt Preſident of the Court of Aids in Clermont-Ferrand, wherein he gives an Account of his Experiments, or in the Preface which one of his Friends wrote to his Poſthumous Treatiſe of the Æquilibrium of Liquors, and of the weight of the Air. You ſee that he does not juſtify Mr. Paſcal, with reſpect to Deſcartes, as he does with reſpect to Torricellius in theſe words: (g) "The report of his Experiments being ſpread in Paris, they were confounded with thoſe of Italy; and in this confuſion ſome attributed the whole to Mr. Paſcal, others attributed nothing to him. To inform the Publick of this matter, in all its circumſtances, and to do that Juſtice which was due to all thoſe who had any ſhare in that Invention, Mr. Paſcal reſolv'd, the next Year, to Print an exact Account of the Experiments he had try'd in Normandy; and he prefix'd a Preface, wherein he declar'd thoſe of Italy made by an Author unknown to him, whoſe Name he could not tell, and which was not known at Paris till ſome time after, that Cavalier del Pozzo wrote from Rome, that it was the famous Torricellius, who died about that time. This ſeeming ſuppreſſion of the Name of a Perſon, whom Mr. Paſcal otherwiſe preferr'd to all the Geometricians of Antiquity, gave occaſion to ſome to ſuſpect, that he intended to turn Plagiary of Torricellius, and to believe, tho' falſly, that he had ſtole alſo from the famous Capuchin Valerian Magni.

Immediately after all theſe Experiments, which confirm'd Mr. Paſcal in the Opinion of the weight of the Air, he (i) addicted himſelf to more ſerious Studies, which ſo diſguſted him with Mathematicks and Phyſicks, that he abſolutely forſook them. For altho' he wrote afterwards a Tract intituled, de la Roulette, under the Name of Ettonville, this is no wiſe contrary to what I now ſay, becauſe he found all that is contain'd in it by chance, and without any application to Study; and he wrote it to ſerve a Deſign perfectly remote from the Mathematicks, and from all curious Sciences, as will perhaps be prov'd ſometime hereafter (k).

(G) The Patience he diſcover'd in his Diſeaſes .... is matter of aſtoniſhment.] His Siſter relates many particulars about it, I ſhall tranſcribe but one. (l) "To this ardent Charity he join'd, during his Sickneſs, an admirable Patience, which edified and ſurpriz'd all Perſons that were about him; and he ſaid to thoſe who declar'd they were troubled to ſee him in ſuch a condition, that, for his own part, he was no wiſe troubled, and that he was even afraid of being cur'd; and when he was ask'd the reaſon, he anſwer'd, Becauſe I know the dangers of Health, and the advantages of Sickneſs. He ſaid yet, in the height of his Pain, when ſome were griev'd to ſee him endure it, Be not troubl'd for me, Sickneſs is the natural State of Chriſtians, becauſe they ſhould always be in a Suffering condition, depriv'd of all good things, and of all the Pleaſures of Senſe, free from Paſſions, without Ambition and Avarice, and in a continual expectation of Death. Is it not thus that Chriſtians ought to paſs their Lives? And is it not a happineſs, when they are by neceſſity in ſuch a condition in which they ought to be, and when they have nothing elſe to do but to ſubmit humbly and peaceably? Wherefore I only deſire to pray to God, that he would grant me his Grace. This was the Temper with which he endur'd all his Pains." The Author of the News from the Republick of Learning, hath made ſome Reflections upon this, and upon the advantage that may be drawn from the extraordinary Devotion of ſo excellent a Mathematician, and ſo great a Philoſopher. It ſerves, ſays he, to refute the Libertines, (m) They cannot now tell us, that none but little Wits have any Piety. It cannot be deny'd, but it is rare to ſee a great Devotion in Perſons who have once taſted of Mathematical Studies, and made an extraordinary progreſs in thoſe Sciences. I do not know but we may ſay, in this caſe, what the Abbot Furetiere ſaid of Attorneys: (n) "There are ſome Saints who have been Advocates, Bailiffs, nay, even Comedians (o); in fine, There is no Profeſſion, how mean ſoever it be, but there have been Saints of it; but there never was any Saint that was an Attorney." Some talk of a Prieſt who adopted a Maxim like that of Mr. Paſcal, but it was with reference to another, and not to himſelf. I remember this Queſtion is put in the Evening Conferences of Mr. Bouchet, (a) Whether a Prieſt did well in refuſing to pray for the Health of his Pariſhioner, who had ſent for him to come and pray to God that he would reſtore him to Health? For the Prieſt having ask'd him at what time he found himſelf the better Chriſtian, whether in Health or in Sickneſs, the ſick Man anſwer'd him, That he was a better Man when God viſited him. It would be better therefore, reply'd the Prieſt, that you ſhould continue Sick, that you may be the better Man. This Action of this Prieſt is none of the moſt difficult; but if he had deſir'd, during a great Sickneſs, that others ſhou'd pray to God that it might continue, he had done an extraordinary thing.

There were in the Conduct of Mr. Paſcal ſome other things, which are no leſs ſingular than his Maxims about Health. (b) "The Converſations in which he was often engag'd, altho' they were wholly about Charity, yet they ſometimes made him afraid, leſt he ſhould fall into danger by them, but ſince he could not in Conſcience refuſe the Relief which ſome Perſons demanded of him, he found out a Remedy for this. He took, upon occaſion, an Iron Girdle full of Points, and put it round about his naked Fleſh, and when any vain Thought came into his Mind, or he took ſome pleaſure in the place where he was, or any ſuch like thing happen'd, he gave himſelf ſome Blows with his Elbow, to redouble the violence of the prickings; and thus he made himſelf remember his Duty. He had always in his Mind (c) theſe two great Maxims, of renouncing all Pleaſure and all Superfluity; and he practis'd them in the worſt of his Illneſs, with a continual watchfulneſs over his Senſes, refuſing them abſolutely every thing that was agreeable to them: And when neceſſity conſtrain'd him to do ſomething which might give him ſome ſatisfaction, he had a wonderful Art of diverting his Mind from it, that it might have no ſhare in it. As for inſtance, his continual Sickneſs obliging him to feed delicately, he took great care not to reliſh what he did eat. He had (d) no violent Affection for thoſe whom he lov'd, and adviſ'd others not to ſuffer that any Body (e) ſhould love them in a very high degree; that this was a Fault which they did not ſufficiently conſider, becauſe the greatneſs of it was not ſufficiently apprehended, ſince by entertaining and cheriſhing ſuch an ardent Affection, a Man poſſeſſes a Heart which belongs only to God; and that this is to rob him of the thing in all the World which is moſt dear to him. He found fault with ſome Diſcourſes of his Siſter, which ſhe thought very innocent. If I ſaid ſometimes, ſays ſhe, (f) upon occaſion, that I had ſeen a beautiful Woman, he was angry, and would tell me, that I muſt not hold theſe Diſcourſes before Lacqueys and young People, becauſe I did not know what Thoughts I might excite in their Minds by them. He had ſo much Humility, that the Curate of St. Stephen du Mont, who ſaw him in all his laſt Sickneſs, ſaid at every turn, (g) He is a Child, he is humble, he ſubmits like a little Child. By the ſame Vertue, (h) he allow'd a perfect freedom of telling him of his Faults, and yielded to the Advices which were given him, without reſiſtance. Having embrac'd a kind of Life, abſtracted from the World, at the Age of Thirty Years, he govern'd himſelf by this Maxim, (i) of renouncing all Pleaſures and Superfluities, and this he practis'd during the remainder of his Life. To ſucceed in this Deſign, he begun from that time, as he did ever ſince, to diſuſe the Service of his Domeſticks, as much as he could. He made his Bed himſelf, he went and took his Dinner in the Kitchin, and carried it to his Chamber; and after he had Din'd he carried back the remainder. In fine, he made uſe of no body, but only to Dreſs his Meat, to go into the City, and do ſuch other things as he could by no means do himſelf. Laſtly, among many other Maxims of Mr. Paſcal, which

(5) See the MS. Letter of Deſcart. to Merſen. of Dec. 13. 1647. of Febr. 7. 1648. of Jan. 31. 1648. and of April 4. 1648.

(6) Of July 12. 1651.

(g) Baillet ib. p. 329.

(i) Preface to the Æquilibrium of Liquors, towards the end. See alſo Madam Perier, ubi ſupra, p. 12.

(k) See Madam Perier, ubi ſupra, pag. 24, 25.

(l) Madam Perier, ib. pag. 44.

(m) News from the Republick of Learning Dec. 1684. in the Catalogue of new Books, n. 2.

(n) Furetieriana, pag. 44. of the Holl. Edition.

(o) Mr. Chappuzeau in his French Theatre obſerves, that there is a Martyr who was a Comedian; and that St. Geneſt, whoſe Feſtival the Church celebrates, Auguſt 31. ended his days by a glorious Tragedy.

(a) Bouchet, Serée 33. p. 224. Lions 1618 in 8.

(b) Mad. Perier, ib. pag. 22.

(c) Ibid. pag. 25.

(d) Ibid pag. 34.

(e) Ibid. pag. 35.

(f) Ibid. pag. 32.

(g) Ibid. pag. 41.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. pag. 19.

the former, and irreconcilable (H) to the latter. He died at Paris, Aug. 19, 1662, Aged Thirty Nine Years and Two Months *. He had been a long time about a Work againſt the Atheiſts, and againſt all thoſe who do not admit the Truths of the Goſpel. He did not live long enough to put into Form the Materials he had gather'd together. What was found, concerning that Subject, among his Papers, was made publick, and was admir'd. He ſet in a good light a Thought which Arnobius (I) made uſe of, which is, That thoſe who believe a God may be eternally happy, if they be in the right, and that they loſe nothing if they are miſtaken: But which doubtleſs appear very ſtrange to worldly People, I muſt not omit one, which is very ſingular; he did not approve of any Man's uſing theſe Phraſes, I have ſaid, I have done, &c. See the laſt Remark.

(H) Irreconcilable to Rebels.] (k) "He had "ſo great a Zeal for the Glory of God, that he could "not endure it ſhould be impeach'd in any thing "whatſoever; and this render'd him ſo zealous for "the Service of the King, that he reſiſted every "Body at the time of the Troubles in Paris, and "has ever ſince call'd all the Reaſons that were us'd "to excuſe that Rebellion, Bare Pretences: And he "ſaid, That in a State ſettled in the form of a Republick, ſuch as Venice was, it was a great Sin to "place a King there, and oppreſs the Liberty of the "People, which God had given them: But that in "a State where the Royal Power is ſettled, the Reverence due to it cannot be violated, without a "kind of Sacrilege; ſince it is not only an Image of "the Power of God, but a participation of that "ſame Power, which could not be oppos'd without "viſibly reſiſting the Ordinance of God; and therefore that he could not ſufficiently heighten the "greatneſs of that Fault; beſides, that it is always "accompanied with a Civil War, which is the "greateſt Sin that can be committed againſt Charity "to our Neighbour. And he obſerv'd this Maxim "ſo ſincerely, that he refus'd at that time very conſiderable Advantages, rather than he would depart from it. He was wont commonly to ſay, "that he abhorr'd this Sin as much as to Aſſaſſinate "Man, or to Rob on the High-way. And laſtly, "That there was nothing more contrary to his Temper, and by which he was leſs tempted. Theſe "were his Sentiments, as to the Service of the King, "and ſo he was irreconcilable to all thoſe who "oppos'd them; and that this ſtiffneſs was not from "his Temper or Inclination, ſufficiently appear'd "from his admirable Mildneſs towards thoſe who "offended him. He forgot ſo perfectly what concern'd only his own Perſon, that it was difficult to "make him remember it, unleſs they mention'd, for "that end, the circumſtances of things. And when "ſometimes he was admir'd for this, he would ſay, "Do not wonder at this, it is not any Vertue in me, "it is really my Forgetfulneſs, I remember nothing "of all this. Nevertheleſs 'tis certain, that hence "it appears, that the Offences which concern'd only his own Perſon, did not make any great Impreſſion upon him, ſince he did ſo eaſily forget "them; for he had ſo excellent a Memory, that he "would often ſay, he never forgot any thing he "had a mind to remember (l). If this and the other things I have related be true, it muſt needs be granted that Mr. Paſcal was a Prodigy; and if I might be ſo bold as to make uſe of the Expreſſion, I would call him a Paradoxical Individuum of Human-kind. He deſerv'd that one ſhou'd doubt whether he was born of a Woman, much better than that great Philoſopher of Sicily, whom Lucretius (m) has regal'd with that Commendation. One thing may leſſen the admiration of the hatred he had for Seditions, which is, That in his Time a War was rais'd in the Kingdom, the moſt unjuſt that ever was ſeen, and moſt prejudicial to the welfare of the Monarchy. Upon the view of the terrible Conſequences which that Sedition had, wherein the Pariſians were engag'd, in 1648, to ſet ſome Magiſtrates at liberty, there is no good Man but will conceive an horror againſt Inſurrections, and reaſon almoſt as Balzac did, and even with leſs reſpect for the Prince of Condé, the fatal Head of the Revolt (n). Then begin here to take courage again, ſays he (o), after the Siege of Coignac has been rais'd, and we are not now ſo apprehenſive for our Province. But if the Peace was to be concluded to Morrow, this ſhort War would leave behind it a long remembrance of the Miſchiefs it has done. If States are thus to be reform'd and govern'd, happy are the States which are left in Corruption and Diſorder! The Hero of Monſieur d'Ablancourt was alſo mine; but we equally deteſt the Civil Wars, and will not pardon even Julius Cæſar, altho' we tranſlate his Commentaries. To conclude, the Friends of Mr. Paſcal glory much, that they are Followers of the Doctrine which condemns Rebellion. See what Mr. Arnauld (p) has cited from the Second Tome of the Moral Eſſays.

(I) A Thought which Arnobius made uſe of.] That Father confeſſes to the Pagans, that the Promiſes of JESUS CHRIST cannot be prov'd, becauſe they concern a future happineſs; but he adds, that between two uncertain things, 'tis better to chooſe that which gives us hopes, than that which gives us none. The force of this Reaſon will be more clearly perceiv'd in the Original Words. (a) Sed & ipſe (Chriſtus) quæ pollicetur, non probat. Ita eſt. Nulla enim, ut dixi, futurorum poteſt exiſtere comprobatio. Cum ergo hæc ſit conditio futurorum, ut teneri & comprehendi nullius poſſint anticipationis attactu, nonne purior ratio eſt, ex duobus incertis, & in ambigua expectatione pendentibus, id potius credere, quod aliquas ſpes ferat, quam omnino quod nullas? In illo enim periculi nihil eſt, ſi quod dicitur imminere, caſſum fiat & vacuum: in hoc damnum eſt maximum, id eſt, ſalutis amiſſio, ſi cum tempus advenerit, aperiatur non fuiſſe mendacium. Mr. Paſcal unfolds this Thought very well, and does ſucceſsfully make uſe of the Proportions between a Wager, and the hazard of Loſs and Gain, which make the Wager prudent. See (b) Ch. 6. of his Thoughts: They were Printed in 1669, confirm'd with many Approbations, which give an Elogium of them. (c) Eight Years after there appear'd a Book wherein this Reaſoning of Mr. Paſcal was improv'd, with much extent and a great force. The Author had been little moved with the Cenſure of Mr. Paſcal's Deſign, made by the Defender of Father Bouhours. That Apologiſt concludes his Cenſure with Criticizing upon this Paſſage. (d) "'Tis certain that God is, or is not, there is no "Medium, and there is an infinite diſtance between "theſe two Extreams. A Man plays a Game at this "infinite diſtance, which ſhall bring Croſs or Pile. "What Wager will you lay? By Reaſon, you cannot "ſay that God is; by Reaſon, you cannot deny it. "Accuſe not therefore of a Falſhood, thoſe who "have made a Choice; for you know not whether "they are in the wrong, or whether they have made "an ill choice. No, will you ſay, but I will blame them "for making, not this Choice, but a Choice; and he "who takes Croſs, and he who takes Pile are both to "blame. Yes, will I reply, but a Wager muſt be laid, "this is not left to your Will; and not to lay that God "is, is to lay that he is not. Which ſide will you take? "Let us weigh the Gain and the Loſs, by chooſing "to believe that God is. If you win, you win all; "if you loſe, you loſe nothing. If you ſay, that "'tis uncertain whether you ſhall win, and that 'tis "certain that you hazard the Pleaſures of this Life, "which you lay in the Wager; and that the infinite "diſtance which is between the Certainty which "you venture, and the uncertainty of what you "might Gain, equals the finite Good, which you certainly venture, to the infinite Good which is uncertain. This is not ſo, for every Player hazards "with Certainty, to gain with uncertainty, without "offending againſt Reaſon. Let us now ſee how he refutes this. (e) Be ſilent Paſchaſius, I loſe all Patience to hear you treat thus of the ſublimeſt of all Subjects, and ground the moſt important Truth in the World, and the Principle of all Truths, upon a Notion ſo mean and childiſh, upon a Compariſon of playing at Croſs and Pile, which is more fit to make a Man laugh than to convince him, and upon an Argument ſo defective, and grounded upon ſuch a Foundation as is uncertain, and perhaps altogether falſe. I will not ſay that at firſt you laid down ſomething which a wiſe Man would not do, neither can I tell with what Conſcience you could ſay to a Libertine, That by Reaſon we cannot be aſſur'd that there is a God. I know many People who would be ſtrangely ſcandaliz'd, to hear you uſe this horrible

---

* Taken from his Life written by Mad. Perier, his Siſter. That Life is prefix'd to the Thoughts of Mr. Paſcal of the Amſterd. Edit. 1684.

(k) Ibid. pag. 38.

(l) We may therefore apply to him what Cicero in his Orat. pro Ligario ſub fin. ſays to Cæſar, qui obliviſci nihil ſoles præter injurias.

(m) Nil tamen hoc habuiſſe viro præclarius in ſe, Nec ſanctum magis, & mirum, charumq; videtur. Carmina quinetiam divini pectoris ejus Vociferantur & exponunt præclara reperta, Ut vix humana videatur ſtirpe creatus. Lucret. lib. 1. v. 730.

(n) i. e. Of the War to which the Barricades in 1648, gave occaſion by degrees.

(o) Balzac Letter 25. to Conrart B. 2. p. m. 148, 149. The Letter is dated Nov. 20. 1651.

(p) Arnauld Apology for the Catholicks 1 Part ch. 11. p. 145.

(a) Arnobius adverſus gentes lib. 2. pag. m. 44.

(b) It is Intituled, That it is more advantageous to believe than not to believe what the Chriſtian Religion teaches.

(c) Intitl'd A Treatiſe of Religion againſt Atheiſts, Deiſts, and the new Pyrrhonians. Printed at Paris by Lambert Roulland, 1677, in 12.

(d) Abbot of Villars's Treatiſe of Delicacy, Dial. 5. p. 115, 116. of the Holl. Edition.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 116.

But an Atheiſt gains nothing if he be in the right, and renders himſelf eternally miſerable if he be miſtaken. The Provincial Letters of Mr. Paſcal have been, and are ſtill eſteem'd (K) a Maſter-piece. Some Authors have very impertinently deny'd horrible Language, and who would not venture a Wager upon the Theology of the Director who ſuffers you to uſe ſuch ways of ſpeaking. Yet this were ſomething, if your Moral Reaſon were good; but to the ſhame be it ſpoken, both of his Theology and your Morality, it concludes nothing, becauſe all its force depends upon the Truth of this Propoſition, That every Gameſter hazards with Certainty to gain with Uncertainty, and yet does not offend againſt Reaſon. In truth, Paſchaſius, if the exiſtence of a Deity were as Problematical as that Propoſition, we ſhou'd be in a bad condition. All the Fathers and Husbands, who will not have their Children or Wives to Play, would be Atheiſts, and would maintain obſtinately, that 'tis very unreaſonable for a Man to hazard the Money that is in his Pocket, with which he can live free from Miſery, to gain what is uncertain, and venture, as it often happens, to loſe both the one and the other. But I have heard ſome ſay, that you were a great Enemy to looſe Caſuiſts; whence then comes it to paſs, that you do not only allow of Gaming, but that you would make Religion, and the being of a Deity, to depend upon the Game of Croſs and Pile? This Refutation is weak, and deſerves not to be examined: It may ſuffice to refer the Reader to the Chapter of Mr. Paſcal, which I have cited, and to the Writer who made a fine Paraphraſe upon it eight Years after. I ſhall only make one obſervation, which will diſcover, that Father Bouhours his Friend fail'd either in exactneſs or equity. He looks upon it as a ſcandalous Propoſition, contrary to Wiſdom and Conſcience, and deſerving the thundering Rebuke of a good Director, which is contain'd in theſe words of Mr. Paſcal, By Reaſon you cannot ſay that God exiſts. He ſuppoſes that this is to own to a Libertine, That by Reaſon it cannot be affirm'd that there is a God. This Explication is very falſe; for Mr. Paſcal does not acknowledge the truth of the Propoſition, he deſigns only not to oppoſe it, that he may take advantage of it in order to reclaim the Atheiſts. 'Tis as clear as the Day, that the words of Mr. Paſcal, addreſs'd to the Libertine, are equivalent to theſe, You maintain that by Reaſon you cannot ſay that there is a God.

(K) The Provincial Letters are . . . a Maſter-piece.] See the Praiſes Mr. Perrault has given (f) this Book: They engag'd the beſt French Pens which are among the Jeſuits, to refute theſe Letters, in a Book (g) which was ſuppreſs'd in France, aſſoon as it appear'd, in 1694, and which the Bookſellers of Holland reprinted. Of all the Books which have been publiſh'd againſt the Jeſuits, there is none that has done them more harm, and given them more trouble, than theſe Provincial Letters. They have been tranſlated into many Languages. Mr. Nicolle (h) under the Name of William Wendrock, a Divine of Saltzburg, turn'd them into Latin, and added to them ſome Notes and Diſſertations. Others have tranſlated them into Engliſh, (i) Italian and (k) Spaniſh. I have ſeen an Edition in 8o. in four Columns, which contains the French, with the Latin, Italian, and Spaniſh Verſions, having two Columns in one Page, and two in another; ſo that by opening the Book, all the four Columns are to be ſeen at one time.

I ſhall here give you ſome Collections, which will diſcover what is ſaid of the new Anſwer of the Jeſuits to the Provincial Letters, the effects which it has produc'd, and divers things which belong to the Hiſtory of theſe two Books. (l) "At the end of Forty Years there came out of the Aſhes of ſo many Apologies that had been confuted, a new Apology for the extravagancies of the Caſuiſts; an Apology ſo much the more dangerous, becauſe the Author of it has dexterouſly conceal'd his End and Deſign, and dreſs'd it up with all the Ornaments and Artifices which his Rhetorick could furniſh, on purpoſe to blind and ſeduce the Reader. We are well inform'd that it was Printed contrary to the Advice of the R. F. de la Chaiſe, contrary to the expreſs Prohibition of the late Archbiſhop of Paris, and againſt all the Laws of Policy. It was diſpers'd with great Profuſeneſs, and an extream Zeal. It was tranſlated into Latin by one of the beſt Pens of the Society. It was rendred into Italian by another; and by theſe means the Editions of it have been multiplied, ſo that the World is fill'd with them. The Impreſſions which they have cauſed to be made in France, Holland, Flanders, and elſewhere, and the care they took to recommend it to Men and Women devoted to them, give juſt cauſe to apprehend, that this Book has already done much miſchief, at a time when the remiſneſs of the diſcipline is already but too much in vogue, and too much ſupported. It was hop'd that the Holy See would not ſuffer a Work ſo dangerous to be ſpread with Impunity; but the multitude of great Affairs which have for ſome Years ſince been upon the Anvil at Rome, muſt have delay'd to another time, the Examination of a Book fill'd with ſo many Facts and Citations, that it would require much leiſure to enquire into the truth of them." Thus ſpeaks the anonymous (m) Author, who has refuted the Anſwer to the Provincial Letters, or the Conferences of Cleander and Eudoxus; thus, I ſay, he ſpeaks in his Epiſtle Dedicatory. Here is a Paſſage out of his Preface: "The Conferences of Cleander and Eudoxus, whereof common Fame makes F. Daniel the Author, are, it ſeems, the firſt reſource of the Society. Almoſt half an Age was requir'd to produce ſuch a Maſter-piece, and to form the Workman: and as ſoon as it has appear'd in the World, their joyful Shouts which have been heard every-where, do plainly diſcover that this was the Prophet whom they expected, and that his Work was the Salvation of the Society. If they flatter'd themſelves with the hopes of enticing the Publick into the ſame Sentiments of eſteem for it, and to force them by the ſparkling Eloquence of this new Defence, to declare againſt Mr. Paſcal; it does not belong to me to ſay, whether they have been miſtaken or no: Yet I am much miſtaken myſelf if notwithſtanding this new effort, the Provincial Letters be not ſtill the delight of Men of Wit, and an Original almoſt inimitable. As to Wendrock, the illuſtrious Defender of them, his Book will be to all Ages a ſovereign Antidote againſt the Poyſon of a corrupt Morality, a Book wherein the moſt important Principles of all Chriſtian Morality are aſſerted and defended in the moſt ſolid and agreeable manner, and an Apology for the Provincial Letters, which all the efforts of the Society will never be able to weaken."

I think it may be ſaid, That altho' the Work of Father Daniel were more Ingenious and more Argumentative than it is, it would not bring off the Admirers of the Provincial Letters from their Opinion. To this purpoſe read the words which a Writer, who was critical enough, and naturally much inclin'd to the moſt biting Cenſure, has inſerted in one of his Collections. There is lately come out, ſays he, (a) an Anſwer to the Provincial Letters, which ruins them intirely, and yet will do them no great hurt. But how can this be? The reaſon of it is, becauſe altho' this Anſwer does plainly diſcover, the horrible Injuſtice, the cruel Calumnies, the injurious Falſities which are boldly ſpread in all theſe Letters, againſt one of the moſt famous Societies, that maintain the Intereſts of the Church; yet they have ſo long, by their pleaſant and comical turns of Wit, engag'd all the ſcoffing Party on their ſide, that they are in poſſeſſion of an Authority and Credit that cannot eaſily be taken from them. In vain will the Jeſuits endeavour to do conſiderable Service to the Church and the Publick. . . . Many People will not forbear to read the Provincial Letters with an eaſy credulity, and will not ſee the Anſwer to them, nor ſo much as endure any to ſpeak of it. Indeed the Prejudice upon this occaſion is a very unjuſt Judgment, very cruel and obſtinate, ſince (altho' theſe Letters have been condemn'd by Popes, Biſhops, and Doctors, and burnt by the Hand of the Hangman, according to the Decrees of Parliament and of the Council of State) it has taken ſuch poſſeſſion of Mens Minds, that it reſiſts all theſe Powers. 'Tis certain that the Zeal of the Anti-Moliniſts is reviv'd, for the Provincial Letters, ſince the Anſwer of Father Daniel. They have reprinted them with a new Appendix (b), in which they have us'd great application. Read what follows: (c) "You know that the late Mr. Nicole, under the Name of Wendrock,

---

(f) In the ſecond Tome of the Parallel between the Ancients and Moderns.

(g) Intitled An Anſwer to the Provincial Letters of L. de Montalte, or, The Conferences of Cleander and Eudoxus. See an Abſtract of it in the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Nov. 1694. p. 113, &c.

(h) See the Article Nicolle Remark B.

(i) Coſimo Brunetti, a Gentleman of Florence, is the Author of the Italian Verſion.

(k) Gratian Cordero de Burgos is the Author of the Spaniſh Verſion

(l) Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Apology for the Provincial Letters, of Lewis de Montalte, p. 8. of the Roan Edition, 1697.

(m) 'Tis believed that it is Dom Petit Didier a Benedictin of the Congregation of S. Vannes.

(a) Richelet, the fineſt French Letters upon all ſorts of Subjects, to. 2. p. 322, 323, of the Amſterd. Edit. 1698 He advertiſes that he who wrote the Letter from which this Paſſage is taken, is called Mr. Bordellon.

(b) See the News from the Republick of Learning, Aug. 1699. p. 202.

(c) News from the Republick of Learning, Jan. 1700. p. 113.

ny'd that there were any Decrees (K Δ) of Condemnation againſt them. It was given out, that in the laſt Days of his Sickneſs † he deteſted that Book, and that he repented of his having been (L) a Janſeniſt; but this was found to be falſe, altho' it cannot

“ had publiſh'd in Latin the Provincial Letters, with very large Notes of his own. This Book a little while ago was tranſlated into French, and 'tis pretended to be done by a Lady of Paris; and it was printed at Lyons in 4 Volumes in 12s. The Court being inform'd of it, the King order'd that the Copies ſhould be ſeiz'd; which Order was executed with great Noiſe, but without Succeſs. They went to the Houſes of the Partners of the Sieur Aniſon, who were ſuſpected of having printed this Edition, but as is ſaid, they had timely enough Notice of it, to lay out of the way all the Copies, ſo that not one of them was found. There are now ſome here (at Paris) that are ſold at nine Livres, which is double of what they were ſold for before. There is an Advertiſement prefix'd to the firſt Volume, wherein the Author ſays, that he made this Tranſlation, becauſe the Conferences of F. Daniel, which were publiſh'd in 1694, againſt the Provincial Letters, attack'd in French an Author who had written in Latin; and becauſe it is fit that every Body ſhould be able to judge of the Difference. There is afterwards an Hiſtory of the Provincial Letters, which is ſcarce any thing elſe, but the four Latin Prefaces of Wendrock. At the End, we have an Account of the Intrigue, which was carried on at Bourdeaux, to procure the Condemnation of the Letters of Wendrock, by the Parliament.

(K Δ) Who very impertinently deny'd, that there were any Decrees of Condemnation againſt the Provincial Letters.] A Miniſter having ſaid (d), That the Cenſure of the Morality of the Jeſuits, written by the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, the Provincial Letters and the other Books which cenſured that deteſtable Morality, had been burnt by the Hand of the Hangman; here follows the Anſwer to him: “(e) But whither do you wander Mr. Jurieu? For beſides that it is not known, that any Cenſure of the Morality of the Jeſuits, made by the Writers of Port-Royal, was burnt, and that in general 'tis falſe, that the other Books which cenſur'd this Morality, and even the Provincial Letters, were burnt and tore by the Hands of the common Hangman; yet tho' all this were true, it wou'd not have been done by the Authority of the Church, but by an Authority purely ſecular; and conſequently you ought not to reproach the Church with it. The Author who ſpeaks after this Manner, calls himſelf the Abbot Richard, and is a very good Friend of the Janſeniſts. How then could he be ignorant of the Fate of the Provincial Letters in a Point ſo important? Why did he neglect ſo much the Writings of the Jeſuits againſt that? Does it become him never to have caſt his Eyes upon the Decree of the Parliament of Aix, which they printed at the end of their Anſwers to the Provincial Letters? The Tenor of the Decree is as follows: “(f) The Court having heard the Report of the Commiſſioners, who have ſeen and examin'd the ſaid Letters, and having peruſed them, declares them to be Defamatory, ſlanderous and pernicious to the Publick; and conſequently ordains, that they ſhall be deliver'd into the Hands of the Executioner, to be by him burnt upon the Pillory in the Place call'd Preachers Fields in the City of Aix; and Prohibits and forbids all Printers for the future to print this Book, or any other of the like Nature, and all Bookſellers and others of whatſoever Condition or Quality they be, to keep, ſell or publiſh them upon pain of Corporal Puniſhment; and enjoyns them to ſend the Books without delay to the Clerk of the Court that they may be ſuppreſſed, under the ſame Penalty; and ordains that the Tranſgreſſors ſhall be inform'd againſt by the Judge Royal, or Serjeant of the Court, to the end that the Informations being made, they may proceed againſt the Guilty, upon the Declaration of the above mention'd Penalties. And to the End that none may pretend Ignorance, the preſent Decree ſhall be read and publiſh'd with ſound of Trumpet in all the Places and Croſs-Streets of the City of Aix. Done at the Parliament of Provence ſitting at Aix, and publiſh'd at the Bar, Feb. 9th, 1657. The Author of the Hiſtory of the 5 Propoſitions of Janſenius, informs us, (g) That among the Works of the Port-Royal, two of the moſt conſiderable are thoſe which appear'd in Latin, one under the Name of Paul Irenæus, to juſtify Janſenius in denying the Fact; the other under the Name of Wendrokius, which contain'd a Latin Tranſlation of the Provincial Letters, with Notes or Diſſertations of the ſame Author, who is known to be Mr. Nicole. Theſe two Books being given by the King's Order, to be examin'd by 13 Doctors of the Faculty of Paris, whereof four were Biſhops, and the other for the moſt part Profeſſors of Divinity, were condemn'd to the Fire by a Decree of the Council of State, made upon the Advice of theſe 13 Cenſors; the Words whereof here follow: “We whoſe Names are under written, being deputed by the King's Order, to give our Judgment of a Book entitled, The Provincial Letters of Lewis de Montalte, &c. having diligently examin'd the ſame, do certify, that the Hereſies of Janſenius, condemn'd by the Church, are therein maintain'd and defended, not only in the Letters but alſo in the Notes of William Wendrock, and in the Diſquiſitions of Paul Irenæus, which are joined with them. . . . . Moreover we teſtify, that Calumny and Inſolence are ſo natural to theſe three Authors, that . . . . and that this Book therefore deſerves the Penalties which the Laws decree againſt defamatory and heretical Libels. Done at Paris, September 7th 1660. Now let any one judge whether the Cenſurer of the Miniſter be excuſable, who denied a thing built on ſuch Facts.

(L) That he repented of his having been a Janſeniſt, but this is found to be falſe.] Here follows a Paſſage taken out of a Letter of Father Bouhours, written to a Lord of the Court in 1668. “(h) Is there any body that does not know, that Mr. Paſcal is the Author of the Provincial Letters, and that he was engag'd in the Party when he wrote them? If any doubt of a Truth ſo manifeſt as this, it will be eaſie to convince him of it by the Teſtimony of Mr. Paſcal himſelf, whom we know from good Hands (1) to have abjur'd Janſeniſm at his Death. The Janſeniſts maintain'd it to be falſe, that Mr. Paſcal had made this Abjuration. Read the following Words of the Anſwer which they made to the Apology of the Archbiſhop of Ambrun: They refer to a Writing, wherein this Fact was refuted by convincing Proofs. “(i) Neither is it neceſſary to deſtroy particularly all that has been refuted elſewhere, by Treatiſes written on purpoſe, as that which he imputes to Mr. Paſcal upon a pretended Atteſtation of the Rector of St. Stephen's Pariſh, that he had abjur'd Janſeniſm, the Falſity whereof appear'd by convincing Proofs, which are the Subject of a Letter printed after the Refutation of the Book of F. Anat about the Mandate of the Biſhop of Alet. F. Bonhours having inſerted his Letter in a Collection of Tracts, which he publiſh'd at Paris in 1684, cut out that Part which concerns the Abjuration, which ſhews that he acknowledg'd it was falſe. Neverthеleſs he did aſſert this Fact very poſitively in the firſt Edition, and referred the Reader to an Authentick Proof. Who would not have believed it?

THE JESUITE, Cornelius Hazart, in the Anſwer to the Caſe of the Relations of Janſenius, affirms, (a) That the Provincial Letters were retracted and deteſted by the Author of them, when he was to give an Account to his Saviour. To whom this Reply was made. “Here is another Falſhood no leſs groſs, viz. That Mr. Paſcal retracted and deteſted the Provincial Letters before he died. It concerns the Jeſuits, who have affirm'd it in their Theſes, and ſpread it in the World, to make Proof of it. It is now above 20 Years ſince it was made appear in a printed Piece, which yet remains without an Anſwer, that what Mr. Paſcal ſaid to his Confeſſor in his laſt Sickneſs, of a little Difference between him and his Friends, was miſunderſtood by the Confeſſor, as he declar'd afterwards; but it is certain, that this did no ways concern the Provincial Letters. Theſe Words are Mr. Arnauld's, and there is reaſon to believe that they are very true, ſince a Writer, a Friend of the Jeſuits, has obſerv'd, (b) that Mr. Paſcal, who had chang'd his Opinion as to the principal Matters in his Provincial Letters, and who could not doubt but he was oblig'd to retract thoſe things publickly, might

† See the Remark L towards the End.

(d) Jurieu, Prejugez, tom. 1. pag. 387.

(e) Critique des Prejugez de Mr. Jurieu, p. 304.

(f) Anſwer to the Provincial Letters, p. 517, 518. of the Liege Edition, 1658.

(g) Hiſt. of the 5 Propoſitions. liv. 3. pag. 175, 176.

(h) A Letter to a Lord at Court. pag. 21, 22. Paris Edit. 1668. in 4°.

(1) This is atteſted by a Writing ſigned with the hand of the Rector of St. Stephen du Mont who aſſiſted Mr. Paſcal at his death. This Writing is in the Hands of the Archbiſhop of Paris.

(i) Pieces about the New Teſtament of Mons. tom. 1. p. 498. of the Cologne Edit. 1669. in 8vo.

(a) See the 8th Volume of Practical Morality. p. 465.

(b) The Abbot du Mas, Hiſt. of the 5 Propoſitions. p. 202.

cannot be deny'd, that there was ſome (LΔ) Miſunderſtanding between him and the Gentlemen of Port-Royal. I had almoſt forgot to tell you, that it was from him that the Janſeniſts (M) learn'd to denote themſelves by on.

PASOR

to diſabuſe thoſe whom his Letters had engag'd, or might engage for the future in his former Opinion. . . . (c) never thought it his Duty to inform the Publick of it, not even at his Death, though he had full time and opportunity to do it.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 203.

(LΔ) There was ſome Miſunderſtanding between him and the Gentlemen of Port-Royal.] It appears by the Hiſtory of the 5 Propoſitions, that this Difference turn'd upon theſe two Points, viz. The Signature of the Formulary, and the Variations whereof he accus'd the Janſeniſts.

I. He had ſaid in the 17 and 18 of his Letters, that there was (d) no Diſpute about the Doctrine but only about the Fact; and that he thought himſelf oblig'd to acquieſce in the Deciſion of the Pope, with reſpect to the Doctrine. " (e) But ſome time after he " went over to the oppoſite Extream, which was to " believe that the Senſe of Janſenius, which he did " not diſtinguiſh from the Senſe of Grace efficacious " by it ſelf, had been effectually condemn'd by the " Conſtitutions of the Popes; that it was nevertheleſs " a Matter of Faith, which it was not lawful to aban- " don; and that therefore the Popes in condemning " it were miſtaken, not as to the Fact, but as to the " Doctrine it ſelf. From whence Mr. Paſcal conclu- " ded that it was impoſſible on that Occaſion to ſe- " parate the Fact from the Doctrine, that the Sig- " nature of the Patrons of Janſenius was deceitful, " unleſs they proteſted expreſly, that they would not " condemn that Senſe; and laſtly, that they could " not in Conſcience do otherwiſe. This is what we " learn partly from a piece of Mr. Paſcal, and partly " from the Anſwers which the Divines of Port-Royal " wrote againſt it. He wrote that piece upon the " Occaſion of the Signature of the Formulary of the " (†) Aſſembly by the Nuns of Port-Royal. In Signing " of it they had ſaid, We embrace ſincerely, and with " all our Heart, all the Deciſions made by his Holineſs " (Alexander the VII.) and Pope Innocent the X, " concerning the Faith, and reject all the Errors, which " they have adjudged contrary to them: But they did " not add expreſly, that they excepted the Senſe " of Janſenius; they thought they had ſuffici- " ently excepted it, becauſe they excus'd themſelves " in their Signature from teſtifying any thing elſe " but the Purity of their Faith; whereby they tacit- " ly intimated, that they would ſay nothing con- " cerning the Fact of Janſenius. Nevertheleſs Mr. " Paſcal begun not only to blame that Signature freely, " but he alſo wrote a Piece wherein he pretended to " prove that it was not ſincere. Theſe are the Words " of the Divines of Port-Royal, in the (1) Letter of an " Eccleſiaſtick to one of his Friends, upon the Subject of " the Declaration of the Curate of St. Stephen, &c. " This Letter which is dated July 15th 1666, is " at the end of a piece of the Port-Royal, entituled, " A Refutation of the Book of F. Annat, containing Re- " flections upon the Mandate of the Biſhop of Alet, &c. " And in another Piece written the next Year, inti- " tuled, A Defence of the Faith of the Nuns of P. R. " part 2*d*, they repeat more diſtinctly what they " had ſaid in the Letter.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 195.

(e) Ibid. pag. 196. See the thing otherwiſe turn'd in the Hiſt. of Janſeniſm tome 2. p. 515. ad ann. 1661.

(†) i. e. of the Aſſembly of the Clergy of France.

(1) p. 80.

II. (f) He had no leſs chang'd his Thoughts concerning the Fact of the Janſeniſts, than concerning that of Janſenius. For whereas in writing the Provincial Letters, he affirm'd ſpeaking of them, that their Doctrine about Grace was never chang'd, and that they never had any different from that of the School of St. Thomas; he afterwards publickly accuſed them of uſing a Language different from what they had us'd before. Thus they themſelves relate the Matter in their Letter of an Eccleſiaſtick to one of his Friends, &c.(2) " Nay, he " believ'd that it was not only upon Occaſion of the " Signature of the Nuns of Port-Royal, that they had " appear'd inſincere; but that the ſame Fault might " be found in divers Pieces, which were written after " that Affair which has ſo long troubled the Peace of " the Church; that in their Writings they regarded " only what might ſerve the preſent Intereſt, and that " becauſe it changed at ſeveral times, their Writings " did not appear altogether conſiſtent one with " another; and therefore he thought that it had been " convenient to review them all, and to reduce them " to a perfect Agreement of Expreſſions. To excite " the more powerfully the Gentlemen of Port-Royal " to do this, he wrote another Piece, wherein he " pretended to ſhow the Advantage they gave their " Enemies by this Diverſity, and that they might " be convinc'd of having ſpoken more warily " ſince the Bulls than before. The Anſwer of the Janſeniſts was, that Mr. Paſcal was miſtaken, when he fancied a Contrariety between their Works before and after the Bulls, becauſe there was not really any. And to point out the cauſe of his Error, they affirm that he himſelf did not conſult the Proofs of what he aſſerted, but look'd only into the Memoires which ſome of his Friends furniſh'd him with, who did not examin exactly enough the Paſſages (4) of which they compos'd them. From whence it happen'd, add they, that he could not avoid falling into a great Number of Miſtakes, and that there are in his Piece ſome Hiſtories altogether fabulous, which ſerve (5) for a Foundation to thoſe pretended Contrarieties he imputed to them, and ſome Dialogues wherein People are made to ſay on both Sides ſuch things as were never ſpoken of. That is to ſay, according to the Confeſſion of the Janſeniſts, Mr. Paſcal did then againſt them the ſame thing, which he had done in their Favour in the Provincial Letters, if we may believe their Adverſaries and his.

(f) Hiſt. of the 5. Propoſitions, pag. 203.

(2) p. 81.

All this in the Hiſtory of the 5 Propoſitions is accompany'd with many Remarks, which perhaps would puzzle an Apologiſt for Mr. Paſcal.

(4) p. 81.

(5) p. 82.

(M) The Janſeniſts learn'd to denote themſelves by on.] (g) He pretended, that an honeſt Man ought to ſhun the naming of himſelf, and even to make uſe of the Words I and me, and he was wont to ſay upon this Occaſion, that Chriſtian Piety annihilates the human me, and that human Civility conceals and ſuppreſſes it. 'Tis not, adds the Author (h) of the Art of Thinking, that this Rule ſhould be improv'd to a Scruple, for there are ſome Occaſions wherein a Man would needleſly torment himſelf, if he would ſhun theſe Words; but 'tis always good to have it in view, to keep ones ſelf from the ill Cuſtom of ſome Perſons, who ſpeak only of themſelves, and are always quoting themſelves, when the Queſtion is not about their Opinion. From whence probably it came that the Janſeniſts of France did ſo much affect to make uſe of the Particle on. One of their Adverſaries pretended to know by that Mark, that the Book of an Anonymous Writer (i) which he refuted, was to be attributed to them. Thus he diſcourſes after he has given a ſtrong Proof of the Affection of that Anonymous Author for the Gentlemen of Port-Royal. " (k) But if this be not ſuffici- " ent, and if one would have a plainer Proof, all " the World knows their on; it is the Manner " wherein they cite one another, no Body made " uſe of it before them, and there is ſcarce any " but they who make uſe of it. He does not on- " ly never cite them otherwiſe, comme on a dit dans " la Grammaire (5) raiſonnée; comme on l'a remarque " dans l'Art de penſer; on a Parlé de cela dans la Gram- " maire generale: but he ſpeaks of himſelf, only under " this Term, in his Preface, en revoyant cet Ouvrage " on s'eſt cru obligé; on a cru qu'il eſtoit plus à propos. " I have heard an excellent Man ſay, that this " way of ſpeaking of ones ſelf by this Term on, (4) was " a kind of plural Equivalent to nous, which Kings " and other Potentates make uſe of. Our Critick " does in ſome ſort own it, by ſaying that inſtead " of on they formerly wrote hons (1), which is as " much as to ſay Hommes, ſo that, adds he, on dit, " is the ſame thing with Hommes or les Hommes di- " ſent. Yet this illuſtrious Perſon did not believe, " that theſe Gentlemen, us'd this way of Speaking " out of Vanity, but only out of Sincerity, to de- " note that they did nothing wherein many did not " bear a part, and that therefore they could not put " to their Books one particular Name of an Author, " without acting againſt Truth, ſince there is none " of them that is the Work of one Author only. " And if they ſhould name all thoſe that had a hand " in them, this would be liable to other Inconve- " niencies; both which are equally avoided by this " Myſterious on; I ſhould never have believ'd, if " this able Man had not ſaid ſo, that it includes " ſo many Things. See in the Margin (z). Mr. Paſcal ſaid of theſe Authors, who ſpeaking of their own Works, ſay, my Book, my Commentary, my Hiſtory, &c. that they are like thoſe Citizens, who having a Houſe of their own, have always in their Mouths my Houſe: they had better ſay, added that excellent Gentleman, our Book, our Commentary, our Hiſtory, &c. ſince commonly theſe is more in it that is another's, than is their own.

(g) The Art of Thinking, 1ſt part ch. 10. n. 6. p. m. 450. See alſo the Thoughts of Mr. Paſcal, c. 29. n. 27.

(h) Ibid.

(i) It is intituled, Reflections upon the preſent uſage of the French Tongue, or new and critical Remarks upon the politeneſs of the French Language: At Paris, 1689. in 12.

(k) The Abbot de St. Real's Diſcours de la Critique. c. 10. pag. 223. of the Lyons Edition, 1691.

[5] Pag. 255. 313. 523.

[4] See Mr. St. Evremont's Miſcellanies. tom. 4. p. m. 135. where he ſcoffs at the Abuſe of on.

[1] Pag. 334.

[z] The 2 Tomes of the Miſcellanies of Vigneul Marville, contains this at p. 200, of the Rotterdam Edition. 1701.

PASOR (Matthias) Profeſſor of Divinity at Groningen, born at Herborn in the County of Naſſaw April the 12th 1599, was the Son of George Paſor, who after he had taught Divinity and the Hebrew Tongue for the Space of Nineteen Years at Herborn, was call'd to Franeker in 1626, to be there Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue, and died there the 10th of December, 1637. Our Matthias had already made a good Progreſs at Herborn, when the Peſtilence occaſion'd him to be ſent to Marpurg in 1614. He ſpent his time there very uneaſily; the Profeſſors ſhunn'd him as a peſtiferous Wretch, and ſome * Scholars inſulted him a hundred times, and beat him, to revenge what his Father, being Rector at Herborn, had done in making them pay a Fine, when they committed ſome Diſorders. He was forc'd at laſt to leave the City, and return'd the next Year to Herborn, where he applyed himſelf very much to Study. He went to Heidelberg in 1616, and meeting there with all ſorts of good Profeſſors, he improv'd himſelf exceedingly by them. He found alſo the Means of leſſening the Expence of his Family, for he taught in a Chamber the Mathematicks and Hebrew, and was receiv'd as Tutor in the Houſe of an honeſt Man of Heidelberg. He made himſelf ſo well known by many Academick Acts, that he hop'd to obtain a Profeſſor's Place which happen'd to be vacant; he hop'd ſo, I ſay, altho one of his Antagoniſts had many more Friends than he. By an extraordinary good Fortune, his Hope did not deceive him, and he was declar'd Profeſſor of the Mathematicks, April 23. 1620; but he was forc'd a little after to fly becauſe of the Invaſion of the Palatinate. The Storm being a little over, he went to continue his Function at Heidelberg, and endur'd in that unhappy City, all the Inconveniences and Dangers that could be imagin'd; and did not go out of it, till the Troops of Tilly had ſack'd it in the Year 1622. After this he went to Herborn through a Thouſand Difficulties, and reſolv'd in the Year 1624 to make a Journey into England. He made private Lectures at Oxford, as well upon the Hebrew as the Mathematicks, and went into France with ſome Germans. He paſs'd the Winter in Paris, and heard among other Lectures, thoſe of Gabriel (A) Sionita, Profeſſor in Chaldee and Arabick. Being return'd into England in the Summer time of the Year, 1625, he found the Univerſity of Oxford ſtrangely diſpers'd, by reaſon of the Peſtilence. After the Plague ceas'd, he found ſome Scholars to be inſtructed either in Divinity or the Oriental Languages; and he choſe rather to ſtay there, than to go into Ireland with the learned Uſher, who offer'd him his Table and an honourable Penſion. The Requeſt that he preſented to be made Profeſſor of the Oriental Tongues was favourably heard. So that he commenc'd Profeſſor of them, October 25. 1626, and diſcharg'd that Office until the Year 1629, when he was call'd to Groningen to be Profeſſor of Philoſophy, which Office he enter'd upon Auguſt 27 of the ſame Year. Six Years after he was made Profeſſor of the Mathematicks, and in 1645, of Divinity, which was the Cauſe that he did not go to Harderwick, where he was offer'd the Place of Profeſſor in ordinary of Divinity and Hebrew. He receiv'd the Degree of Doctor of Divinity at Groningen, October 21ſt 1645, and abdicated the Profeſſorſhip of the Mathematicks, but kept that of Moral Philoſophy. He made a Journey into his own Country of Naſſaw in the Year 1653, and went as far as Heidelberg, where he received a thouſand Civilities from the Elector Palatine †. He liv'd to the 28th of January 1658. He was never (B) married, and he lived very honeſtly in his Celibacy ‡. He publiſh'd not (C) many Books;

* Studioſi nonnulli memores mulctæ ſibi ob petulantiam Herbornæ à patre Rectore irrogatæ, me innocentem & minime ferocem ſed meticuloſum depoſitionis in Academiis Germanicis receptæ occaſione, verberibus & contumeliis variis affecerunt. Matthias Paſor in vita ſua p. m. 22.

† Taken from the Journal of his Life written by himſelf and Printed at Groningen in 1658. in 4.

‡ Ex orat. funebri.

(A) Thoſe of Gabriel Sionita.] This Profeſſor had for ſome Years left off his Lectures, becauſe no Body came to hear them; and he return'd them at the Deſire of our Paſor, but he did not read them in the Royal College, but in his own Houſe (b). 'Tis a ſtrange thing, that a great Kingdom, and ſuch a City as Paris, ſhould not furniſh three Auditors to a Profeſſor ſo famous in foreign Countries, that Bangius, (c) a learned Dane would not accept the Place of Hebrew Profeſſor at Copenhagen, unleſs time were granted him to go and perfect himſelf at Paris under this Man. And here is a Profeſſor at Heidelberg, who deſires to be a Diſciple of the ſame Man, while there were not two Scholars at Paris that car'd to hear him. Such is the Temper of Men, that they go a great way off to ſeek after the ſame Things, which they would neglect, if they were at their own Door.

(B) He was never married.] 'Tis expreſly obſerv'd (d) in his funeral Oration, that he liv'd not a Batchelor by reaſon of any particular Vow, or from any Averſion to a well-choſen Marriage; for on the contrary he was an Apologiſt for it, and wou'd praiſe it, although he was very ſorry, that a Condition ſo uſeful and neceſſary, which was inſtituted in the very State of Innocency, ſhould become liable by reaſon of Sin, to ſo many Difficulties. The true Reaſon therefore why he did not marry was this, that in his younger Years he wanted to be free from domeſtick Cares, after which follow'd a State of Perſecution and Baniſhment, and then he found his Health empair'd; beſides that he had conceiv'd great Hopes of George Paſor his Brother's Son.

(C) He publiſh'd not many Books.] He carefully reviſ'd two or three of his Father's Books, which are of wonderful uſe to Scholars and Students in Divinity; I mean Lexicon novi Teſtamenti, Manuale Novi Teſtamenti, and the Greek Grammar of the New Teſtament. His Father wrote ſome other Books, as the Funeral Oration of Piſcator, the Analyſis of the difficult Words in Heſiod, Collegium Heſiodeum, &c. As to Matthias Paſor, I do not think that any thing of his was publiſh'd but Theſes, or general Idea's of ſome Sciences. It was very ill done to publiſh the Journal he had written of his Life, which ſhould have been ſuppreſs'd, or at leaſt many little Trifles ſhould have been ſtruck out; for to inſtance in a few things, what neceſſity was there that the Publick ſhould know, that the Tavern where the Profeſſors of Heydelberg in a Body treated Matthias Paſor, had (e) two Swords for its Sign? What neceſſity was there, to make it publickly known, (f) that at Hanaw, in the beginning of a great Feaſt, he was forc'd to leave the Table becauſe he found himſelf indiſpos'd, and wanted to throw up a little Bile. But I do not wonder that they publiſh ſuch Journal, when in the Funeral Orations upon Profeſſors, we commonly meet with an exact Deſcription of all the Symptoms of their laſt Sickneſs; that on ſuch a Day they did ſweat, on another they were conſtipate, troubled with a Looſneſs, &c.

(b) Ex vita Matthiæ Paſoris. pag. 41.

(c) See the Article of him.

(d) Abdias Widmarius Miniſter of the holy Goſpel, and Profeſſor of Divinity at Groningen, is the Author of that Funeral Oration.

[e] Partim univerſi in prandio honorario lauto, inſtituto ad ſignum enſium. pag. 54.

[f] In prandio lauto nihil ventriculo arridebat, imo ſub initium menſæ ſurgere coactus ſum & bilem evomui. Ib. pag. 55.

(D) The

Books; the two Reaſons he gives for it (D) are admirable, and deſerve to ſerve for a Rule to many People, without excepting my ſelf.

PATERCULUS (*Caius Velleius) a Latin Hiſtorian, under the Empire of Tiberius. 'Tis very probable he was born in the † Year of Rome 735. His (A) Anceſtors were Illuſtrious for their Merit and their Offices. He was ‖ a Tribune of the Soldiers when Caius Cæſar, a Grandſon of Auguſtus, had an Interview with the King of the Parthians in an Iſle of Euphrates, in the Year 753. He Commanded the Cavalry in Germany, under Tiberius §, and accompanied that Prince nine Years ſucceſſively, in all his Expeditions. He receiv'd ‡ honourable Rewards from him. He was preferr'd to the (B) Prætorſhip, but not to higher Dignities. The Praiſes he (C) beſtows upon Sejanus give ſome probability to the Conjecture ¶, that he was look'd upon as a Friend of this Favourite, and conſequently that he was involv'd in his

(D) The two Reaſons he gives for it are admirable.] The firſt is, That he would not be the cauſe of taking off Youth from reading the good Books we have already. The ſecond is, That he would not expoſe the Bookſellers to the hazard of loſing their Money, who are often at great Expences in Printing Books, which either ſell but ſlowly, or elſe for ever remain at the bottom of their Warehouſes. Noluit, ſays he, (a) nimis multa ſcribere, 1. ne juventutem abſtraherem à lectione graviorum Authorum quos per Dei gratiam habemus. 2. Ne miſeris typographis imponeretur, qui ſæpe magnos ſumptus impendunt libris, nunquam vel tardè admodum diſtrahendis.

(A) His Anceſtors were illuſtrious.] See what he ſays of 'em, ſpeaking of the Confederate War: (b) Neque ego verecundia domeſtici ſanguinis gloriæ quidquam, dum verum refero, ſubtraham, quippe multum Minatii Magii, atavi mei, Aſculanenſis, tribuendum eſt memoriæ: qui nepos Decii Magii, Campanorum principis, celeberrimi & fideliſſimi viri, tantam hoc bello Romanis fidem præſtitit, ut cum legione, quam ipſe in Hirpinis conſcripſerat, Herculaneum ſimul cum T. Didio caperet, Pompeios cum L. Sulla oppugnaret, Coſamque occuparet, cujus de virtutibus cum alii, tum maxime dilucideque Q. Hortenſius in Annalibus ſuis retulit: cujus pietati plenam populus R. gratiam retulit; ipſum viritim civitate donando, duos filios ejus creando prætores, cum ſeni adhuc crearentur. Here is ſomething very ſingular concerning the degrees of Generation: Paterculus, born in the Year of Rome 735, reckons for his Great Grandfather's Grandfather Minatius Magius, who, at the Head of a Legion, which he had raiſ'd, beſieg'd and took ſome Cities, about the Year 664, and who was Grandſon to Decius Magius, whoſe Fidelity to the Romans was ſo famous at Capua, in the Year 538. On one ſide here are five Generations in the ſpace of 71 Years, and on the other there are but two in the ſpace of 126 Years. There ſeems to me to be more difficulty in the five Generations than in the two; and perhaps we muſt conjecture, that atavus was inſerted by the Tranſcribers inſtead of avus; or, that atavus was not regularly taken, upon all occaſions, for the Great Grandfather's Grandfather. Mr. Dodwell underſtood the Great Grandfather by (c) atavus. If the conjecture of which I have ſpoken were true, we muſt ſay, that Paterculus was not deſcended from Decius Magius but by the Mother's ſide, for there is no doubt but Caius Valerius mention'd in Chap. 76. of the ſecond Book, was his Grandfather by the Father's ſide, and different from Minatius Magius. I ſhall ſet down this Paſſage, that I may ſhew all that is to be known of his Anceſtors. (d) Quod alieno teſtimonium redderem, in eo non fraudabo avum meum, quippe C. Velleius, honoratiſſimo inter illos 350 Judices loco, a Cn. Pompeio lectus, ejuſdem, Marcique Bruti ac Tironis præfectus fabrûm, vir nulli ſecundus, in Campania, digreſſu Neronis à Neapoli, cujus ob ſingularem cum eo amicitiam partium adjutor fuerat, gravis jam ætate & corpore, cum comes eſſe non poſſet, gladio ſe ipſe transfixit. Here a ſcruple ariſes. Paterculus had a Brother who was call'd Magius Celer; 'tis therefore very probable, that by the Father's ſide they deſcended from Decius Magius. The Editions give the ſurname of Velleianus to this Magius Celer; but 'tis pretended, that this Epithet (e) is only the Invention of the Criticks, and that it is not found in the Manuſcript Copy. Mr. Dodwell obſerves, (f) that if it were true that Magius Celer had the Surname of Velleianus, this would be a plain Proof that by Adoption it paſs'd from the Family Velleia into that of the Magius's. In this caſe it might be ſaid, that he had been adopted by a Kinſman on the Mother's ſide, deſcended from Decius Magius, from Father to Son. The Learned Man, whom I juſt now cited, would not admit this Hypotheſis, for he pretends that our Paterculus (g) belong'd, on the Father's ſide, to the Family Magia, and that he bore the Name of Velleius, only by virtue of ſome Adoption. But note, that his Grandfather was call'd Velleius. This Hiſtorian had an Uncle on the Father's ſide (h) who was call'd Capito, and was a Senator, and who join'd with Agrippa in accuſing Caſſius, the Murderer of Cæſar. Let us now ſpeak of his Brother, (i) Cæſar ad alteram Belli Dalmatici molem animum atque arma contulit, in qua regione quali adjutore legatoque fratre meo, Magio Celere Velleiano, uſus ſit, ipſius patriſque ejus prædicatione teſtatum eſt, & ampliſſimorum honorum, quibus triumphans eum Cæſar donavit, ſignat memoria. He was Prætor, as may be ſeen in the beginning of the next Remark. I ſhall ſay ſomething hereafter (k) of their Father.

(B) He was preferr'd to the Prætorſhip.] This was in the Year wherein Auguſtus died: He informs us of this himſelf, and with ſuch a turn of Expreſſion as ſhows the ſubtilty of his Wit. (l) Quo tempore mihi fratrique meo, candidatis Cæſaris, proxime à nobiliſſimis ac ſacerdotibus viris, deſtinari prætoribus contigit: conſecutis, ut neque poſt nos quemquam D. Auguſtus, neque ante nos Cæſar commendaret Tiberius. We will here ſet down ſome other Paſſages, which declare the progreſs of his Fortune: Habuit in hoc quoque bello, ſays he, (m) ſpeaking of the War againſt the Dalmatians and Pannonians in the Year 759. mediocritas noſtra ſpecioſi miniſtri locum. Finita equeſtri militia, deſignatus quæſtor, nec dum ſenator æquatus ſenatoribus, etiam deſignatus tribunus plebis partem exercitus ab Urbe, traditi ab Auguſto, perduxi ad filium ejus: in quæſtura deinde, remiſſa ſorte provincia, legatus ejuſdem ad eundem miſſus. He ſays elſewhere, (n) Hoc tempus me functum ante tribunatu caſtrorum, Ti. Cæſaris militem fecit: quippe protinus ab adoptione miſſus cum eo præfectus equitum in Germaniam, ſucceſſor officii patris mei, cæleſtiſſimorum ejus operum per annos continuos IX. præfectus aut legatus, ſpectator & pro captu mediocritatis meæ adjutor fui. I have already ſaid, (o), that he appear'd at the Triumph of Tiberius with ſplendid Marks of Honour. Hankius (p) places this Triumph in the Year of Rome 744, he anticipates it twenty Years or more, and he was ignorant that Paterculus made his firſt Campagne in the Year 753. How then could he appear at a Triumph in 744, with Marks of Honour, which he deſerved but by his conſtant Attendance in the Service of Tiberius, (q) after his firſt Feats of Arms.

(C) The Praiſes he beſtows upon Sejanus.] See Chap. 127 and 128 of his ſecond Book: I ſhall extract but one thing out of it: He ſhows, by great Examples, that a Prince may ſhare the Cares of the Goverment with a Miniſter. (r) Raro eminentes viri non magnis adjutoribus ad gubernandam fortunam ſuam uſi ſunt; ut duo Scipiones duobus Læliis, quos per omnia æquaverunt ſibi; ut D. Auguſtus M. Agrippa, & maxime ab eo, Statilio Tauro: quibus novitas familiæ haud obſtitit, quo minus ad multiplices conſulatus triumphoſque, & complura eniterentur ſacerdotia; etenim magna negotia magnis adjutoribus egent. This Paſſage, and ſome others ſuch like, afforded a fine pretence to the Panegyriſts of Cardinal de Richelieu and Cardinal Mazarin. They ſung to another Tune, and had different Maxims after the Death of the latter, as I have elſewhere (ſ) obſerv'd. Here we ſhall ſet down a Thought of la Mothe le Vayer. "He is "blam'd, ſays he (t), and that with great Reaſon... "for having given ridiculous Elogiums, not only to his Ruine. He wrote an Abridgement of (D) the Roman Hiſtory, which is very curious, and he promiſed a * larger Hiſtory. The Elogiums he beſtows upon the Emperor Tiberius are exceſſive, and he underſtood ſo well the Art of Flattering this Emperor, that 'tis thought he did not forget to ſpeak evil of (E) Germanicus. 'Tis not true, that an Annaliſt of Rome was nam'd (F) Cneius Velleius, as Glandorpius imagines. I ſhall mark ſome Faults (G) of Mr. Moreri.

---

* Others call him Publius or Marcus.

† See the Annales Velleiani, of Mr. Dodwell, prefix'd to the Oxford Edition of Paterculus in 1693, in 8vo.

‖ Velleius Paterculus l. 2. c. 101.

§ See the Remark B.

‡ See the ſame Rem.

¶ Dodwell ubi ſupra n. 30.

(a) Ubi ſupra, p. 58.

(b) Paterc. l. 2. c. 16.

(c) Avos ſimiliter Velleii fuiſſe neceſſe erat Minatii Magii filios ſiquidem atavus ipſe fuerat Minatius. Dodwellus ann. Velleian. n. 7.

(d) Vell. Paterculus l. 2. c. 76.

(e) Dodwel ubi ſupra.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Eoque adeo gentile auctoris noſtri nomen Magius, Velleius adſcititium ex adoptione in familiam Velleiam. Id. ib.

(h) Quo tempore Capito patruus meus vir ordinis Senatorii Agrippæ ſubſcripſit in C. Caſſium. Vell. Patercul. lib. 2. c. 69.

(i) Id. ib. c. 115. Add to this what he ſays c. 121. quem (Tiberium in triumpho) mihi fratrique meo, inter præcipuos præcipuiſque donis adornatos viros, comitari contigit.

(k) In the laſt Remark. n. 3.

(l) Id. ib. c. 124.

(m) Id. ib. c. 111.

(n) Id. ib. c. 104. this relates to the Year 757 of Rome.

(o) In the Remark A. letter i.

(p) Hankius de ſcriptoribus rerum Romanarum, tom. 1. p. 70.

(q) See Paterculus l. 2. c. 101, 104, 121.

(r) Id ib. 127.

(ſ) See the new Letter of the General Anſwer to Maimbourg, pag. 81, &c

(t) La Mothe le Vayer ubi infra, pag. 194.

PATIN

“ Tiberius, but alſo to his Favourite Sejanus, whoſe Merit he twice declares, as of one of the principal and moſt vertuous Perſons in the Roman Republick. What did he do in this, but what commonly happens to all thoſe who will take Pen in Hand to write the Hiſtory of their own Time, and will publiſh it while the Perſons are yet alive? This Reflection is right; for it is ſcarce poſſible to be ſincere, when we ſpeak of Princes that are living, or of thoſe whoſe Sons do ſtill reign.

(D) He wrote an Abridgment of the Roman Hiſtory, which is very curious.] The beginning of it is loſt, which was a general Idea of Ancient Times. La Mothe le Vayer was not miſtaken in what I ſhall now ſubjoin: (a) “The remembrance of the Countries he had ſeen, while he was Military Tribune, and travelling thro' the Provinces of Thrace, Macedonia, Achaia, Aſia the leſs, and other more Eaſtern Countries; and eſpecially on both ſides of the Pontus Euxinus, furniſh'd him with very agreeable Diverſions. From hence we may judge, that if he had written that entire and large Hiſtory he promis'd ſo often, we ſhould have read an infinite number of very conſiderable things, as related by him who had been an Eye-witneſs of them, and had a hand in performing them. In that little which ſtill remains of this, wherein there is nothing repreſented but by way of Abridgment, there are many particulars obſerv'd, which are ſo much the more valuable, becauſe it is the only place where they are to be learn'd, either thro' the ſilence of other Hiſtorians, or thro' the common misfortune of loſing ſome part of their Works. The Stile of Velleius Paterculus is very worthy of the Age he wrote in. He is excellent chiefly when he Blames or Commends thoſe he ſpeaks of, which he does in ſuch fine Terms, and ſuch delicate Expreſſions, as are not to be found in any other Hiiſtorian or Orator. . . . We have nothing more pure in any Latin Author, nor more worthy of Tiberius or Auguſtus's Times.” (b) Is it not ſtrange, that a Work ſo worthy to be carefully preſerv'd, and of which many Copies might be eaſily made, by reaſon of its brevity, ſhould be like to be loſt? 'Tis pretended that the Manuſcript of Morbac, from which Rhenanus publiſh'd the firſt Edition (c) of this Author, was the only (d) one that was in the World. Beſides, 'tis obſerv'd (e) that no ancient Author but Priſcian, makes mention of Paterculus. The Moderns have done him infinitely more juſtice; for they have publiſh'd him with Notes or Commentaries. The French have tranſlated him into their Language, which Mr. Doujat took the pains to do for the uſe of the Dauphin in 1679; and to make his Work a continu'd Hiſtory, he ſupply'd what was wanting in Paterculus. I ſay nothing in particular of the Edition of Lipſius at Leyden, in 1591; nor of that of Schegkius at Franckfort, 1602, in 12; nor of that of Gerard Voſſius at Leyden, in 1639, in 12; nor of that of Boeclerus at Strasburg, 1642, in 8vo; nor of many others. I ſhall only add, that the Annales Velleiani of Mr. Dodwell, prefix'd to the Oxford Edition 1693, are a piece of Learning which diſcovers a very great Skill in Antiquity.

Note, That Paterculus wrote this Book in the (f) 782 Year of Rome, in the ſixteenth Year of the (g) Empire of Tiberius.

(E) He did not forget to ſpeak evil of Germanicus.] A Learned Critick does by no means agree to this; for he maintains that this Paſſage, (h) Quo quidem tempore ut pleraque ignave Germanicus, is not correct, and that inſtead of ignave we ſhould read gnave. He founds his Opinion (i) upon ſuch Reaſons as appear to me ſolid; for, in ſhort, 'tis very true, that Paterculus, in other places, has prais'd Germanicus. However, his unjuſt partiality for the Paſſions of Tiberius, do plainly appear, by the care he takes to paſs over ſlightly the illuſtrious Actions of Germanicus, and even to ſuppreſs the greateſt part of them, and to impeach the Honour of Agrippina, and other Perſons whom the Emperor lov'd not. See how Juſtus Lipſius has cenſur'd him. (l) Ex antiquis bilem etiam mihi movet Velleius Paterculus. Ælium Sejanum omnibus virtutibus accumulat, & quaſi in theatro plena manu dilaudat. O hiſtorici! at nos eum ſcimus natum & extinctum exitio generis humani. Liviam Auguſtam, poſt multas laudes, diis quam hominibus ſimiliorem fœminam concludit. Jam de Tiberio, flagitium ſit ſi uſquam aliter quam ut de Jove immortali loquatur. Hic liber & ingenuus animus qui ferat! Contrà ut Germanici Cæſaris virtutes ubique callidè diſſimulat! Ut Agrippinam, & quibus aliis infenſior Tiberius credebatur, obliquè premit! Quid multa! Non aliquid quam mancipium aulæ agit. Dices, intuta illis temporibus veritas fuit. Fateor. Sed vera ſcribere ſi non licuit, falſa non debuit. Nemo ſilentii cauſam reddit.

(F) Was nam'd Cneius Velleius.] Glandorpius's words are theſe: (m) Cn. Velleius hiſtoricus, cujus Annales citantur apud Gellium, lib. 18. cap. 12. quo tempore in repub. vixerit, non comperi. In this place of Aulus Gellius, of Henry Stephens's Edition, it is Cn. Vellius in Annalibus. Here then is a fault in Glandorpius, that he puts Velleius inſtead of Vellius. And another is this, that he ſhould have read in Aulus Gellius, Gellius and not Vellius; for without doubt he cites the ſame Author here, which he had cited in chap. 12, of the eighth Book; and in chap. 21, of the thirteenth Book, under the Name of Cn. Gellius. Voſſius (n) pretends that Glandorpius conjectur'd, that inſtead of Cn. Velleius, we muſt read Cn. Gellius, in the twelfth Chapter of the eighteenth Book of Aulus Gellius; but the words of Glandorpius, which we have juſt now cited, do plainly ſhow, that this is falſe. If Voſſius had ſaid, that according to the conjecture of Glandorpius, the Annaliſt, Gellius, differs not from Cn. Gellius, againſt whom (o) Cato the Cenſor pleaded, he had been very much in the right; for Glandorpius (p) expreſſes himſelf thus: Fors idem eſt annalium ſcriptor cujus librum 3. citat Gellius 13. capite 21. & (q) 15. There is nothing there that relates to the Paſſage, where the Edition of Henry Stephens places Cn. Vellius.

(G) I ſhall mark ſome Faults of Mr. Moreri.] I. The Moderns, ſays he, differ whether his firſt Name was Caius, Marcus, or Publius. This Phraſe is not good, and may incline one to believe, that Paterculus was firſt known by one of theſe Names, and that afterwards he quitted it to aſſume another. This Cuſtom is very common among the Moderns: One of the French Warriors, of the Seventeenth Century, was known by the Name of the Count de Bouteville, and after that, by that of the Duke of Luxemburg. We ought not to entertain any ſuch thought of our Hiſtorian, either with reſpect to the Name of Caius or Publius, &c. for this kind of Names was always kept. In a word, Mr. Moreri ſhould have ſaid the Prænomen or the Proper-name, and not the firſt Name. II. He ſhould not have affirm'd, that Paterculus was originally of Naples; where is this to be found? Paterculus ſays, that (r) his atavus was of Aſculum; and that the Grandfather of this atavus was chief among the Campaneſe, (ſ) Campanorum Principis. Elſewhere (t) he affirms, that his Grandfather ſaw nothing above himſelf in Campania. Here is nothing particularly about the City of Naples; and I wonder that Mr. Dodwell (u) ſhould ſay that this City was the Native Country of the Grandfather of Paterculus, for this cannot be concluded from this good Old-Man's killing himſelf, becauſe he was not able to accompany Tiberius when he retir'd from Naples. Mr. Doujat (w) is fall'n into theſe two Faults of Mr. Moreri, probably as being his Tranſcriber; from whence we may gather, that the Author of a Dictionary has ſometimes the Honour to be conſulted and tranſcribed by Perſons who know more of the matter than himſelf. So little do Men love to gather together Materials, when they can find heaps of them ready at hand. III. 'Tis very true that Paterculus was Succeſſor to his Father (x) in the Command of the Cavalry;

---

* Paterculus lib. 2. c. 48. 103. & paſſim alibi.

(a) La Mothe le Vayer in the Treatiſe of Hiſtorians, p. 193, 194. of the 3*d Tome of the Edition in* 12. What he ſays of the Travels of Paterculus is in ch. 101. of the 2 Book.

(b) Id. ib. p. 197.

(c) At Baſil in 1520.

(d) See the Preface of Paterculus printed at Oxford in 1693.

(e) Dodwell ubi ſupra n. 30.

(f) Patercul. l 1. c. 8.

(g) Id. l. 2. c. 125.

(h) Paterculus l. 2. c. 125.

(i) See the Notes of Boeclerus upon this Paſſage of Paterculus

(k) Paterculus, l. 2. c. 115, 129.

(l) Juſtus Lipſius l. 4. epiſtol. quæſt. epiſt. 11. pag. m. 529. tom. 1.

(m) Gland. Onomaſt. p. 847.

(n) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Lat. l. 1. c. 8. p. 34.

(o) Aulus Gellius l. 14. c. 2.

(p) Glandorp. ubi ſupra, pag. 380.

(q) 'Tis not known what Glandorpius meant by this 15; but whether he underſtood it of the Book or the Chapter he is miſtaken

(r) Paterculus l. 2. c. 16.

(ſ) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib. c. 76. See above, the Remark A. Letter b.

(u) Dodw. in Synopſi Chronolog. ad calcem Annal. Velleian.

(w) Doujat Preface to the Tranſlation of Paterculus

(x) Miſſus cum eo (Tiberio) Præfectus equitum in Germaniam ſucceſſor officii patris mei. Patercul. l. 2. c. 104.

PATIN (Guy) Profeſſor of Phyſick, in the Royal College of Paris, was a Man of much Wit and Learning. See his Elogium prefix'd to his Letters, which are ſo well known to all the World, that this will excuſe me from ſpeaking of his Merit. It is enough for me to acquaint you, that you may be inform'd about it in the Preface I have mention'd. It would be too great a nicety, if any one ſhould blame the Author of this Elogium, for not giving us the Hiſtory of Guy Patin. This is the common way of the Writers of Elogiums, they ſeldom trouble themſelves to inform us, whence a Man is, nor how he raiſed himſelf; neither do they ſay any thing of his Actions, but when they have a plain relation to the Vertues for which they commend him. 'Tis therefore neceſſary that I ſhould tell you, that our Patin was born at * Houdan in Bray, three Leagues from Beauvais †, in 1602. He does not boaſt of his being of a good Family, but ſpeaks of it much after the ſame manner (A) as Horace does. Doubtleſs he was one that made his own Fortune, and I know, from a good Hand ||, that he was Corrector to a Preſs. 'Tis not eaſy to decide, whether it would not have been better, that his Letters ſhould have been prepar'd for the Publick (B) by the Author himſelf, than that they ſhould be written in a careleſs manner, for the particular uſe of thoſe to whom they are directed; but howſoever this be decided, I am ſure it will be agreed, that it was very fit they ſhould be printed: Not but that they do much hurt to the City of Paris (C), which they repreſent valry; but this was not before he had been Military Tribune: He had already been (y) a Tribune of the Camp, which was an Office above that of mere Tribune of Soldiers. IV. He had not his Father for a Collegue in any Office. V. Magius Celer Velleianus was his Brother, and not his Father. VI. We find no where that he was Lieutenant-General to Tiberius, in the Armies of Germany and Hungary, but (z) in Dalmatia. VII. And then his Brother, who was (aa) abſent, could not be his Collegue.

(A) He ſpeaks of his Family much after the ſame manner as Horace.] I was the Son of a good ſort of People, ſays he (a), "whom I would not have exchang'd for thoſe that are more Rich. I have "here their Pictures before my Eyes, I call to mind "every Day their Vertue, and am very glad that "I ſaw the Innocence of their Lives, which was "admirable. Such a thing as this is not to be ſeen "in the Cities, and particularly in Paris. I ſee "nothing there but Vanity, Impoſture, and Cheating. God has reſerv'd us for a wicked and dangerous Age. And now let us ſee what Horace ſaid of his Father:

(b) Purus & inſons
(Ut me collaudem) ſi vivo, & charus amicis,
Cauſa fuit pater his, qui macro pauper agello, Noluit in Flavi ludum me mittere magni,
. . . .
Nec timuit, ſibi ne vitio quis verteret, olim
Si præco parvas, aut (ut fuit ipſe) coactor
Mercedes ſequerer: neque ego eſſem queſtus. Ob hoc nunc Laus illi debetur, & à me gratia major.
Nil me pœniteat ſanum patris hujus: eoque
Non, ut magna dolo factum negat eſſe ſuo pars,
Quod non ingenuos habeat claroſque parentes,
Sic me defendam: longè mea diſcrepat iſtis
Et vox & ratio. Nam ſi natura juberet
A certis annis ævum remeare peractum,
Atque alios legere ad faſtum, quoſcunque parentes
Optaret ſibi quiſque: meis contentus, honeſtos
Faſcibus & ſellis nolim mihi ſumere: demens Judicio vulgi.

(B) Whether it would not have been better, that his Letters ſhould have been prepar'd for the Publick.] If he had written them with a deſign to publiſh them, he would have fill'd them with Learning and exact Obſervations upon the Hiſtory of Learned Men, and their Works; for he had a very good Memory, he had read much, and had an excellent Library. He would not have publiſh'd things which were not well examin'd, and as they offer'd themſelves to his Fancy: In a word, we ſhould find fewer Falſhoods in his Work; but then we ſhould not find there his natural Wit and Genius, we ſhould not meet there with ſo many curious Matters of Fact, ſo many lively and bold Strokes which divert us, and put us upon making ſolid Reflections. Some ſelect Letters were firſt publiſh'd at Geneva in 1683, and reprinted quickly after in Holland. The Sale encourag'd a Bookſeller of Geneva to publiſh thoſe which had been left out in the firſt Impreſſion, which he added to the former, and by that means publiſh'd a Collection in three Volumes, in 1691. It was counterfeited in Holland a little while after; but it had been better it had been counterfeited in Germany, becauſe the German Bookſellers have a laudable Cuſtom of adding good Tables to the Books they reprint; and never a Book had more need of them than this. It was not difficult to perceive, that every thing in them is not true. Here follows the Judgment which the Author of the News from the Republick of Learning gave of them: (c) "'Tis fit "the Reader ſhould be advertis'd, that all the witty "Sayings, or all the Stories he relates are not true. "There are ſome places wherein he ſhews a terrible "Malice and a prodigious Boldneſs, in giving a "criminal turn to all things. We ſhould be very "much to blame to believe theſe things, becauſe "they are printed. All that can be gather'd from "them is, That Mr. Patin wrote them to his Friend, "as a thing he had heard from others, and to continue the Cuſtom he had a long time obſerv'd, of "diverting himſelf with him by Letters as he would "have done, if they had taken a Walk together. "'Tis very well known, Men talk as ſoon of a Report "that is current thro' the City, tho' it be not true, "as of any News that is true. And when one is "of a ſatyrical Humour, as it muſt be granted "Mr. Patin was, that which is publiſh'd to the diſadvantage of our Neighbour is much more improv'd, than that which is ſpoken to his Praiſe. Mr. Menage has given the ſame Opinion of them. (d) The Letters of Guy Patin are full of Falſhoods. Mr. Bigot and I have obſerv'd a great number of them. Mr. Patin was not very cautious in what he wrote, and prejudice made him believe a thouſand things which were not true. See the Journal of Leipſick at the Month of May 1684. (e). There are ſome hopes (f) that we ſhall have the Latin Letters of Guy Patin, which will be accompanied with an eloquent and learned Elogium, written by Mr. Theveneau, a Phyſician of Nevers.

(C) The City of Paris, which they repreſent as infected with Corruption.] We ſhould never make an end, if we ſhould collect together all the Complaints he made upon this Subject: Let us therefore confine ourſelves to what he has obſerv'd about the wickedneſs of thoſe unchaſte Women who murder their Infants. (g) "a great noiſe is made here about the Death of Mademoiſelle de Guerche; the "Midwife had been ſecur'd in the Châtelet, and "thence ſhe is remov'd into the publick Jayl by order "of the Court. The Curate of S. Euſtache has refus'd "Burial to the Body of this Lady: 'Tis ſaid it was "carried to the Palace of Condé, and that it was "there put into Quick-Lime, that it might be conſum'd the ſooner, and that nothing of it may be "known, if any ſhould come to ſearch it. The Midwife did well enough defend herſelf hitherto, "but aliæ admovebantur machinæ, aliæ artes adhibebantur ad eruendum verum: I believe ſhe will be "put to the Torture: The Vicars-General and the "Penitentiaries are gone to complain to the firſt "Preſident, that in a Years time ſix hundred Women have confeſs'd, that they had kill'd and "ſtrangl'd their Children, and that they have taken "particular notice of it, upon the Advice that had "been given them. And now I have propos'd this Adventure, I muſt go on to ſhew the Conſequences of it. (h) Here is a Libel ſpread about (i) of eight Pages in Quarto, wherein 'tis prov'd, That the

---

* Patin's Letter 201 p. 551. of To. 4. of the Geneva Edit. 1691.

† According to his Elogium he died 70 Years old, in 1672.

|| Monſieur DRELINCOURT, Profeſſor of Phyſick at Leyden inform'd me of it.

(y) Functum ante tribunatu caſtrorum Id. ib.

(z) Id. ib. c. 115.

(aa) If he had been preſent would he have ſaid only, that his Brother had the advantage of being with Tiberius?

(a) Patin's Letter 293. p. m. 561. of tom. 2.

(b) Horat. Sat. 6. lib. 1. v. 68.

(c) News from the Republick of Learning, April 1684. Art. 1. p. m. 115, 116.

(d) Menag. p. 279. of the firſt Holl. Edit.

(e) Pag. 248, &c.

(f) See the Preface to the Letters of Guy Patin, Edit. 1691.

(g) Patin's Letter 184 dated June 22. 1660. See pag. 113. of tom. 2.

(h) Id. Lett. 185. p. 119. of the ſame Tom.

(i) It was burnt by the Hand of the common Hangman at la Croix du Tiroir, by Order of the Lieutenant Civil, Id. Lett. 190. p. 142, 143.

repreſent as infected with an horrible Corruption, and as fill'd with ſuch Creatures who having done all that was neceſſary to People the Earth, do afterwards all that is

the Crime whereof Dame Conſtantin the Midwife was accus'd a little while ago, is nothing but a conſequence of the Doctrine of the Jeſuits, and alſo to diſabuſe thoſe Ladies, who have been perverted by this Error, under pretence that theſe Fathers teach it in their Books. 'Tis ſaid, that the Midwife defends herſelf very well, ſhe confeſſes that Madam Guerchi died at her Houſe, but that ſhe gave her no Drink, that ſhe came to her very Sick, where ſhe died, making terrible Outcries, that ſhe has heard of a certain Drink that Lady had taken, but that ſhe knew not what it was, nor who gave it her. (k) Dame Conſtantin the Midwife is ſtill in the Châtelet, in Priſon, and to Morrow ſhe is to be Examin'd, N. and le Large have receiv'd a Summons to come there and Anſwer, as to their Facts, and the Depoſition they have given in, an ut ibi Paris cedat pudore carceris, & metu lethalis ſupplicii confeſſa! 'Tis ſaid ſhe defends herſelf very well, and that there is not ſufficient Proof againſt her to condemn her to Death, but ſome Monitions are expected, which ſhortly are to be publiſh'd thro' all the Pariſhes of the City and Suburbs of Paris: Others ſay, that ſhe will be ſav'd, and that ſhe is too much recommended by the greateſt Perſons. Nevertheleſs, 'tis thought that ſhe deſerves Death, and more, and that if ſhe were hang'd, ſhe wou'd not die Innocent. 'Tis ſaid, that her Houſe was a Publick Bawdy-Houſe, and that many Whores went thither, either to be brought to Bed, vel abortum paſſuræ. . . . (l) On Wedneſday the 14th of July Dame Conſtantin, the Midwife, was condemn'd at the Châtelet, to be Hang'd and Strangl'd, after ſhe had been put to the Torture; from whence ſhe has Appeal'd: She has been remov'd to the Conciergerie. 'Tis thought, that the next Week the Sentence will be confirm'd at the Tournelle. . . . (m) The Midwife is ſtill a Priſoner, but 'tis ſaid, that it will be only for the next Week, and that the Attorney-General Appeals againſt her from her Sentence à minima; that he will give in hard Concluſions againſt her, that ſhe deſerves to be burnt alive, unleſs ſhe names all her Accomplices. In fine, He informs his Friend, in a Letter (n) dated Auguſt the 16th, 1660, that the Midwife was hang'd, " damnata fuit laqueo infelix obſtetrix & ſuffocata, " in good Company at la Croix du Tiroir (o). We have now ſeen the concluſion of the Tragedy, as well with reſpect to her that brought the Lady to Bed, as to her that was brought to Bed. But let us now ſee part of the Preliminaries concerning the latter. I will not warrant all that is ſaid for true, but if any thing be falſe, the Writer, whom I cite, muſt anſwer for it. (a) " The Duke of Joyeuſe " courted Mademoiſelle de Guerchi, (b) a Companion of Mademoiſelle de Pons, who ſacrific'd him " quickly after to the Commander de Jars, of the " Houſe of Rochechouard . . . (c) She forſook the " Commander de Jars, to deliver herſelf up to " Jeannin de Caſtile, the King's Treaſurer, and ſhe " behav'd herſelf with ſo little Modeſty, that the " Queen baniſh'd her from the Court. Nevertheleſs, " the Duke of Vitry embark'd with her, and treated " her with as much reſpect as if ſhe had always " been very Chaſte, altho' ſhe had had four or five " Children by ſeveral Fathers. She was got with " Child yet once more, and the Duke would have " her brought to Bed, to preſerve her Reputation, " which he thought was not ſo far loſt as it really " was. It was in vain for her to tell him, that ſhe " would be mightily pleas'd to have this pledge of " his Friendſhip; he was fully reſolv'd, that ſhe " ſhould deſtroy this Fruit of their Amours, and " therefore ſent to her a Midwife, call'd Conſtantin, " whom he deſir'd to bring her to Bed by force; " but ſhe died in the operation, and the Midwife " was hang'd. The Duke of Vitry was inconſolable " for her Death, and had ſo great a reſpect for her " Memory, that he embark'd afterwards with a Proſtitute, becauſe ſhe reſembl'd her. This Woman " being enrich'd with his great Gifts, married afterwards the Marquis de Goudron, a younger Brother of the Houſe of Gainache. Theſe Citations do not carry me ſo far from my Subject as ſome may imagine; for they contain Proofs of the Text of this Remark, or at leaſt they confirm what Guy Patin has publiſh'd. Beſides, I do not trouble myſelf about being cenſur'd for making too long Citations, provided I do not diſpleaſe a good part of my Readers, by inſtructing them by halves, or giving them the trouble to ſeek out the Conſequences of things, by going from Book to Book: But howſoever this be, here follows a Citation which has a nearer relation to the Narrative of Mr. Patin.

Thuanus relates, That in 1557, a Law was made which condemn'd to Death, as guilty of Parricide, all thoſe Women that ſhould conceal either their big Bellies, or their Lying-in, and that ſhould not bring in Certificates concerning the ſtate in which their Child was born, if there was any proof, that it was buried without Ceremony, and without having receiv'd Baptiſm. (d) Ea lege ſancitum, ut quæ graviditatem partumve celaſſet, neque alterutrius teſtationem aut de edito fœtu ſeu vivo ſeu mortuo [illegible], ſi eum lavacro juſtiſve exequiarum privatum probationibus conſtaret, de illa tanquam parricidii rea ultimum ſupplicium ſumeretur. Since that time this Crime was puniſh'd more ſeverely, than any other; and to the end that no Perſon ſhould pretend Ignorance, the Judges cauſed it to be inſerted in the Decree of Condemnation, that the Ordinance ſhould be publiſh'd with the ſound of a Trumpet, in all Cities where there are Tribunals of Juſtice; and that the Curates ſhould publiſh it (e) in their Pulpits, on the Feſtival-Days, in all Burroughs and Villages. But notwithſtanding this Crime continu'd to be more common than all the reſt; for Thuanus teſtifies, That there paſt few Weeks wherein the Judges in Criminal Matters, at Paris, did not place one or more Women, accus'd of this Parricide, upon the Seat of the Guilty: So great is the force of Shame, that, in a timorous Sex, it prevails over the fear of a Gibbet, and the remorſe of Conſcience. (f) In nullum crimen ab eo tempore ſeverius vindicatum fuit. At ne qua ignorantiæ excuſatio prætexeretur, ſententiis judicum ſemper additum eſt, ut lex in inferioribus tribunalibus palam & per plateas urbium publica præconis voce promulgaretur, & per oppida ac pagos à curionibus coram populo diebus feſtis recitaretur. Nihilominus nullum frequentius crimen etiam hodie eſt, nec ulla fere ſeptimana abit, quin in claſſe, quæ de judiciis capitalibus cognoſcit, una pluresve tam horrendi flagitii reæ producantur; adeo malus pudor in verecundo & impotenti ſexu ſupplicii terrorem, & quod omni corporis pœna gravius eſt, conſcientiæ morſus vincit. It will be convenient to relate what gave occaſion to this Law: Notice had been given, that many Women, to ſhun the Infamy, kill'd their Children when they were brought to Bed, and threw them either into a River or a Bog-houſe, or buried them in ſome profane place, without initiating them into the Chriſtian Church by Baptiſm. Thoſe who were proſecuted in a Court of Juſtice for this Crime, told the Judges, that Shame did not permit them to diſcover that they were big with Child, and that, contrary to their deſire, their Children were born dead. By this means they deliver'd themſelves from Trouble, there was no proof of the contrary, and the greater part of the Judges were of Opinion, that they ſhould be put to the Torture: If they endur'd it, without confeſſing they had put a Child to Death, they were diſcharg'd from all further Puniſhment. It was therefore believ'd, that Impunity made the Wickedneſs increaſe; and therefore a moſt rigorous Law was ſollicited, which was obtain'd, and ſeverely put in execution; and yet the Evil was not cur'd. To this purpoſe let us hear Thuanus: (g) Altera lex in ſpeciem ſevera, ſed qua impiis & abominandis parricidiis, quæ antea impunita, nunc etiam poſt legem conditam nimis frequentia ſunt, pœna conſtituta eſt, poſtulante Senatu promulgatur V. Non. Martias. Fœminæ, quæ viros non habebant, ubi ex furtivo complexu conceperant, malo pudore territæ utero celato ad extremum partus fere enecabant, geminato ſcelere famæ conſulere ſe exiſtimantes, & enecatos aut in ſterquilinium, ſeu profluentem abjiciebant, aut loco profano defoſſos perdebant, atque ita neceſſaria ſacri lavacri religione ac ſepulturæ honore privabant. Quod ſi quando res in judicium deduceretur, pudorem, quominus culpam confeſſæ eſſent, cauſſatæ mortuos ſe enixas dicebant, & ita deficientibus aliunde probationibus debitam inhumano ſceleri pœnam effugiebant. Nam judicum in hujuſmodi cauſis, incertæ plerumque erant & vagabantur ſententiæ, cum ad mortem alii tanti criminis reas damnarent; alii, quod ſæpius accidebat, pronioribus ad miſericordiam animis, quæſtionum violentiæ ſubjiciendas cenſerent, ut vivoſne an mortuos fœtus enixæ eſſent ex ipſarum confeſſione conſtaret; quam ſi obſtinato animo ferrent, liberæ dimittebantur (h).

This

(k) Id. Lett. 187. pag. 131.

(l) Id. Lett. 188. dated July 15. 1660. p. 135.

(m) Id. Lett. 190. p. 144.

(n) The 194. pag. 162, of Tom. 2.

(o) I believe it is ſhe whom the Abbot de Marolles ſpeaks of in the Paſſage which ſhall be cited hereafter. Compare with this the Memoirs of Chavagnac p. m. 210.

(a) The Gallantries of the Kings of France, Tom. 2. p. 138 of the Bruſſels Edit. 1694.

(b) That is to ſay, that ſhe was Maid of Honour to the Queen Mother, Anne of Auſtria.

(c) Id. ib. p. 210.

(d) Thuan. l. 19. p. 435. ad ann. 1557.

(e) See the Remark D D, at the end.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) We ſhall ſhew hereafter that the uſe of Abortions is very ancient. See the Commentators of Minucius Felix, in editione Ouzeliana upon theſe words: Sunt quæ in ipſis viſceribus medicaminibus epotis, originem futuri hominis extinguant, & parricidium faciant antequam pariant.

is neceſſary to People (D) the Limbus of little Children. This will give me occaſion to ſpeak † of an Ordinance of Henry the Second, which was ſo rigorous, that it might hap-

A COMPARISON of the power of Conſcience with that of the Point of Honour.

This powerfully confirms ſome of the Doctrines of the Author of (I) the Thoughts about Comets; for who will dare to deny, after he has read this place of Thuanus, that the Idea's of the Point of Honour, are the ſtrongeſt Bank which ſtops the Torrent of Incontinence? Who will dare to maintain, generally ſpeaking, that the Laws of Religion are the moſt effectual Remedy, or as effectual as this? If Religion had more Power over Women than the Point of Honour, would there be ſo many found that ſtifle their Children? Is it not a Murder more cruel and more barbarous, than to kill a good Old Man in the corner of a Wood? Is there any Crime more enormous and more contrary to Nature, than that of thoſe wretched Mothers? They are perſwaded, that by deſtroying the Fruit of their Womb, they commit a more deteſtable Murder in the Eyes of God, than thoſe who Rob and Murder on the High-way. Thoſe of whom Thuanus and Mr. Patin ſpeak are, beſides, for the moſt part perſwaded, that they deprive their Children of Eternal Life, and that they throw them headlong into the Limbo, where they ſhall ſuffer for all Eternity. This Perſwaſion advances their Crime to ſuch a degree of Cruelty as is not imaginable: Nevertheleſs they commit it in contempt of God, and in ſpite of their Religion, and all this becauſe they will not loſe their ſhare in Human Honour; and therefore this Honour muſt have more power over them, than the inſtinct of Conſcience and all Human Laws: Nay, it has even greater power than the fear of Death; for after that ſevere Law mention'd by Thuanus, they expos'd themſelves to the danger of Death, and it was very probable that they ſhould be puniſh'd with it; and yet this Law, tho' it were often put in execution, ſerv'd for nothing, for theſe Murders were ſtill as frequent as ever. What can be ſaid more convincing to prove the dominion of Honour, and the abſolute Power it has over our Souls? Can it be deny'd, that it wou'd be capable of confining Uncleanneſs within thoſe Bounds which we now ſee it to have? 'Tis none of its buſineſs to hinder ſecret Crimes; this belongs to Conſcience: But when thoſe ſecret Crimes draw after them ſuch Conſequences as can hardly eſcape the Eyes of the Publick, it is of great force to prevent them. Such is the Incontinence of one of the Female Sex, who is unmarried. 'Tis in vain to ſay, that the Art of Abortion is not far from its Perfection; and that if you except the Art of curing Venereal Diſtempers, there is none which an unhappy Induſtry, occaſion'd by the Wants of an infinite number of People, has improv'd more than this; for it cannot be deny'd, but that the Conſequences which I have mention'd, can very hardly be avoided. How many Women are there, who after a thouſand anxious Thoughts, and a thouſand Inconveniencies, and after they have taken many Drugs, yet could not hinder but their Fault ſhould be known? The Murder does not always conceal it; it becomes, ſometimes, more infamous and diſmal by the Death wherewith it is puniſh'd: Upon which account, if a violent Paſſion, and a furious Tranſport of the Temper do not wholly take away the uſe of Reaſon, theſe Women will have a care of expoſing themſelves to ſuch inconvenient and dangerous Conſequences as theſe. From whence we may conclude, That ſince Thuanus and Mr. Patin declare, that a great number of ſuch Perſons break through this Barrier, they muſt needs (a) be violently Tormented. Obſerve, That they ſpeak only of thoſe who kill the Fruit of their Womb. If the Confeſſors would give in a Liſt of thoſe who uſe precaution betimes, and before the Soul be arriv'd, their number would not be confin'd to ſix hundred in a Year, in ſuch a City as Paris is, a City, as unprejudic'd Travellers ſay, leſs impure than the greateſt part of the Capital Cities in the Weſt. Beſides, theſe over-haſten'd or preventive Abortions are really Murders, according to the beſt Caſuiſts. Read the Paſſage of Tertullian, (b) which I have put in the Margin, which Guy Patin ſhow'd to the Lieutenant Criminal, when he made the Proceſs againſt the Midwife.

I remember I have ſometimes heard this Queſtion put, Whether or no to ſpare ſo many Crimes to ſuch Women as have not the Gift of Continence, and to ſave ſo many Subjects to the Republick, of which it is otherwiſe depriv'd, it would not be neceſſary to weaken a little the Empire of the Point of Honour, i. e. to diminiſh notably the Diſgrace of a Woman unmarried who gets Children; for it is obſerv'd, that in Countries which are leſs nice about this Affair, and where ſuch Perſons do eaſily find the means of Marrying, and appear bare-fac'd in Company, that theſe Abortions are much more rare, and the Judges are leſs employ'd in puniſhing thoſe who murder their Children. A grave Man anſwer'd, and prov'd by very good Reaſons, that the Remedy would be worſe than the Diſeaſe, and that there is nothing which the Republick ought to maintain with greater Care, than this fear of Diſgrace, when it is join'd to Criminal Actions, as in the preſent caſe. For this reaſon, ſaid he, Magiſtrates ought to be extreamly ſparing in inflicting a Note of Infamy, becauſe one that is made Infamous loſes the Rein which reſtrain'd him, and Infamy is leſs fear'd when we ſee it made uſe of every Day. (c) Da principio ſi hanno in grande horrore gli infami, mentre ſi veggono miſti tra gli altri Cittadini: ma con l'aſſuefarſi à tolerarli, pare, che ſi di giorno in giorno ſi alleggeriſca la macchia, che quaſi al fine ſvaniſca in tutto. Così vienſi à poco à poco à porre in uſo nella Città il traſcurare l'infamia, errore d'ogni altro più grave, e più pericoloſo per il viver Civile. Però ſtimo io bene l'andar lento à dichiarar publicamente infami i rei, quando la nota, con cui ſi ſegnano, non ſia perpetua per terrore degli altri. Perche, ſe ben l'infamia naſce propriamente dalla operatione, di chi commette il misfatto; nondimeno non bene manifeſta da tutti ſi diſcerne, finche publica dichiaratione non vi ſi aggiunga. But ſince I have ſaid ſo much, I beg leave to add a word or two more. Would you plainly ſee, that the force of the Point of Honour is ſuperior to that of Conſcience, conſider one of the ſix hundred Women who had deſtroy'd their Children. Religion diſſwaded them from it by many Motives: It ſhow'd them the Murder, the eternal Damnation of the Infant, the injuſtice of their Intention, and the good uſe they ſhould make of their Sin. They deſir'd to preſerve the Reputation of Women of Honour; this deſign was unjuſt, a robbery, a meer Uſurpation of that which did not belong to them: nay, it was an uſurpation deſign'd for a very bad uſe, for deceiving the Publick in general, and a Husband in particular; for they wiſh'd they were in a condition to beſtow themſelves upon a Man, as a Chaſte and Modeſt Maid, and without any defect. The advantage they might reap from diſcovering their Fault was great, with reſpect to their Salvation; from thence they might draw a thouſand Reaſons of Humility and Contrition. The Point of Honour no ſooner appear'd, but it overturn'd all this great number of Batteries: Muſt it not therefore be acknowledg'd, that it is a thouſand times more powerful than Conſcience. The Italian Author is here alſo for me. (d) Però ſi doverà à giudicio mio aſſerire, che aſſolutamente la Religione ſia più atta à render gli huomini giuſti, & innocenti: ma che all' incontro per lo riſpetto degli intereſſi, e per la ripugnanza degli affetti, i quali quaſi venti contrarii, turbano il mare della vita civile, più operi per la felicità Morale il zelo dell' Honore. Perche gli huomini ſono più facili à moverſi à bene operare per lo premio dell' Honore, & à guardarſi dal mal fare per la macchia della infamia, che ſi veggono innanzi à gli occhi, che per le promeſſe di premii, ò pur di caſtighi futuri, e lontani.

(D) To People the Limbus Infantium.] There is ſcarce any need of a Commentary, after what we have ſaid; nevertheleſs I will add a Paſſage of Mr. Drelincourt. It ſeems, ſays he, (e) ſpeaking of the Miſſionaries, that ſame Maſters of your Schools have really deſcended into the Bowels of the Earth, and exactly diſcover'd and viſited all the ſecret places there. Their moſt common Opinion is, (1) That there are under the Earth four different places, or one deep place divided into four parts: They ſay that the loweſt place is Hell, where all the Souls of the damn'd, and where their Bodies ſhall alſo be after their Reſurrection, and there alſo the Devils are to be ſhut up. That the place next to Hell is Purgatory, or the place where Souls are purg'd; but rather, where they ſatisfy Divine Juſtice by their Sufferings. They ſay, that in theſe two places there is the ſame Fire, and an equal Heat, and that all the difference is only in reſpect of Duration. They think that adjoining to Purgatory there is the Limbus

of

---

† See the Remark C.

(I) See the Articles 152, 154 of the Thoughts about Comets.

(a) See the Thoughts about Comets. ubi ſupra.

(b) Nobis vero homicidio ſemel interdicto, etiam conceptum utero dum adhuc ſanguis in hominem delibatur, diſſolvere non licet: homicidii feſtinatio eſt prohibere naſci, nec refert natam quis eripiat animam, an naſcentem diſturbet: homo eſt & qui eſt futurus; etiam fructus omnis jam in ſemine eſt. Tertull. in Apologet. c. 9. Patin Letter 188 p. 137. *cites him. What he cites p.*144 out of the ſame Tertullian de anima cap. 25. is not to the purpoſe.

(c) Lodovico Zuccolo, Academico Filopono di Faenza, diſcorſo dell' honore, capitolo 22. p.112. edit. Venetia 1623.

(d) Id. ib. Capitolo 20. p. 105.

(e) Drelincourt's *Dialogue about the deſcent of Christ into Hell, p.*309 Edit. 1664.

(1) See Cardinal Bellarmin in his Treatiſe of Purgatory.

happen that a Woman shou'd suffer Death by vertue thereof, tho' she was not guilty of murdering her Child. We will produce upon this occasion the Observation of a (DΔ) famous Civilian, and relate a Passage of Henry Stephens, which informs us, among (DΔΔ) many other things, that none but Servant-Maids were put to Death of little Children who die without the Sacrament; and that the fourth place is the Limbus of the Fathers, i.e. the place where the Souls of the Just are gather'd together, who died before the Death of our Lord Jesus Christ. They maintain that this place is empty at present; so that there is one House to Let. According to this Doctrine, the Limbus of little Children is become the Porch of Hell since the Ascension of JESUS CHRIST, for the Limbus of the Fathers must go for nothing after that time. Here we might put the same Question which formerly the Cynick Philosopher ask'd, when he saw (f) the Entry of a little House, where's the House of this Gate! because the Entry of it was so very great. The Frontiers of Hell must needs be of larger extent than all the Kingdom, which is very monstrous. Let us put together all the Infants who lose their Lives without having receiv'd Baptism, either because they died after their Birth, or because they perish'd by a voluntary or involuntary Miscarriage, and doubtless you will have the two thirds of Mankind. The number of Abortions would be astonishing, if they were certainly known, altho' we should only reckon the Victims of the Point of Honour, those of (g) Jealousy, and those of (h) effeminate softness. All Times have concern'd themselves about this Crime, in all parts of the Earth, as might be easily prov'd; but I shall only produce two Testimonies. Consider the words of Juvenal, (i) Cum tot abortivis fœcundam Julia vulvam Solveret. And elsewhere,

Sunt (k) quæ eunuchi imbelles, ac mollia semper
Oscula delectent, & desperatio barbæ,
Et quod abortivo non est opus.

Ovid exclaim'd against this Crime before Juvenal, and he also represented the danger to which they are expos'd who commit it.

Quid (l) juvat immunes belli cessare puellas,
Nec fera peltatas agmina velle sequi,
Si sine Marte suis patiuntur vulnera telis,
Et cæcas armant in sua fata manus?
. . . .
. . . .
Hoc neque in Armeniis tigres fecere latebris:
Perdere nec fœtus ausa leæna suos.
At teneræ faciunt, sed non impune, puellæ.
Sæpe, suos utero quæ necat, ipsa perit.
Ipsa perit, ferturque toro resoluta capillos:
Et clamant, Meritò, qui modocunque vident.

You may see some other Passages of this Poet in the Remark DΔΔ. This furnishes me with new Proofs of the Power of the Point of Honour. The means which were us'd at that time to kill the Infant were dangerous to the Mother; they destroy'd many times the Life of both; and nevertheless the Young-Women chose rather to run the hazard of Death than of Defamation: And even to this Day, those who wait too long perish sometimes under the Remedy; witness the Lady Guerchi. Note, That those who preserve the Child are deliver'd without any crying, unless it be in such a place where they are in no fear of being defam'd by the discovery of the Mystery: And this is a new proof of the inconceivable Power of the Point of Honour; for it suppresses the effects of the sharpest Pain in a tender Sex, which Sighs, Mourns and Cries for the least thing.

It was said one Day to a Missionary, You cannot say of the Limbus what the Poets say of Hell, that it is a little House, (m) Domus exilis Plutonia. There needs not much place, answer'd he, for Embryos. But, reply'd the other, how many Children four or five Years old, go to the Limbus? and besides, Do you not know, that Embryos and all Children shall rise perfect Men. Well, answer'd he, do not trouble yourself about it, the World is big enough.

There are some People who think that Virgil, who own'd a Limbus, should have divided it into two Parts; one for the Children that die before they are born, the other for those that die in the Cradle. The great number of the former deserved very well a particular Class, say these People. Whence comes it then, that this great Poet says nothing of those poor Creatures?

Continuo (c) auditæ voces, vagitus & ingens,
Infantumque animæ flentes in limine primo,
Quos dulcis vitæ exortes, & ab ubere raptos
Abstulit atra dies, & funere mersit acerbo.

(DΔ) The observation of a famous Civilian.] He says, That the benefit of Laws ought not to be suspended, upon pretence of some Inconveniences that they produce; and upon this occasion he relates what Cato said, That there is no Law that is convenient to all private Persons. Bodin's words are these: (b) "I confess it would be better to absolve "the Guilty, than to condemn the Innocent, but "then I say, that he who is Convicted by strong "Presumptions, is not Innocent; as he who was "found with a bloody Sword near the murder'd "Person, when there was none other but he, and "the Conjectures we have remark'd. Wherefore "King Henry the Second made an Edict in this Kingdom that was very useful, which was publish'd "and register'd the fourth of March 1556, (c) "wherein he ordains, That a Woman shall be reputed to have kill'd her Child, and be punish'd "with Death, if she conceal'd her big Belly and "her Delivery, and if her Child died without Baptism, and she could produce no Testimony of the "one or the other; neither shall they be believ'd "who say, that the Child was born Dead: Which "has since been put in practice by several Sentences. ". . . And, nevertheless, 'tis possible, that a Woman, to save her Honour, will conceal her big "Belly and her Delivery, and that the Infant which "she would willingly have maintain'd, may die in "the Delivery: But forasmuch as under pretence, "that the Child was born dead, many Murders were "committed, it was wisely determin'd, that such a "presumption is sufficient to proceed to the Punishment of Death, to revenge the Innocent Blood. "For we must not, for an Inconvenience which does "not often happen, suspend the execution of a "good Law, (1) and for this cause I was of Opinion, that a Woman who lived near Soissons, should "be condemn'd to Death, having conceal'd her "big Belly and her Delivery, and buried her Child "in a Garden in the Month of March 1578. I know the Author of the Dutch Gazette of Haerlem, hath publish'd, in the Article from Paris, not very (d) long ago, That orders were given, that this Edict of Henry the Second, should be restor'd to its former Vigour, and read on the Festival-Days in all the Parish-Churches. I know not whether any other Gazetteers made mention of it; but I do not remember that I found this News either in the Mercure-Politique, or in the Historical Letters. Nevertheless it might have furnish'd many Reflections.

(DΔΔ) A Passage of Henry Stephens, which informs us, among many other things.] Because those other things may serve for a Confirmation and Supplement to the preceding Remarks, I shall not only relate what concerns the impunity of Persons of Quality, but shall also join with them many Facts and Notes which this Author sets down, before he tells us, that respect of Persons did take place in the execution of the Ordinance of Henry the Second. The Time wherein he wrote shows plainly enough, that he had in his view the Punishments which follow'd after this Ordinance. As to Women Murderers of their Children, says he, (e) . . . "the number of 'em is great, as well "those who murder them assoon as they come into "the World, as of those who exercise the same "Cruelty upon them, even before they are born. "And first, As to the latter, 'tis certain, their "Wickedness is very ancient; for we find the Greek "Poet Phocylides expresly warning the Women to "take heed, that they do not commit such Acts. "And Ovid, a Pagan as well as he, upbraids a Woman mightily for it, and adds many fine Remonstrances against her. Likewise we find that Hippocrates, among other things he swore to observe, "places this, That he would never present to Women that whereby they might destroy the Fruit of "their Womb. This Wickedness is practis'd for two "Reasons; by some, for fear they should be known "to be Women, instead of Maids, or generally lest "they shou'd be discover'd to have done that which "it

---

(f) Diogenes Laertius l. 6. n. 57. relates it otherwise. Myndum profectus (Diogenes Cynicus) cum videret magnificas portas & urbem modicam, Viri, inquit, Myndii portas claudite, ne urbs vestra egrediatur.

(g) In the Countries where Polygamy is allow'd, the Wives of one and the same Husband play a thousand Tricks to hinder the fruitfulness of one another.

(h) i. e. There are some married Women who to preserve their good Complexion, or to save expences, destroy their Children. 'Tis pretended that certain Casuists lend them a helping hand.

(i) Juven. Sat. 2. v. 32.

(k) Id. Sat. 6. v. 364. See also v. 593.

(l) Ovidius Amorum l. 2. Eleg. 14.

(m) Horat. od. 4. lib. 1.

(c) Virgil. Æneid. l. 6. v. 4[illegible]

(b) Demonomanie des Sorciers, l. 4. c. 5. p. m. 447, 448.

(c) Beginning the Year after Easter.

(1) L. 2 & 4. de legibus ff. 9. Sic Cato diebat nullam legem satis commodam omnibus esse.

(d) I believe it was in the Year 1698.

(e) Henry Stephens's Apology of Herodotus B. 1. c. 18. p. 223, &c. Antwerp Edition, 1568. 8vo.

Death upon Account of that rigorous Law. Thoſe two Letters ſhow particularly

“ it was not lawful for them to do, whether they be married Women or Widows; by others, for fear they ſhould ſhorten the time of their Youth (f), and particularly for fear of what Ovid ſays,

Scilicet ut careat rugarum crimine venter,
Sternetur pugnæ triſtis arena tuæ?

“ And as to what I have ſaid concerning the ſhortening of the time of Youth, the ſame Poet alſo teſtifies it, ſaying, Adde quod & partus faciunt breviora Juventæ Tempora. And without his Teſtimony we ſee the experience of it every Day before our Eyes. I have heard alſo of ſome Ladies, nay, I have known ſome who made no ſcruple to wear Busks, at the expence of the Child that was in their Womb, and that they might not loſe the Honour of having genteel Shapes, they made no Conſcience of deſtroying that which ſhould be as dear to them as their Life. For I ſpeak of thoſe very Perſons who were with Child by thoſe only who ſhould get them with Child. As for thoſe who are murderers of their Children as ſoon as they are born, throwing them, or cauſing them to be thrown away, ſome Years ago, the Monaſteries of Nuns might have furniſh'd us with a great many Examples of them, (as well as of thoſe who murder them in their Womb) even in the time of Pontanus, witneſs what he ſays, Quod quidem execrationis genus maximè ſacerdotes attingit, quæ Deo virginitatem quum voverint, pollutis tamen votis, rituque ſacerdotali perjuranter atque inceſte contaminato, gravidæ factæ, ne ſcelus pateat, execrabiliori conantur ſcelere idipſum prohibere ac corrigere: dum aut medicaminibus adhibitis abortionem procurant, aut partum ſtatim ipſum exanimant, terræque aut cloacæ clàm infodiunt. When, I ſay, that a great number of 'em might have been found ſome Years ago, I do not mean that it would be difficult to find ſome at this very day, if any one had occaſion for them, but that the number of them was then greater than at preſent; as well becauſe the number of Nuns was then greater, as becauſe they were more afraid of being diſgrac'd, and even of receiving Correction, if they were Convicted of having play'd the Harlot, than they are at preſent, when their Fathers Confeſſors (h) are not ſo very ſevere; but, on the contrary, they themſelves, upon occaſion, would be forward enough to have a touch. Beſides, they ſee many who were Nuns before, as they are now, married (i) publickly, and well eſteem'd of; which makes them look a little better to their Conſciences, than to attempt ſuch Murders. But it muſt be confeſs'd, that this Wickedneſs extends far beyond the Cloyſters, even to thoſe unmarried Maids that live with their Fathers and Mothers, or are under the Inſpection of their Relations, and even to thoſe of a good Family; nay, it extends to many Women that are Widows. This is what the abovesaid Pontanus has not conceal'd concerning thoſe of his time; for he adds, to what I have alledg'd already from him, Nec verò monſtroſa hac feritate ſacerdotes tantùm, verumetiam viduæ ac nubiles puellæ ſplendidiſſimaque etiam fœdantur familiæ. Servant-Maids have alſo plaid that Trick very often, and 'tis to them commonly, and not to others, that the Judges addreſs themſelves, according to the Proverb above-mention'd out of Juvenal, Dat veniam corvis, vexat cenſura columbas. For I have very often ſeen Servant-Maids hang'd at Paris for this Crime, but no Perſons of Quality; and particularly I remember I ſaw in the Schools of Phyſick, the Anatomy of a Servant-Maid, who had been hang'd for this Fact, viz. for throwing her Child into the Houſe of Office. . . . (a) None can be better acquainted with ſuch Secrets than the Midwives; were it not the Cuſtom, at this day, to go and fetch them into their Houſes, and after they have blindfolded them, to carry them to the Houſe where the Woman is that wants their help, who is then Mask'd, or otherwiſe blinded, for fear of being known by them, whoſe Eyes muſt needs be then uncovered. . . . (k) 'Tis true that many Ladies now have no need to proceed ſo far, by reaſon of the Preſervatives they uſe, to keep themſelves from being with Child. There are ſome Faults in this Paſſage of the Apology of Herodotus, as will appear, if any one will take the Pains to read my Marginal Obſervations: And this alone may ſerve for an excuſe for my relating it at ſo great length.

The firſt Paſſage of Ovid, which Henry Stephens has cited, is in the 14th Elegy of the ſecond Book de Amoribus, and diſcovers to us, that a thing was commonly known at Rome in that Age, which an old Apothecary, who had read many Books of Chirurgery and Phyſick, confeſs'd to me he did not know, before he ſaw a new Book which I lent him. He told me, when he reſtor'd it, that he had, by it, learn'd two Obſervations very curious, which he had never heard of before, and which concern the Signs by which one may know whether a Woman has had any Children. Mr. Lamy, a Phyſician of the Faculty of Paris, is the Author of the Book abovemention'd; and he gives the following Account: (d) “ This Woman (e) had had Children, and before we open'd her, and without ſuſpecting any thing of what we found, we knew it by certain Signs. Mrs. la Marche, chief Midwife of the Hôtel-Dieu was there preſent: She had a ſingular Capacity in her Profeſſion, and much Wit and Diſcretion in all things. I ask'd her Opinion about many Queſtions concerning the Signs of Virginity; I deſir'd to know how ſhe knew, at firſt, that this Woman, whom we were now to open, had had Children. She made me obſerve the Folds of the Belly: And when I reply'd to her, that theſe might be occaſion'd, either becauſe ſhe had been Hydropical, or becauſe her Belly might be ſwell'd from other Cauſes than her being big with Child, and that theſe Folds might remain. To convince me, ſhe ſhow'd me, and all the Company, what the Midwives call, among themſelves, the rending of the Fourchete, which is the tearing of the Entry of the external Orifice towards the anus, which is always made at the Birth of the firſt Child, which conſequently is an undoubted Sign of the Delivery which preceded. Of theſe two Signs of Delivery, the firſt is incomparably more terrible than the ſecond, to one that is betrothed to a Man, and who paſſes for a Maid; for ſhe has good reaſon to hope, that her Spouſe will not know the ſecond, and to fear that he will know the other. And by this we underſtand the Verſe of Ovid, much better than by the Commentators; and we plainly know why the Roman Maids expos'd themſelves to ſuch a dreadful danger, viz. that they might ſhun rugarum crimen, that the Wrinkles of the Skin of their Belly might not diſcover their Crime. Theſe Wrinkles therefore were much more to be fear'd, than the Wrinkles of the Face; and there is no doubt but the Conſequences of them are commonly known in our Age, as well as in that of Auguſtus; and that this does create great trouble, even to ſuch Perſons as have been reliev'd by (f) Lucina with the greateſt Secrecy imaginable. Their Invocations conceiv'd according to the Form of Prayer which was addreſs'd to (g) Laverna, Labra (h) movet, metuens audiri: Pulchra Laverna,

Da mihi fallere, da juſtum ſanctumque videri:
Noctem peccatis & fraudibus objicere nubem.

Their Invocations, I ſay, being fully heard, according to the deſign of that Form, do not free their Minds from fear upon the approach of a new Huſband, who does not expect to find out Wrinkles or Folds, and from thence it comes to paſs, that they have recourſe to Drugs as ſoon as poſſible. Henry Stephens did rightly obſerve, that in his time (i) many Ladies had many Preſervatives to keep themſelves from being with Child. Ancient Greece and ancient Rome were but Novices in this wicked Art, in compariſon of the Sixteenth Century; and 'tis pretended that the Seventeenth Century does even exceed the preceding; and yet they have practis'd the groſſeſt and moſt dangerous ways mention'd by Ovid. Read the Abbot de Marolles, upon this Paſſage of Ovid (k): Veſtra quid effoditis ſubjectis viſcera telis? Why do you pierce your Entrails with little Darts? “ 'Tis a ſtrange thing, ſays he, (l) that ſo damnable an

---

(f) Note that here H. Steph. commits a groſs fault, for he applies theſe two Verſes of Ovid to Mothers who murder their Children for other Reaſons than that of covering the Crime. See in the ſequel of this Remark, that the fear rugarum ventris is not the fear of ſpoiling any bodily Beauty, but the fear of having convincing Signs of a preceding big Belly.

(h) H. Stephens is miſtaken here, for in his time the corruption of the Monaſteries, and the connivance of the Confeſſors, were leſs than in former times, the Reproaches of the Proteſtants having ſtir'd them up to ſome ſort of ſhame and watchfulneſs.

(i) I do not underſtand this place of H. Stephens, for either he ſpeaks of the Nuns which became Proteſtants, or of thoſe whom the Pope permitted to marry; and nothing of all this ſeems proper to move a Nun that is big-belly'd to ſave her Child: to declare herſelf big-bellied is not the way to obtain of the Pope a diſpenſation of her Vows.

(a) Henry Stephens, ib. p. 225.

(k) [illegible]

(d) Lamy's Diſſertation againſt the new Opinion, that all Animals are engender'd of an Egg, pag. 214, &c. This Diſſertation was publiſh'd with ſome other Treatiſes of the ſame Authors at Paris 1678 in 12o.

(e) i. e. A Woman who was Anatomiz'd.

(f) The Goddeſs who preſideth over Child-bearing.

(g) The Goddeſs who was the Patroneſs of Thefts, and ſuch Enterpriſes as People would have conceal'd.

(h) Horat. Epiſt. 16. l. 1. v. 60.

(i) H. Stephens ubi ſupra p. 225.

(k) Ovid. Eleg. 14. l. 2. Amorum, v. 27.

(l) Abbot de Marolles Remarks upon the 2d Book of Ovid de Amoribus, p. 269, 270. This Book was Printed in 1661.

fairly, that the Author's Creed was (E) very short, and that he had a great tenderness for his Children. This is sufficient to refute the (F) extravagant Imposture which a German Writer has publish'd. 'Tis observ'd, that Guy Patin (G) resembl'd Cicero. He died in 1672, and left a Son, who became (H) very Famous, and who excell'd in the knowledge of Medals. He had lost his eldest Son, for whom he had obtain'd, in 1667, the Reversion of his Professorship, and who had

" Invention should have been put in practice, so " long ago, and that it shou'd be renew'd in our " time. A wicked Woman being convicted of this " abominable Crime, after she had kill'd the Mo-" ther, thinking only to kill the Child in her " Belly, was punish'd exemplarily at Paris, in " the same Year that I wrote this Book. How ingenious soever the Passions be which are kept up by the Point of Honour, the danger is great, even at this day, for a Maid or a Widow, who grants the last favour to a Gallant; for oftentimes the Preservatives fall short of their end, the ninth Month comes upon their backs, and there's the Devil on't, that Scene is more troublesome than all the rest. For a Testimony to this I cite these Verses of Madam des Houlieres.

(m) A BALLAD to Mademoiselle D

Now is the time to give you Advice,
As to the dangers to which Beauty exposes you.
A Maid resembles this pretty Rose-bud,
Which in a few Days becomes full blown.
While it is a Bud People covet to enjoy it,
And every one that sees it desires to snatch it.
But after the Sun has fully spen'd it,
It is no more esteem'd, one Morning ruines it,
Then of the Rose the Thorn alone is thine.
Thus when a Lover (for the Instance is very parallel)
Discovers the desires which Modesty opposes,
Unless they be shun'd, Love is the Sun
By which, no doubt, the Flower is disclos'd.
Then, in a short time, all the Transports and Cares,
For which the simple Maid was proud of her self,
Do vanish away, and no longer dazle the Eyes.
Contempt succeeds to Love, which declines.
Then, of the Rose, the Thorn alone is thine.
Now Sleep is quite taken away;
And if at some time there's a moment's repose,
A terrible Dream makes you wake in a fright:
Then a hundred and a hundred times the Cause is curs'd.
You would gladly hide, in the Bowels of the Earth,
The tender Secret, which you fear some Traytor
Will spread abroad to make the World rejoice:
Tho' you speak low, you think some can Divine.
Then of the Rose the Thorn alone is thine.

The MESSAGE.

Compleat Gallants, Soothers of the Fair Sex,
'Tis in vain for me to preach, that 'tis dangerous to listen to you,
Every Maid is to Coquetry inclin'd,
I could sooner spin unhatchel'd Hemp,
Than make Women approve my Doctrine.
But when with a low Voice thou must call on Lucina,
Then of the Rose the Thorn alone is thine.

(E) The Author's Creed was very short.] Let us set down these words of his Elogium: (n) " He deliver'd himself with the indifference of " a Stoick, yet his words were nipping; therein " he out-did Rabelais. It was said he wrote Com-" mentaries upon this Author, and that he un-" derstood him perfectly; which was the reason " why he was accus'd of being a little inclin'd to " Libertinism. The truth is, he could not endure " Bigotry, Superstition and Hypocrisy; but he had " an upright Soul, and an Heart well dispos'd: He " was passionately affected for his Friends, affable " and courteous to all the World, and particularly " towards Strangers and Learned Men. Take notice, that in answer to the accusation of Libertinism, the Author of the Elogium does not say, that Dr. Patin was at the bottom well perswaded of the Christian Orthodoxy; but he only assures us, that he hated Superstition, and that he was an honest Man. See the News (o) from the Republick of Learning. This is not the Answer that was made in behalf of the Prince of Condé; for in opposition to Fame, they publish'd the Declaration he made at his Death, (p) I never doubted of the Mysteries of Religion, tho' it has been said so; but I doubt less of them now than ever. It may perhaps be said, that the Booksellers of Geneva have inserted into Patin's Book all that they thought fit; but this Thought is ridiculous.

(F) The extravagant Imposture which a German Writer has publish'd.] His name is Aetius: He publish'd, in a Letter about Antimony, which is join'd to a Treatise de Arboribus coniferis at Jena in 1672, that Dr. Patin would have poyson'd his own Son with Antimony, which he believ'd to be a Poyson, but that happily, contrary to his expectation, it cur'd him (a). Charles Patin having complain'd of this Calumny to the Faculty of Physick at Jena, obtain'd all the satisfaction he could pretend to; for the Faculty ordain'd Aetius the Physician to make a publick Recantation: Saluberrima Facultas illum (b) παλινῳδίαν cantare coegit, quam suppressa calumnia typis mandatam ad me transmisit, 'tis Charles Patin (c) who speaks, his verbis: Editioni Tractatus hujus de arboribus, Benevole lector, subjunxeram Epistolam de Antimonio, cui relationem de Illustrissimo Guidone Patino inserueram: Quia autem certo comperi illam falsam, & ab ipsius malevolis sine dubio effictam esse, Epistolam rursus imprimi curavi, fabulam expunxi, & Manibus celeberrimi illius viri injuriam factam esse aperte profiteor.

(G) That Guy Patin resembled Cicero.] " The late " Mr. Huguetan, Advocate of Lyons, who knew him " particularly, found that he had the Air of Cicero, " whose Statue is to be seen at Rome. Which brings to my mind what some say, that the Chancellor de l' Hospital resembled Aristotle: (e) Specie fuit augusta, vultu gravi & tranquillo, qui ut ex veteri numismate apparuit Aristotelis faciem plane referret.

(H) A Son who became very famous.] He was call'd Charles PATIN, and was born at Paris, Febr. 23. 1633. He made such wonderful progress, that he maintain'd Greek and Latin Theses about all parts of Philosophy in 1647. His Professor, (f) who was an Irish-Man, and did not understand the Greek Tongue, was very angry at these Theses, when he was desir'd to examine them; but seeing the Young-Man was ready to defend them without a Moderator, he was forc'd to preside at the Disputation, lest he should prostitute his Reputation. The Pope's Nuncio, thirty four Bishops, and many Persons of Quality, of the Court and City, were present at these Theses: The Respondent stood the shock for the space of five Hours, in both Languages, and was with great Glory admitted to his Degree of Master of Arts. He studied the Civil Law in complaisance to his Uncle by the Mother's side, who was an Advocate in the Parliament: He took his License at Poitiers, after sixteen Months, and was admitted Advocate in the Parliament of Paris. He spent six Years in this Study, but he could not forsake that of Physick, to which his Inclination always led him. It was not therefore difficult for him to suit himself to his Father's Will, which was, that he should give over the Law, and devote himself to the Profession of Physick. He relish'd, without difficulty, the good Reasons that were alledg'd to him, which were confirm'd to him by the Testimony of Marescot. That famous Physician confess'd himself indebted to his Profession for three things, which he could never have obtain'd by the Priesthood, for which his Father design'd him: He had enjoy'd a perfect Health until the Age of Eighty Two Years, and he had gain'd a Hundred Thousand Crowns, and the intimate Friendship of many illustrious Persons. (g) Artem disceres doceresque non Magistratibus tantum sed Regibus ipsis & Imperatoribus leges præscribentem: Sapientissimos tandem quosque ab ore tuo pendentes, tuoque submissos arbitrio cerneres. Recorderis, mi Stoice (sic quippe ob nescio quam ἀπάθειαν me compellare solebat) Marescottum nostrum tria se sacræ arti nostræ debere professum, quibus caruisset, si propositum à Parentibus sacerdotium suscepisset, sanitatem athleticam ætatis anno LXXXII. centum aureorum millia, atque intimam innumerorum illustrium amicitiam. Assoon as Charles Patin was admitted Dr. of Physick, he addicted himself to Practice, and had a great one. He read Lectures of Physick, in the room of Professor Loper, who went to Bourdeaux. Fearing to be Imprison'd if he should continue longer in France, he intended to retire into Holland: (h) Excedere Patria consultius fuit, quam libertatis discrimen subire. But the Privateers of Ostend

(m) Poems of Madam des Houlieres, pag. 144, 145. Edition of Amsterd. 1694.

(n) Advertisement to the Reader before the Letters of Guy Patin, fol. * 6. verso.

(o) The Month of Apr. 1684. Art. 1. pag. 116, 117. See also the Journ. of Leipsic, 1684, pag. 251.

(p) See his Funeral Oration spoken by the Bishop of Meaux, March 10. 1687. pag. 56, 57. of the Holl. Edition.

(a) Taken from the Elogium of Guy Patin prefix'd to his Letters.

(b) He should have said canere.

(c) Carolus Patinus in Lyceo Patavino, p. 102, 103.

(d) Taken from the same Elogium.

(e) Sammarthanus Elog. l. 1. p. m. 59.

(f) He was call'd Rogerius O-moloy.

(g) Carolus Patinus, ubi supra, p. 83, 84.

(h) Id. ib. p. 91.

had not the *Gratitude that was due to the Affection of ſo good a Father. This was a great addition to his Affliction for the Diſgrace (I) of his other Son.

* See his Letter 555. p. 537 of the 3d Tome.

PATRICIUS (Auguſtin) a Canon of Siena, and then Maſter of the Ceremonies of the Pope's Chapel, and at laſt Biſhop of Pienza in Tuſcany, flouriſh'd towards the end of the Fifteenth Century. Cardinal Francis Piccolomini, Archbiſhop of Siena, who has been Pope, by the Name of Pius the Second, order'd him to write an Abridgment of the Acts of the Council of Baſil. We ſhall ſee hereafter what Oſtend, did ſo diſturb Navigation, that he return'd from Havre de Grace to Paris, and afterwards took the Road of the Palatinate. He ſtop'd ſome time at Heidelberg, and then travell'd into Germany, Holland, England, Switzerland, and Italy. He fix'd at Baſil, but the War which was between the French and Germans upon thoſe Frontiers, made him ſo uneaſy, that he removed with all his Family into Italy. He was made Profeſſor of Phyſick at Padua in 1676; three Years after he was honour'd with the Dignity of Kt. of St. Mark. He underſtood, in 1681 that the King of France would receive him into his Favour; and perhaps he would have return'd into France, if the chief Profeſſor's Place in Surgery had not been given him, with an augmentation of his Salary. I take this from a Book which he publiſh'd at Padua in 1682, Intitled, Lyceum Patavinum, ſive Icones & vitæ Profeſſorum Patavii 1682, publice docentium. He died (k) in that City, in 1693, leaving two Daughters, who became Famous (l) for the Works they publiſh'd. His Wife (m) was alſo an Author. Here follows a Catalogue of the Books which he publiſh'd, from the Year 1662, to the Year 1682. Itinerarium Comitis Briennæ, Pariſiis, 1662, in 8vo. Familiæ Romanæ ex ant. Numiſmatibus, Pariſ. 1663. Fol. A Treatiſe of combuſtible Turf: Paris, 1663, in 4to. An Introduction to the Hiſtory of Medals: Paris, 1665, and Amſterdam 1667, in 12o. Imperatorum Romanorum Numiſmata: Argentinæ, 1671. Fol. Theſaurus Numiſmatum: Amſtelodami, 1672. in 4to. Four Hiſtorical Relations: Baſil 1673, and Lyons 1674. in 12o. Prattica delle Medaglie: Venezia, 1673. in 12o. Suetonius illuſtratus: Baſileæ, 1675. De numiſmate antiquo Auguſti & Platonis: Baſileæ, 1675. in 4to. Encomium moriæ Eraſmi, cum fig. Holbenianis: Baſil. 1676. in 12o. De optima Medicorum ſella: Patavii, 1676. in 4to. De Febribus: Patavii, 1677. in 4to. De Avicenna: Patavii, 1678. in 4to. De Numiſmate ant. Horatii Coclitis: 1678. in 4. De Scorbuto: Patavii 1679. in 4to. Judicium Paridis: Patavii, 1679. in 4to. Le pompoſe feſte di Vicenza: Padua, 1680. in 4to. Natalitia Jovis: Patavii, 1681. in 4to. Quod optimus Medicus debeat eſſe chirurgus: Patavii, 1681. in 4to. Lyceum Patavinum, Patavii, 1682. in 4to. He himſelf gave us this Catalogue in his Lycæum Patavinum. He forgot his Epiſtola ad Eggelingium de Numiſmatibus quibuſdam abſtruſis Imperatoris Neronis, publiſh'd at Bremen, in 1681, with the Anſwers (n) of Eggelingius. He wrote after this a Latin (o) Tranſlation of the Introduction to the Knowledge of Medals, which was printed (p) in 1683. Diſſertatio Therapeutica de Peſte, at Augsburg, 1683. in 4to. Commentarius in tres Inſcriptiones Græcas Smyrnæ nuper allatas, at Padua, 1685, in 4to. Commentarius in antiquum monumentum Marcellinæ, at the ſame place, 1688. in 4to. Commentarius in antiquum Cenotaphium Marci Artorii Medici, at the ſame place, 1689. in 4to. He had a hand in the Edition of the Theſaurus numiſmatum Petri Mauroceni, done at Venice, 1683. and he added ſome Notes to it. Perhaps I have forgot ſome of his Works. I muſt add, That his Hiſtorical Relations were Printed in Holland, in 1695. and that his Introduction to the Knowledge of Medals was Printed at Paris the (q) ſame Year. This Book was Cenſured by Mr. Sallo the firſt time (r) it was Printed. The Author anſwer'd this Cenſure in a Piece Intitled, A Letter from a Friend of Mr. Patin, about the Journal of the Learned, for Febr. 23. 1665. Mr. Sallo, ſpeaking of this Letter, (ſ) continued to treat Mr. Patin with great Contempt; which very much anger'd Guy Patin, as appears by theſe words of his Lett. 351. I ſet 'em down ſomewhat at length, becauſe they inform us, among other things, of the reaſon which hinder'd Charles Patin from continuing his Apology. (f) "I do not know if you have re"ceiv'd a kind of Gazette, which is call'd the "Journal of the Learned, the Author whereof ha"ving complain'd of a little Article againſt my Son "Charles, concerning a Medal which was made here "the laſt Year for the Switzers, he has anſwer'd him. "I have ſent you his Anſwer, which is wiſe and "modeſt. This new Gazetteer has reply'd to him, "and there he ſpeaks as one that is ignorant and "extravagant. To which Reply he ſhould doubtleſs "have had a ſmart and ſtrong Anſwer, if Charles "had not been deſir'd to forbear his Reply, and "threaten'd with a Letter under the King's Signet. "The truth is, Mr. Colbert takes into his Protection "the Authors of this Journal, which is attributed to "Mr. Sallo, a Counſellor in Parliament; to the Ab"bot de Bourzé; to Mr. Gomberville; to Mr. Chapelain, &c. So that Charles is adviſ'd to delay his "Anſwer; and this is alſo the Opinion of the firſt "Preſident, who deſir'd it ſhou'd be ſo: The rea"ſon of it is ſaid to be, That he is not in favour "with Mr. Colbert, ſince the Suit of Mr. Fouquet. "We ſhall ſee hereafter, whether theſe pretended "Cenſurers, ſine ſuffragio Populi & Quiritum, have "Power and Authority to criticiſe thus all thoſe "Authors who do not write ſo as to pleaſe their "Palate. Are we in the times of Juvenal, who "ſaid boldly, Dat veniam corvis, vexat cenſura columbas! Yet there is one thing that comforts us, "and that is, That we are not to blame, and that "the Learned and Judicious are of our Opinion; "but theſe Gentlemen abuſe their Power. The Re"publick of Learning is on our ſide, but Mr. Colbert "is againſt us; and if my Son defends himſelf, 'tis "ſaid he will be ſent to the Baſtille: 'Tis better "therefore not to write.

(f) Guy Patin, Letter 351. p. 34, 35. of the 3d Tome. See alſo pag. 44, 54, 52, 63, 74. of the ſame Vol.

(I) The diſgrace of his . . . Son.] Charles Patin deplor'd it; he ſays, that Calumny had been the true cauſe of it. Cùm ecce ἀτυχία, ſays he, (a) verius διαβολὴν, & calumniam dixero, me præcipitem egit, & κακῶν ἰλιάδα intulit. Timanthum (b) imitari liceat, benigne lector, qui cùm mæſtos pinxiſſet adſtantes, & triſtitiæ omnem imaginem conſumſiſſet, ob Iphigeniam ſtantem ad aras perituram, patris vultum velavit quem ſatis mæſtum pingere deſperabat. Velum hic protendamus, ſeu dolore commoti ob fortunas perditas, ſeu charitate ob invidorum nequitiam. His Father was not ſo myſterious; he particularly mentions certain Cauſes, or rather Pretences, I know not what prohibited Books found in the Study of his Son. It will be better to hear him ſpeak: (c) "Every body pities "him, no body accuſes him, and he is belov'd by "every body, except ſome knaviſh Bookſellers. And "yet he is abſent, and we have oblig'd him to re"ſolve upon it in ſpite of his Stoical Humour. He "always hop'd that the Juſtice of the King would "extend to him, but our Enemies have too much "Power. Yet to allay the ſmart of our Wound, 'tis "ſaid, 1. That it is for contempt of the Court that "a Proceſs was commenc'd againſt him, as being "one that is abſent, and will not defend himſelf. "2. That it was by a ſovereign and particular Com"miſſion, without right of Appeal, which is extra"ordinary, and denotes ſo much the more the de"ſign there was to deſtroy him. 3. That the great"eſt part of the Judges have receiv'd Letters under "the King's Signet, and of recommendation to make "an Example of him. 4. 'Tis alledg'd, That "a Man of great Power, was our ſecret Enemy, "who promoted and manag'd the thing againſt "us; becauſe they found among thoſe Books ſome "Volumes of Mr. Fouquet's Caſe, and of the Hi"ſtory of the Enterprize of Gigeri. . . . Three "Books are nam'd, one full of Impiety, which "is an Huguenot Book, Intitled, The Anatomy of the Maſs, by Peter du Moulin, a Miniſter of "Charenton, as if the Inquiſition were in France. It "is a Six-peny Book: Paris is full of ſuch Books; "and there is ſcarce any Library in France where

(a) Carolus Patinus in Lyceo Patavino, pag. 91.

(b) He ſhould have ſaid Timanthem.

(c) Guy Patin's Lett. 458. p. 370 of the 3d Tom.

(k) There was found a Polypus in his Heart, and in the Aorta, wherewith he was choak'd. I have this from Mr. Drelincourt, Profeſſor at Leyden, to whom a Profeſſor of Padua, who was of the Retinue of the Venetian Ambaſſadors, told it. I mean the Ambaſſadors who arrived in Holland in Mar. 1696. to go and Congratulate H. B. M. They went, with all their Retinue, to a Lecture on of Mr. Drelincourt, Apr. 2. of the ſame Year, and paid him many Civilities, as he very well deſerv'd.

(l) See the Journal of Leipſic, in the Year 1684. pag. 587. and in 1691, pag. 337, and 547. News from the Repub. of Learn. Ap. 1685, p. 452. (m) Nouvel. &c. Ib. p. 453. (n) See the Journal of Leipſic, 1684. p. 35. (o) I uſe the Title which he uſes in his Catalogue, altho' the true Title is, An Introduction to Hiſtory by the knowledge of Medals. (p) At Amſterdam in 12o. (q) See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Dec. 1694. p. 174. (r) See the Journal of the Learned, Feb. 23. 1665. p. m. 150. (ſ) In the Journal of Mar. 9. 1665. p. m. 202.

what manner (Z) this was perform'd. This is not the only Work of Auguſtinus Patricius; he wrote another concerning the Ceremonies (ZZ) of the Pope's Chapel. He was Secretary to this Cardinal Francis Piccolomini, in his Legation of Germany, under the Pontificate of Paul II. γ. I ſhall examine whether Father Mabillon had reaſon to ſay, that there was another Auguſtinus (ZZZ) Patricius different from this.

PATRICIUS (Francis) Biſhop of Gaieta, a Native of Siena, ſhew'd a great reading, in his Books De Regno & regis Inſtitutione, and in thoſe, De Republicæ Inſtitutione. He Flouriſh'd in the Fifteenth Century. He is ſometimes δ confounded with another Francis PATRICIUS, a great Antiperipatetic Philoſopher, who was born ζ in the Territories of the Venetians, in the Year 1529, θ or in 1530, and who died at Rome, February the 6th ‡ 1597. Conſult Mr. Moreri, as alſo † Mr. Teiſſier. They have prevented me in moſt Things that I was to ſay, and therefore I ſhall only collect (A) ſome Errors, and obſerve ſome Things as to the Editions. I will “ ſome of them are not to be found; nay, there are “ ſome of them even in the Studies of the Monks. “ The ſecond is a Book, as they ſay, againſt the “ Service of the King, and that is, The Buckler of State, which was ſold publickly in the Palace-Yard, “ and to which there are two Anſwers in the Preſs “ here. The third is, The Gallant Hiſtory of the Court; “ which are little Libels that rather deſerve Contempt than Anger. I think that theſe Three Books “ are only a pretence, and that there is ſome ſecret Enemy that Acts againſt my Son, and is the “ cauſe of our Misfortune. In all this you ſee nothing that comes up to the Fact; I mean the cauſe which was given out in Paris, to be the true reaſon of the Diſgrace. It was ſaid, 1. That Charles Patin was ſent into Holland with an Order to buy up all the Copies of the Amours of the Royal Palace; and to burn them upon the place, without ſparing any. 2. That a great Prince gave him this Commiſſion, and promis'd to reward him for his pains. 3. That this Commiſſioner having bought up all the Copies, did not burn them, but ſent a great number of them into the Kingdom. This is the common Report, I know not whether it be well grounded.

(Z) After what manner this was perform'd.] Auguſtinus Patricius, among other Books, made uſe of two great Volumes, whereof the Cardinal of St. Mark lent him a Copy. He affirms, that he ſaw them at Baſil, where they are kept with a particular Care, as anciently the Books of the Sibyls were kept, and that John of Segovia, a Spaniard, call'd the Cardinal of St. Calixtus by the Council of Baſil, a Man who continued obſtinately in the Schiſm until Death, is the Author of theſe two Collections. He adds, that he made uſe of an Hiſtory which Dominick, Cardinal of Ferme had compos'd of the firſt part of this Council: This Cardinal was preſent there 'till the time of the Rupture between Eugenius the Fourth and that Aſſembly. Note, That the Work of Auguſtinus Patricius is not Printed. Mr. Rigault lent it in Manuſcript (d) to Spondanus (e).

(ZZ) He compoſed a Treatiſe concerning the Ceremonies of the Pope's Chappel.] The Latin words of Spondanus, whom I have followed, are (f) Librum de ritibus ſacelli Pontificii conſcripſit. 'Tis, without doubt, the ſame with that which I have ſpoken of elſewhere in relating a Paſſage of Mr. Couſin, where we ſee by whom, and how the Book of Auguſtin Patricius, concerning the Rites of the Roman Church, was publiſhed, and what were the Conſequences of that Publication. We ſee there alſo that Auguſtine Patricius was Nephew to Pius II. who had given him the Surname of Piccolomini, and that he began to be Maſter of the Ceremonies under the ſame Pope. 'Tis certain, that in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Book Sacrarum Ceremoniarum, inſerted by Father Mabillon in (h) the ſecond Tome of his Muſæum Italicum, and dated from Rome the firſt of March 1488, he calls himſelf Auguſtin Patricius Piccolomineus; but for all that I dare neither affirm, that Pope Pius II. gave him that Surname, or that he was his Uncle: It ſeems to me more probable, that he receiv'd it from his Maſter Cardinal Francis Piccolomini; however, I affirm nothing. I know that Pius II. confer'd the Name of Piccolomini on an Ingenious (i) Man, who was his Secretary, and whom he made Cardinal.

(ZZZ) Whether Father Mabillon had reaſon to ſay, that there was another Auguſtin Patricius different from this.] He has inſerted in the firſt Tome (k) of the Muſæum Italicum, the Life of Fabian Bencius, written by Auguſtin Patricius, Biſhop of Pienza, and he ſays (l) that this Biſhop, who was Maſter of the Ceremonies under the Pontificate of Innocent VIII. is different from Auguſtin Patricius, who was Secretary to Cardinal Francis Piccolomini, and who wrote an Account of what paſſed in the Diet of Ratiſbon, when that Cardinal was Nuncio there. So that there are, if we believe him, two Auguſtin Patricius's, who were Authors; one was Maſter of the Ceremonies, and afterwards Biſhop of Pienza, in 1483; the other Secretary to Francis Piccolomini. The firſt writ the Life of Fabian Bencius, and an Account (m) of the Emperor Frederick III's entrance into Rome: The ſecond drew up the Acts of a Diet of Ratiſbon. 'Tis of the latter, and not of the other, continues Father Mabillon, that Voſſius ſpeaks, in his Volume of the Latin Hiſtorians: You may obſerve, that Voſſius, (n) in effect, gives no other Title to his Auguſtin Patricius, than that of Secretary to Francis Picolomini, Cardinal of Siena; and that he attributes to him no other Book than that of the Relation of what was done at the Diet of Ratiſbon. He takes notice, that it was Dedicated by the Author in 1471, to James Piccolomini, Cardinal of Pavia; and he adds, (o) that Campanus called this Patricius, Cicero's Ape. I dare ſay, that Father Mabillon is miſtaken; it does not ſeem neceſſary to me to find here two Authors of the ſame Names, and I adhere to Spondanus, who ſays, that the ſame Auguſtin Patricius, Secretary to Francis Piccolomini, was Maſter of the Ceremonies, and Biſhop of Pienza.

(A) Collect ſome Errors, and obſerve.] GESNER (p) had no reaſon to believe, that Francis Patricius, the Sieneſe, did not, perhaps, differ from Franciſcus Lucius Durantinus, the Author of a Book De optima Republica adminiſtratione, Printed at Venice in the Year 1522. He ſhould have ſaid, That theſe are two Writers; for the Work of this Lucius is divided only into three Books, whereof the laſt is partly deſign'd to commend the Republick of Venice; but the Work of Patricius is divided into nine Books, and has nothing particular in behalf of the Venetians. In the Epitome of Geſner (q) Francis Patricius the Antiperipatetick is confounded with the Biſhop of Gaieta. The ſame Fault is to be found in the Oxford-Catalogue, for the Peripatetick Diſcuſſions, &c. and the Books De Regno and de Reipublicæ Inſtitutione, are attributed to one and the ſame Author. In the Epitome of Geſner we have two other Patricius's, who are meer Chimera's; for the pretended Fredericus Patricius Venetus, is no other than the Philoſopher who attack'd Ariſtotle. This appears plainly from hence, that the ſame Books (r) are attributed to him, which were before aſcrib'd to Franciſcus Patricius Senenſis. It can hardly be conceiv'd, that there ſhould be any Compilers ſo heedleſs: they ſay in the ſame Column of a Page, that Franciſcus Patricius Senenſis wrote the Peripatetick Diſcuſſions, and ten Dialogues in Italian, de legendæ ſcribendæque hiſtoriæ ratione, and that Fridericus Patricius Venetus, wrote the ſame Dialogues in Italian, and the Peripatetick Diſcuſſions. They tell us of one Franciſcus Patricius, whoſe Comm. were abridg'd, and Printed at Paris. It is the ſame Author of whom they had already given the Article: It is, I ſay, Franciſcus Patricius Senenſis. The Sieur KONIG deſerves ſome Cenſure; he did not know Patricius the Sieneſe, and applies to the other Patricius a Paſſage of Barthius, which cannot agree to him. Take notice, that according to him (s) that Patricius of whom he ſpeaks died at Rome in the Year 1597, and that he Characterizes him after ſuch a manner, that none can take him but for the Antiperipatetick. 'Tis therefore an Abſurdity to pretend, that, acording to Barthius, he was Beheaded. This will eaſily appear, if any one does but caſt his Eyes upon theſe words of Barthius: (t) Sed quid coacervemus plures? cum hanc rationem (u) æra pulſandi, neque aliam potuiſſe inducere videam qui horum clanγ Taken from Spondanus, ad ann. 1431. n. 9. p. m. 804.

---

δ See the Remark A.

ζ At Cliſſa in Iſtria, according to Thuanus l. 119. p. 817.

θ His Epiſtles before his Peripatetick Diſcuſſions imports, that he was in his 51 Year in 1580: and he ſays in the beginning of his Nova Philoſophia de Univerſis, that in 1588 he was writing this in the 58. Year of his Age.

‡ Thuanus Ibid. pag. 91.

† Additions to the Eloges taken from Thuanus.

(d) He took it out of the Kings Library.

(e) Taken from Spondanus, ad ann. 1431. n. 9. p. m. 805.

(f) Spond. as above.

(h) Page 244, &c.

(i) James Ammanatus, commonly known by the Name of Cardinal of Pavia. See the Nomenclator Cardinalium, p. m. 96.

(k) Page 251, &c.

(l) Mabillon Muſæum Italicum Tom. 1. p. 255.

(m) 'Tis in the Muſ. Ital. ib. p. 256, &c.

(n) Voſſius de Hiſtorici Latinus, pag. 604.

(o) Auguſtinum hunc ſimiam Ciceronis ob ſtudium ornandæ Dictionis appellat Campanus epiſtola quadam inter eas Piccolominæi quas diximus, Idib.

(p) Geſner in Biblioth. fol. 250, & 253, verſo

(q) Page 242.

(r) In the Epitome of Geſner.

(s) Konig. Biblioth. p. 612.

(t) Barth. in lib. 2. (and not 1. as Konig ſays) Thebaidos Statii, p. 437.

(u) He ſpeaks there of the Kettles that rung at the time of the Eclipſes of the Moon.

I will only add, That Francis Patricius, the Philoſopher, complains (B) very much of his clangorum meminerant, è quibus Pindarum & Steſichorum cum aliis jam olim produxit, & inde Juvenalem enarravit Franciſcus Patricius Lib. II. de Regno & Inſt. Regis, vir omnino meliore fato dignus, quam qui in patria ſua ſecuri capite truncatus fuerit, Anno M.CCCC.XLVII. aut paulo ante, ſcribente Raphaele Volaterrano Lib. XXI. Comm. Urbanor. Can a Paſſage that ſpeaks of a Man Beheaded in 1447, or a little before, be applied to a Man that died (c) in the Year 1597. I do not think that Barthius is guilty of an Error in Chronology, ſince although Volaterranus does not ſet down in what Year this Patricius was puniſh'd with Death, yet he ſufficiently intimates, that it was about that time. Having mention'd Gregory of Tifernum, and Antonius Panormita, he adds (d) Joannes Aurispa Secretarius Apoſtolicus ſub Eugenio inter eruditos non admodum ignobilis ea tempeſtate. Patricii quoque Senenſis, qui in factione Civitatis ſecuri percuſſus fuit magnopere commendatur oratio ſimul & eruditio. Petrus Candidus Nicolai V. Magiſter brevium fuit. This ſeems to ſhew that he ſpeaks of one Patricius who flouriſh'd under Eugenius IV. and who was not alive under Nicolas V. I confeſs this is not convincing, but however if Barthius has not hit right upon the Year, he is excuſable; and this Fault ought rather to be pardon'd in him, than that which he has committed, in ſuppoſing that an Author who was beheaded in 1447, is the ſame Francis Patricius of Siena, who wrote the Books de regno & inſt. regis. The Latter liv'd under (e) Sixtus IV, to whom he dedicated his Treatiſe de Republica, & Reipublicæ inſtitutione. Note, That Volaterranus in the 5th Book (f) of his Work, gives us to underſtand that the Patricius, whom the Sieneſe beheaded, was puniſh'd in that manner during the War they had with Picinin, who invaded one of their Cities, from whence they drove him away, being aſſiſted by Pope Calixtus. But that Pope was not choſen till the Year 1455. Mr. MORERI is to blame for not ſaying, that Patricius, the Sieneſe, was Biſhop of Gaieta. He aſſigns him the Biſhoprick of Cariati in Calabria; probably a Fault of the Printer, which he did not perceive in the Book of Aubertus Miræus, led him into this Miſtake. He had read in that Author (g) Franciſcus Patritius, Senenſis, præſul Caretanus, and not perceiving that it was to be read Caietanus, he made him to be Biſhop of Cariati in Calabria. 'Tis upon the Authority of the ſame Writer, that he has plac'd this Prelate in the beginning of the XVIth Century; which he had not done, if he had known that Francis Patricius, who was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Gaieta (h) by Pius II, died in the Year 1494. If Mr. Moreri who refers us to (i) Ughelli, had conſulted him, he would have ſeen this. What he ſays after Miræus concerning the Editions of the Works of his pretended Biſhop of Cariati, requires a little Supplement. The Latin Edition of the Nine Books de Regno, and of the Nine Books de Republica, printed at Paris in 1519, is accompanied with the Notes of John Savigni, (k) Cum Joannis Savigneii ſcholiis.... cum ejuſdem annotationibus. The Scholia belong to the Books de Regno, and the Notes to the Books de Republica. One Nicodon of Saimmaixent (l) publiſh'd the Books de Republica at Paris in 1580 in 16, and added to them the Contents of the Chapters, and the Citations of Authors, John le Blond Lord of Branville made ſome Extracts out of all theſe Works of Patricius, and publiſh'd them in French at Paris in 1550, as du Verdier informs us (m). Mr. Joly (n) obſerves that this John le Blond turn'd into French an Extract, or a Collection of the fineſt Maxims of Eraſmus's Book, de Inſtitutione Principis Chriſtiani, and that this Extract was printed at Paris in 1546, with the Abridgement of the Republick of Francis Patricius. He obſerves alſo that this Extract was compos'd by Giles d' Aurigni, call'd le Pamphile, an Advocate in the Parliament; and that it was printed at Paris in 1543, with an Abridgement of the Republick of Francis Patricius. We find in the Bibliotheque of du Verdier (o) that John du Ferey a Counſellor of the Kings Privy Council, tranſlated out of Latin the firſt Book of the Writings of Francis Patricius, a Sieneſe, Biſhop of Gaietta, which treat of the Reign or Government of one ſingle Perſon, call'd Monarchy, and of the Inſtitution of a good King, at Paris, 1577. in 8vo. There is a French Tranſlation of the Nine Books of the Republick, printed at Paris in 1610. in 8vo. The Author of that Verſion, is call'd the Sieur de la Monchettiere. I cannot tell, whether the Notes which are found at the End of each Chapter, are the Work of the Tranſlator, or only a Verſion of the Notes of John Savigni. Who would not imagine, after ſo many Additions, that it is an Admirable Work, and yet thoſe that are good Judges deſpiſe it. (p) Eodem fermè (q) tempore Franciſcus Patricius Senenſis Farraginem quandam exemplorum ſub Reipublicæ titulo, puerorum credo uſui, ac chriarum in Scholis compoſitioni, evulgavit; tantum diſſimilis alteri Franciſco Patricio Romano (r), qui nonnihil pariter de hac re inter opuſcula juvenilia protulit, quantum nilbus Aquilæ, aut anſer diſpar eſt olori.

You will find in the Treatiſe of the Origin of Printing at Paris, that the Edition which John Savigni put forth did not pleaſe him at all, although the Impreſſion was in a very good Letter. It was full of Faults, and this (ſ) vex'd him him ſo much the more, becauſe he had taken a great deal of Pains to correct thoſe that were in the MS; for you muſt know that this Edition was made from a MS, which John Prevoſt a Counſellor of the Parliament had brought from Italy. From whence one might perhaps conclude, that this Edition of Paris is the Firſt.

(B) Patricius the Philoſopher complains much of his Fate.] He regrets the Seven Years he had ſpent in the Iſle of Cyprus, being far diſtant from his Studies, and taken up with ſuch Affairs as were profitable only to others. Growing weary of his Pains, which were ſo little to his own Advantage, he applied himſelf to Philip Mocenigo Archbiſhop of that Iſle, and after he had been ſome time in his Houſe, he follow'd him to Venice, and then to Padua (t). Returning with great Satisfaction to his Studies, he wrote the Life of Ariſtotle; but his unhappy Fate took him off from this pleaſant Employment, and tranſported him into Spain, though from Nine Years of Age he had ſcarce done any thing but run from Place to Place, by Sea and by Land. (v) Ecce me fati quædam vis, quæ me novem annorum puerum, ad hanc uſque ætatem, peregrinationibus continuis terraque marique exercuerat, in Hiſpanias abripuit. He return'd to Venice at the End of Six Months, and finiſh'd the Life of Ariſtotle. This Work contain'd alſo a Judgment upon the Writings of this Philoſopher; in a Word it is the firſt (w) Volume of his Peripatetick Diſcuſſions. This is what the Epiſtle Dedicatory of this Volume informs us of. The Dedication of the ſecond diſcovers to us that the Author found a Place of Refuge at the Court of the Duke of Ferrara, and an Employ to his Mind, ſince he permitted him to teach in the Univerſity of Ferrara the Philoſophy of Plato. (x) Cui melius labores meos dicarem, thus he ſpeaks to Antony Montecatin, firſt Secretary to Alphonſus d' Eſt, the ſecond of that Name. . . . quam ei viro qui me peſſum Cyprico bello datum, peſſimorumque hominum ingratitudine, fraudibus, inſidiiſque agitatum, perque multos annos fortunæ adverſiſſimæ fluctibus actum, in portum recepit, in Sereniſſi. Principis hujus familiam interpoſuit, Platonicam philoſophiam, in ſingulare hujuſce Academiæ ornamentum publice profiteri dedit? Theſe are the heavy Complaints he makes in a few Words againſt the Malice of his envious Enemies, and the Hardneſs of his Fate. He repeats the ſame thing in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the 4th Tome; for in his Addreſs to a Biſhop, who had formerly been his Fellow Student at Padua, he informs him of the Entertainment he had found after many Misfortunes in the City of Modena, and how Ferrara ſerv'd him at laſt for a Harbour. (y) Neque enim locorum diſtantia, qua tu quidem per Italiam perque Galliam, ego vero per Dalmatiam, per Græciam, per Aſiam, ac demum per Hiſpaniam atque Galliam disjuncti poſtea ſemper fuimus, potuit eam oblivioni tradere, neque ex animis noſtris eradere fortuna diſpar, quæ te in arduis ſemper negotiis ac magnis magnorum principum habuit, donec ad eam dignitatem, qua nunc frueris, longè merito es evectus. Ego vero pauperie preſſus, dum aliena commoda curo, mea non curo, continuis itineribus terraque marique exercitus, Cyprica clade oppreſſus, atque ingratiſſimorum peſſimorumque hominum fraudibus inſidiiſque circumventus, Mutinæ in patria tua, te abſente, apud veteres amicos, apudque Alexandrum Baranzonum equitem, ac Tarquiniam Molziam ſingularem totius ſeculi fœminam, primum reſedi, poſtea è marinis fortunæque fluctibus in hunc portum ſum devectus. I do not find that he was Profeſſor at Padua, as (z) Lorenzo Craſſo, and after him Mr. Moreri ſay. It had been better to have follow'd

(c) In the Jugemens des Savans ſur les Poetes tom. 3. n. 1032. p. 45. 'Tis ſaid, that Francis Patricius was beheaded at Rome in 1597. viz. the Philoſopher that oppos'd Ariſtotle.

(d) Volaterran. Commentar. Urbanor. lib. 21. p. m. 773.

(e) Who was advanc'd to the Popedom in 1471.

(f) pag. m. 158.

(g) Miræus de ſcriptoribus ſæculi XVI. pag. 22.

(h) The 23*d of March* 1460. Ughelli ubi infra.

(i) Ughelli, Italia ſacra, tom. 1. p. 588.

(k) Epitome Bibliot. Geneſri.

(l) Ibid.

(m) Bibliot. Franc. p. 406.

(n) Joly, Conſeille Chretien the Preface. pag. 35. Edit. 1666.

(o) At p. 689, 690.

(p) Naudæi Bibliogr. polit. pag. m. 21.

(q) i. e. at the time when a Book of Robortel, and the Treatiſe of Jerom Vida de Republica, appear'd. Naudæus is miſtaken, for the Book of Patricius was dedicated to Pope Sixtus IV. Robortel & Vida were alive ſtill after the middle of the 16*th Century.*

(r) Naudæus is miſtaken, this Patricius was not a Roman, he was born in the Territories of Venice.

(ſ) At p. 187.

(t) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the firſt Tome of the Peripatetick Diſcuſſions.

[v] Ibid.

[w] It was printed at Venice, 1571. in 4.

[x] Patricius epiſt. dedicator. 2 Tom. diſcuſſ. peripatet. pag. 177. edit. Baſil 1581. in fol.

[y] Id. in epiſt. dedicatoria 4. tomi diſcuſſ. peripatet. ad Benedictum Manzolium epiſcopum Regienſem pag. 352.

[z] Lor. Craſſo Elogii d' huom. letter. tom. 1. pag. 22.

his Fate. He diſguiſ'd himſelf under the Name of † Francis Mutm in the Title Page of his Diſceptationes contra Theodori Angelutii calumnias. This Angelutius a famous Phyſician had undertaken againſt him a Defence of Ariſtotle. There is in the laſt Edition of Moreri's Dictionary, a new Article (C) about which I have a Remark to make.

PATRICIUS (Andrew) was one of the learned Men who were born in Poland in the XVI. Century. He ſtudied at Padua, and acquir'd the eſteem of the moſt famous Profeſſors of that Country, particularly of Sigonius and Paul * Manutius. He publiſh'd ſome Works (D) that made him famous, and got good Benefices in his own Country. He was Provoſt of the Church of Warſaw, Archdeacon of Wilna, and at laſt Biſhop of Wenden. The King of Poland, Stephen Battori, having recover'd Livonia, which the Muſcovites had uſurp'd, erected a Biſhoprick in the City of Wenden, and gave it to our Patricius, who enjoy'd it not very long, for he died quickly after. This was in the Year 1583 ‡.

PAUL (Father) a Religious Servite, and Theologer of the Republick of Venice. See SARPI.

PAULICIANS. Thus were the Manichees in Armenia call'd, when one Paul became their Head in the VII. Century †. " They arriv'd at ſo great a Power " (1) either by the Weakneſs of the Government, or by the Protection of the Saracens, or even by the favour of the Emperor Nicephorus, who favour'd that Sect " very much, that at laſt, being perſecuted by the Empreſs Theodora, the Wife of " Baſil, follow'd Thuanus (aa), who ſays that Patricius having been Profeſſor ſeventeen Years at Ferrara, went from thence (bb) to Rome, being invited by Clement VIII.

A certain Perſon told me the other Day, Patricius was born at Cliſſa in Iſtria, as Thuanus affirms, and there is a Fortreſs call'd Cliſſa in Dalmatia; it may be therefore that Franciſcus Patricius Dalmata, does not differ from this Patricius, altho' Mr. Teiſſier (a) deſires us " to take heed that we do not confound Francis Patricius, of whom we now ſpeak, " with Francis Patricius born in Sclavonia, who is " the Author of a Book entituled, Eſpoſitione delli oracoli di Leone Imperatore (b). I anſwered poſitively, that there is no diſtinction to be made between them. Thuanus in the firſt Book de vita ſua, gives the Epithet of Dalmata to Franciſcus Patricius, the Author of the Peripatetick Diſcuſſions. I was not ſo poſitive about theſe Words of the Book of Mr. Teiſſier, (c) His new Philoſophy about the Univerſals. He has ill tranſlated, ſaid that Perſon to me, the Nova de univerſis Philoſophia of Thuanus. This Tranſlation means that this Philoſopher propos'd new Doctrines about the Genus, Species, Differentia, Proprium & Accidens: And 'tis no wiſe probable, that he would take the Pains to refute the Schoolmen about ſuch things, in all that work. I durſt not be poſitive.

NOW I know what is the Book which Mr. Teiſſier call'd New Philoſophy about the Univerſals: But he ſhould not have thus tranſlated the Latin Title of this Work; for it treats not at all of the Univerſals. It is a Folio, and the Edition of Venice, 1593. apud Robertum Meiettum, has this Title Page: Nova de Univerſis Philoſophia libris quinquaginta comprehenſa. In qua Ariſtotelica methodo non per motum, ſed per lucem & lumina ad primam cauſam aſcenditur. Deinde nova quadam ac peculiari methodo tota in contemplationem venit divinitas. Poſtremo methodo Platonica rerum univerſitas à conditore Deo deducitur. Auctore Franciſco Patricio Philoſopho eminentiſſimo, & in celeberrimo Romano Gymnaſio ſumma cum laude eandem Philoſophiam publice interpretante, quibus poſtremo ſunt adjecta Zoroaſtris oracula CCCXX. ex Platonicis collecta. Hermetis Triſmegiſti libelli & fragmenta quotcunque reperiuntur ordine ſcientifico diſpoſita. Aſclepii diſcipuli tres libelli. Myſtica Ægyptiorum à Platone dictata, ab Ariſtotele excepta, & perſcripta Philoſophia. Platonicorum dialogorum novus penitus a Franciſco Patricio inventus ordo ſcientificus. Capita demum multa in quibus Plato concors, Ariſtoteles vero Catholicæ fidei adverſarius oſtenditur. You have ſeen that the Title promiſes only 50 Books; yet the whole Work is divided into four Parts, whereof the Firſt contains 10 Books, the Second 22, the Third 5, and the Fourth, 32, which makes in all 69 Books. The Author intitles the Firſt, Panaugia, the Second, Panarchia, the Third, Pampſychia, and the Fourth, Pancoſmia. He treats of the ſublimeſt Queſtions in Phyſicks and Metaphyſicks, and this he does upon Hypotheſes altogether extraordinary. He vents many Paradoxes, but not without diſcovering an admirable and profound Genius. He dedicated this Work to Pope Gregory the XIVth, and the Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated at Ferrara, Auguſt the 5th, 1591. This Book was cenſur'd (d), and the Author was oblig'd to retract, which he did a ittle before his Death (e).

(C) A New Article, upon which I have a Remark to make.] This New Article is that of PATRICIUS (Francis), and is to be found at Page 133, of the Paris Edition 1699. It contains this; That this Francis Patricius, " liv'd in the XVII. Century; that he wrote " in Italian a Hiſtory of Poetry, divided into Ten " Books; that he does only act the Part of an Hiſtorian in this Work, without enlarging much upon " the Rules of Art; that his Head was cut off at Rome " in 1597. Janus Nicius Erythræus is cited in Pinacotheca I. page 204 and 205. My firſt Obſervation will be, That this Francis Patricius ought not to be the Subject of a New Article, ſince he does not any wiſe differ from Francis Patricius the Philoſopher, who is in page 134. The Proofs of this are demonſtrative; for it is moſt evident, that Nicius Erythræus in the Place cited, ſpeaks only of Francis Patricius, the Adverſary of Ariſtotle, and that he ſays two or three Things of him, which Moreri attributes to Patricius at page 134. 'Tis certain alſo, that Erythræus aſcribes to Patricius a Book de Arte Poetica, which is the ſame with that wherein, if we may believe Father Rapin cited by Mr. Baillet (f), he contents himſelf with " acting the part of an Hiſtorian, without enlarging much upon the Rules of Art. I ſhall obſerve by the bye, that it is very probable that this Jeſuit did ſcarce know this Piece of Francis Patricius. It is a Work divided into two (g) Decads, in the firſt of which the Author writes like an Hiſtorian, and in the ſecond, like a Diſputant (h) who preſſes Ariſtotle very hard. My ſecond Obſervation is, that ſince they intended to ſpeak only to the Diſadvantage of this Work, they ought not to have cited only Janus Nicius Erythræus, who ſpeaks very much to its Advantage. (i) Edidit de ſcribenda hiſtoria tres Dialogos, & de Arte Poetica totidem decades, quibus precium ſtatui pro illorum æſtimatione vix poteſt. Neither ſhould they have obſerved, that this Work is divided into Ten Books; for Erythræus ſuppoſes that it contain'd three Decads. I believe he is miſtaken, but 'tis certain that it contains two. Laſtly, They ſhould not have ſaid, that Patricius was beheaded; for it is falſe, and it is no where to be found in the Author whom they cite. To place in the XVII. Century a Man who is believ'd to have had his Head cut off in 1597, is a Fault that ought to be aſcribed to the Printers, but not that of ſaying (k) that Gaietta is in Calabria.

(D) He publiſh'd ſome Works which made him famous.] He had carefully cultivated the Study of philological Learning, and wrote in Latin with ſome politeneſs. Which appears by his Commentaries on two Orations of Cicero, and by the Harangues he made to the King of Poland, Stephen Battori, to congratulate him in the Name of the Clergy of Warſaw, for having beaten

---

† Random. de fat. & vita termini pag. m. 27.

* See the three Letters which Paul Manutius wrote to Andrew Patricius. They are the 19th and 20th of the 4th Book, and the 6th of the 3d.

‡ Taken from Simon Starovolſcius in Elogiis centum Polonorum pag. 27. 28.

† Biſhop of Meaux, in his Hiſt. of Variations l. 11. n. 13. p. m. 128.

(1) Cedrenus tom. 2. pag. 480.

(aa) Thuanus l. 119. pag. 817.

(bb) Lor. Craſſo ib. and Moreri, place his Profeſſorſhip at Rome, before that which 'tis pretended he had at Padua.

(a) Teiſſier Eloges, tom. 2. p. 279. Edit. 1696.

(b) See Hankius de ſcriptor. Byzantinis. part 1. p. 417.

(c) Ubi ſupra. pag. 277.

(d) Thuan. lib. 119. pag. 817.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) In the 1. Tome of the Jugement ſur les Poetes n. 1062. p. 45.

(g) Della Poetica deca iſtoriale. Della Poetica deca diſputata. This Work was printed at Ferrara in 1586.

(h) Lorenzo Craſſo, elogii tom. 1. pag. 62.

(i) Nicius Erythræus Pinac. 1. pag. 204, 205.

(k) This is found in Moreri's Dictionary of the Holland Edition, 1698. and in that of Paris, 1699. in the Article Patricius, the Author of the Book de regno & regis inſtitutione.

" Baſil, (s) they were able to build Towns, and to take up Arms againſt their " Princes. Thoſe Wars were long and bloody under the Empire of Baſil the Ma- " cedonian, i. e. at the End of the IXth Century. Nevertheleſs there was ſo great a (A) Slaughter of thoſe Hereticks under the Empreſs Theodora, that it ſeem'd they would never be able to riſe again. It is thought that the Preachers whom they ſent (B) into Bulgaria, ſettled there the Manichean Hereſy, and that † from thence it ſpread it ſelf ſoon after into the other Parts of Europe. They condemn'd the Worſhip of Saints, (C) and the Images of the Croſs; but this was not their principal Character. Their fundamental Doctrine, was that of Two Coeternal Principles, and independent one upon another. This Doctrine at firſt hearing creates Horror, and conſequently 'tis ſtrange, that the Manichean Sect (D) could ſeduce ſo great a Part of the World. But on the other Side, 'tis ſo difficult (E) to Anſwer their Objections, about the Origin of Evil, that we muſt not wonder that the Hypotheſis of two Principles, the one Good and the other Bad, ſhould have dazzled the Eyes of beaten thrice the Army of the Muſcovites. The Pains he took, and which doubtleſs were very great, to collect together the Fragments of Cicero, diſcovered a great many good things, which a great many learned Men would not have diſcover'd, when they lay ſcatter'd up and down before he had collected them. The Works of Cicero which are loſt by the Injury of Time, were ſome of the fineſt that he wrote. Many Paſſages of them which are found in St. Auguſtin and elſewhere, are admirable; but how many learned Men are there, who would never have ſought for them in thoſe Places? It is therefore a great Advantage to them that Andrew Patricius has collected together theſe Fragments. He wrote alſo ſome Works of Controverſy, Paralleli Eccleſiæ Orthodoxæ cum Synagoga Hæreticorum. De vera & falſa Eccleſia libri quinque (l).

(A) So great a Slaughter of theſe Hereticks.] There is mention made of it in the Supplement (a) to Moreri's Dictionary, Father Maimbourg is cited there, whoſe own Words are theſe, (b) "Theodora . . . reſolv'd effectu- " ally to procure the Converſion of thoſe Paulici- " ans, or to rid the Empire of them, if they ob- " ſtinately oppos'd their true Happineſs. . . . . 'Tis " true that thoſe to whom ſhe gave a Commiſſion " and Forces to compaſs this Deſign, us'd them with " too much Rigour and Cruelty; for inſtead of en- " deavouring to bring them at firſt by mild and " gentle Ways, and with a charitable Diſpoſition, " to the Knowledge of the Truth, they ſeized " thoſe wretched People, that were ſcatter'd in the " Cities and Burroughs, and, as is ſaid, they kill'd " near a hundred thouſand of them all over Aſia, by " all kinds of Deaths, which oblig'd all the reſt to " go and yield themſelves up to the Saracens, who " knew very well, how to make uſe of them ſome " time after againſt the Greeks. But the Empreſs " who had no hand in this Inhumanity of her Lieu- " tenants, did nevertheleſs draw this Advantage " from it, that the Empire at leaſt was purg'd from " this Vermine, during her Reign of fourteen Years. Theſe Ways of Converting are altogether Mahometan, and confirm what I have ſaid elſewhere, (c) That the Chriſtians have been infinitely more cruel than the Followers of Mahomet, againſt thoſe who were not of their Religion.

(B) The Preachers which they ſent into Bulgaria.] Petrus (d) Siculus who was ſent by the Emperor Baſil, the Macedonian, " to Tibrica in Armenia, one " of the Places of theſe Hereticks, to treat with " them about the Exchange of Priſoners . . . (e) " diſcover'd during the time of his Embaſſy, that " it had been reſolv'd in the Council of theſe Pauli- " cians, to ſend ſome Preachers of their Sect into Bul- " garia, to ſeduce the People that were newly con- " verted. Thrace bordering upon this Province, " had been a long time ago infected with this Here- " ſy: and therefore there was but too much reaſon " to fear for the Bulgarians, if the Paulicians, who " were the moſt cunning of the Manichees, ſhould " attempt to ſeduce them; and this oblig'd Petrus " Siculus, to addreſs to their Archbiſhop the Book " (f) we have mention'd, that he might fore-arm " them againſt ſo dangerous Hereticks. But in " ſpite of all his Care 'tis manifeſt, that the Mani- " chean Hereſy took deep Root in Bulgaria.

(C) The Worſhip of Saints, and the Images of the Croſs.] " (g) Petrus Siculus relates, that a Mani- " chean Woman ſeduc'd an Ignorant Layman " call'd Sergius, by telling him the Catholicks ho- " nour'd Saints as Deities, and that it was for that " Reaſon, that the Laity were hindred from reading " the Holy Scripture, for fear they ſhould diſco- " ver many ſuch like Errors. See what has been cited from Father Maimbourg in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(D) Could ſeduce ſo great a Part of the World.] We have ſeen elſewhere (h) with what earneſtneſs Pope Leo admoniſhes all the Biſhops, that they ſhould not ſuffer thoſe Hereticks condemn'd to Baniſhment by the Imperial Laws, to find any Place of Refuge. Yet this Hereſy ſupported it ſelf, and it became neceſſary to perſecute it with Laws much more ſevere, and to condemn to Death all thoſe who ſhould make Profeſſion of it; nevertheleſs " (i) it " continued and ſpread. The Emperor Anaſtaſi- " us, and Theodora the Wife of Juſtinian favour'd " it. The Followers of it appear under the Chil- " dren of Heraclius, i. e. in the ſeventh Century, " in Armenia. We have already ſpoken of the great Progreſs it made there. We have already ſeen that the Maſſacre of 100000 Paulicians did not hinder the ſpreading of it in Thrace and Bulgaria. It infected afterwards great Numbers of Perſons in many Provinces of France. Conſult the Biſhop of Meaux (k). Lambert Danæus obſerves, that it made a great Devaſtation in Perſia, Syria, and Meſopotamia, under the Emperor Anaſtaſius, and in Sicily under Pope Gregory the Great. (l) Romam ipſam occupavit hæc hæreſis, unde tamen expulſa eſt à Leone Pontifice Romano circa annum à Chriſto paſſo 414. In Arabia tamen, Perſide & Ægypto maximè viguit patuitque, unde poſtea Mahumetiſmus tanquam ex ſerpentis vipereque ovo enatus & excluſus. Diutiſſimè etiam ſubſtitit. Nam & Anaſtaſii Imperatoris temporibus adhuc in Perſide, Meſopotamia, & Syria graſſabatur apertè, & Gregorii Magni Pontificatu in Sicilia, id eſt, annos poſt Manetem mortuum plus quam 340: ut apparet ex Gregorii epiſt. 6. lib. 4. & P. Diaconi lib. 15. Hiſtoria, ubi Indaganam eorum Epiſcopum commemorat. I dare not affirm, that it ſpread into the Provinces of the Eaſt, where the Doctrine of two Principles is diſcover'd, among ſome Infidel Nations; for they might have receiv'd it by other Means than by the Manichees. I approve the Thought of Lewis Thomaſſin. " The " Relations that are often given us of Aſia, diſco- " ver that there are ſtill, ſays he (m), ſome Mani- " chees at this day, beyond the Bounds of the An- " cient Roman Empire. I cannot very poſitively " affirm, that they are the Remainder, or the Po- " ſterity of thoſe who were ſo often proſcrib'd in " the whole Roman Empire, and who retir'd into " the Neighbouring Provinces. There is in this " ſome probability, but not the ſame certainty, as " when we ſaid the ſame thing of the Arians, Neſto- " rians and Eutychians. Theſe are truly Hereticks, " who could not have their Original but from the " Catholick Church in their time, whoſe Bowels " they tore to come forth from it. But the Mani- " chees originally came from the Eaſt, as deſcen- " ding from the ancient Idolaters, who admitted " alſo two firſt Principles, one of Good, the other " of Evil, as you may read in Plutarch, and many " other Profane Hiſtorians.

(E) 'Tis ſo difficult to anſwer the Objections of the Manichees about the Origine of Evil.] I have (n) prepar'd my Readers to ſee here three Obſervations which I ſhould have plac'd in the Article of the Manichees, but that I had a mind to avoid Prolixity in that Place. Let us now perform our Promiſe, and not fruſtrate the Expectation of thoſe who have a mind to attend our Reference. I ſhall hereafter place by themſelves (o) the ſecond and third Obſervation: But here follows the firſt.

The

(s) Ibid. pag. 141.

† Hiſt. of the Variat. l. 16. n. 16. pag. 141.

(l) See Staroveljeius in elog. centum Polonorum pag. 26.

(a) Under the word Paulicians.

(b) Maimbourg's Hiſt. of the Iconoclaſts B. 5. p. 253. Holl. Edit. ad an. 845.

(c) In the Article Mahomet pag. 1975. 1981.

(d) Bp. of Meaux Hiſt. of the Variations l. 11. n. 14.

(e) Ibid. n. 16.

(f) 'Tis a Book whoſe Title is Hiſtoria de Manichæis. Radreus tranſlated it out of Greek into Latin, and publiſh'd it at Ingolſtad with Notes. in 1604. in 4to.

(g) Hiſt. of the Variations ib. n. 15.

(h) In the Article Manichees Remark E.

(i) Hiſt. of the Variations ib. n. 13.

(k) Hiſt. of the Variat. l. 11.

(l) Lambert. Danæus in Auguſtin. de hæreſib. c. 45. fol. m. 119. verſo.

(m) Thomaſſin of the Unity of the Church, Tom. 1. part. 2. chap. 9. pag. 373.

(n) In the Article Manichees.

(o) In the Remarks G and H.

of many Ancient Philoſophers, and then found ſo many Followers in Chriſtendom, where the Doctrine which teaches the Capital Enmity of the Devils to the true God,

The Fathers of the Church, who have ſo well refuted the Marcionites, the Manichees, and in general all thoſe who admitted two Principles, have not well anſwer'd the Objections which relate to the Origin of Evil. They ſhould have abandoned all the Reaſons à priori, as the Outworks of a Place, which may be inſulted, and cannot be maintain'd; they ſhould have contented themſelves with Reaſons à poſteriori, and placed all their Forces behind this Entrenchment. The Old and New Teſtament are two Parts of Revelation, which mutually confirm one another; ſince therefore theſe Hereticks acknowledged the Divine Authority of the New, it was no difficult Matter to prove to them the Divine Authority of the Old, after which it was eaſie to deſtroy their Objections, by ſhewing that they are contrary to Experience. According to Scripture there is but one Good Principle, and yet Moral and Phyſical Evil have been introduc'd among Mankind: It is not therefore contrary to the Nature of a Good Principle, to permit the Introduction of Moral Evil, and to puniſh Crimes; for it is not more evident, that four and four are eight, than that if a thing come to paſs, 'tis poſſible. Ab actu ad potentiam valet conſequentia, is one of the cleareſt and moſt unconteſtable Axioms in Metaphyſicks. This is an impregnable Rampart, and this is ſufficient to render the Cauſe of the Orthodox victorious, altho' their Reaſons à priori may be refuted. But may they be ſo, will ſome ſay? I will anſwer, yes; the Manner of introducing Evil, under the Empire of a Sovereign Being, infinitely Good, infinitely Holy, and infinitely Powerful, is not only inexplicable but incomprehenſible; and all that is objected againſt the Reaſons why this Being has permitted Evil, is more agreeable to natural Light, and the Idea's we have of Order, than theſe Reaſons are. Let us conſider well this Paſſage of Lactantius, which contains an Anſwer to an Objection of Epicurus. (a) Deus, inquit Epicurus, aut vult tollere mala, & non poteſt; aut poteſt, & non vult; aut neque vult, neque poteſt; aut & vult & poteſt. Si vult, & non poteſt, imbecillis eſt, quod in Deum non cadit. Si poteſt & non vult, invidus, quod æque alienum à Deo. Si neque vult neque poteſt, & invidus & imbecillis eſt; ideoque neque Deus. Si vult & poteſt, quod ſolum Deo convenit, unde ergo ſunt mala? aut cur illa non tollit? Scio pleroſque Philoſophorum, qui Providentiam defendunt, hoc argumento perturbari ſolere, & invitos pene adigi, ut Deum nihil curare fateantur, quod maxime quærit Epicurus. Sed nos ratione perſpecta, formidoloſum hoc argumentum facile diſſolvimus. Deus enim poteſt, quicquid velit; & imbecillitas, vel invidia in Deo nulla eſt: poteſt igitur mala tollere, ſed non vult; nec ideo tamen invidus eſt. Idcirco enim non tollit, quia & ſapientiam (ſicut docui) ſimul tribuit, & plus boni, ac jucunditatis in ſapientia, quam in malis moleſtiæ. Sapientia etiam facit, ut etiam Deum cognoſcamus, & per eam cognitionem immortalitatem aſſequamur, quod eſt ſummum bonum. Itaque niſi prius malum agnoverimus, nec bonum poterimus agnoſcere. Sed hoc non vidit Epicurus, nec alius quiſquam; ſi tollantur mala, tolli pariter ſapientiam; nec ulla in homine virtutis remanere veſtigia; cujus ratio ſuſtinenda & ſuperanda malorum acerbitate conſiſtit. Itaque propter exiguum compendium ſublatorum malorum maximo, & vero, & proprio nobis bono careremus. Conſtat igitur, omnia propter hominem propoſita, tam mala, quam etiam bona.

The whole Strength of the Objection could not be more ſincerely repreſented; Epicurus himſelf could not have propos'd it with greater Clearneſs and Strength. See the Margin (b). But the Anſwer of Lactantius is pitiful, and 'tis not only weak, but full of Errors, and perhaps of Hereſies. It ſuppoſes that God muſt produce Evil, becauſe otherwiſe he would not be able to communicate either Wiſdom or virtue, or the Knowledge of what is Good. Can any thing be ſhown more monſtrous than this Doctrine? Does it not overthrow all that Divines tell us about the Happineſs of Paradiſe, and the State of Innocence? They tell us that Adam and Eve in this happy State felt, without any Mixture of Uneaſineſs, all the Pleaſures, which that delicious and charming Place, the Garden of Eden, where God placed them, could afford 'em. They add, that if they had not ſinn'd, they and all their Poſterity ſhould have enjoy'd this Happineſs, without being ſubject either to Diſeaſes or Troubles, and that neither the Elements nor Animals, had ever done 'em any harm. It was their Sin that expos'd them to Cold and Heat, to Hunger and Thirſt, to Pain and Sorrow, and to the Miſchiefs which certain Beaſts do us. So far is it from being true, that Virtue and Wiſdom cannot belong to a Man without Phyſical Evil, as Lactantius affirms, that on the contrary it muſt be maintain'd, that Man has been ſubject to this Evil, only becauſe he renounc'd Virtue and Wiſdom. If the Doctrine of Lactantius were good, we muſt neceſſarily ſuppoſe, that the good Angels are Subject to a thouſand Inconveniencies, and that the Souls of the Bleſſed do alternately change from Joy to Sorrow; ſo that in the Manſions of Glory, and in the Boſom of the Beatifick Viſion, none are ſecur'd from Adverſity. Nothing is more contrary to the unanimous Sentiment of Divines, and to right Reaſon, than this Doctrine. It is alſo true in Philoſophy, That 'tis no wiſe neceſſary, that our Soul ſhould feel Evil, to the end it may reliſh what is Good, and that it ſhould paſs ſucceſſively from Pleaſure to Pain, and from Pain to Pleaſure, that it may be able to diſcern that Pain is an evil, and that Pleaſure is a good Thing. And thus Lactantius does not leſs thwart the Light of Nature, than the Reaſons of Divines. We know by Experience, that our Soul cannot feel at one and the ſame time both Pleaſure and Pain; it muſt therefore at firſt either have felt Pain before Pleaſure, or Pleaſure before Pain. If its firſt Senſation was that of Pain, it found that State to be uneaſy, although it was ignorant of Pleaſure. Suppoſe then that its firſt Senſation laſted many Years without interruption, you may conceive that it was in an eaſy Condition, or in one that was uneaſy. And do not alledge to me Experience; do not tell me, that a Pleaſure which laſts a long time becomes inſipid, and that a long Pain becomes ſupportable; for I will anſwer you, that this proceeds from a Change in the Organ, which makes that Pain which continues the ſame as to Kind, to be different as to Degrees. If you have had at firſt a Senſation of ſix Degrees, it will not continue of ſix to the end of two Hours, or to the end of a Year, but only either of one Degree, or of one 4th Part of a Degree. Thus Cuſtom blunts the Edge of our Senſations; their Degrees correſpond to the Concuſſions of the parts of the Brain, and this Concuſſion is weakned by frequent Repetitions, from whence it comes to paſs that the Degrees of Senſation are diminiſh'd. But if Pain or Joy were communicated to us in the ſame Degree ſucceſſively for a hundred Years, we ſhould be as unhappy or as happy in the hundredth Year as in the firſt Day; which plainly proves that a Creature may be happy with a continued Good, or unhappy with a continued Evil; and that the Alternative, which Lactantius ſpeaks of, is a bad Solution of the Difficulty. It is not founded upon the Nature of Good and Evil, nor upon the Nature of the Subject which receives them, nor upon the Nature of the Cauſe which produces them. Pleaſure and Pain are no leſs proper to be communicated the ſecond Moment than the firſt, and the third moment than the ſecond, and ſo of all the reſt. Our Soul is alſo as ſuſceptible of them after it has felt them one Moment, as it was before it felt them, and God who gave them is no leſs capable of producing them the ſecond Moment than the firſt. This is what we learn from the natural Idea's we have of theſe Objects. Chriſtian Theology confirms this invincibly, ſince it teaches us, that the Torments of the damn'd ſhall be eternal and continued, and as ſharp at the End of a hundred thouſand Years as at the firſt Day; and that on the contrary the Pleaſures of Paradiſe ſhall laſt eternally and continually, without ever abating of their Vigor. I would gladly know, whether ſuppoſing a Thing which is very eaſy, that there were two Suns in the World, whereof one ſhould riſe when the other ſets, we muſt not conclude, that Darkneſs would be unknown to Mankind. According to this fine Philoſophy of Lactantius, we muſt alſo conclude, that a Man could not know the Light, he

ONE may feel one of the Contraries without having ever felt the other.

(a) Lactant. de ira Dei cap. 13. pag. m. 548.

(b) Note that this Objection of Epicurus does not concern moral Evil, and if it did, it would yet be more difficult to be anſwer'd.

God, is always accompanied with the Doctrine, which teaches the Rebellion and Fall of one [illegible] of the good Angels. This Hypotheſis of Two Principles would probably and ſee the Objects before him, &c. See the Margin (e).

(e) I will cite hereafter a Paſſage of Plutarch, which may be applied againſt the Anſwers of Lactantius.

What I have juſt now ſaid, proves invincibly, I think, that there is no Advantage to be gain'd againſt our Paulicians, by repreſenting to them, that God has mingled Good and Evil, only becauſe he foreſaw that a pure and unmix'd Good would ſeem to us too inſipid in a little time. They will anſwer that this Property is not contain'd in the Idea we ought to have of a good Thing, and that it is directly contrary to the common Doctrine about the Happineſs of Paradiſe. And as to the Experience which teaches us but too much, 1. That the Joys of this Life are not ſenſible, but proportionably as they deliver us from a troubleſom State: 2. That they draw after them ſome Diſguſt, when they have continued a little while: they will maintain, that this Phænomenon is inexplicable, unleſs we have Recourſe to the Hypotheſis of two Principles. For if we depend, will they ſay, only upon one Cauſe Almighty, infinitely Good and infinitely Free, and which diſpoſes univerſally of all Beings, according to the Pleaſure of his own Will, we ought not to feel any Evil, all our Goods ought to be pure, and we ought never to have the leaſt Diſlike. The Author of our Being, if he is infinitely Beneficent, ought to take a continual Pleaſure in making us happy, and preventing every thing that may diſturb or diminiſh our Joy: For it is a Character eſſentially contain'd in the Idea of ſupream Goodneſs. The Fibers of our Brain, cannot be the Cauſe that God weakens our Pleaſures; for according to you, he is the only Author of Matter; he is Almighty, and nothing can hinder him from acting according to the full extent of his infinite Goodneſs; he needs only Will, that our Pleaſures ſhould not depend upon the Fibres of our Brain, and if he wills that they ſhould depend upon them, he can preſerve theſe Fibres eternally in the ſame State; he needs only will that they ſhould not wear out at all, or that the Damage they ſuffer ſhould be quickly repair'd. You cannot therefore explain what we Experience, but by the Hypotheſis of two Principles. If we feel Pleaſure, it is the good Principle that gives it to us; but if we do not feel it perfectly pure, and if we are quickly diſguſted with it, it is becauſe there is an ill Principle that croſſes the Good. The Latter, to be even with him, makes our Pains leſs ſenſible by Cuſtom, and gives us always ſome hopes in the greateſt Evils. This and the good Uſe that is often made of Adverſity, and the bad Uſe that is often made of Proſperity, are Phænomena, which are admirably explain'd according to the Manichean Hypotheſis. Theſe are things which lead us to ſuppoſe, that the two Principles made an Agreement which reciprocally limits their Operations. The Good Principle cannot do us all the Good he deſires: It was neceſſary that in order to do us a great deal of Good, he ſhould conſent, that his Adverſary ſhould do us as much Evil; for without this Conſent the Chaos would ſtill have remain'd a Chaos, and no Creature would ever have felt what is Good. Thus the Good Principle finding it a better Way for his own Satiſfaction, to ſee the World ſometimes happy and ſometimes miſerable, than never to ſee it happy, made an Agreement which produc'd the Mixture of Good and Evil we now ſee in Mankind. By aſcribing to your Principle an Almighty Power, and the Glory of enjoying Eternity alone, you have depriv'd him of an Attribute which goes before all the reſt; for optimus precedes always maximus in the Style of the moſt knowing Nations, when they ſpeak of God. You ſuppoſe that having nothing to hinder him from loading his Creatures with good Things, he oppreſſes them with Evils; and if any of them be advanc'd, it (b) is that their Fall may be the greater: We clear him from any Guilt in all this Matter, we explain without impeaching his Goodneſs, all that can be ſaid of the Inconſtancy of Fortune, the Jealouſy of Nemeſis, and the continual Sport which Æſop makes the Employment of God: (c) He exalts Things, ſays he, that are low, and abaſes Things that are high. He could obtain no more, ſay we, from his Adverſary: His Goodneſs extended as far as it could; if he does us no more Good, it is becauſe he can not; we have no Reaſon therefore to complain.

(b) Tolluntur in altum ut lapſu graviore ruant. Claudian. in Rufinum lib. 1. circa init.

(c) See the Article Æſop.

Who will not admire and deplore the Fate of our Reaſon! Behold here the Manichees, who with an Hypotheſis altogether abſurd and contradictory, explain what we experience, a hundred times better than the Orthodox do, with a ſuppoſition ſo juſt, ſo neceſſary, and ſo true of one firſt Principle, which is infinitely Good and Almighty.

Let us ſhow, by another Example, the bad ſucceſs of the Fathers in their Diſputes againſt theſe Hereticks, with reſpect to the origine of Evil. Here follows a Paſſage of St. Baſil: (d) At neque à Deo ipſum malum profluxiſſe, pium eſt dicere: propterea quod nihil contrariorum à contrario ſuo gignitur --- at ſi nec ingenitum, inquies, ipſum malum nec à Deo profluxit, unde naturam ſortitur? Nam mala eſſe nemo particeps vitæ contradixerit. Quid igitur eſt dicendum: nempe malum non eſſentiam viventem animaque præditam eſſe; ſed affectionem animæ, virtuti contrariam, deſidioſis ac inertibus, propterea quod à bono deciderunt, inditam. Noli itaque malum foriſecus circumſpicere, atque inquirere, neque quandam naturam Principem malignitatis imaginare, ſed malitiæ quiſque ſuæ ſeipſum Autorem agnoſcat. Nam ſemper ea, quæ nobis eveniunt, partim è natura proficiſcuntur, ut ſenectus, ut infirmitas: partim ſuâ ſponte proveniunt, quales ſunt caſus inopini alienis principiis accidentes ---- partim vero in nobis ipſis ſunt collocata, ut cupiditates ſpernere, aut voluptatibus modum non ponere, continere iram, aut manus injicere in eum qui injuriâ laceſſivit, vera dicere aut falſa, manſuetum moribus eſſe ac moderatum, aut faſtu ſuperbum arrogantiaque elatum. Quorum itaque tute Dominus es, horum principia non aliunde quærere velis, ſed quod propriè malum eſt, id ab ultronea & voluntaria electione ſumpſiſſe principium ſcito, &c. The German Divine (e) who relates this Paſſage, had reaſon to ſay, that this Father granted to the Marcionites more than he ought; for he will not ſo much as acknowledge, that God is the Author of Natural Evil, ſuch as Sickneſs and Old Age, and of a hundred things which proceed from external Cauſes, and happen ſuddenly. Thus to diſintangle himſelf from a difficulty, he adopts Errors, and perhaps even Hereſies. But there is another Fault in this Anſwer; he fanſies he can extricate himſelf from this Difficulty, and clear Providence from any Guilt; provided he affirms, that Vices have their original in the Soul of Man. How came he not to perceive, that he ſhuns the difficulty? or that he gives for a Solution of it the very thing wherein the principal difficulty conſiſts? The pretence of Zoroaſter, Plato, Plutarch, the Marcionites, and Manichees, and in general of all thoſe who admit one Principle naturally good, and another Principle naturally Evil, both eternal and independant, is, That without this Suppoſition, no account can be given how Evil came into the World. You anſwer, That it came into the World by Man: But how can that be, ſince, according to you, Man is the Workmanſhip of a Being infinitely Holy, and infinitely Powerful? Ought not the Work of ſuch a Cauſe to be good? Can it be any thing elſe but good? Is it not more impoſſible, that Darkneſs ſhould proceed from Light, than that the Product of ſuch a Principle ſhould be bad? There lies the Difficulty. St. Baſil could not be ignorant of it. Why then does he ſay ſo coldly, That we muſt not ſearch for Evil but in the Soul of Man? But who put it there? The Man himſelf, by abuſing the Grace of his Creator, who being ſovereign Goodneſs itſelf, produc'd him in a State of Innocence. If you anſwer thus, you fall into a Petitio Principii. You diſpute with a Manichee, who maintains, That two contrary Creators concurr'd to the Production of Man, and that Man receiv'd from the good Principle, whatever Good he has; and from the bad Principle, whatever he has of Evil; and you anſwer his Objections, by ſuppoſing that the Creator of Man is an only and moſt Good Being. Is not this to give your own Theſis for an Anſwer? 'Tis plain that St. Baſil diſputes ill: But ſince 'tis a thing that nonpluſſes all Philoſophy, he ſhould have retir'd into his Strong-hold, i. e. he ſhould have prov'd, (f) by the Word of God, that the Author of all things is but one, and that he is infinite in Goodneſs and all ſorts of Perfections; and that Man coming out of his Hands innocent and Good, has loſt his Innocence and his Goodneſs by his own Fault: This is the Origine of Moral and Natural Evil. Let Marcion, and all the Manichees reaſon as much as they probably have made a greater Progreſs, if the particulars of it had been given leſs groſly, and if it had not been attended with many odious Practices *, or if there had they pleaſe, to ſhow, that under a Providence infinitely Good and Holy, this Fall of an Innocent Man could not happen, they argue againſt Matter of Fact, and conſequently they make themſelves ridiculous. I ſuppoſe always, that they are ſuch People as may be reduc'd by Arguments ad hominem, to acknowledge the Divine Authority of the old Teſtament. For if one had to do with Zoroaſter or Plutarch, it would be quite another thing.

(d) Baſilius Magnus Hexaem. homil. 2. apud Tobiam Pfannerum ſyſtem. Theologiæ gentilis cap. 9. pag. m. 253.

(e) Tobias Pfanner. ibid.

(f) See the Article of the Manichees.

* See the Remark D. of the Article Manichees.

That you may ſee 'tis not without reaſon I urge, That we muſt only oppoſe theſe Sectaries, with this Maxim, Ab actu ad potentiam valet conſequentia, and with this ſhort Enthymem, This has come to paſs, therefore it is not repugnant to the Holineſs and Goodneſs of God, I obſerve that we cannot join Iſſue in this diſpute, upon any other foot, without ſome diſadvantage. The reaſons for the permiſſion of Sin, which are not taken from the Myſteries (g) reveal'd in Scripture, have this defect, how good ſoever they be, that they may be oppos'd by other Reaſons more ſpecious, and more agreeable to the Ideas we have of Order. For Inſtance, If you ſay that God permitted Sin to manifeſt his Wiſdom, which ſhines the more brightly by the Diſorders which the wickedneſs of Men produces every Day, than it would have done in a ſtate of Innocence; It may be anſwer'd, That this is to compare the Deity to a Father who ſhould ſuffer his Children to break their Legs on purpoſe to ſhow to all the City his great Art in ſetting their Broken Bones; or to a King who ſhould ſuffer Seditions and Factions to encreaſe thro' all his Kingdom, that he might purchaſe the Glory of quelling them. The Conduct of this Father and Monarch is ſo contrary to the clear and diſtinct Ideas, according to which we judge of Goodneſs and Wiſdom, and in general of the whole Duty of a Father and a King, that our Reaſon cannot conceive how God can make uſe of the ſame. But you will ſay, The ways of God are not our ways. Keep to that then, (h) this is a Text of Scripture, and do not reaſon any more (i). Do not any more tell us, That without the Fall of the Firſt Man, the Juſtice and Mercy of God would have remain'd unknown; for you will be anſwer'd, that there was nothing more eaſy than to make Man know theſe two Attributes: the ſole Idea of a Being infinitely perfect, clearly informs ſinful Man, that God poſſeſſes all the Vertues that are worthy of a Nature infinite in all reſpects: How much more would it have inform'd an innocent Man, that God is infinitely juſt? But he had never puniſh'd any Body: By this very thing his Juſtice would have been known, this had been a continued Act, a perpetual exerciſe of that Vertue. None had deſerv'd to be puniſh'd, and conſequently the forbearing of all Puniſhment had been an exerciſe of Juſtice. I deſire you to anſwer me: There are two Princes, whereof one ſuffers his Subjects to fall into Miſery, that he may deliver them, when they have ſufficiently languiſh'd under it; and the other preſerves them always in a proſperous State. Is not the latter much better, and more merciful than the other? Thoſe who teach the immaculate Conception of the Virgin, prove demonſtratively that God pour'd upon her his Mercy, and the Benefits of Redemption, more than upon other Men. One needs not be a Metaphyſician to know this: a Countryman clearly perceives, that it is a much greater Goodneſs to hinder a Man from falling into a Ditch, than to let him fall in, (a) and then take him out an Hour after; and that it is much better to hinder an Aſſaſſin from killing a Man, (b) than to break him upon the Wheel after he has been permitted to commit the Murther. All this ſerves to admoniſh us, that we muſt not join Iſſue with the Manichees, till we have before all things laid down the Doctrine (c) of the exaltation of Faith, and the abaſement of Reaſon.

Thoſe who ſay that God permitted Sin, becauſe he could not hinder it without deſtroying Free-will, which he had given to Man, and which was the beſt Preſent he had made him, expoſe themſelves very much. The Reaſon they give is ſpecious, there is in it I know not what which dazles the Eyes, ſomething that appears Great: But nevertheleſs it may be oppos'd by ſuch Reaſons as are more ſuited to the Capacity of all Men, and more founded upon good ſenſe, and the Idea's of Order. Without having read the fine Treatiſe of Seneca about Benefits, any one knows by the light of Nature, that it is eſſential to a Benefactor not to beſtow ſuch Favours which he knows will be abus'd in ſuch a Manner, that they will ſerve only to the Ruin of him to whom they are given. There is no Enemy ſo inveterate, who would not upon theſe Terms load his Enemy with Favours. It is eſſential to a Benefactor to ſpare nothing to make the Perſon happy with his Benefits, whom he honours with them. If he could confer on him the Knowledge of making good Uſe of them, and ſhould refuſe it him, he would very ill ſuſtain the Character of a Benefactor; neither would he better ſuſtain it, if being able to keep his Client from abuſing the Benefits, he ſhould not hinder him by curing his bad Inclinations (d). Theſe are Idea's which are known as well to the common People as to the Philoſophers. I confeſs that if one could not prevent the ill Uſe of a Favour, but by breaking the Arms and Legs of one's Clients, or by ſhackling their Feet with Irons in a Dungeon, one would not be oblig'd to prevent it; it were better to refuſe them the Benefit: But if one can prevent it by changing the Heart, and by giving a Man a reliſh of Good Things, one ought to do it: Now this is what God might have done eaſily, if he would. Obſerve well what Cicero ſays, in oppoſition to thoſe, who alledge that it is not the Fault of God, if Men do not uſe aright his Favours. (e) Huic loco ſic ſoletis occurrere, Non idcirco non optimè nobis à diis eſſe proviſum, quod multi eorum beneficio perversè uterentur: etiam patrimoniis multos malè uti: nec ob eam cauſam eos beneficium à patribus nullum habere. Quis iſtuc negat? aut quæ eſt in collatione iſta ſimilitudo? nec enim Herculi nocere Deïanira voluit, cùm ei tunicam, ſanguine Centauri tinctam, dedit: nec prodeſſe Pheræo Jaſoni, is qui gladio vomicam ejus aperuit, quam ſanare medici non potuerant. MULTI ENIM, ETIAM CUM OBESSE VELLENT, PROFUERUNT, ET CUM PRODESSE, OBFUERUNT. Ita non fit ex eo, quod datur, ut voluntas ejus qui dederit, appareat: nec ſi is, qui accepit, bene utitur, idcirco is, qui dedit, amice dedit. There is no good Mother who having given leave to her Daughters to go to a Ball, but would revoke that leave, if ſhe were ſure that they would yield to Enticement, and leave their Virginity behind them; and every Mother, who knowing that this would certainly come to paſs, ſhould nevertheleſs ſuffer them to go to a Ball, being contented with exhorting them to Vertue, and threatning them with her Diſgrace, if they ſhould not return Maids, would at leaſt juſtly bring upon herſelf the Blame of not loving her Daughters, nor Chaſtity. It would be in vain for her to ſay, in her own Juſtification, that ſhe had no mind to reſtrain the Liberty of her Daughters, nor to ſhow any Diſtruſt of them: She would be anſwer'd, That this Management was very unskilful and ſavour'd more of a provok'd Step-mother, than of a Mother; and that it had been better to keep her Daughters in her Sight than to give them the Privilege of Liberty to ſuch bad Purpoſes, and to grant them ſuch Marks of her Confidence. This diſcovers the Raſhneſs of thoſe who aſſign for a Reaſon the Regard which, they ſay, God ſhow'd to the Free Will of the firſt Man. They had better believe and be ſilent, than alledge ſuch Reaſons as may be refuted by the Examples I have juſt now made uſe of. Cotta in Cicero brings ſo many Arguments againſt thoſe who ſay, Reaſon is a Gift which the Gods beſtow'd upon Man, that Cicero found himſelf unable to anſwer thoſe Difficulties; for if he had been able, he would have refuted them; his Academic Spirit was in its Element, when he could make it appear, that one may Diſpute pro and con in infinitum. Since therefore he has given no Anſwer to the Reaſons of Cotta, we muſt believe that he could not do it. Yet Cicero was one of the greateſt Wits that ever was. Cotta having ſhown that Reaſon is an Accomplice in all Crimes, and that therefore the Gods ſhould have given it to us, if they intended to do us a Miſchief (f), propoſes to himſelf the common Solution, which is, that Men abuſe the Favours of Heaven. Sed urgetis identidem hominum eſſe iſtam culpam, non Deorum .... in hominum vitiis ais eſſe culpam (g). He replies that the abuſe ſhould have been prevented, and that Men (g) We will here ſet down what a Father of the Church ſaid, Felix culpa quæ talem meruit habere redemptorem.

(h) Iſai. c. 55. v. 8.

(i) See below, the Remark KSS towards the end.

(a) See Garaſſe Somme Theologique, p. 430.

(b) Cur omnium crudeliſſimus tam diu Cinna regnavit? At dedit pœnas. Prohiberi melius fuit, impedirique ne tot ſummos viros interficeret, quàm ipſum aliquando pœnas dare. Summo cruciatu, ſuppliciοque Varius homo importuniſſimus periit: ſed quia Druſum ferro, Metellum veneno ſuſtulerat: illos conſervari melius fuit, quam pœnas ſceleris Varium pendere. Cicero de nat. Deorum l. 3. p. m. 679.

(c) Mr. Amyrald has wrote a Book that bears that Title.

(d) See concerning all this the Remark E. of the Article Origen.

(e) Cicero de nat. Deorum l. 3. p. m. 658. Add to this what has been ſaid of the Eutrapelus of Horace in the Article of Origen.

(f) Becauſe it was late he feigns that Balbus did not anſwer Cotta, and put it off till another day which never came, Quoniam advesperaſcit dabis diem nobis aliquam ut contra iſta dicamus. Cotta anſwers that he wiſhes he were refuted, and hopes it. Ego vero & opto redargui me, Balbe, & ea quæ diſputavi diſſerere malui quam judicare, & facile me à te vinci poſſe certo ſcio. Cicero de nat. Deor. l. 3. ſub fin.

(g) Non ut patrimonium relinquitur, ſic ratio homini eſt beneficio deorum data: quid enim potius hominibus dediſſent ſi iis nocere voluiſſent. Id. ib. p. m. 658.

had been (F) then as many Diſputes about Predeſtination, as there are at this Day, in which the Chriſtians accuſe one another, either of making God the Author of Men ſhould have had ſuch a Reaſon, as ſhould have driven away whatever is Evil; and that thoſe cannot be excus'd who give what they know will prove pernicious. He proves this by many Examples. (h) Eam dediſſes hominibus rationem, quæ vitia, culpamque excluderet. Ubi igitur locus fuit errori Deorum? nam patrimonia ſpe bene tradendi relinquimus, qua poſſumus falli; Deus falli qui potuit? An ut Sol in currum cum Phaethontem filium ſuſtulit? aut Neptunus, cum Theſeus Hippolytum perdidit, cum ter optandi à Neptuno patre habuiſſet poteſtatem? Poëtarum iſta ſunt: nos autem philoſophi eſſe volumus, rerum auctores, non fabularum. Atque ii tamen ipſi Dii poëtici ſi ſciſſent perniciosa fore illa filiis, peccaſſe in beneficio putarentur. Et ſi verum eſt quod Ariſto Chius dicere ſolebat, Nocere audientibus Philoſophos iis qui bene dicta male interpretarentur: poſſe enim aſotos ex Ariſtippi, acerbos è Zenonis ſcholâ exire. Prorſus, ſi qui audierant vitioſi eſſent diſceſſuri, quod perverſè philoſophorum diſputationem interpretarentur, tacere præſtare philoſophis quam iis qui ſe audiſſent, nocere. Sic ſi homines rationem bono conſilio à Diis immortalibus datam, in fraudem, malitiamque convertunt, non dare illam, quam dari humano generi melius fuit, ut ſi medicus ſciat eum ægrotum, qui juſſus ſit vinum ſumere, meracius ſumpturum, ſtatimque periturum, magnâ ſit in culpâ: ſic veſtra iſta Providentia reprehendenda, quæ rationem dederit iis, quos ſcierit eâ perverſè & improbè uſuros. Niſi forte dicitis eam neſciviſſe. Utinam quidem; ſed non audebitis: non enim ignoro quanti ejus nomen putetis? By theſe Reaſons it were eaſy to ſhow, that the Free Will of the firſt Man, which was preſerved to him ſound and entire, in the Circumſtances wherein he was to make uſe of it to his own Loſs, to the Ruin of Mankind, to the eternal Damnation of the greateſt Part of his Poſterity, and to the Introduction of a terrible Deluge of Evils, was not a good Gift. We ſhall never underſtand, that this Privilege could be preſerv'd to him by an effect of Goodneſs, and out of Love for Holineſs. Thoſe who ſay, that it was neceſſary there ſhould be free Beings, (i) to the end that God might be lov'd with a Love of Choice, are conſcious to themſelves, that this Hypotheſis does not ſatiſfy Reaſon; for when it is foreſeen, that thoſe free Beings will chooſe not the Love of God but of Sin, one may plainly perceive, that the intended End is defeated, and that therefore it is no wiſe neceſſary, that Free Will ſhould be preſerv'd. I ſhall examin this again in the Remark K △ △. See in the Margin (k) our Inſtruction.

(F) If there had been then as many Diſputes about Predeſtination, as there are at this Day.] If the Manichees ſhould go no further, they would renounce their principal Advantages: For the moſt terrible Objections are theſe following. 1. It cannot be conceiv'd that the firſt Man could receive from a good Principle the Faculty of doing Ill. This Faculty is vicious, and every thing that can produce Evil is bad, ſince Evil cannot proceed but from a bad Cauſe; and therefore the free Will of Adam proceeded from two contrary Principles: Inaſmuch as he could take the right Way, he depended upon a good Principle; but inaſmuch as he could embrace Evil, he depended upon an ill Principle. 2. 'Tis impoſſible to comprehend, that God did only permit Sin; for a bare Permiſſion of Sin added nothing to Free-will, and was not a Means to fore-ſee, whether Adam would perſevere in his Innocence or fall from it. Beſides according to the Idea we have of a created Being, we cannot comprehend that it can be a Principle of Action, that it can move it ſelf, and that receiving in every Moment of its Duration its Exiſtence and the Exiſtence of its Faculties, wholly from another Cauſe, it ſhould create in it ſelf any Modalities by a Power peculiar to it ſelf. Theſe Modalities muſt be either not diſtinct from the Subſtance of the Soul, as the new Philoſophers will have it, or diſtinct from the Soul, as the Peripateticks affirm. If they be not diſtinct, they cannot be produc'd but by the Cauſe, which can produce the very Subſtance of the Soul; but it is manifeſt that Man himſelf is not this Cauſe, neither can he be. If they are diſtinct, then they are created Beings, produc'd out of nothing, ſince they are not compos'd of the Soul, nor of any other pre-exiſtent Nature; they cannot therefore be produc'd but by a Cauſe that can create. Now all the Sects of Philoſophy agree, that Man is not, nor can be ſuch a Cauſe. Some think (a) that the Motion which excites him proceeds from ſome other Cauſe, and that nevertheleſs he can ſtop it, and fix it upon a certain Object. This is contradictory, ſince there is no leſs Power requir'd to ſtop that which is in Motion, than to move that which is at Reſt. Seeing therefore a Creature cannot be mov'd by a bare permiſſion of Acting, and has not in it ſelf a Principle of Motion, it is abſolutely neceſſary that God ſhould move it; he muſt therefore do ſomething elſe than barely permit Man to Sin. 3. This may be proved by a new Reaſon: It cannot be comprehended, that a bare Permiſſion ſhould put contingent Events out of the Number of Things merely poſſible, nor that it ſhould put the Deity in a Capacity of being certainly ſure that the Creature will ſin. A meer Permiſſion cannot be the Foundation of the Divine Preſcience. This is what Obliges the greateſt Part of Divines to ſuppoſe, that God has made a Decree, which imports that the Creature will ſin, and which according to them is the Foundation of Preſcience. Others think that the Decree imports, that the Creature ſhall be plac'd in ſuch Circumſtances, wherein God has foreſeen that it will ſin. Thus ſome think that God foreſaw the Sin by reaſon of the Decree; others, that he made the Decree, becauſe he foreſaw the Sin. Howſoever this be explain'd, it follows plainly, that God was willing that Man ſhould ſin, and that he preferr'd this to the perpetual Duration of Innocence, which it was ſo eaſy for him to procure and ordain. Reconcile this if you can with the Goodneſs he ought to have for his Creatures, and the infinite Love he ought to have for Holineſs. 4. But if you ſay with thoſe that come nearer to juſtifying Providence, that God did not fore-ſee the Fall of Adam, you will gain but little by it; for at leaſt he knew very certainly, that the firſt Man run the hazard of loſing his Innocence, and introducing into the World all the Evils of Puniſhment and Guilt, which follow'd his Apoſtacy. Neither his Goodneſs, nor his Holineſs, nor his Wiſdom can permit, that he ſhould run the hazard of theſe Events; for our Reaſon convinces us very evidently, that a Mother who ſhould ſuffer her Daughters to go to a Ball, when ſhe knew moſt certainly that they would run a great hazard with reſpect to their Honour, would ſhew thereby, that ſhe neither loved her Daughters, nor Chaſtity: and if it be ſuppos'd, that ſhe has an infallible Preſervative againſt all Temptations, and that ſhe gives it not to her Daughters when ſhe ſends them to a Ball, it is moſt evident that ſhe is guilty, and that ſhe takes but little care that her Daughters ſhould preſerve their Virginity. Let us carry on the Compariſon a little further; If that Mother ſhould go to this Ball, and through a Window ſhould ſee and underſtand, that one of her Daughters defends her ſelf but weakly in the Corner of a Chamber againſt the Sollicitations of a young Gallant; if even when ſhe ſees, that her Daughter is but one Step from yielding to the deſires of the Tempter, ſhe ſhould not go then to aſſiſt her and deliver her from the Snare, would not every one have reaſon to ſay, that ſhe acts like a cruel Step-mother, and that ſhe would not ſcruple to ſell the Honour of her own Daughter? This is a Repreſentation of the Conduct which the Socinians attribute to God. They cannot ſay, that he knew the Sin of the firſt Man, but as a poſſible Event; he knew all the particulars of the Temptation, and he muſt needs have known a Moment before Eve yielded, that ſhe was going to deſtroy her ſelf; he muſt, I ſay, have known it with ſuch a certainty, as renders one inexcuſable if he does not prevent the Evil, and diſables him from ſaying, I had reaſon to believe that this would not happen, I had ſtill great hopes. There are no People of ſo little Experience, but without ſeeing what paſſes in the Heart, and knowing the Matter any otherwiſe than by Signs, may be ſure, that a Woman is ready to yield, if they ſee through a Window how ſhe defends her ſelf when really her Fall is near. Before the Moment of her Conſent, there are certain Indications wherein they are not deceiv'd. How much greater Reaſon have we to think,

(h) Ibid.

(i) See the Treatiſe of Morality of Father Malebranche.

(k) Sancta illa & profunda fidei myſteria non pari paſſu cum cauſis naturalibus ambulant, eoque rectius illa & creduntur clauſis oculis, & intelliguntur; I ſegreti del ciel ſol colui vede, che ſerra gli occhi, e crede. Franciſcus Redi de gener. Inſectorum.

(a) Father Malebranche in the Treatiſe of Nature and Grace.

of Sin, or of depriving him of the Government of the World. The Pagans could better answer think, that God who knew all the Thoughts of Eve, (this Knowledge the Socinians do not deny him) could not doubt but she was just ready to yield. He did therefore suffer her to sin, and this he did at the same time when he foresaw that she would certainly sin. The Sin of Adam was yet more certainly foreseen; for the Example of Eve gave some light the better to foresee the Fall of her Husband. If God had purpos'd to preserve Man and his Innocence, and to prevent all the Miseries which were to be the Consequence of Sin, would he not at least have fortifyed the Husband after the Wife had fain? Would he not have given him another Wife sound and perfect, instead of that which was seduc'd? We say therefore that the Socinian System, by depriving God of Prescience, reduces him to Slavery, and to a pitiful Form of Government, and does not remove the grand Difficulty which it should remove, and which forces these Hereticks to deny the Foreknowledge of contingent Events (c).

I refer you to a Professor of Divinity (d) yet living (e), who has prov'd as clear as the day, that neither the Method of the Scotists, nor that of the Molinists, nor that of the Remonstrants, nor that of the Universalists, nor that of the Pajonists, nor that of Father Malebranche, nor that of the Lutherans, nor that of the Socinians, can solve the Objections of those who impute to God the introduction of Sin, or who pretend, that it is not consistent with his Goodness, nor with his Holiness, or Justice; insomuch that this Professor finding nothing better elsewhere, continues in the Hypothesis of St. Augustin, which is the same with that of Luther and Calvin, and of the Thomists and Jansenists; I say he continues there, (f) being distress'd with the astonishing Difficulties he has produc'd (g), and oppressed with their Weight (h). Since Luther and Calvin appear'd, I do not think that a Year has pass'd wherein they have not been accus'd of making God the Author of Sin. The Professor of whom I speak, confesses, That (i) with respect to Luther, the Accusation is just; the Lutherans at this Day pretend the same thing as to Calvin. The Roman Catholicks pretend the same thing as to both. The Jesuits pretend it as to Jansenius. Those who are a little equitable and moderate, do not take it to be an Act of Insincerity in their Adversary, when he protests, that he does not at all impute to God the sin of Man, that he does not at all make him the Author of it: they are willing to grant that he does not expresly teach it, and that all the Consequences of his Doctrine are not perceiv'd by him; but they add, that protestatio facto contraria nihil valet, and that if he will take the pains to define exactly, what was necessary for God to have done that he might be the Author of the Sin of Adam, he will find that according to his Doctrine, God has done all that was necessary in order to that End. You therefore, add they, act quite contrary to Epicurus; he deny'd in effect (k) that there were any gods, and yet he said that there were some. You on the contrary deny in your Words that God is the Author of Sin, but in effect you teach it.

Let us come at last to the Text of this Remark. The Disputes which have arisen in the West among Christians since the Reformation, have so clearly shown that a Man does not know which Side to take, when he would solve the Difficulties about the Origine of Evil, that a Manichee at this Day would be more terrible than in former times, because he would refute every Party by the others. You have drain'd, would he say, all the Forces of your Wit; you have invented the Scientia media, which like a Deus è Machina is brought in to clear your Chaos. This Invention is chimerical; it cannot be conceiv'd, that God should foresee things future otherwise than in his Decrees, or in the Necessity of Causes. This is no less inconceivable in Metaphysicks, than it is inconceivable in Morals, that he who is Goodness and Holiness it self should be the Author of Sin. I refer you to the Jansenists. See how they run down your Scientia media, both by direct Proofs, and by retorting your Arguments. The Socinians endeavour to extricate themselves by denying Prescience, but they have the Disgrace to see that their Hypothesis vilifies the Government of God, without clearing him of the Guilt. I refer them to the Protestants, who overthrow and utterly confound them. As to absolute Decrees, the certain Cause of Prescience, see, I pray you, after what Manner the Molinists and the Remonstrants oppose them, There is a Divine, who confesses almost with Tears in his Eyes, (b) That there is no Body more troubled than he with the Difficulties of these Decrees, and that he continues in this Condition, only because when he had a mind to go over to Methods mitigated, he found himself still oppress'd with the same Weights. He enlarges (c) with great Strength upon all this in another Work; and you cannot deny but he refutes invincibly all those Methods; and consequently you have no recourse left, unless you will adopt my System of the Two Principles. By this means you'll extricate your self from this Trouble, all the Difficulties will vanish away; you will fully justify the good Principle, and you only pass from one Manicheism to another more reasonable: for if you examine your System carefully, you will acknowledge, that you as well as I admit Two Principles, the one of Good, and the other of Evil; but instead of placing them as I do, in two Subjects, you joyn them together in one and the same Substance, which is monstrous and impossible. The only Principle which you admit, will'd from all Eternity, according to you (d), that Man should Sin, and that this Sin should be Infectious, that it should produce without End and without Intermission all imaginable Crimes over the Face of the whole Earth: In Consequence whereof he prepar'd for Mankind in this Life all the Miseries that can be conceiv'd, such as Pestilence, War, Famine, Pain, Vexation, and after this Life an Hell, wherein all Men almost shall be eternally tormented, after such a Manner as makes our Hairs stand on end, when we read the Descriptions of it. If such a Principle is otherwise perfectly Good, and loves Holiness infinitely, must we not acknowledge, that the same God is at one and the same time, perfectly Good and perfectly Bad, and that he loves Vice no less than he does Vertue? Now is it not more reasonable to divide these two opposite Qualities, and to give all that is Good to one Principle, and all that is Bad to another Principle? Humane History will prove nothing to the Disadvantage of the Good Principle. I do not say, as you do, that of his own Will, and only because it was his good Pleasure, he subjected Mankind to Sin and Misery, when nothing hindred him from making them Holy and Happy: I suppose he did not consent to this but to shun a greater Evil, and that he did it as it were against his Will. This clears him of Guilt. He saw that the Evil Principle would destroy all; he oppos'd him as much as he could, and (e) by Agreement he obtain'd the State to which Things are now reduc'd. He acted like a Monarch, who to avoid the Ruin of all his Dominions, is obliged to sacrifice one part of them to the good of the other. This is a grand Inconveniency, and which at first frightens humane Reason, to talk of a first Principle, and a necessary Being, as of a Thing that does not all it has a mind to, and which is forc'd for want of Power to submit to Emergencies; but it is yet a greater Imperfection (f) to resolve to do Evil, when one can do Good. This is what might be said by this Heretick. I shall conclude with the good Use for which I made these Remarks.

WHAT Use is to be made of the Dispute related here above.

'Tis more useful than one would think, to humble the Reason of Men, by showing them with what Force, the most foolish Heresies, such as those of the Manichees are, may confound it, and embroil the most fundamental Truths. This should teach the Socinians, who make Reason the Rule of Faith, that they throw themselves into the Way of Error, which can only make 'em deny or doubt of all things, and that they lay themselves open to be beaten by the most execrable People. What must be done then? Men must captivate their Understandings to the Obedience of Faith, and never dispute about some Things:

yaranſwer than the Chriſtians to the Objections (G) of the Manichees; but ſome of their Philoſophers

---

(c) See Mr. Arnauld's Reflections upon the System of F. Malebranche l. 1. c. 13. pag. 255. where he shews that unless God combines by particular Wills the Wills of Men, and the Motions of Matter, the Events which are call'd contingent, would be such even with respect to God.

(d) This I write in the beginning of April, 1695.

(e) Jurieu's Judgment concerning the mitigated and rigid Methods of explaining Providence and Grace.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 23.

(g) Pag. 19, 20, 21, and 22.

(h) Ibid. page 23.

(i) After he has related the Opinion of Luther, he says, Hæc omnia abdicamus & horremus ut religionem omnem pessundantia & Manichæismum spirantia. Petrus Jurius de pace inter Protestantes ineunda pag. 214. See the Bishop of Meaux in the Addit. to the Histor. of Variat. (k) Epicurum verbis reliquisse Deos, re sustulisse. Cicero de natura Deorum lib. 1. pag. m. 123. See also Lactantius lib. de ira Dei cap. 4.

(b) Jurieu's Judgment on the Methods, p. 23.

(c) See the Remark I.

(d) According to the Molinists, he decreed to place Men in such Circumstances wherein he certainly knew they would sin, and he could either have put them in more favourable Circumstances, or not have put them in these.

(e) In the Remark I, another way different from this Transaction is propos'd.

(f) See what shall be cited out of Plutarch and Cicero in the following Remark.

particularly they muſt not oppoſe the Manichees but by the Scripture, and by the Principle of Submiſſion, as St. Auguſtine does. " (g) Their Doctors who were Philoſophers, or rather Sophiſts, profeſſing to follow nothing but Reaſon, without paying any Deference to Authority, very eaſily entangled by their Reaſonings and the deceitful Subtilties of a Philoſophy meerly humane, thoſe who had not Knowledge enough to anſwer them, and could only oppoſe to them the Scripture, and the Authority of the Church, to which it belongs to interpret Scripture according to its true Senſe. Thus by promiſing to their Diſciples that they would diſcover the Truth to them by the meer natural Light of good Senſe and Reaſon, and making every thing paſs for an Error which is above it, as our Myſteries are, they perverted many. And this is that which made St. Auguſtin, (t) who knew both the ſtrong and weak Side of that Sect, write againſt them his Excellent Book of the uſefulneſs of Faith, and the Neceſſity there is of believing, chiefly in Things ſupernatural, and which belong to Religion.

(G) The Pagans could better Anſwer . . . . to the Manichean Objections.] I do not ſpeak abſolutely of all the Pagans; for we have ſeen elſewhere (h), that the Philoſopher Meliſſus, who acknowledg'd but one Principle of all Things, could not have anſwered the Objections of Zoroaſter, who acknowledged two Principles, the one Good and the other Bad. If there be but one Principle, and this Principle is eſſentially Good, how comes it that Men are ſubject to ſo many Miſeries? How comes it that they are ſo wicked? (i) What hath he gain'd, if he made the World out of Love for them? (k) An hæc, ut fere dicitis, hominum cauſa à Deo conſtituta ſunt; ſapientumne? propter paucos ergo tanta eſt facta rerum molitio: an ſtultorum? at primum cauſa non fuit cur de improbis bene mereretur: deinde quid eſt aſſecutus, cùm omnes ſtulti ſint ſine dubio miſerrimi, maximè quòd ſtulti ſunt? Miſerius enim ſtultitiâ quid poſſumus dicere? Deinde quod ita multa ſunt incommoda in vita, ut ea ſapientes commodorum compenſatione leniant: ſtulti nec vitare venientia poſſint, nec ferre præſentia. If this only Principle that you admit be wicked by Nature, how comes it that Man enjoys ſo many Pleaſures (l)? And that he can receive them in Crouds, thro' all his Senſes, as through ſo many Doors? Whence comes the Paſſionate Deſire with which he ſeeks after them? Whence comes the indefatigable Induſtry, by which he multiplies them, and invents new ones? Whence comes it that he has not only the Idea of Honeſty, but alſo that many vertuous and charitable Actions are practis'd among Men? It is impoſſible, will the Manichees ſay, to give the Reaſon of theſe Phænomena, unleſs you ſuppoſe that two Principles, the one Good and the other Bad, have regulated the Conditions of the Union between our Soul and our Body, and in general, every thing which concerns the Government of the Univerſe. Meliſſus and Permenides were not the only Perſons, who were diſtreſs'd with theſe Difficulties; the Stoicks alſo were much imbaraſs'd with them; the Stoicks, I ſay, who without denying that there were many Gods, reduc'd them all to Jupiter (m) as to the ſoveraign Diſpenſer of all Events. To him they attributed Providence, and they acknowledg'd him as a Being infinitely Good and infinitely Wiſe. Upon this Plutarch founded the Objections he made to them taken from the Miſery of Mankind. There is not a wiſe Man, ſays he, (n) " nor ever was upon Earth, and on the contrary, there are innumerable Millions of Men miſerable to the laſt Extremity, under the Rule and Dominion of Jupiter, whoſe Government and Adminiſtration is very good. And what could be more contrary to common Senſe than to ſay, that Jupiter governing extremely well, we ſhould be extremely unhappy. If therefore, what is not lawful to ſay, he would be no longer a Saviour, nor a Deliverer, nor a Protector, but quite contrary to all theſe fine Names; there can no Goodneſs be added to the Things that are, neither as to their Multitude nor Magnitude, as theſe Men ſay, all Men living to the height miſerably and wickedly, and Vice neither receiving Addition, nor Unhappineſs increaſe. Nor is this the worſt; but they are angry with Menander for ſaying upon the Stage,

" The chief Beginning of Mens Miſeries
" Are things exceeding good.

" ſaying that this is againſt common Senſe. And yet they make God, who is Good, the beginning of Evils. For Matter produc'd not any Evil of it ſelf, becauſe it is without Qualities, and whatever Differences it has, it has received them all from that which moves and forms it, not being made to move and form it ſelf. So that of neceſſity, Evil muſt come either from nothing, and from what has no Being, or if from ſome moving Principle, it muſt be from God. But if they think that Jupiter has not the command of his Parts, nor uſes every one of them according to his own Reaſon, they ſpeak againſt common Senſe, and imagin an Animal, many of whoſe Parts are not ſubſervient to his Will, uſing their own Operations and Actions, to which the whole gives no incitation, nor begins their Motion. For there is nothing which has Life, ſo ill compacted, as that againſt its Will, its Feet ſhould go, its Tongue ſpeak, its Horns puſh, or its Teeth bite; the moſt of which things God muſt of neceſſity ſuffer, if the Wicked being Parts of him, do againſt his Will, lye, cheat, rob, and murther one another. But if, as Chryſippus ſays, the leſt Part cannot poſſibly behave it ſelf otherwiſe than according to Jupiter's Pleaſure, and if every living Thing is ſo fram'd by Nature, as to reſt and move according as he inclines it, and as he turns, ſtays, and diſpoſes it: This ſaying is more impious than the former. For 'twere more tolerable to ſay, that many Parts of Jupiter are through his Weakneſs and want of Power, hurryed on to do many abſurd Things againſt his Nature and Will, than that there is not any Intemperance or Wickedneſs of which Jupiter is not the Cauſe. Obſerve this Concluſion: If one of theſe two Evils was to be choſen, either that Jupiter ſhould want Power, or that he ſhould want Goodneſs, Plutarch is of Opinion that the firſt ſhould be choſen; and that it is better (a) to ſay, that God has not all the Power that is neceſſary to prevent Crimes, than to aſſert that he moves Men to commit them. Cicero took Advantage of the ſame Doctrine of the Stoicks, concerning God's Almighty Power, to oppoſe his Providence; as if the only Excuſe that could be alledged for the many Diſorders of this World, was to ſay that God cannot think upon every thing. If there was no other Excuſe but this, no Apology could be made for the Stoicks; for they pretended that the Power of Jupiter was infinite. Here are the Words of Cicero: (b) At ſubvenire certe potuit (Deus), & conſervare urbes tantas, atque tales. Vos enim ipſi dicere ſoletis, nihil eſſe quod Deus efficere non poſſit, & quidem ſine labore ullo: ut enim hominum membra nulla contentione, mente ipſa ac voluntate moveantur, ſic numine Deorum omnia fingi, moveri, mutarique poſſe. Neque id dicitis ſuperſtitioſè, atque aniliter, ſed phyſicâ, conſtantique ratione. Materiam enim rerum ex qua, & in qua omnia ſint, totam eſſe flexibilem, & commutabilem, ut nihil ſit, quod non ex ea quamvis ſubito fingi, convertique poſſit: Ejus autem univerſa rectricem, & moderatricem divinam eſſe Providentiam: hanc igitur, quocunque ſe moveat, efficere poſſe quicquid velit. Itaque aut neſcit quid poſſit, aut negligit res humanas, aut quid ſit optimum, non poteſt judicare. He had ſaid before, that (c) the Ruin of Corinth was to be aſcribed to Critolaus, and that of Carthage to Aſdrubal, and not to the Anger of God; ſeelug God, according to the Stoicks, is never angry; nevertheleſs he ought to have come to the Aſſiſtance of thoſe two Towns. The Stoicks were ſo hard put to it, that they were forced to aſſert that Vice was uſeful; for otherwiſe ſaid they, there had been no Vertue. (d) * * * Homines feciſſe dicatur: tantam vim eſſe ærumnarum & malorum. Adverſus ea Chryſippus quum in libro περὶ προνοίας quarto diſſereret, Nihil eſt prorſus iſtis, inquit, imperitius, nihil inſipidius, qui opinantur bona eſſe potuiſſe, ſi

non

(g) Maimbourg Hiſt. of St. Leo, l. 1. pag. 14, 15. of the Holland Edit.

(t) Auguſt. de utilit. cred.

(h) In the Article Manichees.

(i) See the Article Manichees.

(k) Cicero de nat. Deorum, l. 1. p. 31.

(l) Si quidem Deus eſt, unde mala? bona vero unde, ſi non eſt? Boet. de conſol. lib. 1. proſa 4. pag. m. 11. See what will be cited from Cicero in the Article Pericles Remark I.

(m) See Plutarch adverſus Stoicos. p. 1075.

(n) Ibid.

(a) Μᾶλλον γὰρ ἦν ἀνεκτὸν ἄπειρα μέρη ἀδυναμίᾳ τοῦ Διὸς ἐκβιαζόμενα πολλὰ δρᾶν ἄτοπα παρὰ τὴν ἐκείνου φύσιν καὶ βούλησιν, ἢ μήτε ἀκρασίαν εἶναι μήτε κακουργίαν, ἧς οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ Ζεὺς αἴτιος. Tolerabilius enim erat infinitas partes dicere Jovi ob ejus imbecillitatem vi facta agere multa improbè contra ipſius naturam & voluntatem, quàm nullam eſſe libidinem, nullum ſcelus, quod non Jovi autori imputandum eſſet. Plut. ibid. pag. 1076. E.

(b) Cicero de nat Deor. l. 3. p. m. 703.

(c) Critolaus, inquam, evertit Corinthum, Carthaginem Aſdrubal. Hi duos illos oculos oræ maritimæ effoderunt, non iratus alicui, quem omnino iraſci poſſe negatis, Deus &c. Id. ibid.

(d) Aul. Gel. l. 6. c. 1. The Aſterisks ſignify that there is a Gap in this Place of Aulus Gellius.

loſophers found it a difficult thing. I ſhall obſerve in what Senſe the Orthodox ſeem to non eſſent ibidem mala. Nam cum bona malis contraria ſint, utraque neceſſarium eſt, oppoſita inter ſe & quaſi mutuo adverſo quæque fulta niſu, conſiſtere. Nullum adeo contrarium ſine contrario altero. Quo enim pacto juſtitiæ ſenſus eſſe poſſet, niſi eſſent injuriæ? aut quid aliud juſtitia eſt, quam injuſtitiæ privatio? quid item fortitudo intelligi poſſet, niſi ex ignaviæ appoſitione? quid continentia niſi ex intemperantia? quo item modo prudentia eſſet, niſi foret contrà imprudentia? proinde, inquit, homines ſtulti cur non hoc etiam deſiderant ut veritas ſit & non ſit mendacium? namque itidem ſunt bona & mala, felicitas & infortunitas, dolor & voluptas. Alterum enim ex altero, ſicuti Plato ait, verticibus inter ſe contrariis deligatum eſt. Suſtuleris unum, abſtuleris utrumque.

Let us ſee how ſtrongly they have been refuted by Plutarch. " (e) Is there then no Good among " the Gods, becauſe there is no Evil? And when " Jupiter having reſolved all Matter into himſelf, " ſhall be alone, other Differences being taken " away, will there then be no Good, becauſe there " will be no Evil? But is it true that there is Me- " lody in a Quire, though none in it ſings faultily? " And Health in the Body, though no Member is " ſick? And yet cannot Virtue have its exiſtence " without Vice? . . . I wonder they do not ſay, " that the Conſumption was made for the ſound " Conſtitution of Men's Bodies, and the Gout " for the Swiftneſs of their Feet; and that Achilles " would not have had a good Head of Hair, if " Therſites had not been bald. For what Difference " is there between ſuch Triflers and Ravers, and " thoſe who ſay, that Intemperance was not " brought forth unprofitably for Continence, nor " Injuſtice for Juſtice? That ſo we may pray " to the Gods, there may be always Wicked- " neſs.

" Lies, fawning Speeches, and deceitful Manners: " If theſe be taken away, Vertue will alſo vaniſh, " and be loſt. Or do you deſire to underſtand the " greateſt Sweetneſs of his Eloquence and Perſuaſi- " on? For, ſays he, (f) As Comedies have in them " ſometimes ridiculous Epigrams, which though bad in " themſelves, give nevertheleſs a certain Grace to the " whole Poem: So, tho' you may blame Vice in it " ſelf, yet it is not uſeleſs to other things. Firſt then " to ſay that Vice was made by the Providence of " God, as a wanton Epigram by the Will of the " Poet, tranſcends in abſurdity all Imagination. " For this being granted, how will the Gods be " rather givers of Good than Evil? How will Wick- " edneſs be diſpleaſing to them, and hated by " them? And what ſhall we have to oppoſe againſt " theſe ill ſounding Sentences of the Poets?

" ——— A Cauſe to Men God ſends,
" When to chaſtiſe ſome Houſe his Wrath intends?

" And again,

" (g) Which of the Gods theſe Seeds of Strife did ſow?

" Moreover, a lewd Epigram adorns the Comedy, " and contributes to its End, which is to pleaſe the " Spectators, and make them laugh. But Jupiter, " who is ſurnamed Fatherly, Supream, Juſt, and " as Pindarus has it, the moſt perfect Artiſt, fram- " ing the World, not as a great Interlude, full " of Variety and great Learning, but as a City com- " mon to Gods and Men, living together in Con- " cord and Happineſs, with Juſtice and Virtue: " What need had he, for the attaining to this ex- " cellent End, of Thieves, Murderers, Parricides, " and Tyrants? For Vice entred not as a Morisk " Dance, pleaſing and delightful to God; nor was " brought in amongſt the Affairs of Men, to cauſe " Mirth and Laughter by its Railery and facetiouſ- " neſs, ſince there is not to be ſeen in it ſo much " as a Shadow of that celebrated Agreement with " Nature. Beſides, that fooliſh Epigram is a very " ſmall part of the Poem, and takes up but a very " little Place in the Comedy; neither do ſuch " things abound in it, nor do they corrupt any of " thoſe things, which ſeem to have been well done, " or ſpoil their Grace. But all humane Affairs " are repleat with Vice, and the whole Life, from " the very Prologue and Beginning to the End, be- " ing diſorder'd, deprav'd and diſturb'd, and hav- " ing no part of it pure, or irreprehenſible, as " theſe Men ſay, is the moſt filthy and unpleaſant " of all Farces. (a). . . . You may read in Plutarch the remaining Part of this Paſſage, which contains ſome other Reaſons, whereby the Paradox of the Stoicks concerning the Uſefulneſs of Vice, is ſtrongly refuted. Nevertheleſs it muſt be acknowledged that they were in the right in ſome reſpects; for to give an inſtance of it, can any thing be more uſeful than Luxury for the maintenance of many Families, that would ſtarve if great Men ſpent but little? Our Paulicians might make uſe of this, to prove their two Principles: They might ſay that the ill Principle produced Luxury, and that the good one conſented to it in exchange of ſome good Thing which his Adverſary permitted him to produce, and beſides that he reſerved to himſelf the Right of getting ſome Benefit by the ill Production. But if he had been alone, neither Luxury nor any other Vice had ever been ſeen amongſt Men: Pure Vertue would have made us happy.

(e) Plut. ubi ſupra pag. 1065.

(f) Viz. Chryſippus in the 2d Book of Nature.

(g) Iliad. lib. 1.

(a) See what I have ſaid before againſt Lactantius: the Refutation of the Doctrine of that Father is mightily ſtrengthned by this Paſſage out of Plutarch.

I ſhall obſerve by the by, that no Body ought to wonder that Cicero and Plutarch ſhould have attack'd the Stoicks in that manner, for though that Sect of Philoſophers admitted (b) of two Principles, God and Matter, God as the Agent, and Matter as the Patient, yet they did not believe that Matter was an ill Principle; and herein they were more Orthodox than Arnobius. Quid enim, ſays he, (c) ſi prima materies quæ in rerum quatuor elementa digeſta eſt, miſeriarum omnium cauſas ſuis continet in rationibus involutas.

The generality of the Heathens needed not fear the above mention'd Objections; for their publick Worſhip moved upon theſe two Hinges; that ſome Gods were good and gracious, and others miſchievous, and that in general the Gods had not always the ſame Paſſions; that they grew angry, and were appeas'd; that they changed Parties; that ſome engaged to favour a Nation, and others to perſecute it; in a word, (d) that they oppoſed one another. The Hiſtory of Men might as well be explained by that Suppoſition, as by that of Zoroaſter. Arnobius has very well refuted thoſe two ſorts of Gods, ſome whereof are good and gracious, and others miſchievous; but he went too far, for he made uſe of a Principle which is very favourable to Manicheiſm. He ſays without any Reſtriction, that the Nature of God does not allow him to diſturb any One's Tranquility: But he might have been ask'd, from whence come the Plague and the Famine? Are they not call'd God's Scourges, by Chriſtians? However let us ſet down his Words: (e) Quod dici à vobis accepimus, eſſe quoſdam ex Diis bonos, alios autem malos, & ad nocendi libidinem promptiores: illiſque ut proſint, his vero ne noceant, ſacrorum ſollemnia miniſtrari: quanam illud ratione dicitur, intelligere confitemur non poſſe. Nam Deos benigniſſimos dicere, leneſque habere naturas, & ſanctum, & religioſum & verum eſt: malos autem, & lævos nequaquam ſumendum eſt auribus; ideo quoniam divina illa vis ab nocendi procul eſt dimota & disjuncta natura. Quidquid autem potis eſt cauſam calamitatis inferre, quid ſit primum videndum eſt, & ab Dei nomine longiſſima debet differitate ſeponi. Itaque ut vobis commodemus aſſenſum, dextrarum, ſiniſtrarumque rerum Deos eſſe fautores, nulla nec ſic ratio eſt, cur alios alliciatis ad proſpera, alios vero, ne noceant, ſacrificiis commulceatis & præmiis. Primum quod Dii boni male non queunt facere, etiam ſi nullo fuerint honore mactati. Quidquid enim mite eſt, placidumque natura, ab nocendi procul eſt uſu, & cogitatione diſcretum: malus vero comprimere ſuam ferociam neſcit, quamvis gregibus mille, & mille alliciatur altaribus. Neque enim in dulcedinem vertere amaritudo ſe poteſt: aut ariditas in humorem, calor ignis in frigora: aut quod rei cuicunque contrarium eſt, id quod ſibi contrarium eſt, ſumere in ſuam atque immutare naturam. Ut ſi manu viperam mulceas, venenato blandiaris aut ſcorpio, petat illa te morſu, hic contractus aculeum figat: nihilque illa proſit alluſio, cum ad nocendum res ambæ non ſtimulis exagitentur irarum, ſed quadam proprietate naturæ. Ita nihil prodeſt promereri velle per hoſtias Deos lævos, cum ſive illud feceris, ſive contrà non feceris, agant ſuam naturam, & ad ea quæ facti ſunt ingenitis legibus, & quadam neceſſitate ducantur. Quid quod iſto modo utrique Dii deſinunt eſſe ſuis in viribus, & ſuis in qualitatibus permanere. Nam ſi bonis ut proſint, res divina conficitur, aliis autem ne noceant, iiſdem rationibus ſupplicatur; ſequitur ut intelligi debeat, nihil dexteros profuturos, nulla ſi acceperint munera, fierique ex hoc malos: malos autem ſi acceperint, nocendi poſituros mentem, fierique ex hoc bonos. Atque ita producitur res eo, ut neque hi dexteri, neque illi ſint lævi: aut, quod fieri non poteſt, utrique

ipſi

(b) Diog. Laert. l. 7. n. 134. See the Commentators on that Place, and Lipſius, Phyſic. Stoic. l. 2. diſſert. 2.

(c) Arnob. l. 1. adv. gent. p. 5

(d) Sæpe premente Deo, fert Deus alter opem. Mulciber in Trojam, pro Trojâ ſtabat Apollo: Æqua Venus Teucris, Pallas iniqua fuit. Oderat Æneam propior Saturnia Turno: Ille tamen Veneris numine tutus erat. Sæpè ferox cautum petiit Neptunus Ulyſſem: Eripuit patruo ſæpè Minerva ſuo. Ovidius Triſt. l. 1. eleg. 2.

(e) Arnob. l. 7. pag. m. 228, 229. See the Paſſage of Aulus Gellius in the Article Manichees.

to admit of Two Firſt (H) Principles, and in what ſenſe it cannot be ſaid that according to the Manichees, God is the Author (I) of Sin. I ſhall alſo criticize a Modern ipſi ſint dextri, & utrique iterum lævi. Tho' this Paſſage of Arnobius favours the Manichees, it contains a Remark which puzzles them, and overthrows all their Worſhip; for the Reaſon why they admitted of an Ill Principle, was, that they believ'd the Good Principle could do no Harm: They believ'd therefore that the other Principle could do no Good; and ſo all their divine Worſhip was needleſs, the gracious God had never puniſhed them for their Irreligion, and they could never expect that the miſchievous God ſhould be propitious to them. Arnobius carries on that Objection againſt the Heathens with great force; but they might have anſwered him, that the moſt cruel Tyrants make a very great Diſtinction, between thoſe who honour them, and thoſe who deſpiſe them; and that the mildeſt Kings make the ſame Diſtinction between thoſe who reſpect them, and thoſe who offend them; and that proportionably the ſame Judgment ought to be made of good and miſchievous Deities. I think that ſuch a Reply cannot be made uſe of againſt the Syſtem of Zoroaſter, or that of the Manichees by a Man who reaſons cloſely.

(H) The Orthodox ſeems to admit of two Firſt Principles.] It has been a conſtant Opinion amongſt Chriſtians from the Beginning, that the Devil is the Author of all falſe Religions; that he moves the Hereticks to dogmatize, and inſpires Men with Errors, Superſtitions, Schiſms, Lewdneſs, Avarice, Intemperance; in a Word, with all the Crimes that are committed amongſt Men: That he deprived Adam and Eve of their Innocency; from whence it follows that he is the Cauſe of Moral Evil, and of all the Miſeries of Man. He is therefore the firſt Principle of Evil; but becauſe he is not Eternal nor uncreated, he is not the firſt Ill Principle, in the Senſe of the Manichees: which afforded thoſe Hereticks I know not what matter of boaſting and Inſulting over the Orthodox. They might have told them, Your Doctrine is much more prejudicial to the Good God than ours; for you make him the Cauſe of the Ill Principle; you aſſert that he produced him, and that tho' he could ſtop him at the firſt Step he made, yet he permitted him to uſurp ſo great a Power in this World, that Mankind having been divided into two Cities, (f) that of God and that of the Devil, the firſt was always very ſmall, and even ſo ſmall for many Ages, that it had not two Inhabitants, when the other had two Millions. We are not obliged to enquire into the Cauſe of the Wickedneſs of our Ill Principle; for when an uncreated Being is ſo or ſo, one cannot ſay why it is ſo; it is its Nature, one muſt neceſſarily ſtop there; but as for the Qualities of a Creature, one ought to inquire into the Reaſon of them, and it cannot be found but in its Cauſe. You muſt therefore ſay that God is the Author of the Devil's Malice, that he himſelf produced it ſuch as it is, or ſowed the Seeds of it in the Soil that he created; which is a thouſand times more diſhonourable to God, than to ſay that he is not the only neceſſary and independent Being. This brings in again the above mention'd Objections concerning the Fall of the firſt Man; it is not therefore neceſſary to inſiſt any longer upon it. We muſt humbly acknowledge that Philoſophy is here at a ſtand, and that its Weakneſs ought to lead us to the Light of Revelation, where we ſhall find a ſure and ſtedfaſt Anchor. Note, That thoſe Hereticks made an ill uſe of ſome Paſſages of the holy Scripture, wherein the Devil is call'd the (g) Prince, and the (h) God of this World.

(I) That according to the Manichees, God is the Author of Sin.] The Style of the Orthodox does not at all vary in this Point: To be a Manichee, and to make God the Author of Sin, are two Expreſſions which always ſignified the ſame thing amongſt Orthodox Chriſtians; and when a Chriſtian Sect accuſes another of making God the Author of Sin, it never fails to impute Manicheiſm to it in that reſpect. It is a juſt Accuſation in one Senſe, ſeeing it is true that the Sectators of Manes acknowledged that an Eternal Being was the Cauſe of Sin: But if you conſider the Thing another way, you will find another Senſe, according to which they may ſay they don't make God to be the Author of Sin; for they may maintain that none but the Good Principle deſerves the Name of God, and that ſo great and ſo glorious a Name, ought never to be beſtowed upon the Ill Principle, and conſequently that their Hypotheſis is the moſt favourable to God. All other Hypotheſes involve him in Sin, as the above mention'd Miniſter acknowledges it. Provided it be ſuppoſed, ſays he (a), “That God drew a Plan of all the Events of Eternity, and was willing that all the Evils, Diſorders and Crimes which prevail in the World, ſhould come into it, this is enough. It will be impoſſible to perſwade any one that ſo many Crimes crept by Chance into the Project of God's Providence. And if they came into it by the Diſpoſition of the moſt profound Wiſdom of God, whether that Diſpoſition be call'd Permiſſion, or Will, the Minds of each Men will never be ſatisfied, and it will never be clearly ſhewn that this agrees with the Hatred God expreſſes otherwiſe for Sin. It will not be in any one's Power to hinder the Libertines from accuſing Chriſtianity of making God the Author of Sin; for the common Senſe of all Men leads them to believe, that he who could prevent the Fall of the firſt Man, as eaſily as he permitted it, and who opened all the Ways wherein Men have wandred, when he might eaſily have ſhut 'em, may be look'd upon as the Author of the Evil which he ſhould have prevented, according to his Principles, and his hatred for Evil. Afterwards he anſwers an Objection grounded upon the Scientia media. “This does not at all leſſen the Difficulty, ſays he: For I may ſay, that ſince God foreſaw that Adam being placed in ſuch Circumſtances, would undo himſelf and an infinity of Millions of Men by his Free Will, and yet he placed him in thoſe ſad Circumſtances, it is plain that he is the firſt Author of all Evils. If a Soveraign knew certainly, that if he ſhould place a Man in a Crowd with a Sword in his Hand, it would raiſe a Sedition, and occaſion a Fight, in which ten thouſand Men ſhould be kill'd, he might very well, according to the rigour of the Law, be look'd upon as the firſt Author of all thoſe Murthers. It would be to no purpoſe for him to ſay, I order'd not that Man to ſtrike any Body with his Sword, nor to raiſe a Sedition; on the contrary, I forbad him to do it. I have not moved his Arm to kill, nor form'd his Voice to excite the People to fight. He would be anſwered, you knew certainly that that Man being placed in ſuch Circumſtances would be the Cauſe of thoſe Miſeries. It was in your Power to place him in more favourable Circumſtances, which might have produced all manner of Happineſs. I am ſure he could reply nothing that could put a ſtop to the murmuring of the People; and if we will ſpeak ſincerely, we muſt confeſs that nothing can be anſwered for God, that can ſilence the Minds of Men. . . . (b) Laſtly the very God of Socinus may be accuſed of being the Author of Sin. . . . . (c) To conclude, I maintain, that there is no convenient Medium between the God of St. Auguſtin and the God of Epicurus, who was altogether unconcerned with the Affairs of Mankind, or the God of Ariſtotle, whoſe Care extended not lower than the Sphere of the Moon. For as ſoon as you acknowledge a general Providence, which imbraces every Thing, the Difficulty ſprings up again, and when you think you have ſhut a Door, it comes in again thro' another. This Author does not mince the Matter. But if the God of the Manichees, I mean the Good Principle whom they call'd God by Excellency, had preſented himſelf to the Mind of that Miniſter, I fancy he would have expreſs'd himſelf ſomewhat differently, and confeſs'd that their Hypotheſis clears God; for it aſcribes all Evil to the Ill Principle. It will not be needleſs to know what he anſwers to his Cenſors. “(d) There is alſo in this Traſh, (ſays Mr. Jurieu,) an Obſervation upon what I have ſaid ſomewhere, that whatever Method be made uſe of, it will never be poſſible perfectly to reſolve the Scruples, which the Objections of prophane Men raiſe in one's Mind concerning God's Providence about Sin. If thoſe Gentlemen have found out the Way of clearing perfectly thoſe Difficulties, they will oblige us to acquaint us with it.

Perhaps it will be ſaid you are in the Wrong, when dern Author, who ſays that the Doctrine, which makes God the Author of Sin, does not

---

(a) Jurieu, Judgement about rigid and mitigated Methods.

(b) Ib. pag. 72.

(c) Ib. pag. 73.

(d) Jurieu, 2d Apolog. p. 30. col. 2. apud Saurin's Examination of Mr. Jurieu's Theology. pag. 340.

(f) See St. Auguſtin de Civitate Dei.

(g) John XIV. 30.

(h) 2 Ep. to the Corinth. ch. 4. v. 4.

when you acknowledge that the Manichean Hypotheſis clears God; for if they pretend that he made a Tranſaction with the Ill Principle, as you ſaid (e) before, he conſented to the Introduction of Evil, he engaged by an Agreement to ſuffer it, and was willing that all the Crimes and Miſeries of Men ſhould be produced: Which is more diſhonourable to him, than if one ſhould ſay, as the Socinians do, that he knew not whether a Free Creature ſhould Sin, and that if he was willing to run the Hazard of it, he was in great hopes that the Knowledge wherewith his Creatures were endowed, and his Threatnings would keep them from ſinning. I think a Manichee would not find this very difficult: For, 1. He might ſay, that God made that Tranſaction, becauſe he could not otherwiſe have done any Good to his Creatures. There is therefore a great difference between Manicheiſm and Socinianiſm. The Socinians own, that though God might eaſily have hindred Men from being Sinners and unhappy, yet he let them fall into Sin and Miſery; but the Manichees ſuppoſe that God conſented to that Fall only out of meer Neceſſity, and to avoid a greater Evil. 2. One might deny that God made any Agreement with the Ill Principle, and maintain that he continually oppoſes Sin, and the Miſery of his Creatures with all his Power, to make them perfectly holy and happy; but that the Ill Principle acting on his Part with all his Power, for a quite contrary Deſign, the Mixture of Good and Evil which is to be ſeen in this World, reſults from that Conflict, as the Action and Re-action of Cold and Heat produce a Quality between both. You may apply to this what the Schoolmen ſay concerning the Nature of mix'd Bodies, which reſults from the ſtruggling of the Elements. I know very well that either of thoſe two Explications lies open to a world of abſurd Difficulties; but the only Queſtion now, is to know whether that Hypotheſis acquits God; but thoſe wretched Hereticks pretend, that any Difficulty is inconſiderable in reſpect of that which ariſes from making him the Author of Sin; and it is certain, that all Chriſtians abhor to acknowledge him to be the Cauſe of it.

WHETHER the Doctrine that ſhould make God the Author of Sin, ſhould lead to Atheiſm.

The Jeſuits maintain (f) that it were better for a Man to be an Atheiſt, and to acknowledge no Deity, than to pay divine Honours to a Being, who forbids Man to do Evil, and yet makes him commit it, and then puniſhes him for it. They maintain, that the God of Epicurus is more innocent, and if one may ſay ſo, more a God than the other; and when the Marcionites and Manichees went about to make a ſecond God Author of all Evils, they worſhipp'd another, who was the Giver of all good Things; whereas yours, ſay the Jeſuits to the Reformed, is worſe than Men. They who are upbraided with this do not reject thoſe Conſequences, they only reject the Principle; they maintain only that it is a ſhameful Calumny to charge them with making God the Author of Sin (g). The ſame Jeſuits pretend that the Doctrine of Calvin concerning Predeſtination, is attended with Conſequences, (h) that deſtroy altogether the Idea we ought to have of God, and leads directly to Atheiſm. The Miniſter who anſwer'd Mr. Maimbourg, convicted him of having unfaithfully reported the Doctrine of Calvin. He ſhould have ſtopt there; for when he adds that Mr. Maimbourg drew a falſe Conſequence from the Doctrine which he imputes to Calvin, he reaſons pitifully: Let the Reader judge of it. (i) Beſides I ſay that his Concluſion is wrong, and that there is nothing more abſurd, and leſs Theological than the Conſequence which Mr. Maimbourg draws from the Doctrine of thoſe Divines; viz. That it deſtroys altogether the Idea we ought to have of God, and leads directly to Atheiſm. There was never any thing ſaid more inconſiderately. If that Doctrine, (I ſhall put the worſt Conſtruction upon it,) deſtroys the Idea we ought to have of God, 'tis becauſe it repreſents God to us as being Cruel, Unjuſt, and puniſhing innocent Creatures with everlaſting Torments; and this is preciſely what Mr. Maimbourg means, when he ſays that it deſtroys the Idea of God, becauſe the Idea of God implies the Attributes of Mildneſs, Juſtice, and Equity. But how can a Doctrine, which gives us the Idea of a ſevere and tyrannical God, who uſes his Authority with the utmoſt Rigour, lead Men to Atheiſm? . . . . It is a fooliſh thing to ſay that an Hypotheſis leads to Atheiſm, when it brings God into (k) every thing, makes him the Cauſe of all Things, and the only Aim of all his own Actions, and raiſes him ſo much above his Creatures as to be able to diſpoſe of them in ſuch a Manner as ſeems to be unjuſt to human Reaſon. That Opinion of the Supralapſarians is ſo far from leading to Atheiſm, that on the contrary it places the Deity in the higheſt Degree of Elevation that can be conceived. For it does ſo much debaſe the Creatures before the Creator, that the Creator, according to this Syſtem, is bound by no Laws to his Creatures, but may diſpoſe of them as he thinks fit, and make them ſubſervient to his Glory in ſuch a method as he judges moſt proper, and they have no right to contradict him.

Here is the moſt monſtrous Doctrine, and the moſt abſurd Paradox in Divinity that was ever heard of, and I am very much miſtaken if any famous Divine did ever ſay any ſuch thing. All imaginable Methods have been us'd to explain the Manner how God influences the Actions of Sinners: The Hypotheſis of abſolute Predeſtination was kept on, as long as it was thought to do no wrong to the Holineſs of God; but it has been laid aſide, as ſoon as it was perceived that it ſtruck at that Divine Attribute. They who were not ſenſible that Free Will is inconſiſtent with the phyſical Predetermination, have taught that Predetermination all along; but they who believ'd that it deſtroyed Free Will, have rejected it, and admitted only of a Simultaneous and indifferent Concourſe. They who believe that any Concourſe is contrary to Man's Liberty, ſuppoſe that (a) he only is the Cauſe of his Actions. The only Reaſon which moves them to make ſuch a Suppoſition, is becauſe they think that all the Decrees whereby God would engage to concur with our Will (b), would make all Events neceſſary, whereby our wicked Actions would be no leſs an Effect of God than of his Creatures. They could not reſt ſatisfied with ſaying that Sin is not a Being, that it is only a Privation and a nothingneſs which has no efficient, but a deficient Cauſe. Laſtly, Some are gone ſo far as to maintain, that God cannot foreſee the free Actions of his Creatures. Why ſo many Suppoſitions? What was the Reaſon of ſo many Steps? It was the deſire of clearing God; for it was plainly perceived that Religion was at Stake, and that Men would be neceſſarily led to Atheiſm, if God was ſaid to be the Author of Sin. Hence it is that all Chriſtian Sects, that are accuſed by their Adverſaries of holding ſuch a Doctrine, deny it as a horrible Blaſphemy, and a deteſtable Impiety, and complain that they are deviliſhly calumniated. But here is a Miniſter (c) who very gravely tells us, that it is a Doctrine, which places God in the higheſt Degree of Glory and Elevation that can be conceived. He does not ſcruple to beſtow ſuch an Encomium upon a Doctrine which repreſents God to us as being Cruel, Unjuſt, and puniſhing INNOCENT Creatures with everlaſting Torments. He appeals to our Conſciences, to know whether the Idea of a Tyrannical God leads us to Atheiſm, taking things in the worſt Senſe, that is ſuppoſing Maimbourg was in the right to ſay that (d) according to Calvin, God created the greateſt Part of Mankind to damn 'em, not becauſe they deſerved it by reaſon of their Crimes, but becauſe he will have it ſo; and that he foreſaw their Damnation only becauſe he order'd it before he foreſaw their Crimes; ſuppoſing, I ſay, that Maimbourg does juſtly accuſe Calvin of ſaying, that they who ſuffer eternal Torments are innocent (e) Creatures, and conſequently that God is the Author of their Sins, Mr. Jurieu cannot abide that Maimbourg ſhould conclude, therefore Calvin's Doctrine deſtroys the Idea we ought to have of God, and leads directly to Atheiſm. He is not contented to pretend that (f) there was never any thing ſaid more inconſiderately than this Concluſion, but he alſo calls it (g) a fooliſh Thought, and (h) a piece of Ignorance; and ſays that it ſhews Maimbourg to be a (i) ſilly Philoſopher, and a pitiful Divine, and that (k) there is nothing more abſurd and leſs Theological than ſuch a Conſequence. The Fault wherewith Ovid was upbraided is a great one in Matters of Controverſy, (l) Neſcire quod bene ceſſit relinquere: neſcire deſinere. That Miniſter had very well juſtified the Supralapſarians, by (m) ſhewing what is wrongfully imputed to them, and by declaring that they diſown the Conſequence wherewith they are charged of making God the Author of Sin. He ſhould have retired from the Field of Battel after ſuch an (e) See the Article of the Manichees.

Onſet,

(f) Father Adam apud Daillé's Reply to Adam & Cottibi part 2. ch. 1. pag. 2. and 3.

(g) See Daillé in that whole Chapter.

(h) Maimbourg's Hiſt. of Calviniſm Book 1. p. m. 73. ſee alſo p. 55.

(i) Jurieu's Apology for the Reformers 1. part chap. 19. p. 245, 246. in 4o.

(k) Yet Spinoziſm which teaches that all Things are God himſelf, is an execrable Atheiſm.

(a) Durandus de S. Porciano, and many other Divines ſuppoſe it. See an Abridgement of a Treatiſe of Mr. de Launoi inſerted in Mr. Papin's Eſſay of Theology Printed in the Year [illegible]

(b) See the Book of Louis de Dole a Capucin, intituled, Diſputatio quadripartita de modo conjunctionis concurſuum Dei & creaturæ ad actus liberos ordinis naturalis, præſertim vero ad pravos, adverſus prædeterminantium & aſſertorum ſcientiæ mediæ modernorum opiniones. That Book was printed at Lyons in the Year 1634 in 4o.

(c) See Papin's Eſſay of Theology againſt this Doctrine, in the Treatiſe againſt phyſical Predetermination.

(d) Jurieu ubi ſupra pag. 241.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 246.

(f) Ib.

(g) Ib.

(h) Ib. p. 247.

(i) Ib.

(k) Ib. p. 245.

(l) Scaurus apud Senecam Controv. 28 pag. m. 272.

(m) Jurieu Ibid. pag. 244, 245.

not lead a Man to Irreligion. Nay, he ſays, that Doctrine raiſes God to the higheſt Degree of Glory that can be conceived. The Ancient Fathers were not ignorant that the Queſtion concerning (K) the Origin of Evil, is a moſt perplexing one. They could not reſolve it by the Platonick Hypotheſis, (K△) which was at the Bottom

a

Onſet, without being ſo raſh as to aſſert that even if they ſhould make God a cruel and unjuſt Being, puniſhing innocent Creatures with eternal Torments; that is to ſay, that tho' they ſhould make God the Cauſe of Sin, and yet a ſevere Judge who puniſhes Men for ever for Sins which they are not guilty of, they ſhould not lead Men to Atheiſm; but on the contrary ſhould raiſe God to the higheſt Degree of Glory that can be conceived. We may therefore aſk him, How comes it that all Chriſtian Sects avoid to ſay that God is the Author of Sin, as being the moſt dangerous thing that can be ſaid in Divinity? How comes it that the meer Idea of ſuch a Doctrine is abhorred by all Men? I muſt needs ſay that ſome Men are very lucky: If another Miniſter had ſaid any ſuch thing, his Readers had been offended at it; he would have been obliged to recant it as being an impious thing, and perhaps I am the only Man who took Notice of ſo ſtrange a Doctrine.

But, ſays he (n), the more you aſſert that God is concerned in every thing, the more you ſuppoſe that he exiſts and is powerful. So that it is a fooliſh thing to argue thus, God is the Author of Sin, therefore there is no God: It is therefore falſe that this Doctrine leads to Atheiſm. What a poor Shift is this! At that rate the Ancient Poets who aſcribed (o) all ſorts of Crimes to Jupiter and the other Gods, and even (p) that of inducing Men to Evil, yet without ſaying that the ſame God who moved them to it puniſhed them for it, ſaid nothing that will deſtroy the Idea of God, put an end to Religion, and introduce Atheiſm. Note, that there is no Difference between a Man who commits a Crime by himſelf, or by the Inſtrument of another. It is manifeſt to any one who reaſons, that God is a moſt perfect Being, and that of all Perfections, none is more eſſential to him than Goodneſs, Holineſs and Juſtice. If you deprive him of thoſe Perfections, to make him a Law-giver who forbids Men to Sin, and yet induces them to ſin, and then puniſhes them for it, you make him a Being in whom Men cannot put their Truſt, a deceitful, malicious, unjuſt and cruel Being: He can be no longer an Object of Worſhip; to what purpoſe ſhould any one pray to him, and endeavour to live a ſober Life? It is therefore the way to Atheiſm. The Fear which Religion inſpires, ought to be attended with Love, Hope, and a great Veneration. When an Object is dreaded only becauſe it has the Power and Will of doing Harm, and exerciſes that Power cruelly and unmercifully, it muſt needs be hated and deteſted: this can be no religious Worſhip.

To repreſent God as a Being, who makes ſome Laws (q) againſt Sin, which he induces Men to tranſgreſs, that he may have a Pretence to puniſh them, is to expoſe Religion to the Railleries of the Libertines. That Being will not be depriv'd of its Exiſtence, whilſt it is ſuppoſed to be the Author of Sin; which is evident, for a Cauſe muſt needs exiſt when it acts: but it will prove at laſt to be nothing elſe but the World it ſelf, or the God of the Spinoziſts, who exiſts and acts neceſſarily, without knowing what he does, and is an underſtanding Being, only becauſe the Thoughts of the Creatures are his Modifications.

There is another thing to be blamed in the Doctrine of that Miniſter. That Opinion of the Supralapſarians, ſays he (r), is ſo far from leading Men to Atheiſm, that on the contrary it places the Deity in the higheſt Degree of Glory and Elevation that can be conceived. For it does ſo much debaſe the Creatures before the Creator, that the Creator, according to this Syſtem, is bound by no Laws to his Creatures, but may diſpoſe of them as he thinks fit, and make them ſubſervient to his Glory in ſuch a Method as he judges moſt proper, and they have no right to contradict him. I confeſs that this Opinion is liable to a great many Inconveniencies, and is ſo harſh that it cannot be eaſily reliſhed. And therefore St. Auguſtin's Hypotheſis is without doubt to be preferr'd to it. What a ſtrange Doctrine is this! How can a Profeſſor of Divinity be ſo bold as to ſay, there are ſome Hypotheſes which are undeniably preferable to that which places the Deity in the higheſt Degree of Glory and Elevation that can be conceived? It is certain that all our Thoughts and Actions ought to aim not only at the Glory of God, but alſo at his greateſt Glory. Our Actions and Opinions muſt tend ad majorem Dei gloriam. It ought to be the Motto not only of a particular Society, but alſo of all Communities, and private Men. And therefore a Divine, who owns on the one ſide, that the Syſtem of the Supralapſarians tends to the greateſt Glory of God, and attains to it better than any other Suppoſition, and who maintains on the other ſide, that St. Auguſtin's Hypotheſis is without doubt to be preferr'd, is guilty of a prophane and blaſphematory Thought. Nor can that prophanation be excuſed by reaſon of the Harſhneſs of the Supralapſarian Syſtem, which cannot eaſily be reliſhed; for under Pretence of ſome Difficulties more or leſs, none can be allow'd to prefer the leſſer Glory of God to the greateſt, and to place the Supreme Being in an inferiour Degree of Glory and Elevation. If St. Auguſtin's Syſtem was plain and eaſy, I ſhould not ſo much wonder at the ill taſte of the Author; but he himſelf owns that he finds an oppreſſing Weight in it, and that he bears that Burthen only becauſe the mitigated Methods cannot free him from it. For the ſame Reaſon he ſhould be a Supralapſarian; for if the Suppoſition of the Jeſuits does not remove the Difficulties of St. Auguſtin's Hypotheſis, it is plain that St. Auguſtin's Hypotheſis does not remove the Harſhneſs of the Supralapſarian Syſtem. Every thing being duly conſidered, it appears that the Supralapſarians, and they that go by the Name of Infralapſarians maintain the ſame thing at the Bottom; they cannot do one another much Harm; they never fail to come off by the help of Arguments ad hominem, and Retortions. You have here the Character of this Doctor in little; there is no Juſtneſs in his Cenſures, and no Connexion in his Doctrines; his Writings are full of wrong Conſequences, Contradictions, and Variations. If any one would give himſelf the trouble to examin his Works carefully, every Page would afford him Matter of criticizing him.

Let us conclude that a Manichee obſerving how carefully the ſeveral Sects of Chriſtianity invent ſuch Hypotheſes as they think will acquit God, without ever owning that they make him the Author of Sin, will always boldly maintain that this is a more dangerous Rock than any other. Conſider well what has been ſaid againſt Chryſippus, who maintain'd (b) That 'tis not unprofitable there ſhould be unprofitable, hurtful, and unhappy Perſons. To which Plutarch replies (c), What Manner of God then is Jupiter? I mean Chryſippus's Jupiter, who puniſhes an Act neither done willingly, nor unprofitably; for Vice is indeed, according to Chryſippus's Diſcourſe, wholly irreprehenſible: But Jupiter is to be blamed, whether he has made Vice, being an unprofitable thing, or having made it not unprofitably, puniſhes it.

(K) The . . . Fathers were not ignorant that the Queſtion concerning the Origin of Evil is a moſt perplexing one.] I ſhall only quote a Paſſage out of Origen. (d) Εἴπερ ἄλλος τις τόπ☉ τῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἐξεταζόμεν☉, δυσθεώρητός ἐστι τῇ φύσει ἡμῶν, ἐν τούτοις κ) ἡ τῶν κακῶν ταχ' ἂν γένεσις. Si quis alius eſt locus in rebus humanis, ſcrutatu difficilis naturæ noſtræ; inter hos merito numerari poteſt malorum origo.

(K△) The Platonick Hypotheſis, which was at the Bottom a Branch of Manicheiſm.] I ſhall only conſider that Hypotheſis as it was explained by Maximus Tyrius in his Treatiſe concerning this Queſtion (e), From whence comes Evil, ſeeing God is the Author of good Things? That Author ſuppoſes that in order to know the Cauſe of the good Things that are in the World, 'tis not neceſſary to conſult the Oracle, and that it is plain enough they come from God, (f) and that Evil cannot come from Heaven where there are no envious Beings; but that in order to know from whence comes Evil, one muſt look for Diviners, that is to ſay, conſult Jupiter, Apollo, or ſome other God who propheſies and takes Care of humane Affairs. Afterwards he makes an Enumeration of the Miſeries our Bodies are ſubject to, and

---

(n) Vid. ubi ſup. p. 246, 247.

(o) Nec multo abſurdiora ſunt ea quæ poëtarum vocibus fuſa, ipſâ ſuavitate nocuerunt, qui & irâ inflammatos, & libidine furentes induxerunt Deos, feceruntque ut eorum bella, pugnas, prælia, vulnera videremus: odia præterea, diſſidia, diſcordias, ortus, interitus, querelas, lamentationes, effuſas in omni intemperantia libidines, adulteria, vincula, cum humano genere concubitus, mortaleſque ex immortali procreatos. Cicero l. 1. de nat. Deor. fol. 281. D.

(p) See the Rem. C. in the Art. of Egialea. and the Remark T and T △ of the Art Helena.

(q) Note that if it be ſaid, as the Reformed do, that Man is the only Cauſe of his Sins, their Diſtinction between God as a Lawgiver, and as a Diſpenſer of Events, is a good one, notwithſtanding what Puffendorf ſays to the contrary p. 250 of his Jus feciale divinum, &c.

(r) Jurieu ubi ſupra page 246.

(b) Plut. de Stoicor. repugn. p. 1051.

(c) Ποῖος οὖν ὁ Ζεὺς, λέγω δὲ τὸν Χρυσίππου, κολάζων πρᾶγμα, μήτ' ἀφ' αὑτοῦ μήτ' ἀχρήστως γενόμενον; ἡ μὲν γὰρ κακία παντάπασιν ἀνέγκλητός ἐστι κατὰ τὸν Χρυσίππου λόγον, ὁ δὲ Ζεὺς ἐγκλητός, εἴτ' ἄχρηστον οὖσαν τὴν κακίαν πεποίηκεν, εἴτε ποιήσας οὐκ ἀχρήστως κολάζει. Qualis eſt Jupiter (de Chryſippo loquor) rem puniens neque ultro neque inutiliter factam? nam Chryſippi ratio efficit vitia omnino culpanda non eſſe, ſed Jovem; ſive is fecit vitia, quæ nihil prodeſſent, ſive puniit cùm feciſſet non inutilia. Id. ib.

(d) Origenes contra Celſum lib. 4. p. 207.

(e) Τῷ θεῷ τὰ ἀγαθὰ ποιοῦντ☉, πόθεν τὰ κακά. Cum Deus bona faciat, unde ſint mala. This is the Subject of the 25th Diſſertation of Maximus Tyrius.

(f) Οὐ γὰρ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ μὰ Δία, οὐκ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ· ἐξόριστος γὰρ φθόνος τοῦ (vid. infra lit. o) χορῦ ἵσταται. Non enim è cœlo me hercules, non è cœlo. Exulat enim illic invidia. Maxim. Tyrius diſſert. 25. pag. m. 253.

Z concludes

a Branch of Manicheiſm, ſeeing it admitted of two Principles; they found themſelves obliged to have recourſe to the Privilege of the Free-Will of Man; but the more we reflect on that manner of reſolving the Difficulty, the more we find that the natural (KΔΔ) light of Philoſophy ties and intangles that Gordian Knot. A Learned Man pretends, that the Pythagoreans gave occaſion for that difficult Queſtion. They concludes from thence (g) that Man is the moſt unhappy of all Creatures.

Οὐδὲν ἀκιδνότερον γαῖα τρέφει ἀνθρώποιο.
Nil nutrit tellus homine infelicius uno.

And then he conſiders the innumerable Evils which torment our Souls, and pretends, that the Gods being conſulted about it, anſwer'd, That Men have no reaſon to aſcribe the Cauſe of their Miſeries to God, ſeeing they themſelves are the Authors of their unhappineſs by their own Fault. He makes uſe of two Verſes of Homer to expreſs this. (h) Τί ἂν οὖν πρὸς ταῦτα ἀποκρίναιτο ὁ Ζεύς, ἢ ὁ Ἀπόλλων, ἢ τις ἄλλος μαντικὸς θεός; ἀκούσωμεν τοῦ ὑποφήτου λέγοντος.

Ἐξ ἡμέων γάρ φασι κάκ' ἔμμεναι· οἱ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ
Σφῇσιν ἀτασθαλίῃσιν ὑπὲρ μόρον ἄλγε' ἔχουσι.

Quid queſo ad iſta aut Jupiter, aut Apollo reſpondebit, aut alius fatidicus Deus? Audiamus quid eorum interpres dicat:

Aſcribunt ſuperis homines mala, cum tamen ipſi
Criminibus propriis ſibi talia damna crearint.

He goes on and ſays, That Heaven and Earth are two very different places. There are no Evils in Heaven; and there is a mixture of Good and Evil upon Earth; but good things come down from Heaven, and Evils ſpring from a Depravation which is natural to the Earth, and contains two kinds, one whereof conſiſts in the qualities of Matter, and the other in the liberty of the Soul. (i) ὥστε τὰ μὲν ἀγαθὰ ἐπιῤῥεῖν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, τὰ δὲ κακὰ ἐξ αὐτοφυοῦς μοχθηρίας ἀνίσχειν. διττὴ δὲ αὕτη, ἡ μὲν ὕλης πάθος, ἡ δὲ ψυχῆς ἐξουσία. Ita ut bona quidem, è cœlo veniant: mala vero ex innata illi (terræ) improbitate oriantur. Improbitas vero ea duplex eſt: aut enim corrupta materia affectio eſt, aut animæ licentia.

As to the firſt of thoſe two ſorts of Depravation, he ſays, That Matter ought to be conſider'd as the Subject upon which a good Workman works. All the Beauties it acquires ought to be aſcribed to Art; but if there be any Works upon Earth that are not as they ſhould be, thoſe Irregularities ought not to be imputed to Art; for the Intention of the Workman does not ſwerve from Art, no more than that of a Lawgiver from Juſtice; and we muſt remember that the Divine Underſtanding will hit the Mark much better than the Art of Man can do. Afterwards he uſes a Compariſon, viz. That there are ſome things in Mechanicks which are the principal Object of Art, and ſome things which reſult from the Work, and are not the effect of Art, but depend upon the Modification of Matter: Such are the Sparkles which fly up when a Smith ſtrikes a red-hot Iron upon an Anvil. They make no part of the deſign which the Smith propoſes to himſelf, they are only an accidental effect, which reſults from his Action, without his aiming at it, and it is only annex'd to the quality of the Iron. We muſt ſay likewiſe, that the Evils which are to be ſeen upon Earth, are not the Work of the Divine Art; God aims in the firſt place, and directly to the conſtruction of the World, but it happens that thoſe Evils do neceſſarily flow from his Work. The Author adds a Remark which has no great coherence with the firſt: He ſays, That the Artificer calls the Evils which we complain of, the Preſervation of the World; tho' we look upon them as its ruin and deſtruction. He pretends, that the Architect of the World propoſes to himſelf, the preſervation of the Whole, and that the Parts muſt ſuffer for the ſake of the Whole. (k) Ταῦτα ὁ τεχνίτης καλεῖ σωτηρίαν τοῦ ὅλου· μέλει γὰρ αὐτῷ τοῦ ὅλου· τὸ δὲ μέρος ἀνάγκη κακοῦσθαι ὑπὸ τοῦ ὅλου. Ea conſummationem totius vocat opifex. Quia totum reſpicit, cujus cauſa neceſſe eſt corrumpi partes. Peſtilential Diſeaſes, Earthquakes, Inundations, and the burnings of Mount Ætna do no harm but to ſome parts of the whole, and ſerve for the production of ſome others; for, as Heraclitus ſays, the latter live by the Death of the former, and the former die by the life of the latter. The death of the Earth gives life to Fire; the death of Fire gives life to the Air; the death of the Air gives life to Water; and the Death of Water gives life to the Earth (l). Maximus Tyrius might have been told, Why did you maintain then that the Phyſical Evils of Mankind are neither intended nor produced by God? If they are ſo neceſſary for the preſervation of the whole, and if the Divine Artificer aims at the preſervation of the whole, he muſt needs have them in view. Notwithſtanding this Objection, we may very well ſay, that according to the Hypotheſis of that Philoſopher, the Plague, Famine, and other Miſeries of Mankind are involuntary with reſpect to God, and come only into the World as an unavoidable effect of the diſpoſition of Matter (m). Let us now ſee what he ſays about the other ſort of Depravation, viz. Moral Evil: He ſays, (n) That the Power of the Soul is the Mother and Nurſe of it, and that the Earth being to be formed, which was to produce Plants and living Creatures, and to contain Evils in its Boſom, Evils being baniſhed from Heaven were lodged in it; that the living Creatures were divided into two Kinds, viz. Beaſts and Men; that Men were to ſurpaſs all other Animals, and be inferior to God; that this Inferiority does not conſiſt in their dying, for their Death is only the beginning of another Immortal Life; that God, in order to make them inferior (o) to the Divine Nature, placed the Soul in a mortal Body, as a Charioteer upon a Chariot, put the Reins in its hands, and gave it leave to run any where: He gave it the Power to drive that Chariot according to the Rules, or againſt the Rules of Art. It directs the Chariot, and reſtrains the impetuoſity of the Horſes, but they are ignorant of all the Rules, and go ſome one way, ſome another way; ſome towards Intemperance, others towards Raſhneſs and Fury; others are Sluggiſh and Lazy, ſo that the Chariot being driven up and down confounds the Charioteer, who yields and runs towards the place whither the moſt unruly Horſe draws him: He runs into Gluttony and Lewdneſs, if the ſtrongeſt Horſe turns that way, and ſo on. Such is the Solution of that Platonick Philoſopher.

It is defective in two reſpects. For 1. he acknowledges two Principles, God and Matter, the one very good indeed, but who cannot mend all the depravation of the other. That natural and abſolutely incorrigible Depravation is the Cauſe of Phyſical Evils, and the occaſion of Moral Evil; it does ſo violently incline a Humane Body to Vices and Crimes, that the Soul is carried away, as it were, by unruly Horſes. 2. Maximus Tyrius does not acquit the ſupream Goodneſs and Holineſs of God. A good and virtuous Father would never cauſe his Children to ride unruly Horſes, and ſend them into the Army, if he did certainly foreſee, or think, with great probability, that notwithſtanding their Skill in Riding, they ſhould fall and kill themſelves; and that notwithſtanding their Education, the War would make them the moſt infamous of all Men. In a word, that Hypotheſis ſets ſome Bounds to the Divine Power, and leaves the other Attributes of God expoſed to the Objections of the Manichees; ſo that having the conveniencies of the Chriſtian Hypotheſis concerning Free-Will, it has the inconveniencies of it.

(KΔΔ) The more we reflect ..... the more we find that the natural Light ..... ties and intangles, &c.] I found it ſo by Experience, as I was reading this Article again to make it ready for a Second Edition. Some new Thoughts came into my Mind, (q) which convince me anew, and more ſtrongly than ever, that the beſt Anſwer that can be (r) naturally returned to the Queſtion, Why did God permit that Man ſhould ſin? is this, I don't know, I only believe that he had ſome reaſons for it very worthy of his infinite Wiſdom, but they are incomprehenſible to me. You will ſtop with ſuch an Anſwer the moſt obſtinate Diſputers; for if they will go on they muſt ſpeak alone, and ſo they will ſoon hold their Tongues. If you ſhould enter the Liſts with them, and undertake to maintain, that the inviolable privileges of Free-Will have been the true reaſon which moved God to permit that Men ſhould ſin, you would be forced to anſwer their Objections to their ſatisfaction; and I do not know how you could well do it, for they might object two things which ſeem moſt evident to Reaſon:

I. The firſt is, That God having cauſed his Creatures

(g) Id. ib. p. 255.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 256.

(k) Id. ib. p. 257.

(l) See about this Doctrine of Heraclitus, the Notes of Daniel Heinſius in Maximum Tyrium, pag. 110.

(m) See a like thought in the Rem. T. of the Art. Chryſippus.

(n) Max. Tyrius ubi ſupra, pag. 257.

(o) This is an abſurd and impious thing, and it does not agree with what was ſaid by the Author (Lett. ſ.) that there are no envious Beings in Heaven. Note, That according to the conjecture of Heinſius, θεῶ, ought to be join'd with γῆ in that Paſſage.

(q) See alſo the new Remarks of the Art. of Origen.

(r) That is, without conſulting the Revelation, but only Philoſophical Ideas.

They look'd for ſuperlatives in every Thing; that is to ſay, they aimed by their Interrogations, at the Knowledge of Things that are in the higheſt Degree every one in its kind. They ask'd, for inſtance, What is the ſtrongeſt, the moſt Ancient, the moſt Common, the Trueſt Thing? It was anſwer'd, as to the laſt Point, that tures to exiſt by an Effect of his Goodneſs, he gave them alſo, under the Character of a bountiful Cauſe, all the Perfections which are proper for every Kind. We muſt therefore ſay, that he expreſt a greater Love for thoſe which receiv'd very excellent Qualities from him, than for thoſe who receiv'd leſs excellent Qualities. He has therefore out of a particular Goodneſs beſtowed Free Will upon Men, ſince that Quality raiſes them above all the Beings that are upon Earth. But we cannot conceive, how a gracious and bountiful Nature can make a conſiderable Preſent, without deſigning to increaſe thereby the Happineſs of thoſe who receive it, and conſequently that bountiful Being ought to put them in a Condition of getting ſuch an Advantage by it, and keep them, if it be poſſible, from being utterly ruined and deſtroyed by it. But if there is no other way of preventing that than by revoking one's Gift, one ought to do it; whereby much better than by any other Means one may keep the Quality of Patron and Benefactor. Whoever does ſo does not change his Mind with reſpect to the Donee, but preſerves without any Shadow of Variation, the good Will wherewith he made him that Preſent. The ſame Goodneſs which moves one to give a Thing which he thinks will make happy thoſe that ſhall enjoy it, moves him likewiſe to take it away as ſoon as he obſerves that it makes them unhappy; and if he has Time enough, and a ſufficient Power, he will not put off the withdrawing of his Gift till it proves the Cauſe of that Miſery, but he will take it away before it has done any Harm. What has been ſaid follows from the Ideas of Order, and the Notions whereby we may judge of the Eſſence and Characters of Goodneſs, in whatever Subject it is to be found, whether in the Creator or in a Creature, a Father, Miniſter, or King, &c. From thence comes the Matter of this Dilemma; either God has given a Free Will to Men by an Effect of his Goodneſs, or without any Goodneſs: You ſay that he has done it with great Goodneſs; but it does neceſſarily reſult from thence that he ſhould have depriv'd them of it at any rate, rather than ſtay till it ſhould prove their Eternal Damnation by the Production of Sin, which is a Monſter he does eſſentially abhor: and if he has been ſo patient as to leave ſo diſmal a Preſent in their Hands, till the Evil happened, it is a ſign either that his Goodneſs was altered, even before they left the right Way, which you dare not ſay; or that Free Will was not given them out of Goodneſs, which is againſt the Suppoſition granted in the above mention'd Dilemma.

There is a reſpectful Caution, which ought never to be diſpenſed with but in Caſes of Neceſſity; Men in ſuch Caſes ought to uſe no ſuch Caution. If a Son ſhould ſee his Father ready to throw himſelf out of the Window, either in a Fit of Frenſie, or becauſe he is troubled in his Mind, he would do well to chain him, if he could not reſtrain him otherways. If a Queen ſhould fall into the Water, any Footman that ſhould get her out of it, either by embracing her, or taking her by the Hair (d), tho' he ſhould pluck off above one half of it, would do a very good Action; ſhe would not certainly complain of his want of Reſpect to her. If any one ſhould ſuffer a Lady finely dreſt to fall into a Precipice, would it not be a very fooliſh Excuſe to ſay, that it had not been poſſible to ſtop her without ſpoyling her Ribbons and Head-dreſs? Upon ſuch an Occaſion as that, Reſtraint and Violence are an Effect of Goodneſs, and if a Man was to be ſnatch'd even againſt his will out of the Jaws of Death, it would be a piece of Charity to ſnatch him out, tho' you ſhould run the hazard of putting one of his Members out of Joint, if he could not be ſaved any other way; that Man, when his Paſſion is allay'd, will not fail to thank you for it. This Maxim, viz. That (e) to ſave a Man againſt his Will, is the ſame thing as if one ſhould kill him, is of no uſe in this Caſe; and the greateſt Favourers of Toleration, will tell you that the pretended Command, Compel them to come in, ſhould be executed in a literal Senſe, if the only ſafe and infallible Way of ſaving Hereticks, was to make them go to the Proteſtant Church, or to Maſs, with a Cudgel in one's Hand. I take the Philoſophical Commentator to witneſs. If I ſhould ſee, ſays he, (f) before the Door of a Houſe a Man very wet whilſt it rains very hard, and if out of pity I would deliver him from that Inconveniency, I might uſe theſe two Means, either to deſire him to come into the Houſe, or to take him by the Arm, if I was ſtronger than he, and puſh him in. Theſe two Means are equally good in order to obtain the Thing I ſhould aim at, viz. To keep that Man from the Rain; 'tis no great matter whether he comes into the Houſe willingly, or againſt his Will, and by Force, for he is equally under a Shelter againſt the Rain. If Hell could be avoided the ſame Way, I grant that our Converters would be well grounded; for if it was enough, in order to it, to be under the Vaults of a Church, it would be no great matter whether one came into it willingly, or was dragged into it being bound Hand and Foot, and ſo the ſtrongeſt Labourers and Porters ſhould be hired to take hold of Hereticks as ſoon as they ſhould appear in the Streets, and carry them upon their Shoulders to the neareſt Church; nay, their Doors ſhould be blown up with a Petard, if there was occaſion for it, and they ſhould be carried with all Speed from their Beds to Church. What I have ſaid concerning the Right which Men have, by Vertue of the Laws of Charity, to moleſt and vex thoſe whom they preſerve from Death by that Means, is truer ſtill with reſpect to Fathers. They ſhould be altogether wanting to their Duty, if they did not take away from a Son, a Knife or a Sword wherewith he is ready to wound himſelf. They ought notwithſtanding his Tears, to ſnatch away thoſe Preſents from him, and if they ſee him ready to ruin himſelf for ever in a certain Courſe of Life, they are obliged to bring him off by Force, and even to implore the Aſſiſtance of the temporal Power. If they neglect the Welfare of their Sons, alledging for their Excuſe, that they will uſe no Violence, as if their Sons were Slaves, they ſhew that they have no Love, or know not how to uſe it right.

It does clearly appear from all theſe things, that they who would ſubmit to the Judgment of Reaſon, the Conduct of the Divine Providence, with reſpect to the Permiſſion of the firſt Sin, would infallibly loſe their Cauſe, if they had nothing to ſay but that the Privileges of Free Will ought not to be violated. They would be anſwered, how can you conceive that God is the Father of Men, and yet ſay that he had rather ſave them the ſhort and inconſiderable trouble of forcing them to renounce an agreeable Converſation, wherein they were ready to make an ill uſe of their Liberty, than prevent their eternal Damnation, which they incur by the ill uſe of their Free Will? Where do you find ſuch Ideas of Paternal Goodneſs? To have a Regard to the Free Will of a Man, and carefully to abſtain from laying any Reſtraint upon his Inclination, when he is going to loſe his Innocence for ever, and to be Eternally damned, can you call that a lawful Obſervation of the Privileges of Liberty? You would be leſs unreaſonable, if you ſhould ſay to a Man who gets a Fall near you, and breaks his Leg, that which hindred us from preventing your Fall, is that we were afraid to undo ſome Folds of your Gown; we had ſo great a Reſpect for its Symmetry, that we would not undertake to ſpoil it, and we thought it was much better to let you run the hazard of breaking your Bones.

I will not deny but that the Permiſſion of making uſe of a Thing, and of abuſing it, (a) has had ſometimes the Character of a moſt eſpecial Favour; but then that Permiſſion implies the Impunity of the Abuſe. This can be therefore of no uſe in the preſent Caſe. See the Margin (†).

II. But the Second Thing which I am to propoſe will give more trouble to the Defendants than the other. I have argued hitherto upon this Principle; when thoſe whom we love cannot be preſerved from Death, or Infamy, or ſome other great Evil, unleſs we make them feel a leſſer Pain, we are oblig'd to make 'em feel it. To indulge them in their capricious or bad Inclinations, would be rather an act of Cruelty than of Goodneſs; and as they would infallibly be angry, as ſoon as they come to know the Conſequences of it, ſo they would be ready to thank thoſe who did hurt them ſo much for their Good. The Evidence of thoſe Propoſiti-

Z 2 ons

(d) Thus Queen Chriſtina was taken out of a Lake whereinto ſhe fell near Stockholm. I think St. Amand has mention'd that Adventure in his Poem intitled Moyſe Sauvé.

(e) Invitum qui ſervat, idem facit occidenti. Horat de Art. Poet. ſub. fin.

(f) A Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe words Compel them to come in. Part 2. p. 57. & Sep that (K∆∆∆) Men are wicked, and that God is Good; which gave Occasion to this other Queſtion, How comes it that God being Good, Men are wicked? The Solution of this Difficulty ſeem'd to Simplicius to be of very great Importance.

(a) The Emperor Nerva permitted theſe two things to the Father of Herodes Atticus who found a Treaſure in his Houſe. See Triſtan's Comment. tom. 1. pag. 357. and Spon's Travels. 2. Tom. pag. 164. of the Dutch Edition.

(†) The right way of conferring a Benefit is not to permit the Abuſe of it, but to add to it the Art of making uſe of it. Otherwiſe a Preſent is a Body without a Soul, as Horace intimates Epiſt. 4. lib. 1. ad Tibullum: non tu corpus eras ſine pectore: Dii tibi formam, Dii tibi divitias dederant, ARTEMQUE FRUENDI.

PAULINA

ons is obvious to every Body, and it cannot be doubted that Adam and Eve would have look'd upon God's Reſtraint to keep them from Falling, as a new Favour as great as the Precedent.

This is what the Principles of my firſt Obſervation run upon; but now I take another Way: I grant to the Adverſaries all their Demands; let them ſay that ſeeing Man had received the Privilege of Liberty, he was to have the intire Poſſeſſion and Uſe of it, and no manner of Reſtraint was to be put upon him. Let them ſay it was not a proper time to ſave a Man by pulling him by the Arm, or by the Hair, by throwing him upon the Ground, and ſaying to him, (b) It is hard for thee to kick againſt the Pricks. Let them ſay that the Free Will of Man was a Barrier altogether inviolable, and a Privilege which it was not lawful to ſtrike at. I will grant it. But was there no other Means of preventing the Fall of Man? God was not to oppoſe a corporal Motion; which is a troubleſome Oppoſition: A meer Act of the Will was the Thing in Queſtion. But all the Philoſophers ſay that the Will cannot be forced, Voluntas non poteſt cogi, and it is a Contradiction to ſay that a Volition is forced, for every Act of the Will is eſſentially voluntary. Now it is infinitely more eaſy for God to imprint in the Souls of Men ſuch an Act of the Will as he thinks fit, than it is for us to fold a Napkin, therefore, &c. Here is another Obſervation more convincing ſtill. All Divines own that God can infallibly produce a good Act of the Will in a humane Soul (c) without depriving it of the Uſe of Liberty. A preventing Delectation, the Suggeſtion of an Idea which weakens the Impreſſion of the tempting Object, and a thouſand other preliminary Means of acting upon the Mind and the ſenſitive Soul, move infallibly the rational Soul to make a good Uſe of its Liberty, and to follow the right Way without being invincibly forc'd to it. Calvin would not deny it with reſpect to the Soul of Adam, during the time of Innocency, and all the Divines of the Church of Rome, without excepting the (d) Janſeniſts, own it with reſpect to Man conſidered as a Sinner. They acknowledge that his Actions may be meritorious, though he acts only by a Grace that is either efficacious by it ſelf, or ſufficient in ſuch a Degree that it never fails to produce its Effect. They muſt therefore acknowledge a Divine Help ſo ſeaſonably beſtowed upon Adam, and ſo tempered that it had infallibly prevented his Fall, would have been very conſiſtent with the uſe of his Liberty, and had been no reſtraint upon him, nor unpleaſant to him, and had left him an Occaſion for doing meritorious Actions.

Thus the Defendants are driven from all their Intrenchments. Perhaps their laſt Anſwer will be, That God owes nothing to his Creatures, and that he was not bound to beſtow a neceſſitating or infallible Grace upon them. But why then did they ſay before, that he was to uſe humane Liberty with Caution? If he was obliged to preſerve that Prerogative of Men, he muſt needs owe ſomething to his own Work. But not to inſiſt upon that Argument ad hominem; one may anſwer them, That if he owes nothing to his Creatures, he is altogether bound to himſelf, and can do nothing againſt his Eſſence. But it is (†) eſſential to the Holineſs of God, and to his Infinite and Almighty Goodneſs, not to ſuffer the Introduction of Moral and Phyſical Evil.

Well, will they reply at laſt, but (f) Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? This is well ſaid: We ſhould have ſtop'd there. We are come again to the beginning of the Liſts; it had been better to ſtay there, for it is needleſs to engage in a Diſpute, if after having run for ſome time, one muſt at laſt ſhut up one's ſelf in one's Theſis. The Doctrine which the Manichees oppoſe, ought to be look'd upon by the Orthodox, as a Truth clearly reveal'd, and ſince it muſt at laſt be confeſt, that the Cauſes and Reaſons of it cannot be apprehended, it is better to own it from the very beginning, and ſtop there, and look upon the Objections of Philoſophers as a vain wrangling, and oppoſe nothing to them but Silence, together with the Shield of Faith.

(K∆∆∆) That Men are wicked, and that God is good. Which gave Occaſion to this other Queſtion.] This is what I find in the Learned Daniel Heinſius. (g) Antiquiſſima Pythagoricorum diſputatio, & ab iis potiſſimum quae ἀκουσματικὰ vocabant Pythagorici, qui tria quaerere ſolebant: Primo, τὸ τί ἐστι, ſecundo, τὸ τί μάλιστα, tertio, τὸ τί δεῖ πράττειν . . . (h) In qua quaeſtione etiam conſtabat ſeptem ſapientum philoſophia, qui nihil aliud quaerebant quam τί μάλιστα. Nec quid bonum ſed quid optimum, nec quid difficile ſed quid difficillimum. Notum eſt illud ex Plutarchi Sympoſio ſeptem ſapientum. . . . Sic cum quaereretur, quid veriſſime diceretur, reſpondebant, ὅτι πονηροὶ οἱ ἄνθρωποι, ἀγαθὸς ὁ θεός. Unde primo manavit ζήτημα tale, Τοῦ θεοῦ ἀγαθοῦ ὄντος πόθεν κακοὶ οἱ ἄνθρωποι. Quod teſtantur verſiculi apud Jamblichum Hippodamantis antiqui poetae, qui in laudem hujus quaeſtionis celebrat:

Ὦ θεῖοι πόθεν ἐστὲ, πόθεν τοιοὶ δ' ἐγένεσθε;
Ἄνθρωποι πόθεν ἐστὲ, πόθεν κακοὶ ὧδ' ἐγένεσθε;

Unde hoc dimanavit, Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ παρόντος, πόθεν τὸ κακόν. This Paſſage is to be found in the Notes of Heinſius upon a Diſſertation (i) above mention'd. He adds, that Maximus Tyrius the Author of that Diſſertation examined that Subject by reaſon of Plato's Doctrine (a) concerning three Attributes of God: 1. That God is Eſſentially Good, and Goodneſs it ſelf. 2. That he is Immutable. 3. That he is Truth it ſelf. The firſt Attribute ſignifies not only that God is Good, but alſo that he is the Author of Good, ſeeing he is the Idea of Good, and the Idea of Good is the Cauſe which produces Good. Now becauſe the Platonick Philoſophers affirm'd, that every Idea is God, they acknowledged no Idea of Evil, and conſequently no Cauſe of Evil; which gave Occaſion to this Queſtion, From whence comes Evil? (b) Ex primo ſequitur, Deo, ſi talis ſit, convenire non tantum bonum κατὰ δύναμιν, ſed etiam κατ' ἐνέργειαν, nec tantum ut bonus ſit, ſed etiam ut efficiat bonum: quia idea boni eſt. Idea autem boni, boni quoque cauſa eſt & exemplar. Porro cum Ideam mali tollant Platonici, quia ut Parmenides dicebat, πᾶσα ἰδέα θεός ἐστι, ſequitur ut quaeratur, Unde mala proficiſcantur. Laſtly, Heinſius obſerves that this Queſtion was thought to be of great Importance for Piety, and refers us to Simplicius's Commentary upon Epictetus. The Words of that Commentator ſeem to me to be ſo remarkable, that I think they'll be an Ornament to this Part of my Dictionary. Here they are: (c) Περὶ τῆς ὑποστάσεως τῶν κακῶν ὁ λόγος μὴ καλῶς διορθωθεὶς, καὶ τῆς περὶ τὸ θεῖον ἀσεβείας αἴτιος γέγονε, καὶ τὰς τοῦ ἤθους εὐζωΐας τὰς ἀρχὰς διέστρεψε, καὶ πολλαῖς καὶ ἀλύτοις ἀπορίαις ἐνέβαλε τοὺς μὴ καλῶς αἰτιολογήσαντας αὐτήν. Εἴτε γάρ τις λέγοι τὸ κακὸν, ὡς εἶναι δύο τῶν ὄντων ἀρχὰς, τί, τὸ ἀγαθὸν, καὶ τὸ κακὸν, πολλὰ καὶ μεγάλα ἄτοπα συμβαίνει. Diſputatio de natura atque ortu malorum, non bene explicata, tum impietatis erga Deum cauſa extitit, tum morum honeſtaque diſciplinae principia perturbavit: tum multis, iiſque inexplicabilibus dubitationibus involvit eos, qui cauſas illius non veras reddiderunt. nam ſive quis malum à Deo conditum, ſive principium eſſe dicat, ut duo ſint principia rerum bonum & malum: multae magnaeque abſurditates ſequuntur. He mentions three great Inconveniencies; for he aſſerts that the falſe Explication of the Origine of Evil has been the Cauſe of Impiety, and has confounded the Principles of Morals, and involved into many inſoluble Doubts thoſe who had a wrong Notion of this Subject. He refutes with great Force and Solidity the Hypotheſis of the Manichees conſidered in general: He refutes it better ſtill when he comes to the particular Explications they made uſe of. But when he undertakes in his turn to clear and prove his own Hypotheſis, he does not ſo fully ſatisfy his Reader. He makes uſe of the ſame Method which the ancient Fathers made uſe of, that is he gives no other Cauſe of the Origine of Evil than the Free Will of Man: 'tis the only thing he could do; a Man muſt come to this at laſt, and then he finds himſelf in the middle of a croſs Way. Which gave occaſion to a learned Abbot at Paris, to ſay not long ſince, I am in the middle of four Ways, that of the Calviniſts, that of the Janſeniſts, that of the Thomiſts, and that of the Moliniſts. I know very well which way I ought not to go, but I don't know which way I ought to go, Quem fugiam habeo, quem ſequar non habeo. The firſt Way is contrary to the Council of Trent; the ſecond, to the

(b) Act. IX. 5.

(c) See the Rem. F∆ of the Art. marcionites.

(d) That is to ſay conſidering that they affirm that they condemn the Propoſitions of Janſenius in the Senſe that the Pope condemned them.

(†) That is, it ſeems ſo to our weak Reaſon.

(f) Rom. IX. 20.

(g) Dan. Heinſius in Max. Tyr. p. [illegible]

(h) There is left out ſomething in the Original, I have [illegible] it out of order, and I gueſs that the Printers ſuppreſt ſeveral Lines.

(i) In the Rem. K∆.

(a) In lib. 2. de Republica.

(b) Heinſ. ib. p. [illegible]

(c) Simplicius in hac enchiridii Epicteti verba cap. τὸ Ὥσπερ σκοπὸς οὐ τίθεται πρὸς τὸ ἀποτυχεῖν, οὕτως οὐδὲ κακοῦ φύσις ἐν κόσμῳ γίνεται. Qumadmodum aberrandi cauſa meta non ponitur, ſic nec mali natura in mundo exiſtit.

PAULINA (Lollia). See the Remarks of the Article LOLLIUS.

PEYRAREDE (John de) a Gentleman † of Gaſcogne, and (A) a Proteſtant, was a good Latin Poet, and a good Critick. He began to be known at Paris towards the beginning of the Reign of Lewis XIV. He publiſhed ſome Remarks upon Terence, and ſome Hemiſticks, which filled up the Imperfect Verſes of the Æneis, to which he added ſome Verſes. He dedicated that Work to the Queen of Sweden, β. His Corrections and critical Conjectures upon Florus, deſerved the Approbation of la Mothe le Vayer, who follow'd them often, and (A*) made an honourable mention of him. Balzac ſpeaks of him ſometimes in his Letters. I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage out of them which is very (B) glorious to him. We find in a Letter γ which he writ from Paris the 20th of April 1641. to Iſaac Voſſius, that he began to feel the Infirmities of old Age, and that for the Space of Thirty Years he had laboured under great Difficulties, or ſpent his Time in improving his Eſtate. It appears from that Letter that he had a Son.

PEYRE (James D'Auzoles ζ la) a Gentleman ‡ of Auvergne, one of the moſt ridiculous Writers of the XVII. Century, tells us in the Preface before his Works, that he was Son of Peter d'Auzoles, and of Mary Fabri of Auvergne. He deſerved not to be refuted by ſome learned (C) Men, yet he had that Honour. He was ridiculed to ſome purpoſe in a ‡ Work of Mr. Baillet, ſpeaking of a Book which he intitled † Anti-Baban. He dyed of an Apoplexy * at Paris the 19th of May, 1642. I have ſaid ſomething of him in the Article of Balzac, and I ſhall give an Inſtance of the Narrowneſs (D) of his Genius.

PEYRERE (Iſaac La) born at Bourdeaux, made himſelf Famous by his Treatiſe

---

the Popes Conſtitutions; the third, to Reaſon; and the fourth, to St. Paul. The Proteſtants may more eaſily get out of this Perplexity, by preferring St. Paul's Authority to that of the Popes and Councils.

(A) And a Proteſtant.] He was a very zealous Proteſtant, as one may gueſs from a Letter of Mr. de Balzac to Mr. Conrart. (d) But who told you, ſays he to him, that I hate the Huguenots? It cannot be Mr. Conrart, nor Mr. de Saumaiſe, nor Mr. Daillé, whom I have ſo much praiſed and celebrated, and whom I profeſs to love, honour and eſteem infinitely. I perceive that Monſieur Peyrarede was not pleaſed to make a Difference between Jeſt and Earneſt, and that in the free Converſation we had together, he put an ill Conſtruction upon ſome Words, which I ſpoke without any Deſign. Without inſiſting any longer upon it, I proteſt, dear Sir, that I hate the Huguenots no more than you hate the Catholicks.

(AΔ) And made an honourable mention of him.] (e) "I follow the Interpretation of the Learned "Monſieur Peyrarede, ſays he, in his Notes upon the 19th Chapter of the 2d Book: He uſes a nobler Epithet in another Place. Thoſe Words, ſays he (f), are obſcure, I have interpreted them according to the Expoſition of the illuſtrious Monſieur Peyrarede. The Abbot de Marolles quotes him often in his Remarks upon Statius.

(B) A Paſſage . . . . which is very glorious to him.] "The Poſt of Friday laſt, brought me ſome "News of Monſieur de Peyrarede. Do you know "that his Name makes already a great Noiſe at "Paris, and that the Celtæ admire the Aquitani? "Or, if you had rather I ſhould expreſs my ſelf "another Way, and ſpeak Poetically of a Poet, "the God of the Seine is ſurpriſed to hear the Muſes "of the Dordogne ſing ſo well. For my Part, I am "charmed with their laſt Compoſition, and if the "Souls of the Bleſſed could be raiſed up by the "Charms of fine Verſes, I don't doubt but that the "Soul of the Duke de Brezé would come down from "Heaven, at the very Moment that he ſhould be "told:

" - - - - Tu nube ſerena
" Stellato fulgens apice, & radiante coronâ,
" Ad tua Sacra veni, quæ multo Regia luctu
" Concelebrat, ſacrique Chori, ſanctuſque Senatus, &c.
" Aſpice ut ipſa gemens, ingenti affixa feretro,
" Horridaque & laceris luget Victoria pennis,
" Quæ quondam tua caſtra, tuas comitata triremes,
" Heſperiis toties mutas dum ſanguine Pontum,
" Deſeruit tua ſigna ſemel: nunc cadis acerbæ
" Invidiam lenire velit, fatiſque malignis
" Imputat, infandæque excuſat crimina cladis, &c.

"Did you ever ſee any thing more noble or more "pathetical than that poor Victory afflicted with "the Death of that brave Duke? What a Spectacle "to ſee her with her torn Clothes, and broken "Wings, make Penance for a Fault which ſhe "thought to be guilty of; to ſee her faſtened and "as it were nailed to that great Coffin, which ſhe "waſhes with her Tears? She cannot eaſe her "Grief for the Misfortune that happen'd at Orbitello: She would fain impute it to a bad Deſtiny: "She, &c. (g). Mr. de Balzac writ this the 4th of December, 1646.

(C) To be refuted by ſome learned Men.] His little Book of the Parmanent Life of Melchiſedech printed in the Year 1622, was refuted by Salian a Jeſuit. His Job printed the next Year, was refuted by Bolduc a Capuchin, and by Petavius (b). He ſhould have thanked that Jeſuit, inſtead of being ſo imprudent as to write againſt him a Chronological Book intitled the Diſciple of Time. 'Tis he that is mention'd, without being named, in the Preface of the 2d Part of the Rationarium temporum, wherein 'tis ſaid that of all Chronological Books that were come out till then, none was more wretched than that which was intitled Holy Chronology. La Peyre was the Author of it, and of a ſmall Folio printed in 1629, and intitled the Holy Geography, or an exact Deſcription of the Earth, and a true Demonſtration of the Terreſtrial Paradiſe. I wonder that Voſſius placed not that Author in his long Catalogue of Chronologers.

(D) An Inſtance of the Narrowneſs of his Genius.] I find it in the Abbot de Marollos. "Mr. le Febure "Chantereau, ſays he (a), maintains that the com"mon Way of reckoning the Years of our Lord, "is the beſt, and ought to be preferred to all "others, againſt the Opinion of Scaliger, Father "Petau, and others who reckon ſome few Years "more, or cut off ſome; and when I ſaw that he "praiſed upon that Account, the late Mr. de la "Peyre James d' Auzoles, whom I knew alſo very "well, I did a little wonder at it, becauſe the good "Man had no great Genius for it, though he ap"plied himſelf very much to it: which I eaſily "perceived, becauſe he was of Opinion that the "Year might be made up of three hundred and "ſixty four Days, inſtead of three hundred and "ſixty five, and ſomewhat more, that it might al"ways begin of a Sunday, and end with a Saturday. "Certainly he underſtood not very well that Sci"ence; for if his Opinion was followed, January "would ſoon be found in the Seaſon of Auguſt, be"cauſe the Years would always be too ſhort by one "Day and ſome Hours; which being loſt upon the "Months, they muſt neceſſarily go forward. But "he never could underſtand it, and fell into a great "Paſſion about it; from whence I inferred that "Mr. de la Peyre was not ſo great a Man as he "thought himſelf to be in the Science which he profeſt. He obſerved ſometimes in his Diſputes what is practiſed by thoſe that are at Law; for he declared where he made his Abode. (b) He dated his Anti-Babau, at Paris in the Houſe of Mr. Couturier a Man of Probity and Honour, wherein he lived the 5th of Auguſt, 1631. Is not this a Sign of a weak Man?

(A) Con-

---

† He call'd himſelf nobilis Aquitanus in his Works, as the Abbot de Marolles obſerves in the Liſt of the Authors who oblig'd him.

β See the Abbot de Marolles. ib.

γ It is the 424. of thoſe that were written to J. Gerard Voſſius.

ζ What we read in Moreri's Dictionary, that his Name was d'Auzoles la Reine, is not true.

‡ Nobilis Arvernas. Ludov. Jacob, ubi infra.

‡ In the 2d Tome of the Anti. pag. 236.

† 'Tis an Anſwer to a Letter of Father Bolduc.

* Ludov. Jacob, Bib. Pontific. pag. 343. Peter de St. Romuald, chronol. journ. tom. 1. p. 619. ſays that he dyed of a malignant Fever the 30 of June.

(d) Balzac's Let. to Conrart. Book 1. p. m. 25, 26.

(e) La Mothe le Vayer, Remarks upon Florus, p. 910. *See alſo p.*842.

(f) Idib. pag. 933.

(g) Balzac, choice Let. 2 Part Book 3. Letter 37. p. m. 378.

(b) See Mr. Baillet's Anti, tom. 2. p. 240, 241.

(a) Marol. Memoirs. pag. 271, 272.

(b) Baillet, ubi ſup. pag. 242.

Treatise concerning the Pre-Adamites, (A) which was printed in Holland in the Year 1655, and immediately refuted (A△) by a Multitude of Authors. He was then a Protestant, and had a Place in the House of the Prince of Conde. Tho' he published his Book without putting his Name to it, he was known to be the Author of it, hence it is that he was Imprisoned in the Spanish (B) Netherlands. He found no better Way to come off, than to lay his Doctrine upon the Principles of the Protestants, and to promise to go to Mass. He went to Rome, where he was † kindly received by Alexander VII. He publish'd, as is usual, the Motives which induced him to change his Religion. Some Catholicks (B△) laught at it. He spent the last Years of his Life in a ‡ Retirement. He had been in Denmark, wherein he attended Mr. de la Thuillerie Ambassador of France, and composed there (C) two Relations which have been printed. He is mention'd (D) in the Menagiana, as you may see in the Remarks. You will find some (E) very curious Circumstances in the Fragment of a Letter which I shall set down.

PEIRESC.

(A) Concerning the Pre Adamites, which was printed in Holland in the Year (c) 1655.] Mr. Heidanus was accused of having had a hand in the printing of that Book; but he cleared himself of it, and his Accuser never durst reply to it. 'Tis what I find in Petrus ab Andla. (d) Ignorantiam Maresii sequitur ejus effrons & immane mendacium, quovis pæna dignissimum. Eum scilicet qui familiam ducit inter hodiernos Cartesianos, obstetricatum fuisse editioni libri de Præadamitis inscripti. Sed cum vir ille doctissimus detestandam hanc calumniam publice à se sit amolitus in parte secunda suarum considerationum de Sabbatho & die Dominica pag. 31. Nec ille, qui ut inquit Maresius, olim per indirectum id exprobraverat, cujus gonorrheam & profluvia hic lambere ac resorbere voluit noster, quicquam respondere potuerit, maledicentissimæ linguæ speculum inter scruta rejiceremus, nisi dudum in authoris caput recidisset cum immortali ejus ignominia. You'll find in Moreri's Supplement the Plan of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites.

(A△) And immediately refuted by a Multitude of Authors.] The Author of Moreri's Supplement names only four (e) Persons who wrote against the System of the Pre Adamites. Here is a larger Catalogue. Joh. Conrad. Dannhawerus, Professor of Divinity at Strasburg published there, Præadamita utis, sive fabula priorum hominum ante Adamum conditorum explosa. John Micralius Professor of Philosophy, and Rector of a College at Stetin, published a Book (f) against la Peyrere. John Henry Ursinus printed at Francfort, Novus Prometheus Præadamitarum plastes ad caucasum relegatus & religatus. Samuel Maresius Professor of Divinity at Groningen, printed there, Refutatio fabulæ Præadamiticæ absoluta septem primibus quæstionibus cum præfatione Apologetica pro αὐθεντίᾳ sacræ scripturæ. John Hilpertus Professor at Helmstad, printed at Amsterdam, Disquisitio de Præadamitis. The Non ens Præadamaticum of Antony Hulsius was printed for John Elzevir at Leyden. Philip le Prieur published at Paris Animadversiones in librum Præadamitarum. He took the Name of Eusebius Romanus. All those Books were printed in the Year 1656, as Thomas Bangius (g) observes, who adds, that La Peyrere shewed him his Manuscript at Coppenhagen in 1645; and then he says, Neutiquam tamen persuadere nobis unquam potuimus ex temeritatis dilapsurum virum alias humanum & ingeniosum ut hoc commentum publicis typis excudendum daret, nisi res ipsa nostris oculis exposita fuisset. Mr. Crenius (h) observes that Calovius and Schotanus have warmly disputed against the Pre-Adamitick Hypothesis; the Former in the three Volumes of his common Places, and the Latter in his Bibliotheque of the holy History. He says also, (i) That there are to be found in the Edition of the Prometheus Præadamitarum of John Henry Ursinus, doctissimorum quorumdam Gallorum in librum de Præadamitis notæ censoriæ, and that Philip le Prieur (k) put out another Edition of his Work at Paris, in the Year 1658, wherein he praises his Antagonist for having embrac'd the Church of Rome. Bangius says nothing of a Treatise printed at Leyden in 1656, with this Title, Responsio exetastica ad tractatum incerto autore nuper editum, cui titulus Præadamitæ. Autore J. Pythio Ministro Jesu Christi in Swartewael.

(B) That he was imprisoned in the Spanish Netherlands.] In the Year (l) 1655. "The Bishop of "Namur published a Censure of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites, written by the Sieur la "Peyrere, but without naming him, because he "had not said that he was the Author of it, tho' "it was but too well known. But he was used "worse upon the same Account, being at Brussels "in February (m) 1656. Thirty Armed Men rushe "into his Chamber and apprehended him, and "then having carryed him through several long "Windings of the Streets of Brussels, they clapp'd "him up at last in the Tower of Terremberg, with "the Consent of the Arch-Duke Leopold. He was "told, that it was by the Authority of the great "Vicar of the Archbishop of Mechlen. At last after he had been some time in that Tower, he "came out of it by the Credit of the Prince of "Conde his Master, and immediately, by his Advice, he went to Rome, and threw himself at the "Pope's Feet, and submitted himself and his Book "to his Will: And so he became a Catholick, and "had as good a Success as he could wish. 'Tis "what he himself says in his Petition to the most "Holy Father Pope Alexander VII. See the Remark E.

(B△) Some Catholicks laugh'd at it.] Read this Passage out of a Letter of Guy Patin, written the 9th of April, 1658. "The Author of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites, whose Name is Isaac "de la (n) Pereire, a Gascon, is here, being return'd "from Rome. He has published a little Book in "Quarto, in which he gives an Account of the "Reasons which moved him to change his Religion, "(which in School Terms is call'd, to abjure one's "Heresy) and he disowns his Book concerning "the Pre-Adamites. I have seen the Book, it does "not sell well. 'Tis said that the Pope has given "him a small Abbey, and that Mazarin has promised him some new Favour from Heaven or Purgatory. He is here waiting for that Favour, as greedily as you may fancy of a Gascon, who is afraid "of starving, and who hath changed his Religion "only to raise himself and fare better, at any "Body's Cost. He shews himself here as if he was "a great Worker of Miracles, or a Publisher of Pardons. . . . (o) A Gascon, who is a learned Man, "a Courtier, and a converted Huguenot lately come "from Rome, is very fit to act such a Comedy.

(C) Two Relations which have been Printed.] He made 'em for la Mothe le Vayer, his Friend; one of them is a Relation of Greenland, and the other of Island; they are both curious enough: I have quoted something of the Latter in the Article Jonas (Arngrimus). He dedicated it to the Prince of Conde; and he intimates in the Epistle Dedicatory that he designs to write the Life of that Hero. I think he is the Author of the Relation of the Battel of Lens.

(D) He is mention'd in the Menagiana.] (a) "Isaac "de la Peyrere of Bourdeaux, is the Author of a Book "intitled, The Pre-Adamites, wherein he pretends "to shew that Adam is not the First Man. The good "Man boarded at Nostre Dame des Vertus in the "House of the Fathers of the Oratory. He was still "infatuated with his Pre-Adamites, and 'tis likely "he dyed with that fantastical Notion. He would "have been very well pleased, had he known that "there is a Rabbin who mentions Adam's Tutor. But "that Rabbin was a Rabbin, that is to say, an Author not to be minded. When the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites came out, it was condemned to be burnt by the Hangman. I desired "the Author who was my Friend, to send it me before it came to Light. He understood the Jest, "and sent me a Copy of it with this Verse of Ovid, "changing the Word Urbem into that of Ignem.

"Parve, nec invideo, sine me liber ibis in ignem (b).

See the Miscellanies (†) of Vig. Marville p. 144. 1. tom.

(E) You will find some . . . . Circumstances in the Fragment of a Letter.] I don't trust much Peter de St. Romuald,

† See the Remark B.

‡ See the Remark D.

(c) Note that I have seen in the Catalogue of a Library which was sold at Leyden on the first of October, 1695. that Book concerning the Pre-Adamites printed in 8vo. in 1655. and these Words are added, Editio optima.

(d) Pet. ab Andla animadv. ad vindicias Dissertationis. pag. 10.

(e) Mr. Morin: (Morin the Astrologer) Antony Hulsius Author of the Non ens Præadamiticum. J. Pythius, & J. Hilpertus.

(f) It was printed at Stetin.

(g) Tho. Bangius in cælo Orientis exercit. II. quæst. 8. pag. 134. apud Thomam Crenium fasc. 2. exercitationum philologico-historicarum pag. 13.

(h) Tho. Crenius ib.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 8.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 10.

(l) Peter de St. Romuald, a Chronological and Historical Journal. 25 Decem. p.m. 675.

(m) Moreri is therefore mistaken, when he says that la Peyrere retracted his Opinion in a Book printed at Rome in the Year 1655. His Printers have put in 1555.

(n) He should have said La Peyrere.

(o) Patin. Lett. 117. pag. 454, 455. of the 1 Tom.

(a) He should have said Isaac la Peyrere. Moreri should not have named him la Perere.

(b) Continuat. of the Menagiana. p. 38. of the Dutch Edit.

(†) He is named there de la Pereyre.

PEIRESC (Nicolas Claude Fabri, Lord of) Counſellor in the Parliament of Aix, was born in Provence ‡ the Firſt of December 1580. I might add many Things to what has been ſaid by Moreri; but having little room with reſpect to the Letters of the Alphabet that are next to P, I am forced to ſuppreſs many Articles, and to touch ſlightly upon many others. I ſhall only ſay that no Man was ever more ſerviceable to the Commonwealth of Learning. He was, if I may ſay ſo, its Attorney-General: He encouraged Authors, furniſhed them with Knowledge and Materials, and ſpent his Revenue in buying, or getting Copies of the moſt ſcarce and uſeful Monuments. He kept Correſpondence with Learned Men (A) in all the Parts of the World: Philoſophical Experiments, Curioſities of Nature, Productions of Art, Monuments of Antiquity, Hiſtory, and Languages were equally the Object of his Care and Curioſity. You will find an exact Account of all thoſe Things in his Life, which was elegantly and learnedly written (B) by Gaſſendus. It will not be needleſs to obſerve, that Peireſc, who was ſo Famous all over Europe, and whoſe Death was lamented by ſo many Poets, and in (C) ſo many Languages,

Romuald, and therefore I deſired a Gentleman of great Merit, who lived then in the Houſe of the Prince of Conde, to let me know whether that good Feuillant has given a true Account of the Matter. Here is the Gentleman's Anſwer to me, " I think I " am able to give you an exact Account of what " you deſire of me, becauſe Mr. de la Peyrere was " my very good Friend. He was arreſted at Bruſſels " in the time mention'd by your Author. But the " ſecret Hiſtory of it is, that the late Prince con" cerned himſelf in that Buſineſs by the means of " his Confeſſor, who was a Jeſuit, and loved Mr. " de la Peyrere, abating his Religion, which he " would have him to change. The Pre-Adamite was " therefore arreſted, and was made afraid of the " Conſequences of his Book, unleſs he changed his " Religion. The good Man, who was not obſtinate " about what is call'd Religion, changed it very " ſoon, and his Maſter gave him wherewith to go " and fetch his Abſolution at Rome, which he did " not much value. He return'd to his Maſter's, who " loved him to the laſt, and maintained him, ſince " his Return into France, in the Houſe of the Fa" thers of the Oratory of Paris. I have often ſeen " him there, and found that he was far from being " a true Papiſt; but he was very fond of his No" tion concerning the Pre-Adamites, about which " he writ and ſpoke ſecretly to his Friends till he " dyed. The Procurator General of that Order, " who is a Friend of mine, and who loved him, " invited me to dine with him, and made him con" feſs, that he writ Books ſtill, which he told me " ſoftly would be burnt after the Death of the good " Man. La Peyrere was an extraordinary good" natur'd Man, who lived a quiet Life, and had but " little Faith.

(A) He kept Correſpondence with Learned Men in all Parts of the World.] I have been informed by a (c) Letter of the Abbot Nicaiſe, that Mr. Thomaſſin Mazaugues (*) Counſellor in the Parliament of Aix, has ten thouſand Letters in his hands, which were found amongſt the Papers of Mr. de Peireſc, and that he makes Choice of them; that there a great many which that famous Senator had received from Holſtenius, Father Kircher, Cavalier del Pozzo, Salmaſius, Selden, Camden, Pignorius, Gualdo, the Puteanus's, Rigaltius, and ſeveral other learned Men, of which he could make one Volume in 4o. and intitle it Epiſtolæ virorum eruditorum quæ extant ad Peireſkium. You will find ſome curious Things about thoſe Letters in the beginning of the Menagiana, 2d Edition. Here is a Paſſage of Balzac, which will not be improperly alledged. " (d) I " agree with you in all the greateſt and moſt magni" ficent Things you ſay of your Friend; and if you " will allow me to make uſe of a Word borrowed " from Greece, I add, that we have loſt in that " great Man, a Piece of the Shipwrack of Antiquity, " and the Relicks of the Golden Age. All the Virtues " of the Heroical Times had retired into that noble " Soul. The Univerſal Corruption of Mankind " could not work upon his good Conſtitution. His " Generoſity was neither confined by the Sea, nor " ſhut up on this ſide of the Alps; it diffuſed its " Favours and Kindneſſes every where, and it re" ceived Thanks from the Extremities of Syria, and " from the very Top of Mount Libanus. With an " indifferent Eſtate he had the Soul of a Potent " Lord, and without the Friendſhip of Auguſtus, he " was a Mecenas. Again, (e) The late Mr. de Malherbe was one of his particular Friends, and ſometimes ſpoke to me of him, but only as of a Man extreamly Curious, a great lover of Relations and News, a great Searcher of Medals and Manuſcripts, who had abundance of Acquaintance in Foreign Countries, and was a great Admirer of all the Doctors of Leyden, &c.

(B) His Life . . . . . written by Gaſſendus.] That Work is very much eſteem'd. Yet there is an Author who pretends that many Things have not been well related (f) in it. I think he means ſome Paſſages wherein Salmaſius is concerned. A Phyſician (g) of Caſtres, who has collected ſome Facts omitted by Gaſſendus, forgot on the other hand ſeveral Encomiums on Mr. de Peireſc, which Colomeſius has inſerted in his (h) Gallia Orientalis.

(C) Death was lamented . . . in ſo many Languages.] Naudæus will afford me a whole Commentary on this Text. (i) " I would fain . . . hear thee " diſcourſe about that famous Academy of the Hu" mouriſts, where, as the Baron de Rians ſaid one " day, the Obſequies of his Uncle the Abbot and " Counſellor Peireſc had been celebrated in more than " Forty ſeveral Languages. . . . (k) Thou may'ſt " well judge how much that Academy is eſteemed " at Rome, ſince Monſieur Peireſc, that Ornament of " France, that great Favourer of Learned Men, that " Abyſs of Learning, deſired to be a Member of it; " and ſince as he had honoured that famous Acade" my with his Name, they did alſo in their turn ho" nour his Memory with ſuch Duties as they had ne" ver before paid but to thoſe by whom they had " been governed, eſpecially upon the Account of " their extraordinary Virtue and Learning. Naudæus quotes thereupon Gaſſendus, who ſays, that beſides the Funeral Oration, pronounced in Latin by Mr. Bouchard, ſeveral Elogies of the Deceaſed (l) were recited in Italian, Latin, and Greek Verſes; and then Naudæus obſerves that the Baron de Rians, who mentions Forty Languages, and Gaſſendus who mentions only three, are both in the right: for, ſays he, (a) the Praiſes of Monſieur Peireſc were only celebrated in three Languages in the Academy, and before the Cardinals; but afterwards they added to the Collection of thoſe Elogies printed at Rome, this Pangloſſia, five generis humani Leſſus in funere delicii ſui Nicolai Claudii Fabricii Peireſcii, which does effectually contain the Elogies of that great Man in Forty Idioms, and I might almoſt ſay, in as many different Characters. From whence Scipio de Grammond, who was preſent at that Ceremony, and who dyed ſome time after at Venice, took occaſion to compoſe theſe Verſes, to ſhew how Advantageous that Pangloſſia was both to the ſaid Sieur Peireſc, and to the City of Rome.

Indus, Arabs, Medus, Gallus, Germanus, Etruſcus,
  Anglus, Idumæus, Sarmata, Grajus, Iber,
Et quicunque venit gelido de cardine, & uſto,
  Eoiſque plagis, occiduiſque ſonus;
Omnes Fabricio concordi voce parentant,
  Qui norat proprios reddere cuique ſonos.
Pro ſuperi! quanta eſt Romana potentia, quæ nunc
  Tot populis, & tot gentibus ora aperit.
Romana verè nunc clauditur orbis in urbe,
  Cui tam multifido competit ore loqui.

Balzac expreſſes ſome Contempt for the (b) Pangloſſia. " (c) What does Signor John (d) James " think of with his frightful Title of Pangloſſia? To " go as far as Forty, there muſt be three and twenty " which were unknown to Scaliger, and the Soul of

" Parnaſſus;

---

‡ In the Village of Beaugencier, which Gaſſendus calls in Latin Belgencerium.

(f) Multa perperam neſcioquo fato, in vita Peireskii a Gaſſendo relata, alias fortaſſe docebimus. Clementius in vita Salmaſii.

(g) Peter Borel: his Auctarium ad vitam Peireskii, was printed at the Hague in the year 1654.

(h) Page 175. & Seq.

(i) Naudæus, Dialogue de Maſcurat, pag. 138.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 139.

(l) Et carmina quidem in defuncti laudem Italicè, Latinè, Græcè recitarunt lectiſſima totius urbis ingenia: funebrem verò orationem copioſam ſanè, & elegantem pronunciavit Joannes Jacobus Buccardus delectus ad id muneris. Gaſſend. in vita Peireskii lib. 6. pag. m. 349.

(a) Naudæus, ib. pag. 141.

(b) Moreri is in the wrong to call it Pandegloſſie. The Dutch Editions of Moreri have Leſſas inſtead of Leſſus.

(c) Balzac, Let. 26. to Chapelain Book 4.

(d) That is to ſay, Bouchard, who made the Funeral Oration, and call'd himſelf Joannes Jacobus Buscardus.

(c) Dated at Dijon the 21*th of* Feb. 1696.

(*) He did me the honour to write to me the 4*th of* Feb. 1699. a long account of it, which I had inſerted at the end of this Remark A, were it not that I thought the Publick would ſee it in the Preface to thoſe choice Letters before the 2*d Edition of this Dictionary be ended. Thoſe Letters are printing at* Geneva.

(d) Balzac Let. to Mr. l'Huillier. 'Tis the 2*d of the* 2*d Book of the* 1*ſt Part of the choice Letters p.* 48. of the Dutch Edition.

(e) Id. Let. 13. to Chapelain Book 2. p. m. 73.

Treatiſe concerning the Pre-Adamites, (A) which was printed in Holland in the Year 1655, and immediately refuted (*A*Δ) by a Multitude of Authors. He was then a Proteſtant, and had a Place in the Houſe of the Prince of Conde. Tho' he publiſhed his Book without putting his Name to it, he was known to be the Author of it, hence it is that he was Impriſoned in the Spaniſh (B) Netherlands. He found no better Way to come off, than to lay his Doctrine upon the Principles of the Proteſtants, and to promiſe to go to Maſs. He went to Rome, where he was † kindly received by Alexander VII. He publiſh'd, as is uſual, the Motives which induced him to change his Religion. Some Catholicks (*B*Δ) laugh'd at it. He ſpent the laſt Years of his Life in a ‡ Retirement. He had been in Denmark, wherein he attended Mr. de la Thuillerie Ambaſſador of France, and compoſed there (C) two Relations which have been printed. He is mention'd (D) in the Menagiana, as you may ſee in the Remarks. You will find ſome (E) very curious Circumſtances in the Fragment of a Letter which I ſhall ſet down.

PEIRESC.

(A) Concerning the Pre Adamites, which was printed in Holland in the Year (c) 1555.] Mr. Heidanus was accuſed of having had a hand in the printing of that Book; but he cleared himſelf of it, and his Accuſer never durſt reply to it. 'Tis what I find in Petrus ab Andlo. (d) Ignorantiam Mareſii ſequitur ejus effrons & immane mendacium, quavis pœna digniſſimum. Eum ſcilicet qui familiam ducit inter hodiernos Carteſianos, obſtetricatum fuiſſe editioni libri de Præadamitis inſcripti. Sed cum vir ille doctiſſimus deteſtandam hanc calumniam publice à ſe ſit amolitus in parte ſecunda ſuarum conſiderationum de Sabbatho & die Dominica pag. 31. Nec ille, qui ut inquit Mareſius, olim per indirectum id exprobraverat, cujus gonorrhœam & profluvia hic lambere ac reſorbere voluit miſer, quicquam reſpondere potuerit, maledicentiſſimæ linguæ ſpiculum inter ſcruta rejiceremus, niſi dudum in auctoris caput recidiſſet cum immortali ejus ignominia. You'll find in Moreri's Supplement the Plan of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites.

(*A*Δ) And immediately refuted by a Multitude of Authors.] The Author of Moreri's Supplement names only four (e) Perſons who wrote againſt the Syſtem of the Pre Adamites. Here is a larger Catalogue. Joh. Conrad. Dannhawerus, Profeſſor of Divinity at Straſburg publiſhed there, Præadamita utis, ſive fabula priorum hominum ante Adamum conditorum exploſa. John Micrælius Profeſſor of Philoſophy, and Rector of a College at Stetin, publiſhed a Book (f) againſt la Peyrere. John Henry Urſinus printed at Francfort, Novus Prometheus Præadamitarum plaſtes ad caucaſum relegatus & religatus. Samuel Mareſius Profeſſor of Divinity at Groningen, printed there, Refutatio fabulæ Præadamiticæ abſoluta ſeptem primibus quæſtionibus cum præfatione Apologetica pro αὐθεντίᾳ ſacræ ſcripturæ. John Hilpertus Profeſſor at Helmſtad, printed at Amſterdam, Diſquiſitio de Præadamitis. The Non ens Præadamaticum of Antony Hulſius was printed for John Elzevir at Leyden. Philip le Prieur publiſhed at Paris Animadverſiones in librum Præadamitarum. He took the Name of Euſebius Romanus. All thoſe Books were printed in the Year 1656, as Thomas Bangius (g) obſerves, who adds, that La Peyrere ſhewed him his Manuſcript at Coppenhagen in 1645; and then he ſays, Neutiquam tamen perſuadere nobis unquam potuimus eo temeritatis dilapſurum virum alias humanum & ingenioſum ut hoc commentum publicis typis excudendum daret, niſi res ipſa noſtris oculis expoſita fuiſſet. Mr. Crenius (h) obſerves that Calovius and Schotanus have warmly diſputed againſt the Pre-Adamitick Hypotheſis; the Former in the three Volumes of his common Places, and the Latter in his Bibliotheque of the holy Hiſtory. He ſays alſo, (i) That there are to be found in the Edition of the Prometheus Præadamitarum of John Henry Urſinus, doctiſſimorum quorumdam Gallorum in librum de Præadamitis notæ cenſoriæ, and that Philip le Prieur (k) put out another Edition of his Work at Paris, in the Year 1658, wherein he praiſes his Antagoniſt for having embrac'd the Church of Rome. Bangius ſays nothing of a Treatiſe printed at Leyden in 1656. with this Title, Reſponſio exetaſtica ad tractatum incerto autore nuper editum, cui titulus Præadamitæ. Autore J. Pythio Miniſtro Jeſu Chriſti in Swartewael.

(B) That he was impriſoned in the Spaniſh Netherlands.] In the Year (l) 1655. “The Biſhop of Namur publiſhed a Cenſure of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites, written by the Sieur la Peyrere, but without naming him, becauſe he had not ſaid that he was the Author of it, tho' it was but too well known. But he was uſed worſe upon the ſame Account, being at Bruſſels in February (m) 1656. Thirty Armed Men ruſhe into his Chamber and apprehended him; and then having carryed him through ſeveral long Windings of the Streets of Bruſſels, they clapp'd him up at laſt in the Tower of Turemberg, with the Conſent of the Arch-Duke Leopold. He was told, that it was by the Authority of the great Vicar of the Archbiſhop of Mechlen. At laſt after he had been ſome time in that Tower, he came out of it by the Credit of the Prince of Conde his Maſter, and immediately, by his Advice, he went to Rome, and threw himſelf at the Pope's Feet, and ſubmitted himſelf and his Book to his Will: And ſo he became a Catholick, and had as good a Succeſs as he could wiſh. 'Tis what he himſelf ſays in his Petition to the moſt Holy Father Pope Alexander VII. See the Remark E.

(*B*Δ) Some Catholicks laugh'd at it.] Read this Paſſage out of a Letter of Guy Patin, written the 9th of April, 1658. “The Author of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites, whoſe Name is Iſaac de la (n) Pereire, a Gaſcon, is here, being return'd from Rome. He has publiſhed a little Book in Quarto, in which he gives an Account of the Reaſons which moved him to change his Religion, (which in School Terms is call'd, to abjure one's Hereſy) and he diſowns his Book concerning the Pre-Adamites. I have ſeen the Book, it does not ſell well. 'Tis ſaid that the Pope has given him a ſmall Abbey, and that Mazarin has promiſed him ſome new Favour from Heaven or Purgatory. He is here waiting for that Favour, as greedily as you may fancy of a Gaſcon, who is afraid of ſtarving, and who hath changed his Religion only to raiſe himſelf and fare better, at any Body's Coſt. He ſhews himſelf here as if he was a great Worker of Miracles, or a Publiſher of Pardons. . . . (o) A Gaſcon, who is a learned Man, a Courtier, and a converted Huguenot lately come from Rome, is very fit to act ſuch a Comedy.

(C) Two Relations which have been Printed.] He made 'em for la Mothe le Vayer, his Friend; one of them is a Relation of Greenland, and the other of Iſland; they are both curious enough: I have quoted ſomething of the Latter in the Article Jonas (Arngrimus). He dedicated it to the Prince of Conde; and he intimates in the Epiſtle Dedicatory that he deſigns to write the Life of that Hero. I think he is the Author of the Relation of the Battel of Lens.

(D) He is mention'd in the Menagiana.] (a) “Iſaac de la Peyrere of Bourdeaux, is the Author of a Book intitled, The Pre-Adamites, wherein he pretends to ſhew that Adam is not the Firſt Man. The good Man boarded at Noſtre Dame des Vertus in the Houſe of the Fathers of the Oratory. He was ſtill infatuated with his Pre-Adamites, and 'tis likely he dyed with that fantaſtical Notion. He would have been very well pleaſed, had he known that there is a Rabbin who mentions Adam's Tutor. But that Rabbin was a Rabbin, that is to ſay, an Author not to be minded. When the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites came out, it was condemned to be burnt by the Hangman. I deſired the Author who was my Friend, to ſend it me before it came to Light. He underſtood the Jeſt, and ſent me a Copy of it with this Verſe of Ovid, changing the Word Urbem into that of Ignem.

“Parve, nec invideo, ſine me liber ibis in ignem (b).

See the Miſcellanies (†) of Vig. Marville p. 144. 1. tom.

(E) You will find ſome . . . . Circumſtances in the Fragment of a Letter.] I don't truſt much Peter de St. Romuald,

---

† See the Remark B.

‡ See the Remark D.

(c) Note that I have ſeen in the Catalogue of a Library which was ſold at Leyden on the firſt of October, 1695. that Book concerning the Pre-Adamites printed in 8vo. in 1654. and theſe Words are added, Editio optima.

(d) Pet. ab Andlo animadv. ad vindicias Diſſertationis. pag. 10.

(e) Mr. Morin: (Morin the Aſtrologer) Antony Hulſius Author of the Non ens Præadamiticum. J. Pythius, & J. Hilpertus.

(f) It was printed at Stetin.

(g) Tho. Bangius in cœlo Orientis exercit. II. quæſt. 8. pag. 134. apud Thomam Crenium faſc 2. exercitationum philologico-hiſtoricarum pag. 13.

(h) Tho. Crenius ib.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 8.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 10.

(l) Peter de St. Romuald, a Chronological and Hiſtorical Journal. 25 Decem. p.m. 675.

(m) Moreri is therefore miſtaken, when he ſays that la Peyrere retracted his Opinion in a Book printed at Rome in the Year 1655. His Printers have put in 1555.

(n) He ſhould have ſaid La Peyrere.

(o) Patin. Lett. 117. pag. 454, 455. of the 1 Tom.

(a) He ſhould have ſaid Iſaac la Peyrere. Moreri ſhould not have named him la Perere.

(b) Continuat. of the Menagiana. p. 38. of the Dutch Edit.

(†) He is named there de la Pereyre.

PEIRESC (Nicolas Claude Fabri, Lord of) Counſellor in the Parliament of Aix, was born in Provence ‡ the Firſt of December 1580. I might add many Things to what has been ſaid by Moreri; but having little room with reſpect to the Letters of the Alphabet that are next to P, I am forced to ſuppreſs many Articles, and to touch ſlightly upon many others. I ſhall only ſay that no Man was ever more ſerviceable to the Commonwealth of Learning. He was, if I may ſay ſo, its Attorney-General: He encouraged Authors, furniſhed them with Knowledge and Materials, and ſpent his Revenue in buying, or getting Copies of the moſt ſcarce and uſeful Monuments. He kept Correſpondence with Learned Men (A) in all the Parts of the World: Philoſophical Experiments, Curioſities of Nature, Productions of Art, Monuments of Antiquity, Hiſtory, and Languages were equally the Object of his Care and Curioſity. You will find an exact Account of all thoſe Things in his Life, which was elegantly and learnedly written (B) by Gaſſendus. It will not be needleſs to obſerve, that Peireſc, who was ſo Famous all over Europe, and whoſe Death was lamented by ſo many Poets, and in (C) ſo many Languages,

‡ In the Village of Beaugencier, which Gaſſendus calls in Latin Belgenſerium.

Romuald, and therefore I deſired a Gentleman of great Merit, who lived then in the Houſe of the Prince of Conde, to let me know whether that good Feuillant has given a true Account of the Matter. Here is the Gentleman's Anſwer to me, “I think I “am able to give you an exact Account of what “you deſire of me, becauſe Mr. de la Peyrere was “my very good Friend. He was arreſted at Bruſſels “in the time mention'd by your Author. But the “ſecret Hiſtory of it is, that the late Prince con“cerned himſelf in that Buſineſs by the means of “his Confeſſor, who was a Jeſuit, and loved Mr. “de la Peyrere, abating his Religion, which he “would have him to change. The Pre-Adamite was “therefore arreſted, and was made afraid of the “Conſequences of his Book, unleſs he changed his “Religion. The good Man, who was not obſtinate “about what is call'd Religion, changed it very “ſoon, and his Maſter gave him wherewith to go “and fetch his Abſolution at Rome, which he did “not much value. He return'd to his Maſter's, who “loved him to the laſt, and maintained him, ſince “his Return into France, in the Houſe of the Fa“thers of the Oratory of Paris. I have often ſeen “him there, and found that he was far from being “a true Papiſt; but he was very fond of his No“tion concerning the Pre-Adamites, about which “he writ and ſpoke ſecretly to his Friends till he “dyed. The Procurator General of that Order, “who is a Friend of mine, and who loved him, “invited me to dine with him, and made him con“feſs, that he writ Books ſtill, which he told me “ſoftly would be burnt after the Death of the good “Man. La Peyrere was an extraordinary good“natur'd Man, who lived a quiet Life, and had but “little Faith.

(A) He kept Correſpondence with Learned Men in all Parts of the World.] I have been informed by a (c) Letter of the Abbot Nicaiſe, that Mr. Thomaſſin Mazaugues (*) Counſellor in the Parliament of Aix, has ten thouſand Letters in his hands, which were found amongſt the Papers of Mr. de Peireſc, and that he makes Choice of them; that there a great many which that famous Senator had received from Holſtenius, Father Kircher, Cavalier del Pozzo, Salmaſius, Selden, Camden, Pignorius, Gualdo, the Puteanus's, Rigaltius, and ſeveral other learned Men, of which he could make one Volume in 4o. and intitle it Epiſtolæ virorum eruditorum quæ extant ad Peireſkium. You will find ſome curious Things about thoſe Letters in the beginning of the Menagiana, 2d Edition. Here is a Paſſage of Balzac, which will not be improperly alledged. “(d) I “agree with you in all the greateſt and moſt magni“ficent Things you ſay of your Friend; and if you “will allow me to make uſe of a Word borrowed “from Greece, I add, that we have loſt in that “great Man, a Piece of the Shipwrack of Antiquity, “and the Relicks of the Golden Age. All the Virtues “of the Heroical Times had retired into that noble “Soul. The Univerſal Corruption of Mankind “could not work upon his good Conſtitution. His “Generoſity was neither confined by the Sea, nor “ſhut up on this ſide of the Alps; it diffuſed its “Favours and Kindneſſes every where, and it re“ceived Thanks from the Extremities of Syria, and “from the very Top of Mount Libanus. With an “indifferent Eſtate he had the Soul of a Potent “Lord, and without the Friendſhip of Auguſtus, he “was a Mæcenas. Again, (e) The late Mr. de Malherbe was one of his particular Friends, and ſometimes ſpoke to me of him; but only as of a Man extreamly Curious, a great lover of Relations and News, a great Searcher of Medals and Manuſcripts, who had abundance of Acquaintance in Foreign Countries, and was a great Admirer of all the Doctors of Leyden, &c.

(B) His Life . . . . . written by Gaſſendus.] That Work is very much eſteem'd. Yet there is an Author who pretends that many Things have not been well related (f) in it. I think he means ſome Paſſages wherein Salmaſius is concerned. A phyſician (g) of Caſtres, who has collected ſome Facts omitted by Gaſſendus, forgot on the other hand ſeveral Encomiums on Mr. de Peireſc, which Colomeſius has inſerted in his (h) Gallia Orientalis.

(C) Death was lamented . . . in ſo many Languages.] Naudæus will afford me a whole Commentary on this Text. (i) “I would fain . . . hear thee “diſcourſe about that famous Academy of the Humouriſts, where, as the Baron de Rians ſaid one “day, the Obſequies of his Uncle the Abbot and “Counſellor Peireſc had been celebrated in more than “Forty ſeveral Languages. . . . (k) Thou may'ſt “well judge how much that Academy is eſteemed “at Rome, ſince Monſieur Peireſc, that Ornament of “France, that great Favourer of Learned Men, that “Abyſs of Learning, deſired to be a Member of it; “and ſince as he had honoured that famous Acade“my with his Name, they did alſo in their turn ho“nour his Memory with ſuch Duties as they had ne“ver before paid but to thoſe by whom they had “been governed, eſpecially upon the Account of “their extraordinary Virtue and Learning. Naudæus quotes thereupon Gaſſendus, who ſays, that beſides the Funeral Oration, pronounced in Latin by Mr. Bouchard, ſeveral Elogies of the Deceaſed (l) were recited in Italian, Latin, and Greek Verſes; and then Naudæus obſerves that the Baron de Rians, who mentions Forty Languages, and Gaſſendus who mentions only three, are both in the right: for, ſays he, (a) the Praiſes of Monſieur Peireſc were only celebrated in three Languages in the Academy, and before the Cardinals; but afterwards they added to the Collection of thoſe Elogies printed at Rome, this Pangloſſia, five generis humani Leſſus in funere delicii ſui Nicolai Claudii Fabricii Peireſcii, which does effectually contain the Elogies of that great Man in Forty Idioms, and I might almoſt ſay, in as many different Characters. From whence Scipio de Grammond, who was preſent at that Ceremony, and who dyed ſome time after at Venice, took occaſion to compoſe theſe Verſes, to ſhew how Advantageous that Pangloſſia was both to the ſaid Sieur Peireſc, and to the City of Rome.

Indus, Arabs, Medus, Gallus, Germanus, Etruſcus,
  Anglus, Idumæus, Sarmata, Grajus, Iber,
Et quicunque venit gelido de cardine, & uſto,
  Eoiſque plagis, occiduiſque ſonus;
Omnes Fabricio concordi voce parentant,
  Qui norat proprios reddere cuique ſonos.
Pro ſuperi! quanta eſt Romana potentia, quæ nunc
  Tot populis, & tot gentibus ora aperit.
Romana verè nunc clauditur orbis in urbe,
  Cui tam multifido competit ore loqui.

Balzac expreſſes ſome Contempt for the (b) Pangloſſia. “(c) What does Signor John (d) James “think of with his frightful Title of Pangloſſia? To “go as far as Forty, there muſt be three and twenty “which were unknown to Scaliger, and the Soul of

(c) Dated at Dijon the 21th of Feb. 1696.

(*) He did me the honour to write to me the 4th of Feb. 1699. a long account of it, which I had inſerted at the end of this Remark A, were it not that I thought the Publick would ſee it in the Preface to thoſe choice Letters before the 2d Edition of this Dictionary be ended. Thoſe Letters are printing at Geneva.

(d) Balzac Let. to Mr. l'Huillier. 'Tis the 2d of the 2d Book of the 1ſt Part of the choice Letters p. 48. of the Dutch Edition.

(e) Id. Let. 13. to Chapelain Book 2. p. m. 73.

(f) Multa perperam neſcioque fato, in vita Peireſkii a Gaſſendo relata, alias fortaſſe docebimus. Clementius in vita Salmaſii.

(g) Peter Borel: his Auctarium ad vitam Peireſkii, was printed at the Hague in the year 1655.

(h) Page 175. & Seq.

(i) Naudæus, Dialogue de Maſcurat. pag. 138.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 139.

(l) Et carmina quidem in defuncti laudem Italicè, Latinè, Græcè recitârunt lectiſſima totius urbis ingenia: funebrem verò orationem copioſam ſanè, & elegantem pronunciavit Joannes Jacobus Buccardus delectus ad id muneris. Gaſſend. in vita Peireskii lib. 6. pag. m. 349.

(a) Naudæus, ib. pag. 141.

(b) Moreri is in the wrong to call it Pandegloſſie. The Dutch Editions of Moreri have Leſſas instead of Leſſus.

(c) Balzac, Let. 26. to Chapelain Book 4.

(d) That is to ſay, Bouchard, who made the Funeral Oration, and call'd himſelf Joannes Jacobus Buccardus.

“ Parnaſſus,

guages, and caused a pompous Mourning among the Humourists * of Rome, was unknown (D) to several French Men, though Men of Merit and Learning. He died the 24th of June 1637. The Astrologers had foretold, that he (E) should marry and have Children; yet he never was married.

* See the Remark B.

PELIAS, Son of Neptune, and of Tyro Daughter of Salmoneus, was † nursed by a Mare. He reigned in Thessaly with great Injustice; for after he had (A) usurp'd the Throne, he maintain'd himself on it by putting to Death, or persecuting those who had a Right to it. He durst not make use of Violence against his Nephew Jason, who went to demand of him || the Crown of his Father: He chose rather to elude the Justice of that Demand, by proposing to that young Prince a pious Expedition, and such as would get him a great Reputation. It was the Conquest of the Golden Fleece. Jason undertook it. It was reported that that Enterprise had proved † Ælian. Hist. l. 12. c. 42.

|| Pindar. Od. 4. Pyth.

" Parnassus must be praised in Basque, and Low-Breton: that's enough to make a mad Musick upon " your Parnassus. It is to introduce the Barbarians into that sacred Place, and to commit as " great a Crime, as those who opened the Gates of " Italy to the Predecessors of the King of Sweden. See also what he says in two (e) other Letters to the same Mr. Chapelain.

(D) Was unknown to several French men, tho' Men of Merit.] Balzac affords me the Proof of it. (f) " Can you believe that Monsieur de la Rochefoucaut, had never heard of our Mr. de Peiresc, " and that a great many other Persons, who are " neither Barbarians nor Ignorant, knew him not, " no more than he? You see thereby that his Reputation was good, but that the Italian Signor " undertook to make it great, and that his Panglossia is rather an effect of his Sollicitations, than a " voluntary Duty which the People thought of. Here is a second Passage: (g) I am fully persuaded of the Merit of Monsieur de Peiresc; but I was speaking of his Reputation, and you know that there is a donum famæ which all Learned Men have not, and whereby they who are in Possession of it, are not only known to the Senate, and to the Order of Knights, but also to the common People and Tradesmen.

(E) The Astrologers had foretold.] Gassendus, the dreadful Adversary of that sort of Men, did not fail to make this Observation against them; for having set down the Day and Hour of the Birth of his Hero, he adds, (h) Quod attingo solum, ne videar circa temporis circumstantiam non fuisse satis diligens; non verò ut faciam hariolandi ansam conjectoribus, qui jam post viri obitum, certiùs quàm antè, fata retexant. Etenim mirum dictu est, quàm multa mentiti Astrologi fuerint, seu annos spectes, quibus non vixit; seu uxorem, & liberos, aliaque, quibus caruerit; seu cætera multa, quæ est consequutus. These words of the Menagiana ought therefore to be mended: " (i) Mr. Peiresc ordered, " by his last Will, that Mr. Gassendi might have a " hundred Volumes out of his Library, at his choice; " his Son refusing to execute his Father's Will, was " compell'd to it by the way of Justice.

(A) After he had usurp'd the Throne, he maintain'd himself on it, by putting to death, or persecuting those.] The Kingdom did belong to Æson, and not to Pelias, as it appears from their Genealogy. Æson was the Son of Chretheus, whose Father was Æolus (l); but Pelias was (m) Son of Neptune, and of a Daughter of Salmoneus, Brother (n) of Chretheus. I add, That the Kingdom had been given to Æolus by Jupiter, for himself and his Posterity.

(o) Τάν ποτε
Ζεὺς ὤπασε λαγέτᾳ
Αἰόλῳ, καὶ παισὶ τιμάν.

Quod (regnum) olim Jupiter dedit populorum duci Æolo & liberis ut esset illis decus. So that according to the Laws of Succession, it did belong not to Pelias, who descended from Æolus only by his Mother's side, but to Æson who descended from him by the Males. Note that Æson and Pelias were born of the same Mother; for Tyro, Daughter of Salmoneus, after she had two Twins (p) by Neptune, viz. Pelias and Neleus, married Chretheus (q) her Uncle, by whom she had three Boys, Æson, Amythaon, and Pheres. It is plain that Pelias was an Usurper, having excluded Æson from the Throne. Æson and his Wife dreaded him so much, that they durst not breed up Jason their Son; but assoon as he was born (r) they convey'd him into the Den of Chiron, and gave out that he was dead; and the better to deceive the Tyrant they performed all the Ceremonies of the Funeral. They saved their Child by that means, but they could not preserve themselves from Pelias's Cruelty; for he forced (s) Æson to drink of the Blood of a Bull, and order'd that Amphinome, Æson's Wife, should be put to Death, and caused Promachus, their Son, to be kill'd. This happen'd during the Voyage of the Argonautæ, and upon a false report of their Death. Note that Amphinome (t) having retir'd to the Penates of Pelias, and having made a thousand Imprecations against him, stabb'd herself. Others (u) say that she hang'd herself. I say nothing of Pelias's Violence against (w) Sidero, Tyro's Mother-in-Law. He kill'd her upon the very Altar of Juno, to revenge his Mother Tyro, who had been very ill used by that Step-mother. (x) Τελειωθέντες δὲ ἀνεγνώρισαν τὴν μητέρα, καὶ τὴν μητρυιὰν ἀπέκτειναν (y) σιδήρῳ. Κακουμένην γὰρ γνόντες ὑπ' αὐτῆς τὴν μητέρα, ὥρμησαν ἐπ' αὐτήν. Ἡ δὲ φθάσασα, εἰς τὸ τῆς Ἥρας τέμενος κατέφυγεν. Πελίας δὲ ἐπ' αὐτῶν τῶν βωμῶν αὐτὴν κατέσφαξε. Καὶ καθόλου διετέλει τὴν Ἥραν ἀτιμάζων. Qui (Pelias & Neleus) cum ad justam integramque ætatem pervenissent, agnita matre, novercam, quod ejus opera parentem male affectam percepissent, facto in eam impetu occiderunt: quæ, tametsi intra Junonis templum confugere antevertisset, eam tamen Pelias super aram ipsam jugulavit: & in omnibus rebus Junonem negligebat. The Author from whom I have this, adds one thing which will not be unseasonable in this place, viz. that Pelias and Neleus, two Twins, could not agree together; and that Neleus was forced to yield, and to look for another Habitation: (z) Ἐστασίαζον δὲ ὕστερον πρὸς ἀλλήλους, καὶ Νηλεὺς μὲν ἐκπεσὼν, ἧκεν εἰς Μεσσήνην, καὶ Πύλον κτίζει: Atqui postea inter se discordiam exercere non desierunt. Neleus demum regno pulsus Messenam commigravit, & Pylo urbe condita, &c. Diodorus Siculus (a) mentions the Discord of those two Brothers, and observes, that Pelias having obtain'd the City of Jolcos, and the adjacent Countries, rais'd an Army, and brought it into Peloponnesus. Pausanias (b) says that Neleus fled from Jolcos because he fear'd Pelias.

(B) By proposing to that young Prince a Pious Expedition, and such as, &c.] A great many Authors agree in this, that he favoured the design of the Argonautæ, for no other reason, but because he hoped by that means to get rid of his Nephew Jason, whose Merit he fear'd. I shall only quote Valerius Flaccus: The Passage is somewhat long, but 'tis no matter, since you shall find another Fact in it, viz. the extent of that Tyrant's States.

Hæmoniam (c) primis Pelias frenabat ab annis:
Jam gravis, & longus populis metus: illius omnes,
Ionium quicunque petunt: ille Othryn & Hæmum,
Atque imum felix versabat vomere Olympum.
Sed non ulla quies animo, fratrisque paventi
Progeniem, divumque minas: hunc nam fore regi
Exitio vatesque canunt, pecudumque per aras
Terrifici monitus iterant: super ipsius ingens
Instat fama viri, virtusque haud læta tyranno.
Ergo anteire metus, juvenemque exstinguere pergit
Æsonium: letique vias, ac tempora versat.

Pindar, if I am not mistaken, is the only Writer (d) who tells us, that Pelias incourag'd his Nephew to undertake that Expedition by a motive of Religion. (e) Here is the substance of the Discourse of that great Poet, I shall use the words of Meziriac. " Jason being two and twenty Years of Age, came " out of the Den of Chiron, and return'd to the House " of his Father Æson, where he was visited by abundance of his Relations, amongst whom were " his Uncles Pheres and Amythaon, and his first Cousins Acastus and Melampus. He treated them, and " made merry with them five Days together, and " on the sixth Day he went to Pelias, with all that " Company, and summon'd him to restore to him " the (e) The 18th of the 4th Book, and the 1st of the 5th.

(f) Lett. 1. of the 4th Book to Chapelain. p. 203, 205.

(g) Id. Let. 4. of the same Book. p. 212.

(h) Gassend. in Vit. Peiresc. l. 1. circa init.

(i) Menag. p. 2. of the 1st Edit. in Holland. That Mistake has been mended in the 2d Edit.

(k) Apollod. l. 1. p. m. 45.

(l) Id. ib. p. 27.

(m) Id. ib. p. 45.

(n) Id. ib. p. 27, 43.

(o) Pindar. Pyth. Od. 4. p. m. 241.

(p) Apollod. ib. p. 43.

(q) Id. ib. p. 45.

(r) Pindar. ubi supra.

(s) Diod. Sicul. l. 4. c. 51. p. m. 251. See also Apoll. ubi supra. p. 59.

(t) Id. ib.

(u) Apollod. ibid.

(w) Diod. Sicul. l. 4. c. 70. p. 257. gives him that Name, whereby Meziriac upon Ovid's Epist. has corrected several Passages, p. 541.

(x) Apollod. ib. p. 45.

(y) Read Σιδηρώ according to Meziriac's Correction, which has been approv'd by Tanaq. Faber, in his Notes upon Apoll. p. 258.

(z) Id. ib.

(a) Diod. Sicul. ubi sup. p. 258.

(b) Pausan. l. 4. p. 112.

(c) Valer. Flac. Argon. l. 1. v. 22.

(d) See Benedictus upon Pind. Od. 4. Pyth. p. 355.

(e) Mezir. upon Ovid's Ep. p. 542, 543. That Discourse of Pindar is in the 4. Pyth. Od.

proved fatal to him, which made Pelias bolder ‡ in his Cruelty. He was puniſh'd for it by the Craft of Medea; his own Daughters cut his Throat, * in hopes that they ſhould make him grow young again, as ſhe had promiſed 'em. He was ſo willing ſhe ſhould do him that Service, that he told her, || I give you leave to flea me alive, provided you reſtore me to the ſtate of a young Boy. Some ſay, that ſhe did effectually reſtore him to his former Youth. Cicero is one of them. I don't believe that he did

" the Kingdom, which did lawfully belong to him. " Pelias ſeeing him ſo well attended, was oblig'd to " give him fair words, and anſwer'd him, That he " was ready to yield him his Royalty; but that he " would exhort him firſt to execute a pious and glo- " rious Enterpriſe, which was to go to Colchis to " appeaſe the Manes of Phryxus, and bring back " into Theſſaly the Golden Fleece, foraſmuch as the " Shade of Phryxus had appear'd to him for a long " time, and warn'd him to ſend ſome body into " Colchis, to call his Soul thrice upon his Sepulchre, " and bring back the Golden Fleece from thence; " and that having conſulted the Oracle about it, " Apollo had commanded the very ſame thing. He " added, That had it not been for his Old Age, he " himſelf would have undertaken that Voyage; but " that Jaſon could alledge no good excuſe againſt " it, becauſe he was in the Flower of his Youth, " and of ſuch an Age wherein the deſire of ac- " quiring Glory ſhould Work more upon him, than " the vain Ambition of Reigning. At laſt, he pro- " miſed and ſwore, in a ſolemn manner, that he " would reſtore the Kingdom to him, at his re- " turn.

(C) Cicero is one of them: I don't believe that he did deſignedly . . . . . , as Muret fanſies.] Let Mr. Menage perform the Office of a Commentator. " (c) That Fable of Æſon's being made young again " by the Enchantment of Medea, is to be found at " large in the Seventh Book of Ovid's Metamorphoſis. " But what Ovid ſays of Æſon in that Book, Plau- " tus in his (d) Pſeudolus, or rather a Cook, who is " one of his Actors, ſays it of Pelias:

" Quia ſorbitione faciam ego te hodie meâ,
" Item ut Medea Peliam concoxit ſenem;
" Quem medicamento & ſuis venenis dicitur
" Feciſſe rurſus ex ſene adoleſcentulum;
" Item ego te faciam.

" Cicero ſays the ſame thing under the Name of Old " Cato, in his Book de Senectute: Quo quidem me " proveſcentem haud ſanè quis facile retraxerit; nec ſi " tamquam Peliam recoxerit. But if we believe " Ovid and Apollodorus, Pelias was not made young " again by Medea. He was, by the Perſwaſion of " Medea, kill'd by his Daughters, who hop'd to " make him young again, in the ſame manner as " Medea had made an old Bull young again. Muret " in the Tenth Chapter of the ſixth Book of his " Variæ Lectiones, thinks, That Plautus and Cicero " have deſignedly miſtaken thoſe Names; Plautus " in the Perſon of a Cook, who never read any Me- " tamorphoſis; and Cicero in that of an Old Man, " whom his Memory fails often; and herein he has " been follow'd by Camerarius, Scioppius, Freherus, " and ſeveral other Criticks. For my part I am " fully perſwaded, that Plautus and Cicero ſpoke " in earneſt; and that what they ſay of Pelias had " been ſaid by ſome ancient Authors, whom they " follow'd, as Ovid follow'd ſome others. Mr. Me- nage adds, that What Ovid ſays of Æſon, Jaſon's Father, was ſaid of Jaſon himſelf, by Pherecydes and Simonides, as we may learn from the Argument of Euripides's Medea: Φερεκύδης δὲ καὶ Σιμωνίδης φασὶν ὡς ἡ Μήδεια ἀνεψήσασα τὸν Ἰάσονα, νέον ποιήσαι . . . . So that it is likely that ſome ancient Author ſaid, that Pelias was made young again by Medea, as well as his Brother Æſon . . . . and Plautus and Cicero have follow'd that Author, as Ovid follow'd the Author of a Poem Intitled, Νόστοι, that is to ſay, the Returns; for we learn from the abovemention'd Argument of the Medea, that that Author ſaid of Æſon, in that Poem, what Ovid ſaid of him in his Metamorphoſis.

I cannot believe that Plautus told a Lye to keep a Decorum, no not if I was told a hundred times, that it becomes a Cook to falſify Hiſtory upon the Stage. But it would be more difficult ſtill for me to believe what is ſaid of Cicero, that he thought that Decorum requir'd of him, that the Memory of Cato, an old grave Man, ſhould fail him. 'Tis better to aſcribe that Miſtake to Cicero himſelf, if it be a Miſtake: which is alſo one of Muret's Shifts. (e) Tale aliquid hic quoque comminiſcendum eſt: nam aut decorum id [illegible] Cato credidit, quod ſe memoria vacillare [illegible], & interdum habet aliquid gravitatis in magnis viris minus accurata fabularum & talium rerum cognitio: aut hic quoque inter prœpoſtera Ciceronis ἁμαρτήματα numerandum eſt. It is no eaſy thing to refute Menage, for the Ancients did ſo differently relate Mythological Adventures, that it is not unlikely that ſome ſaid, that Pelias was actually made young again. Perhaps it will be ſaid, that if Medea had done him that good Office, ſhe would have done it before ſhe and Jaſon fell out: But how likely is it that ſhe had been willing before that time, to beſtow ſo great a Favour upon the Murderer of the Father and Mother of her Husband. This is a weak Objection, ſince moſt Authors ſuppoſe, that he did not put to Death the Father of Jaſon. The moſt common Tradition ſays, That Æſon, Jaſon's Father, was made young again by Medea; and ſome (f) Authors ſay, That he died in a quiet Poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, and left the Tuition of his Son to Pelias. We have ſeen (g) that the latter ſwore in a ſolemn manner, that he would reſtore the Kingdom to Jaſon, at his return. Why ſhould not we believe, that ſome Authors have ſaid that he kept his Word: And then it might be ſaid, without any difficulty, that Medea reſtor'd his former Youth to him at Jaſon's deſire. What is very certain is, that there are ſtill extant ſome Teſtimonies of his great deſire that ſhe would do him that Favour. See Diodorus (h) Siculus, where he relates how Medea acting like a Fanatick, and pretending that ſhe came from the Hyperborean Country, to make Pelias and his Kingdom happy, perſwaded that Prince that ſhe was order'd to reſtore him to the Flower of his Youth. But eſpecially read theſe words of Varro: (i) Peliam Medea permiſiſſe ut ſe vel vivum deglúberet, dummodo redderet puellum. Let us obſerve that the Funeral of Pelias was celebrated with great magnificence, and that Jaſon was one of the Heroes who contended for the Prize in the Funeral Games of that Ceremony (k). Is it not a ſign that Pelias died, being reconciled with his Nephew? It is ſomewhat ſtrange that Authors ſhould ſay, that ſhe reſtor'd her Husband Jaſon to his former Youth, for he was very young when he married her; and if ſome Years after ſhe was uneaſy to ſee him diſpoſed for a ſecond Marriage (l), it was becauſe ſhe begun to grow old. Perhaps a wrong daſh of the Pen, either by an Author or a Copyiſt, produc'd at laſt this Tradition, that Medea reſtor'd Jaſon to his Youth. If inſtead of writing Αἴσων, ſomebody writ Ἰάσων, it happen'd that the Son and the Husband took the place of the Father, and of the Father-in-Law; I mean, of Æſon whom Medea made young again. Such a miſtake in writing would be only the tranſpoſition of a Letter; and I grant that ſuch tranſpoſitions are more frequent in Printing than in Writing; yet Authors and Copyiſts are not ſo free from them as it were to be wiſh'd. One may therefore have ſome reaſon to believe, that they who ſaid that Medea reſtor'd Jaſon to his Youth, grounded their Opinion upon a Book into which the word Ἰάσων had crept, through inadvertency, inſtead of the word Αἴσων. Which cannot be ſaid of the (m) Writer quoted by Mr. Menage, for the Sequel of the Diſcourſe ſhews, that he ſpeaks of Jaſon's being reſtor'd to his Youth, I think that Mr. Menage would have quoted Lycophron, if he had remember'd theſe words: (n) καὶ λέβητι δαιτρευθεὶς δέμας ἐν αἰθύνοις ἥρπαξεν ἐρρὰς σαῦλος: Et in lebete corpus excoctus non impune cepit arietis vellus. Upon which Canterus made this Note, Jaſonem à Medea recoctum fuiſſe, notum eſt.

Note, That if a Woman had the Gift which is aſcrib'd to Medea, ſhe would uſe it eſpecially for her Husband. So that all things duly conſider'd, I ſhould not much wonder if ſome Authors had ſaid, that Medea reſtor'd to their Youth, not only (o) the Nurſes of Bacchus, and their Husbands, and Æſon her Father-in-Law, and Pelias, Æſon's Brother, but alſo her Husband Jaſon. It is a greater wonder that ſhe forgot herſelf: Why did ſhe permit that one might

---

‡ See the Remark E.
* See Diod. Sicul. l. 4. c. 52. ſeq.
|| See the words of Varro in the Remark C.

(c) Menag. Obſervations upon Malherbe, p. 349, 350.

(d) In the 8th verſe of the 2d Scene of the 3d Act, p. m. 541.

(e) Muret. var. Lect. l. 6. c. 10. p. m. 983.

(f) Scholiaſt. Homeri Odyſſ. l. 12. he quotes Pherecydes. See Meziriac, ubi ſup. p. 135.

(g) In the abovemention'd Paſſage of Pindar, Let. b.

(h) Diod. Sicul. l. 4. c. 52, 53. See alſo Hyginus, c. 24.

(i) Varro in Marcipore apud Nonium Marcellum v. puellos p. m. 158.

(k) Pauſ. l. 5. p. 155.

(l) Diod. Sicul. ib. c. 55. p. 244.

(m) The Author of the Argument of Euripides's Medea.

(n) Lycoph. v. 1313.

(o) Æſchyl. in nutricibus Bacchi apud Autorem Argumenti Medeæ Euripidis.

did deſignedly take the one for the other, as Moret fancies. Jaſon treated (D) Pelias's Daughters generouſly, and even left the Kingdom to the Son of that Uſurper.

PELIAS was the (E) name of the † Lance which Peleus was * preſented with on his Wedding-Day. He us'd it β in Battles, and gave it to his Son Achilles, who made it extraordinarily famous. It was ſo heavy γ that none but he was able to dart it. It was made of an Aſh-Tree, which Chiron cut off upon Mount Pelion δ. See Pliny §.

PELLISSON (Paul) was one of the greateſt Wits of the Seventeenth Century. The ſame reaſon which hindred me from giving a long Article of Mr. Menage, obliges me ‡ to be very ſhort in this Article. All that I could ſay of the particular Honour (A) which the French Academy did to Mr. Pelliſſon, and of the Praiſes he deſerv'd during the Perſecutions which he was expoſed to, for having been in Mr. Fouquet's ſervice; all thoſe things, I ſay, and ſeveral other parts of his Life, are ſtill freſh in the Memory of all my Readers. It would be as needleſs to mention his Application to the Great Affair, as it was call'd in France; for the Complaints and Railleries of the Proteſtants about it, are known to every body. But there is a Circumſtance which, perhaps, is not ſo well known: Some Perſons have aſſur'd me, that he wiſhed the Great Affair of Converſions had been always carried on in the ſame method as had been uſed for many Years, without having recourſe to the Dragonades, which will be eternally abhorred by honeſt Men, whatever Country or Religion they be of. He had been for a long time about a Book of Controverſy, concerning the Euchariſt, but he had not time enough to finiſh it. Something of it (B) has been publiſh'd ſince his Death. One may perceive in it the ſubtlety of his Wit; which is all that he could put in it. The ſame ſubtlety may be obſerv'd in his (C) Reflections upon Diſputes about Religion, wherein he forgot not what the Church of Rome pretends to be the Stumbling-block of the Proteſtants; might ſay to her, Medice cura teipſum; Since you make other People young, why don't you part with your Old Age? It would be at leaſt as uſeful to you as the reſtoration of your Huſband's Youth. I ſhall conclude this Remark with obſerving a Miſtake of Aldus Manutius the younger. He (a) ſaid that Pelias was Jaſon's Father.

(D) Treated Pelias's Daughters generouſly, and even left the Kingdom to the Son.] They were three: Jaſon married them very advantageouſly. Alceſtis, the eldeſt of them all, was Admetus's Wife. The name of the ſecond was Amphinome, ſhe married Andræmon. The third had for her Huſband, Canus, King of the Phoceans, and Son of Cephalus; her name was Evadne (b). I find this in Diodorus Siculus. That Hiſtorian (c) obſerves, That Jaſon plac'd Acaſtus, Pelias's Son, on the Throne of his Father; yet he ſays, a little before, that (d) Pelias having no Son, was afraid of being dethron'd by his Brother. It cannot be ſaid, in order to excuſe him, that he obſerves, that the fabulous Narrations do very much differ one from another; he makes that obſervation that he may not be condemned, if he does not always agree with other Authors, (e) Καθόλε γὰρ τοῖς παλαιοῖς μύθοις οὐχ ἁπλῆν ἐδὲ συμπεφωνημένην ἱστορίαν ἔχειν συμβέβηκε. Διόπερ ἐ χρὴ θαυμάζειν ἐάν τινα τῶν ἀρχαιολογουμένων μὴ σύμφωνα ἅπασι τοῖς ποιηταῖς καὶ συγγραφεῦσιν εὑρίσκωμεν. In priſcis enim fabulis nulla omnino ſimplex & per omnia ſibi conſentiens eſt hiſtoria. Haud ergo mirandum eſt, ſi in antiquitatibus illis recenſendis cum poetis & ſcriptoribus aliis non ubique nobis conveniat. But I do not believe that he pretended, that ſuch an Obſervation ſhould ſerve for his Juſtification, in caſe he contradicted himſelf: he were to blame if he pretended ſuch a thing. Let us therefore boldly ſay, that he deſerves a little Cenſure upon this occaſion; for he ſhould not have adopted pag. 233, the Opinion of thoſe who ſaid, that Pelias had no Son, and a quite contrary Opinion pag. 243. He ſhould, at leaſt, have told his Reader, that ſome ſaid one thing, and others another. He had reaſon to obſerve, that his Narrations agreed not with thoſe of other Writers. We have an Example of it here; for we read in Apollodorus, that Alceſtis, (f) during the Life of Pelias, was married to Admetus, who had performed the hard Conditions (g) which Pelias requir'd of thoſe who courted her. Apollodorus (h) ſays, that Pelias had four Daughters, and names them one after another. Hyginus (i) ſays, that he had five, and tells their Names. Pauſanias (k) ſays, that the Daughters of that Prince being overwhelm'd with Grief, becauſe they had kill'd their Father, thinking to make him young again, left the Country and retir'd into Arcadia, where they died and were buried. That Author mentions their Sepulcher, and adds, That none of the Poets, whom he read, told their Names; but that Micon, a Painter, put upon their Pictures the Names Aſterope and Antinoe. He obſerves, in another place, (l) that one of them was call'd Alceſtis, in the Repreſentation of Pelias's Funeral. I wonder he had not read the Books from which Apollodorus and Diodorus had the Names of Pelias's Daughters, or that he had not read thoſe two Authors. Let us obſerve, that the Name of Pelias's Wife was (m) Anaxibia, and that ſhe was Bias's Daughter.

(E) Was the name of the Lance.] In Homer 'tis only an Epithet taken from the place where Chiron cut off the Aſh-Tree. (n) Πηλιάδα μελίην: Peliadem fraxinum. (o) Πηλιὰς μελίη: Pelias fraxinus. The Latines changed that Epithet into a proper Name.

(A) The particular Honour which the French Academy.] "The French Academy having deſired to hear "in a full Aſſembly the Reading of that (p) Work, "which was as yet but Manuſcript, ordered ſome "Days after of their own Motion, in favour of the "Author; That the firſt place vacant in that Body "ſhould be deſign'd for him; and that in the mean "time he ſhould have a Right to aſſiſt in thoſe Aſſemblies, and to give his Vote as an Academician: "with this Clauſe, That the ſame Favour ſhould not "be done to any body elſe for the time to come, "upon any account whatſoever. You will find thoſe words (q) in the Hiſtory of the French Academy: They are attended with a Diſcourſe which the Author pronounc'd to thank that Aſſembly, the 30th of December 1652.

(B) Something of it has been publiſhed.] See the Abſtract which Mr. de Beauval made of it in his Hiſtory (r) of the Works of the Learned, and that of Mr. Couſins (s).

(C) In his Reflections upon Diſputes about Religion.] The firſt part of that Work was printed at Paris in 2 Vol. in 12°. in the Year 1686. See the Abſtract of it in the News (t) from the Republick of Learning. The next Year the Author reprinted it, and added a new Tome to it, with this Title, An Anſwer to the Objections from England and Holland, or, Of the Authority of the greateſt number in the Chriſtian Religion. See the Journal of the Learned (u). Some time after he added another Tome to it, divided into four parts, and Inticled, Mr. Jurieu's Chimera's: or, A general Anſwer to his Paſtoral Letters of the ſecond Year, againſt the Book of Reflections, and a ſhort Examination of his Prophecies. One may eaſily gueſs, that ſo ſubtle a Man had the advantage of a Chimerical Interpreter of the Revelations. All thoſe Works of Mr. Pelliſſon have been reprinted in Holland. See the Leipſick Journal (x). They make up the three firſt Parts of the Reflections upon Diſputes about Religion. The fourth Part was publiſh'd β Id. ib.

---

† Ovid. Metam. l. 13. fab. 3.

* Schol. Homeri in Iliad. l. 16. v. 143.

γ Hom. ib.

δ Id. ib.

§ Plin. l. 16. c. 13. p. m. 298.

‡ The Eloge and Abridgment of Mr. Pelliſſon's Life, are to be found in ſeveral new Books, which are very common, as the Mercure Gallant, the Journ. of the Learned, the Hiſtorical Mercury, the Hiſtorical Letters, &c.

(a) Ald. Manut. P. F. in Cicer. de Senect. ſub. fin.

(b) Taken from Diod. Siculus, ubi ſupra, c. 54. p. 242.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Id. ib. c. 41. p. 233.

(e) Diod. Sicul. l. 4. p. 172. Edit. H. Stephani 1559.

(f) Apoll. l. 1. p. 51. Hygin. c. 51.

(g) He required that they ſhould bring a Chariot drawn by a Lion and a Wild Boar. Apollod. ib.

(h) Apoll. ib. p. 45.

(i) Hygin. c. 24.

(k) Pauſa. l. 8. p. 245.

(l) Id. l. 3. p. 154.

(m) Apoll. ib. Hygin. c. 14. p. m. 44. & c. 51. p. 98.

(n) Hom. Iliad. l. 16. v. 143.

(o) Id. ib. l. 21. v. 277.

(p) That is of the Hiſtory of the French Academy. That Work of Mr. Pelliſſon has always been look'd upon as a Maſter-piece. See Mr. Baillet, Judgments of the Learned, tom. 2. p. 153.

(q) Pag. 359. of the Paris Edit. 1672. in 12.

(r) Aug. 1694. p. 513. & ſeq.

(s) In the 20 Journal of the Learned 1694.

(t) July 1686. Art. 1. See alſo the Journ. of the Learned of the 29. of Apr. 1686.

(u) Of the 12 of Apr. 1688. p. 540. of the Dutch Edit.

(x) Nov. 1689. p. 564. and in the Supplement, tom. 1. p. 609.

I mean the Difficulties which ariſe from the way of Examination. That Stumbling-block, if it be one, is rather that of (D) Rome, than that of Geneva, as I have ſaid elſewhere. I ſpeak of it again in the Commentary, and I ſhall ſay occaſionally, that ſome People think it is very likely that no body makes uſe of the way of Examination, properly ſo called, tho' it be very much talk'd of. Beſides, I don't know but it may be ſaid, that the obſtacles to a right Examination do not ſo liſh'd at Paris 1692. and is intitled, Of the Toleration of Religions. Some Letters of Mr. de Leibnitz, and Mr. Pelliſſon's Anſwers to them. Here is the Marginal Note which is to be found in the firſt Page. Theſe Objections have been made by Mr. de Leibnitz, who is well known by his Merit. They were ſent into France by the Dutcheſs of Hanover, to the Abbeſs of Maubuiſſon her Siſter. The Author of them was not known at that time. They, who have a thouſand Proofs of the Extent of Mr. Leibnitz's Genius, cannot too much admire the purity of his French Style, which appears in thoſe Objections. He is one of thoſe rare Men, who can find no bounds in the Sphere of Humane Merit, and who fill it up altogether.

(D) Rather the Stumbling-block of Rome, than that of Geneva, as I have ſaid elſewhere.] See the Article of Mr. Nicolle (a), you will find in it, that that Doctor having objected ſeveral great Difficulties, could not anſwer thoſe which were objected againſt him. Order required that he ſhould anſwer the Objections retorted upon him, and clear the Way of Authority. The many Incumbrances of that Way required the ſpeedy Work of his Hands; yet he put it off till another time, and durſt not poſitively engage his Word for it. He expreſs'd himſelf thus (b): "Mr. Jurieu treating two principal Queſtions in his Book, one concerning the "Syſtem of the Church, the other concerning the "Analyſis of Faith, I ſhall only apply myſelf to the "firſt in this Treatiſe, adding to it the Conſequences which have ſome relation with it, and "which Mr. Jurieu treats in ſeveral places, eſpecially in his third Book. We ſhall ſee afterwards "whether there will be the ſame neceſſity to treat "of the Analyſis of Faith. But the Queſtion concerning the Church is important enough to be examined by itſelf, and in a ſeparate Work. And "this is what I deſign to do. Abundance of People have been of Opinion, that that Partition was made artificially. One of the two Pieces was taken, and the other left out; becauſe the one promiſed, at leaſt, that the Victory would be diſputed, whereas the other threatned with an unavoidable Defeat. Which made ſome People conclude, That Mr. Nicolle knew very well that the way of Authority is but a Chimera. Some wiſer People have been contented to believe, That he doubted not but it was the way which God has ſhewn to the Simple, tho' it is not poſſible to anſwer the Objections of the Proteſtants: So that his Silence ought not to be look'd upon as a proof of Hypocriſy; but as an effect of that Prudence which does not permit that Hereticks ſhould be made known, that there are ſome important Truths, which cannot be well defended againſt the Objections of the Adverſaries. I don't take upon myſelf to judge of what paſſes in another Man's Heart; and therefore I will not ſay, that Mr. Nicolle was not perſwaded of what he ſaid in one of his Books. (c) "God has not only given up the Material World to the Diſputes of Men, according "to the Scripture; but by a more terrible effect of "his Juſtice, he has, in a manner, given up to them "the Divine Myſteries, and the Holy Truths reveal'd "to them, by permitting that they ſhould be contradicted by them, that they ſhould become the "Subject of their Conteſts, and that ſome raſh "Sophiſts ſhould inſolently rail at 'em in their Diſcourſes and Writings. It is true, that we cannot "ſay altogether of that ſort of Diſputes, what the "Wiſe-man ſays of thoſe which have Natural things "for their Object, that Men can never come to know "the truth of 'em by their Inquiries: Mundum tradidit diſputationibus eorum, ut nunquam inveniant opus quod operatus eſt. On the contrary, it is certain, "that it appears, and even ſhines among the Clouds "which Men endeavour to caſt over it; and that "humble, ſincere, and underſtanding Men will "find it out among thoſe intricate Queſtions, and "falſe Subtleties which they endeavour to hide it "with. Which ſignifies, That the Controverſy about the Way of Authority and the Way of Examination, is not one of thoſe things which God has given up to the Diſputes of Men, without permitting them to diſcover at any time what he has done. But ſome fancy, that Mr. Nicolle believed the contrary: He had a thouſand ſtrong Objections againſt the Way of Examination: He knew that they are retorted againſt the Way of Authority, and that new ones are added to them, which it was impoſſible for him to reſolve. He believed therefore, that the way whereby revealed Truth ought to be diſcerned, is altogether like the Works of Nature, about which God permits us to diſpute, but does not permit (d) to diſcover the Myſtery thereof. Once more I am not ſo raſh as to judge of another Man's Conſcience.

Mr. Pelliſſon has not been more lucky than Mr. Nicolle in the Defenſive part. I confeſs, that he has, without much difficulty, deſtroyed the diſtinction between an Examination of Attention, and an Examination of Diſcuſſion, and ſome others; but at laſt he was at a ſtand, as well as his Brethren, when he came to reſolve the Objection, retorted upon him, and remove the Difficulties which ariſe from the Way of Authority. So that we may (e) repeat here, that it had been better for both Churches, never to ſtir that Queſtion. (f) "Nothing can be more pernicious than Mr. Nicolle's "Method: For if he could once perſwade Men, "that it is impoſſible to find out Truth by the way "of Examination, as he does his utmoſt towards it, "he would ſoon perceive that he went about to ſet "up Pyrrhoniſm, and conſequently to ruin Religion. Every one might then argue thus. It is impoſſible to find out Truth by the way of Examination, Mr. Nicolle has convinc'd us of it. It is "evident that it cannot be found out by the way of "Authority, and this is much more certain than "the reſt. What can we do better therefore than "to give over, once for all, the hopes of ever "knowing that Truth which ſo many People ſeek, "and which no body can find? This is the natural "effect of Mr. Nicolle's Method, from whence one "may perceive how pernicious it is. For nothing "can be more oppoſite to Religion than Pyrrhoniſm. It is a total extinction not only of Faith, "but alſo of Reaſon; and there is nothing more "impoſſible than to reclaim thoſe who have run "themſelves to ſuch an Exceſs. Theſe are the Words of a Man of Parts, (g) who Thinks very much, who is a perfect Maſter of the Art of Reaſoning, and who has made ſeveral new Objections to Mr. Nicolle: For he ſhews not only that, in order to make a right uſe of the way of Authority, we muſt know the Church which is in poſſeſſion of that Authority; but alſo that Mr. Nicolle's Arguments would neceſſarily lead us to the Doctrine of Probability, in its whole extent. This laſt Point would be very contrary to Mr. Nicolle, who has ſo well refuted the Doctrine of Probability. The other Point requires a great many Diſcuſſions. We cannot know where the Authority reſides, but by examining what are the Marks of the Church which is in Poſſeſſion of it. (h) We muſt know the preciſe number of thoſe Marks. We muſt know not only that there are ſo many, but alſo that there are no more. We muſt know whether they who reckon a Hundred are more reaſonable than thoſe who reckon Fifteen, or Twelve, or Ten, or Six. When we have fixed the number of the Marks, we muſt examine, whether they agree with the Church of Rome, rather than with the Greek Church. Which requires a great deal of Pains, and a long Series of Diſcuſſions: So that they who will avoid the way of Examination, are neceſſarily brought to it again.

It is to be feared that a third Party will ſtart up and teach that Men are neither led to the True Religion by the Way of Authority, nor by the Way of Examination, but ſome by Education, and others by Grace. Education without Grace and Examination does but perſwade. Grace with Education, and ſometimes without Education and Examination, or

---

(a) Rem. C.

(b) Nicolle of the unity of the Church, at the end of the Preface.

(c) Well-grounded Prejudices against the Calviniſts, in the Preface.

(d) Mundum tradidit diſputationibus eorum, ut nunquam inveniant opus quod operatus eſt. Salomon in Eccleſiaſte c. 3. v. 11.

(e) See the Art. Nicolle Remark D.

(f) La Placette, A Treatiſe of Conſcience. p. 377. He had ſaid p. 372. That nothing is more falſe and more pernicious than that Objection of Mr. Nicolle; that it runs upon Suppoſitions which are moſt certainly contrary to Truth, and that it is only fit to baniſh the certainty of Faith, and Morality, and to ſet up an univerſal Pyrrhoniſm in Religion.

(g) Heretofore a Miniſter in Bearn, and now at Coppenhagen.

(h) La Placette, ib. p. 372.

ſo much proceed from want of Knowledge, as from (E) Prejudices. It would be an unjuſt Thing to impute to the Proteſtants what was reported, That Mr. Pelliſſon refuſed or with a ſuperficial Examination, perſwades to Salvation. Every Orthodox ought to ſay, Gratiâ Dei ſum quod ſum: I am what I am by the Grace of God. I am Orthodox by Grace (i), not of my ſelf, 'tis the Gift of God, not by my Works, by Inquiries, and Intenſions, that no Man ſhould glory. Let the Examination be eaſy, or at leaſt poſſible; let it be difficult, or even impoſſible; this is moſt certain, that (k) no Body makes uſe of it. Moſt Men cannot read; moſt of thoſe who can read, do never read the Works of their Adverſaries; they know the Reaſons of the contrary Party only by ſome Fragments which they find in the Writings of their own Authors. The Pretenſions of the contrary Party are but imperfectly and very weakly repreſented in thoſe Fragments. To know the Force of Objections, they ought to be conſidered as they are placed in their Syſtem, and connected with their general Principles, Conſequences and Dependencies. Therefore, to examine the Opinions of an Adverſary, is not meerly to compare the Anſwer of our Authors with the Objections alledged by them; this is to judge of the Force of a Wheel only by the Effects it may produce being ſeparated from its Engine. Such a Thing cannot be call'd an Examination but abuſively. As for the Doctors, who read the Works of their Adverſaries, they uſe all their Wit not to enquire whether they are in the Right, but to find that they are in the Wrong, and to invent ſome Anſwers. All the Anſwers which they invent, ſeem to them to be good, becauſe they are always ſtrongly perſwaded that their Adverſaries are Hereticks. This cannot be called an Examination neither, but abuſively. The firſt Thing that ſhould be done, in order to a right Examination, would be to doubt of one's Religion. But the leaſt doubt about it would be look'd upon as an Offence againſt God, and a Suggeſtion of the Devil; ſo that when Men go about to diſcern Orthodoxy from Heterodoxy, they are not diſpoſed as St. Auguſtin ſays they ſhould be. He would have them to lay aſide the Thoughts of being in Poſſeſſion of the Truth. (a) Ut autem facilius miteſcatis, & non inimico animo vobiſque pernicioſo mihi adverſemini, quovis judice me impetrare à vobis oportet, ut ex utraque parte omnis arrogantia deponatur. Nemo noſtrum dicat jam ſe inveniſſe veritatem: ſic eam quæramus, quaſi ab utriſque neſciatur. Ita enim diligenter & concorditer quæri poterit, ſi nullâ temerariâ præſumptione inventa & cognita eſſe credatur. They, who ſay that the Corruption of the Heart hinders a Heretick from diſcovering the Truth, are often miſtaken, if they mean (b) that his Inclination to Drunkenneſs, Whoring, and other bodily Pleaſures, or Pride, Avarice, &c. corrupt his Judgment; but they are not miſtaken, if they mean that his Prepoſſeſſion hinders him from diſcovering good Proofs. He examins the Reaſons of the Orthodox, being fully perſwaded that he has the Truth on his Side, and that he ſhould offend God, if he fancied that the Proofs of the contrary Party are ſolid. He thinks he acts like a faithful Servant of God, if he looks upon thoſe Reaſons as meer Sophiſms, and he cannot believe that his Anſwers are not good, ſince they are directed againſt what he believes to be falſe. He is miſtaken, if he fanſies that he has very well examined the Syſtem of the contrary Party. But I beſeech you to tell me, whether the Orthodox have not the like Perſwaſion, when they examine the Cauſe of Hereticks. They are all like People that are at Law, the Reaſons of their Parties never appear ſolid to them; though they read over and over the Papers which they produce, they look upon 'em as meer wrangling; and when they have been condemn'd by inferiour and ſupreme Judges, they believe ſtill that they are in the Right, and would appeal to another Tribunal, if there was any. From whence comes this? Is it not becauſe they examine every Thing with a full perſwaſion that they have a juſt Cauſe? Nothing can better convince us of the Inutility of a partial Examination, than what happens every Day to the Noveliſts. They perſwade themſelves that the Party which they eſpouſe, has a juſt Cauſe, and they paſſionately deſire that it may prevail. They would be extreamly vexed, if a bright Light ſhould ſhine in their Eyes, whereby they ſhould be convinced of the Juſtice and good Fortune of the contrary Party. Here is the Effect of thoſe Paſſions. They read the Manifeſto's and Relations of the Enemies as ſo many Falſhoods; tho' their Reaſons be never ſo probable, they reject them, and mind only what can be anſwered. But whilſt they are attentive to the ſpecious Appearances of the Anſwer, without minding the fair Side of the Objection, they never acquire any Knowledge but what flatters their Prejudices. If there be any ill News, they don't believe them; they invent a thouſand Reaſons to ſhew that they are falſe; they make it their whole Buſineſs. If there be any good News, their Credulity has no Bounds (c); the weakeſt Appearances are as good to them as a ſtrong Proof; they uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to ſhew the Reality of thoſe Appearances, they remove from their Fancy the contrary Appearances, and ſo they ſpend the Year without Trouble and Uneaſineſs, thanks to their Induſtry which removes the unpleaſant Objects, and creates every Day ſome agreeable Phantaſms in their Fancy. Nothing but an undeniable Evidence can undeceive them; and if they will ſeriouſly examine themſelves, they muſt needs confeſs that they reſt ſatisfied with ſuch Reaſons as they would deſpiſe, if they were alledged in favour of their Enemies. It is certain that if the Reaſons pro and con in Matters of Religion, are not more carefully examined than thoſe which concern publick News, it does not deſerve the Name of Examination. It is true alſo that the ſame Spirit, which commonly prevails in the Noveliſts who are zealous for a Party, prevails alſo in moſt Men zealous for their Religion. The Loſs of a Battel afflicts a Noveliſt, but he is extreamly pleas'd to hear of a Victory; and therefore he exhauſts all the ſtrength of his Mind to convince himſelf that the Battel was won; and if the Proofs of the contrary are not undeniable, if there be three Probabilities for the Victory againſt ten or twelve Probabilities for the Loſs of the Battel, it is enough for him to believe that it is won. Men are not leſs pleas'd in a Diſpute about Religion, when they believe that their Adverſaries are worſted; they would not be leſs afflicted if they ſhou'd ſee their Adverſaries triumph. So that the Trouble which Men endeavour to avoid on both Sides, and the Pleaſure which they endeavour to procure to themſelves, hinder 'em from examining Things impartially, and make 'em uſe a double Weight and a double Meaſure.

This is what a Third Party might advance, affirming the Right, and denying the Fact; affirming that Men ought to follow the Way of Examination, but that no Body follows it. However it be, the Difference proves very great in the Event; for whereas thoſe that err, would perhaps become Orthodox, if they were not perſwaded that they are ſo already; the Orthodox, it may be, preſerve themſelves from Hereſy, becauſe they firmly believe that they are Orthodox.

(E) As from Prejudices.] After what has been ſaid, I need not make a long Commentary upon this. The Example of Men that are at Law, and of the Noveliſts which I have made uſe of, is very fit to make us apprehend, that a Man, who is a Judge and a Party, cannot well diſcern Truth from Falſhood. Men are not allowed to be Judges and Parties, for two very good Reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe they would be apt to decide in their behalf, tho' they ſhould be ſenſible of their Injuſtice: Secondly, Becauſe they would be apt to believe that they are in the Right, even when the Juſtice of the Cauſe of the contrary Party might eaſily be known. Every Body is a Judge and a Party in Diſputes about Religion; for Men do not examine the Reaſons of their Adverſaries with a ſceptical and Pyrrhonian Spirit. Such a Diſpoſition would be look'd upon as a Crime: They examine them therefore being fully perſwaded, that the Religion they profeſs is the only true one. Thus they are almoſt prepoſſeſſed with the above mentioned Paſſions of the Noveliſts. Three Probabilities on the ſide of our Pre-poſſeſſion prevail upon ten or twelve on the other ſide: the Reaſon of it is, becauſe we are infinitely more attentive to ſuch Probabilities as pleaſe us, than to thoſe which make us uneaſy. Mr. Nicolle confirms what I ſay. (d) Tho' the Diſproportion there is between God and the Creatures, and between Eternal and Temporal refuſed (F) to confeſs during his laſt Sickneſs. His Eldeſt Brother died young, and was an Author * already. That Family has produced many (G) Illuſtrious Perſons.

(i) See the Epiſtle to the Epheſ. c. 2. v. 9.

(k) Note, That this is not the Opinion of the Author of this Book, but of a third Party, which may be framed. The ſame Thing ought to be noted in many other Places.

(a) Auguſt. contra Epiſt. Fundam. c. 3.

(b) See the Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe Words Compel them to come in, Part 2. ch. 10. p. 548. & Seq. & Part 4. p. 217. & Seq.

REFLECTIONS upon the Prejudices of the Noveliſts.

(c) Note that there is another ſort of Noveliſts: they have the Art of afflicting themſelves. They believe what they fear, and not what they wiſh.

(d) *Nicolle, Preface to the well-grounded Prejudices, pag. * 4. of the Dutch Edition.*

PENELOPE.

ſual Things be never ſo infinite, yet the leaſt Pleaſures, and the leaſt worldly Advantages are every Day preferred before God and Eternal Goods; becauſe we have a quick Senſe of thoſe Pleaſures and Advantages, whereas God and Eternal Things are but weakly conceived. In the ſame manner our Minds are carried away by the weakeſt Appearances, and the worſt Reaſons. They need but apply themſelves ſtrongly to them; for ſuch an Application hinders 'em from ſeeing any other Reaſons, and they are ſo full of them, that no other Reaſon can enter into them. Moſt Queſtions ought to be decided only by comparing Reaſons one with another; and 'tis moſt times a piece of Raſhneſs to decide a Queſtion by examining only the Reaſons of one Party. But how eaſy is it to wander in that Compariſon, or to proceed in it unfairly? How many Men are there, who cannot comprehend ſo many things at one time? If they betake themſelves to the Conſideration of one Reaſon, they forget the reſt, and ſo do not truly compare them one with another. They are determined by their preſent Application; and conſequently their Inclination and not their Light is the Principle of their Perſwaſion. That which is moſt terrible, is that as it is an eaſie thing for Men to fall into Error and Illuſion, it is very difficult for them to get out of it, becauſe they know not the Defects which engaged them into it, and having no other ſpiritual Eyes to diſcern them, they judge both of themſelves and other things with thoſe very Eyes which are diſtempered. Ita ſit ut animus de ſe ipſo tum judicet, cum id ipſum quo judicat ægrotet. Be ſure to obſerve, 1. That in ſome Caſes the Truth which diſpleaſes us, is ſo manifeſt that it cannot be miſtaken. 2. That there are ſome Suits at Law, and ſome Controverſies, wherein it is ſo difficult to diſcern Truth from Falſhood, that the moſt unintereſted Judges, and even the moſt ſubtil Scepticks would not know which way to turn. It is therefore true that Men are not always blinded by their Prejudices and Paſſions, and that the Difficulties which they meet with in an Examination are ſometimes in the Things themſelves.

(F) Refuſed to Confeſs.] Several Perſons, having read the Rotterdam Gazette of the 15th of February, 1693, believed that the whole Memorial inſerted in it concerning Mr. Pelliſſon, had been forged in the ſame City, and that the Author of that Gazette, out of ſome prudential Reaſons, could not diſpenſe himſelf from publiſhing that Memorial. That Opinion was not exactly true; for it is certain that ſeveral Letters came from France into Holland, which ſaid that every Body in Paris was offended at Mr. Pelliſſon's Way of refuſing to Confeſs. So that theſe Words of the Gazette, (a) Mr. Pelliſon departed this Life yeſterday, having refuſed to hear any Body ſpeak to him of Religion, and without Communion and Confeſſion, were not invented by the great and ſorry Noveliſt who was ſuſpected of it. It was grounded upon ſeveral Letters which came from France. But it will be ſaid, That thoſe Letters had been written by ſome Proteſtants of Paris. I know nothing of it; I know only that the Catholicks of Paris were the firſt who publiſhed that News. Mademoiſelle de Scuderi, an intimate Friend of the Deceaſed, was afflicted at that Report, and deſired the Biſhop of Meaux to acquaint her with the Truth of the Matter. That Prelate writ a Letter to her, which was printed. Some other printed Pieces came out about it in France and in Holland, and a little while after there was no further talk of it. What was undeniable, was that Mr. Pelliſſon died without Communion and Confeſſion. There were three Sorts of Judgments about it, as it is uſual in ſuch Caſes. Mr. Pelliſſon's Friends maintain'd, agreeably to the Biſhop of Meaux's Account, that he had ſent for a Confeſſor; but that he was ſuffocated by his Defluxion before the time appointed for his Confeſſion. His Enemies gave as ill a turn as ever they could to all the Circumſtances. Some impartial Perſons were contented to ſay that the whole Buſineſs was to be left to the Searcher of Hearts, and affirm'd only the matter of Fact, viz. That Mr. Pelliſſon did not Confeſs. They condemned thoſe who publiſhed that he died (b) HAVING REFUSED TO HEAR ANY BODY SPEAK TO HIM OF RELIGION; for it ſuppoſes that ſome People came to ſpeak to him of Religion, and that he refuſed to hear them; which, ſay they, is very falſe. They add, That ſeveral (c) pious Perſons have put off their Confeſſion and Communion in their Sickneſs, either becauſe they did not think to be ſo ill as they were, or becauſe the Concerns of their Family required not that they ſhould be thought to be ready to die. Such Delays, wherein the Conſcience is not concerned, may be the Reaſon why a Man dies without Confeſſion. However, a Catholick (d) Hiſtorian will doubtleſs be alledged againſt Mr. Pelliſſon: His Hiſtory was printed at Paris with the King's Privilege, in the Year 1693. Theſe Words are to be found in it, Pag. 224. of the 2d Tome. (e) “Paul Pelliſſon's Religion was variouſly ſpoken of; ſome ſaid that he had none; that he was only a Time-ſerver; and that according to him the Religion of the Prince, and that which ſerves his Ambition, was always the beſt: Others believed that he was a Proteſtant in his Heart; and others, that he was a Catholick in earneſt. What is certain is, that he profeſt thoſe two Religions in ſeveral Parts of his Life, and appear'd zealous in both. But at his dying Hour he profeſt none openly; for he would not receive the Sacraments of the Church of Rome, nor durſt own himſelf to be a Huguenot; but he perſiſted to the laſt in a profound Silence, the Reaſons whereof are only known to God. But they who know that thoſe Words are not to be found in the Paris Edition, will not produce that Witneſs. I know that the Dutch Edition contains many Things, which Mr. de Riencourt never thought of. Note, That the Dutch Edition contains in the Title theſe Words, Paris, for Claude Barbin, in the Palace, 1694. with the King's Licence. Will they who ſhall find it forty Years hence in ſome Library, be able to know that it is a ſuppoſed one? Will they not ſeriouſly believe, that whatever it contains was publiſhed at Paris by a Corrector of Accounts? And if any one objects to them, that his Edition does not mention that profound Silence, that (f) Rejection of the Sacraments, &c. and that they falſify the publick Hiſtory: Will they not produce a Copy wherein a thouſand Witneſſes may read, PARIS, FOR CLAUDE BARBIN, &c.? Will they be at the Trouble of appointing ſome able Perſons for the Verification of thoſe Editions? Not at all: Every one will follow his own Prejudices, and will take for the ſuppoſed Edition that which he does not like. From whence it may be known, how difficult it is for Men to avoid Error, in the midſt of ſo many Clouds which are caſt before hand over the Time to come. Our Predeceſſors took as much Care to deceive us, as we do to deceive our Poſterity. And if Men are ſo bold as to falſify the Works of an Author, whilſt he is alive, who can aſſure us, that the Manuſcripts of the Fathers have been reſpected? Who can aſſure us that no Body ſuffers Perſecution, for defending the Trick of a Falſifyer of Books?

(G) Many illuſtrious Perſons.] “(g) From the Family of the Pelliſſons came Raimond Pelliſſon, firſt Preſident at Chambery: Peter Pelliſſon, ſecond Preſident in the ſame Place: Thomas Pelliſſon Quarter-Maſter of the Troop of Gend'armes of Guy de Maugiron, Governour of Chambery, and high Provoſt of Dauphine: Benedict Pelliſon the only Recorder Civil and Criminal of the Parliament of Dauphine, ſix ſcore Years ago, which was ſo conſiderable a Place, that it is now divided into nine, each whereof is worth eleven Thouſand Crowns: John Pelliſon de Condrieu, Principal of the College of Tournon, who made an Epitome of the Latin Grammar, which Deſpautier (h) inlarged, and who was the firſt that compoſed the Latin “ Grammar

---

* He is the Author of an Anonymous Book intituled, Various Problems, printed at Paris in the Year 1647. in 12. See the Antiquities of Caſtres by Peter Morel.

(a) Rotterdam Gazette of the 15th of Feb. 1693. in the Paris Article of the 9th of February.

(b) See above Let. e.

(c) M. Paſcal having confeſs'd during his laſt Sickneſs, frighted his Friends, and therefore his Phyſicians accuſed him of fear. Whereupon he ſaid, I would fain communicate, but ſince I perceive that my Friends are ſo ſurpriſed at my Confeſſion, I am afraid they would be more ſtill; wherefore 'tis better to put it off; and the Prieſt having been of the ſame Opinion, he did not communicate. See his Life pag. 43. Whilſt this Sheet is reprinting in January 1701. the Dutch Gazettes give out that Mr. Roze, Secretary of the Cloſet, and Mr. Stouppe, Lieutenant General, died at Paris without receiving any Sacrament, and no Body infers from thence that they were not good Catholicks. (d) Mr. de Riencourt, Corrector of Accounts.] (e) Riencourt's Hiſtory of Lewis XIV. pag. 223, 224. (f) For he WOULD NOT receive the Sacraments of the Church of Rome, Riencourt, ubi ſup. (g) Peter Borel, Treaſure of the Gallick and French Antiquities, pag. 233. (h) That Author who is ſo well known in the Schools of France, is called Deſpautere, and not Deſpautier. He is ſo far from having inlarged the Work of John Pelliſſon, that the latter made an Abridgement of Deſpautere. Vid. Epitom. Biblioth. Geſner.

ſo much proceed from want of Knowledge, as from (E) Prejudices. It would be an unjuſt Thing to impute to the Proteſtants what was reported, That Mr. Pelliſſon refuſed or with a ſuperficial Examination, perſwades to Salvation. Every Orthodox ought to ſay, Gratiâ Dei ſum quod ſum: I am what I am by the Grace of God. I am Orthodox by Grace (a), not of my ſelf, 'tis the Gift of God, not by my Works, by Inquiries, and Intentions, that no Man ſhould glory. Let the Examination be eaſy, or at leaſt poſſible; let it be difficult, or even impoſſible; this is moſt certain, that (b) no Body makes uſe of it. Moſt Men cannot read, moſt of thoſe who can read, do never read the Works of their Adverſaries; they know the Reaſons of the contrary Party only by ſome Fragments which they find in the Writings of their own Authors. The Pretentions of the contrary Party are but imperfectly and very weakly repreſented in thoſe Fragments. To know the Force of Objections, they ought to be conſidered as they are placed in their Syſtem, and connected with their general Principles, Conſequences and Dependencies. Therefore, to examine the Opinions of an Adverſary, is not meerly to compare the Anſwer of our Authors with the Objections alledged by them; this is to judge of the Force of a Wheel only by the Effects it may produce being ſeparated from its Engine. Such a Thing cannot be call'd an Examination but abuſively. As for the Doctors, who read the Works of their Adverſaries, they uſe all their Wit not to enquire whether they are in the Right, but to find that they are in the Wrong, and to invent ſome Anſwers. All the Anſwers which they invent, ſeem to them to be good, becauſe they are always ſtrongly perſwaded that their Adverſaries are Hereticks. This cannot be called an Examination neither, but abuſively. The firſt Thing that ſhould be done, in order to a right Examination, would be to doubt of one's Religion. But the leaſt doubt about it would be look'd upon as an Offence againſt God, and a Suggeſtion of the Devil; ſo that when Men go about to diſcern Orthodoxy from Heterodoxy, they are not diſpoſed as St. Auguſtin ſays they ſhould be. He would have them to lay aſide the Thoughts of being in Poſſeſſion of the Truth. (a) Ut autem faciliùs miteſcatis, & non inimico animo vobiſque pernicioſo mihi adverſemini, quovis judice me impetrare à vobis oportet, ut ex utraque parte omnis arrogantia deponatur. Nemo noſtrum dicat jam ſe inveniſſe veritatem: ſic eam quæramus, quaſi ab utriſque neſciatur. Ita enim diligenter & concorditer quæri poterit, ſi nullâ temerariâ præſumptione inventa & cognita eſſe credatur. They, who ſay that the Corruption of the Heart hinders a Heretick from diſcovering the Truth, are often miſtaken, if they mean (b) that his Inclination to Drunkenneſs, Whoring, and other bodily Pleaſures, or Pride, Avarice, &c. corrupt his Judgment; but they are not miſtaken, if they mean that his Prepoſſeſſion hinders him from diſcovering good Proofs. He examins the Reaſons of the Orthodox, being fully perſwaded that he has the Truth on his Side, and that he ſhould offend God, if he fanſied that the Proofs of the contrary Party are ſolid. He thinks he acts like a faithful Servant of God, if he looks upon thoſe Reaſons as meer Sophiſms, and he cannot believe that his Anſwers are not good, ſince they are directed againſt what he believes to be falſe. He is miſtaken, if he fanſies that he has very well examined the Syſtem of the contrary Party. But I beſeech you to tell me, whether the Orthodox have not the like Perſwaſion, when they examine the Cauſe of Hereticks. They are all like People that are at Law, the Reaſons of their Parties never appear ſolid to them; though they read over and over the Papers which they produce, they look upon 'em as meer wrangling; and when they have been condemn'd by inferiour and ſupreme Judges, they believe ſtill that they are in the Right, and would appeal to another Tribunal, if there was any. From whence comes this? Is it not becauſe they examine every Thing with a full perſwaſion that they have a juſt Cauſe? Nothing can better convince us of the Inutility of a partial Examination, than what happens every Day to the Noveliſts. They perſwade themſelves that the Party which they eſpouſe, has a juſt Cauſe, and they paſſionately deſire that it may prevail. They would be extreamly vexed, if a bright Light ſhould ſhine in their Eyes, whereby they ſhould be convinced of the Juſtice and good Fortune of the contrary Party. Here is the Effect of thoſe Paſſions. They read the Manifeſto's and Relations of the Enemies as ſo many Falſhoods; tho' their Reaſons be never ſo probable, they reject them, and mind only what can be anſwered. But whilſt they are attentive to the ſpecious Appearances of the Anſwer, without minding the fair Side of the Objection, they never acquire any Knowledge but what flatters their Prejudices. If there be any ill News, they don't believe them; they invent a thouſand Reaſons to ſhew that they are falſe, they make it their whole Buſineſs. If there be any good News, their Credulity has no Bounds (c); the weakeſt Appearances are as good to them as a ſtrong Proof, they uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to ſhew the Reality of thoſe Appearances, they remove from their Fancy the contrary Appearances, and ſo they ſpend the Year without Trouble and Uneaſineſs, thanks to their Induſtry which removes the unpleaſant Objects, and creates every Day ſome agreeable Phantaſms in their Fancy. Nothing but an undeniable Evidence can undeceive them; and if they will ſeriouſly examine themſelves, they muſt needs confeſs that they reſt ſatisfied with ſuch Reaſons as they wou'd deſpiſe, if they were alledged in favour of their Enemies. It is certain that if the Reaſons pro and con in Matters of Religion, are not more carefully examined than thoſe which concern publick News, it does not deſerve the Name of Examination. It is true alſo that the ſame Spirit, which commonly prevails in the Noveliſts who are zealous for a Party, prevails alſo in moſt Men zealous for their Religion. The Loſs of a Battel afflicts a Noveliſt, but he is extreamly pleas'd to hear of a Victory, and therefore he exhauſts all the ſtrength of his Mind to convince himſelf that the Battel was won; and if the Proofs of the contrary are not undeniable, if there be three Probabilities for the Victory againſt ten or twelve Probabilities for the Loſs of the Battel, it is enough for him to believe that it is won. Men are not leſs pleas'd in a Diſpute about Religion, when they believe that their Adverſaries are worſted; they would not be leſs afflicted if they ſhou'd ſee their Adverſaries triumph. So that the Trouble which Men endeavour to avoid on both Sides, and the Pleaſure which they endeavour to procure to themſelves, hinder 'em from examining Things impartially, and make 'em uſe a double Weight and a double Meaſure.

This is what a Third Party might advance, affirming the Right, and denying the Fact; affirming that Men ought to follow the Way of Examination, but that no Body follows it. However it be, the Difference proves very great in the Event; for whereas thoſe that err, would perhaps become Orthodox, if they were not perſwaded that they are ſo already; the Orthodox, it may be, preſerve themſelves from Hereſy, becauſe they firmly believe that they are Orthodox.

(E) As from Prejudices.] After what has been ſaid, I need not make a long Commentary upon this. The Example of Men that are at Law, and of the Noveliſts which I have made uſe of, is very fit to make us apprehend, that a Man, who is a Judge and a Party, cannot well diſcern Truth from Falſhood. Men are not allowed to be Judges and Parties, for two very good Reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe they would be apt to decide in their behalf, tho' they ſhould be ſenſible of their Injuſtice: Secondly, Becauſe they would be apt to believe that they are in the Right, even when the Juſtice of the Cauſe of the contrary Party might eaſily be known. Every Body is a Judge and a Party in Diſputes about Religion; for Men do not examine the Reaſons of their Adverſaries with a ſceptical and Pyrrhonian Spirit. Such a Diſpoſition would be look'd upon as a Crime: They examine them therefore being fully perſwaded, that the Religion they profeſs is the only true one. Thus they are almoſt prepoſſeſſed with the above mentioned Paſſions of the Noveliſts. Three Probabilities on the ſide of our Pre-poſſeſſion prevail upon ten or twelve on the other ſide: the Reaſon of it is, becauſe we are infinitely more attentive to ſuch Probabilities as pleaſe us, than to thoſe which make us uneaſy. Mr. Nicolle confirms what I ſay. (d) Tho' the Diſproportion there is between God and the Creatures, and between Eternal and Temporal refuſed (F) to confeſs during his laſt Sickneſs. His Eldeſt Brother died young, and was an Author * already. That Family has produced many (G) Illuſtrious Perſons.

(a) See the Epiſtle to the Epheſ. c. 2. v. 8.

(b) Note, That this is not the Diſcourſe of the Author of this Book, but of a third Party, which may be found. The ſame Thing ought to be noted in many other Places.

(a) Auguſt. contra Epiſt. Fundam. c. 3.

(b) See the Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe Words Compel them to come in, Part 2. ch. 10. p. 348. & Seq. & Part 4. p. 217. & Seq.

(c) Note that there is another ſort of Noveliſts: they have the Art of afflicting themſelves. They believe what they fear, and not what they wiſh.

REFLECTIONS upon the Prejudices of the Noveliſts.

(d) *Nicolle, Preface to the well-grounded Prejudices, pag. * 4. of the Dutch Edition.*

PENELOPE.

poral Things be never ſo infinite, yet the leaſt Pleaſures, and the leaſt worldly Advantages are every Day preferred before God and Eternal Goods; becauſe we have a quick Senſe of thoſe Pleaſures and Advantages, whereas God and Eternal Things are but weakly conceived. In the ſame manner our Minds are carried away by the weakeſt Appearances, and the worſt Reaſons. They need but apply themſelves ſtrongly to them; for ſuch an Application hinders 'em from ſeeing any other Reaſons, and they are ſo full of them, that no other Reaſon can enter into them. Such Queſtions ought to be decided only by comparing Reaſons one with another; and 'tis moſt times a piece of Raſhneſs to decide a Queſtion by examining only the Reaſons of one Party. But how eaſy is it to wander in that Compariſon, or to proceed in it unfairly! How many Men are there, who cannot comprehend ſo many things at one time? If they betake themſelves to the Conſideration of one Reaſon, they forget the reſt, and ſo do not truly compare them one with another. They are determined by their preſent Application; and conſequently their Inclination and not their Light is the Principle of their Perſwaſion. That which is moſt terrible, is that as it is an eaſie thing for Men to fall into Error and Illuſion, it is very difficult for them to get out of it, becauſe they know not the Defects which engaged them into it, and having no other ſpiritual Eyes to diſcern them, they judge both of themſelves and other things with thoſe very Eyes which are diſtempered. Ita fit ut animus de ſe ipſo tum judicet, cum id ipſum quo judicat ægrotet. Be ſure to obſerve, 1. That in ſome Caſes the Truth which diſpleaſes us, is ſo manifeſt that it cannot be miſtaken. 2. That there are ſome Suits at Law, and ſome Controverſies, wherein it is ſo difficult to diſcern Truth from Falſhood, that the moſt unintereſted Judges, and even the moſt ſubtil Scepticks would not know which way to turn. It is therefore true that Men are not always blinded by their Prejudices and Paſſions, and that the Difficulties which they meet with in an Examination are ſometimes in the Things themſelves.

(F) Refuſed to Confeſs.] Several Perſons, having read the Rotterdam Gazette of the 16th of February, 1693. believed that the whole Memorial inſerted in it concerning Mr. Pelliſſon, had been forged in the ſame City, and that the Author of that Gazette, out of ſome prudential Reaſons, could not diſpenſe himſelf from publiſhing that Memorial. That Opinion was not exactly true; for it is certain that ſeveral Letters came from France into Holland, which ſaid that every Body in Paris was offended at Mr. Pelliſſon's Way of refuſing to Confeſs. So that theſe Words of the Gazette, (a) Mr. Pelliſon departed this Life yeſterday, having refuſed to hear any Body ſpeak to him of Religion, and without Communion and Confeſſion, were not invented by the great and ſorry Noveliſt who was ſuſpected of it. It was grounded upon ſeveral Letters which came from France. But it will be ſaid, That thoſe Letters had been written by ſome Proteſtants of Paris. I know nothing of it; I know only that the Catholicks of Paris were the firſt who publiſhed that News. Mademoiſelle de Scuderi, an intimate Friend of the Deceaſed, was afflicted at that Report, and deſired the Biſhop of Meaux to acquaint her with the Truth of the Matter. That Prelate writ a Letter to her, which was printed. Some other printed Pieces came out about it in France and in Holland, and a little while after there was no further talk of it. What was undeniable, was that Mr. Pelliſſon died without Communion and Confeſſion. There were three Sorts of Judgments about it, as it is uſual in ſuch Caſes. Mr. Pelliſſon's Friends maintain'd, agreeably to the Biſhop of Meaux's Account, that he had ſent for a Confeſſor; but that he was ſuffocated by his Defluxion before the time appointed for his Confeſſion. His Enemies gave as ill a turn as ever they could to all the Circumſtances. Some impartial Perſons were contented to ſay that the whole Buſineſs was to be left to the Searcher of Hearts, and affirm'd only the matter of Fact, viz. That Mr. Pelliſſon did not Confeſs. They condemned thoſe who publiſhed that he died (b) HAVING REFUSED TO HEAR ANY BODY SPEAK TO HIM OF RELIGION; for it ſuppoſes that ſome People came to ſpeak to him of Religion, and that he refuſed to hear them; which, ſay they, is very falſe. They add, That ſeveral (c) pious Perſons have put off their Confeſſion and Communion in their Sickneſs, either becauſe they did not think to be ſo ill as they were, or becauſe the Concerns of their Family required not that they ſhould be thought to be ready to die. Such Delays, wherein the Conſcience is not concerned, may be the Reaſon why a Man dies without Confeſſion. However, a Catholick (d) Hiſtorian will doubtleſs be alledged againſt Mr. Pelliſſon: His Hiſtory was printed at Paris with the King's Privilege, in the Year 1694. Theſe Words are to be found in it, Pag. 224. of the 2d Tome. (e) “Paul Pelliſſon's Religion was variouſly ſpoken of; ſome ſaid that he had none; that he was only a Time-ſerver; and that according to him the Religion of the Prince, and that which ſerves his Ambition, was always the beſt: Others believed that he was a Proteſtant in his Heart; and others, that he was a Catholick in earneſt. What is certain is, that he profeſt thoſe two Religions in ſeveral Parts of his Life, and appear'd zealous in both. But at his dying Hour he profeſt none openly; for he would not receive the Sacraments of the Church of Rome, nor durſt own himſelf to be a Huguenot; but he perſiſted to the laſt in a profound Silence, the Reaſons whereof are only known to God. But they who know that thoſe Words are not to be found in the Paris Edition, will not produce that Witneſs. I know that the Dutch Edition contains many Things, which Mr. de Riencourt never thought of. Note, That the Dutch Edition contains in the Title theſe Words, Paris, for Claude Barbin, in the Palace, 1694. with the King's Licence. Will they who ſhall find it forty Years hence in ſome Library, be able to know that it is a ſuppoſed one? Will they not ſeriouſly believe, that whatever it contains was publiſhed at Paris by a Corrector of Accounts? And if any one objects to them, that his Edition does not mention that profound Silence, that (f) Rejection of the Sacraments, &c. and that they falſify the publick Hiſtory: Will they not produce a Copy wherein a thouſand Witneſſes may read, PARIS, FOR CLAUDE BARBIN, &c.? Will they be at the Trouble of appointing ſome able Perſons for the Verification of thoſe Editions? Not at all: Every one will follow his own Prejudices, and will take for the ſuppoſed Edition that which he does not like. From whence it may be known, how difficult it is for Men to avoid Error, in the midſt of ſo many Clouds which are caſt before hand over the Time to come. Our Predeceſſors took as much Care to deceive us, as we do to deceive our Poſterity. And if Men are ſo bold as to falſify the Works of an Author, whilſt he is alive, who can aſſure us, that the Manuſcripts of the Fathers have been reſpected? Who can aſſure us that no Body ſuffers Perſecution, for defending the Trick of a Falſifyer of Books?

(G) Many illuſtrious Perſons.] “(g) From the Family of the Pelliſſons came Raimond Pelliſſon, firſt Preſident at Chambery: Peter Pelliſſon, ſecond Preſident in the ſame Place: Thomas Pelliſſon Quarter-Maſter of the Troop of Gend'armes of Guy de Maugiron, Governour of Chambery, and high Provoſt of Dauphine: Benedict Pelliſon the only Recorder Civil and Criminal of the Parliament of Dauphine, ſix ſcore Years ago, which was ſo conſiderable a Place, that it is now divided into nine, each whereof is worth eleven Thouſand Crowns: John Pelliſon de Condrieu, Principal of the College of Tournon, who made an Epitome of the Latin Grammar, which Deſpautier (h) inlarged, and who was the firſt that compoſed the Latin

* He is the Author of an Anonymous Book intituled, Various Problems, printed at Paris in the Year 1647. in 12. See the Antiquities of Caſtres by Peter Borel.

(a) Rotterdam Gazette of the 16th of Feb. 1693. in the Paris Article of the 9th of February.

(b) See above Let. e.

(c) M. Paſcal having confeſs'd during his laſt Sickneſs, frighted his Friends, and therefore his Phyſicians accuſed him of fear. Whereupon he ſaid, I would fain communicate, but ſince I perceive that my Friends are ſo ſurpriſed at my Confeſſion, I am afraid they would be more ſtill; wherefore 'tis better to put it off; and the Prieſt having been of the ſame Opinion, he did not communicate. See his Life pag. 43. whilſt this Sheet is reprinting in January 1701. the Dutch Gazettes give out that Mr. Roze, Secretary of the Cloſet, and Mr. Stouppe, Lieutenant General, died at Paris without receiving any Sacrament, and no Body infers from thence that they were not good Catholicks.

(d) Mr. de Riencourt, Corrector of Accounts.

(e) Riencourt's Hiſtory of Lewis XIV. pag. 222, 224.

(f) For he WOULD NOT receive the Sacraments of the Church of Rome, Riencourt, ubi ſup.

(g) Peter Borel, Treaſure of the Gallick and French Antiquities, pag. 233.

(h) That Author who is ſo well known in the Schools of France, is called Deſpautere, and not Deſpautier. He is ſo far from having inlarged the Work of John Pelliſſon, that the latter made an Abridgement of Deſpautere. Vid. Epitom. Biblioth. Geſner.

PENELOPE, Daughter of Icarius, Brother of Tyndarus King of Lacedæmon, was the Wife of Ulyſſes, and became ſo Famous by reaſon of her Chaſtity, that ſhe is alledged as an Example to this very Day, and has occaſioned a Proverb. 'Tis ſaid † that Tyndarus help'd Ulyſſes to obtain her, as a Reward of the ‡ good Advice he had given him. Others § ſay, that he obtain'd her in a Race, Icarius having declared to thoſe who ask'd him his Daughter, that the beſt Runner ſhould have her: Ulyſſes won the Prize. He might be therefore compared with thoſe who run after a Benefice, and carry it, becauſe they have the beſt Horſes. He could never reſolve to live at Lacedæmon, as his Father-in-law deſired: He ſet out for Ithaca, and his Wife followed him. What ſhe did when her Father running after them overtook 'em in (A) the Way, deſerves to be obſerved. The married Couple loved one another very tenderly, ſo that Ulyſſes did what ever he could not to go to the Siege of Troy †: But all his Devices proved unſucceſsful, and he was forced to leave his dear Wife by whom he had one Boy. He was twenty Years without ſeeing her. During that long Abſence ſhe was courted by a great many (B) Lovers, who urged her to declare † Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. 3. pag. m. 217, 218.

‡ See in the Text of the Article of Helena, what he adviſed Tyndarus to do about the Marriage of Helena.

§ Pauſan. l. 3. p. 93.

† See in the Article Ulyſſes.

“ Grammar and its Rules, with the Inſtitution of Children in a College, printed at Lyons 1540. in 16. by Thibaut Payen, according to du Verdier in his French Bibliotheque. He made alſo the Elogy of Cardinal de Tournon, printed at Lyons by Gryphius, in the Year 1544. in 4to. I could name many other Illuſtrious Men, iſſued from that ancient Family within theſe four hundred Years, who have appear'd both in the Armies and in the Law, with their Illuſtrious Alliances; and I might ſpeak of Lewis Pelliſſon, whoſe great Learning has been honourably mention'd by the Preſident Faber in the Treatiſe de Erroribus Pragmat. and de Conjecturis, Chap. 10. As alſo of Peter and John James Pelliſſon, Counſellors in the Parliament of Toulouſe, and in the Chamber of the Edict of Caſtres, Men of great Learning; the firſt was ſo great a Gameſter at Cheſs, that an Italian, who plaid extraordinary well at it, and was looking for one like himſelf, having play'd with him incognito, and having loſt, cryed out; O è il Diavolo, O il Signor Pelliſſono. . . . . The Family of the Pelliſſons is alſo deſcended (i) by the Women, from that of du Bourg, which is Famous by Reaſon of the great Anne du Bourg, Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, and of Antony du Bourg, Chancellor of France under Francis I. and from the Family of the Cavaignes (whoſe Heirs they have been) and of the Preſident Maſencal. . . . . I would ſay more of it, if John Poſſelius had not written a Book on purpoſe which contains the Praiſes of Raimond Pelliſſon, and of the City of Chambery, printed at Lyons by Gryphius. The Author from whom I have this long Paſſage, tells us in another Place (k) that Claude Pelliſſon was Knight of the Order of St. John of Jeruſalem, two (l) hundred Years ago, and that the Pelliſſons came from an Engliſh-man, Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales, when he was in Guienne.

(A) What ſhe did when her Father running after them overtook 'em in the Way.] Icarius having not been able to perſwade his Son-in-law to ſtay in Lacedæmon, endeavoured to prevail upon his Daughter. But his Intreaties could not move her to make ſo great a Sacrifice to him, as to prefer her Father's Houſe to her Husband's. She therefore ſet out with Ulyſſes, to go to Ithaca. Her Father perceiving that they had made their eſcape, got into his Chariot, ran after them, and overtook 'em, and renewed his Intreaties to his Daughter. Ulyſſes being weary of that Perſecution, declared to Penelope, that if ſhe would follow him willingly, he ſhould be very glad of it; but that if ſhe had rather return to Lacedæmon, he would not oppoſe it. Though Penelope return'd no Anſwer, and was contented to let down her Veil, yet Icarius diſcovered her Thoughts, and eaſily apprehended that ſhe had a mind to follow her Husband. He conſented to it, and erected in that very Place, a Statue of Modeſty. (a) Ὀδυσσεὺς δὲ τέως μὲν ἠνείχετο, τέλος δὲ ἐκέλευε συνακολουθεῖν Πηνελόπην ἑκοῦσαν, ἢ τὸν πατέρα ἑλομένην ἀναχωρεῖν ἐς Λακεδαίμονα. καὶ τὴν ἀποκρίνασθαι φασιν οὐδὲν, ἐγκαλυψαμένης δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἐρώτημα, Ἰκάριος τὴν μὲν, ἅτε δὴ συνιεὶς ὡς βούλεται ἀπιέναι μετὰ Ὀδυσσέως, ἀφίησιν· ἄγαλμα δὲ ἀνέθηκεν Αἰδοῦς. ἐνταῦθα γὰρ τῆς ὁδοῦ προήκουσαν ἤδη τὴν Πηνελόπην λέγουσιν ἐγκαλύψασθαι. Ulyſſes tandem victus hominis importunitate, puellæ optionem dedit, vel ſe ut ſequeretur, ſi id mallet; vel cum patre Lacedæmonem rediret: ibi illam aiunt nihil ſanè reſpondiſſe, ſed faciem tantum velaſſe: Icarium cùm ſibi probe noſſe videtur, quid illa animi haberet, ut cum Ulyſſe abiret, permiſiſſe: ſignum verecundiæ in ea parte dedicaſſe, quo Penelope, cum faciem velavit, pervenerat. Here are ſome well-mark'd Strokes of the Character of an honeſt Woman. Reaſon will have a Wife to follow her Husband, and Nature requires it. Yet if it be left to her Choice either to go with her Husband, or to ſtay with her Father who does paſſionately deſire it, ſhe ought to be ſilent out of Modeſty, and give to underſtand only by Signs what Party ſhe has a mind to take. The Modeſty and Decency of her Sex don't permit her to tell her Mind boldly and without bluſhing. Icarius was ſomewhat unreaſonable; he ask'd a Preference which does neither agree with the Laws of Nature, nor with the Matrimonial Rights. There being nothing in the Word of God but what is inſtructive; it has been obſerved that the Pſalmiſt does not make uſe of many Reaſons to perſwade a Maid, that ſhe ought to prefer her Husband's Houſe to her Father's. It would be needleſs to uſe many Arguments to perſwade ſuch a Thing; and therefore the Holy Ghoſt was contented to promiſe to that Maid, that ſhe ſhould be happy in Children, and that her Husband would love her:

But Thou (b) O Royal Bride give ear,
And to my Words attend,
Forget thy Native Country now,
And ev'ry former Friend.
So ſhall thy Beauty charm the King,
Nor ſhall his Love decay:
For he is now become thy Lord,
To him due Rev'rence pay.
(c) . . . .
Inſtead of Parents left,
(O Queen, the Caſe ſo ſtands,)
Thou ſhalt have Sons, whom thou mayſt ſet
As Princes in all Lands.

This is a very fine Pſalm, even when it is conſidered without its Myſtical Senſe, and as a meer Piece of Poetry. But here is a much finer Verſion.

Tuque [d] adeo regina audi, & rem pectore conde:
Nec mea dicta nega placidas demittere in aures:
Jam nunc & patriam & patrem obliviſcere, jam nunc
Ex animo caros penitus depone propinquos:
Unum oculis ſpecta, unum animo complectere regem,
Regem oculis animoque, tuo qui pendet ab ore,
Unius & pulchris defixus vultibus hæret.
Hunc dominum agnoſce, & ſupplex venerare: nec ille
Officio, ſtudioque tibi concedet.
. . . .
Neu deſiderio nimium tangare tuorum
Virgo, tibi dulcem patriſque & matris amorem
Leniet adnaſcens ſobolis generoſa propago:
Quos regere imperio terras, totumque per orbem
Adſpicies populos ſceptris frænare ſuperbos.

[B] Courted by a great many Lovers.] Here are the Words of a Learned Commentator. “ [e] According to Homer, the Number of Penelope's Lovers amounted to 108; for he ſays Odyſs. 16. that there was 52 of the Iſle of Dulichium, 24 of the Iſle of Samos, 20 of the Iſle of Zacinthus, and 12 of Ithaca, which ſeveral Numbers make up in all 108. preciſely. Euſtathius upon the firſt of the Odyſſes increaſes that Number; for he ſays according to the Opinion of ſome Writers, that they were 300. Meziriac makes that Obſervation to juſtify the Verſion of theſe Words of Ovid, quid . . . . alios referam, which he renders, I paſs by above a hundred. Let us ſee the whole Paſſage of Ovid; Dulichii

(i) See the Hiſtory of the French Academy p. m. 51.

(k) Ib. p. 377.

(l) That Book of Peter Borel was printed in 1655.

(a) Pauſan. l. 3. p. 104.

(b) Pſalm 45.

(c) There is here a Promiſe that ſhe would receive fine Preſents, and would be richly cloathed; but that Promiſe contain'd nothing that was new to a Daughter of a King of Egypt. See the whole Paſſage which I omit.

(d) Pſalm 45. According to Buchanan's Verſion.

(e) Meziriac upon Ovid's Epiſtles pag. 101.

declare for them; but she eluded (C) their Amorous Addresses till the Return of her Husband, who destroyed them all. She is justly praised for refusing to trust Ulysses as her Husband, before she was sure (D) that he was Ulysses. Though her Virtue was sung by the greatest of all the Poets, and by abundance of Writers, yet it has been reflected upon. Some have said that if her Lovers were disappointed,

Dulichi (f) Samique, & quos tulit alta Zacynthus,
Turba ruunt in me luxuriosa proci,
Inque tua regnant nullis prohibentibus aula,
Viscera nostra tuae dilacerantur opes.
Quid tibi Pisandrum, Polybumque, Medontaque (g) dirum,
Eurimachique avidas, Antinoique manus,
Atque alios referam? quos omnes turpiter absens
Ipse tuo partis sanguine rebus alis.
Irus egens pecorisque Melanthius actor edendi
Ultimus accedunt in tua damna pudor.

(C) She eluded their Amorous Addresses.] "(h) Homer in the 2d and 24th Books of the Odyssee, says, that Penelope, to free her self from the Importunity of her Lovers, declared to them, that she would not marry till she had finish'd a Piece of Cloth which she was about, to wrap up the Body of Laertes, her Father-in-law, when he should die; and so she amused them for the Space of three Years, and her Cloth was never finished, because she undid in the Night what she had done in the Day; from whence comes the Proverb, the Cloth of Penelope, speaking of a Work which is never ended. This is Meziriac's Commentary upon these Words of Ovid.

Nec (i) mihi quaerenti spatiosam fallere noctem,
Lassaret viduas pendula tela manus.

(D) Before she was sure that he was Ulysses.] Meziriac having alledged a Passage which I have set down in another Place (k), whereby it appears that Helena was deceived by the Resemblance she found between Paris and her Husband, adds the following Words: Eustathius (l) upon the 23d Book of the Odysses, "observes that Penelope behaved her self much more prudently; for though it seem'd to her that she knew Ulysses, yet she would not caress him in the least, and lie with him, till he told her many Particulars, and gave her several Tokens, whereby she was assured that he was truly her Husband, and that she could not be deceived. Penelope's Precaution ought to serve for a Rule in all such Occasions; and if a Woman should commit Adultery for want of expecting a full Information of the Truth, she would be justly blamed. 'Tis what has been lately observed by Mr. Basnage in a fine Book which he has published. "Let us suppose, says he, (m) a Woman, who being transported with Love for her true Husband, runs hastily to one whom she takes for him; that Woman does not design to deceive her self; her Ardour cannot be blamed: it is lawful, if it be expressed to her true Husband: In a Word, her Ignorance is unvoluntary, and only the Effect of a tender and passionate Eagerness. But if an Adulterer has imbraced that Woman, can she be excused? Will she not be somewhat ashamed of her Ardour and Precipitation? Will she not condemn them? The Author who criticized Mr. Maimbourg, is very near of the same Opinion. I add that Restriction, because he thinks that if that Woman does not refuse to examin the Matter out of a blameable Motive, she ought to be excused. Here are his Words, "(a) I affirm, That if a Woman being deceived by the Resemblance which may be between her true Husband and another Man, should grant to that other Man all the Privileges of Marriage, her Chastity would not suffer by it. Though this may look like a Paradox, I say, and I repeat it again, that such a Woman would do no real Injury to her Husband, and he would be the most unjust of all Men, if he should accuse her of having violated the Conjugal Faith; supposing that she did not design in the least to deceive her self. For if the Impatience of recovering a Husband, made her overlook the Suspicions she might have, at the Sight of a Man like her Husband, and who takes that Title; if she neglected to examine him well, lest she should not enjoy the Pleasures of Marriage without some Remorses: In a Word, if she should believe that he is her true Husband, because she wishes it may be he, for the Reasons I have intimated, removing from her Mind every thing that might tempt her to doubt of it, I should very much abate of the good Opinion I should have of her Merit, and truly I should not much blame her Husband for doubting of her Chastity, and looking upon her Virtue, as a wavering one. . . . . . (b) The natural Resemblance which is to be found between two Men, is never so perfect, but they differ in something, from whence it may be concluded, that a Woman who is deceived by it, acts unwarily. But in this very thing she wants not an Excuse; for are there any Women that scruple to receive their Husbands after they have been absent for some Months, unless they prove first that they are their Husbands? When they see them come into their Chambers in the dark of the Evening, before the Candles are lighted, don't they go and meet 'em, and are they not ready to shew them all manner of Complaisance; without making any Enquiry? Does any Body blame them for it? If they are not blamed for it, why shou'd we blame an unfortunate Woman who has been deceived by an Impostor, who was in all Respects as like her Husband, as one may appear to be in a dusky Room? It is plain, that if she be blamed, all Women, who behave themselves in that Manner towards their Husbands, are also to blame; for according to right Reason, we ought not to judge of Things by the Event; and before God two Actions which proceed from the same Cause, change not their Species, though the one succeeds accidentally, and the other is attended by accident with unlucky Consequences. To resolve this Difficulty, we must say that any one that behaves himself with Precipitation, is to blame, whether any Evil results from it or not. Whoever will act reasonably, ought to examine whatever he does.

I shall observe by the bye, Seneca's Precaution. He affirms that a Man who knows his Wife, being perswaded that she is another Man's Wife, commits Adultery, and that his Wife is innocent. But he does not say, that a Man who should know another Man's Wife, thinking that she is his own Wife, would commit a Sin. See the Words of Seneca (c) in the Margin; they prove that Jacob did not commit Adultery the first time he knew Leah; but that Leah committed that Crime; for she knew very well that she was not Jacob's Wife.

I return to Penelope. They who remember a certain Place of the Hexameron Rustique, will perhaps believe that her Pre-caution ought not to be much admired, because Ulysses made himself suspicious, by expressing so much eagerness to know her. (d) What makes me believe that Homer designed to make use of that noble Artifice, is the impatience wherewith he represents Ulysses in the 23 Book, who was extreamly desirous to lie with his Wife. She had scarce had time enough to know him, and she had scarce spoken three Words to him, but he bluntly commanded his Nurse Euriclea to get a Bed ready for them. 'Tis what Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer says in his Hexameron Rustique. Whereby he gives us Occasion to believe that Penelope mistrusted his Impatience, and fansied that the Reason why he was so hasty, was because he was afraid that the Discovery of his Imposture, would frustrate him of his Desire. Without examining what may be said against that, I shall only make this Observation. La Mothe le Vayer deceives us; he doth not understand the Passage of Homer; if he had well examined it, he might have known that Ulysses did not ask a Bed to lie in it with Penelope. He only ask'd a Bed for himself, because his Wife vouchsafed not to come near him, and used him very cruelly. Here are his Words:

Δαιμονίη, (e) περὶ σοί γε γυναικῶν θηλυτεράων
Κῆρ ἀτέραμνον ἔθηκαν Ὀλύμπια δώματ᾽ ἔχοντες.
Οὐ μὲν κ᾽ ἄλλη ὧδε γυνὴ τετληότι θυμῷ
Ἀνδρὸς ἀφεσταίη, ὅς οἱ κακὰ πολλὰ μογήσας
Ἔλθοι εἰκοστῷ ἔτεϊ ἐς πατρίδα γαῖαν.
Ἀλλ᾽ ἄγε μοι μαῖα στόρεσον λέχος, ὄφρα καὶ αὐτὸς
Λέξομαι· ἦ γὰρ τῇ γε σιδήρεος ἐν φρεσὶ θυμός.

Infelix

(f) Ovid. in Epist. Penelop. ad Ulyssem.

(g) Meziriac pag. [illegible] shews that it ought to be read thus, Quid tibi Pisandrum, Polybumque, Amphimedontaque dirum.

(h) Meziriac ubi sup. p. 4[illegible].

(i) Ovid. in Epist. Penelop. ad Ulyssem.

(k) In the Article of Helena.

(l) Meziriac ubi supra. p. 483.

(m) Basnage, a Treatise of Conscience, Tom. 1. Book 5. p. 85. Amsterdam. 1696.

(a) New Letters of the Author of the Critical Answer to Maimbourg. p. 277, 278.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 285, 286.

(c) Si quis cum uxore sua tanquam cum aliena concumbit, adulter erit, quamvis illa Adultera non sit. Aliquis mihi venenum dedit, sed vim suam remixtum cibo perdidit: venenum illud dando scelere se obligavit, etiam si non nocuit. Non minus latro est cujus telum oppositâ veste elusum est. Omnia scelera etiam ante effectum operis, quantum culpæ satis est, perfecta sunt. Seneca de constantia Sapientis cap. 7. pag. m. 683.

(d) Hexameron Rustique pag. m. 104, 105.

(e) Hom. Odyss. l. 23. p. m. 704.

'twas becauſe they (E) had rather fare well at the Coſt of Ulyſſes, than lie with his Wife. Others ſay that they (F) lay with her, and that the God Pan was the Fruit

Infelix, tibi quidem ſupra fœminas mulierum,
Cor durum poſuerunt [dii] cæleſtes domos habitantes.
Non quidem alia ſic mulier tolerant animo
A viro procul ſtaret, [ac recederet] qui ei mala multa paſſus
Veniſſet vigeſimo anno in patriam terram,
Sed age, mihi nutrix ſterne lectum, ut et ipſe
Dormiam: certè enim huic [eſt] ferreus in pectoribus animus.

Telemachus was offended at Penelope's Indifferency; and cenſured his Mother as freely as if ſhe had been his Siſter: Unhappy Mother, ſaid he to her, (f) You are unmerciful, no Wife would behave her ſelf towards her Husband as you do. Your Heart is ſtill harder than a Stone. Homer cannot be accuſed of having committed a Fault againſt Probability; for ſuch Words are common enough in the Mouth of great Boys. But he ſhould not have copied Nature ſo faithfully; he ſhould have made Telemachus ſpeak according to the Notions of Reſpect.

[E] That they had rather fare well.] Horace ſuppoſes that Tireſias gave Ulyſſes no other Reaſon of Penelope's Chaſtity. If (g) your Patron "loves "Women, don't expect that he ſhould intreat you, "prevent him and offer him your Penelope with a "chearful Countenance. This is what Ulyſſes is adviſed to do: Here's his Anſwer, "What, do you "think that I could perſwade Penelope to it? Penelope, who has been ſo Chaſt and ſo Virtuous, that "the long Sollicitations of her Lovers could never "work upon her. Tireſias replies, "The Reaſon "of it is, that all thoſe young Men who frequented "her Houſe, were not very liberal, and minded eating and drinking more than Love, but if ſhe had "once taſted of a good old Man, and divided the "Profit with you, ſhe would no more leave him "than a hunting Dog leaves a bloody Skin. Mr. Dacier, who has tranſlated thus the Verſes of Horace, makes this Commentary upon them. "[h] Tireſias "gives Ulyſſes no other Reaſon of his Wife's Chaſtity, than the Avarice of her Lovers. And that "which makes this very pleaſant, is that it is "grounded upon a Complaint of Penelope, as we "find it in the 18. Book of the Odyſſes. She complains to them that they are very unjuſt; and that "when many Rivals court a Woman to marry her, they "make Sacrifices at their own Charges, and treat and "give Preſents to their Miſtreſs's Friends, inſtead of "eating what belongs to her. They were nettled at "that Reproach, one ſent her a Gown, another a "Neck-lace, another ſome Pendants, another a "Bracelet, &c. But hitherto [which was a long time "before the Converſation that Ulyſſes had with "Tireſias] they had not the leaſt thought of preſenting her with any thing. 'Tis therefore no wonder if they were diſappointed; and I deſire no "other Proof to ſhew the Falſity of what has been "ſaid by ſome Authors, that ſhe favoured them all. I have [i] alledged ſome Verſes of Ovid, whereby it appears that the Lovers of Penelope made a great waſte in her Houſe.

[F] That they lay with her, and that the God Pan.] Some Modern Authors took Delight in collecting ſeveral falſe Evidences about it. Lucius John Scoppa [k] cites in the firſt Place this Paſſage of the Priapeia:

Ad vetulam tamen [l] ille ſuam properabat: & omnis
Mens erat in cunno Penelopeia tuo.
Quæ ſic caſta manes, ut jam convivia viſas:
Utque fututorum ſit tua Plena domus.
E quibus ut ſcires quicunque valentior eſſet,
Hæc es ad arrectos verba locuta procos:
Nemo meo melius nervum tendebat Ulyſſe:
Sive illi laterum, ſeu fuit artis opus.
Qui quoniam periit, modo vos intendite: qualem
Eſſe virum ſciero, vir ſit ut ille meus.

and then he cites theſe words of Acron (m), Penelope meretrix fuit, quæ amatores ſuos ſua pulchritudine luxurioſos reddebat. Afterwards he adds that the Poet Lycophron (n) ſaid, Penelopen concubitum omnium procantium paſſam, ex eorum uno genuiſſe filium nomine Pana: quod cum reditu cognoviſſet Ulyſſes ſtatim abiit ad inſulam Cortinam, & ibidem obiit. He goes on and ſays, that Duris of Samos publiſhed, Penelopen proſtituto pudore conſuetudinem cum omnibus procis habuiſſe: unde natus Pan qui caprinis pedibus Tragoſceles vocabatur. Franciſcus Floridus Sabinus wrote a (e) Chapter about that Subject: he wonders that Petrarch (f) ſhould believe Homer in favour of Penelope, after he had been ſo equitable as to reject the Authority of Virgil in favour of Dido. He obſerves that thoſe two Poets have been equally ſucceſsful, the one in extolling Penelope as an honeſt Woman, tho' ſhe was a lewd Woman, and the other in making People believe that Dido was a lewd Woman, tho' ſhe lived very chaſtly. He obſerves that Penelope was call'd βασσάρα κασσωρεύουσα by Lycophron, and he does not approve that Tzetzes hath contradicted that Poet. (g) Duris Samius antiquus ſcriptor, cujus Plutarchus Pliniuſque aliique non pauci egregii ſcriptores mentionem faciunt, idem aſſeruit, ut Joannes Tzetzes Lycophronis interpres ait, quamvis eum communi Græciæ [illegible] mentiri dicat. Illam vocem κασσωρεύουσαν, πορνεύουσαν, hoc eſt ſcortantem exponens. Inquit autem: νῦν δὲ βασσάραν λέγει τὴν Πηνελόπην, κασσωρεύουσαν δὲ, ἤγουν πορνεύουσαν. Δοῦρις γὰρ ὁ Σάμιος ἐν τῷ περὶ Ἀγαθοκλέους, φησὶ αὐτὴν συγγενέσθαι πᾶσι τοῖς μνηστῆρσι, καὶ γεννῆσαι τὸν τραγοσκελῆ Πᾶνα. ὅπερ οὐκ ἀληθές ἐστι. ὁ γὰρ Ἑρμοῦ καὶ Πηνελόπης Πάν. ἕτερος δὲ Πὰν Διὸς καὶ Ὕβρεως. Id eſt, nunc Baſſaram dicit Penelopen, κασσωρεύουσαν autem, hoc eſt ſcortantem. Duris enim Samius in libro de Agathocle ipſam cum omnibus procis coiiſſe, ac Pana hircina crura habentem genuiſſe inquit. Quod verum non eſt. Hic enim Mercurii & alterius Penelopes filius fuit: alter autem Pan Jovis & Hybreos. He pretends that Homer, by the Exerciſe of the Bow, which Penelope propos'd to her Lovers, denoted the Amorous Myſtery, and the Tryal which ſhe had a mind to make of their Strength, (h) Quid verbis opus eſt? cum & ipſe Homerus cujus præconio Penelopes Laus conſtat, ex ſuis operibus id colligi poſſe voluerit? An forte ille propoſitus procis arcus aliud ſignificat quam eam, ut juvenum vires experiretur, id præcipue certamen quo ſe juvenes exercerent delegiſſe? At hoc quidem vel ex eo patet, quod his verbis νευρὴν ἐντανύσαι, id eſt nervum intendere, ad id quod volebat exprimendum, accommodatis admodum, frequenter utitur. He pretends that Ovid underſtood the true meaning of Homer, and that he tells us that Penelope put her Gallants to that Tryal: (i) Nam & Ovidius Homerum idem innuiſſe vult, cum ait libro primo amorum.

Penelope vires juvenum tentabat in arcu
Qui latus argueret, corneus arcus erat.

He has not forgot the Paſſage of Horace, nor that of the Priapeia; and he concludes with the Teſtimony of Herodotus (k).

Dempſterus quotes a great many Authors, but without any Exactneſs. Being to prove that (l) Pan was the Son of Mercury and Penelope, and that Mercury put on the Shape of a Goat when he lay with that Woman, which was the Reaſon why Pan's Feet were like thoſe of a Goat; he quotes (m) two Epigrams of the Anthologia, and a Paſſage of (n) Auſonius, which ſay only that Pan's Feet were ſo made, and not that it proceeded from the Figure which his Father put on, when he lay with Penelope. Is it not a ridiculous thing to alledge ſuch Authorities? He ſays that an ancient Hiſtorian named Lyſander gives the ſame Account of the lewd Life of Penelope, which Duris has given: and he adds that Tzetzes (o) ſays that Ulyſſes being not able to bear the Infamy of his Houſe, return'd to Circe, and was kill'd by his Son Telemachus; and that Pauſanias tells us that Ulyſſes divorced his VVife becauſe of her Adulteries, and retired to Sparta, and a little while after to Mantinea where he died. Dempſterus aſcribes to the Husband, what Pauſanias (p) ſays only of the VVife. Laſtly, He ſays that the lewdneſs of Penelope may be known by the Preſents ſhe accepted of, and by the Marriage which ſhe contracted with the Murtherer of her Husband: Beſides, to prevent her being miſtaken in her Choice, ſhe found out by a very good Tryal who was the ſtouteſt of all her Gallants, (q) Probaturque impudicitia ex eo, quod à procis munera acceperit, quod meretricii animi certiſſimum argumentum, Homer. lib. 18. Odyſs. & mariti

(f) Ibid. pag. 700.

(g) Sententia erit, cave te roget: ultro Penelopen facilis potiori trade: putaſne, Perduci poterit tam frugi, tamque pudica, Quam nequiere proci recto depellere curſu? Venit enim magnum donandi parca juventus, Nec tantum Veneris, quantum ſtudioſa culinæ. Sic tibi Penelope frugi eſt: quæ ſi ſemel uno De ſene guſtarit, tecum partita lucellum, Ut canis à corio nunquam abſterrebitur uncto. Horat. Sat. 5. l. 2. v. 75. Nos numerus ſumus & fruges conſumere nati Sponſi Penelopes. Id. epiſt. 2. l. 1.

(h) Dacier upon Horace, tom. 7. p. 421. of the Dutch Edit.

(i) In the Rem. B.

(k) Lucius Joan. Scoppa Parthenopæus Collectaneorum l. 1. c. 32. That Book was printed in 1507.

(l) That is to ſay, Ulyſſes.

(m) Acron in 2 Epiſt. Hor. lib. 1.

(n) Lycophron does not ſay ſo.

(e) In the 2*d of the* 3*d Book of the Lectionum ſubciſivarum of Franciſcus Floridus Sabinus.*

(f) In an Italian Poem intitled I Triumfi, which he borrowed, as Floridus ſays, of a Greek Poet, who as Lactantius has it, lib. 1. c. 11. Divinarum inſtitutionum had written a Book intitled Triumphus Cupidinis.

(g) Florid. Sabin. ib.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib. That Paſſage of Ovid is in the 8 Elegy of the firſt Book de Amoribus.

(k) Ἐκ ταύτης γάρ, inquit de Penelope loquens, καὶ Ἑρμέω λέγεται γενέσθαι ὑπὸ Ἑλλήνων ὁ Πάν, hoc eſt, ex hac enim & Mercurio Pan à Græcis genitus dicitur. The Paſſage of Herodotus is in the 145 Chapter of the 2*d Book.*

(l) Ex Adulterio eum ſuſceptum à Mercurio, matre Penelope. Dempſterus, in Paralipomen. ad antiquitat. Rom. Roſini lib. 3. c. 2. p. m. 432.

[m] The 84 and 85 of the 12. Chap of the 4*th Book.* [n] Auſon. Eidyl. 3. Moſella v. 174. In the Amſterdam Edition. 1671. 'tis Eidyl. 10. v. 172. [o] In Lycophron. [p] See the Remark H. [q] Dempſter ib. pag. 433.

fu

Fruit of their Love: But some Authors say, that she conceived Pan, when Mercury, having put on the Form of a Goat, took away (F a) her Virginity by force. It is a general Opinion, that her Lovers being disappointed in their Hopes of Lying with her, applied (G) themselves to her Maids, and debauched them. The Inhabitants of Mantinea used to say that she died (H) in their City. They who say that sui Ulysses interfectori nupsit, ex quo connubio natus Italus Jul. Hygin. fab. capit. 127. Et ob id, ipse Ulysses apud Sabinum poetam in responsoriis Epistolis:

Tot juvenes inter, tot vina liquentia semper,
Hei mihi! quid credam? pignore casta manes?

..... Et procorum habita delectu, ut fortiori, valentiorique posset concumbere, arcu tentabat singulos. Auctor incertus Priapeiorum carminum. You may rely better upon Meziriac's Quotations. There are some Authors, says he, (r) "who write that Penelope "dishonoured her self in the Absence of Ulysses, "and that she became the Mother of the God Pan: "But those Authors are divided into two Opinions. "Some say that Pan was the Son of Mercury and "Penelope. This is the Opinion of Herodotus l. 2. "of Plutarch in the Treatise of the Oracles that "ceased; of the Scholiast upon Pindar in the Argu"ment of the Pythicks; of Probus upon Virgil's "4th Eclogue; of Lucian in the Dialogue of Pan "and Mercury; and of the Scholiast upon the 7th "Idyl of Theocritus. But the two last add, that "Pan (s) lay with Penelope, having put on the "Form of a Goat, whence it is that Pan was born "with Horns, and Goat's Feet: .... Others say "that Penelope prostituted her self to all her Gal"lants, and that the God Pan was born out of "their mix'd Seed. Thus Lycophron calls Penelope, "βασσάραν σεμνῶς κασσωρεύουσαν, a Whore whoring "honourably. Tzetzes says thereupon, Δῦρις ὁ "Σάμιος (t) &c. ..... Some Scholiasts (v) "not yet printed, upon the Flute of Theocritus, "mention the two Opinions, saying that Pan, in "the Opinion of some, was Son of Mercury and Pe"nelope, and in the Opinion of others, of Penelope "and all her Suitors. Observe that Claudius du Verdier (w) is angry with Lycophron; he cannot forgive him what he says that Penelope prostituted her self; he refutes him by his very Scholiast, and by these Words of Ovid, Penelope mansit, quamvis custode careret, Inter tam multos intemerata procos.

(F a) When Mercury having put on the Form of a Goat, took away her Virginity by Force.] You'll find that Story in Lucian with this notable Circumstance, that Mercury had forgot he had plaid that trick to Penelope. Pan went to make himself known to him, and being received with a scornful Countenance, he produced his Proofs: Don't you remember, said he to him, that formerly you forced a Woman of Quality in Arcadia? Why do you bite your Fingers, and hesitate so long? She was Penelope, Icarius's Daughter. She told me that my Horns and Goat's Feet proceed from your putting on the Shape of that Beast to lye with her. (x) By Jupiter, answer'd Mercury, it comes into my Mind that I did a thing of that Nature. There's a very surprizing slip of Memory. The Examples of Divine Forgetfulness, which have been alledged by the Defender of Voiture, are not so strange as this is. Costar says that Jupiter's Memory failed him sometimes. "I don't "remember, says he (y), the Name of the God, "who had much ado to make him remember that "wonderful Expedient which he had formerly "found out, to reconcile two Decrees of Fate "which manifestly contradicted one another: and to "say so by the by, it was then that he took so much "Pains, that it made him sweat, and Cabbages "sprung out of his Sweat. I don't know whether any Authors say, that he forgot sometimes his Amorous Exploits. They were so numerous, that his Memory might have failed him; but I don't believe that there are any Examples of his forgetting Things of that Nature. Mercury might be alledged for it. Observe by the by, that Costar took that Story from Rabelais: his Adversary upbraids him with it: "I found that Sweat very cold, says "he to him (a), and Rabelais from whom you have "so ingenious a Thought, was perhaps formerly "look'd upon as an excellent Buffoon, but now the "reading of his Works will make very few People "laugh.

(G) They applyed themselves to her Maids.] 'Tis what we read in the Odyssey, where we find also that Ulysses having put to Death his Wife's Lovers, ordered that the Maids who had dishonour'd his Family, should be beaten to Death with Swords; but Telemachus being of Opinion that they deserved a more ignominious Death, caused 'em to be hanged.

Θεινέμεναι (b) ξίφεσιν τανυήκεσιν, εἰσόκε πασέων
Ψυχὰς ἐξαφέλησθε, καὶ ἐκλελάθωντ' Ἀφροδίτης
Τὴν ἄρ' ὑπὸ μνηστῆρσιν ἔχον, μίσγοντό τε λάθρῃ.
. . . .
Τοῖσι (c) δὲ Τηλέμαχος πεπνυμένος ἦρχ' ἀγορεύειν·
Μὴ μὲν δὴ καθαρῷ θανάτῳ ἀπὸ θυμὸν ἑλοίμην
Τάων, αἳ δὴ ἐμῇ κεφαλῇ κατ' ὀνείδεα χεῦαν,
Μητέρι θ' ἡμετέρῃ, παρά τε μνηστῆρσιν ἴαυον.
Ὣς ἄρ' ἔφη, καὶ πεῖσμα νεὸς κυανοπρῴροιο, &c.
Diverberate ensibus longe acutis, donec omnium
Animas auferatis, & obliviscantur Veneris,
Quam sub procis habebant, dum clam miscerentur.
. . . .
His vero Telemachus prudens incepit dicere,
Absit vero jam pura morte animam ut auferam
His, quæ jam capiti opprobria effuderunt,
Matrique meæ, apudque procos dormierunt.
Sic dixit: & funem navis nigram proram habentis, &c.

It is observable that of fifty Maids there were but (d) twelve who prostituted themselves to their Mistress's Lovers. I must not forget that in the Opinion of Aristotle, they who left off Philosophy to apply themselves to other Sciences, resembled Penelope's Lovers. That Thought does not appear natural to some Authors. (e) Cum Aristoteles NIMIO Philosophiam studio complectebatur, asserere non dubitabat eos qui reliquas artes consectarentur, hanc vero negligerent, esse Penelopes procis similes, qui ut Homerus, cum domina potiri nequivissent, ad ancillas divertebant. This is a lame Comparison; for those young Men preferred not the Maids to their Mistress, as they who neglect Philosophy to apply themselves to some other Studies; they courted the Maids only because they could not prevail upon the Mistress. Plutarch says, that Bion made use of that Comparison. (f) Ἀστείως δὴ καὶ Βίων ἔλεγεν ὁ φιλόσοφος, ὅτι ὥσπερ οἱ μνηστῆρες τῇ Πηνελόπῃ πλησιάζειν μὴ δυνάμενοι, ταῖς ταύτης ἐμίγνυντο θεραπαίναις· οὕτω καὶ οἱ φιλοσοφίας μὴ δυνάμενοι κατατυχεῖν, ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις παιδεύμασι τοῖς οὐδενὸς ἀξίοις ἑαυτοὺς κατασκελετεύουσι. Urbanum est etiam Bionis philosophi dictum, qui aiebat, sicut Penelopes proci quum non possent cum Penelopa concumbere, rem cum ejus ancillis habuissent: ita qui philosophiam nequeunt apprehendere, eos in aliis nullius pretii disciplinis sese conterere.

(H) That she died at Mantinea.] Pausanias (g) affords me the Proof which I want: I shall use the Words of Meziriac, they are a faithful Translation of those of Pausanias. "[h] Pausanias describing one "of the Ways that went from the City of Mantinea "to that of Orchomenum, speaks thus: On the right "hand of the Way there is to be seen a small rising "Ground, which the Arcadians will have to be the "Sepulchre of Penelope: but what they say, does "not agree with what is written in the Verses "call'd Thesprotides; for it is said there, that "after the return of Ulysses from Troy, Penelope "brought a Son to Ulysses, who was call'd Ptolyporthes; whereas the Mantenians affirm, that Ulysses "having convinced Penelope of having drawn her "Gallants into her House, turn'd her out, and that "she immediately retired to Sparta, and a little "while after she went to Mantinea, where she ended "the remaining part of her Life.

'Tis affirm'd in the first Tome of the Chevræana, that Pausanias "says that Ulysses being return'd "from Troy, Penelope who had been extreamly "complaisant to her Lovers, was brought to Bed of "a Son call'd [k] Polyporthes; that her Husband did "shamefully divorce that lewd Woman, &c. It is plain that Pausanias does not say so: of the two Traditions mention'd by him, one whereof was advantageous and the other disadvantageous to the Memory of that Lady; that which was advantageous, said that Ulysses had that Son by Penelope since his Return from Troy. But Mr. Chevreau pretends that (r) Meziriac upon Ovid's Epistles. pag. 117.

(s) It should be Mercury.

(t) See the remaining Part of this Passage above Letter g.

(v) Add to this the Words of Barthius in Statium tom. 1. p. 234, 235. Quam (Penelopen) cum omnibus procis rem habuisse scripserunt, & inde natum Panem, nomine à multis Patribus ducto. Scholiastes Theocriti in Idyllium A. Τὸν Πᾶνα οἱ μὲν λέγουσιν υἱὸν Πηνελόπης καὶ πάντων τῶν μνηστήρων, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο λέγεσθαι καὶ Πᾶνα.

(w) Claudius Verderius, Censura in auctores pag. 45.

(x) Νὴ Δία μέμνημαι ποιήσας τι τοιοῦτο. Per Jovem memini me tale quiddam facere. Lucian. in Deor. dialog. tom. 1. p. 176.

(y) Costar, Defence of Voiture. p. m. 115.

(a) Girac, Answer to the Defence of Voiture. pag. 92.

(b) Hom. Odyss. l. 22. p. m. 688.

(c) Id. ib. p. 690.

(d) Τάων δώδεκα πᾶσαι ἀναιδείης ἐπέβησαν, οὔτ' ἐμὲ τίουσαι οὔτ' αὐτὴν Πηνελόπειαν. Harum duodecim omnes impudentiæ se dediderunt, Neque me honorantes, neque ipsam Penelopen. Id. ibid. pag. 688.

(e) Lucius Joannes Scoppa collectaneorum lib. 1. c. 32.

(f) Plut. de liberis educandis. pag. 7. C.

(g) Lib. 8. pag. 247.

(h) Meziriac ubi sup. pag. 116, 117.

(i) Pag. 388. of the Dutch Edition.

(k) He should have said Polyporthes.

that the Reaſon why Homer praiſed her ſo much was (l) becauſe he deſcended from her, do not reaſon very well. You may ſee in one of the Remarks, that Penelope out-lived Ulyſſes, and married again. I ſhall ſay ſomething of the Praiſes which (K) Auſonius beſtowed upon her.

PERAXYLUS. This is the Name which Arnoldus Arlenius took, to expreſs his Native Country * in Greek. He was a very ſtudious Man, and a great Grecian, and he took a great deal of Pains to find out old Manuſcripts. Thuanus † ſpeaks of him under the Year 1561. and declares, that tho' he has not been able to diſcover the Place and the Day of his Death, he thinks it happen'd at that time. He obſerves that that Learned Man had conſecrated his Labours to the Publick Good, and that Poſterity would be always beholden to him for his Greek Edition of Joſephus, which he printed from the Excellent Manuſcript of Don Diego de Mendoza Ambaſſador of Charles the Vth at Venice. He adds that the Books againſt Appion were not to be ſeen any where elſe, and that Arlenius having left Don Diego, when that Lord ſet out from Venice, retired to Baſil, and exerciſed his Talents there for ſome Years, and made a good uſe of Henry Stephens's Labours. We ſhall ſee what Mr. Teiſſier (A) ſays of him. Thuanus's Tranſlator has tranſlated this Paſſage (B) careleſly.

that Pauſanias ſays that ſhe had him by her Lovers, and that ſhe was divorced by reaſon of that Infamy.

(l) The Reaſon why Homer praiſed her ſo much was becauſe.] Meziriac having ſet down what has been ſaid by ſome Authors concerning the Lewdneſs of that Lady, raiſes an Objection which he anſwers thus: " (l) It might be objected againſt thoſe Authors, " that it is not likely that Homer ſhould have propos'd " her to us as an eminent Example of Chaſtity, and " ſhould have beſtowed ſo many Praiſes upon a lewd " Woman, who of all Women in the World de- " ſerved to be blamed: but that Objection may be " very well anſwered two ways. Firſt, it may be " ſaid that Homer who, as many believe, lived in the " time of the Trojan War, grew very much in love " with Penelope, and lived a long while in Ithaca " upon her Account, as 'tis affirmed by Hermeſianax " in Athenæus l. 13. c. 8. and therefore 'tis no won- " der, if he appears ſo fond of ſinging the Praiſes of " Ulyſſes and Penelope. It may be anſwered in the " ſecond Place, That ſome are of Opinion that " Homer was deſcended from Ulyſſes, being the Son " of Telemachus and Polycaſte or Epicaſte, Neſtor's " Daughter. Thus we find in a little Greek Book, " intitled the Diſpute of Homer and Heſiod, that the " Emperor Adrian having ask'd the Propheteſs Pythia what Country Homer was of, and who were " his Parents, he was anſwered:

> Ἀγνωστόν μ' ἔρεαι γενεὴν καὶ πατρίδα γαῖαν
> Ἀμβροσίου σειρῆνος· ἔθος δ' Ἰθακήσιός ἐστιν.
> Τηλέμαχος δὲ πατὴρ, καὶ Νεστορέη Ἐπικάστη
> Μήτηρ, ἥ μιν ἔτικτε βροτῶν πολὺ πάνσοφον ἄνδρα.

" Thou deſireſt to know of me the unknown Extra- " ction, and Native Country of that Divine Singer: " Ithaca is his Country, Telemachus is his Fa- " ther; he had for his Mother, the beautiful " Epicaſte, Neſtor's Daughter. Thoſe two Anſwers are weak; for if Homer had been a long time in Ithaca to court Penelope, he muſt be reckoned among thoſe Lovers whom he ſpoke ſo ill of; for unleſs he had joyned with them, he muſt have made a very ſad Figure, and even expoſed himſelf to many dangerous Affronts. Thoſe young Men would not have permitted that a private Man ſhould have courted Penelope without concerting with them. I add, that they who are in love with a Woman, will very ſeldom make her Husband the Hero of their Poem. Beſides if Homer had known that Penelope proſtituted her ſelf to her many Lovers, his Love for her would have prompted him to defame her, far from being a Reaſon to move him to beſtow ſo many Praiſes upon her. Jealouſy, Spite, and the Shame of having loved a Woman who diſhonour'd her ſelf, and would not diſtinguiſh him from a Crowd of rude and uncivil Admirers, had violently incenſed him againſt her. Laſtly, I obſerve, That there is no need of having Recourſe to any other Reaſon but this. Ulyſſes was the Hero of the Poem; it was therefore neceſſary that his Wife ſhould appear in it as an Heroin, or at leaſt as an honeſt Woman. It would be a Fault againſt the moſt Eſſential Rules not to ſurpreſs all the ſhameful Actions of the Wife of one's Hero. Meziriac adds (m) that " Ulyſſes having been kill'd by Telegonus, Minerva " adviſed Telemachus, Penelope and Telegonus to " carry his dead Body to Circe, in the Iſle of Ææa, " and to bury it there, and that with the Advice of " the ſame Goddeſs, Telegonus married Penelope, " and Telemachus Circe: that of Telemachus and " Circe was born Latinus, from whom the Latines " were ſo called: but that Italus, who gave his " Name to Italy, was born of Telegonus and Penelope. Theſe are fine Advices indeed, and very worthy of Minerva: if Penelope had followed them, I ſhould be more inclin'd to believe thoſe who ſay, that ſhe was extremely kind to her Lovers, than thoſe who repreſent her ſo faithful to her Husband. It had been a Fault to marry the unvoluntary Murderer of her Husband; but it had been worſe ſtill, if we believe Hyginus, for ſhe muſt have married the Son of Ulyſſes.

(K) Of the Praiſes which Auſonius (n) beſtowed upon her.] Here's a Piece of Balzac's Converſations. " (o) The Kiſſes of Penelope were ſcarce known to " her Son Telemachus, becauſe her Son was not her " Husband, for whom ſhe reſerved all her Kiſſes. " The Marquis of Montauzier has been pleaſed " with thoſe Words: I thought ſo. But you tell " me, that you would know from whom I have " em, and that he is reſolved to know it from me, " without your medling with it. . . . . Thoſe " Words which pleaſe a Man, whoſe Pleaſures are " all honeſt, are the Tranſlation or rather the Pa- " raphraſe of this Verſe, which a Latin Poet (p) imi- " tated from a Greek Poet:

> " Oſcula vix ipſi cognita Telemacho.

" I might add to the ſhort Paraphraſe I made upon " it, a ſhort Commentary, and I have a mind to do ſo " ſince you invite me to ſpeak. That Commentary contains theſe Words, " Mary de Medicis [a] whom " we know to have been as chaſt, as the Poets make " Penelope to be, was alſo like Penelope in this. Could " you believe that during the four Years of her " Regency, ſhe never kiſs'd not ſo much as once the " King her Son? I was told ſo by an old Courtier " of that time, who took the Liberty to tell her, " that thoſe outward Marks of Affection were ne- " ceſſary to get the Love of others, eſpecially of " Children, becauſe they are commonly leſs moved " with Effects than with Appearances.

[A] What Mr. Teiſſier ſays of him.] He obſerves quoting Gyraldus [c] that Arlenius compoſed very fine Greek and Latin Epigrams, and that he would have excelled in Poetry, had he not applied himſelf to more ſerious Studies. He adds, without quoting any Body for it, that the printed Works of Arlenius are the following Tranſlations: Dionis Coccæi Romanæ Hiſtoriæ libri duodecim. Olympiodori Philoſophi Platonici & Peripatetici, Commentarii ad Ariſtotelis Commentaria: Sermones quidam ex Plutarcho de moribus à nemine antehac verſi. Plurimæ Orationes Chryſoſtomi, Theodoreti, & aliorum S. S. Patrum antea non viſæ. Lycophronis Alexandram ſive Caſſandram, & Iſaaci Tzetzis in eam Commentaria edidit & recognovit.

[B] Has tranſlated this Paſſage careleſly.] He has rendred Arnoldus Arlenius [d] by Arnaud de Lens. He ſays, that Arnaud was call'd Praxylus, which was a Name he gave himſelf, and that the Manuſcript he made uſe of for the Edition of Joſephus, did belong to Diego Auſtado Mendoſſe. I. Why does he pretend that Arlenius and de Lens are the ſame Name? II. Why does he ſuppreſs the Cauſe of the Name Peraxylus, which Thuanus alledges? Trans Dieſam amnem qui Silvam ſeu Boſcum-Ducis alluit vico ignobili natus, indeque nomine ingenioſe ab ipſo effecto Peraxylus nuncupatus. III. Why does he change Peraxylus into feſſy. I have at laſt found out that the Hopes which Geſnerus gave of this Author have been taken for printed (C) Books. I wonder that Swertius and Valerius Andreas knew nothing of Peraxylus. He was better known in Italy than in the Low Countries. See how Corradus (D) praiſes him.

---

* A Village of the Campine, ſituated beyond a little River which runs by Boſleduc, and is call'd the Deeſe.

† Sub fin. l. 28.

(l) Meziriac ubi ſup. p. 118.

(m) Ib. p. 119. He quotes Hyginus c. 27. and he had ſaid that as Euſtathius relates it on the 16th Book of the Odyſſey, the Colophonian who wrote the Returns, ſays that Telemachus married at laſt Circe, and that Telegonus married Penelope.

(n) Intemerata procis, & tot ſervata per annos, Oſcula vix ipſi cognita Telemacho. Auſonius epigr. 135. p. m. 83.

(o) Balzac entretien 39. pag. m. 372

(p) I obſerve here the ſame Spirit of Balzac, which I have ſpoke of in another place. He will not name Auſonius, that one may have a greater Idea of his Learning.

(a) Balzac. ubi ſup. p. 374.

(b) Teiſſier, Additions to the Elogies taken from Thuanus tom. 1. p. 414.

(c) De Poet. ſui temporis. l. 2.

(d) The Francfort Edition 1625. ſays Artenius.

PEREIRA (Gomeſius) a Spaniſh Phyſician who lived in the XVI. Century. He ſet up for a Spirit of Contradiction; for he affected to oppoſe the Doctrines that were beſt eſtabliſhed, and to maintain Paradoxes. The Liberty of Philoſophizing was a great Charm to him; he made uſe of it, even to exceſs. The Materia prima (A) which was ſo much talk'd of by the Sectators of Ariſtotle, was one of the Monſters he undertook to deſtroy. What he ſubſtituted in the room of that Matter was not * better than what he rejected. He uſed Galen very ill becauſe of his Opinion about Agues. But his moſt ſurprizing Paradox was, that Beaſts are meer Machines, and have no Feeling. All thoſe Things may be ſeen in his Book intitled (B) Antoniana Margarita. 'Tis pretended by ſome, that Carteſius took from him into Praxylus? IV. What does he mean with his Diego Auſtado? Why did he not ſay Hurtado? I declare that I have nothing to ſay to him as to ſuch things as may depend upon the Careleſneſs of the Correctors of the Preſs, and that I have not ſeen his Verſion any where elſe but in Mr. Teiſſier's Book.

(C) The Hopes .... have been taken from printed Books.] I have conſulted Father Labbe, Dr. Cave, and Mr. Du Pin in ſuch Places where they give us a Liſt of the Works of St. Chryſoſtom; they mention many Tranſlators, but never Arnoldus Arlenius. I have not found him neither in the Authors, who treat of ſeveral Editions and Tranſlations of Dion. Whereby I was almoſt convinced that Arlenius had never printed the Tranſlations mention'd by Mr. Teiſſier. I enquired into the Cauſe of that Miſtake, and found that it ought to be imputed altogether to the Abbreviators of Geſnerus. They ſay poſitively that Arlenius tranſlated ſome Moral Treatiſes from Plutarch's Greek, which had never been rendred into Latin; that he tranſlated alſo 22 Books of the Roman Hiſtory of Dion Cocceius, the Commentaries of Olympiodorus (e) upon Ariſtotle's Meteors, and ſome Sermons and Treatiſes of Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, &c. When I go as far as Geſnerus, I find that thoſe Tranſlations were only hoped for: Expectamus, ſays he, (f) ab Arlenio noſtro, ſi Deus vitam extenderit, quoſdam ex Plutarcho, &c. They who abridged Geſnerus, ſay that Arlenius tranſlated thoſe Books; but they do not ſay that they were publiſhed. They only ſay that he cauſed Lycophron with the Commentaries of Tzetzes to be printed at Baſil in the Year 1545. and (g) then Joſephus in the ſame City, with a Preface, but without a Tranſlation.

(D) See how Cortadus praiſes him.] He ſpeaks of him thus: (h) Ita quidem (poſtulabantur interpretationes Epiſtolarum Ciceronis) ut Arnoldus Arlenius homo eruditiſſimus ex Germania ad me Regium uſque venerit, & me ſuo, Joannis Opporini, Joannis Strathii, Magni Gruberi, aliorumque doctiſſimorum hominum nomine ſit hortatus, eas ut primo quoque tempore foras darem.

(A) The Materia prima ... was one of the Monſters.] Arriaga, one of the moſt ſubtil School-men of the XVII. Century, acquaints us with what was objected to our Pereira about that Subject, and ſhews the Weakneſs of ſome of thoſe Objections. (i) Recentiores nonnulli referunt quendam Gomeſium Pereiram in ſua Antoniana Margarita, negantem omnino materiam primam: contra quem plura congerunt argumenta, quæ oportet examinare, ne rem certam incertis ſuadeamus rationibus. ... (k) Hæc Argumenta non urgent Gomeſium. They objected to him amongſt other Things, That if his Doctrine was true, it would not be lawful to venerate the Bones or Relicks of Saints; for after their Death, there would remain no Matter that did belong to them. This is one of the five Objections which he might eaſily reſolve, if we believe Arriaga, who obſerves (l) that the Opinion of that Philoſopher was not well underſtood. He thinks therefore himſelf obliged to ſet it down faithfully, and then he oppoſes it with ſome other Reaſons. Pereira, ſays he, was not ſuch a Madman, as to aſſert that Forms are not received in a Subject, and that Man is only made up of a Soul. He only ſaid, that the Subject to which Souls and other ſubſtantial Forms are united, is a Compound of the four Elements, and not a firſt Matter, and he aſcribed the ſame Simplicity to the Elements, which is aſcribed to the firſt Matter in the Schools of Ariſtotle. (m) Fatetur hic Author libentiſſimè, in homine (& idem eſt de aliis mixtis) ultra formam ſubſtantialem dari aliquod ſubjectum recipiens illam formam: neque enim tam amens erat hic Author, ut in homine & animantibus nihil aliud præter animam agnoſceret, & poſt mortem illius nihil remanere diceret quod eſſet veneratione dignum in Sanctis, & in quo manerent plura accidentia, quæ prius fuerant in homine vivo, putaretque cadavera nihil eſſe reale ſed apparens & deludens ſenſus noſtros, vel ſaltem nihil illorum antea fuiſſe, quo ſatisfacit ferè omnibus in oppoſitum. Verum in hoc recedit hic Author à vera & recepta ſententia, quod illud commune ſubjectum non dicit eſſe materiam primam ſed ex quatuor elementis unitis, & inter ſe per mixtis putat coaleſcere. Elementa autem ipſa omnino aſſtruit ſimplicia, ſicut nos materiam primam vel formam ſubſtantialem dicimus eſſentialiter ſimplicem. Arriaga was of Opinion that the third Objection againſt Pereira was ſomewhat ſtrong, for it proved that one of the Elements produced from another, was a thing naturally made out of nothing. Pereira did not much trouble himſelf about it: He (a) maintain'd that ſome Creatures have a Power to create, and Arriaga approves his Opinion.

(B) His Book intitled Antoniana Margarita.] That Title alludes to his Father's and Mother's Name. Don Nicolas Antonio ſpeaks of that Book thus. (b) Antoniana Margarita, opus Phyſicis, Medicis ac Theologis utile & neceſſarium, Medinæ Campi 1554. fol. Francofurti deinde 1610. ... Item nova veteriſque Medicinæ experimentis & evidentibus rationibus comprobata primam partem, ſive Antoniana Margarita ſecundam, quæ quidem Medica eſt poſt priorem illam Philoſophicam. Hæc ſcilicit pars de Febribus tractat, cujus febris eſſentiam, cauſas & ſpecies eſſe uſque in hæc tempora ignota dilucide (uti Author ipſe ait) demonſtrat, Galenumque non dolo ſed ignorantia excæcatum potiſſimum ſuis de hac re ſcriptis medicis poſteris impoſuiſſe evidenter docet. An Anonymous Author (c) wrote a Spaniſh Book againſt him in the Year 1556. Antoniana Margarita is grown very ſcarce. It was in Mr. Briot's Library, which was ſold at Paris in the Year 1679. Mr. Faure bought it, he had it for two Louis d'or, he ſhewed it me, and told me, that he did not think he ſhould have had it ſo cheap. I think that Book and the whole Library of Mr. Faure is now in the Library of the Archbiſhop of Rheims.

I find in the Bibliotheque (d) of the Writers that have been Phyſicians, that Pereira's Name was Georgius Gomez, and that his Antoniana Margarita, in qua omnium pene morborum diſcurſus proponuntur, was printed at (e) Medina by Antony Graſbeet in the Year 1554. and 1587. and that he publiſhed in the ſame City in 1558. another Book in fol. intitled Nova veraque Medicina Chriſtiana ratione comprobata. Konig has committed ſeveral groſs Miſtakes ſpeaking of that Author. Bruta, ſays he [f], ſenſu prædita eſſe opere operoſo & 30. annis elaborato, cui titulus Antoniana Margarita, oſtendere conatus eſt. Every Body will not perceive that the Particle non was omitted after the word prædita; and they, who do not perceive it, will think it is a Riddle, or laugh at it. They'll look upon Pereira as the greateſt Fool that ever was, for having ſpent 30 Years to prove that Beaſts have a ſenſitive Soul. On the other Side, they who are ſenſible of that Omiſſion, will be apt to believe, that this Spaniſh Phyſician had no other Deſign than to prove that Beaſts have no Feeling; whereas it is but a very ſmall part of his Book. Konig goes on, and ſays, Ex eo omnia Carteſium hauſiſſe quæ de brutorum anima commentatus eſt, Olaus Borrichius in Epiſtola quadam aff. This is falſe again. We ſhall ſee by and by that Carteſius was of that Opinion, before he heard of Pereira. It is certain at leaſt that the Book of that Spaniard could but make him believe

in

---

* See the Rem. A.

(e) Read ad Ariſtotelis Meteora, and not ad Ariſtotelis Commentaria.

(f) Biblioth. fol. 92. Verſo.

(g) Geſnerus ſays that Joſephus was printed in 1544.

(h) In quæſtura p. 100. Lugd. Bat. 1667.

(i) Rod. de Arriaga Diſput. 2. Phyſica, Sect. 1. p. m. 217.

(k) Ibid. pag. 218.

(l) Hæc argumenta non urgent Gomeſium, multo aliter opinantem de entibus naturalibus quam iſti Authores cenſeant. Ib.

(m) Id. ib.

(a) Reſpondet Gomeſius falſum eſſe nullam creaturam poſſe creare, nec facile hanc ſolutionem redargues ut intra patebit. Id. ibid.

[b] Nicol. Antonius, Biblioth. Scriptor. Hiſpaniæ tom. 1. pag. 414.

[c] Adverſus hanc ſcripſit Anonymus Hiſpanum opuſculum ita nuncupatum, Endecalogo contra Antonianæ Margarita, Medinæ Campi 1556. 8. Id. ibid.

[d] Lindenius renovatus pag. 328.

[e] Methymnæ Duelli. Ib.

[f] Konig. Biblioth. vetus & nova pag. 619.

him his Paradox concerning the Souls of Beaſts, and that Pereira was not the Inventer of it. We ſhall ſee what is to be found (L) about it in the News from the Republick in general that Beaſts have no Feeling. Every thing beſides is particular to the French Philoſopher, and neither ariſes from the Hypotheſis, nor from the Explications of Pereira. Nicolas Antonio ſays nothing of the Anſwer to the Objections of Palacios publiſhed by Pereira in the Year 1555.

(L) What is to be found about it in the News from the Republick of Learning.] (g) "Any Body would "have ſay'd that no Man would ever be ſo mad as "to maintain the Contrary (h). Yet there "was one in the laſt Century, who ventured that "Paradox in a Country where no Body would have "ſuſpected that ſuch a new Doctrine ſhould take "its Birth. The Reader will know what I mean, "if I add, that a Spaniſh Phyſician publiſhed that "Doctrine at Medina del Campo in the Year 1554. "in a Book about which he had been thirty Years, "and which he intitled Antoniana Margarita, out of "reſpect to his Father's and Mother's Name. Who "would have thought that Spain, where the Freedom "of the Mind is leſs tolerated than that of the Body "in Turkey, would produce ſo raſh a Philoſopher, "as to maintain that Beaſts have no Feeling? It is "ſo extraordinary a thing that it does very well "deſerve to be mention'd in this Place; and we "ought not to ſuppreſs the Name of ſo fine a Gentleman, "who is the firſt Author, that we know of, "of that unheard of Paradox. His Name was Gomeſius Pereira, "he lived in the XVI. Century, "and not in the XII. as the Abbot de Gerard, Doctor "of Divinity, ſays in his Conferences about "the Philoſophy of Noble Men. Gomeſius Pereira was "vigorouſly aſſaulted by a Divine of Salamanca, "whoſe Name was Michael de Palacios, and anſwered "him as vigorouſly, ſticking to his Opinion, "(h) That Beaſts are meer Machines. But he had "no Sectators, his Doctrine died with him. No "Body did him the honour to dread him, ſo that "he was not better known in our Age than if he "had never lived; and it is very likely that Carteſius, "who read not much, had never heard of "him. Yet ſome pretend that he took from that "Spaniſh Philoſopher his Opinion concerning "Beaſts; for by ſaying ſo, they think to deprive "him of the Glory of Invention. Some time after the Author of thoſe News publiſh'd an Abſtract of a Letter which he had received from Paris; it contain'd amongſt other Things, the following words, "(i) What you ſay, pag. 23. is not true, that Mr. "Deſcartes's Opinion about the Souls of Beaſts is "a new one; for there has been formerly ſome "Diſputes about it, as it appears from this Paſſage "of St. Auguſtin, de quantitate animæ chap. 30. Quod autem tibi viſum eſt non eſſe animam in corpore viventis animantis, quamquam videatur abſurdum, non tamen doctiſſimi homines quibus id placuit DEFUERUNT, neque nunc arbitror DEESSE. The Author received another Letter, wherein he was told that Carteſius's Opinion was much older than St. Auguſtin. Mr. du Rondel wrote that Letter. An Abſtract of it was inſerted in the News of October 1684. I am going to tranſcribe it, and ſhall ſet down the Quotations in the Margin, for the Satiſfaction of the Readers. (k) "There has been ſome "Doubts about the Souls of Beaſts, not only in "St. Auguſtin's time, but alſo in the time of the "Cæſars, that is to ſay above three hundred Years "before that Father of the Church. The Stoicks "ſpoke of nothing elſe, and went ſo far as to maintain "in their Schools, that there is but a meer Reſemblance "between our Actions and thoſe of "Beaſts, and that there is a Nature altogether different "in Men and Beaſts. I would not have you "think that they ſaid ſo only of certain Actions of "which we have little or no Perception, ſuch as "Digeſtion, Sanguification, Conception, &c. They "underſtooood it alſo of the moſt lively, violent, "and ſenſible Paſſions. They believed that a Lyon "was not angry, though he tore in Pieces every "Body he met in the Amphitheater. They ſaid "that his Blood boiled within him, being put into "a Heat by ſome Objects diſagreeable to the Nature "of that Animal. (l) Impetus habent feræ, rabiem, "feritatem, incurſum; iram quidem non magis quàm "luxuriam. Why ſo? Becauſe, Sir, it happen'd "in Seneca's time that a Lyon ſaved the Life of an "unfortunate Man, without pretending that he "ſhould be obliged to him for it, and without deſigning "to do a good thing, (a) Qui nec voluit "facere, nec bene faciendi animo facit. Beſides, if "Beaſts were capable of Anger, they would be alſo "capable of Forgiving. But becauſe Clemency "is an effect of Reaſon, and Beaſts are deprived "of it, thoſe Stoicks concluded that Beaſts are "not ſuſceptible of Anger nor of any other Paſſion. "(b) Iraſci non magis ſciunt quàm ignoſcere, & quamvis "rationi inimica ſit ira, nuſquam tamen naſcitur, "niſi ubi rationi locus eſt. Iſta ferarum ut extra, "ita intra, forma humanæ diſſimilis eſt. But, Sir, "a Cynick ſaid all thoſe Things above three hundred "Years before the Stoicks of Rome. He believ'd "and taught in expreſs Words, that Beaſts "had neither Feeling nor Knowledge. 'Tis pity "that Pereira knew nothing of all this; he would "not have failed to make uſe of it againſt thoſe "who accuſed him of publiſhing a ſtrange Novelty, "and would have laught at the great Learning of "his Adverſaries. Here are the Words of that Cynick. "(c) διὰ δὲ τὸ, he ſpeaks of Beaſts, τὰ μὲν "πυκνότητι, τὰ δὲ πλεονασμῷ τῆς ὑγρασίας μήτε "διανοεῖσθαι, μήτε αἰσθάνεσθαι, that they can have "neither Knowledge nor Feeling becauſe of the "Thickneſs of their Conſtitution, and of their "great Moiſtneſs. I do not ſay that I approve that "Reaſoning of Diogenes. The Retractation of the firſt Abſtract is to be found in the News of April, 1685. Read what follows (d) "He who informed us that "St. Auguſtin ſays, that ſome maintain'd in his time "that Beaſts have no Souls, has lately acquainted "us that having conſulted the 30th Chapter of "the Book de Quantitate Animæ, where he had "been told that it was contained, he found nothing "in it that has any relation with the Opinion "of Gomeſius Pereira. So that my Remark is true "ſtill in that Reſpect, viz. That no Body before "Gomeſius Pereira taught that Beaſts are meer Machines. "It remains only to enquire, whether the "Paſſages quoted by Mr. du Rondel in the News of "October prove what he ſays. Theſe laſt Words put Mr. du Rondel upon collecting ſeveral Proofs. He deſign'd to impart 'em to me, but he loſt 'em, except what follows.

"(e) It is certain that Diogenes could not believe "that Beaſts have Souls, by reaſon of his Phyſical "Principles, and the End of his Morals. He "taught that there are ſome Beings and ſome Half-Beings. "The Firſt are what they are by their "own Eſſence, and the Second Exiſt with the Firſt "only by Participation or Imitation, as the Cynicks "ſpeak. The Second are of two Sorts. Some imitate "the Spirit and affect a circular Motion, and "ſome imitate the Soul, and move in a ſtraight Line: "τὰ μὲν Νοῦν μιμεῖται, καὶ κύκλῳ κινεῖται, τὰ δὲ "ψυχὴν ἐπ' εὐθείας. You may eaſily gueſs by that "Circular Motion, that he underſtood the heavenly "Orbs. But he meant eſpecially the Lactean Circle, "to which the Cynicks, as well as ſome other Philoſophers, "aſſign'd the Origin of Paſſions, ἀφ' οὗ "τὸ παθητὸν ἄρχεσθαι σῶμα. But if we conſider "how the Ancients deſcribed the Deſcent of Souls "through thoſe Circles, it is impoſſible that Beaſts "ſhould have any true Paſſions. For a Soul puts on "Ambition in the Sphere of Jupiter, Careleſsneſs "in that of Saturn, Pride in that of Mars, Covetouſneſs "in that of Mercury, &c. (f). So that ſeeing "the like Paſſions are not obſerved in Beaſts, at "leaſt in the ſame Manner as they are obſerved in "Man, it follows that they have not Souls, which "are the common Seat of Paſſions, or that "their Paſſions are only counterfeit, or ſomething "like thoſe of Men, by a fortuitous Imitation. And "therefore the Cynicks placed Beaſts amongſt the "Bodies which move in a ſtraight Line, that is to "ſay, amongſt heavy Bodies which have a tendency "towards the Earth. Indeed the Nature of Beaſts "is always the ſame, and keeps always its ordinary "Determination. There is no Difference nor Variety "in their Occupations. They are all condemn'd "to the ſame Rule, and their Capacity does not "reach much farther than to look for Shelter and "Food; and therefore it has been ſaid of 'em that "they have no Inclinations but what are mean, "dull and baſe, and that Nature had made 'em on "purpoſe to ſtoop towards the Earth. Prona ſunt,

" &

[g] News from the Republick of Learning, March 1684. Art. 2. p. [illegible] & Seq. It is very likely that Furetiere took from hence what we read pag. [illegible] of the Furetieriana printed at Bruſſels. Read there Antoniana inſtead of Antomima.

[h] That is to ſay, that Beaſts have no Feeling.

[i] News from the Republick August, 1684. Art. 1. p. 555, 556.

[k] Ibid. October 1684. Art. 11. pag. 838. & Seq.

[l] Seneca l. 1. de ira c. 3.

(a) Id. de Benef. l. [illegible]

(b) Id. de Ira. l. 1. c. 3.

(c) Plut. de Placit. Philoſ. l. 5. c. 20. p. m. 909.

[d] News from the Republick of Learning. April, 1685. p. 435.

[e] Mr. du Rondel in a Memorial which he did me the favour to ſend me in March 1696. I have added the Citations in the Margin.

[f] See Macrobius in ſomnium Scipion. l. 1. c. 12.

Republick of Learning. I shall observe, that the (D) Epoch of that Opinion of Cartesius is falsly stated in that Book. If it be a strange Doctrine we ought not to wonder at it; for of all physical Objects, none is more abstruse and perplexing than the Souls of Beasts. The Extream Opinions about that Subject are absurd or very dangerous

"& ex ipsa quoque suspiciendi difficultate à superis recesserunt, nec ullam divinorum corporum similitudinem aliqua sui parte meruerunt, nihil ex mente sortita sunt, & ideo ratione caruerunt, duo quoque tantum adepta sunt, sentire vel crescere, says Macrobius (g) with this Restriction of Virgil, Quantum non noxia corpora tardant Terrenique hebetant artus, because, as he goes on, in animalibus hebescit usus animæ DENSITATE corporis; which seems to be translated from Diogenes, who says, that Beasts can have no Feeling nor Knowledge, by reason of the THICKNESS and great quantity of their Moistness. See Plutarch Lib. 5. cap. 20. It seems, I say, that Macrobius translated it from Diogenes, and it is likely enough since he made use of the same Word; but I don't know very well whether Virgil, with his (h) noxia corpora, had in view what follows in Diogenes, That Beasts are like Mad-men depriv'd of Reason, διακεῖσθαι τοῖς μεμηνόσι, [illegible] τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ. For tho' the Word noxia implies Damage and Loss, yet μεμηνέναι seems to signify something more: and therefore a Cynick Commentator, to make us apprehend it, explains it, by the Image of Men possess'd with Devils. He says, That when Humane Souls go out of their Bodies, and look for another Habitation, if they meet with no other Subjects but such wherein Reason never dwelt, they follow and harass them, and never inform them as they do Organized Bodies design'd for them, [illegible] Δαίμονες. But you will tell me, that these are Platonick Thoughts, which do not very well agree with the common Notions we have of Cynism. I cannot help it. Sallust the Cynick says so: Besides Diogenes was not so far from Platonism as 'tis commonly thought. A certain Tiberianus tells us in his Socrates, that Diogenes possessed himself of the whole Philosophical Patrimony of Plato: Memores Platonis sententiæ, cujus hæreditatem Diogenes Cynicus invadens, nihil ibi plus (1) aureâ linguâ invenit.

"But what I say of Diogenes will better appear from the End of his Morals. His Opinion was, that if a Man will live as he ought to do, he must be insensible; and tho' this seems a strange and almost impossible thing, yet that Philosopher must needs have attained to that Philosophical State of Life, for the Ancients are too positive about it to be deceived in it. I don't know whether, in order to it, he made use of Chiron's Precepts mention'd by Maximus Tyrius. I don't know neither, whether he followed the Rules of Antisthenes, who is the Author of the Apathia: but as he was an Angel of Jupiter, sent to Men, to teach 'em what is Good and what is Evil, as Epictetus says, I am apt to believe that he was directed by his own Thoughts. As he used to say, that Reason must be opposed to Passion, Courage to Fortune, and Nature to Custom, he resolved at last to follow the Design of Nature, and fansied that whoever will be a true Son of that good Mother, ought to be like Beasts, who are a genuine and true Image thereof. Diogenes imbraced therefore that Opinion, and put it in practice by Poverty, Fasting, and Asceticks, which he had the Honour to invent. 'Tis said that Alexander the Great, being ready to undertake the Conquest of India, and being sure of his Destiny, had so much Courage as to wish to be Diogenes. He envied the Security of that Philosopher, and a Cynical Life seem'd to him to exceed Nature. (i) Disputare cum Socrate licet, dubitare cum Carneade, cum Epicuro quiescere, hominis Naturam cum Stoicis vincere, cum CYNICIS EXCEDERE. Such an Insensibility is a very strange State, and whoever attained to it, paid always very dear for it: istuc nihil dolere, non sine magnâ mercede contigit, immanitatis in animo, stuporis in corpore: But it is a very convenient State for the Miseries of this Life. Every Heathen had been glad if what has been said of [k] certain Nations not unknown to you, should have been said of them. Victui herba, vestitui pelles, cubile humus. Id beatius arbitrantur, quam ingemere agris, illaborare domibus, suas alienasque fortunas spe metuque versare. Securi adversus homines, securi adversus Deos, rem difficillimam assecuti sunt, ut illis ne voto quidem opus sit.

If I could often present my Readers with a borrowed Erudition as exquisite and profound as this is, how great an Ornament would it be to this Dictionary? I shall quote (l) some Passages of Aristotle, which seem to prove that he took Beasts for Machines.

(D) The Epoch of that Opinion of Cartesius is falsly stated.] (a) "Gomesius Pereira inferred not his Paradox from its true Principles, and did not foresee the Consequences of it, and therefore Descartes may be look'd upon as the first who found it out by a philosophical Method. Yet I think it is very probable that he found it, without looking for it: it is likely that he begun and ended his Meditations, without thinking of the Souls of Beasts, and without forsaking the Opinion he had of them from his tender Years: but when he came to consider the Consequences of his Principle concerning the Distinction between Thinking and extended Substances, he perceived that the Knowledge of Beasts destroyed the whole Oeconomy of his System. Nay it may be that this Difficulty did not come into his Mind, before it was objected to him. He was therefore necessitated to assert that Beasts have no Feeling. Had he been able to defend his Principles without it, he had never opposed an Opinion which has not only appear'd undeniable to every Body, but is also attended with an Evidence almost invincible. That we may know whether that Author was mistaken, let us see how he explain'd himself. His Explication is to be found at the End of his Preface, for it was published in the same Book as well as the Passage which wanted to be cleared. (b) I have said in the second Article of these News, that it is likely that Mr. Descartes begun and ended his Meditations, without thinking of the Souls of Beasts, and without forsaking the Opinion he had of them from his tender Years. "It would be a mistake if I meant his six famous Meditations, which were dedicated to the Sorbon, and against which they raised so many Objections; for it does plainly appear from his Method printed in the Year 1637. before those six Meditations, that Mr. Descartes believed already that Beasts have no Souls. I declare therefore that by Mr. Descartes's Meditations I did not mean those which he dedicated to the Sorbon. My meaning is that 'tis likely he built a new System in his Mind, without thinking of the sensitive Souls of Beasts. I don't doubt but he finish'd the Construction of his Work in his Mind, before he published his Method. It is certain notwithstanding this Explication, that that Author was mistaken; for the Hypothesis about Automata is one of the most Ancient Speculations of Descartes, as Mr. Baillet has made it out. Here are his Words. [c] "Those who suppose that those Works of Mr. Descartes were composed in the Year 1619. make his Opinion about the Souls of Beasts twenty Years older than his Adversaries, and some learned Men besides, did. That Opinion was found in the Works which he writ in his Youth, and therefore it cannot be said, that he begun and ended his Meditations without thinking of the Souls of Beasts, and without forsaking the Opinion he had of them from his tender Years. It cannot be said that when he came to consider the Consequences of his Principle, concerning the Distinction between Thinking and Extended Substances, he perceived that the Knowledge of Beasts destroyed the whole Oeconomy of his System. "It cannot be said that the Answers which he was obliged to make to some Objections proposed against him, gave him Occasion to think of a thing for, which he was only beholden to the Freedom of his Thoughts. He was not yet necessitated to assert that Beasts have no Feeling, since he could not foresee what might happen to him twenty Years after. He had then no Principles to defend, for he had laid down none yet for the New Philosophy: at least he had not yet read at that Age, St. Augustin, nor Pereira, nor any Author from whom he might have had that Opinion concerning the Souls of Beasts. Mr. Descartes being returned from his

(g) [illegible] c. 14. p. m. [illegible]

(h) Virgil. Æn. l. 6. v. 731.

(1) 'Tis the Art of Living well. That Passage of Tiberianus is quoted upon the Account of Virgil's Golden Bough.

(i) Senec. de brevit. vitæ. c. 14. p. m. 711.

(k) Cicer. Tusc. Quæst. l. 5.

(l) In the Rem. H.

(a) News from the Republick of Learning, March 1684. p. 22.

(b) Ibid. at the End of the Preface.

(c) Baillet, Life of Descartes. tom. 1. p. 51, 52.

gerous; and 'tis impoſſible to keep a Medium. I hope the Reader will excuſe me for publiſhing, on this occaſion, ſome Collections which I have made concerning the Opinions of the Ancients (E) and Moderns about the nature of thoſe Souls. Many “ his (1) Travels to Paris five or ſix Years after, diſcovered that Opinion to ſome of his Friends, and gave to underſtand, that he could not believe that Beaſts are any thing elſe but Machines. So that they who find it difficult to aſcribe that Opinion to him ever ſince the Year 1619, will more eaſily believe that it came into his Mind about the Year 1625 at furtheſt. Perhaps they will not refuſe to believe Mr. Descartes himſelf (2), who tells us, that it came into his Mind fifteen or ſixteen Years before he publiſh'd his Metaphyſical Meditations. That Opinion concerning the Souls of Beaſts is what Mr. Paſcal eſteem'd moſt in Mr. Descartes's Philoſophy. Mr. Baillet was ſo civil to the Author of the News from the Republick of Learning, as to refute him without naming him, and on the contrary, he nam'd him when he prais'd a Thought which he approv'd of. It is, in a manner, an exceſs of Ceremony, prejudicial to the liberty which every body ought to enjoy in the Commonwealth of Learning: It is to introduce into it Works of Supererogation; every body muſt be allow'd to name thoſe whom he refutes; and it is enough to forbear ſharp, injurious and uncivil Expreſſions.

Here is another Paſſage of Mr. Baillet, which concerns the ſame Subject. (d) “ It has been thought by many, that Mr. Deſcartes took his famous Opinion about the Souls of Beaſts . . . . out of the Book of Gomeſius Pereira . . . . But one may very well doubt, whether Mr. Deſcartes ever heard of Pereira, and whether his Book, which has been always ſcarce, ever fell into the hands of a Man who cared ſo little for Books and Reading as our Philoſopher did. But we need not doubt of it, ſeeing Mr. Deſcartes had not ſeen Pereira's Book the Year after the publication of his (3) Metaphyſical Meditations, and had made known his Opinion about Beaſts above fifteen or twenty Years before, as has been ſaid in the Firſt Book of this Hiſtory. Beſides, as Mr. Bayle has (4) well obſerved, Pereira having not inferred his Paradox from its true Principles, and having not foreſeen the Conſequences of it, Deſcartes may be look'd upon as the firſt who found it out by a Philoſophical Method. Pereira was not the Inventer of that Doctrine, it was debated by very Learned Men in St. Auguſtin's (5) Time, as a thing which might be defended well enough, notwithſtanding the apparent Abſurdity which the Vulgar found in it. That Opinion was older ſtill than St. Auguſtin, Seneca, and the firſt Cæſars (6), according to Mr. du Rondel's Obſervation, who carries it as far as the Stoicks and Cynicks.

(E) Concerning the Opinions . . . about the Souls of Beaſts.] Moſt of the ancient Philoſophers taught, that the Souls of Beaſts were Rational: From whence it follows, that they believed thoſe Souls differed but more or leſs from thoſe of Men. Anaxagoras placed that difference in this, viz. that Men are able to explain their Reaſonings, whereas Beaſts cannot explain theirs. (e) Ἀναξαγόρας πάντα ζῶα λόγον ἔχειν τὸν ἐνεργητικόν, τὸν δ' οἱονεὶ νοῦν μὴ ἔχειν τὸν παθητικόν, τὸν λεγόμενον τοῦ νοῦ ἑρμηνέα. Anaxagoras omnia animalia habere mentem agentem: non item patientem, qui eſt mentis quaſi interpres. Pythagoras and Plato had the ſame thoughts; for they ſaid, that the Souls of Beaſts, tho' truly rational, (f) act not according to Reaſon, becauſe they want the uſe of Speech, and their Organs are not well proportion'd. It were to be wiſh'd, that Plutarch who knew ſo well how to give a juſt extent to his Subjects, when he had a mind to it, had not been ſo Laconick on this occaſion: but tho' his Language be never ſo conciſe, we can have no doubts about the Doctrine of Pythagoras. We ſee clearly enough, that according to that Philoſopher, the Soul of a Beaſt does not ſubſtantially differ from the Soul of a Man; for he taught the Tranſmigration of Souls, that is to ſay, that they paſs indifferently from the Body of a Man into that of a Beaſt: Few Opinions have had ſo many Followers as that. I don't believe that any Philoſopher ſpoke more advantageouſly of the Souls of Beaſts than Porphyry; He believ'd not only that they are endow'd with Reaſon, but alſo that they have the Faculty of making their Reaſoning to be underſtood: He believ'd alſo, that their Language had been underſtood by ſome Men, and that Men are above Beaſts, only becauſe their Reaſonings are more refin'd. (g) Porphyrius lib. 3. de Abſtinentia, ſtatuit naturam omnibus animantibus, quibus ſenſum & memoriam dedit, rationem quoque, tum & orationem, tam internam quam externam, tribuiſſe: additque, Apollonium Tyaneum, Melampum, Tireſiam, & Thaletem, brutorum ſermones dijudicaſſe atque intellexiſſe: quos nihil mirum ſi non intelligamus ipſi, qui plurimarum etiam nationum linguam minimè callemus. Aſſerit itaque bruta rationem participare, neque per eam ab illis hominem ſimpliciter diſtingui, ſed quod homini perfectum rationis acumen inſit, illis imperfectum. He proves it by ſome Reaſons and Authorities: he quotes Empedocles, Plato, and Ariſtotle. (h) Confirmat iſtiuſmodi dogma in primis ex mutua ſignificatione, qua inter ſe bruta utuntur, quod in avibus potiſſimum apparet, quæ ſibi occinunt viciſſimque reſpondent. Deinde, ex admirabili ſolertia, curaque in futurum proſpiciendi, utilia conſectandi, declinandi adverſa. Præterea, teſtimonia Empedoclis & Platonis, atque etiam Ariſtotelis, quæ idem cenſuiſſe, ex eorum dictis ſcriptiſque haberi ait. Thoſe who alledge theſe words, pretend, that Ariſtotle (i) is not quoted to the purpoſe; they ſay, that he aſcribes only to Beaſts an Image, or Copy of Reaſon, and they laugh at that pretended Language which was underſtood by Tireſias, Melampus, &c. whereupon they obſerve, that a Rabbin follow'd the Error of Porphyry, and believ'd that Solomon underſtood the ſame Language. (k) Quod item addebat Porphyrius, bruta inter ſe colloqui, & à quibuſdam intelligi, non ita eſt, etſi ita eſſe crediderit quidam ex Hebræis doctoribus, teſte Abulenſi ad capit. 3. libr. 3. Regum, quæſt. 11. aſſerens, eorum voces percalluiſſe Salomonem. Perhaps it would not be an eaſy thing for them to ſhew, that their Ariſtotle acknowledg'd a ſubſtantial difference between the Souls of Brutes and thoſe of Men: for if they ſhould ſay, that he believed not that Beaſts act by reaſon, it would not be a good Proof; ſince it is certain that Children and Frenticks have a Soul of the ſame Species with the moſt Rational Men, and that moſt Beaſts ſhew more Reaſon than Children of one Year of Age, and Frenticks. So that one would think that Ariſtotle acknowledged only more or leſs difference between the Souls of Beaſts and thoſe of Men, and that he believed the Soul of Man reaſoned ſubtilly and eaſily, and the Soul of a Beaſt but confuſedly, becauſe of the difference of their Organs. Which might be confirmed, if it be true, as ſome pretend (l), that he believed not the Immortalility of the Soul.

There is one thing to be obſerved. It does not appear, that the Ancients, when they left the Poetical or Oratorian Style, acknowledged a true difference between a Humane Soul and Matter. I don't mean thick, heavy, and palpable Matter, but that which the Chymiſts call Spirits, which is as eſſentially Body and Matter as Dirt and Fleſh can be. They could not therefore believe, that the Souls of Men and Beaſts ſhould differ otherwiſe than more or leſs, and according to their ſeveral degrees of ſubtilty; and conſequently their Opinion was, that the meer Diſpoſition of the Organs hindred Reaſon from appearing in Beaſts, as it appears in Men. It was, without doubt, the Opinion of Galen; for he believed not that our Souls are Incorporal; he did not diſtinguiſh them from Natural Heat, and the Harmony of the Temper (m). I know that many Ancients ſaid, that the Souls of Men deſcended from Heaven; but it does not prove, that they believed them to be Immortal. Beſides, the Stoicks taught, that all Souls, without any exception, flowed from the ſame Source. (n) Perſuaſum iis, à Deo, id eſt Mundi animâ, animam hanc eſſe. Laërtius: (1) Τῆς τῶν ὅλων ψυχῆς μέρη εἶναι τὰς ἐν τοῖς ζώοις: Animæ univerſi, partes eſſe animantium Animas. Omniumne animantium? omnium: ſed aliæ aliis magis participant, ut ſunt corpora & inſtrumenta. Eſt Socraticum: (2) Mundi animam, fontem animarum omnium eſſe. Sed illam, qua ratione uteretur, cognatam & participem, imò jam partem

(f) Οὐ μὴν λογικῶς ἐνεργοῦσι παρὰ τὴν δυσκρασίαν τῶν σωμάτων καὶ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν τὸ φραστικόν. Non tamen ea agere ſecundum rationem, idque fieri ob incommodum corporum temperamentum & quia loquela deſtituuntur. Id. ib. p. 909.

(1) See the 16. Letter of Iſaac Beeckman to Father Merſenne in 1641. from whence 'tis inferred, that he imparted his Opinion about the Souls of Beaſts to his Friends a long time before.

(2) Compare the 16. Treatiſes Thaumantis Regia made in his Youth and another which he quotes in his Method, as having been made a great while before, with the Letters of the 2d Tome, p. 24. and of the 3d Tome, p. 9, 47, 230.

(d) Baillet, ib. Tom. 2. p. 537.

(3) He ſent word to Father Merſenne, that he had never ſeen that Book, Lett. 30. of the 22d June 1641.

(4) News from the Republ. of Learning, 1684. Tom. 1. p. 22.

(5) Tom. 2. p. 12. News from the Republ. of Learning, Auguſtin. cap. 30. de Quantitate Animæ.

(6) News from the Repub. ib. p. 291.

(e) Plut. de Placit. Philoſ. l. 5. c. 20 p. 908

(g) Conimbricenſes in Phyſ. Ariſt. l. 2. c. 9. quæſt. 2. art. 1. p.m. 225.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Quod autem aſſerebat Porphyrius, ex Ariſtotelis doctrina colligi, exiſtimaſſe illum bruta ratione pollere; falſum eſt: niſi rationem ſumat pro rationis imitatione quam ſolam brutis quibuſdam Ariſtoteles attribuit, tum loco citato (that is to ſay, lib. 4. de hiſtor. animal. c. 9.) tum 1. Metaphyſ. c. 1. Ibid. art. 3. pag. 227.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Pomponatius aſſerted it ſtoutly. See the Diſcourſe of La Mothe le Vayer about the Immortality of the Soul, in the 4th Tom. of his Works, Edit. in 12.

(m) See the Book intitled Nic. Nancelii Trachyeni Novioduneſis de immortalitate animæ velitatio adverſus Galenum, Printed at Paris in 1587. in 8.

(n) Lipſius Phyſiolog. Stoicor. l. 3. Diſſert. 8. p.m. 984.

(1) In Zen.

(2) Apul. de Dogm. Plat.

Many Readers will ſay, that I am too long, but the Learned will think that I do not ſay the fourth part of what they might ſay upon that Subject. They will ſay the ſame thing of ſome other places, wherein I am ſomewhat prolix. Afterwards I ſhall make ſome (F) Reflections. I ſhall obſerve that Voſſius knew no Author before partem divinitatis eſſe. Plutarchus: (f) Ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ μεταχοῦσα καὶ λογισμοῦ, ἐκ ἔργον ἐστὶ τῦ Θεῦ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ μέρος, ἐδ' ὑπ' αὐτῦ, ἀλλ' ἀπ' αὐτῦ, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῦ γέγονεν: Anima mentis & ratiocinationis conſors, non opus ſolum Dei, ſed & PARS eſt, neque ab ipſo, ſed ex ipſo eſt facta. Animæ etiam aliæ (hac ratione) partes Dei, id eſt mundanæ animæ: ſed illa ſcilicet animæ, & quæ proxime vim naturamque ejus referret. Therefore how could they believe that the Souls of Beaſts had no Feeling? I don't think they believ'd it; and if Seneca ſaid the contrary in the Paſſages mention'd by the Learned Mr. du Rondel, 'tis plain he has refuted himſelf in ſome others. Read his laſt Letter, and you will ſee that he deprives Beaſts of Reaſon, Wiſdom, true Goodneſs, and Felicity, and not of Feeling. (g) In quo non poteſt beata vita eſſe, nec id poteſt quo beata vita efficitur: beata autem vita bonis efficitur: in muto animali non eſt quo beata vita efficitur: ergo in muto animali bonum non eſt. Mutum animal SENSU comprehendit præſentia: præteritorum reminiſcitur, cùm id incidit, quo ſenſus admonetur: tanquam equus reminiſcitur viæ, cùm ad initium ejus admotus eſt. In ſtabulo quidem nulla via, quamvis ſæpè calcata, memoria eſt...... Nec illud nego, ad ea quæ videntur ſecundùm naturam, magnos eſſe mutis animalibus impetus & concitatos, ſed inordinatos ac turbidos. Nunquam autem aut inordinatum eſt bonum, aut turbidum. Quid ergo, inquis, muta animalia perturbatè & indiſpoſitè moventur? Dicerem illa perturbatè & indiſpoſitè moveri, ſi natura illorum ordinem caperet: nunc moventur ſecundùm naturam ſuam. Perturbatum enim id eſt, quod eſſe aliquando & non perturbatum poteſt. Sollicitum eſt, quod poteſt eſſe ſecurum. Nulli vitium eſt, niſi cui virtus poteſt eſſe. Multis animalibus talis ex ſuâ naturâ motus eſt. Sed ne te diu teneam, aliquod erit bonum in muto animali, erit aliqua virtus, erit aliquid perfectum: ſed quale? nec bonum abſolutè, nec virtus, nec perfectum. Hæc enim rationalibus ſolis contingunt, quibus datum eſt ſcire, quare, quatenus, quemadmodum. Ita bonum in nullo eſt, niſi in quo ratio. Seneca lays down a Principle whereby it will appear in what ſenſe he ſays elſewhere, That Beaſts don't grow angry, and are not capable of conferring a Benefit. He ſuppoſes, that a Nature which is not ſuſceptible of the two Contraries, is ſuſceptible of neither of them: From whence he concludes, that Beaſts being not capable of acting according to Order, and the Rules of Reaſon, and being unable to acquire Virtue, do nothing that can be called diſorderly, unreaſonable, and a vicious Action; and therefore he does not call Anger the Violence or Fury of a Lyon: for according to the Stoicks all Paſſions are as many Vices, and conſequently no Being can be liable to them, but ſuch as partake of Virtue and Reaſon, and are able to attain to the Perfection of a Wiſeman. See the Remark *H*Δ. He aſſerts poſitively in another (h) Letter, that Beaſts Feel, and he could not have expreſs'd himſelf more clearly, if he had been of our Schoolmens Opinion. (i) Qualis ad nos pervenit animi noſtri ſenſus, quamvis naturam ejus ignoremus, ac ſedem, talis ad omnia animalia conſtitutionis ſuæ SENSUS. Neceſſe eſt enim id SENTIANT, per quod alia quoque SENTIUNT: neceſſe eſt SENSUM ejus habeant, cui parent, à quo reguntur. Nemo non ex nobis intelligit eſſe aliquid, quod impetus ſuos moveat: Quid ſit illud, ignorat: & conatum ſibi eſſe ſcit: Quid ſit, aut unde ſit, neſcit. Sicut infantibus, ſic quoque animalibus, principalis partis ſuæ SENSUS eſt, non ſatis dilucidus, non expreſſus. And herein he does but follow the Principles of his Sect. It is the Property of Beaſts, ſaid the Stoicks, to deſire their Preſervation, and to know that Nature recommends them to themſelves. (k) Τὴν δὲ πρώτην ὁρμήν φασι τὸ ζῷον ἴσχειν ἐπὶ τὸ τηρεῖν ἑαυτό, οἰκειούσης αὐτῷ τῆς φύσεως ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, καθά φησιν ὁ Χρύσιππος ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ Περὶ τελῶν, πρῶτον οἰκεῖον λέγων εἶναι παντὶ ζῴῳ τὴν αὑτῦ σύστασιν, καὶ τὴν ταύτης συνείδησιν. Primam autem hanc animantis appetitionem fuiſſe dicunt, ſeipſum tuendi atque ſervandi, naturâ ſibi ipſum ab initio conciliante, ut Chryſippus ait in primo De finibus, primum proprium cuique animanti dicens ſui ipſius fuiſſe commendationem, hujuſque conſcientiam.

As to the Cynicks (l), the Paſſage of Plutarch mention'd by Mr. du Rondel, ſays poſitively, That in the Opinion of Diogenes Beaſts had no Feeling. I would ſee the Doctrine of that Philoſopher more at large, for what Plutarch ſays of it is very dark, the beginning and the end are very inconſiſtent with the middle part. They partake of Underſtanding; there's the beginning. They are always affected as Madmen are; there's the end. But don't Mad and Furious Men often Feel? If they had been compar'd with Men ſick of a Lethargy, or Apoplexy, there had been ſome connection in his Diſcourſe. However here is the whole Paſſage. (m) Διογένης, μετέχειν μὲν αὐτὰ τῦ νοητῦ καὶ ἀέρος, διὰ δὲ τὸ τὰ μὲν πυκνότητι, τὰ δὲ πλεονασμῷ τῆς ὑγρασίας, μήτε διανοεῖσθαι, μήτε αἰσθάνεσθαι, προσφερῶς δὲ αὐτὰ διακεῖσθαι τοῖς μαινομένοις, παρεπταικότος τῦ ἡγεμονικῦ. Diogenes, rationis & aëris partem ea percipere, ſed vel ob craſſitiem vel ob abundantiam humoris neque intelligere neque ſentire: ac ferè affecta eſſe eo modo quo ſunt inſanientes, qui de mentis exciverunt poteſtate. Whatever the Doctrine of Diogenes was, concerning that Subject, it is certain, that the number of the Ancients who oppos'd it, is much greater than of thoſe who came near it. Plutarch made a Treatiſe (n) on purpoſe to ſhew that Beaſts do argue. 'Tis alſo the deſign of the Book, wherein he inquires, (o) whether Terreſtrial Animals are more induſtrious than thoſe who live in the Water. I ſhall draw an Obſervation from it, which ſeems to be of ſome Importance. The Author deſigning to refute thoſe who ſay, That as there are Rational Animals, there muſt be ſome that are Irrational, maintains that by the ſame Reaſon it might be ſaid, that there are ſome Animals who do not Feel, as there are ſome that Feel. 'Tis to be obſerved, that he ſuppoſes that this laſt Diviſion of Animals had never been made before: He alledges it as an Example of a Doctrine which no body ever would be allowed to advance. His Argument is what we call reductionem ab abſurdum. Here are his words: (p) Εἰ δέ τις ἀξιοῖ μὴ κολοβὸν εἶναι τὴν φύσιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἔμψυχον φύσιν ἔχειν, τὸ μὲν, λογικὸν, τὸ δὲ, ἄλογον· ἕτερος ἀξιώσει τὴν ἔμψυχον φύσιν ἔχειν· τὸ μὲν, φανταστικὸν, τὸ δὲ, ἀφαντασίαστον. καὶ τὸ μὲν, αἰσθητικὸν, τὸ δὲ, ἀναίσθητον· ἵνα δὴ τὰς ἀντιζύγους ταύτας καὶ ἀντιθέτους ἕξεις καὶ στερήσεις περὶ ταυτὸν ἡ φύσις ἔχῃ μέρος οἷον ἰσορροποῦσα. Εἰ δὲ ἄτοπος ὁ ζητῶν τῦ ἐμψύχυ τὸ μὲν, αἰσθητικὸν, τὸ δὲ, ἀναίσθητον εἶναι. καὶ τὸ μὲν, φαντασιούμενον, τὸ δὲ, ἀφαντασίαστον. ὅτι πᾶν τὸ ἔμψυχον αἰσθητικὸν εὐθὺς εἶναι καὶ φανταστικὸν πέφυκεν. οὐδ' οὕτως ἐπιεικῶς ἀπαιτήσει τὸ μὲν λογικὸν εἶναι τῦ ἐμψύχυ, τὸ δὲ ἄλογον. Quid ſi quis poſtulet, ne natura ſit manca, debere animatorum alia rationem habere, alia eſſe bruta: invenietur qui eodem jure flagitet, animalium alia debere eſſe vi imaginandi prædita, alia ea carere: alia ſenſum habere, alia non habere: ſcilicet ut oppoſitas habitibus iſtis privationes æqualibus veluti momentis natura habeat. Quid ſi hæc poſtulare abſurdum eſt, cum quodvis animal ſimul & ſentiendi & imaginandi vim nanciſcatur: ne hoc quidem rectè poſtulabitur, eſſe animalium alia ratione prædita, alia bruta. A little while after he refutes the Stoicks, with a Remark of ſome force. Beaſts, ſay they, have no Paſſions; their Deſires are no Deſires, but almoſt Deſires, &c. What would you anſwer therefore, ſays he to them, if any body ſhould teach that they neither ſee nor hear, but that their Sight is almoſt a Sight. (q) Οὐκ οἶδα τί χρήσονται τοῖς λέγουσι μηδὲ βλέπειν, μηδὲ ἀκούειν, ἀλλ' ὡσανεὶ βλέπειν αὐτὰ, καὶ ὡσανεὶ ἀκούειν. μηδὲ φωνεῖν, ἀλλ' ὡσανεὶ φωνεῖν μηδὲ ὅλως ζῆν, ἀλλ' ὡσανεὶ ζῆν. Neſcio quid reſponſuri ſint iis, qui animalia etiam non videre, non audire, non vocem emittere, ſed quaſi videre, quaſi audire, quaſi vocem edere, denique omnino non vivere, ſed duntaxat quaſi vivere dicerent. Which ſhews, that Plutarch was perſwaded, that no Philoſopher had ever rejected the ſenſitive Souls of Beaſts. From whence it follows, that he underſtood the Opinion of Diogenes, otherwiſe than we underſtand the Opinion of Pereira.

Leſt I ſhould be too prolix, I refer to another (r) place, the remaining part of this Compilation.

(F) Afterwards I ſhall make ſome Reflections.] I refer them to the Article of Rorarius.

(G) Voſſius

(f) Quæſt. Platonic.

(g) Seneca epiſt. 124. p.m. 477.

(h) 'Tis the 121 Letter, wherein he proves, omnibus animalibus eſſe conſtitutionis ſuæ ſenſum.

(i) Id. Ep. 121. pag. 457.

(k) Diog. Laert. in Zenone, l. 7. n. 85. p.m. 416.

(l) I ſpeak ſo, ſuppoſing this Diogenes, whoſe Doctrine is mention'd by Plutarch to be the Cynick.

(m) Plut. de Placit. Philoſ. l. 5. c. 20. p. 909. According to Amyot's Verſion, Diogenes ſays, that Beaſts have ſome UNDERSTANDING, but by reaſon of the groſſneſs and thickneſs of their Temper, and becauſe of the great quantity of their Moiſtneſs, they have neither Reaſoning nor Feeling, no more than Madmen, becauſe they are Crack-brain'd, and have not a free uſe of Reaſon.

(n) Περὶ τῦ τὰ ἄλογα λόγῳ χρῆσθαι. Bruta animalia ratione uti.

(o) Πότερα τῶν ζῴων φρονιμώτερα, τὰ χερσαῖα ἢ τὰ ἔνυδρα. Terreſtriane an aquatilia animalia ſint callidiora?

(p) Plut. de Solert. Animal. circa init. p.m. 960. C.

(q) Id. ib. p 961. E.

(r) In the Art. Rorarius.

fore Pereira, who (i) aſſerted, that Beaſts have no Feeling. You may ſee in the ſame Remark, an account of the Opinion of that Spaniard. Some endeavour, in vain, to find in Ariſtotle the Seeds of Mr. Deſcartes's (H) Opinion: We are alſo re-(G) Voſſius knew no Author before Pereira, who aſſerted.] He obſerves that there has been ſome Philoſophers, who made no Diſtinction between Thought and Senſation. From whence they ſhould have concluded, (f), either that Beaſts have Reaſon, or that they have no Senſation (g). He adds, That the laſt Propoſition pleaſed nobody, that he knew of, among the Ancients: but that it was aſſerted by Gomeſius Pereira, in the Sixteenth Century. (h) Hoc conſtituto, conſequitur, vel beſtias non habere ſenſum, cum non habeant rationem, vel ea, cum ſenſu prædita ſint, etiam rationales eſſe. Prior ſententia, quod ſciam, veterum placuit nulli. Sed noſtrorum temporibus amplexus illam fuit Gometius Pereira, Philoſophus ac Medicus Hiſpanus, in opere triginta à ſe annis elaborato, quod, ab Antonii, & Margaritæ, parentum ſuorum, nominibus, Antonianam Margaritam inſcripſit. Eandemque opinionem tuetur in Margaritæ hujus apologia, qua objectionibus Michaelis à Palacios, Theologi Salmanticenſis, reſpondet: Utrobique docet, (ut verbis ejus inſiſtam) illos motus brutales, quicunque in brutis viſuntur, non fieri à brutis videntibus, aut audientibus, aut guſtantibus, ſeu per quemcumque alium ſenſum exteriorem, ſeu interiorem, vitaliter ſenſificè immutatis: ſed vel ab ſpeciebus objectorum inductis in eorum organis, noſtris ſenſitivis ſimilibus, cum præſentia ſunt ſequenda, vel fugienda: vel a phantaſmatis, cum hæc abſunt. Nimirum cenſet ea, quæ nos facultati ſenſitivæ tribuimus, proficiſci à quadam ſympathia, & antipathia: quemadmodum enim ſuccinum trahit paleas, magnes ferrum; ſic muta animantia trahi à ſpeciebus rerum amicarum: à natura quippe hanc vim eſſe inditam rebus, ut non omnia moveat, ſed res certas: itaque, re amica præſenti, maxillas animantis natura moveri ad illam recipiendam: re præſenti inimica, eaſdem natura refugere cibum, planeque adverſari. Quod ſi natura voluiſſet ſenſum mutis dare animantibus, daturum etiam fuiſſe mentem: at ea ſic habitura fuiſſe animas indiviſibiles, eoque à corpore ſeparabiles. Conſider theſe two things: Firſt, That he explained not the Motions of Beaſts by Mechanical Principles, but by the occult Qualities of Antipathy and Sympathy. Secondly, That he rejected the Senſitive Souls, becauſe he believed not that a Material, Diviſible, and Mortal Subſtance was capable of Feeling; from whence he concluded, that if Beaſts had a Senſitive Soul, it was not corporal. When he was put in mind of the Actions of Beaſts, for Example, of a Dog, he anſwered, That it was not neceſſary they ſhould proceed from a Senſitive Faculty; for if it was ſo the Peripateticks would be in the wrong not to aſcribe to a Rational Soul ſo many Actions of a Dog which are like thoſe of a Man. He had Wit enough to take advantage of the weak ſide of the Cauſe of his Adverſaries. It is the common Shift of thoſe who undertake to maintain Abſurdities. (i) Ictus hoſce levi amictu exire ſe poſſe Pereira arbitratur. Putat enim, ut nos non ideo rationem tribuimus beſtiis, quia tam multa actibus faciant ſimillima humanis: ita neque iis adſcribendum eſſe ſenſum, etſi, quæ agant, ſimillima ſint actibus animæ ſenſitivæ. Nec eo movetur, quod tam diſſimiles ſint animarum actus, imò contrarii prorſus: quia, ut ait, natura etiam pro rebus, in quas agit, contraria operetur. Unde Poëta (k):

Limus ut hic dureſcit, & hæc ut cera liqueſcit,
Uno eodemque igni.

Sed longum eſſet omnia ex opere tam operoſo hominis & acuti & docti, adferre pro ridicula ſententia, quam diximus. I thought the Reader would be glad to find here the Doctrine and Genius of that Spaniard.

(H) To find in Ariſtotle the Seeds of Mr. Deſcartes's Opinion.] Father Pardies endeavour'd it. Perhaps, ſays he (l), it will not be needleſs to examine ſome Paſſages of Ariſtotle, that we may know whether ſo Great a Philoſopher will not afford us ſomething, that may authorize an Opinion which ſeems now to be ſo new and ſo extraordinary. Afterwards he quotes this Paſſage taken from the 9th Chapter of Ariſtotle's Book de Spiritu. "One may conceive, without any great difficulty, that Heat is an effect of Nature: but it is difficult to apprehend, how the Nature of Bodies can ſo well manage that Heat, and uſe it as an Inſtrument to give to every thing what it ought naturally to have, and to imprint upon each of them its particular Character with as much Juſtneſs, as if thoſe Bodies were endowed with Knowledge and Reaſon. And certainly (1) all thoſe things cannot be performed without Knowledge and the direction of Reaſon: but, on the other ſide, How can the Faculty of Knowing be aſcrib'd to Material Beings? This Art can, by no means, be aſcrib'd to the Force of Fire and Spirits, or of the moſt ſubtil Bodies: But if we ſhould ſay, that there is within thoſe Bodies ſome Principles that have the Faculty of Knowing; it is a thing which exceeds all Admiration. And we have as much reaſon to wonder, when we conſider the very Souls of Beaſts, ſeeing they are of the ſame Nature with Fire and Spirits." It appears from that Paſſage, ſays Father Pardies (m), That Ariſtotle knew very well how difficult it is to aſcribe Knowledge to Bodies and Beaſts. But he ſeems to have poſitively aſſerted, in another place, what he propoſes here only by way of Admiration; for, ſpeaking of Beaſts, he uſes theſe expreſs words. (1) Of all Animals Man only has the faculty of Thinking. Homo unus ex numero animalium omnium vim obtinet cogitandi. . . . And tho' other Animals be endowed with Memory, and capable of Diſcipline, yet none but Man is capable of Reminiſcence. It ſeems from theſe words, which Ariſtotle has repeated word for word in another (2) place, that he granted that Beaſts have Knowledge, ſince he acknowledges they are endowed with Memory; and that if he deprives them of Knowledge, it is only of that ſort of Knowledge, which is attended with a particular Reflection in our Deliberations, and the Inquiries we make to recal things to mind. But it is certain, that Ariſtotle has diſtinguiſhed otherwiſe Memory and Reminiſcence; for, in his Opinion, Memory conſiſts only in an (3) Image and a Repreſentation, imprinted upon the ſubſtance of that part of the Body wherein common Senſe reſides, much in the ſame manner as Figures are repreſented upon Wax by the Impreſſion of Seals: So that to have the Memory of ſome things, is to have the Figures of things thus repreſented (4). Whereas Reminiſcence implies beſides a certain perception of the Mind, whereby when we recal ſome things to Mind, we know that very thing, viz. that we recal ſomething to Mind: which is common to all ſorts of Thoughts, ſince it is impoſſible to think, without knowing that one thinks. So that Ariſtotle ſaying, that Beaſts have no Reminiſcence, and that Man only has that Faculty, 'tis no wonder if he ſaid alſo, that of all Animals none but Man is capable of Thinking. That Philoſopher believed therefore, that Beaſts have no true Thoughts. It remains only, that Ariſtotle ſhould acknowledge, that Beaſts are meer Automata, and that they move only Machinally, and by the help of ſome Springs. But he has clearly done it; for he ſpeaks thus, explaining how the Motion of Animals is performed. As thoſe Machines ſays he, (5), which are called Automata, are no ſooner moved a certain way, but they perform their Motions by the force of the unbent Springs . . . . . ſo Animals move in the ſame manner, having Bones and Nerves, as ſo many Inſtruments fitted for that end by the Induſtry of Nature, which produce the ſame Effect in them which ſeveral Pieces of Wood and Iron, with their Springs, produce in Machines. He ſays the ſame thing elſewhere. It may be, ſays he (6), that in Animals one thing moves another, and that their Bodies are like thoſe wonderful Automata: in effect, they are made up of Members which have the Faculty, even when they are at reſt, to perform Motions as ſoon as they are determined to them. And as there is no need at all to touch thoſe Machines, when they are moving, provided they have been touch'd before; ſo the ſame may be ſaid of Animals.

Thoſe Paſſages do a great Honour to Ariſtotle; they ſhew, 1. That he knew the Mechanical Power which Nature exerciſes in the Bodies of Animals. 2. That he knew how unconceivable it is that Matter ſhould think. But he never advanc'd, either as a certain thing, or as a Suppoſition, that Beaſts have no Feeling: He never depriv'd them of Thought, taking that Word in the ſenſe which the Carteſians put upon it, but taking it in a particular Senſe, for what is call'd Meditation, Reflection, Deliberation. It is not at all likely that he defined Memory as Father Pardies ſays he did; for by that Definition there will be no difference between Imagination and Memory. Beſides, Beaſts will never be meer Machines,

---

(f) Voſſius de orig. & Progreſ. Idolol. l. 3. c. 41. p. m. 949.

(g) See Francis Valeſius de ſacra Philoſophia, c. 55. p. m. 274. where he ſays ſomething by the by, againſt Pereira, without naming him.

(h) Voſſ. ib.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) That is to ſay, Virgil, Eccl. 8. 80.

(l) Ignatius Gaſton Pardies of the Knowledge of Beaſts, n. 69. p. m. 135.

(1) V. Interpretem Latinum hujus loci.

(m) Pardies ubi ſup. n. 71. p. 140

(1) Hiſt. Animal. c. 1

(2) De Mem. & Rem. c. 2.

(3) De Mem. & Rem. c. 1.

(4) Ibid.

(5) De Animal. motione c. 7.

(6) 2. De gen. anim. c. 1. poſt med.

referr'd in vain to the fourth Book of Cicero's Tusculane Questions, and to the Testimony of Porphyry, Proclus, &c. There is no (H△) resemblance between Mr. Descartes's Opinion about Beasts, and what those Ancient Authors say.

PEREZ

Machines, whilst they are able to form the Image of an Object that is absent? This is what Memory implies, according to the very explication of Father Pardies. Lastly, That Jesuit had no reason to oppose the Critical Observation made against (h) the Translator of Aristotle. ἀνάμνησις is a kind of Thought, and not Thought in general; so that tho' Man only were capable of the ἀνάμνησις, as Aristotle will have it, yet it would not follow from thence, that there is no other Animal but Man that thinks.

(H△) We are also referr'd in vain to the fourth Book of Cicero's Tusculane Questiones . . . . . There is no resemblance.] A Learned Prelate, who wrote against Descartes, accuses him of advancing no Doctrine but what is to be found in the Authors who lived before him. Here are his Proofs, with respect to the Doctrine concerning the Souls of Beasts: (c) Quid hoc est vero, quod (1) apud Ciceronem legimus, bestias simile quiddam facere perturbationum animi, in perturbationes non incidere, quod hæ eveniant solum ex aspernatione rationis, qua carent bestiæ? Quid aliud, inquam, suadet hoc nobis, quam bestias mera esse automata? nam si perturbationibus carent, neque herum diligit canis, neque lupum ovis reformidat: imo, nec cibum appetunt, nec dolorem fugiunt, nec mortem timent; sed ex coacta cæca materiæ motu id facere videntur quod non faciunt. Scribit conceptis verbis (2) Plutarchus credidisse Diogenem bruta animantes, neque intelligere, neque sentire: Quod & confutavit (3) Porphyrius. Sensit (4) Proclus animalia tantum rationalia anima esse prædita; additque decretum esse à Platone animam vere esse eam quæ ratione polleat, cæteras simulacra animarum. At nemo doctrinam hanc vel tradidit apertius, vel fusius propugnavit, quam Gometius Pereira. He alledges four Authorities, viz. of Cicero, Plutarch, Porphyry, and Proclus. Let us examine them one after another: we need not say any thing more about Pereira, whom that Learned Prelate mentions in the last words of that Passage: We have said enough of him in the foregoing Remarks.

I. The Passage of Cicero is not a good Proof; it contains nothing else but the Distinction which the Stoicks made use of, and which I have mention'd in another place. They pretended that Passions and Reason were two things contrary one to another, and consequently, that they could have but one and the same Subject; they could not therefore be found in any Animals but such as are rational, and consequently Beasts could not be capable of them. (d) Illud animorum corporumque dissimile est quod animi valentes morbo tentari non possunt, corpora possunt. Sed corporum offensiones sine culpa accidere possunt, animorum non item, quorum omnes morbi & perturbationes ex aspernatione rationis eveniunt. Itaque in hominibus solum existunt. Nam bestiæ simile quiddam faciunt, sed in perturbationes non incidunt. Thus Cicero represents part of the (e) Stoical Subtilties about the Doctrine of Passions. What he says does not at all signify, that the Stoicks deprived Beasts of the Sentiments which we call Love, Hatred, Anger, &c. They acknowledged that Beasts do something like what Men do when they grow angry, and give themselves up to Pleasures, Fear, or some other Passion; but they pretended, that such a State was not really Love, or Hatred, or Anger, or, in general, a Passion in Beasts; for to be such, said they, Beasts must fall into it out of Contempt of Reason. But they are irrational, and consequently Reason is not their Rule, they do nothing which tends to swerve from that Rule, or to conform to it: Seeing therefore Passions arise in Men because they swerve from Reason, which is their Rule; and since the nature of Passions consists in being contrary to Reason, which Men ought to follow; it must be concluded, that what passes in Beasts is not a Passion, tho' it seems to be one. This is what the subtilties of the Stoicks came to. It was, properly speaking, a dispute about Words; and it is, at least, very certain, that they did not deny, that what the other Philosophers call'd Anger, or Love, or Fear in Beasts was a true and real Sentiment. They did not deny that a Dog knew his Master, and that a Sheep knew a Wolf, as a thing they ought to avoid. I will not make a Collection of Proofs, whereby the truth of that Fact might appear with the greatest Evidence. It is enough to say, That those who affected most to refute what was Paradoxical in the System of the Stoicks, never objected to them that they made meer Machines of Beasts. Would they have spared them about such a Doctrine?

II. I have already examin'd the Passage of Plutarch. We have already seen that it is obscure, and made up of discordant Parts. I add, that one may plainly observe in it an extream opposition between the Doctrine of Diogenes and that of Mr. Descartes. Diogenes said, that Beasts are made up of a Body and a Soul, and that if their Soul does not actually Feel and Reason, 'tis because the thickness of its Organs, and the great quantity of Humours reduce it to the Condition of Mad-men. Whereas Descartes acknowledges no sensitive Principle in Beasts; he says, They are only made up of Matter, and have a Body without a Soul. I observe, That if there was any probability in the Doctrine of Diogenes, it would be only about Oxen, Hogs, &c. but it appears ridiculous when it is applied to Swallows, Flies, Bees, and Ants, whose Organs are incomparably thinner and less moist than those of Men.

III. I shall insist somewhat longer upon the Passage of Porphyry. The Learned Bishop affirms, That that Philosopher refuted what Diogenes said of Beasts, That they had neither Understanding nor Feeling; but it is certain, that Porphyry refutes no body, who had said that they are Insensible. His Silence is a formal proof, that no body had yet vented such a Paradox; for there being nothing more contrary to the Design of Porphyry's Work, he had not failed to refute that Hypothesis. He was about to prove, that Men should not eat the Flesh of Beasts; he found several Inconveniencies in it, and, amongst others, (f) that it is an Introduction to Cruelty. He gathered together as many Answers as he could get, to the Objections of his Adversaries: But was there any Objection so strong as this, viz. That Beasts have no Feeling? Is it not certain, that this being supposed, there would be no more Cruelty (g) in killing an Ox, than in plucking out Turneps? Here is another Observation which perswades me, that Porphyry had not heard of that Paradox, which 'tis pretended that he refuted. He lays down, as a Principle generally approved, (h) that Beasts feel; from whence he draws this Consequence, (i) They are therefore Rational; and he finds in that Consequence, the most specious Arguments he can alledge to defend his Opinion. He proposes this Objection to himself, (k) Seeing the Animal Nature includes some Rational Subjects, it must also include some that are Irrational; and he answers as Plutarch does, or rather he transcribes, word for word, three or four Pages of Plutarch, without naming him. What he steals from him, contains, amongst other things, what has been seen above in the Remark E. They are two Passages which demonstratively prove, That all the Philosophers of that time believed, that there are no Insensible Animals. Amyot has so ill translated the first, that it is impossible to understand the meaning of it: he has been more successful in the second. I shall set down his words, and I shall say, by and by, why I do it in this place. " (l) As for those who speak so impertinently of " it as to say, that Beasts neither Rejoice nor grow " Angry, nor Fear, that the Swallow makes no Pro- " vision, that the Bee has no Memory, but that it " seems only that the Swallow has some Forecast, " that the Lion seems to be Angry, and the Hind " to quake with Fear: I don't know how they " would answer those who should say, that one " may as well affirm, that they neither See nor " Hear, and have no Voice, but that they seem only " to See and Hear, and have a Voice, and in short, " that they don't Live, but only seem to Live: for " the one is not more against plain Evidence than " the other.„ I have transcrib'd that Passage, to strengthen the Consequence I drew from it, viz. That the Doctrine of Automata was then look'd upon, not as a Doctrine which had ever been asserted by any Body, but as a Doctrine which the Stoicks would not be able to refute, if any one should undertake to make use of such an Objection, to beat them at their own Weapons. Perhaps it will be said, that Plutarch and Porphyry use the word λέγων, which is the Participle of the Present Tense: from (h) By Scaliger. See Pardies, ib. n.72. p.140.

---

(c) Pet. Daniel Huetius Censura Philos. Cartesianæ c.8. p.208. Pari.1689.

(1) Cicer. Tuscul. l.4.

(2) Plut. de Placit. Philosoph. l. 5. c. 20.

(3) Porphy. de abst. ab anim. l.3.

(4) Proclus in Platon. Philos. l.3. c. 1.

(d) Cicer. Tuscul. l.4. fol. m.267. C.

(e) Habes ea, quæ de perturbationibus enucleatè disputant Stoici, quæ logica appellant, quia disseruntur subtilius. Id. ib.

(f) Porphyr. de Abstin. l.3. c.20. p. 125. Cantabr. 1655. See also cap. 19. p. 122.

(g) I do not say but Men would thereby use themselves to shed Blood, and grow by degrees less Compassionate, and more cruel to those of their Kind.

(h) Id. ib. c. 21.

(i) Id. ib. c. 1. p. 101. & c. 21, 22, & alibi.

(k) Id. ib. c. 7. p. 109.

(l) Plut. What Animals are most wary, p. m. 472. of Amyot's Version. Geneva 1621. in 8.

PEREZ

PEREZ (Joseph) in Latin Peresius, a Spaniſh Monk, and Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Salamanca, took a great deal of Pains to illuſtrate the Hiſtory of Spain, eſpecially in what concerns the Order of the Benedictins. He publiſhed † ſome Eccleſiaſtical Diſſertations in the Year 1688, wherein he refuted ſome Things which Father Papebroch had advanced in his Prolegomena of April; he found him too rigid (Z) as to the Acts of St. Eleutherus, but he confeſt that it was well done to lay aſide many Apocryphal Writings which have been publiſhed concerning the Saints. 'Tis not long ‡ ſince he died *.

† In Latin at Salamanca.

‡ I write this in September, 1697.

* Taken from Father Papebroch's Anſwer ad exhibitionem errorum art. 11. n. 232, 233.

PERGAMUS,

whence it will follow that this Objection was actually made againſt the Stoicks. I anſwer that the French Tranſlator of Plutarch agrees herein with (h) Xylander, approved by the Learned (i) Holſtenius, that the Word λέγειν ought to be taken in the future conditional Tenſe. Grammar allows of it, and Hiſtory requires it in this Place; for Plutarch and Porphyry, thoſe two great Defenders of the Reaſon of Beaſts, had not failed to diſpute againſt the Doctrine of Automata, had they known that there was, or that there had been ſuch an Opinion. But they ſay nothing of it.

(h) The Latin Tranſlator of Plutarch.

(i) In his Latin Tranſlation of Porphyry de Abſtinentia.

IV. As to Proclus, it is true that he ſays that according to the Doctrine of Plato, the Rational Soul is properly a Soul, and that other Souls are but Images or Simulacres of a Soul; but he ſays at the very ſame time, that they partake of Knowledge and Life, and that Rational Animals are not the only Ones which partake of Underſtanding; that all other Animals which are endowed with Imagination, Memory and Feeling, do alſo partake thereof. Whereby he plainly teaches that Beaſts have a ſenſitive Soul, and ſuch in a Word as the Diſciples of Ariſtotle repreſent it to us. Tho' the Paſſage of Proclus is ſomewhat long, I ſhall ſet it down here, that the Reader may have no Doubts about the true Senſe of it, and that he may be ſure that it could not ſerve as a Prelude to the Carteſian Doctrine concerning Beaſts. (k) Καὶ ὅλως πολλαχοῦ δῆλός ἐστι καὶ ὁ Πλάτων ψυχὴν τὴν λογικὴν εἶναι τιθέμενος, τὰς δὲ ἄλλας, εἴδωλα ψυχῶν· καθ' ὅσον εἰσὶ καὶ αὗται νοεραὶ καὶ ζωτικαὶ, μετὰ τῶν ὅλων παράγουσαι τὰς περὶ τὰ σώματα ζωάς· νοῦ δὲ οὐ μόνον τὰ λογικὰ ζῶα μετέχειν συγχωρήσομεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἄλλα, ὅσα γνωστικὴν ἔχει δύναμιν· φαντασίαν λέγω, καὶ μνήμην, καὶ αἴσθησιν· ἐπεὶ καὶ ὁ ἐν Φιλήβῳ Σωκράτης, ἐπὶ τὸν νοερὸν ἄγει τὰ τοιαῦτα πάντα στοῖχον. Denique multis in locis conſtat & ipſum Platonem ſtatuere illam ratione præditam animam, veram eſſe animam, alias vero, animarum eſſe ſimulacra, quatenus ſunt & illæ intellectuales & vivificæ, cum ipſis univerſis producentes illas vitas, quæ circa ipſa corpora, & in ipſis corporibus ſunt. Concedemus autem non ſolum animalia ratione-prædita participare Mentem: ſed etiam alia, quæcumque cognoſcendi facultatem habent. Phantaſiam autem dico, & memoriam, & ſenſum. Quoniam & ille Socrates, qui in Philebo diſputans introducitur, hujuſmodi omnia ad intellectualem rerum ſeriem reducit. That this may be the better underſtood, I ſhall obſerve, that according to the Platonick Doctrine, there is a Difference between the Soul and Underſtanding, which is not unlike the Difference which the Peripateticks acknowledge between Genus and Species. The Platonicks ſaid, that four Things anterior one to another, viz. Eſſence, Life, Underſtanding and the Soul, had preceded Bodies; that Life partakes of Eſſence; that the Underſtanding partakes of Life and Eſſence; and that the Soul partakes of Underſtanding, Life and Eſſence, and has Reaſon beſides as its particular Nature. This would be call'd in the Schools the Specifick Difference of the Soul. (l) Τεττάρων τοίνυν τούτων ὄντων πρὸ τῆς σωματικῆς ὑποστάσεως αἰτίων, οὐσίας, ζωῆς, νοῦ, ψυχῆς, ψυχὴ μὲν ἁπάντων μετέχει τῶν πρὸ αὐτῆς, τὸν μὲν λόγον, κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτῆς ἰδιότητα λαχοῦσα, τὸν δὲ νοῦν, καὶ τὴν ζωὴν, καὶ τὸ ὄν, ἀπὸ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων αἰτίων. Cum igitur hæ quatuor cauſæ ſint ante corpoream hypoſtaſin, Eſſentia, Vita, Mens, Anima; Anima quidem, particeps eſt omnium eorum, quæ ſunt ante ipſam, ipſam quidem rationem, ſecundum ſuam proprietatem ſortita, Mentem vero, & Vitam, & ipſum Ens ab antiquioribus cauſis adepta. Thus the Soul may concur four ſeveral Ways in the diſpoſing of all Poſterior Beings. It extends its Influences as far as Bodies, in as much as it exiſts; it extends them as far as Plants, in as much as it lives; and as far as Beaſts, in as much as it partakes of Underſtanding; and as far as the firſt Natures that are ſuſceptible of Reaſon together with the other Attributes, in as much as it is Rational. As for the Underſtanding which precedes the Soul, and is the Fulneſs of Life, and even of Being, it influences three ſeveral Ways the Oeconomy of the Univerſe. It illuminates (m) by its ſpecifick Virtue whatever is endowed with the Faculty of Knowing: and it concurs in communicating Life to a greater Number of Things, and Eſſence to every Thing which Being has form'd. Beaſts are comprehended in the Claſs of Creatures that receive the Irradiation of its Virtue: which is manifeſt from the Words that Proclus makes uſe of, ſpeaking of what the Soul does, in as much as it partakes of Underſtanding. (n) Κατὰ μὲν τὸ ὂν τὸ ἑαυτῆς, τὰ πάντα (ὑφίστησι) καὶ μέχρι σωμάτων· κατὰ δὲ τὴν ζωὴν, πάντα τὰ λεγόμενα ζῆν, καὶ μέχρι τῶν φυτῶν· κατὰ δὲ τὸν νοῦν, πάντα τὰ γνωστικὴν ἔχοντα δύναμιν, καὶ μέχρι τῶν ἀλογωτάτων. Secundum quidem ipſum ipſius Animæ Ens, omnia (conſtituit) vel uſque ad ipſa corpora. Secundum vero vitam, omnia quæ vivere dicuntur, & uſque ad ipſas plantas. Secundum vero Mentem, omnia quæ cognitione præditam facultatem habent, & uſque ad ipſa maxime bruta.

(k) Proclus in Platonis Theologiam lib. 3. c. 1. pag. 128. Hamburg. 1618. in fol. ex verſione Æmilii Porti.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 129.

(m) Νῦ[illegible] Mens [illegible] trifariam omnia [illegible] gerit, ip[illegible]us quidem intellectualis proprietate facultatem omnibus cognoſcendi vim habentibus per ſuam illuminationem largiens. Id. ibid.

(n) Id. ib.

Nothing would be more eaſy than to heap up a great many Authorities, whereby it would clearly appear, that when Plato ſays that the Soul of Beaſts is an Image of a Soul, he pretended not to deprive them of Feeling. See Plotinus chap. 11. of the 1ſt Book of his 1ſt Ennead. Conſider alſo theſe Words of a Modern Platonick Philoſopher. (a) Irrationalem animam Platonici non tam ſubſtantiale aliquid, quam accidentale quiddam eſſe putant, quaſi rationalium VESTIGIUM animarum, in quo SENSUS quidem ſint, ſed per diverſa corporis inſtrumenta diviſi atque patibiles. I have given (b) elſewhere an Analyſis of ſome Paſſages of the 25th Diſſertation of a Platonick Philoſopher, who very clearly ſhews what diſtinguiſhes the Soul of a Beaſt from a Humane Soul; but he is contented to deprive Beaſts of Reaſon (c), without depriving them of Feeling.

(a) Marcil. Ficin. in compendio in Timæum Platon. c. 41. p. m. 1031. operum Platonis.

(b) In the Rem. K. of the Article. Paulicians.

(Z) Too rigid as to the Acts of St. Eleutherus.] St. Eleutherus Biſhop of Æcana (d), and St. Anthia his Mother, have been very famous in the Greek Church, ever ſince their Relicks were tranſmitted from Rome to Conſtantinople, under the Empire of Arcadius. Their Acts were compoſed by Leontius and Theodulus, who are ſaid to have lived at that time. But Father Papebroch is not of that Opinion, he thinks they are Suppoſititious, and proves it by many Reaſons. Nevertheleſs he has publiſh'd them under the 18th of April. His Cenſure ſeem'd to Father Perez to be too ſevere, and therefore he endeavoured to refute him, praiſing at the ſame time the vaſt Labours of the Jeſuites who publiſh the Acta Sanctorum, and reject many of them. Pleraque enim (fatendum eſt) Sanctorum acta, ſays he, circumferebantur, partim apertè falſa, partim tenebris denſiſſimis obſita, quæ ab doctiſſimis patribus admodum falce juxta & face egere videbantur (e). The Judgement which Melchior Canus gave about the Legendary Writers has been approved at laſt: he ſaid that the Lives of the Ancient Philoſophers had been written with more Judgment than thoſe of the Chriſtian Saints. They are now more nicely examin'd: the Acts of the New Saints are not fill'd with ſo many Abſurdities; yet they are not ſo carefully examin'd as they ought to be. Here is the remaining Part of a Paſſage which I have alledged (f) elſewhere: "But what is moſt "diverting of all, dear Goſſip, (ſaid an Attor- "ney's Wife of St. Germain's Pariſh) is that as I was "going to the Church of the bare-footed Carme- "lites, I heard ſome Body cry the Life and Miracles "of my Lady St. Thereſa: I bought one to gain the "Indulgences. But when I came Home, my Hus-

---

(c) Ἄλογον, [illegible] ἀλλὰ [illegible] ἀσύνετον, [illegible] θεοῦ [illegible] ἄμοιρον, [illegible] ἐφημέρου [illegible] καὶ [illegible] ἰσχυρὸν μὲν τῷ σώματι, ἀμήχανον δὲ τῷ λογισμῷ. Sine ratione aut prudentia, ita ut alterum in perniciem alterius natum, improvidum, divinæ virtutis expers, ſoloque ſenſu in diem gauderet & duceretur: corporis viribus excelleret, intellectu autem nihil poſſet. Maxim. Tyrius pag. 258.

(d) It was a City of Italy.

(e) Taken from Daniel Papebroch, in reſponſ. ad exhibitionem errorum p. 303, 304.

(f) In the Rem. BB. of the Art. Hadrian VI.

" band

PERGAMUS, a City of Aſia in Myſia, became very famous under the Kings who ſucceeded Philetærus. Its Situation was very advantageous (A). It † was at firſt a Fortreſs built upon a Mountain. Lyſimachus one of Alexander's Succeſſors, ſhut up his Treaſures in it, and gave the Government of it to a Man, who taking hold of the preſent Junctures made (B) himſelf Maſter of it, as we ſhall ſee. (C) The ſtately “ hand fell a reading, and was ſurprized to find “ that St. Tereſa had two Fathers, the firſt was King “ Dom Bermude, and the ſecond, Alonſo Sanchez de “ Cepede (g). 'Tis ſuppoſed that this Diſcourſe was made upon Occaſion of St. Tereſa's Canonization in the Year 1622. The Author of that Book was not of the Proteſtant Religion; he ſpeaks very ill of the Proteſtants.

(A) Its Situation was very Advantageous.] Eſpecially becauſe of the Conveniency of the Rivers: (h) Longeque Clariſſimum Aſiæ Pergamum quod intermeat Selinus, præfluit Cetius profuſus Pindaſo monte, ſays Pliny. I wonder that he ſaid nothing of the Caicus, another River which ran near Pergamum, and the only one mention'd by Strabo in the Deſcription of that City. (i) Παραρρεῖ δ' ὁ Κάϊκος καὶ τὸ Πέργαμον διὰ τοῦ Καΐκου πεδίου προσαγορευομένου, σφόδρα εὐδαίμονα γῆν διεξιών, σχεδὸν δέ τι καὶ τὴν ἀρίστην τῆς Μυσίας. Pergamum præterfluit Caicus per campum valdè opulentum, qui Caicus dicitur, ac ferè optimam partem Myſiæ.

(B) Made himſelf Maſter of it.] His Name was Philetærus. He had been an Eunuch ever ſince his Infancy, by an Accident. His Nurſe, who carryed him to a Funeral Pomp, was ſo crowded by the Spectators, that the Child's Teſticles were altogether cruſhed. (k) Συνέβη γὰρ ἔν τινι ταφῇ θέας οὔσης, καὶ πολλῶν παρόντων, ἀποληφθεῖσαν ἐν τῷ ὄχλῳ τὴν κομίζουσαν τροφὸν τὸν Φιλέταιρον ἔτι νήπιον, συνθλιβῆναι μέχρι τοσοῦδε, ὥστε πηρωθῆναι τὸν παῖδα. ἦν μὲν δὴ εὐνοῦχος. Nam ſpectaculo quodam funebri, in magna hominum frequentia, nutrix cum geſtans etiamnum infantem in turba hominum deprehenſa, adeo fuit oppreſſa, ut pueri etiam colliderentur genitalia. Erat ergo eunuchus. He was ſo well Educated that he made himſelf capable of Noble Employments; and he had without doubt the Reputation of an honeſt Man, ſince Lyſimachus truſted him with the Government of the Fortreſs wherein all his Treaſures were. Philetærus was very faithful to his Truſt, till he found himſelf perſecuted by the Calumnies of Arſinoe, Lyſimachus's Wife. From that time he began to withdraw himſelf from his Allegiance, and to take ſome Meaſures to maintain himſelf in the Independency which he had uſurped. The Junctures proved very favourable to him. Lyſimachus being troubled with Domeſtick Diviſions, was forced to put his Son Agathocles to Death. Nevertheleſs he was oppreſs'd by Seleucus Nicator; and at laſt kill'd by the Treachery of Ptolemy Ceraunus. During thoſe Broils Philetærus ſecured himſelf in the Poſſeſſion of Pergamum; he was ſo cunning as to amuſe with Words and Compliments the Party, which ſeem'd to him to be moſt formidable, ſo that he remain'd Maſter of the Caſtle and Money of Lyſimachus for the Space of twenty Years. His (l) Nephew Eumenes was his Heir, and enlarged his Dominions by invading ſeveral Places about Pergamum. He won a Battel near Sardes againſt Antiochus Son of Seleucus, and died having had that Dominion twenty two Years (m). Attalus, his firſt Couſin, who ſucceeded him, took the Title of King. See the following Article. Chronologers place the Beginning of Philetærus's Dominion in the Year of Rome 468. He (n) lived Eighty Years. Some ſay that his Mother's Name was Boa (o), and that ſhe was of Paphlagonia, a profeſt Curtezan, and a Player upon Inſtruments. He (p) was born at Teium on the Euxine Sea.

(C) The ſtately Library.] I begin this Remark with Lomeierus's Words: (q) Attalus & Eumenes Pergami Reges nobilem bibliothecam conquiſitis undique ſupra ducenta millia exemplaribus, in hædinis pellibus, quæ ab hoc loco pergamena dictæ ſunt, deſcriptis, conſtruxiſſe feruntur. He quotes Pliny in the 2d Chapter of the 35th Book; but we read only theſe Words in that Place, an priores cœperint Alexandriæ & Pergami Reges, qui bibliothecas magno certamine inſtituere, non facile dixerim. That Quotation out of Pliny is not therefore exact. 'Tis true that Pliny tells us in another Place, that the Art of dreſſing Skins to make uſe of them in the room of Paper, was found at Pergamum. (r) Mox æmulatione circa bibliothecas regum Ptolemæi & Eumenis, ſupprimente chartas Ptolemæi, idem Varro membranas Pergami tradidit repertas. We learn from thoſe Words that the King of Egypt and the King of Pergamum contended who ſhould ſet up the fineſt Library; and that it was the Reaſon why the King of Egypt forbad the Exportation of Paper, which occaſion'd the Invention of Parchment. St. Jerome ought to be quoted on this Subject: Chartam, ſays he (s), defuiſſe non puto, Ægypto miniſtrante commercia, & ſi alicubi Ptolemæus maria clauſiſſet, tamen Rex Attalus membranas à Pergamo miſerat, ut penuria chartæ pellibus penſaretur. Unde & Pergamenarum nomen ad hunc uſque diem, tradente ſibi invicem poſteritate, ſervatum eſt. As to the Number of Books mention'd by Lomeierus, we muſt conſult Plutarch (t), who ſays that Mark Antony preſented Cleopatra with the Library of Pergamum, which contain'd two hundred thouſand Volumes. Father Jacob in his Treatiſe of Libraries Pag. 28. of the firſt Part, ſays falſly that according to Strabo that Library contain'd two hundred and eighty thouſand Volumes. Mr. le Gallois (v) ſays more falſly ſtill, that according to Pliny they amounted to a greater Number. Lipſius raiſes an Objection, about the Words of Plutarch, which is unworthy of him. Strabo, ſays he (w), who writ under Tiberius, aſſures us that the Library of Pergamum was ſtill extant, and the ſame as it was when King Eumenes ſet it up. It had not been therefore tranſported into Alexandria to be given to Cleopatra; or it muſt be ſaid that Auguſtus, who undid moſt things which Mark Antony had done, cauſed it to be carried back to Pergamum; or that after it had been loſt under Mark Antony, there was another ſet up altogether like the Firſt. This is nodum in ſcirpo quærere; for Strabo does not mean that Pergamum had ſtill the Library and the other Imbelliſhments wherewith Eumenes adorned it; he means only that it had not been enlarged ſince Eumenes. That Prince, ſays he, made it ſuch as it is now. This is the Senſe of the Greek Words. (a) Κατεσκεύασε δ' οὗτος τὴν πόλιν, καὶ τὸ Νικηφόριον ἄλσει κατεφύτευσε, καὶ ἀναθήματα, καὶ βιβλιοθήκας, καὶ τὴν ἐπὶ τοσόνδε κατοικίαν τοῦ Περγάμου τὴν νῦν οὖσαν ἐκεῖνος προσεφιλοκάλησε. Hic urbem adornavit, & lucum Nicephorium conſevit, ac donaria & bibliothecas & habitationis locum in Pergamo tantum quantus hodieque eſt conſtituit luculenter (b). Lipſius's Objection againſt Vitruvius is better grounded. (c) Reges Attalici magnis Philologiæ dulcedinibus inducti cum egregiam bibliothecam Pergami ad communem delectationem inſtituiſſent, tunc item Ptolemæus, infinito zelo cupiditatiſque incitatus ſtudio, non minoribus induſtriis ad eundem modum contenderat Alexandriæ comparare. Theſe are the Words of Vitruvius, which plainly ſignify that Ptolemy (d) Philadelphus adorned the City of Alexandria with a fine Library in Emulation of that which the Kings of Pergamum had ſet up in the chief Town of their States. Lipſius is in the right to ſay that this is falſe: The Library of Alexandria was ſet up before the Kings of Pergamum, who made a Collection of Books, were born. This is not inconſiſtent with what Pliny ſays of the Emulation of Ptolemy and Eumenes; for without doubt the King of Egypt, who lived in the time of Eumenes, was ſorry to ſee that the King of Pergamum was able to obſcure the Glory of the Alexandrian Library. It is to be obſerved that the Emulation of thoſe Princes occaſioned many Impoſtures about Books, as Galen obſerves. (e) Scribit Galenus, Comment. 1. in lib. Hippocr. de natura hum. inter Alexandriæ & Pergami reges, contentionem fuiſſe, quis plura veterum volumina compararet. Tum vero multos ab hominibus pecuniæ avidis falſis auctorum nominibus libros inſcriptos eſſe, quo vetuſtatis plurimum iis & auctoritatis accederet. I have juſt now found in a fine Book, “ (f) That it “ is thought the Kings of Pergamum began to adorn “ their City with a Library, and that Attalus made “ his Library twenty two Years before that of Alex- “ andria. I do not criticize the Author of that Book; for, what he ſays that 'tis thought ſo, is certainly true of ſeveral People: Many Perſons may be of that Perſuaſion. I only ſay that they are miſtaken. The firſt of the Kings of Pergamum, who was named

† Strabo, l. 13. pag. 428, 429.

(g) Caquet de l'Accouchée, Seconde journée, pag. 7.

(h) Plin. l. 5. c. 30. p. m. 511.

(i) Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

(k) Ib. p. 428.

(l) Son of Eumenes, Brother of Philetærus.

(m) Taken from Strabo, l. 13. pag. 428, 429.

(n) Lucian. in macrobiis.

(o) Athen. l. 13. pag. 577. B.

(p) Strabo l. 12. p. 374.

(q) Lomeier. de Bibliothecis c. 6. p. 96.

(r) Plin. l. 13. c. 11. p. m. 78, 79.

(s) Hieron. Ep. ad Chromat. Jovin. & Euſeb.

(t) Plut. in vit. Marci Antonii.

(v) Gallois, Treatiſe of Libraries, p. 27.

(w) Lipſ. Syntagm. de Biblioth. c. 4.

(a) Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

(b) So thoſe Words ought to be rendred, and not as Lipſius has done it, ubi ſupra, Eumenes urbem inſtruxit, & donariis, ac Bibliothecis, uti nunc eſt, eleganter excoluit. Mr. le Gallois, ubi ſup. adopts all thoſe Thoughts of Lipſius, without quoting him.

(c) Vitruv. in Præfat. libri 7.

(d) The remaining Part of the Words of Vitruvius cannot be underſtood of any other but Ptolomæus Philadelphus.

(e) Harduin. in Plin. l. 35. c. 2. pag. 175.

(f) Jaquelot, of the Exiſtence of God. p. 126.

ſtately Library which the Kings of Pergamum ſet up, and the Temple of Æſculapius (D), were the chief Ornaments of that City. You will find in Moreri that the Inhabitants of Pergamum built * a Temple to the Emperor Auguſtus, and to the City of Rome, and that Galen was born there. Several other illuſtrious Men were born in that City. Strabo will tell ‡ you who they were. Add to them Oribaſius † a Phyſician of Julian the Apoſtate.

PERGAMUM (Attalus King of) ſucceeded in the Year 512. of Rome Eumenes his Couſin (A), who had been the Succeſſor of Philetærus their Uncle. He took the Title of King, (B) which they had not taken, and he thought he could do it without Arrogance, after the Victory he had obtained ‡ over the Gauls. He made named Attalus, was born ſome Years after the Death of Ptolemy Philadelphus who began to ſet up the Library of Alexandria. The Author adds in the ſame Book, "(g) That the Library of the Kings "of Pergamum was tranſported to Rome. I wiſh an Author had been quoted for it.

(D) And the Temple of Æſculapius.] That God is ſurnamed Pergamean by (h) Martial, and a Roman Hiſtorian tells us that when an Inquiry was made at Rome into falſe Aſyles, the Proofs which the Pergameans produced for the Aſyle of Æſculapius were found valid. (i) Conſules ſuper eas civitates quas memoravi, apud Pergamum Æſculapii compertum aſylum retulerunt: ceteros obſcuris ob vetuſtatem initiis niti. That Paſſage of Tacitus puts one in Mind of the Inquiry into the Titles of thoſe who fally pretend to be Gentlemen, which is from time to time ſo neceſſary in France. But the Inquiry made about Places of Refuge was more important. So great an Abuſe had crept into the Græcian Cities, that the Magiſtrates could no longer exerciſe the Rigour of the Laws; all the Criminals and Debtors found Places of Refuge; the Mob protected them, and look'd upon it as a Duty of Religion. (k) Crebreſcebat enim Græcas per urbes licentia atque impunitas aſyla ſtatuendi: complebantur templa peſſimis ſervitiorum: eodem ſubſidio obærati adverſum creditores, ſuſpectique capitalium criminum receptabantur. Nec ullum ſatis validum imperium erat coercendis ſeditionibus Populi, flagitia hominum ut cærimonias deum protegentis. To remedy that Diſorder, it (l) was ordered that all the Cities, which had ſome priviledged Temples, ſhould ſend to Rome the Proofs of their Aſyles. Some of thoſe Cities (m) being ſenſible of the Uſurpation, renounced it. Many others relying upon ſome old Traditions, or ſome Services done to the Roman People, ſent their Deputies. The Senate gave 'em Audience; but being weary of the Stories which they told, and of the Factions that grew thereupon, they referred that Inquiry to the Conſuls. (n) Audita aliarum quoque civitatum legationes. Quorum copia feſſi patres, & quia ſtudiis certabatur, conſulibus permiſere, ut perſpecto jure, & ſi qua iniquitas involveretur, rem integram rurſum ad Senatum referrent. The Conſuls were not very rigid, they approved of ſeveral Titles of Nobility which were only grounded upon Chimera's; for Example, they admitted as an Authentick Proof what the Epheſians told them, that the Olive Tree, upon which Latona leaned when ſhe was delivered of Apollo, was ſtill extant. (o) Eſſe apud ſe Cenchriam amnem, lucum Ortygiam, ubi Latonam partu gravidam & oleæ quæ tum etiam maneat adniſam, edidiſſe ea numina, deorumque monitu ſacratum nemus. Judges would not be leſs indulgent at preſent, if every Pariſh was ſummoned to produce the Proofs of its Devotions and Relicks. Though it is well known how blindly the Heathens maintain'd their Traditions; yet People will not open their Eyes and ſee the Abſurdity of the Stories, which are told in all the Places, that boaſt of a priviledged Devotion.

Polybius will afford us as good a Reflection as that. (p) Pruſias having overcome Attalus, entred into Pergamum, and offered a pompous Sacrifice to Æſculapius, and then he return'd to his Camp. The next day he cauſed all the Temples to be plundered, and laid upon his Shoulders the Statue (q) of Æſculapius to whom he had offered ſome Sacrifices, and whom he had invoked the Day before. Polybius calls it the Action of a Furious and Mad-man. (r) Ἅμα μὲν θύειν ϗ διὰ τούτων ἐξιλάσκεσθαι τὸ θεῖον προσκυνοῦντα ϗ λιπαροῦντα τὰς τραπέζας ϗ τοὺς βωμοὺς ἐξ-ὀκλὰξ, ὅπερ ὁ Προυσίας εἰώθει ποιεῖν, [illegible] [illegible] Etenim ſimul victimas cædere, deoſque propitios orare, omnemque aram ac lapidem exquiſito quodam genere adorare & venerari flexis genibus & muliebri ſuperſtitione, quod Pruſias facere ſolebat, atque interim eadem ſima labefactare, eorumque everſione contumeliam diis facere, quis neget id eſſe rabie perciti hominiſque de ſtatu mentis deturbati? I am ſure that Polybius would not have ſpoken ſo harſhly of thoſe who ſhould have plundered the Temples without having at any time worſhipped the Deities thereof. What he ſays that Pruſias entred into Pergamum, is conſiſtent with what Diodorus Siculus relates, that that Prince having loſt the Hopes of making himſelf Maſter of the Perſon of Attalus, fell a plundering the Temple of Nicephorus, which was not far from the City (s). But here is a better Argument againſt Polybius, will ſome ſay. King Eumenes declares expreſly, in the Speech he made to the Senate of Rome, that he was beſieged in Pergamum, and was ſo happy as to prevent the taking of the City. (t) Quod miſerrimum eſt in bello, obſidionem paſſus ſum, Pergami incluſus cum diſcrimine ultimo ſimul vitæ regnique, liberatus deinde obſidione, cum alia parte Antiochus, alia Seleucus circa arcem regni mei caſtra haberent, relictis rebus meis tota claſſe ad Helleſpontum L. Scipioni Conſ. veſtro occurri, ut eum in trajiciendo exercitum adjuvarem. I anſwer that Polybius and Diodorus Siculus ſay nothing of what happen'd under King Eumenes. They mention a Siege of Pergamum, which was made afterwards, and ſuſtained by Attalus Philadelphus againſt Pruſias King of Bithynia. See Appian (v).

(A) Eumenes his Couſin.] Philetærus had two Brothers, the Name of the Elder was Eumenes; the other's Name was Attalus. The Son of the Former had the ſame Name with his Father, and ſucceeded Philetærus. The Son of Attalus was call'd Attalus, and ſucceeded Eumenes (a). If Father Labbe (b) had read Strabo attentively, he would not have quoted him as having ſaid that Attalus was Brother and Succeſſor of Eumenes. Moreri (c) has tranſcribed that Fault. I wonder that Mr. Menage did not obſerve a Fault of Diogenes Laertius which Valeſius (d) had cenſured. That Hiſtorian of the Philoſophers ſays (e) that Eumenes was Philetærus's Son. He ſhould have ſaid that he was his Nephew; as we find it in Strabo and Athenæus. I ſhall ſet down the Words of the Latter, becauſe they contain a curious Fact, viz. That Eumenes died by too much drinking. (f) ὑπὸ μέθης ἀπέθανεν Εὐμένης ὁ Περγαμηνὸς ὁ Φιλεταίρου τοῦ Περγάμου βασιλεύσαντος ἀδελφιδοῦς, ὡς ἱστορεῖ Κτησικλῆς ἐν τρίτῳ χρόνων. Eumenes Pergamenus (g) Philetæri qui Pergami regnavit ex fratre nepos, ebrietate periit, ut refert Cteſicles libro tertio de temporibus. Note that Athenæus uſes elſewhere (h) the ſame Word βασιλεύσας, ſpeaking of Philetærus.

(B) The Title of King which they had not taken.] Strabo ſays ſo in expreſs Words. (i) Ἀνηγορεύθη βασιλεὺς οὗτος πρῶτος νικήσας Γαλάτας μάχῃ μεγάλῃ. Hic primus rex ſalutatus eſt cum magna pugna Galatas viciſſet. Polybius ſaid the ſame thing before him: (k) Νικήσας γὰρ μάχῃ Γαλάτας, ὃ βαρύτατον ϗ μαχιμώτατον ἔθνος ἦν τότε κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν, ταύτην ἀρχὴν ἐποιήσατο, ϗ τότε πρῶτον αὑτὸν ἔδειξε βασιλέα. Superatis enim prælio Gallis, quæ gens maxime terribilis ac bellicoſiſſima tum in Aſia erat, tum primum regium nomen palam ſibi adſcivit. Livy is of the ſame Opinion: (l) Victis deinde prælio uno Gallis quæ tum gens recenti adventu terribilior Aſiæ erat, regium aſcivit nomen cujus magnitudini ſemper animum æquavit. Thoſe three Teſtimonies are to be preferred to the Authority of Juſtin and Diogenes Laertius; for 1. Juſtin has committed a Miſtake, which ſhews that he did not made an Alliance with the Romans * at a time when such a Friend was very necessary to them; for besides that they were to oppose Annibal in Italy, they were also obliged to make head against Philip King of Macedonia who had declared himself to be their Enemy. Attalus took the Part of the Romans with great Zeal, and continued their Friend as long as he lived. He undertook a Journey to Athens, to prejudice the King of Macedonia. The Athenians did him (C) great Honours. He made another Journey into Greece β being above Seventy Years of Age, to procure some Allies to the Romans against the King of Macedonia. He harangued the (D) Thebans with so much force to engage them in that League, that his Ardour, somewhat too great for an old Man, was the Cause of a Vertigo, or Defluxion, which hindred him from making an End of his Speech. He fell into a Swoon in the middle of his Discourse, and having taken shipping some days after he returned to Pergamum, where he dyed in a short time γ, after he had reigned δ 44 Years. He ζ lived Seventy two Years. That Prince loved ‡ Philosophers, and made use of his Riches like a Man of Honour, and a great Soul. He was faithful to his Allies, he lived very well (E) with his Wife, and took Care that his four Sons should have a very good Education ɥ. EUMENES the Eldest of all succeded him. He was a Man of a weak Constitution, but he had a Great Soul which supplied the Weakness of his Body. He loved Glory above all Things, he was Magnificent, and he heaped up Benefits upon many Græcian Cities, and private Men. He very much inlarged his Territories, and was only beholden to his Industry and Prudence for it. He knew so well how to keep his Brothers (F) to their Duty, that they concurred

---

* So ſays Tacitus, l. 4. c. 37. Cum divus Auguſtus ſibi atque urbi Romæ templum apud Pergamum ſiſti non prohibuiſſet.

‡ Strabo l. 13. pag. 430, 440.

† Eunapius in vita Oribaſii.

‡ See the Remark B.

(g) Id. ib. p. 127.

(h) Mart. Epigr. 17. lib. 9.

(i) Tacit. Annal. l. 3. c. 63. ad ann. 775.

(k) Id. ib. c. 60.

(l) Igitur placitum ut mitterent civitates jura, atque legatos. Id. ibid.

(m) Quædam quod falſo uſurpaverant ſponte omiſere: multæ vetuſtis ſuperſtitionibus, aut meritis in populum Romanum fidebant. Id. ibid.

(n) Id. ib. cap. 63.

(o) Id. ib. c. 61.

(p) Πρεσίας μετὰ τὸ νικῆσαι τὸν Ἄτταλον, μετὰ τὸ παρελθεῖν πρὸς τὸ Πέργαμον. Pruſias victo Attalo, Pergamum ingreſſus. Polybius in excerptis à Valeſio editis p. 169.

(q) An admirable Piece of Phylomachus, περιβόητος ὑπὸ Φυλομάχου κατεσκευασμένον. Id. ib. Diodorus, ubi infra, calls him Phyromachus: 'Tis the Name of an excellent Statuary who flouriſhed in the 120 Olympiad according to Pliny l. 34. c. 8.

(r) Polyb. ib.

(s) Diodorus Sicul. in Excerpt. à Valeſio publicatis p. 336. He obſerves that Pruſias took away all the Gods, and amongſt others Æſculapius.

(t) Liv. l. 37. p. 711.

(v) Appian. in Mithridat. circa init.

(a) Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

(b) Labbe French Chronolog. tom. 2. p. 300. ad an. Rom. 512.

(c) In his Article of Eumenes.

(d) Hen. Valeſ. not. ad excerpta Polybii. pag. 19.

(e) Diog. Laert. l. 4. in Arceſilao n. 48.

(f) Athen. l. 10. pag. 445.

(g) There is Attali in Dalechampius's Tranſlation.

(h) Athen. l. 13. p. 557.

(i) Strabo ubi ſup.

(k) Polyb. l. 18. in excerptis Valeſianis pag. 103.

(l) Liv. l. 32. pag. 610.

not carefully inquire into the Truth of the Matter. He says that Eumenes was King of Bithynia. This might be alledged by those who should deny that our Attalus was the First who took the Title of a King. They might say that Eumenes, his Predecessor, is stiled a King (m) by Justin. But, I shall answer, Did he command in Bithynia? Did he not command in Pergamum? Can Justin be excused, unless he has recourse to some Criticks, who read Nicomedes instead of Eumenes in that Passage? 2. Diogenes Laertius does not treat Historically of Pergamum, and mentions Eumenes only accidentally, and therefore we have no Reason to believe that he carefully inquired whether that Prince took the Title of a King; it was enough for him to know that Eumenes had a Sovereign Authority in Pergamum, which made him use an Expression which signifies Royalty. He says (n) that Eumenes having heaped up Benefits upon Arcesilaus, was the only King to whom that Author dedicated some Books. The Passage of Athenæus, which I have quoted, ought not to be objected. We read in it that Philetærus reigned in Pergamum; but this does not signify that he took effectually the Title of a King. Read the Modern Historians of the Dukes of Savoy, the Electors of Bavaria, or Brandenburg, &c. and you will often find in them the Words Reign, and to Reign, which denote only an Authority exercised under the Name of a Duke, or an Elector. The Medals which give the Title of a King to Philetærus, (o) if we believe Goltzius, are a better Proof against Strabo, if they are not false. Those which Mr. (p) Spanheim has seen, do not give him that Title. To conclude, Attalus got a Victory over the Gauls (q) the last Year of the 134. Olympiad. It was the 512 Year of Rome.

(C) The Athenians did him great Honours.] The whole Town, Men and Women, and the Priests in their Habits went to meet him. The Gods were like to be forced to do him the same Honour. Livy affords me that Thought: (r) Rex Piræeum, renovandæ firmandæque cum Atheniensibus societatis causa trajecit. Civitas omnis obviam effusa cum conjugibus ac liberis, sacerdotes cum insignibus suis intrantem urbem, ac dii propè ipsi exciti sedibus suis exceperunt. He observes that Attalus thought it became his Dignity to communicate his Proposals in Writing, rather than expose his Modesty to the Necessity of setting forth his Services, and of receiving a vast Number of Praises from a flattering People. The Historian expresses it admirably well: (s) In concionem extemplo populus vocatus, ut rex quæ vellet, coràm ageret: deinde ex dignitate magis visum, scribere eum, de quibus videretur, quàm præsentem aut referendis suis in civitatem beneficiis erubescere, aut significationibus acclamationibusque multitudinis, assentatione immodica pudorem onerantis. The War was concluded against Philip King of Macedonia. It was then proposed to add a New Tribe to the Ten, and to call it Attalis, in the Honour of King Attalus: (t) Ingenti consensu bellum adversus Philippum decretum. Honores regi primùm Attalo immodici, deinde & Rhodiis habiti: tum primùm mentio illata de tribu, quam Attalida appellarent, ad decem veteres tribus addenda.

(D) He harangued the Thebans with so much Force.] This is so singular, that it deserves to be read in Plutarch: Here are his Words: (v) Καὶ μέντοι παρελθὼν ὁ Τίτος, ὡς οὐκ ἔχων τὴν πόλιν, ἐπειδὴν ἐκάλει τὰ Ῥωμαίων Ἀττάλου τοῦ βασιλέως συναγορεύοντος αὐτῷ καὶ συνεξορμῶντος τοὺς Θηβαίους. ἀλλ' Ἄτταλος μὲν (ὡς ἔοικεν) τὸ γῆρας προθυμότερον ἑαυτὸν τῷ Τίτῳ ῥήτορα παρασχεῖν φιλοτιμούμενος, ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ λέγειν προσπεσόντος ἰλίγγου τινὸς ἢ ῥεύματος, ἄφνω τὴν αἴσθησιν ἐπιληφθεὶς ἔπεσεν, καὶ μετὰ οὐ πολὺ ταῖς ναυσὶν εἰς Ἀσίαν ἀποκομισθεὶς ἐτελεύτησεν. Titus (w) inde, quasi urbe non potiretur, affatus eos est, suadens ut in partes Romanorum discederent adjuvante Attalo & Thebanis incitante. Sed Attalus quidem, quum præter ætatem, (ut mihi quidem videtur) majore contentione oratorem Quintio præstare vellet, & vertigine quadam vel pituita esset in media oratione correptus, collapsus est, nec multis diebus post in Asiam navibus devectus expiravit. You may see in Livy (x) how Eumenes the Son of Attalus, represented that Accident to the Senate of Rome, after he had set forth in a few Words the Services which his Father had done to the Common-wealth.

(E) Lived very well with his Wife.] She was of Cyzicus, and of a mean Extraction; her Name was Apollonis. She had the Title of a Queen, and kept it as long as she lived, not by the (y) Address of a Curtezan, but by her Modesty, Probity, Prudence and Gravity. She loved her four Sons tenderly, and she loved them to the last, tho' she out-lived her Husband several Years. This Clause is not superfluous; for it happens but too often, that Queens Dowagers raise Cabals to the Prejudice of their Children. King Attalus her Son had a great Respect for her; it was a Thing very much admired by the Inhabitants of Cyzicus, when they saw him and his Brother lead their Mother by the Hand to all the Temples, and other Places of the City. They got a thousand Praises and good Wishes for it (z). No Body would be much surprized now to see such a Thing in the West.

(F) He knew so well how to keep his Brothers to their Duty.] Polybius giving us the Character of Eumenes Marks, as his last distinguishing Stroke, that he behaved himself so wisely towards his Brothers, that they proved the Instruments of the Safety of his Reign. (a) Ἀδελφοὺς ἔχων τρεῖς καὶ κατὰ τὴν ἡλικίαν καὶ πρᾶξιν πάντας τελείους συνέσχε πειθαρχοῦντας αὐτῷ, καὶ δορυφοροῦντας καὶ σώζοντας τὸ τῆς βασιλείας ἀξίωμα. τοῦτο δὲ σπανίως εὕροι τις ἂν γεγονός. Fratres cum haberet tres & ætate & industria pollentes, eos in officio omnes continuit & morigeros custodesque regni ac dignitatis suæ habuit satellites. Quod raro admodum contigisse reperias. He is in the right to say that it is a rare Thing: History is full of cruel Wars, wherein Princes have been engaged against their Brothers or their own Children. So that they, who have carefully read it, may be sensible, "That "it is more difficult for a King, who has Brothers "and Children to govern his Family, than to go-β Liv. l. 33. p. 610.

"vern

---

* In the year 552. See Livy l. 26. p. m. 451.

γ In the year of Rome 556.

δ Liv. ib. Polyb. in excerptis Valesianis pag. 103.

ζ Polyb. ibid.

‡ See the Article Lacydes.

ɥ Ex eodem Polybio ibid.

(m) Rex Bithyniæ Eumenes. Just. l. 27. c. 3.

(n) Ἐχορήγει αὐτῷ πολλὰ Εὐμένης ὁ τοῦ Φιλεταίρου. διὸ καὶ τούτῳ μόνῳ τῶν ἄλλων βασιλέων προσεφώνει. Diogen. Laert. l. 4. n. 38.

(o) Vid. Vales. not. ad excerpta Polyb. p. 19.

(p) Ezech. Spanheim. de præst. & usu Numism. p. 468.

(q) Valesius ub. sup.

(r) Tit. Liv. l. 31. pag. 572.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib. pag. 573.

(v) Plut. in vit. Flaminii pag. 372. B.

(w) That is to say, Titus Quinctius Flamininus who was then Consul.

[x] T. Liv. l. 37. pag. 710, 711.

(y) Οὐχ ἑταιρικὴν προσφερομένη πιθανότητα. Non meretriciis illecebris. Polyb. ubi infra.

(z) Polyb. in excerpt. Valesian. p. 113, 114.

(a) Polyb in except. à Valesio editis pag. 159.

curred with him in promoting the publick Good, and never entered upon any factious Deſign †. He kept inviolably his Alliance with the Romans, which proved very uſeful to him. He himſelf * brought a great Fleet to the Conſul Flaminius during the War againſt Philip King of Macedonia. He ſtirr'd the Romans to make War againſt Antiochus, and found by Experience that the ‡ Principles upon which his Advice was grounded were very juſt; for he was gratified with many Provinces (G), which were taken from “ vern his Kingdom. The preventing of Civil Wars requires troubleſome and continual Precautions, and if a Prince does not prevent 'em, how careful muſt he be to put an end to them! How great are the Troubles and Dangers he is expoſed to? The Politicks of the Turks are horrible, they barbarouſly ſacrifice to the reigning Prince, the Life or the Liberty of all his Brothers; but it is a neceſſary Evil: for otherwiſe that vaſt Empire would be expoſed to the moſt terrible Deſolations. See the Hiſtorical Meditations of Camerarius, Chap. 88. of the 1ſt Volume. However let us not look upon the Union, wherein King Eumenes kept his Brothers, as a Happineſs, but rather as the Effect of a conſummate Prudence, kept up by a great Merit. It was ſo much the more difficult to keep them to their Duty, becauſe they were ſurrounded with ill Examples. Syria and Egypt were cruelly torn by Diſputes about the Succeſſion. The Royal Family of Macedonia was imbrued with Blood by reaſon of the Jealouſy of Authority. It was an abominable Age. There was nothing to be ſeen but horrible Attempts of Brothers upon Brothers, and of Fathers upon Children, or of Children upon Fathers. This might very well tempt the Brothers of the King of Pergamus. Their Mother was very much in the right to think her ſelf happy to ſee them ſo well united. (c) Ἀπολλωνίδα τὴν Κυζικηνὴν, Εὐμένους δὲ τοῦ βασιλέως μητέρα, καὶ τριῶν ἄλλων, Ἀττάλου καὶ Φιλεταίρου καὶ Ἀθηναίου, λέγουσι μακαρίζειν ἑαυτὴν ἀεὶ καὶ τοῖς θεοῖς χάριν ἔχειν, οὐ διὰ τὸν πλοῦτον, οὐδὲ διὰ τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, ἀλλ᾽ ὅτι τοὺς τρεῖς υἱοὺς ἑώρα τὸν πρεσβύτατον δορυφοροῦντας, κἀκεῖνον ἐν μέσοις αὐτοῖς δόρατα καὶ ξίφη φοροῦσιν ἀδεῶς διαιτώμενον. Apollonidem Cyzicenam, Eumenis regis matrem ac trium præterea filiorum Attali, Philetæri, & Athenæi, prædicaſſe ſubinde ſe beatam, diiſque egiſſe ajunt gratias, non propter divitias vel imperium, ſed quòd tres filios videret natu maximi eſſe ſatellites, eumque in medio ipſorum gladios haſtaſque ferentium abſque metu verſari. Attalus, the eldeſt of the three Brothers, who did not reign, had the greateſt ſhare in the great Affairs. I confeſs that he expreſt a great Love to Eumenes on ſeveral Occaſions. Knowing that he was very much afflicted by reaſon of what the Cities (d) of Peloponneſus had done, he uſed his utmoſt endeavours to perſwade them to give him Satisfaction for it (e). He call'd a City (f) Eumenia, in Honour of his Brother: In a Word, he was ſurnamed Philadelphus. Nevertheleſs the King did ſuſpect him, and not without Reaſon, as we find it in Livy. That Hiſtorian tells us that after the (g) Conqueſt of Macedonia, Attalus, who had ſerved the Romans very well in that famous Expedition, came to Rome with ſecret Hopes of ſupplanting his Brother, and that he would have manifeſted the whole Intrigue, had not the Phyſician who attended him, diſſwaded him from it. That Phyſician was given him by Eumenes, and he was ordered to obſerve him. He was properly the King's Spie; and the King's Suſpicion was well grounded. (h) Suberat & ſecreta ſpes honorum præmiorumque ab ſenatu, quæ vix ſalva pietate ejus contingere poterant. Erant enim quidam Romanorum quoque non boni authores qui ſpe cupiditatem ejus elicerent: eam opinionem de Attalo & Eumene Romæ eſſe, tanquam de altero Romanis certo amico, altero nec Romanis, nec Perſi fido ſocio. Itaque vix ſtatui poſſe, utrum quæ pro ſe, an quæ contra fratrem petiturus eſſet, ab ſenatu magis impetrabilia forent: adeo univerſos omnia & huic tribuere, & illi vero negare. Eorum hominum (ut res docuit) Attalus erat, qui quantum ſpes ſpopondiſſet cuperent, ni unius amici prudens monitio velut frænos animo ejus geſtienti ſecundis rebus impoſuiſſet. Stratius cum eo fuit medicus, ad idipſum à non ſecuro Eumene Romam miſſus ſpeculator rerum, quæ à fratre agerentur, monitorque fidus ſi decedi fide vidiſſet. Is ad occupatas jam aures ſollicitatumque jam animum cum veniſſet, aggreſſus tempeſtivis temporibus rem prope prolapſam reſtituit. I don't ſet down the ſolid Reaſons which that Phyſician made uſe of to keep Attalus to his Duty. I ſhall only ſay that they deſerve to be read in Livy, and that it is likely this was not the leſs moving. He repreſented to Attalus (i) that King Eumenes was an old Man and had no Children, ſo that he might in a ſhort time lawfully ſucceed him. It is neceſſary to know that the Son of Eumenes had not been legitimated. Some things happen'd three or four Years before, which ſhewed that Fraternal Love and Ambition ſtruggled together in the Heart of Attalus. King Eumenes having been dangerouſly wounded with two Stones thrown at him near Delphi, was carried to the Iſle of Ægina. His Wounds were dreſs'd ſo ſecretly, that it was ſcarce known by any Body whether he was alive. So that it was reported every where that he was dead. Attalus believed it ſooner than a good Brother ought to have done. He ſpoke like a King to his Siſter-in-law, Eumenes's Wife, and to the Governour of the Citadel. In a Word he ſhewed himſelf too haſty to ſucceed. Eumenes was not ignorant of it, and tho' he was reſolved to bear it without expreſſing any Reſentment, he could not forbear upbraiding his Brother, at the very firſt Converſation, with his exceſſive Impatience of marrying the Queen. Livy ſays no more of it; but the Truth is, if we believe ſome other Authors, that Attalus lay effectually with the Queen. (k) Compoſitum jam ſui regem, amici poſtero die deferunt ad navem: inde Corinthum, à Corintho per iſthmi jugum (l) navibus traductis, Æginam trajiciunt. Ibi adeo ſecreta ejus curatio fuit, admittentibus neminem, ut fama mortuum in Aſiam perferret. Attalus quoque celerius quàm dignum concordia fraterna erat, credidit. Nam & cum uxore fratris, & præfecto arci, tanquam jam haud dubius regni hæres eſt locutus. Quæ poſtea non fefellere Eumenem: & quanquam diſſimulare & tacitè habere id patique ſtatuerat, tamen in primo congreſſu non temperavit, quin uxoris petendæ præmaturam feſtinationem fratri objiceret. Romam quoque fama de morte Eumenis perlata eſt. Plutarch has turned the whole Matter into a Panegyrick both upon Eumenes and Attalus: he wanted to give it ſuch a Turn, for he was writing a Treatiſe of Brotherly Love, wherein the Royal Family of Pergamum ought to give a good Example, after what he had already ſaid (m) of the Mother of the four Brothers. For my part, I find the Account, which Livy gives of it, more likely. Plutarch relates the Matter thus: (n) “ Having heard that

“ he came from the Sea towards the City to con-“ ſult the Oracle of Apollo, they aſſaulted him be“ hind, and threw ſome great Stones at him, which “ fell upon his Head and Neck, and ſo ſtunn'd him
“ that he ſwoon'd away and fell to the Ground, ſo
“ that 'twas thought he was dead, and the Report “ of it went every where, and even ſome of his “ Servants and Friends, made all the haſte they “ could to bring the News of it to Pergamum, as of a “ thing at which they had been preſent. Where“ fore Attalus, the eldeſt of his Brothers, who was “ an honeſt Man, and had always behaved himſelf
“ more faithfully and loyally towards his Brother
“ than any other, was not only proclaimed King,
“ and crowned with the Royal Diadem, but, which “ is more, he married Queen Stratonice his Brother's “ Wife, and lay with her. But afterwards when “ the News came that Eumenes was alive, and that “ he was a coming; he laid down his Diadem, re“ took his Javelin, which he uſed to carry to guard
“ his Brother, and went to meet him with the other “ Guards. The King received him kindly, ſaluted “ and embraced the Queen with great Honour and “ great Careſſes; and having lived a long time
“ ſince without any complaint or ſuſpicion, he died
“ at laſt, leaving his Kingdom and his Wife to his “ Brother Attalus. But what did Attalus do after “ his Death? He would never put to Death any of “ his Children which he had by his Wife Stratonice,
“ and they were many; but he bred up and educa“ ted the Son of his deceaſed Brother, till he came “ to be a Man, and then he himſelf put the Royal “ Diadem on his Head, and call'd him King.

(G) Gratified with many Provinces, which were taken from Antiochus.] That Prince having been forced from Antiochus, after β the Battel of Magneſia. He ſtirr'd alſo the Romans to make War againſt Perſeus King of Macedonia γ, and in order to it, he took a Journey to Rome. As he was returning to Pergamum by the Way of Delphi, where he deſign'd to offer a Sacrifice, δ he was dangerouſly wounded by ſome Aſſaſſins whom Perſeus had ſuborned: he did not die of it, but the Report of his Death went as far as Pergamum. He did ſomewhat conceal his Reſentment againſt his Brother Attalus, ε who appeared a little too haſty to ſucceed him. He aſſiſted not at the War againſt Perſeus ζ, and ſome ſay that he was ſuſpected by the Romans. We muſt not forget that he loſt a Battel at Sea by a Stratagem (H) of Annibal, and that he was like to periſh in it. He was then at War with Pruſias King of Bithynia. He died (I) very old in the Year 596, leaving θ the Tuition of his Son, and the Adminiſtration of the Kingdom to his Brother ATTALUS. The Latter, properly ſpeaking, reigned till he died. He began his Regency with a glorious Action, which was to ‡ re-eſtabliſh Ariarathes in the Kingdom of Cappadocia. He ſignalized himſelf by ſeveral other Actions, and died in the Year 616. and then ATTALUS his Pupil reigned alone. (K) He was ſurnamed Philometor, and was a great Lover (L) of Agriculture, and even writ ſome Books about it. He † was very cruel. He ſent very

---

† Ex ex-cerpt. Polyb. ib. p. 155. & ſeq.

* † Liv. l. 34. pag. 455.

‡ See Liv. l. 35. pag. 551.

(c) Plut. de fraterno amore. p. 480. C.

(d) They pull'd down the Statues of Eumenes by a publick Decree. Polyb. in excerpt. p. 122.

(e) Polyb. ib.

(f) Stephan. voce. Εὐμένεια.

(g) In 585.

(h) T. Liv. l. 45. pag. [illegible]

(i) Haud ambiguum propediem regnaturum eum infirmitate ætateque Eumenis eſſet nullam ſtirpem liberûm habentis. (Nec dum enim agnoverat eum, qui poſtea regnavit.) Quid attineret vim afferre rei ſua ſponte mox ad eum adventuræ! Id. ib.

(k) Id. lib. 42. p. 815.

(l) Here is a remarkable Fact. There was a Ship carried by Land from one of the Gulphs of Peloponneſus to the other. The ſame has been done on ſome other occaſions.

(m) See above let. c.

(n) Plut. of Brotherly Love. p. 489. of the Greek and Latin Edit.

to accept the Peace upon ſuch Terms as the Romans impoſed on him, all the Allies of the Romans endeavoured to have a Share in his Spoils. Their Demands were heard, and they were anſwered: (a) Decem legatos more majorum ſenatum miſſurum ad res Aſiæ diſceptandas, componendaſque: ſummam tamen hanc fore, ut cis Taurum montem quæ intra regni Antiochi fines fuiſſent, Eumeni attribuerentur, præter Lyciam Cariamque, uſque ad Mæandrum amnem, ea civitatis Rhodiorum eſſent. Cæteræ civitates Aſiæ, quæ Attali ſtipendiariæ fuiſſent, eadem Eumeni vectigal penderent: quæ vectigales Antiochi fuiſſent, ea liberæ atque immunes eſſent. After ſo formal a Teſtimony it is not neceſſary to hear Cicero: Nevertheleſs I ſhall quote him to obſerve a Fault which he has committed: Antiochum illum magnum, ſays he (b), majores noſtri magna belli contentione terra marique ſuperatum intra montem Taurum regnare juſſerunt: Aſiam qua illum multarunt, Attalo ut is regnaret in ea, condonaverunt. Cicero is miſtaken about the Name of the King who obtained ſo noble a Preſent from the Roman People. It was Eumenes and not Attalus, who received it. I know not whether (c) any Commentator has obſerved that Miſtake; but I have juſt now conſulted two, who inſtead of remarking it, have committed another Fault: ATTALO, ſays Manutius, (d) Eumenis fratri, qui eam poſtea populo Romano moriens teſtamento legavit. (e) Another ſays, ATTALO Pergami Regi qui moriens populum Romanum fecit hæredem. It is not true that Attalus, Brother of Eumenes, received from the Roman People the Provinces which were taken from Antiochus, and it is falſe that he reſtored them to the Roman People by his laſt Will. He, who choſe ſuch an Heir, was Attalus Son of Eumenes. Father Abram has committed another Fault; he thinks that Cicero ſpeaks of Antiochus Epiphanes, and that (f) the ſame Antiochus was overcome by Lucius Scipio. The Miſtake of Manutius is but a Copy of that of Valerius Maximus. (g) Liberalis Populus Romanus magnitudine muneris, quod Attalo regi Aſiam dedit dono. Sed Attalus etiam teſtamenti æquitate gratus, qui eandem Aſiam Populo Romano legavit.

Note, That when I writ this Article, the Edition of Cicero's Orations, which Mr. Gravius has publiſhed, was not yet come out. It came out ſince, (h) I have conſulted it as I was reading this again before I gave it to the Printers, and I have found that the Miſtakes of Father Abram, Manutius, and Cicero have been obſerved by Mr. Gravius. See Page 78, and 79 of the 5th Volume.

(H) He loſt a Battel at Sea by a Stratagem of Annibal.] Antiochus being not able to protect Annibal againſt the Romans, who would have him to deliver him up to them, adviſed him to run away. Annibal retired into the Iſle of Crete, and then to the Court of Pruſias King of Bithynia, and perſwaded him to break the Peace which the Romans had eſtabliſhed between him and our Eumenes. The Conſequences of that Rupture proved at firſt prejudicial to Pruſias; he was beaten by Land, and obliged to try whether a Sea-fight would be more favourable to him (i). He won the Battel at Sea by this Means. Annibal cauſed all manner of Snakes to be ſhut up in Earthen Pots, and order'd that thoſe Pots ſhould be thrown into the Enemies Ships. That Order was obeyed, and the Victory got by it; for Eumenes's Men were frighted to ſee themſelves ſurrounded with Snakes. (k) Cum Pruſias terreſtri bello ab Eumene victus eſſet, & prælium in mare tranſtuliſſet, Annibal novo commento auctor victoriæ fuit. Quippe omne ſerpentium genus in fictiles lagenas conjici juſſit, medioque prælio in naves hoſtium mittit. Id primum Ponticis ridiculum viſum, fictilibus dimicare, qui ferro nequeant. Sed ubi ſerpentibus repleri naves cœpere, ancipiti periculo circumventi, hoſti victoriam ceſſere. Cornelius Nepos relates it more at large, and obſerves that (l) the chief Deſign of Annibal was to deſtroy Eumenes, and therefore it was neceſſary to know what Ship he was in. It was diſcovered by means of a Sloop, which was diſpatched under pretence of carrying a Letter to him; afterwards Annibal commanded the Officers of the Ships to apply themſelves chiefly to that of Eumenes: they did ſo, and would have taken her, but ſhe ſtood off, making all the Sail ſhe could. The other Ships of Pergamum fought ſtoutly, but the Snakes thrown into them forced them to run away. (m) The Romans having heard theſe things ſent ſome Ambaſſadors into Aſia, to make a Peace between thoſe two Princes, and to demand of Pruſias that he ſhould deliver Annibal to them; but he prevented it by poiſoning himſelf (n). It was about the 570th Year of Rome.

(I) He died very old.] He lived Eighty two Years, if we may believe Lucian. (o) Ἄτταλος δὲ, ὁ ἐπικληθεὶς φιλάδελφος, τῶν Περγαμηνῶν ϗ οὗτος βασιλέων, πρὸς ὃν ϗ Σκιπίων ὁ τῶν Ῥωμαίων στρατηγὸς ἀφίκετο, δύο ϗ ὀγδοήκοντα ἐτῶν ἐξέλιπε τὸν βίον. Attalus, cognomento Philadelphus, rex etiam Pergamenorum, ad quem etiam Scipio Romanorum imperator venit, duos & octoginta annos natus è vita migravit. I don't queſtion but Lucian has committed a Fault in this Place. The Roman General he ſpeaks of, is without doubt Lucius Scipio Aſiaticus, who defeated Antiochus. But Attalus reigned not at that time.

(K) He was ſurnamed Philometor.] (p) "By "reaſon of his Love for his Mother, which was the "Cauſe of his Death; for as he was digging up a "Sepulchre for her, the heat of the Sun made him "ſick; and he died in ſeven Days. That the Reader may know from whence Mr. Dacier had that Circumſtance, I ſhall ſet down theſe Words of Juſtin: (q) Matri deinde ſepulchrum facere inſtituit, cui operi intentus morbum ex ſolis fervore contraxit, & ſeptima die deceſſit. His Mother's Name was Stratonice (r), ſhe was Daughter of Ariarathes King of Cappadocia: She married Eumenes (ſ) a little while after the Victory which the Romans got over Antiochus at Magneſia. Since (t) Strabo, (v) Appianus, and ſeveral others give him the Surname of Philometor; I fancy that Plutarch (a) gives him that of Philopator thro' a ſlip of Memory. 'Tis in the Life of the Gracchi. See the Paſſage quoted by me in the following Remark. Volaterranus had related well enough what concerns the Kings of Pergamum, but he ſpoils all as to the laſt. He pretends that he was call'd Philometor by way of Irony: (b) Is Philometor ex ſcelere per antiphraſin cognominatus eſt, quod matrem interfecerit. Nay which is worſe, he quotes Juſtin as ſaying that that Prince having ſecretly put his Mother, and his Wife to Death, let his Hair and Beard grow to conceal his Crime. Juſtin ſays quite another thing.

(L) And was a great Lover of Agriculture.] It was not β It was fought in the year of Rome 563.

γ Id. Liv. l. 42. p. 813.

δ Id. ib. p. 815.

ε See the Rem. F.

ζ Liv. l. 44. p. 853.

θ Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

‡ Polyb. ub. ſup. p. 158.

† See the Remark upon the miſtakes of Moreri.

(a) T. Liv. l. 37. p. 713. See the Paſſage of Strabo, which I ſhall quote in the Remark againſt Moreri.

(b) Cic. in [illegible] pro Sextio p. m. 92.

(c) See the laſt Lines of this Remark.

(d) P. Manut. in Orat. Cic. pro Sextio. p. 93.

(e) Nic. Abramus in eamd. Orat. p. 100.

(f) Antiochum Epiphanem ſive illuſtrem de quo auſpiciis Luc. Scipionis Aſiatici ſuperato Appianus in Syriacis, &c. Id. ib.

(g) Val. Max. l. 5. c. 2. n. 3. in extern.

(h) That is in the Year 1699.

(i) Juſtin l. 32. c. 4.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Claſſiarios convocat (Hannibal) hiſque præcipit, omnes ut in unam Eumenis regis concurrant navem, a ceteris tantum ſatis habeant ſe defendere. Id facilè illos ſerpentium multitudine conſecuturos. Rex autem quâ nave veheretur, ut ſcirent, ſe facturum: quem ſi aut cepiſſent, aut interfeciſſent, magno his pollicetur præmio fore. Cornel Nepos in vita Hannibalis, p. m. 359.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) Juſt. & Corn. Nepos ubi ſup.

(o) Lucian, in Macrob. p. 637. Tom. 2. Edit. Salmur.

[p] Dacier Remarks upon the 1ſt Ode of the 1ſt Book of Horace. p. m. 14.

(q) Juſt. l. 36. c. 4. p. m. 537.

[r] Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

(ſ) Liv. l. 38. p. 733.

[t] Strabo ib.

(v) Appian. in Mithrid.

(a) Plut. in vit. Gracchor. p. 830.

(b) Volater l. 13. p. m. 497.

very rich Presents to Scipio (M) before Numantia, and died a little while after about the Year 621. and having no Children, he made * the Roman People his Heir. Ariſtonicus, Baſtard † of Eumenes, deſpiſed that Will, and declared himſelf to be the lawful Succeſſor; he won ſome Battels, but he was overcome and taken § in the Year of Rome 623. Thus ended the Kingdom of Pergamum which grew very powerful in a ſhort time, and there was ſo much Magnificence in it, that it became a Proverb (N). I ſhall obſerve ſome Faults (O) of Moreri.

PERGA,

not his firſt Inclination, and it ſeems that it was an effect of his Melancholy. He put to Death ſeveral (c) illuſtrious Perſons, and then he grew extreamly Melancholick; he put on, as it were, a Sack-cloth and Aſhes, and minded nothing elſe but the Culture of his Garden. But he did not lay aſide his Cruelty, for his chief Delight was to cultivate the moſt venemous Herbs; he diſtill'd the Juices thereof, which he mixed afterwards with good Remedies, and ſent that ſort of Compoſition as a Preſent to his Friends. Here is my Author: (d) In Aſia Rex Attalus florentiſſimus ab (e) Eumene patruo acceptum regnum, cædibus amicorum, & cognatorum ſuppliciis, fœdabat, nunc matrem anum, nunc Beronicem ſponſam, maleficiis eorum necatam confingens. Poſt hanc ſceleſtam violentiæ rabiem, ſqualidam veſtem ſumit: barbam capillumque in modum reorum ſummittit: non in publicum prodire, non populo ſe oſtendere, non domi lætiora convivia inire, aut aliquod ſignum ſani hominis habere, prorſus ut pœnas pendere manibus interfectorum videretur. Omiſſâ deinde regni adminiſtratione, hortos fodiebat, gramina ſeminabat, & noxia innoxiis permiſcebat, eaque omnia veneni ſucco infecta, velut peculiare munus, amicis mittebat. I add theſe Words of Plutarch: (f) Ἄτταλος ὁ Φιλομήτωρ ἐκήπευε τὰς φαρμακώδεις βοτάνας, οὐ μόνον ὑοσκύαμον καὶ ἐλλέβορον, ἀλλὰ καὶ κώνειον καὶ ἀκόνιτον καὶ δορύκνιον, αὐτὸς ἐν τοῖς βασιλικοῖς σπείρων καὶ φυτεύων, ὀπούς τε καὶ καρπὸν αὐτῶν ἔργον πεποιημένος εἰδέναι καὶ κομίζεσθαι καθ' ὥραν. Attalus Philometor herbas venenoſas colebat, non tantum hyoſcyamum & helleborum, ſed et cicutam, aconitum, dorycnion, ipſe in hortis regiis ſeminans & plantans: liquoreſque & ſemina & fructus horum elaborabat cognoſcere, ac ſuo quæque tempore colligere. Attalus left that Occupation, and (g) applied himſelf to the melting of Metals. His Books concerning Husbandry were not unknown to Varro (h), Pliny (i), and Columella (k). Father Harduin obſerves that according to the Teſtimony of Galen, that Prince underſtood all ſorts of Remedies, and compoſed ſome Books about them. (l) Haud diverſum ab eo puto Attalum eſſe eum, quem Medicum appellat Plinius in indice l. 32. & 33. cum hunc ipſum Pergamenorum regem, omnis generis medicamentorum perquam ſtudioſum fuiſſe Galenus affirmet, l. 1. κατὰ γένη, c. 13. p. 657. & l. 1. de antidotis c. 1. p. 865. De medicinis ex animalibus ſcripſiſſe, l. 10. de facult. ſimp. medic. c. 1. p. 275. Mr. Menage (m) aſcribes to another what concerns the Gardens of Attalus.

(M) Some rich Preſents to Scipio before Numantia.] I have read this no where but in Tully. (n) Quo in loco Dejotarum talem erga te cognoviſti, qualis rex Attalus in P. Africanum fuit, cui magnificentiſſima dona, ut ſcriptum legimus, uſque ad Numantiam miſit ex Aſia, quæ Africanus inſpectante exercitu accepit. What did Father Abram think of (o), when he ſaid that Livy does not agree with Cicero? Thereupon he quotes a Paſſage of the (p) 58 Book of Livy, which ſays that Scipio having received great Preſents from Antiochus ſhewed them to the whole Army, and ordered the Quæſtor to enter them into his Book of Accounts. Cicero meant not that Scipio, who overcame Antiochus.

(N) The Magnificence of Pergamus, ... became a Proverb.] See the Commentators upon theſe Words of Horace: (q) Attalicis conditionibus Nunquam dimoveas ut trabe Cypria Myrtoum pavidus nauta ſecet mare. Conſider alſo theſe Verſes of Propertius.

Nec (r) mihi tunc fulcro ſternatur lectus eburno,
Nec ſit in Attalico mors mea nixa toro.
Attalicas (ſ) ſupera veſtes, atque omnia magnis,
Gemmea ſint ludis, ignibus iſta dabis.

'Tis pretended that Hangings were not known at Rome before (t) thoſe of Attalus, which the Roman People inherited, were brought thither. Servius (v) ſays that they were invented at the Court of the Kings of Pergamum, and call'd (w) aulæa, ab aula Attali. He is miſtaken as to the laſt Point, for the Romans call'd 'em ſo, becauſe they were call'd (x) αὐλαῖαι in Greek. However the Attalick Hangings were very famous. (y) Quid illa attalica, tota Sicilia nominata, ab eodem Heio peripetaſmata emere oblitus es? King Attalus invented the Gold Embroidery: (z) aurum intexere in eadem Aſia invenit Attalus Rex. Read this Paſſage of Silius Italicus:

Quæ (aa) radiis jactat Babylon, vel murice picto
Læta Tyros, quæque Attalicis variata per artem
Aulæis ſcribuntur acu.

Pliny (bb) does often mention the exceſſive Price which King Attalus paid for good Pictures.

(O) Some Faults of Moreri.] What I ſay here concerns the Dutch Edition. I. It is not true that Attalus the Firſt of that Name extended his Conqueſts in Aſia, as far as Mount Taurus; for the Kingdom of Pergamum had that Extent under King Eumenes; and it was by the Liberality of the Romans. Before that time it was but a ſmall State, as I am going to prove it. (cc) Συνεπολέμησε δὲ καὶ οὗτος (Εὐμένης) Ῥωμαίοις πρός τε Ἀντίοχον τὸν μέγαν, καὶ πρὸς Περσέα, καὶ ἔλαβεν ὑπὸ τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἅπασαν τὴν ὑπ' Ἀντιόχῳ τὴν ἐντὸς τοῦ Ταύρου. Πρότερον δ' ἦν τὰ περὶ Πέργαμον οὐ πολλὰ χωρία μέχρι τῆς θαλάττης τῆς κατὰ τὸν Ἐλαΐτην κόλπον, καὶ τὸν Ἀδραμυττηνόν. Hic quoque (Eumenes) Romanorum ſocius fuit in bellis adverſus Antiochum Magnum, & Perſeum: accepitque à Romanis quidquid Aſiæ intra Taurum Antiochus poſſederat: cùm antè ſub Pergami ditione fuiſſent pauca quædam loca uſque ad mare, juxta ſinum Elaiticum & Adramyttenum. Father Labbe has been the Occaſion of that Fault of Moreri, for here are his Citations about Attalus. (dd) "Juſtin 27. Livy 34. Polybius 5. where he ſays that he extended his Con"queſts in Aſia, as far as Mount Taurus. I have not found this in the 5th Book of Polybius, but only that Attalus, during the War againſt Achæus, forced the Inhabitants of many Cities to declare for him. This does not go by the Name of Conqueſt, and it does not appear that after his return to Pergamum thoſe Cities were ſubject to him. II. He ſhould not have been contented with Father Labbe's Quotation of thoſe three Authors, ſince they ſay nothing of the Love of the four Brothers which is "commonly propoſed as a Model of the Union "which ought to be between Brothers. He ſhould have quoted Plutarch for it, as Father Labbe did (ee). III. The Wife of Attalus, Mother of thoſe four Brothers, was call'd (ff) Ἀπολλωνίς. He ſhould not therefore ſay that her Name was Apollonia. IV. The Article of Attalus the ſecond is a pitiful one. He begins with ſaying that he "was "firſt ſent to Rome by his Brother Eumenes, in the "Year 596. where he obtained whatever he deſired "of the Senate. This is a meer Tranſcript of (gg) Father Labbe. Attalus was above 60 Years old at that time; his Hiſtory ſhould not therefore begin there, conſidering the memorable Things he had done before. V. I don't think that he was his Brother's Ambaſſador at Rome in the Year 596. and I fancy that the times have been confounded: the Journey he made to Rome about the Year 584, after the King of Macedonia had been taken, has been transferred to the Year 596. VI. It is an abſurd Thing to quote Polybius l. 5. and Juſtin l. 36. ſeeing they ſay nothing of that Attalus. Note that the Hiſtory of Polybius did not reach the Year of Rome 596. VII. Attalus the Third, was ſurnamed Philometor, and not Philopator. That Fault is alſo to be found in Father Labbe (a). But Moreri is moſt to blame for having inſerted among thoſe three Attalus's an Attalus Philadelphus, without ſaying that it is not a New Attalus; for the Reader would think that that Attalus Philadelphus is different from the other three, and yet he is the ſame with Attalus the Second. Let's ſee whether his Article be right. VIII. What he did before he was a King is not diſtinguiſhed

* Flor. l. 2. c. 20. & multi alii.

† Juſt. l. 36. c. 4.

§ Id. ib.

(c) Vid. excerpta Diodor. Siculi à Valeſio collecta p. 376.

(d) Juſt. ubi ſupra.

(e) Juſtin is miſtaken he ſhould have ſaid Attalo.

(f) Plut. in Demetrio, page 897. D.

(g) Ab hoc ſtudio ærariæ artis fabricæ ſe tradit cerisque fingendis, & ære fundendo procudendoque oblectabatur. Juſtin. ubi ſupra.

(h) He mentions them in the 1 Ch. of the 1 Book de re Ruſtica.

(i) Plin. l. 18. c. 3.

(k) Colu. l. 1. c. 1. but inſtead of Attalus & Philometor, read Attalus Philometor. See Father Hardouin in Indice Pliniano. p. 100.

(l) Harduin ib.

(m) See the Rem. B. of the Art. Lacydes.

(n) Cic. in Orat. pro Rege Dejotaro p. m. 647.

(o) Abramus com. in Orat. Cic. pro Dejotaro p. 441.

(p) What remains of Livy goes no farther than the 45 Book.

(q) Horat. Ode 1. l. 1.

(r) Propert. Eleg. 13 l. 2. See alſo Eleg. 32. ejuſdem Libri. (ſ) Id. Eleg. 17. l. 3. See alſo Eleg. 5. l. 4. (t) See the Notes Variorum upon Virgil Georg. l. 3. v. 20. (v) Ideo aulæa dicta ſunt quod primum in aula Attali, Regis Aſiæ, qui populum Romanum ſcripſit hæredem, inventa ſunt. Servius in Æn. l. 1. v. 697.

(w) Servius in hæc Verba Georg. l. 3. v. 25. Purpurea intexti tollunt aulæa Britanni.

(x) See Plut. in vit. Themiſtoclis.

(y) Cicero in Verrem l. 6. fol. m. 7.. 8.

(z) Plin. l. 8. c. 48. p. m. 231. He ſays Chap. 3. of the 33*d Book* Attalicis jampridem aurum intexitur invento regum Aſiæ.

(aa) Sil. Ital. l. 14. p. m. 635.

(bb) Plin. l. 7. c. 38. and l. 34, 35.

(cc) Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

(dd) Labbe, Chron. Franc. tom. 2 p. 300. ad ann. Romæ 512.

(ee) Labbe, ub. ſup. p. 335. ad ann. 556.

(ff) Strabo l. 13. p. 429.

(gg) Labbe p. 365. ad ann. 596.

(a) Labbe ib. p. 391. ad an. 621.

PERGA, a City of Pamphylia. There was a Temple of Diana β built near it, upon a very high place. It was very ancient, * and very much respected; and tho' the Diana of Ephesus was above the Diana of Perga, yet the latter had a great share in the Devotion of the People. There was an Assembly kept there ε every Year; it was then, without doubt, that they sung the Hymns which Damophila, Contemporary of Sappho, composed to the Honour of that Goddess, and which were sung still in the time γ of Apollonius Tyanæus. The Diana of Perga, Περγαία Ἄρτεμις, is mention'd δ upon several Medals. It is one of the Cities where St. Paul λ preached the Gospel. The famous Geometer Apollonius μ Pergeus, whose Books of Conick Sections are extant, was born there. It is now in a bad condition; the Archiepiscopal See π was transferr'd from thence to Attalia, one of the fourteen Cities which before depended upon it. Perga stands eight Miles from the Sea.

PERIANDER, Tyrant of Corinth. He was reckon'd one of the seven Wise Men of Greece; but it had been better to have plac'd him among the most wicked Men that ever liv'd: for he changed the Government (A) of his Country, and oppress'd its Liberty, and establish'd a Monarchical Power for ρ himself; and to maintain himself in his Usurpation χ, he caused the principal Men of the City to be put to Death, thinking they would be able to restore things to their first state. On the day of a solemn Feast he ‡ deprived Women of all their Ornaments, and made of them a Gold Statue which he (B) had vowed. He committed Incest with his (C) Mother; he kick'd his Wife to death whilst she was big with Child; he caused his Concubines to be burnt, because their Calumnies had exasperated him against his Wife. He was so angry with his second † Son, because he lamented the Death of his Mother, that he turn'd him out, and disinherited him. He formed a villanous Plan of Revenge against the Inhabitants of Corcyra: which was to send their young || Boys to King Alyattes to be Gelded: and when he heard that the Ship which carried those innocent Victims, had put into Samos, and that those Youths had been preserved from the Misery to which they were destinated, he died with Grief stinguished from what he did under the Reign of his Brother: Every Reader has all the Reason in the World to fancy that whatever is said of this Attalus, was done by him, since he was made his Nephew's Tutor with the Title of a King. But it is false. IX. 'Twas not he who sustained the Siege of Pergamum against Antiochus. We have seen (b) that King Eumenes himself was in Pergamum during that Siege. X. He did not make War against Perseus King of Macedonia: Moreri should have said that he was in it as an Ally of the Romans. XI. Strabo and Appianus, quoted by Moreri, do not say that Attalus made Prusias a Prisoner. XII. Nor that he sent some Presents to Scipio Æmilianus before Numantia. XIII. Nor that he perished by the Ambush of his Nephew Attalus. He died before that Scipio went to Numantia.

(A) He changed the Government of his Country] Diogenes Laertius says so positively. Οὗτος πρῶτος, says he (c), δορυφόρους ἔσχε, καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν εἰς τυραννίδα μετέστησε. PRIMUS hic armatis circumseptus incessit, magistratumque ad tyrannidem transtulit. Aldobrandinus observes upon those words, That if we believe Aristotle, Periander must be look'd upon as the Inventer of most ways whereby Tyranny is establish'd and kept up. (d) Omnium autem earum rerum quæ ad tyrannidem faciunt constituendam & conservandam, auctorem fuisse Periandrum Cypseli filium, tum aliis locis, tum præcipue eodem lib. 5. polit. ait cap. 11. Τούτων, inquit, τὰ (e) πολλά φασι κατασκευάσαι Περίανδρον. Mr. Menage upon the same words of Laertius, quotes Suidas, who says, That Periander had 300 Guards, and that he forbad the Corinthians to keep any Servants, and to live in Idleness. He invented every Day something to keep them busy, and Fined those whom he found sitting in the Publick Places: He was afraid they should contrive something against him. Herodotus does not ascribe to him the first Institution of Tyranny, but to Cypselus, who reigned thirty Years in Corinth very cruelly, and left all his Authority to his Son Periander. Τυραννεύσας δὲ ὁ Κύψελος, τοιοῦτος δή τις ἀνὴρ ἐγένετο· πολλοὺς μὲν Κορινθίων ἐδίωξε, πολλοὺς δὲ χρημάτων ἀπεστέρησε, πολλῷ δ' ἔτι πλείστους τῆς ψυχῆς (f). Cypselus vero tyrannide potitus, talis extitit ut Corinthiorum multos insequutus sit, multos pecunia, longe plurimos anima privaverit. Periander was not at first so hard a Prince as his Father, but afterwards he became much more cruel than he.

(B) The Gold Statue which he had vowed.] Observe here a very sensible Proof of the Disorder wherein False Religions leave the Hearts and Minds of Men. They do not correct Mens Inclinations to Sin. We see Periander who makes a Vow, and dares not dispense himself with accomplishing it, even when he has no Money (g). He therefore believes that there are Gods, he believes a Providence: and yet he pollutes himself with an Incest, he sheds Innocent Blood, he kills his Wife, &c. Let us proceed to the Disorders of the Mind. The same Tyrant is not afraid of being punish'd for his Incests and Murders; but he fears, that if he should not offer to the Gods a Lump of Gold, which he promised them, they will oppress him with Miseries, and severely punish him. Nay, he persuades himself, that tho' he fulfils his Vow with a most unjust Robbery, which vexes all the Women of Corinth, yet the Golden Statue which he Consecrates will be acceptable to the Gods, and preserve him from the Punishments they would have inflicted upon him, if he had not offered the Statue he promised them. Next to the Violence done to the Honour of honest Women, there is none they are more sensible of, than to see themselves stript of their Ornaments. The desire of being well dress'd, and wearing fine things, has always prevail'd in that Sex. (h) Φιλόκοσμον genus femineum est: multasque etiam insignis pudicitiæ, quamvis nulli virorum, tamen sibi scimus libenter ornari... (i) Ut taceam de inaurium pretiis, candore margaritarum, rubri maris profunda testantium, smaragdorum virore, cerauniorum flammis, hiacynthorum pelago, ad quæ ardent & insaniunt studia matronarum. I observe this only, to make the Tyrannical Spirit of that pretended Wise-Man more odious. See the Remark D.

(C) He committed Incest with his Mother.] Her Name was (k) Cratea: Some say, (l) that being not able to restrain the Impetuosity of her Passion, she proposed to her Son to lie secretly with a Woman, who was extreamly in love with him, and who would not be known. He consented to it, and so he lay with his Mother without knowing it; for Cratea was in the Bed where the pretended Woman, whom she mention'd to her Son, was to lie. This secret Intrigue lasted a long time; but at last Periander would know who was the Woman whom he had so often been with: He order'd somebody to hide himself in the Chamber, and as his Mother was going to Bed, he came to her with a Flambeau. He had kill'd her upon the Spot, had not a Genius, who appear'd to him, prevented it. Ever since that time he lived as a Furious Man, he was Cruel, and put several Peo-β Strabo l. 14. p. 460.

---

* Pergæ fanum integerrimum & sanctissimum Dianæ scimus esse, id quoque a te nudatum & spoliatum esse, ex ipsa Diana quod habebat auri detractum atque ablatum esse dicunt. Cicero in Verrem act. 3.

ε Strabo ib.

γ Vide Philost. in ejus vita l. 1.

δ Spanh. de præst. & usu numism. p. 782.

λ Act. ch. 13 & 14.

μ I have published his Article.

π Baudrand. Geog.

ρ Diog. Laertius l. 1. n. 98.

χ Herodot. l. 5. c. 92. p. m. 324.

‡ Diog. Laert. ib. n. 95.

† His name was Lycophron. See his Article wherein I have set down what Herodotus says of him.

|| Diog. Laert. does not limit the number of them. Herodotus l. 3. c. 48. says, they were three hundred of the best Families of that Island.

(b) In the last Rem. of the foregoing Art. at the end.

(c) Diog. Laert. in Periandro n. 98. l. 1.

(d) Aldobrandin. in Diog. Laert. ib.

(e) Aldobrandinus should not therefore use the word Omnium. What he quotes of Aristotle is against him.

(f) Herod. l. 5. c. 92. p. 324.

(g) Ἔφορος ἱστορεῖ ὡς εὔξαιτο, εἰ νικήσειεν Ὀλύμπια τεθρίππῳ, χρυσοῦν ἀνδριάντα ἀναθεῖναι· νικήσας δὲ καὶ ἀπορῶν χρυσίου, &c. Ephorus in historia, vovisse illum tradit, si Olympia quadriga vicisset, auream statuam deo sacraturum, victoria verò potitum, & auro egentem, &c. Diog. Laert. ubi supra n. 96. p. 60.

(h) Hieron. Epist. ad Gaudentium de Pacatulæ institut. p. m. 268.

(i) Idem Epist. ad Demetriadem de servanda virginitate p. 291.

(k) Diog. Laert. lib. 1. n. 96. (l) Parthenius in Eroticis c. 17.

(m) Aristippus, apud Diogen. Laertium ubi supra.

Grief for it. He was then about Eighty Years old *. Some say that he lay with his Wife after (D) her Death; a brutality almost as horrible as that of the Lydian Monarch who eat (E) his Wife. Some Authors § are so simple as to reckon that Action of Periander among the great Examples of Conjugal Love. He reigned 44 Years, according to Aristotle ‖, or 40 according to Diogenes ¶ Laertius. He flourished about the 38th Olympiad †. Mr. Moreri has (F) committed some Faults.

There are several things to be found in a Work of Heraclides, which are not disadvantageous to Periander. If he forbad the Inhabitants of Corinth to keep any Servants, he forbad 'em also to live Voluptuously, which is no ill Law. He laid no Taxes upon any body, and was contented with the Custom-Money which accrued to him from the Sale, and Importation, and Exportation of Commodities. He hated wicked Men, and caused all ‡ Pimps and Bawds to be drowned. To conclude, he established a Senate, and regulated the Expence of its Members ‖.

PERIBOEA, Daughter of Alcathous King of Megara, Wife of Telamon King of Salamis, and Mother of Ajax. See the Remark C of the Article Telamon.

PE-

ple to Death. As for Cratea she complain'd mightily of her Destiny, and kill'd herself. Others relate this Adventure differently: They say indeed, (m) that the Intrigue of Periander and his Mother was cover'd with the Veil of a profound Secret, but that he was not ignorant that he lay with his Mother. They affirm, that he was very well pleased with the Sport, and that he grew Angry only because his Incest was discover'd. He vented his Anger upon his Subjects, and ever since behav'd himself Tyrannically.

After his Mother had kill'd herself he ceased to Honour the Goddess Venus, and to offer Sacrifices to her; but he began again to practise that Worship, by reason of some Dreams of his Wife Melissa. 'Tis what Plutarch observes in the beginning of the Feast of the Seven Wise Men; and he supposes that Periander began again to Sacrifice to that Goddess on the very Day of that Feast.

(D) With his Wife after her Death.] Here is one of Herodotus's Stories, which he tells upon occasion of the Injustice which the Women of Corinth suffered under Periander. (a) That Tyrant sent to consult the Oracle of the Dead, desiring to know what was become of a certain Depositum. His Wife Melissa appear'd, and declar'd, that she would by no means reveal that Secret; for I am very cold, said she, I am stark naked, the Cloaths wherewith I was buried are of no use to me, because they have not been burnt. To prove the truth of what I say, it is enough for me to observe, that Periander has put his Bread in a cold Oven. When Periander was told of it, that Discourse seem'd to him to be very true, because he remembred that he had lain with Melissa, even after she had given up the Ghost. (b) Ταῦτα δὲ ὡς ὀπίσω ἀπηγγέλθη τῷ Περιάνδρῳ, πιστὸν γάρ οἱ ἦν τὸ συμβόλαιον, ὃς νεκρῷ ἐούσῃ Μελίσσῃ ἐμίγη. Hæc Periandro renunciata, ob illud argumentum fidem fecere, quod ipse cum Melissa quamvis defuncta coierat. He therefore ordered by a Proclamation, that all the Women of Corinth should repair to the Temple of Juno. They obeyed, and put on the finest things they had, as on a Festival-Day; but the Guards who lay hid in the Temple stript them all, without any exception; the Mistresses and their Maids were treated alike. All their Cloathes were burnt upon the Grave of Melissa. She was Daughter of Procles, Tyrant of Epidaurus; and she was related, by her Mother's side, to some great Lords who reigned almost all over Arcadia (c). Another Author in Athenæus does not speak so advantageously of Melissa's Quality: he says, (d) That Periander grew very much in love with her, having seen her fill some (e) Drink to some Workmen.

(E) The Lydian Monarch who eat his Wife.] The Sieur de Rampalle being about to prove that our Age doth not exceed past Ages in Vices, brings in, amongst other Examples of Intemperance, the Voracity of Maximinus, Albinus, Phagon, and Astidamas; and then he says, that (f) Cambyses King of Lydia supp'd one Night upon his Wife. He is mistaken as to the Name; I don't think that any King of Lydia was called Cambyses; however, he who eat up his Wife had not that Name. His Name was Cambles. He was a great Eater and a great Drinker. The Historian, who speaks of him, intimates, that he committed that Crime without knowing what he did, and that he knew not his Barbarity; but when he felt his Wife's Hand in his Mouth as he waked.

(g) Ξάνθος δὲ ἐν τοῖς Λυδιακοῖς Καμβλήτην φησὶ τὸν βασιλεύσαντα Λυδῶν πολυφάγον γενέσθαι καὶ πολυπότην, ἔτι δὲ γαστρίμαργον. τοῦτον οὖν ποτε νυκτὸς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα κατακρεουργήσαντα καταφαγεῖν. ἔπειτα, πρωῒ εὑρόντα τὴν χεῖρα τῆς γυναικὸς ἐνοῦσαν ἐν τῷ στόματι, ἑαυτὸν ἀποσφάξαι περιβοήτου γενομένης. Xanthus in Lydiacis narrat Cambleta Lydorum olim regem, edacem, bibacem, gulosum fuisse, noctuque uxorem suam in frusta dissectam vorasse: deinde crastino mane, reperta conjugis manu, quæ ad ejus os hæserat, re cognita, & in vulgus sparsa, seipsum jugulasse. I can scarce believe but this Story is like Old Wives Tales, full of Giants, Man-eaters.

(F) Moreri has committed some Faults.] I shall say nothing of his Faults of omission, every body may know them by comparing his Periander with mine. 1. He does not reckon well, when he says, that Periander began his Reign in the 38th Olympiad, and died in the 48th, after he had reigned 44 Years. He might have said so, if Periander having succeeded his Father in the beginning of the 38th Olympiad, had died towards the end of the 48th Olympiad: But then he should have said so precisely. 2. He should not have quoted Eusebius; for he does not say, that the Reign of Periander lasted 44 Years. He places the beginning of it in the first Year of the 38th Olympiad, and the end (h) in the first Year of the 48th Olympiad. I find a great mistake in these words of Scaliger: (i) Obiit (Periander) anno ultimo Olympiadis XLVIII. Tyrannidem obtinuit, an. XL. auctore Laertio. Ergo ejus initium in primo Olympiadis XXXVIII. ut hic recte assignatum. It is not true, according to Eusebius, that Periander died the last Year of the 48th Olympiad. But if Eusebius had placed the Death of that Prince in that Year, he would not agree with Diogenes Laertius, who says, that he reigned only forty Years. Scaliger expresses himself better five Pages after (k). 3. Periander answered not those, who ask'd him why he kept the Domination, that it was as dangerous to quit it as to lose it. This is an equivocal and perplex'd Answer: it is false whenever a Man loses his Domination together with his Life; for they who lose it in that manner, run no longer any hazard. Moreri should have said that he answer'd, It is as dangerous to part willingly with Tyranny, as to be depriv'd of it by one's Enemies. We have not the privilege of speaking obscurely in French; we are oblig'd to use more Precautions than the Ancients, to avoid being Criticized. I say so, because I set down in this place the words of the Original. (l) Πότ' ἐρωτηθεὶς διὰ τί τυραννεῖ, ἔφη, ὅτι καὶ τὸ ἑκουσίως ἀποστῆναι, καὶ τὸ ἀφαιρεθῆναι κίνδυνον φέρει. Rogatus aliquando cur in tyrannide persisteret; quia, inquit, & sponte & invitum cedere æque periculosum est. 4. To what purpose does Moreri cite (m) Sosicrates, who says nothing of what he says in the Article of Periander, and who is of a contrary Opinion to that which he adopts concerning the Age of that Tyrant? He (n) says, that he died 41 Years before the 49th Olympiad. I know that by altering the punctuation (o) his Opinion might come nearer that of Eusebius. But did Mr. Moreri know of it? And must an Author be quoted upon dubious Readings? This cannot be permitted to any body, but to those who have given notice that they adopt the Correction of such or such a Critick.

Here are some words of Balzac, which relate to Peri-

---

* Taken from Diog. Laert. in Vita Periandri l. 1.

§ Ravisius Textor, in Officina, l. 5. c. 2. in the Title de amore conjugali p. m. 554. and several others after him.

‖ Arist. Polit. l. 5. c. 12.

¶ Ubi sup. n. 98.

† Ibid.

‡ So I render τὰς μαστροπούς. Cragius understands by it prostituted Women.

‖ Taken from Heraclides de Politiis p. 17. Ed. Cragii 1593. in 4.

(m) Aristippus, apud Diog. Laertium ubi supra.

(a) Herod. l. 5. c. 92.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Diog. Laert. l. 1. n. 94.

(d) Pythænetus l. 3. de Ægina apud Ath. l. 13 p. 589.

(e) Ὠνοχοοῦσαν τοῖς ἐργαζομένοις. Operariis vinum ministrantem. Ibid.

(f) Rampalle, that the World does not grow worse and worse, pag. 94.

(g) At l. 10. p. 41

(h) He mentio the end the Mon chical vernmen of Corint but it i the sam thing w Periander's death.

(i) Sc Animadv. in Euseb. n. 889. p. m. 84.

(k) Ib. n. 929. p.

(l) Diog. Laert. ib. n. 97.

(m) In the 2d Dutch Edition there is Socrates.

(n) Apud Diog. Laert. ib. n. 9

(o) Vid. Menag. in Diog. Laert. l. 1. n. p. 55.

PERICLES.

PERICLES was one of the Greateſt Men that ever lived in Ancient Greece. His Anceſtors by his Father's and Mother's Side, were very Illuſtrious. He was Educated with all imaginable Care; and he had, amongſt other Maſters, Zeno Eleates, and Anaxagoras, two of the moſt illuſtrious Philoſophers who taught in Athens. He learned of the latter, amongſt other things, to fear the Gods (A) without Superſtition, and to give an Account of Eclipſes, which proved once

OF THE Danger Tyrants expoſe themſelves to, when they Abdicate.

Periander's Anſwer. (p) “It is as dangerous to part with Tyranny, as to ſet it up. Phalaris (r) was ready to leave it; but he would have a God to be Security for his Life, if he ſhould deprive himſelf of his Authority; and it has been always a common Opinion, that they who take up Arms againſt their Country or their Prince, are in a manner reduc'd to the neceſſity of doing Miſchief, becauſe 'tis not very ſafe for them to do good. They dare not become Innocent, leſt they ſhould be at the mercy of the Laws, which they have violated, and they go on in their Faults, becauſe they don't believe that People would be ſatisfied with their Repentance.„ This was one of the Maxims which Mecenas made uſe of when Auguſtus was deliberating with him and Agrippa, whether he ſhould reſtore the Roman People to their Liberty. Agrippa adviſed him to do it, and Mecenas diſſuaded him from it. Let us ſet down here what the Learned Meibomius has collected about it. Tangit Xiphilinus, ſays he (q), ex parte cauſſam, qua motus Mecenas, Auguſto ſuaſerit, ut imperium retineret. Regnum nempe juſtum & legitime comparatum imprimis conducere rerum magnitudini gubernandæ: nec aliud diſcordantis patriæ remedium eſſe, quam ut ab uno, ut loquitur Tacitus Ann. Lib. IV. Cap. IX. unumque Reip. corpus unius præſidis nutu, quaſi anima & mente regatur, ut monet Florus Lib. IV. Cap. III. Potior tamen, & altera cauſſa fuit, quam Suetonius adducit, loco quem (a) dixi, quod Auguſtum, ſi privatus viveret, non ſine periculo fore cenſeret. Eam etiam inculcat Zonaras; quod qui ſemel imperitarint, tuto privatam vitam agere nullo modo poſſint. Quo ſenſu jam olim Periander interrogatus, cur non deponeret imperium, reſpondit: Quoniam per vim imperanti, etiam ultro imperio abire periculoſum, ut ex Xenophontis lib. de Memorabil. Socrat. refert Stobæus Serm. XLI. Quin & Mecenas ipſe in Orat. apud Dionem, non alia ratione depoſitionem imperii Auguſto diſſuadet, quam quod oſtendat neminem Senatui populoque reddita Rep. ipſi parciturum, qui multos offenderit. Hos enim rerum ſummam ad ſe trahendo, id acturos, ut ſe vel ulciſcantur, vel ipſum ſibi adverſantem è medio tollant. Docet id exemplis Pompeji, Julii Cæſaris, Marii ac Sullæ: Quos abdicata poteſtas vel peſſum dederit, vel peſſum datura fuiſſet, ſi diutius vixiſſent. To which Solon's Anſwer may be added: His Friends wondred that the name of Monarchy ſhould fright him, and that he durſt not take advantage of the preſent Conjunctures to acquire the ſupream Authority. He anſwered them, (b) Dominion and Tyranny are indeed a fine place, but there is no way to come out of it when one is once got into it. It ſeems to me that Xenophon has illuſtrated that Thought better than any body elſe. He introduces a Tyrant, who makes a lively deſcription of the miſerable Condition he is in: And then Simonides asks him, Why do you remain in it? Why don't you leave it? Mind the Anſwer: The greateſt Unhappineſs of Tyranny is, that there is no way to renounce it. How can a Tyrant, who abdicates, repay the great Sums he has extorted; indemniſy thoſe whom he has Impriſoned; reſtore Life to thoſe whom he has put to Death? If ever a Man has a good reaſon to hang himſelf, it is when he exerciſes Tyranny. They who underſtand Greek will be charm'd with the Greek words: I ſhall therefore ſet them down to pleaſe them. (c) Καὶ πῶς (ἔφη) ὦ Ἱέρων, εἰ οὕτω πονηρόν ἐστι τὸ τυραννεῖν, καὶ τοῦτο σὺ ἔγνωκας, οὐκ ἀπαλλάττῃ οὕτω μεγάλου κακοῦ; οὔτε σὺ οὔτε ἄλλος μὲν δὴ οὐδεὶς πώποτε ἑκὼν εἶναι τυραννίδος ἀφεῖτο, ὅσπερ ἂν ἅπαξ κτήσαιτο; Ὅτι (ἔφη) ὦ Σιμωνίδη, ταύτῃ ἀθλιώτατόν ἐστιν ἡ τυραννίς· οὐδὲ γὰρ ἀπαλλαγῆναι δυνατὸν αὐτῆς ἐστι. πῶς γὰρ ἄν τις ποτὲ ἐξαρκέσειε τύραννος, ἢ χρήματα ἐκτίνων ὅσους ἀφείλετο, ἢ δεσμοὺς ἀντιπαράσχοι ὅσους δὴ ἐδέσμευσεν, ἢ ὅσους κατέκανε, πῶς ἂν ἱκανὰς ψυχὰς ἀντιπαράσχοιτο ἀποθανουμένας; ἀλλ' εἴπερ τῳ ἄλλῳ, ὦ Σιμωνίδη, λυσιτελεῖ ἀπάγξασθαι, ἴσθι (ἔφη) ὅτι τυράννῳ ἔγωγε εὑρίσκω μάλιστα τοῦτο λυσιτελοῦν ποιῆσαι. μόνῳ γὰρ αὐτῷ οὔτε ἔχειν οὔτε καταθέσθαι τὰ κακὰ λυσιτελεῖ. Et qui fit, inquit Hieron, ut ſi adeo miſera res eſt tyrannidem gerere, idque te non fugit, non abjiciat tam ingens malum? Neque tu neque alius quiſquam unquam lubens tyrannidem depoſuit, ubi ſemel nactus eſt. Quoniam, inquit, ô Simonide, illo nomine miſerrima eſt tyrannis, quod ab ea non licet diſcedere. Quomodo enim quiſquam tyrannus unquam ſufficerit ad pecuniam rependendam iis quos ſpoliavit? aut quomodo vincula repenſet iis quos detruſit in vincula? aut quomodo reſtituet tot animas extinctas iis quos occidit? Sed ſi cuiquam alteri, ô Simonides, expedit laqueo finire vitam, ſcito, inquit, me compertum habere, ut id faciat nulli magis expedire quàm tyranno, quod ſolum huic uni mala nec retinere nec deponere expedit. Dionyſius the Tyrant ſaid, that inſtead of returning to a private Man's Condition on Horſeback, one muſt be dragg'd to it by the Feet. Livy relates this but he adds another Thought to it which enervates the firſt, ultima primis obſtant, and deſtroys the common-place which I am about. The Reader may judge of it, I ſet down the whole Paſſage. (d) Sed evocatum eum (e) ab legatis Demarata uxor, filia Hieronis, inflata adhuc regiis animis, ac muliebri ſpiritu, admonet ſæpe uſurpatæ Dionyſii tyranni vocis: Qua pedibus tractum, non inſidentem equo relinquere tyrannidem dixerit debere. Facile eſſe momento quo quis velit, cedere poſſeſſione magnæ fortunæ: facere & parare eam, difficile atque arduum eſſe. Paululum ſumeret ſpatii ad conſultandum ab legatis: eo uteretur ad accerſendos ex Leontinis milites, quibus ſi pecuniam regiam pollicitus eſſet, omnia in poteſtate ejus futura. Hæc muliebria conſilia Andronodorus neque tota aſpernatus eſt, neque extemplo accepit. It is not neceſſary to ſuppoſe that the ſecond Maxim is of Dionyſius; for in all likelihood it is the Maxim of that Ambitious Woman whom Livy introduces ſpeaking. Cicero obſerves, (f) that Dionyſius could not have renounc'd the Condition he was in, and his wicked Life, without undoing himſelf.

(p) Balzac ch. 45. of the Prince, p. m. 43, 44.

(r) Phalar. in Epiſt.

(q) Joan. Henr. Meibom. in vita Mecenatis p. 87, 88.

(a) That is in Octavio c. 28. Meibomius quotes the 27th Ch.

(b) Καλὸν μὲν εἶναι τὴν τυραννίδα χωρίον, οὐκ ἔχειν δὲ ἀπόβασιν. Præclarum fundum tyrannidem eſſe, ſed non habere exitum. Plut. in Solone pag. 85.

(c) Xenoph. in Hierone ſive Tyrannico p. 533. Edit. H. Steph. 1581.

(d) T. Liv. l. 24. p. m. 493.

(e) That is to ſay Andronodorus, who was exhorted in Syracuſa to give over the too great Power he had uſurped.

(f) Atque ei ne integrum quidem erat ut ad juſtitiam remigraret civibuſque libertatem & jura redderet. His enim ſe adoleſcens improvida ætate irretierat erratis, eaque commiſerat ut ſalvus eſſe non poſſet ſi ſanus eſſe cœpiſſet. Cicero Tuſcul. 5. fol. 275. C.

(A) To fear the Gods without Superſtition.] The Athenians were alarm'd without any reaſon, aſſoon as any uncommon Phenomenon appear'd in the Air; they look'd upon 'em as Signs of the Anger of the Gods. The Philoſopher Anaxagoras freed Pericles from that fear, explaining to him, by natural Reaſons, the apparition of thoſe Meteors. And ſo he inſpired him with a more rational Religion, and he was not diſturb'd with ſuperſtitious Fears, but he expected Heavenly Favours with a quiet Mind. (g) Οὐ μόνον δὲ ταῦτα τῆς Ἀναξαγόρου συνουσίας ἀπέλαυσε Περικλῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ δεισιδαιμονίας δοκεῖ γενέσθαι καθυπέρτερος, ὅσην τὸ πρὸς τὰ μετέωρα θάμβος ἐργάζεται τοῖς αὐτῶν τε τούτων τὰς αἰτίας ἀγνοοῦσι, καὶ περὶ τὰ θεῖα δαιμονῶσι καὶ ταραττομένοις δι' ἀπειρίαν αὐτῶν. ἣν ὁ φυσικὸς λόγος ἀπαλλάττων, ἀντὶ τῆς φοβερᾶς καὶ φλεγμαινούσης δεισιδαιμονίας, τὴν ἀσφαλῆ μετ' ἐλπίδων ἀγαθῶν εὐσέβειαν ἐνεργάζεται. Nec vero hunc ſolum fructum tulit Pericli Anaxagoræ uſus, verum omni etiam liberavit eum ſuperſtitione, quæ terrorem ex rebus æthereis imprimit ignorantibus earum cauſas, & iis qui rerum divinarum metu pavent, percelluntur que rudes earum: quem eximens naturalis ratio, pro terrifica & æſtuante ſuperſtitione, ſecuram inſerit cum bona ſpe religionem.

What follows in Plutarch deſerves to be taken Notice of. It happen'd one day that a Ram's Head, had but one Horn which was brought to Pericles. That Ram was born in a Country Houſe of Pericles. Lampon the Diviner declared that it was a Sign that the Power of the two (h) Factions, which were then in Athens, would fall into the Hands of the Perſon in whoſe Houſe that Prodigy happen'd. Anaxagoras went another way to work. He diſſected that Monſter, and finding the Scull ſmaller than it ſhould be, and of an Oval Figure, he explained the Reaſon why that Ram had but one Horn, and why it came out in the middle of the Forehead. That Method of giving an Account of Prodigies was admired; but ſome time after Lampon was admired, when they ſaw the Faction of Thucydides overthrown, and all the Authority in the Hands of Pericles. The Hiſtorian ſays thereupon that the Diviner and the Philoſopher might be both in the right, the one for gueſſing at the Effect, and the other for gueſſing at (g) Plut. in Pericle p. 154. E.

A REFLECTION upon the Doctrine of Preſages.

(h) That of Pericles, and that of Thucydides Son of Myleſius.

once very Beneficial (B) to the Athenians. They were so unjust as to suspect at the Cause. It was the Philosopher's Business, says he, to explain from whence and how that only Horn was formed; but it was the Diviner's Duty to declare why it was formed, and what it portended. For they, who say that as soon as a natural Reason is found out, the Prodigy vanishes away, are not aware that they destroy Artificial as well as Celestial Signs. Watch-Lights upon Towers, Sun-Dyals, &c. depend upon certain Causes, which act according to certain Rules; yet they are appointed to signify certain Things. This is the most specious and strongest Reason that can be alledged for the Vulgar Opinion which Anaxagoras opposed. That a natural Phenomenon may be a Prodigy, or a sign of a future Evil, it is not at all necessary that Philosophers should not be able to give any Account of it, for tho' they may explain it by the natural Virtues of Second Causes, yet it may very well be appointed to presage something. Watch Lights are explained by natural Reasons, nevertheless they are a Sign of the Course which Pilots ought to steer. It must be therefore confest that Plutarch has defended the common Opinion as learnedly as it can be maintained. The Efficient Cause, when found out, does not exclude the Final Cause, and even necessarily supposes it in every Action directed by an Intelligent Being. What Grounds do therefore Philosophers go upon, when they maintain that Eclipses being a natural Consequence of the Motion of Planets, cannot be a Presage of the Death of a King, and that the overflowing of Rivers being a natural Effect of Rains, or melted Snows, cannot portend a Sedition, the dethroning of a Prince, or such like publick Calamities? I answer that they are of that Opinion because the Effects of Nature cannot be Presages of Future Contingents, unless they be appointed for that End by a particular Intelligent Being. It is evident that the Laws of Nature being left in their general Course, would never raise any Towers, nor set up Watch-Lights upon them for the Use of Pilots. It must be the Work of Men, it is necessary that their particular Wills should apply the Virtue of Bodies in such a Manner as may relate to the End which they propose to themselves. On the other hand, it is manifest that the Laws of Nature being left in their general Course cannot produce any Meteors, or the overflowing of a River, whereby the Inhabitants of a Kingdom may know that there will arise a Sedition in two or three Years time, which will overthrow the Monarchy. It is manifest that a particular Intelligent Being must needs form those Meteors or those great Inundations, that they may be the Signs of a Change of Government. But then it will be impossible to explain them by physical Reasons; for that which depends upon the particular Will of a Man or an Angel, is not the Object of a Science: the Causes thereof cannot be found out by Philosophy. From whence it follows, 1. That an Event which may be explained by physical Reasons, is not a Presage of a Future Contingent, and that such a Presage cannot be explained by the Laws of Nature. So that when Plutarch says, that the Diviner found out the Final Cause, and the Philosopher the Efficient Cause, he must suppose that a particular Spirit so disposed the Scull of that Ram, that his Brains being straitned, and ending sharp over against the middle of the Forehead, produced but one Horn which came out in that very Place. He must also suppose that that Spirit modified the Brains of that Ram in such a manner, to the end that the Athenians might know that the Faction of Pericles would oppress that of Thucydides, and have all the Power in its Hands. But that Supposition being contrary to the Notions whereby we know that none but God can foresee Future Contingents, cannot be admitted; and so the Vulgar Opinion about Presages cannot be adopted without acknowledging that God produces miraculously, and by a particular Will all the Natural Effects which are look'd upon as Prognosticks. According to that Supposition, Miracles properly so call'd, would be almost as frequent as Natural Effects; which is a prodigious Absurdity. Observe that if God had been willing to work a Miracle, to inform the Athenians that one of their Factions would be destroyed, he needed not straiten the Brains of that Ram. He would have produced a Horn in the middle of the Forehead without making any Alteration in the Brains, which would have set the Prodigy in a greater Light. However, I hope the Reader will not find fault with me, for having made a Reflection upon a Thought of Plutarch, which is so specious that it might seem to most Readers to be a solid One.

(B) An Account of Eclipses, which proved once very Beneficial to the Athenians.] I shall set down a Passage of Plutarch, which concerns a Naval Expedition in the Beginning of the Peloponnesian War. (a) "And now the Vessels having their Complement of "Men, and Pericles being gone aboard the Admiral's own Galley, it happen'd that the Sun was "in an Eclipse, and it grew dark on a sudden, to "the extream Affrightement of them all, looking "upon it as a dismal Token, and an unlucky ill-boding Omen. Wherefore Pericles perceiving the "Pilot or Steersman seized with a great Fear, and "at a stand what to do, he took his Cloak and put "it before the Man's Face, and muffling him up in "it that he could not see, he asked him whether he "did imagin there was any dreadful Thing of great "Hurt in this that he had done to him, or whether "he thought it was the Sign of any Hurt: he answering, no; Why, said he, and what does that "there differ from this, only that that which has "caused that Darkness there, is something greater "than a Cloak." Quintilian observes that Pericles freed the Athenians from a great Fear at that time. (b) An vero cum Pericles Athenienses Solis obscuratione territos, redditis ejus rei causis, metu liberavit: aut cum Sulpitius ille Gallus in exercitu L. Pauli de Lunæ defectione disseruit, ne velut prodigio divinitus facto militum animi terrerentur, non videtur esse usus oratoris officio? Valerius Maximus does not say as Plutarch does, that Pericles was upon the Fleet; he pretends that this Astronomical Precept was given in the middle of Athens. (c) Cum obscurato repentè sole inusitatis perfusa tenebris Athenæ sollicitudine agerentur, interitum sibi cœlesti denuntiatione portendi credentes, Pericles processit in medium, & quæ à præceptore suo Anaxagora pertinentia ad solis & lunæ cursum acceperat, disseruit: nec ulterius trepidare cives suos vano metu passus est. Frontinus mentions the Explication of the Thunder-bolt, and not of an Eclipse. Pericles, says he (d), cum in castra ejus fulmen decidisset, terruissetque milites, advocata concione, lapidibus in conspectu omnium collisis, ignem excussit, sedavitque turbationem, cùm docuisset similiter nubium attritu excuti fulmen.

If all the Athenian Generals had had the Philosopher Anaxagoras for their Master, the Misfortune, which happen'd to the Athenian Fleet before Syracusa, had not happen'd. It was ready to set Sail in order to return to Athens, but the Moon being Eclipsed, the General Nicias put off the Departure, which occasion'd the Ruin of the Fleet. Let us hear Plutarch. "(e) The Moon fell Eclipsed in the "Night, to the great Fright of Nicias and others, "who for want of Experience, or out of Superstition, are fear'd with these Appearances. That "the Sun would be darkened about the thirtieth "day of the Month by the Moon going between, "this even the ordinary People now well enough "understood; but the Moon it self to be dark'ned, "how that could come about, and how on the "sudden a broad full Moon should lose all her "Light, and shew such various Colours, that was "not easy to be comprehended; but they concluded it to be Ominous, and a Sign from God of "heavy Calamities to ensue. For he, who the "first and the most plainly of any, and with the "greatest Assurance, committed to Writing, how "the Moon is enlightned, and over-shadowed, was "Anaxagoras; yet neither was he Ancient, nor his "Notion much taken Notice of, but was look'd upon "as Heterodox, and kept secret, passing only "amongst a few, under some kind of Caution and "Confidence, for they would not suffer Naturalists "and μετεωρολέσχας, as they then call'd them, that "is, such who dispute of things above, as lessening "the Divine Power, by deducing Things from natural senseless Causes, and a long Chain of Necessity, without any thing of Providence, or a "Free Agent. Hence it was that Protagoras was banished, and Anaxagoras cast in Prison, and Pericles "had very much a do to procure his Liberty." These Words of Plutarch may afford Matter enough for several Reflections.

(B 2) To

(a) Plut. in vit. Pericl.

(b) Quintil. Instit. Orat. l. 1. c. 10. p. m. 55.

(c) Val. Max. l. 8 c. 11. n. 1. ext.

(d) Front. Stratag. l. 1. c. 1

(e) Plut. in Nicia.

ſpect him (Bb) of Atheiſm, becauſe he had thoroughly learn'd the Doctrine of that Philoſopher. He ſignalized himſelf by an undaunted Courage, and an extraordinary force of Eloquence *, which was increaſed and ſtrengthned by the Science of Nature; and he knew ſo well how to accommodate himſelf to the Humour of the People according to the Times, that under a Republican Government, he acquired almoſt as (C) great an Authority as if he had been a Monarch.

I is

* See the Rem. C.

(Bb) To ſuſpect him of Atheiſm, becauſe.] I ſhall quote a grave Author for it. (f) ἤκουσε δὲ διδασκάλων, Ἀναξαγόρου μὲν ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ, ὅθεν, φησὶν Ἄντυλλος, καὶ ἄθεος ἠρέμα ἐνομίσθη, τῆς ἐκεῖθεν θεωρίας ἐμφορηθείς. Diſcipulos autem audivit in Philoſophia quidem, Anaxagoram unde etiam, Antyllo teſte, atheus paulatim haberi cœpit, quod illius philoſophiæ diſciplinam avidius hauſiſſet. See a Paſſage of Plutarch at the end of the Remark M. Here is another Paſſage out of Diodorus Siculus. (g) Διόπερ ἐκκλησίας συναχθείσης περὶ τούτων, οἱ μὲν ἐχθροὶ τοῦ Περικλέους ἔπεισαν τὸν δῆμον συλλαβεῖν τὸν Φειδίαν, καὶ αὐτοῦ τοῦ Περικλέους κατηγόρουν ἱεροσυλίαν. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις Ἀναξαγόραν τὸν σοφιστήν, διδάσκαλον ὄντα Περικλέους, ὡς ἀσεβοῦντα εἰς τοὺς θεοὺς ἐσυκοφάντουν· συνέπλεκον δ' ἐν ταῖς κατηγορίαις καὶ διαβολαῖς τὸν Περικλέα, διὰ τὸν φθόνον σπεύδοντες διαβαλεῖν τὴν τἀνδρὸς ὑπεροχήν τε καὶ δόξαν. Advocatâ igitur ob hoc concione, malevoli Periclis ſuaſores populo exiſtunt, ut Phidiam comprehendant, ipſumque Periclem ſacrilegii requirant. Anaxagoram præterea ſophiſtam, qui præceptor Periclis erat, quod impiè de diis ſentiat, criminantur. Eiſdem interim criminibus & calumniis etiam Periclem involvunt, hoc unice agentes, ut excellentem viri authoritatem & gloriam calumniis ſuis convellerent ac labefactarent. That Author adds, that Pericles found no better way to calm that ſtorm, than to engage the Republick in an important War. He knew (h) the Genius and Humour of the People. They eſteem a great Man, when they are involved in a great War; but the Sweetneſs of Peace plunging them into Idleneſs, they diſcover their Jealouſies, and indite him as a Criminal.

(C) Almoſt as great an Authority, as if he had been a Monarch.] It has been ſaid that he got that Authority by his Eloquence. (a) Pericles feliciſſimis naturæ incrementis, ſub Anaxagora præceptore ſummo ſtudio perpolitus & inſtructus, liberis Athenarum cervicibus jugum ſervitutis impoſuit: egit enim ille urbem, & verſavit arbitrio ſuo. Cumque adverſus voluntatem populi loqueretur, jucunda nihilominus & popularis ejus vox erat. Itaque veteris comœdiæ maledica lingua, quamvis potentiam viri perſtringere cupiebat, tamen in labris ejus hominis melle dulciorem leporem fatebatur habitare: inque animis eorum, qui illum audierant, quaſi aculeos quoſdam relinqui prædicabat. Valerius Maximus adds, that the only difference between Piſiſtratus and Pericles was, that the one exercifed Tyranny with Arms, and the other without Arms. Quid enim inter Piſiſtratum & Periclem interfuit, niſi quod ille armatus, hic ſine armis tyrannidem geſſit? To give a greater weight to that Teſtimony of Valerius Maximus, I ſhall obſerve that he had it from Cicero. (b) Quid Pericles? de cujus dicendi copia ſic accepimus, ut quum contra voluntatem Athenienſium loqueretur pro ſalute patriæ, ſeverius tamen id ipſum, quod ille contra populares homines diceret, populare omnibus, & jucundum videretur, cujus in labris veteres comici etiam quum illi maledicerent, quod tum Athenis fieri licebat, leporem habitaſſe dixerant, tantamque in eo vim fuiſſe, ut in eorum mentibus qui audiſſent, quaſi aculeos quoſdam relinqueret. At hunc non declamator aliquis ad clepſydram latrare docuerat, ſed, ut accepimus, Clazomenius ille Anaxagoras vir ſummus in maximarum rerum ſcientia. Itaque hic doctrina, conſilio, eloquentia excellens, quadraginta annos præfuit Athenis, & urbanis eodem tempore, & bellicis rebus. We have here a proof of what I ſhall ſay, concerning the Liberty which the Comick Poets took againſt Pericles. Their Satyrical Strokes ſet off the Praiſes they could not refuſe him, by reaſon of his Eloquence. If any Body deſires to know the Names of the Poets who praiſed it, he needs only conſult Cicero, who tells us that Eupolis (c) ſaid that the Goddeſs of Perſuaſion had her Seat upon Pericles's Lips, and that the Eloquence of that Man left a pleaſant Sting in the Hearts of his Hearers. (d) Non quemadmodum de Pericle ſcripſit Eupolis, cum delectatione aculeos etiam relinqueret in animis eorum à quibus eſſet auditus. Diodorus (e) Siculus, and Pliny the Younger, have preſerved to us the very Words of that Comick Poet. (f) Nec me præterit ſummum oratorem Periclem ſic à comico Eupolide laudari,

Πρὸς δέ γ' αὐτοῦ τῷ τάχει
Πειθώ τις ἐπεκάθιζεν ἐπὶ τοῖς χείλεσιν.
Οὕτως ἐκήλει, καὶ μόνος τῶν ῥητόρων
Τὸ κέντρον ἐγκατέλειπε τοῖς ἀκροωμένοις.

You will find in the Scholiaſt upon Ariſtophanes the ſame Verſes of Eupolis with ſome others that go before, and contain an Encomium upon the Eloquence of Pericles, which pleaſed, and was admired and feared: (g) Hujus ſuavitate maxime hilaratæ ſunt Athenæ, hujus ubertatem & copiam admiratæ, ejuſdem vim dicendi terroremque timuerunt. It charmed by its Sweetneſs, it was admired by reaſon of its Copiouſneſs, and feared by reaſon of its Force. Don't think it therefore an incredible thing that it made Pericles Reign in the middle of a Republick. His Words have been compared with the Thunder. (h) Qui (Pericles) ſi tenui genere uteretur, nunquam ab Ariſtophane poeta fulgurare, tonare, permiſcere Græciam dictus eſſet. That Paſſage of Cicero was parapheas'd by Pliny the Younger. (i) Adde, quæ de eodem Pericle comicus alter, ἤστραπτ', ἐβρόντα, ξυνεκύκα τὴν Ἑλλάδα. Non enim amputata oratio & abſciſſa, ſed lata, & magnifica, & excelſa tonat, fulgurat, omnia denique perturbat ac miſcet. The firſt time Cicero publiſhed his Book, he aſcribed thoſe Words to Eupolis; but he acknowledged his miſtake in another Work. (k) Mihi quidem gratum, & erit gratius ſi non modo in libris tuis, ſed etiam in aliorum per librarios tuos Ariſtophanem repoſueris pro Eupoli. Ariſtophanes mentions only the Lightning and the Thunder; but Plutarch mentions the Thunder-Bolt. "The Comedies, ſays he, of the then Maſters of "the Stage, who both in good earneſt, and out of "merriment too, let fly many ſhrewd Words at "him, do plainly ſhew that he got that Appellation "(of Olympian) eſpecially upon the account of his "being an able Speaker, by ſaying that he Thundered "and Lightned when he Harangued the People, and "that he carried a dreadful Thunder-Bolt in his "Tongue (l). The Author adds an Anſwer of Thucydides which confirms this. "When Archidamus the King of the Lacedæmonians asked him, "whether He or Pericles were the better Wreſtler? "he made this Anſwer; When I, ſaid he, have "thrown him and given him a fair Fall, he by "ſtanding out in the denial, ſaying that he had "no Fall, gets the better of me, and perſwades "People into a belief of what he ſays whether "they will or no, though they ſaw the quite contrary."

I have not done yet with the Eloquence of Pericles. Some ſay he was the firſt that wrote his Harangues before he recited them. (m) πρῶτος γραπτὸν λόγον ἐν δικαστηρίῳ εἶπε, τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ σχεδιαζόντων. Primus ſcriptam orationem habuit in judicio, cum illi qui ipſum anteceſſerant ex tempore dicerent. Corradus has no reaſon to think (n) that Pericles read his Manuſcript; for an Harangue when read, is not very fit to produce the Effects which are aſcribed to the Eloquence of that Orator. Some Harangues of Pericles were ſtill extant in Quintilian's time; but that Learned Rhetor finding them diſproportioned to the high Reputation of that great Man, approved (o) the opinion of thoſe who lookt upon 'em as a ſuppoſititious Work. (p) Cicero in Bruto negat ante Periclem ſcriptum quicquam quod ornatum oratorium habeat: ejus aliqua ferri. Equidem non reperio quicquam tantâ eloquentiæ famâ dignum: ideoque minus miror eſſe qui nihil ab eo ſcriptum putent: hæc autem quæ feruntur, ab aliis eſſe compoſita. But an indifferent Harangue being recited by an excellent Orator, may charm the Hearers. A good way of Delivery contributes moſt to it. See the Remark C of the Article Narni. I ſhall conclude with a Paſſage of Thucydides, who tells us that Pericles having the Gift of reſtraining the Athenians when they were too Bold, and of animating them when they wanted Boldneſs, was at the bottom the King of a Titular Republick. (q) Ὁπότε γοῦν αἴσθοιτό αὐτοὺς παρὰ καιρὸν ὕβρει θαρσοῦντας, λέγων κατέ-

πλησσεν

(f) Marcel. in vit. Thucyd.

(g) Diod. Sicul. l. 12. c. 39. p. m. 433.

(h) Id. ib.

(a) Val. Max. l. 8. c. 9. p. m. 699, 700.

(b) Cic. de Oratore l. 3. fol. m. 95. B.

(c) Πειθὼ quam vocant Græci, cujus effector eſt orator, hanc Suadam appellavit Ennius. Ejus autem Cethegum medullam fuiſſe vult, ut quam deam in Periclis labris ſcripſit Eupolis ſeſſitaviſſe, hujus hic medullam noſtrum oratorem fuiſſe dixerit. Id. in Bruto pag. m. 104.

(d) Id. ib. p. 62.

(e) Diod. Sicul. l. 12. c. 40. p. m. 434.

(f) Plin. Ep. 20. l. 1. p. m. 60.

(g) Cic. in Bruto p. 61.

(h) Id. in Oratore fol. m. 118 B.

(i) Plin. [illegible]

(k) Cic. ad Attic. Ep. 6. l. 12. p. m. 401, 402.

(l) Αἱ μέντοι κωμῳδίαι τῶν τότε διδασκάλων σπουδῇ τε πολλὰς καὶ μετὰ γέλωτος ἀφεικότων φωνὰς εἰς αὐτόν, ἐπὶ τῷ λόγῳ μάλιστα τὴν προσωνυμίαν γενέσθαι δηλοῦσι, βροντᾶν μὲν αὐτὸν καὶ ἀστράπτειν ὅτε δημηγοροίη, δεινὸν δὲ κεραυνὸν ἐν γλώττῃ φέρειν λεγόντων. At comœdiæ, quod qui ea tempeſtate docebant eas, & ſerias & ridiculas voces in eum multas ejacularentur, traxiſſe ex vi dicendi eum oſtendunt hoc cognomen: (Olympii) Tonare enim & fulminare concionantem, & vehemens eum in lingua fulmen dicebant gerere. Plut. ib. p. 156. B

(m) Suidas in Περικλῆς.

(n) Corrad. in Brutum Cicer. p. 77.

(o) Plut. ibid. ſays that Pericles left no other Writings but ſome Decrees.

(p) Quint. inſt. Orat. l. 3. c. 1. p. m. 115.

(q) Thucyd. l. 2. p. 141. Francof. 1514. fol.

'Tis true that he was not free from the Satyrical (D) Railleries of the Comick Poets. He was defamed by them upon ſeveral Accounts, but eſpecially by reaſon of his Love to Aſpaſia. His immoderate Love of Women was one of the Vices he was* moſt upbraided with. He bore patiently (E) thoſe Railleries, and he might have κατέπλησσεν ἐπὶ τὸ φοβεῖσθαι, καὶ δεδιότας αὖ ἀλόγως, ἀντικαθίστη πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ θαρσεῖν. ἐγίγνετό τε λόγῳ μὲν, δημοκρατία, ἔργῳ δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ πρώτου ἀνδρὸς ἀρχή. Quoties itaque intelligebat eos [illegible] intempeſtive ferociterque [illegible], orationis acrimonia deterrebat: quoties ab re formidantes, rurſus ad fiduciam erigebat. Denique verbo quidem, popularis ſtatus, re autem ipſa, penes primarium virum principatus erat. Plutarch (r) has wonderfully paraphraſed that Paſſage of Thucydides; to which he adds very much to the purpoſe what Plato ſays concerning the force of Eloquence: he obſerves alſo, that the Poets laught at the Republick for granting ſo much power to one Man, and that they exhorted Pericles to promiſe upon his Oath, that he would not be a Tyrant. Αὐτὸν δ᾽ ἀπομόσαι μὴ τυραννήσειν κελεύοντες, ὡς ἀσυμμέτρου πρὸς δημοκρατίαν καὶ βαρυτέρας περὶ αὐτὸν οὔσης ὑπεροχῆς. ὁ δὲ Τηλεκλείδης παραδεδωκέναι φησὶν αὐτῷ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους πόλεών τε φόρους, αὐτάς τε πόλεις, τὰς μὲν δεῖν, τὰς δ᾽ ἀναλύειν· λάϊνα τείχη, τὰ μὲν οἰκοδομεῖν, τὰ δὲ αὖτε πάλιν καταβάλλειν, σπονδὰς, δύναμιν, κράτος, εἰρήνην, πλοῦτόν τ᾽ εὐδαιμονίαν τε. Ipſumque jubent, ut cujus ſint immodicæ opes & intolerabiles liberæ civitati, tyrannidem ſe uſurpaturum abjurare. Teleclides permiſiſſe ei refert Athenienſes urbium tributa, ipſaſque ædes urbes has ligare, illas ſolvere, muros lapideos nunc extruere, nunc eoſdem demoliri, fœdera, opes, vires, pacem, opulentiam, fortunaſque omnes (ſ).

I muſt not forget to obſerve that, with the extraordinary force of his Genius, he made a very good uſe of his Philoſophical Knowledge, the better to ſet off his Eloquence. The ſublime Speculations, and the Phyſical and Metaphyſical Depths wherewith Anaxagoras had imbibed his Mind, would have proved an obſtacle to ſeveral others, who had been deſirous of acquiring the glory of being Great Orators. But as for him, he found in them wherewith to give a wonderful force to his Harangues. We learn this fine particularity of Plato: his Expreſſions are noble, and will charm thoſe who underſtand Greek. (t) Πᾶσαι ὅσαι μεγάλαι τῶν τεχνῶν προσδέονται ἀδολεσχίας καὶ μετεωρολογίας φύσεως πέρι· τὸ γὰρ ὑψηλόνουν τοῦτο καὶ πάντῃ τελεσιουργὸν ἔοικεν ἐντεῦθέν ποθεν εἰσιέναι. ὃ καὶ Περικλῆς πρὸς τῷ εὐφυὴς εἶναι ἐκτήσατο. προσπεσὼν γὰρ, οἶμαι, τοιούτῳ ὄντι Ἀναξαγόρᾳ, μετεωρολογίας ἐμπλησθεὶς, καὶ ἐπὶ φύσιν νοῦ τε καὶ ἀνοίας ἀφικόμενος (ὧν δὴ πέρι τὸν πολὺν λόγον ἐποιεῖτο Ἀναξαγόρας) ἐντεῦθεν εἵλκυσεν ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν λόγων τέχνην τὸ πρόσφορον αὐτῇ. Magnæ quælibet artes exercitatione dialectica, contemplationeque ſublimium in natura rerum indigent. Ipſa enim mentis ſublimitas, & vis efficax in quavis re perficienda, hinc quodammodo proficiſci videntur: quod Pericles ad ingenii acumen adjunxit. Anaxagoræ namque hujuſmodi rerum indagatoris familiaritate fretus contemplationi ſe tradidit mentiſque & dementiæ naturam illam comprehendit, de qua Anaxagoras diffusè diſſeruit. Unde ad dicendi artem quod ipſi conducere videbatur, traduxit. Cicero, who as I think, had that paſſage of Plato in his view, does not expreſs all the ſublimity of it. Pericles, ſays he (a), primus adhibuit doctrinam, quamquam tum nulla erat dicendi, tamen ab Anaxagora phyſico eruditus exercitationem mentis à reconditis abſtruſiſque rebus ad cauſas forenſes popularesque facile traduxerat, hujus ſuavitate, &c.

(D) From the Satyrical Railleries of the Comick Poets.] He was abuſed by Cratinus, Teleclides, Eupolis, Plato the Comick Poet, and Dexippus. Plutarch does not only ſay ſo, but even ſets down (c) their very Words: Tanaquillus Faber obſerves (d) that Cratinus was reſolute and bold in his Compoſitions, and that his Pen ſpared not the Principal Officers of the Republick, and the Great and Olympian Pericles. Let us ſee what he ſays in another Place. "(e) Hermippus did a thing which St. Auguſtin was "doubtleſs ignorant of: for that Great Doctor, who "underſtood not Greek ſo well as ſome might think, "and ſtudied more carefully the Doctrine of Grace, "than the Greek Hiſtory or the Comick Poets, ſays "ſomewhere in his Work de Civitate Dei, that the "Licentiouſneſs of the Stage was never ſo impudent "as to offend Pericles: whereas Terence made no "ſcruple to offend Jupiter himſelf. (that Paſſage "is to be found in the Eunuch.) He was therefore "miſtaken, for Hermippus made ſome Verſes againſt "Pericles." There was never a more unjuſt Cenſure than this is; for St. Auguſtin does not ſay what the Salmurian Critick imputes to him. That Father has quoted a long Paſſage, wherein ſome Body deplores the Caſe of Great Pericles, becauſe he was not ſpared by the Stage Poets. (f) Quid autem hinc ſenſerint Romani veteres, Cicero teſtatur in libris, quos de Republica ſcripſit, ubi Scipio diſputans ait, Nunquam comœdiæ niſi conſuetudo vitæ pateretur, probare ſua theatris flagitia potuiſſent. Et Græci quidem antiquiores vitioſæ ſuæ opinionis quandam convenientiam ſervaverunt, apud quos fuit etiam lege conceſſum, ut quod vellet comœdia nominatim, vel de quo vellet, diceret. Itaque ſicut in eiſdem libris loquitur Africanus, quem illa non attigit, vel potius quem non vexavit, cui pepercit? Eſto: populares homines improbos, in repub. ſeditioſos, Cleonem, Cleophontem, Hyperbolum læſit. Patiamur, inquit, etſi hujuſmodi cives, à cenſore melius eſt quàm à poeta notari: ſed Periclem, cùm jam ſuæ civitati maxima autoritate plurimos annos domi & bello præfuiſſet, violari verſibus, & eos agi in ſcena non plus decuit, quàm ſi Plautus, inquit, noſter voluiſſet, aut Nævius, Publio & Cneo Scipioni, aut Cæcilius Marco Catoni maledicere. Deinde paulò poſt noſtræ, inquit, contrà duodecim tabulæ cum perpaucas res capite ſanxiſſent, in his hanc quoque ſanciendam putaverunt, ſi quis occentaviſſet, ſive carmen condidiſſet, quod infamiam faceret, flagitiumve alteri. Præclarè. Judiciis enim ac Magiſtratuum diſceptationibus legitimis propoſitam vitam, non poëtarum ingeniis habere debemus, nec probrum audire, niſi ea lege ut reſpondere liceat, & judicio defendere. Hæc ex Ciceronis quarto de Republica libro ad verbum excerpenda arbitratus ſum, nonnullis propter faciliorem intellectum vel prætermiſſis, vel paululum commutatis. All Authors ought to learn from this miſtake of Tanaquillus Faber to miſtruſt their Memory, and never to alledge any thing, without conſulting over again the Books wherein they remember they have read it. He had read in St. Auguſtin, that the Romans would not have permitted that their Players ſhould offend Scipio, tho' they permitted that Terence ſhould offend Jupiter: he miſtook Pericles for Scipio, and then he thought he had a good reaſon to rail at St. Auguſtin. Let us ſee the Words of that Father, they are fine and judicious, they upbraid the Roman Legiſlators with a very great Fault; they forbad the Poets to abuſe their Magiſtrates, and permitted them to ridicule their Gods. (g) At Romani, ſicut in illa de Repub. diſputatione gloriatur Scipio, probris & injuriis poëtarum ſubjectam vitam famamque habere noluerunt, capite etiam punire ſancientes tale carmen condere ſi quis auderet. Quod erga ſe quidem ſatis honeſtè conſtituerunt, ſed erga Deos ſuos ſuperbè & irreligioſè. Quos cùm ſcirent non ſolùm patienter, ſed etiam libenter poëtarum probris maledictiſque lacerari, ſe potius hujuſcemodi injuriis indignos eſſe duxerunt, ſeque ab eis etiam lege munierunt, illorum autem iſta etiam ſacris ſolennitatibus miſcuerunt. Itane tandem Scipio laudas, hanc poëtis Romanis negatam eſſe licentiam, ut cuiquam opprobrium infligerent Romanorum, cum videas, eos nulli Deorum pepercisse veſtrorum? Itane pluris tibi habenda eſt exiſtimatio veſtræ curiæ, quàm Capitolii, imò Romæ unius quam cœli totius: ut linguam maledicam in cives tuos exercere poëtæ etiam lege prohiberentur, & in Deos tuos ſecuri, tanta convitia nullo Senatore, nullo Cenſore, nullo Principe, nullo Pontifice prohibente jacularentur? Indignum videlicet fuit, ut Plautus aut Nævius Publio & Cneo Scipioni, aut Cæcilius M. Catoni malediceret: & dignum fuit, ut Terentius veſter flagitio Jovis optimi maximi adoleſcentium nequitiam concitaret. Arnobius had already upbraided the Heathens with the ſame thing. See the Margin (b): his Words do very well deſerve to be read.

(E) He bore patiently thoſe Railleries.] We don't find that any of the Poets who abuſed him, was puniſhed for it. Yet it is very likely, that a Man of ſo great an Authority, might have eaſily puniſhed

---

* See the Rem. F.

(r) Plut. ub. ſup. p. 151.

(ſ) Id. ib.

(t) Plato in Phædro p. m. 1237. A, B.

(a) Cic. in Bruto p. m. 72, 73.

(c) Plut. in Pericle p. 153, 154, 160, 165, 170.

(d) The Lives of the Greek Poets, p. m. 90.

(e) Ib. p. 81, 82.

(f) Auguſt. de Civ. Dei l. 2. c. 9. p. m. 155.

(g) Aug. ib. c. 12. p. 165, 151.

(b) Nec [illegible] vobis ſaltem iſtum meruerunt honorem, ut quibus expellitis à vobis, eiſdem ab his legibus propulſaretis injurias. Majeſtatis ſunt apud vos rei, qui de veſtris ſequius obmurmuraverint aliquid regibus. Magiſtratum in ordinem redigere, Senatorem aut convitio proſequi, ſuis eſſe decreſtis periculoſiſſimum pœnis. Carmen malum conſcribere, quo fama alterius coinquinetur & vita, decemviralibus ſcitis evadere noluiſtis impune: ac ne veſtras aures convitio aliquis petulantiore pulſaret, de atrocibus formulas conſtituiſtis injuriis. Soli Dii ſunt apud vos ſuperi inhonorati, contemptibiles, viles: in quos jus eſt à vobis datum, quæ quiſque voluerit dicere: turpitudinum jacere, quas libido confinxerit atque excogitaverit, formas. Arnob. l. 4. p. 150, 151.

ed

have been look'd upon as a happy Man, had he not been expoſed to ſome other Evils; but he felt the malignity of Fortune in ſeveral reſpects, eſpecially in (F) his Family *, for his Wife and Children gave him a great deal of trouble. An ed the boldneſs of thoſe Men. They touched him in his moſt ſenſible part; for they call'd Aſpaſia an Impudent and Lecherous Concubine, they call'd her ſo, I ſay, upon the Stage. (i) Ἐν δὲ ταῖς κωμῳδίαις Ὀμφάλη τε νέα καὶ Δηϊάνειρα καὶ πάλιν Ἥρα προσαγορεύεται. Κρατῖνος δ' ἄντικρυς παλλακὴν αὐτὴν εἴρηκεν ἐν τούτοις. Ἥραν τέ οἱ Ἀσπασίαν τίκτει καταπυγοσύνη παλλακὴν κυνώπιδα. In comœdiis nova Omphale & Deianira, alias Juno nominatur. Cratinus diſerte pellicem appellavit his verſibus:

Junonem Aſpaſiam parit,
Et impudicam & pellicem, inverecundamque.

His Indolence proceeded partly from Policy; for if Pericles had gone about to ſtop the Mouth of the Poets, he would have made the Athenians ſenſible of a thing which it was not his Intereſt they ſhould ſee: they would have perceived that they had only the Titular Government of the Republick, and that all the Power was in effect re-united in one Man. Nothing will more effectually hinder the People from perceiving the Extinction of their Liberty, than to be permitted to abuſe, without being puniſhed for it, thoſe who enjoy the reality of a Monarchical Power, under ſuch Names as have nothing that is odious. It was therefore neceſſary that Pericles ſhould deſpiſe the licentiouſneſs of the Stage: but we muſt not aſcribe his Patience to meer Art and Policy: it was alſo an effect of his Great Soul; for a Man ſo courageous and ſo briſk as he was, had never endured ſuch an ill Uſage with ſo much Patience, had he not had an extraordinary great Soul. Read this Paſſage of his Life. (k) “One time being reviled and ill ſpoken of all Day long, in his own Hearing, by a villainous and ill tongued Raſcal, that cared not what he ſaid, he bore it patiently all along without returning him one Word; all this in the open Court or the Aſſembly of the People, where he was at the ſame time engaged in the proſecution and diſpatch of ſome weighty urgent Affair. In the Evening he went Home in very good order, as one unconcerned, this Fellow dogging him at the Heels, and pelting him all the way he went with all the hard Words and foul Language he could take up. As he was ready to go into his Houſe, it being by this time dark, he ordered one of his Servants to take a Light, and to go along with the Man and ſee him ſafe Home.„ He ſhewed the force of his Courage and his great Patience in the beginning of the Peloponneſian War. Whilſt the Enemies were Ravaging Attica, Pericles being not able to repulſe them, was contented to provide for the ſecurity of Athens. The Athenians murmured at his Conduct, made ſharp Verſes againſt him, and reviled and threatned him. He deſpiſed their Anger, and followed his own Judgment with the greateſt tranquillity. Ἐχρῆτο τοῖς αὐτοῦ λογισμοῖς, βραχέα φροντίζων τῶν καταβοώντων καὶ δυσχεραινόντων. καίτοι πολλοὶ μὲν αὐτοῦ τῶν φίλων δεόμενοι προσέκειντο, πολλοὶ δὲ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἀπειλοῦντες καὶ κατηγοροῦντες. πολλοὶ δ' ᾖδον ᾄσματα καὶ σκώμματα πρὸς αἰσχύνην, ἐφυβρίζοντες αὐτοῦ τὴν στρατηγίαν, ὡς ἄνανδρον καὶ προϊεμένην τὰ πράγματα τοῖς πολεμίοις. ἐπεφύετο δὲ καὶ Κλέων ἤδη διὰ τῆς πρὸς ἐκεῖνον ὀργῆς τῶν πολιτῶν πορευόμενος ἐπὶ τὴν δημαγωγίαν... πλὴν ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἐκινήθη τῶν τοιούτων ὁ Περικλῆς, ἀλλὰ πράως καὶ σιωπῇ τὴν ἀδοξίαν καὶ τὴν ἀπέχθειαν ὑφιστάμενος (a). Sua ſequens conſilia, contempſit obſtrepentes & ſtomachantes: quamvis multi eum amici obtunderent precibus, multi minitarentur adverſarii inſectarenturque, multi carmina canerent & dicteria probroſa, convitiiſque inceſſerent ejus imperium ut molle & prodens hoſtibus rempubl. Et verò etiam Cleon, incenſam conſpiciens in illum civitatem, mordebat eum, auram popularem captans.———Verum iſtorum movit Periclem nihil: ſed comiter & tacitè tulit ignominiam & invidiam. What Courage! what Conſtancy! what force of Mind is this!

(F) He felt the malignity of Fortune .... in his Family.] The Woman he Married was related to him, and had been already Married to Hipponicus, by whom ſhe had a Boy. Pericles had two Sons by her, and grew weary of her. She was not pleaſed with him neither, and ſhe conſented without any reluctancy to Marry the Man he propoſed to her (b). I believe ſhe was not altogether in the wrong; for Pericles behaved himſelf ſo, as to give his Wife juſt cauſe of being angry with him. He loved ſome other Women; for to ſay nothing (c) of Chryſilla, with whom he was perhaps in Love whilſt he was a Husband, it is certain that he kept Aſpaſia. He was ſo fond of her that he Married her, tho' ſhe had an ill Reputation. The ill-tongu'd Athenians ſpread abroad a thouſand Stories, which could not but exaſperate his Wife againſt him, and perhaps there was ſome truth in the matter. They ſaid that Phidias the moſt excellent Sculptor in the World, and Surveyor-General of all the Works which Pericles ordered to be made for the Ornament of the City, drew in the Ladies, under pretence of ſhewing them the Works of the greateſt Maſters; but at the bottom to debauch and deliver them to Pericles. (d) Πάντα δ' ἦν σχεδὸν ἐπ' αὐτῷ, καὶ πᾶσιν ἐπεστάτει τοῖς τεχνίταις διὰ φιλίαν Περικλέους. καὶ τοῦτο τῷ μὲν φθόνον, τῷ δὲ βλασφημίαν ἤνεγκεν, ὡς ἐλευθέρας τῷ Περικλεῖ γυναῖκας εἰς τὰ ἔργα φοιτώσας ὑποδεχομένου τοῦ Φειδίου. δεξάμενοι δὲ τὸν λόγον οἱ κωμικοὶ, πολλὴν ἀσέλγειαν αὐτοῦ κατεσκέδασαν, εἴς τε τὴν Μενίππου γυναῖκα διαβάλλοντες, ἀνδρὸς φίλου καὶ ὑποστρατηγοῦντος, εἴς τε τὰς Πυριλάμπους ὀρνιθοτροφίας, ὃς ἑταῖρος ὢν Περικλέους, αἰτίαν εἶχε ταῶνας ὑφιέναι ταῖς γυναιξὶν αἷς ὁ Περικλῆς ἐπλησίαζε. Omnia fere hic ob Periclis neceſſitudinem curabat, artificibuſque praerat omnibus: id quod huic convitia, illi conflavit invidiam, quaſi ingenuas matronas, ad ſpectanda opera commeantes, in gratiam Phidias Periclis reciperet. Eos rumores excipientes comici, inſolentem laſciviam ei impegere, ac Menippi uxorem amici atque in bello legati improperavere, Pyrilampiſque avium vivaria, cui, quum familiaris Periclis eſſet, inſigebatur, ipſum mulieribus quibus conſueſceret Pericles, ſubjicere pavones. “(e) The Comick Wits of the Town, when they had got this Story by the end, made much of it, and bedaſhed him with all the Ribaldry they could invent, as if he had been the erranteſt Whoremaſter that ever liv'd; charging him falſly with the Wife of Menippus, one who was his Friend, and had been a Lieutenant General under him in the Wars; and with the Votaries or Bird-Cages of Pyrilampes, who being an Acquaintance of Pericles, they pretended and made as if he were wont to preſent (f) Peacocks and ſuch fine Birds to Pericles his Miſtreſs, the Women whom he Gallanted and kept Company with.„ If Pericles was not pleaſed with his Wife, he was leſs pleaſed ſtill with his Eldeſt Son. He was a very ill-natur'd and prodigal young Man; he made continual Complaints of his Father's Thriftineſs, eſpecially when he had Married a very coſtly Woman. He borrowed ſome Money in his Father's Name, and when he ſaw that his Father, inſtead of repaying that Sum, entered an Action againſt the Man who had lent it, he did horribly inveigh againſt him. “(g) The young Man Xanthippus thought himſelf ſo heinouſly uſed and highly diſobliged, that he openly reviled his Father; and firſt by way of Droll and Raillery, he redicul'd him by telling Stories, what his Carriage and Converſation were at home, and what kind of Diſcourſes he had with the Sophiſters and Scholars that came to his Houſe. As for inſtance, how Epitimius the Pharſalian, (one who was a Practicer of all the Five Games of Skill) having with a Dart or Javelin unawares againſt his will, ſtruck and killed a Horſe that ſtood in the way, his Father ſpent a whole Day with Protagoras in a ſerious and learned Diſpute, whether the Javelin, or the Man that threw it, or the Maſters of the Game, who appointed theſe Sports, were according to the ſtricteſt and beſt reaſon to be accounted the cauſe of this Miſchance or Horſe-Slaughter; whereas, and make the worſt of it, it was but Chance-medley. Further beſides this Steſimbrotus tells us, that it was Xanthippus himſelf, who ſpread abroad among the People that infamous Story concerning his own Wife, how his Father would make him a Cuckold, and that this untoward grudge of the young Man againſt his Father, and unnatural breach betwixt them, which was never to be healed or made up, continued with him to his very dying Day.„ Xanthippus gave out that his Wife had been debauched by Pericles. This is Plutarch's meaning; but it cannot be known neither by the

---

* Taken from Plutarch's Life of Pericles.

(i) Plut. in Pericle p. 155. D.

(k) Id. in Pericle.

(a) Plut. in Pericle p. 170. D. & E.

(b) Ib. p. 165.

(c) Αὐτὸς δὲ (Ἴων) ἐν τοῖς ἐλεγείοις ἐρᾶν μὲν λέγει Χρυσίλλης τῆς Κορινθίας, Τελέω δὲ θυγατρὸς, ἧς καὶ Περικλέα τὸν Ὀλύμπιον ἐρᾶν φησὶ Τηλεκλείδης ἐν Ἡσιόδοις. Fatetur ille (Jon) ſane in elegiis ſuis dilectam à ſe fuiſſe Chryſillam Corinthiam, Telei filiam, cujus amore captum quoque fuiſſe Periclem Olympium ait Teleclides in Heſiodis. Athen. lib. 10. p. 436. F.

(d) Plut. ib. p. 160. C.

(e) Id. in Pericle.

(f) Theſe Birds were at that time extreamly dear. See Athen. l. 14. c. 20. p. 654, 655.

(g) Plut. in Pericle.

An Obſervation ought to be made upon the (G) ſcandalous Stories, which were ſpread abroad againſt him. He died in the third Year of the * Peloponneſian War, after the Greek Words, not by the Latin Tranſlation; it muſt be gueſt at by another Paſſage of the ſame Hiſtorian. He ſays, pag. 160. that Pericles was accuſed by Steſimbrotus, as having lain with his Son's Wife. (k) Στησίμβροτος ὁ Θάσιος δεινὸν ἀσέβημα καὶ μυθῶδες ἐξενεγκεῖν ἐτόλμησεν εἰς τὴν γυναῖκα τοῦ υἱοῦ κατὰ τοῦ Περικλέους. Quum Steſimbrotus quoque Thaſius atroci ſcelere & fabuloſo Periclem aſperſerit in filii conjugem admiſſo. By the help of that Paſſage one may underſtand this, which otherwiſe would be a Riddle. (l) Πρὸς δὲ τούτοις, καὶ τὴν περὶ τὴν γυναῖκα διαβολὴν ὑπὸ τοῦ Ξανθίππου φησὶν ὁ Στησίμβροτος εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς διασπαρῆναι. Infamiam etiam à ſuis ipſius natis Steſimbrotus per Xanthippum memoriæ prodidit vulgatam. I am going to ſpeak of another Domeſtick Trouble, which is not very great if compared with the former; but it is no ſmall one, if it be conſidered without any compariſon. Pericles (m) had a Steward, who regulated the Expences of his Houſe with ſo much Thrift, that the meaneſt Citizens could not be more careful to avoid unneceſſary Charges. The Son of Pericles, and all the Women in the Houſe grumbled at it. This was ſufficient to check his Joy. One may reaſonably believe that Pericles did not think himſelf happy, when he loſt his Eldeſt Son, who gave him ſo much trouble; for we are naturally inclined to wiſh that a Son ſhould live rather than die, tho' he be undutiful. But one may be ſure that that Great Man was not unconcerned, when his ſecond Son, the only lawfully begotten Son he had, died of the Plague. He bore the death of his Eldeſt Son, and of his Siſter, and of moſt of his Friends and Relations with great Conſtancy: but he could not forbear ſhedding Tears when he was ſtruck with this laſt Blow. (n) "However he did not ſhrink upon theſe occaſions, nor did "betray or lower his high Spirit, and the greatneſs "of his Mind under all his misfortunes, and "thoſe Calamities which befell him. Nay, ſo un"concerned and ſo great a Maſter of his Paſſions "he was, at leaſt ſeem'd to be, that he was ne"ver known to weep or mourn, at the Funerals "of any of his dead Friends, nor was ſo much as "ſeen at the Burial of any of his Relations, till at "laſt he loſt the only Son which was left of thoſe "who were lawfully begotten, his Son Paralus. "This touch'd him home, and made him bow and "relent, and yet he ſtrived what he could to main"tain his principle of Gravity, and to preſerve and "keep up the Greatneſs of his Soul: But all would "not do, for when he came to perform the Cere"mony of putting a Garland of Flowers upon the "Head of the Corps, he was vanquiſhed by his "Paſſion at that ſight, ſo that he burſt out a Cry"ing, and poured forth abundance of Tears, ha"ving never done any ſuch thing (o) before." This puts me in mind of a King of Egypt mentioned by Herodotus (p), and of an omiſſion of Valerius Maximus. (q) Pericles intra quatriduum duobus mirificis adoleſcentibus filiis ſpoliatus; iis ipſis diebus & vultu priſtinum habitum retinente, & oratione nulla ex parte infractiore concionatus eſt. Ille vero caput quoque ſolito more coronatum gerere ſuſtinuit, ut nihil ex vetere ritu propter domeſticum vulnus detraheret. I look upon the ſteps which Pericles made in favour of his Baſtard, to be very diſadvantageous to him. He cauſed a Law to be Enacted, which proved the ruin of many People; and then he deſired that it ſhould be repealed in favour of his Baſtard; which was granted him meerly out of Compaſſion for his misfortunes. Οἰκτρὸν οὖν ἐδόκει τὸν κατὰ τοσούτων ἰσχύσαντα τὸν νόμον, ὑπ' αὐτοῦ πάλιν διαλυθῆναι τοῦ γράψαντος, ἡ παροῦσα δυστυχία τῷ Περικλεῖ περὶ τὸν οἶκον, ὡς δίκην τινὰ δεδωκότι τῆς ὑπεροψίας καὶ τῆς μεγαλαυχίας ἐκείνης, ἐπέκλασε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους· καὶ δόξαντες αὐτὸν νεμεσητά τε παθεῖν, ἀνθρωπίνως τε δεῖσθαι, συνεχώρησαν ἀπογράψασθαι τὸν νόθον εἰς τοὺς φράτορας, ὄνομα θέμενον τὸ αὐτοῦ (r). Quum eſſet igitur res indigna, ut quæ contra tam multos vim habuerat, ab eodem lex qui tulerat eam, rurſus abrogaretur: præſens Periclis clades domeſtica (ut qui pœnam luiſſe jam faſtus & arrogantiæ illius ſuæ videretur) infregit populum Athenienſem, putavitque eum, Deorum oppreſſum invidia, eſſe humanitate allevandum, quare indulſit ei ut in curia ſua nothus cenſeretur nomine paterno. It was without doubt a great trouble to him to think that the whole Town would reflect upon the Conduct of a Man, who having made a Law, whereby part of the Inhabitants were to be Sacrificed, I mean, reduced to Slavery, demands afterwards that it be repealed for his particular Intereſt. It was ordered By the Law I ſpeak of, that all thoſe who were not born of Athenian Parents, ſhould be reputed Baſtards, and accordingly near Five Thouſand Citizens were Sold off.

* Thucyd. l. 2. p. m. 118. It was the 3d year of the 87 Olymp.

(k) Plut. in Pericle p. 160. E.

(l) Id. ib. p. 171. B.

(m) Id. ib. p. 162.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) This does not agree with the Tears he is reported to have ſhed at the Funeral of Aſpaſia. See the Rem. M.

(p) Lib. 3. c. 14. He ſays that Pſammenitus wept not for the misfortune of his Daughter and Son, and that he wept when he ſaw the misfortune of one of his Friends. See in the ſame place what he anſwered, being ask'd what was the reaſon of ſuch a behaviour. See alſo Montagne's Eſſays, c. 2. Book 1.

(q) Val. Max. l. 5. c. 10. See alſo Ælian Var. hiſt. l. 9. c. 6. Note that Protagoras apud Plutarch. de conſol. ad Apollon. pag. 118. relates the ſame thing as Valerius Maximus does, only he reckons 8 days between the Death of the two Sons.

(r) Plut. in Pericle p. 172. E.

(G) An Obſervation ought to be made upon the ſcandalous Stories, which were ſpread abroad againſt him.] It is Plutarch's Reflection, and it tends to ſhew the uncertainty of Hiſtory; it is one of the Reaſons of ſuſpenſion in the Syſtem of Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm. Plutarch having related how Pericles was abuſed by the Poets, and ſhamefully calumniated by Steſimbrotus, cries out, that it is a difficult thing to find out Truth. The Contemporary Authors ſuppreſs or pervert it, ſome out of Hatred and Jealouſie, others out of Love and Flattery. Thoſe that come after them meet with the time paſt, which proves a kind of a Barrier, whereby they are excluded from the true knowledge of things. (b) Οὕτως ἔοικε πάντῃ χαλεπὸν εἶναι καὶ δυσθήρατον ἱστορίᾳ τἀληθές, ὅταν οἱ μὲν ὕστερον γεγονότες τὸν χρόνον ἔχωσιν ἐπιπροσθοῦντα τῇ γνώσει τῶν πραγμάτων, ἡ δὲ τῶν πράξεων καὶ τῶν βίων ἡλικιῶτις ἱστορία, τὰ μὲν φθόνοις καὶ δυσμενείαις, τὰ δὲ χαριζομένη καὶ κολακεύουσα, λυμαίνεται καὶ διαστρέφει τὴν ἀλήθειαν. Tantæ molis eſt & difficultatis aſſequi ex hiſtoria veritatem, quum poſteriores, antequam cognoſcant res, præveniantur tempore: æqualis rerum geſtarum & hominum hiſtoria partim invidia & odio, partim gratia & adulatione opprimat & pervertat veritatem. Plutarch knew thoſe difficulties by experience. He was obliged to ſay, (c) that the cauſe of the Peloponneſian War was not well known. What is it then that will be known? The reaſon why the cauſe of that War was obſcure, is the ſame on a thouſand occaſions. The Glory and Power of Pericles made him odious; hence it is that his Enemies invented a hundred falſe Stories againſt him. They were reſolved to impute to him the misfortunes of that War: ſome invented one thing, ſome another. Which ſide can a Reader take in the midſt of ſo many malicious Stories? He was no ſooner expoſed to the Hatred of the Multitude, but ſeveral Satyrical Wits ſtarted up, who ſacrificed to that Hatred, as to an ill Genius, ſuch Victims as they judged moſt proper for it. (d) Καὶ τί ἄν τις ἀνθρώπους σατυρικοὺς τοῖς βίοις καὶ τὰς κατὰ τῶν κρειττόνων βλασφημίας ὥσπερ δαίμονι κακῷ τῷ φθόνῳ τῶν πολλῶν ἀποθύοντας ἑκάστοτε, θαυμάσειεν. Et quidem quis miretur, petulanti homines lingua, ſi maledicta in principes invidiæ multitudinis, tanquam malo dæmonio, aſſidue conſecraverint. But they found none more proper than the Injuries whereby he was defamed. Plutarch is to be praiſed for having had little regard to the pretenſions of the Megarians †, tho' they were grounded upon the teſtimony of Ariſtophanes. They were Parties in that Affair againſt Pericles, and what has been lately ſaid of a Modern (e) Author, may be ſaid of Ariſtophanes and all the Comick Poets of that time, that they are only good to make one doubt of the cleareſt Truths, when they are advanced by them. If Plutarch was now alive, he would ſay that our Poſterity will hardly diſcern the true Hiſtories of our time; for there are ſo many falſities ſpread abroad, and ſo many Victims offered to the ill Genius of the Hatred and Envy of the People, that if the Athenian Satyriſts ſhould come again into the World, they would think themſelves to be meer Novices. Beſides, there are ſo many Encomiums publiſhed every Day, that if the Flatterers of that Country ſhould riſe again from the Dead, they would be convinced that they were meer School-Boys.

I remember a very fine Paſſage of Plutarch, (f) wherein Pericles is concerned. When a Fact is certain, and the intention of the Author not well known, it is a wicked and malicious thing to aſcribe it to an ill Motive. This was practiſed by the Comick Poets: they ſaid poſitively, that Pericles kindled the Peloponneſian War for the ſake of his Miſs Aſpaſia and Phidias, and not at all out of a noble and courageous Ambition of bringing down the Pride of the Lacedæmonians. They, who being forced to acknowledge that an Action is worthy of Praiſe, ſearch the intention of the Heart, and ſuppoſe

(b) Id. ib. p. 159. F.

(c) Ib. p. 159. A.

(d) Id. p. 160. D.

(†) They ſaid that the Rape of two Whores of Aſpaſia had ingaged Pericles in that War. See the Rem. M.

(e) The Author of l'Eſprit de Mr. Arnauld. See the Art. Arnauld.

(f) Plut. de Herodoti malignitate p. 855. F.

after a long Sickneſs which (H) weaken'd his Judgment. Yet a little before he died, he ſaid a very judicious thing, which gave Plutarch occaſion to make a ſolid (I) Reflection upon the Nature of God: but that Author went too far;

poſe that it was not good, are come to the higheſt pitch of Envy and Malignity. Ε'ν μὲν γὰρ τοῖς εὐδηλοτάτοις ἔργοις καὶ πεπραγμένοις ἐπιφέρειν αἰτίαν φαύλην ὑποτίθεσθαι, καὶ κατάγειν ταῖς διαβολαῖς εἰς ὑποψίας ἀτόπους περὶ τῆς ἐν ἀφανεῖ προαιρέσεως τοῦ πράξαντος αὐτὸ τὸ πεπραγμένον ἐμφανῶς οὐ δυνάμενον ψέγειν ..... εὔδηλον ὅτι φθόνου καὶ κακοηθείας ὑπερβολὴν οὐ λείπει (h). Præclaris enim & laudatis factis atque rebus maligni cauſam qui ſubjiciunt vitioſam, calumniandoque in ſiniſtras abducunt ſuſpiciones de latente ejus qui rem geſſit conſilio, quando ipſum factum palam vituperare non poſſunt ..... his liquet ad ſummam invidentiam & nequitiam nihil ſibi feciſſe reliquum. I would fain know whether Duris of Samos and Theophraſtus aſcribed to Aſpaſia the two Wars, which the Poets imputed to her. Harpocration quotes them in the ſame manner as he alledges Ariſtophanes. (i) Δοκεῖ δὲ δυοῖν πολέμων αἰτία γεγονέναι, τοῦ τε Σαμιακοῦ, καὶ τοῦ Πελοποννησιακοῦ, ὡς ἔστι μαθεῖν ἔκ τε Δούριδος τοῦ Σαμίου, καὶ Θεοφράστου ἐκ τοῦ τετάρτου τῶν πολιτικῶν, καὶ ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοφάνους Ἀχαρνέων. Duorum bellorum, Samiaci & Peloponneſiaci cauſſa cenſetur: ut è Duride Samio, Theophraſti libro quarto Politicorum, & ex Ariſtophanis Acharnenſibus cognoſcere licet. But who knows whether they ſaid ſo of their own Head, or whether they related it as being the Opinion of Pericles's Enemies, and the Poets.

(H) A long Sickneſs, which weakened his Judgment.] "(k) The Plague ſeiz'd Pericles, not with ſharp "and violent Fits, as it did others that had it; "but a dull and lingring Diſtemper, thro' various "changes and alterations, leiſurely by little and "little waſting the ſtrength of his Body, and un"dermining the noble Faculties of his Soul. So "that Theophraſtus in his Morals, having made a "moot-point, Whether Men's Manners do change "with their Fortunes, and their Souls being jogg'd "and diſturb'd by the Ailings of their Bodies, do "ſtart aſide from the Rules of Virtue, hath left it "upon Record, that Pericles when he was Sick, "ſhewed one of his Friends that came to viſit him, "an Amulet or Charm, that the Women had hung "about his Neck; as much as to ſay, that he was "very Sick indeed, when he would admit of or "endure ſuch a Foolery as that was." I have ſet down the Greek Words of Plutarch in the Article Desbarreaux. There is without doubt a fault in the Chapter wherein Ælian ſays that Pericles, Callias and Nicias having ſpent all that they had, drank off a great Glaſs of Hemlock. It was the laſt (m) Health they drank, being reſolved to live no longer, ſince they could no longer make Merry. If Ælian's Memory fail'd him not, we muſt ſay that his Copiſts wrote Pericles inſtead of Epicles: for we read in (n) Athenæus that Antocles and Epicles having reſolved to live together, and to ſacrifice every thing to Voluptuouſneſs, poyſon'd themſelves with a Glaſs of Hemlock, when they ſaw they had ſpent all their Money.

(I) A ſolid Reflection upon the Nature of God.] What follows is to be found immediately after the Words which I have ſet down in the foregoing Remark. "(o) When he was drawing on and near "his time, the beſt of the Citizens, and thoſe of "his Friends who were left alive, ſitting about him, "were diſcourſing of his Virtue and Authority, "how great it was, and were reckoniug up his fa"mous Actions and Atchievements, and the num"ber of his Victories; for there were no leſs than "nine Trophies, which he, as their Chief Com"mander and Conqueror of their Enemies had ſet "up for the Honour of the City and State. Theſe "things they talk'd of together among themſelves: "as though he did not underſtand or mind "what they ſaid, but had been utterly bereft of "his Senſes. But he had liſtned all the while and "given good heed to all the Paſſages of their Diſ"courſes, and ſpeaking out among them ſaid, that "he wondred they ſhould commend and take no"tice of thoſe things in him, which were as much "owing to Fortune as to any thing elſe, and had "happened to many other Captains in former "times, as well as to him, and that at the ſame "time they ſhould not ſpeak or make mention of "that which was the moſt excellent and greateſt "thing of all. For, ſaid he, there was never any "of all my Fellow-Citizens that ever wore Black or "put on Mourning upon my Account." Here is Plutarch's Reflection. "(a) And to me it appears "that this one thing of him, did make that other"wiſe Childiſh and Arrogant Title they gave him, "in Nicknaming him Olympius, (that is, the Hea"venly or Godlike) to be without Envy, and truly "becoming him: I mean his kind and courteous "Carriage, and a pure and untainted unblemiſh'd "Converſation in the height of Power and Place: "According to thoſe apprehenſion that we have of "the (b) Gods themſelves, in their kind; whom, "upon this account that they are naturally the "Authors of all Good things, and are not the Au"thors of any Evil, we do think worthy to Rule "and Govern the World. Not as the Poets rudely "fancy, who confounding us with their fooliſh "unmannerly Conceits and Opinions, are taken "tardy in their own Poems and fictitious Stories, "when they call the Place indeed wherein they "ſay the Gods made their abode, a ſecure and qui"et Seat, free from all Hazards and Commotions, "not troubled with Winds, nor darkned with "Clouds, but at all times alike ſhining round about "with a ſoft ſerenity and a pure Light; in as much "as ſuch a temper'd Station is moſt agreeable and "ſuitable for a bleſſed and immortal Nature to live "in: and yet in the mean while do affirm, that "the Gods themſelves are full of Trouble, and En"mity, and Anger and other Paſſions, which no "way become or belong even to Men that have any "Underſtanding." What Plutarch ſays againſt the Poets is very fine and ſolid: the reſt is a deceitful Beauty, and may be compar'd with poiſon'd Flowers, that cover a Serpent, latet anguis in herba. Perhaps it will be thought that I mean that there are in thoſe Words ſome Seeds of the falſe Doctrine of Epicurus, concerning the Tranquillity of the Gods, free from Hatred and Anger; but 'tis not that: Plutarch does not preſent us the Poyſon of Epicurus, but that of Manicheiſm. We have ſeen elſewhere (c) that he poſitively declared for the Doctrine of two Principles. He mentions it again in this Reflection upon Pericles's Anſwer. He does not believe, as Epicurus did, that God enjoys an idle Reſt; he aſcribes to him Action and Providence; but it is only a bountiful Providence, which diſtributes Favours and Happineſs. It is not a Providence which grows angry ſometimes, which puniſhes and corrects, and oppreſſes Mankind with Miſeries. He does not approve that Pericles ſhould have had the Surname of Olympian, that is to ſay, Divine and Heavenly, becauſe his Eloquence Lightned, Thundered and Fulminated, but becauſe he never made uſe of his Authority to revenge himſelf, and not one Family did ever put on Mourning upon his Account. Plutarch's opinion was not the moſt common: moſt People knew better the Divinity of Jupiter (d) by the Thunder-Bolt, than by the Diſtribution of Benefits: the Religious Ceremonies of the Heathens were rather appointed to avert the Anger of the Gods, than to obtain ſome Favours from them. Yet there was a general Notion which prevailed every where, that nothing is more agreeable to the Divine Nature than to do Good. The Epithet of Optimus went before that of Maximus, when they praiſed Jupiter. (e) Sed ipſe Jupiter, id eſt juvans pater, quem converſis caſibus appellamus a juvando Jovem, à poëtis pater Divumque, hominumque dicitur; à Majoribus autem noſtris Optimus, Maximus, & quidem ante Optimus, id eſt beneficentiſſimus, quàm Maximus: quia majus eſt, certeque gratius prodeſſe omnibus, quàm opes magnas habere. See the Remark G of the Article Jupiter. Plutarch ſays, that King Amaſis havlug ſeveral Queſtions to reſolve, wherein the Superlative was look'd for, I mean the ſupreme Degree of things; for Example, what is moſt ancient, moſt great, moſt wiſe, moſt beautiful, moſt common, moſt beneficial, moſt pernicious? anſwered as to the two laſt Articles, God and the Dæmon. (g) Τί ὠφελιμώτατον; θεός. Τί βλαβερώτατον; δαίμων. Quid utiliſſimum? Deus. Quid damnoſiſſimum? Genius. Here is the Doctrine of the two Principles, and even what the Chriſtians ſay concerning the Devil. I don't know whether theſe words, or this Notion of the δαίμων of (h) Id. ib. p. 856. A.

(i) Harpocrat. in Ἀσπασία, p. m. 79.

(k) Plut. in Pericle.

(m) Κώνειον τελευταίαν πρόποσιν ἀλλήλοις προπιόντες ὥσπερ ἐκ συμποσίου ἀνέλυσαν. Cicutam invicem propinantes extremam potionem quaſi è convivio ad inferos migrarunt Ælian. varia hiſt. l. 4. c. 23.

(n) Athen. l. 12. p. 537.

(o) Plut. in Pericle.

(a) Id. ib.

(b) Καθάπερ τὸ τῶν θεῶν γένος ἀξιοῦμεν, αἴτιον μὲν ἀγαθῶν, ἀναίτιον δὲ κακῶν πεφυκός, ἄρχειν καὶ βασιλεύειν τῶν ὄντων, οὐχ ὥσπερ οἱ ποιηταί. Sicut dignam arbitramur deorum gentem, quæ per ſe eſt propitia, & nullius autor mali, ut rebus præſit & moderetur, non ut poetæ. Plut. ibid. p. 173. C.

(c) In the Art. Manichees. See alſo the Rem. G. of the Art. Paulicians.

(d) Cœlo tonantem credidimus Jovem regnare. Hor. Od. 5. l. 3. Namque Dieſpiter Igni coruſco nubila dividens, &c. Id. Od. 34. l. 1.

(e) Cic. de nat. Deor. l. 2. p. m. 330.

(g) Plut. in ſeptem ſapientum convivio. p. 153. A.

far; he over-ſtrained the Idea of the Divine Goodneſs, he affirmed that God could der the Ancients have been taken notice of. I re-aſſume the Thread of my Diſcourſe. The Philoſopher Antipater defined God (h) an Animal, happy, immortal, and good to all Men. The Heathens were moſt inclined to Deify thoſe, who had been the Inventers of uſeful things. (i) Perſæus eoſdem Zenonis auditor, eos dicit eſſe habitos Deos, à quibus magna utilitas ad vitæ cultum eſſet inventa, ipſaſque res utiles & ſalutares Deorum eſſe vocabulis nuncupatas: ut ne hoc quidem diceret, illa inventa eſſe Deorum, ſed ipſa divina. It was the way of obtaining the Apotheoſis, if we believe Pliny. (k) Deus eſt mortali juvare mortalem, & hæc ad æternam gloriam via. Hac proceres iere Romani: hac nunc cœleſti paſſu cum liberis ſuis vadit maximus omnis ævi rector Veſpaſianus Auguſtus, feſſis rebus ſubveniens. Hic eſt vetuſtiſſimus referendi bene merentibus gratiam mos, ut tales numinibus adſcribantur. Quippe & omnium aliorum nomina Deorum, & quæ ſupra retuli ſiderum, ex hominum nata ſunt meritis. Others giving a more reaſonable turn to it, ſaid that the Gods had inſpired Men with the Invention of Arts.

> Κεῖνοι (l) γὰρ τέχνας πολυειδέας ἐφράσσαντο
> Δῶκαν ἔχειν, καὶ πᾶσαν ἐπιφροσύνην ἐδίδαξαν.
> Illi etiam artes multum lucroſas hominibus
> Dederunt habere, & omnem ſolertiam docuerunt.

Laſtly, they ſaid that (m) the beſt way of imitating God was to do Good, and that Man never came nearer to the Divine Nature than when he ſaved a Man. Homines ad Deos nulla re propius accedunt, ſaid Cicero to Julius Cæſar towards the End of his Oration for Ligarius, quam ſalutem hominibus dando. Nihil habet nec fortuna tua majus, quàm ut poſſis, nec natura tua melius, quàm ut velis conſervare quamplurimos. The Scythians told Alexander: If Thou art a God, thou muſt do Good to Men, and not take from them what is their own; (n) ſi Deus es, tribuere mortalibus beneficia debes, non ſua eripere. Right Theology agrees with all theſe Notions of the ancient Heathens. There are a hundred Paſſages in the Scripture, whereby it appears, that God is infinitely more inclined to uſe Mercy than Severity. To which may be added theſe fine Words of Gregory Nazianzen, who ſays, that Man becomes a God to his miſerable Neighbour, when he helps him. (o) Γίνε τῷ ἀτυχοῦντι Θεὸς τὸν ἔλεον Θεοῦ μιμησάμενος. οὐδὲν γὰρ οὕτως ὡς τὸ εὖ ποιεῖν, ἄνθρωπος ἔχει Θεῖον. Eſto miſero Deus Dei miſericordiam imitando. Nihil enim tam ex Deo habet mortalis quàm ut beneficia largiatur.

Strabo has imitated that thought: he ſays that a happy Life, which is ſpent in Feſtivals, in Mirth, in Philoſophizing and Singing, is a better Imitation of the Divine Nature, than to confer Benefits. His Words deſerve to be ſet down. (p) Εὖ μὲν γὰρ εἴρηται καὶ τοῦτο, τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τότε μάλιστα μιμεῖσθαι τοὺς θεοὺς, ὅταν εὐεργετῶσιν· ἄμεινον δ' ἂν λέγοι τις, ὅταν εὐδαιμονῶσι· τοιοῦτον δὲ τὸ χαίρειν, καὶ τὸ ἑορτάζειν, καὶ τὸ φιλοσοφεῖν, καὶ μουσικῆς ἅπτεσθαι. Bene quidem dictum eſt, homines tum maximè Deum imitari, cum beneficia conferunt: rectius autem diceretur, cum fœliciter vivunt: id autem fit gaudendo, dies feſtos agitando, philoſophando, muſicam TRACTANDO.

I have read in the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake, that the Inhabitants of New-Albion took the Engliſh for Gods, and paid Divine Honours to them, becauſe when they ſhewed their Wounds to them, they received ſome Plaiſters and Salves which cured them. On the contrary, the Spaniards were look'd upon as Gods in America, becauſe they did a great deal of Miſchief with their Cannons. Their Ship was taken for a Bird that brought them down from Heaven (q). Which ſhews that two oppoſite things lead Men to the knowledge of God; viz. The Power he has to Puniſh Men, which he exerciſes ſo ſeverely, and the Goodneſs wherewith he beſtows a thouſand Benefits upon Mankind. It may be a Queſtion, whether one of thoſe two things is more knowable than the other. Tacitus pretends that the Gods have a greater deſire to puniſh Men, than to let 'em be quiet. Nec enim unquam, ſays he (r), atrocioribus populi Romani cladibus magiſve juſtis judiciis approbatum eſt, non eſſe curæ deis ſecuritatem noſtram, eſſe ultionem. A Journaliſt maintains that the effects of Goodneſs are more extended than the effects of Puniſhment. Here are his Words: (ſ) "Of all the Virtues of God, Goodneſs would be moſt "viſible, if Men would conſider it. What a great "Goodneſs is it to have ſo ordered things, that all "our neceſſary Actions are attended with Pleaſure; "and to have made us ſuſceptible of Pleaſure a "thouſand ways. 'Tis in vain to ſay that we are "more ſuſceptible of Sorrow and Pain; it is not "true, and if it were true, we ſhould not for all "that forget the great Goodneſs of God, ſince we "might eaſily ſee that the Pleaſures we enjoy, "come from the Laws he has eſtabliſhed in Nature, "and that on the contrary moſt of our Sorrows "proceed from the ill uſe we make of our Reaſon. "But it is not true that Men are more unhappy "than happy; our Ungratefulneſs, Pride and Unſatiable Deſires make us ſay ſo. Falſò queritur de naturâ ſuâ genus humanum, is a true ſaying of a "famous Hiſtorian in the Preface to the War of "Jugurtha. Mankind are more happy than they "deſerve, and it is true in a literal ſenſe, that for "one Pain Men feel a thouſand Pleaſures, except "perhaps a ſmall number of unhappy Souls, which "a Heathen would aſſert to have been produced "by Deſtiny in a ſpiteful moment." Note by the bye, that the Difference he ſpeaks of, and which he grounds upon the conſequences of the ill uſe we make of Liberty, could not ſatisfie a difficult Adverſary, who would ſay that that very thing, viz. the ill uſe a Man makes of his Reaſon, to vex himſelf to no purpoſe, is a great unhappineſs, and ought neceſſarily to be placed amongſt Afflictions; ſo that if we make a parallel between the Good and Evil which Providence imparts to Men, we muſt reckon the Evils which proceed from the Weakneſſes of our Reaſon, as well as Sickneſſes, Hunger, Thirſt, &c.

Ovid obſerves (a) that there are more fine Days than cloudy ones in the Year: it may be ſaid likewiſe, that the Days wherein Men injoy their Health, are in greater number than thoſe wherein they are Sick. But there is perhaps as much Miſery in fifteen Days Sickneſs, as there is Pleaſure in fifteen Months Health: for Pleaſure is ſuch in as much as it is felt; but Men do not much feel their Health when they enjoy it without any Interruption. Obſerve that I conſider Health, as being ſeparated from the other Pleaſures, which may be enjoyed with it. The Journaliſt I have quoted, might have alledged a fine Paſſage of Cicero, wherein after an exact enumeration of the advantages which Men receive from Plants and Animals, he ſays, that one would think that Providence went about to procure Pleaſures to Mankind, as if it had been Epicurean. Ex quibus (b) tanta percipitur voluptas ut interdum Pronæa noſtra Epicurea fuiſſe videatur. However it be, Men are more apt to perceive the Character of the Divine Nature in the Effects of Goodneſs, than in the Diſtribution of Puniſhments and Miſeries. The Goodneſs of Providence has been perceived in the Service which Great Men have done to their Country. (c) Multos præterea & noſtra civitas & Græcia tulit ſingulares viros, quorum neminem niſi juvante Deo talem fuiſſe credendum eſt ..... nemo igitur vir magnus ſine aliquo afflatu divino unquam fuit. And Seneca ſays in general, that none can be a Good Man, and a Great Man, without the aſſiſtance of God. (d) Bonus vir ſine Deo nemo eſt. An poteſt aliquis ſupra fortunam, niſi ab illo adjutus, exſurgere? ille dat conſilia magnifica, & erecta. In unoquoque virorum bonorum, (Quis Deus incertum eſt) habitat Deus ..... Si hominem videris interritum periculis, intactum cupiditatibus, inter adverſa felicem, in mediis tempeſtatibus placidum, ex ſuperiore loco homines videntem, ex æquo deos: non ſubibit te veneratio ejus? non dices, iſta res major eſt altiorque, quàm ut credi ſimilis huic, in quo eſt, corpuſculo poſſit? Vis iſtuc divina deſcendit: animum excellentem, moderatum, omnia tanquam minora tranſeuntem, quidquid timemus optamuſque videntem, cœleſtis potentia agitat. Non poteſt res tanta ſine adminiculo numinis ſtare. Itaque majore ſui parte illic eſt, unde deſcendit. As to Evils, they made uſe of a thouſand ſhifts not to aſcribe them to God; they formed to themſelves a Fantaſm, which they call'd Fortune, and to which they imputed their misfortunes: they repreſented to themſelves I know not what Beings miſchievous by their Nature; and Plutarch tells us here that the Gods can do no hurt. In another place he laughs at Chryſippus, who aſcribed Evils to the Negligence and Malice of the Genii, whom Jupiter ſet over certain things. (e) Τὸ δὲ φαύλους δαίμονας ἐν ἐπιστασίαις ἐπὶ τοῖς τοιαύτας ὀλιγωρίας καθιστάναι πῶς οὐκ ἔστιν ἔγκλημα τῷ Θεῷ, καθάπερ βασιλέως

(h) Ζῷον μακάριον καὶ ἄφθαρτον καὶ εὐποιητικὸν ἀνθρώπων. Plut. de repugn. Stoic. p. 1051.

(i) Cic. ib. l. 1. p. 80. Virg. Æn. l. 6. v. 663. was contented to place them in the Elyſian Fields. Inventas aut qui vitam excoluere per artes, Quique ſui memores alios fecere merendo.

(k) Plin. l. 2. c. 7. p. m. 143, 144.

(l) Oppian. l. 2. Ἁλιευτ.

(m) Strabo l. 10. p. m. 322. See his Words let. p.

(n) Q. Curt. l. 7. c. 8. n. 26. See Freinſhemius ib. who alledges ſeveral ſuch Sentences.

(o) Nazianz. Orat. de amore pauperum.

(p) Strabo l. 10. p. 322.

(q) See la Mothe le Vayer Diſcourſe concerning Hiſtory.

(r) Tacit. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 3.

(ſ) News from the Repub. of Learning, Aug. 168[illegible], Art. 6. p. m. [illegible]

(a) Si numeres anno ſoles & nubila toto, Invenies nitidum ſæpius iſſe diem. Ovid Triſt. l. 5. eleg. 8. See the Rem. D. of the Art. Xenophanes.

(b) Cic. de nat. Deor. l. 2. p. m. 549. Compare what David, Pſ. 8. obſerves concerning the Goodneſs of God in giving Beaſts for the uſe of Man, and what Seneca ſays de ben. l. 4. c. 5, 6, &c. uſque in delicias amamur. which may be ſeen more at large in the Rem. D. of the Art. Xenophanes.

(c) Cic. ib. p. 559.

(d) Senec. Ep. 41. p. m. 236. See alſo Ep. 73. p. 305.

(e) Plut. de Stoic. repugn. p. 1051. D.

do no harm, and he had rather impute Evil to another Cauſe. We ſhall ſee upon this occaſion, one of his proofs of the Malignity (I∆) of Herodotus, and what has been [illegible] ται. Malos autem genios à providentia his præfici muneribus, qui non ſit vitio vertendum Deo, qui tanquam rex malis & vecordibus ſatrapis ac præfectis provincias mandaverit, patiaturque ab his deſpici & contumelioſe tractari optimos? Et quidem, ſi multum neceſſitatis admixtum rebus eſt: neque omnia Deus habebit in ſua poteſtate, neque omnia ſecundum ejus rationem gubernabuntur. Again in another place he accuſes an Hiſtorian (f) of a malicious Impiety, for having made Solon ſpeak thus: Why ſhould I be ask'd whether Man is happy, ſeeing I know that all the Gods are envious and turbulent. (g) Τοῖς δὲ θεοῖς λοιδορούμενος ἐν τῷ Σόλωνος προσωπείῳ ταῦτα εἴρηκεν, ὦ Κροῖσε, ἐπιστάμενόν με τὸ θεῖον πᾶν ἐὸν φθονερόν τε καὶ ταραχῶδες ἐπειρωτᾷς ἀνθρωπηίων πρηγμάτων πέρι· ἃ γὰρ αὐτὸς ἐφρόνει περὶ τῶν θεῶν, τῷ Σόλωνι προστριβόμενος, κακοήθειαν τῇ βλασφημίᾳ προστίθησι. Diis autem maledicens ſub perſona Solonis: Me, inquit, gnarum omne numen invidum eſſe ac tumultuoſum, de rebus humanis interrogas. Suam enim de diis Soloni tribuens ſententiam, malignitatem impio ſermoni adjunxit. I am ſure he would have laught at the mitigated Gloſs of the ancient Prieſts of Etruria. They aſcribed two ſorts of Thunder-Bolts to Jupiter, a Favourable one and a Fatal one; and they pretended he never threw the ſecond but with the Advice of the other Gods; whereas he threw the other of his own motion, and without any one's Advice. This would not have ſatisfied Plutarch: he believed not that ſuch a Goodneſs as that of mild Princes was ſufficient for God. Good Princes take pleaſure in diſtributing their Favours to Men, and intruſt their Miniſters with the care of Puniſhing them; they are (h) ready to Reward, and ſlow to Puniſh. They rejoyce when they do Good, and are ſorry when they inflict any Puniſhment. Herein they reſemble Fathers: but once more Plutarch would have been very much diſpleaſed with the Gloſs of the Etrurians: he would perhaps have ſaid of their Jupiter, what others ſay of an Emperor (i) who perſecuted the Chriſtians very much, and would not begin the Perſecution without conſulting his Friends. (k) Placuit ergo amicorum ſententiam experiri. Nam erat hujus malitia. Cùm bonum quid facere decreviſſet, ſine conſilio faciebat, ut ipſe laudaretur. Cum autem malum, quoniam id reprehendendum ſciebat, in conſilium multos advocabat, ut aliorum culpa adſcriberetur quidquid ipſe deliquerat. It is a cunning Trick of an old Politician, witneſs Pius IV. being urged to terminate the Diſputes about Precedency, between the Ambaſſadors of the Moſt Chriſtian King, and thoſe of the Catholick King; he put it off for ſome time, and at laſt he adviſed them to leave the thing to the Deciſion of the Sacred Colledge. He would not be the only Man expoſed to the ill Conſequences of that Judgment; and he ſaid in Jeſt, that he conform'd himſelf to the Conduct of Jupiter. (l) Ad extremum utrique occultè ſuadere ut ad ſacrum Cardinalium Collegium cauſam integram remitterent: interea à publicis in Pontificio ſacello cæremoniis abſtinerent. Ratus eâ ratione ob diverſa Cardinalium ſtudia producendum infinitè judicium, ſe certè à ferendæ ſententiæ neceſſitate, atque adèo ab invidiâ ſubtrahendum. Nempe imitandum Principi Jovem facetè dicebat: qui (ut eſt vetus Etruſcarum diſciplinæ commentum) ex duplici fulminum genere, proſperum ipſe per ſe, at infauſtum adhibito Deorum conſilio contorquere ſolitus ſit.

Thus the Mind of Man, being too narrow to comprehend clearly, how the Miſeries and Crimes which cover the whole Earth, can be conſiſtent with an infinitely Good Being, has run it ſelf into the Hypotheſis of two Principles. This is what I had to ſay concerning Plutarch's Obſervation.

I ſhall only add that the Greek Proverb, (m) Every thing that nouriſhes me, is a God to me, is more deceitful than one can think. See the Anſwer (n) which was made to Philip de Comines, and that of a Chirurgeon to a Monk of St. Denis. " (o) It is " certain, that the Pox was unknown in France be" fore the Reign of Charles VIII. the greateſt part " of that Prince's Army died of it; becauſe that " Diſeaſe being not yet known, they knew no Re" medy for it; which ſhews that it was not the " Leproſy. Neceſſity put Men upon finding ſome " Remedies to cure it, whereby many Chirurgeons " grew very Rich. One of them very thankful for " his happineſs, went one Day to St. Denis, and " kneel'd down before the Statue of Charles VIII, " to thank him for it: but a Monk having told " him that he was miſtaken, and that it was not " the Image of a Saint: Hold your Tongue, Father, " ſaid he, I know very well what I do, he is a true " Saint to me, ſince I have got by his means Thirty " Thouſand Livres a Year, ſo that it is a piece " of Juſtice for me to thank him for it." The Author of Moyen de parvenir makes the Sum leſſer, and names the Chirurgeon. Here are his Words. " (a) You put me in mind of that Monk " of St. Denis in France, who was a pretending " Fellow. When he ſaw Thierre de Hery, upon " his Knees before the Statue of Charles VIII, " he told him, my Friend, you are miſtaken, that " is not the Image of a Saint. I know it very " well, ſaid the Chirurgeon, I am not ſo great a " Fool as you are, I know it is the Statue of King " Charles VIII. for whoſe Soul I pray, becauſe he " brought the Pox into France, whereby I have got " Six or Seven Thouſand Livres a Year." I will not conclude without quoting Virgil. He was very much diſpoſed to Deify his Benefactors: his Lands having been ſpared by a particular favour of Octavius, he ſtyl'd him a God.

> O (b) Melibæe, DEUS nobis hæc otia fecit:
> Namque erit ille mihi ſemper Deus: illius aram
> Sæpè tener noſtris ab ovilibus imbuet agnus.

Good Maturinus Corderius (c) out of a pious Fraud, which may be very well excuſed, made his little School-Boys believe that thoſe Words were very pious. He tranſlated them into French Verſes, which begins thus, Melibæus, that Favour comes to us from the only wiſe God. Virgil had no ſuch thought, he only meant (d) Auguſtus.

(I∆) One of his Proofs of the Malignity of Herodotus, and what has been anſwered to it. That Proof is grounded upon the Jealouſie, &c.] See the Words of Plutarch, which I have ſet down before. I wonder that he confined himſelf to the Anſwer which Solon gave to King Crœſus, and that he did not at leaſt intimate, that many ſuch Paſſages are found in Herodotus. He might thereby have ſtrengthned his Accuſation, and ſhewed that Herodotus cannot be juſtified, by ſaying that he let fall that Raillery againſt the Gods out of Inadvertency: he would have obſerved that a Man who makes often the ſame Reflection, is throughly penetrated with the Venom it contains, and with the deſire of infecting his Readers with it. It is certain, that Herodotus has often repeated the ſame Maxim which he aſcribed to Solon. Here is what he ſuppoſes that a K. of Egypt wrote to Polycrates Tyrant of Samos; " I " am glad to hear that a Man, who is my Friend, " is happy. But your great Proſperity does not " pleaſe me, for I know how envious the Deity is." (g) Ἐμοὶ δὲ αἱ σαὶ μεγάλαι εὐτυχίαι οὐκ ἀρέσκουσι, τὸ θεῖον ἐπισταμένῳ ὡς ἔστι φθονερόν. Tuæ magnæ proſperitates mihi non placent, qui intelligo QUAM INVIDUM NUMEN SIT. Henry Stephens, who juſtifies that Hiſtorian as well as he can in ſeveral other reſpects, takes no notice of this Accuſation of Plutarch. I don't find that he intimates any where that he knew it. He has carefully collected many Maxims and Obſervations of Herodotus, which may prove his pious Orthodoxy about Providence; nay, he has placed amongſt 'em a Paſſage of the 7th Book, wherein Artabanus does very much inſiſt upon the envious Nature of God. (h) Artabanus ſays, that God throws his Thunder-Bolts only at great Bodies, becauſe he takes delight in oppreſſing whatever is eminent. (i) Φιλέει γὰρ ὁ θεὸς τὰ ὑπερέχοντα πάντα κολούειν. Gaudet enim Deus eminentiſſima quæque deprimere. Hence it is that a great Army is beaten by a ſmall one, when God (k) out of Envy terrifies them, or throws his Thunder-Bolt. Thus ſome have been precipitated into Miſery otherwiſe than their Dignity required; for God will not by no means endure, that any one beſides him ſhould have a great opinion of himſelf. (l) Δι' ὧν ἐφθάρησαν ἀναξίως ἑωυτῶν· οὐ γὰρ ἐᾷ φρονέειν ἄλλον μέγα ὁ θεὸς ἢ ἑωυτόν. Propterea quidam ſecus ac dignitas ſua poſtulabat

(f) Herodotus.

(g) Id. de malignit. Herodoti p. 857, 858.

(h) Sed piger ad pœnas princeps, ad præmia velox, Quique dolet quoties cogitur eſſe ferox. Ovid. de Ponto l. 1. El. 2.

(i) Dioclesian.

(k) Lactant. de mortib. perſecut. c. 11. p. 99, 100. of the Noble Edition of Mr. Bauldri. See his Notes, and thoſe of Columbus Part. 2. p. 287.

(l) Famian. Strada dec. 1. l. 4. p. m. 175. See Seneca nat. quæſt. l. 2. c. 41, & ſeq.

(m) Τὸ γὰρ τρέφον με τοῦτ' ἐγὼ κρίνω θεόν.

(n) See the Art. Gregory I.

(o) Furetieriana p. 113. of the Dutch Edit.

(a) Moyen de parvenir p. m. 578, 579.

(b) Virg. Ecl. 1. v. 6.

(c) See his Colloquies.

(d) Compare the 15*th Verſe* Sed tamen ille Deus qui ſit, da, Tityre, nobis, with the 43*d & ſeq.* Hic illum vidi juvenem, Melibœe, quotannis Bis ſenos cui noſtra dies altaria fumant. Hic mihi reſponſum primus dedit ille petenti: Paſcite, ut ante, boves, pueri, ſubmittite tauros.

(g) Herod. l. 3. c. 40. p. m. 178.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Id. lib. 7. c. 10. p. 383. Valeſius in Amm. Marcel. l. 14. c. 11. p. 59. quotes this as being taken from the ſixth Book of Herodotus been anſwered to it. That proof is grounded upon the Jealouſie and Envy which that

(k) Ἐπεάν σφι ὁ θεὸς φθονήσας. Quoties Deus iis quibus invidet. Ib.

(l) Ibid.

that in calamitatem inciderunt, quia Deus neminem alium quam ſeipſum ſinit magnifice de ſe ſentire. This is one of the Examples which Henry Stephens gives of the Piety of Herodotus, a Piety, ſays he, as great as it could be in a Man deſtitute of the Light of the Goſpel. Nay, he pretends, that this Opinion of Herodotus about the Power and Providence of God, is the ſame which Chriſtians ought to have: he pretends that it is impoſſible to ſay any thing more Divine about this Subject than what has been ſaid by that Hiſtorian. (m) Multæ ſententiæ ſive γνώμας tum quas alio loco adhibuit, tum quas narrationibus vel præfatis, vel tanquam corollaria adjunxit, tanta illum pietate præditum fuiſſe teſtantur, quanta in hominem Chriſtianæ religionis ignarum cadere poteſt: imo vero ea de divina potentia providentiaque ſenſiſſe quæ Chriſtianum ſentire & deceat & oporteat. Hujuſmodi ſunt hæc in Thalia, SED profecto...... Conſideremus & hæc ex Polymnia, VIDEN' ut Deus (n)...... quid, obſecro, de divina potentia divinius iſtis dici potuit? Afterwards he alledges four Greek (o) Verſes, much the ſame with ſome Words of Horace (p), which he does alſo alledge, and which ſignifie that God is able to turn the World up-ſide down, and that he depreſſes the Great ones, and raiſes the Little ones, and he concludes, that the Praiſes beſtowed upon that Sentence are very well grounded; but that Herodotus goes much further, & merito quidem certè illam veteris poëtæ ſententiam laudibus extollunt: ſed quanto tamen ulterius progreditur hic noſter hiſtoricus! I cannot apprehend by what miſtake Henry Stephens could take this the wrong way. He ſees only the fair ſide of it, and does not at all perceive the moſt viſible Defect. He is charmed with the great Idea which Herodotus gives of the Divine Power; but he is not aware that a Power directed by the Jealouſie of the Proſperity of others, is an odious and defective Quality. There lies the ſtreſs of Plutarch's Objection.

Camerarius, who before Henry Stephens undertook to juſtifie Herodotus, knew very well where the Evil lay; but he found no better Remedy than to change the ſtate of the Queſtion, and to call the main point of the Objection a meer Cavil. Here are his Words, (q) Nam quod exagitat (Plutarchus) præclaram ſententiam de inſtabili & incerta fortuna rerum humanarum, quam Herodotus (1) Soloni attribuerit (cui quidem ſimiles & alibi leguntur) nimia ſapientia & pietati hominis concedatur: qui veritus ſit, ne ſi ita de Deo loquamur, ut humanus intellectus quæ dicuntur percipere poſſit, parum pii eſſe videamur. Cur ergo Deo oculos, manus, pedes, aures attribuimus? cur dicimus Deum iraſci? cur ulciſci? etiam vereri profecto, tentare, pœnitere, lætari, dolere. πόῤῥω γὰρ λύπης καὶ χαρᾶς ἵδρυται τὸ θεῖον. ſine quibus illa ne intelligi quidem poſſunt. Quid Xenophon? (quo nemo fuit numinis colentior, nemo obſervantior, nemo impietatis erga Deum acrior hoſtis) nonne eandem ſententiam ponere non dubitavit in præclaro illo opere ſuo hiſtoria rerum Græcarum? ſic enim ait (2), καὶ ὁ θεὸς δὲ, ὡς ἔοικε, πολλάκις χαίρει τοὺς μὲν μικροὺς μεγάλους ποιεῖν, τοὺς δὲ μεγάλους μικρούς. Hæc igitur ſacrilega eſt in Herodoto ſententia, quia ſecundum hominum intelligentiam φθονερὸν dixit eſſe τὸ θεῖον. Sed hæc quàm ſint futilia quis non videt? It is manifeſt that he changes the ſtate of the Queſtion; for Herodotus was not blamed for ſaying that the Condition of Humane things is very inconſtant; but he was blamed for ſaying, that the Jealouſie of God is the cauſe of that great Inconſtancy: and it is not at all neceſſary, in order to repreſent to us the Inconſtancy of Fortune, to have recourſe to an Image, whereby we may conceive the Deity as a Being that envies the Happineſs of Men. Beſides, there is a very great difference between the things which ſome other Authors, and even the Holy Scriptures have aſcribed to God, and the Jealouſie which Herodotus aſcribes to him. An Eye, Hands, Anger, Repenting, Joy and Fear, may ſerve as Images to repreſent to Men the Conduct of Providence; for thoſe Weakneſſes do not ſeem to us to be inconſiſtent with an Honeſt Man, and an excellent Prince. To be Jealous of one's Glory, and not to ſuffer that it ſhould be uſurped, is not look'd upon as a fault among Men; nay, they believe it is a Quality worthy of Great Kings and Heroes. Wherefore the Scripture does not ſcruple to aſcribe ſuch a Jealouſie to God. But to be Jealous of the Happineſs of other Men, and to ruin them, becauſe their Proſperity makes us feel the Bitings of Envy, is one of the moſt ſhameful Qualities that can be conceived, the baſeſt Tradeſmen could not bear to be accuſed of it. It is a Diſeaſe that few People can avoid, but no Body dares own that he is affected with it. We are ready to own, that a noble Emulation of equalling or ſurpaſſing the Merit and Glory of Great Men, excites us to form glorious Projects; but not that the Envy of the Proſperity of our Neighbours prompts us to ruin them. Camerarius can't be therefore well excuſed for having made ſuch Compariſons. The Expreſſions of Xenophon cannot very well ſerve to juſtifie Herodotus, for if they ſignifie, that God does often delight in overturning the Diſpoſition of things, by reducing the Great ones to the condition of the Little ones, and by raiſing the Little ones to the condition of the Great ones; if they ſignifie that God does ſo at his Play-hours, and that it is his Tennis, as Princes take pleaſure in ſeeing great Beaſts one againſt another at a Bull-Feaſt, whilſt they make much of a little Dog; they are as impious as the Expreſſions of Herodotus, and ſo one Impiety would ſerve to juſtifie another Impiety. But nothing requires that ſuch a ſenſe ſhould be put upon the Words of Xenophon. They are capable of a reaſonable ſenſe, by ſuppoſing he means that God is pleaſed with that frequent viciſſitude of Conditions, becauſe his Quality of Judge, and common Father of Mankind requires it from him. Great Men abuſe their Power; it is therefore neceſſary that the Fall of ſome ſhould be a Warning to others, and ſhould prevent the Miſchiefs they might have done, and comfort thoſe who were vexed by them. And ſince the condition of Humane Affairs does not permit that all Men ſhould be in great Poſts at the ſame time, every Body muſt be raiſed in his turn, and the common Father of Mankind muſt diſpoſe of them ſometimes in favour of one, ſometimes in favour of another. The Little ones muſt riſe, and the Great ones go down in their turn. It is likely that Xenophon underſtood it ſo, and that he inſiſted not upon the meer Idea of the ſupreme Authority which God has over the Goods of Fortune. It would be a thing unworthy of the moſt perfect Being, to overthrow Great Men, and to raiſe Little ones only to ſhew his Power. Any Prince would be juſtly blamed, if out of a meer Oſtentation of his Power, he ſpent his time in levelling Mountains, filling up Valleys, drying up Marſhes, and overflowing Sandy Plains. He muſt propoſe the Publick Good to himſelf, or elſe it is a meer Tyrannical Vain ſhew and Luxury, and a Subject of Scandal or juſt Complaints. Read theſe Words of Salluſt. (a) Nam quid ea memorem, quæ niſi iis, qui videre, nemini credibilia ſunt, à privatis compluribus ſubverſos montes, maria conſtructa eſſe? quibus mihi ludibrio videntur fuiſſe divitiæ. quippe quas honeſte habere licebat, per turpitudinem abuti properabant. Read alſo theſe Words of Suetonius concerning the Emperor Caligula: (b) In extructionibus prætoriorum atque villarum omni ratione poſthabita, nihil tam efficere concupiſcebat quam quod poſſe effici negaretur. Et jacta itaque moles infeſto ac profundo mari, exciſa rupes duriſſimi ſilicis, & campi montibus aggere æquati, & complanata foſſuris montium juga, incredibili quidem celeritate, cum mora culpa capite lueretur. And to add a Modern Example to the Ancient, read alſo a Paſſage which concerns Mr. Fouquet: (c) Fouquetus...... Lucullianis ſumptibus naturam poſſeſſor domuit, & contumaciam ſitus repugnantem in delicias ſuas manſueſcere coegit nullo læſo, niſi ſe & arca Regia. I don't doubt but Xenophon underſtood the Maxim he advanced in an Orthodox ſenſe. Having ſo much improved under his (d) Profeſſor, he could not ſay that if God is pleaſed to raiſe the Little ones, and to overthrow the Great ones, it is to divert himſelf, or to make a ſhew of his Power. He believed without doubt, that God did ſo only for the Publick Good of Mankind, and conſequently Camerarius has alledged him without reaſon in favour of Herodotus, who was cenſured for having attributed to God a jealous Humour, which is the cauſe of the Overthrow of Humane Proſperity. Obſerve that it ſignifies nothing to the Earth or Rocks to be in a Valley or in a high place. They are inſenſible Bodies, any Situation is equally good and indifferent to them. Water is neither more nor leſs unhappy, when it runs in the Channel of a River, than when it is forced out of a Pipe into the Clouds; but the Fall of a Monarch, the Diſgrace

(m) H. Steph. in Apolog. pro Herodoto, præfixa editioni Latinæ Herodoti Francof. 1595. in 8. p. 24, 25.

(n) He ſets down here the Words which I have quoted out of the 7th B. c. 10. of Herodotus

(o) Of Heſiod.

(p) Valet ima ſummis Mutare & inſignem attenuat Deus, Obſcura promens. Hor. Od. 34. l. 1.

(q) Joach. Camerarius proœmio in Herodot. p. 5. Genev. 1618. in fol.

(1) Clione c. 32.

(2) Hellenicωn l. 5.

(a) Salluſt. de bello Catil. pag. 28. See alſo p. 53. in the Harangue of Catilina, Quis mortalium, cui virile ingenium eſt, tolerare poteſt illis divitias ſuperare, quas profundant in extruendo mari, & montibus coæquandis, nobis rem familiarem etiam ad neceſſaria deeſſe?

(b) Suet. in Calig. c. 37.

(c) Priolo de rebus Gallicis l. 9. c. 2. p. m. 320, 321.

(d) Socrates.

that Historian pretends the Divine Nature is subject to. Valerius Maximus has committed Disgrace of a Chief Minister, and other such overthrows of Worldly Prosperities, overwhelm a great many People with sorrow. It would be therefore a less disorder to overturn the situation of some parts of the Earth, meerly to satisfie one's Fancy, and make a shew of one's Riches, than to precipitate the high Fortune of Men, meerly to divert one's self, and make a shew of one's Power. From whence you may conclude, that all those who have had a right notion of Providence, have understood the Maxim of Xenophon in the Sense I have mentioned. They believed without doubt, that the ruin of Great Men was an Act of Justice, whereby the Misfortunes of some private Men were compensated by a greater advantage of the Publick.

Valesius's way of justifying Herodotus is somewhat more ingenious than that of the other Apologists. See his Commentary upon a Place, wherein Ammianus Marcellinus gives us the Description of the Goddess Nemesis. That Historian having mentioned the Tragical end of some great Criminals, adds: (e) Hæc & hujusmodi quædam innumerabilia ultrix facinorum impiorum, bonorumque præmiatrix aliquoties operatur Adrastia, (atque utinam semper) quam vocabulo duplici etiam Nemesim appellamus: . . . . . . Hæc ut regina causarum, & arbitra rerum ac disceptatrix, urnam sortium temperat, accidentium vices alternans: voluntatumque nostrarum exorsa interdum alio, quàm quò contendebant, exitu terminans, multiplices actus permutando convolvit. Eademque necessitatis insolubili retinaculo mortalitatis vinciens fastus tumentes incassum, & incrementorum detrimentorumque momenta versans, ut novit, nunc erectas mentium cervices opprimit & enervat: nunc bonos ab imo suscitans, ad bene vivendum extollit. You may plainly see, he supposes that the Goddess Nemesis presides over the Vicissitudes of Elevation and Overthrow, which are to be seen in the course of Humane things, and that she directs the Play of the Swipe, which I have mention'd in another Place, upon occasion of an Answer of Æsop, which is altogether like the Maxim of Xenophon; but we must not forget, that he supposes at the same time, that she dispenses the Alternative (g) with a supreme Equity. Valesius observes, 1. That she is called Nemesis, because she renders to every one his due. 2. That Plato in the 4th Book de Republica, calls her the Messenger of Justice. 3. That Dion Chrysostomus observes in his 64th Oration, that Fortune, as it is Equitable, went by the Name of Nemesis, τὸ ἴσον αὐτῆς Νέμεσις. Æquitas ejus (Fortunæ) Nemesis dicta est. 4. That the Ancients ascribed to God a certain Power which mortified Proud Men, and destroyed all sublime things. 5. That that Power was called either Envy φθόνος, or Indignation νέμεσις. 6. That Indignation or Nemesis has a great affinity with Envy, and that in the 2d Book of Aristotle's Morals, it holds the middle place between Envy and the opposite Vice, which makes one rejoyce at other Men's misfortunes (h). 7. That Herodotus upon this account makes Solon say, that all the Deities are envious, and Artabanus, that God was envious. (i) Artabanus apud eumdem Herodotum in lib. 7. iisdem verbis alloquitur Xerxem: ὁ δὲ θεὸς γλυκὺν γεύσας τὸν αἰῶνα, φθονερὸς ἐν αὐτῷ εὑρίσκεται ἐών. At Deus qui suavi perfruitur ævo, invidus ipse esse deprehenditur. Quæ quidem Herodoti verba immeritò reprehendit Plutarchus. 8. That Plutarch had no reason to censure (k) those Words of Herodotus; for if Nemesis is justly attributed to God, why should not Envy φθόνος be ascribed to him? one of those Vices is not lesser than the other among Men: but when such things are spoken of God, they are divested of all Imperfection, and ought to be understood in a favourable sense; or else Plutarch himself would be convicted of the same fault, since he said in the Life of Paulus Æmilius, (l) Οὐδενὶ γὰρ δὲ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἀνεπίφθονον, πλὴν εἴ τι δαιμόνιον. . . . . . . &c. (m); that is to say, "Æmilius was "admired and accounted happy by all Men, and "unenvy'd by every one that was good: Only that "it seems the Province of some God, to lessen the "happiness which is too great and inordinate, and "so to mingle the Affairs of Human Life, that no "one should be intirely free and exempt from Calamities; but, as it is in Homer, that those should "think themselves truly blessed, to whom Fortune "has given an equal share of Good and Evil." You will see hereafter what follows in Plutarch.

I shall make some short Observations upon this Apology of Valesius. I say, 1. That all the Heathen Authors, who ascribe the Functions of Nemesis to the Deity, are not to blame; for they who ascribe them to God, according to the above-mentioned Notions of Ammianus Marcellinus, or according to that Equality and Equity which Dion Chrysostomus speaks of, attribute nothing to him that is unworthy of him, or that includes a Moral Imperfection. But there have been I don't know how many Poets, Orators, and other People, who understood by Nemesis a Morose Being, whose greatest delight was to overturn Humane Prosperity, and to poison with some misfortunes such Events as were able to give most Joy to illustrious Men. In that sense it is as impious a thing to use the Word νέμεσις as that of φθόνος, with respect to God; and therefore Valesius had no reason to say that the Last could be excused by the First. I say, 2. That the Chapter of Aristotle's Morals, which he refers us to, is not favourable to him. It is true, that we read there, that there are three sorts of Envy, two at the extreams, and one in the Middle. That which is in the Middle, is called νέμεσις, Nemesis, and consists in being sorry that a Man, who deserves not to be happy, should be happy notwithstanding. The excessive Extream is called φθόνος, and consists in being sorry that there are any Men happy. The defective Extream is called ἐπιχαιρεκακία, and consists in rejoycing at the misfortune of others (a). This Doctrine is not very exact, and has been very well refuted by the Commentator Eustratius. He shews that a Man who rejoyces at the Misery of others, is vexed at the Happiness of others, and consequently that the Passion called φθόνος, and the Passion called ἐπιχαιρεκακία belong to the same Persons. They are not therefore two Extreams, between which the Passion called νέμεσις may be placed. But I leave that Dispute, and I shall only observe, that the popular Style, which Men conformed themselves to in Matters of Religion, admitted not of those scrupulous distinctions, which Aristotle made use of in his Morals, and which are most times meer Logical Abstractions. We must not therefore fancy, that they, who feared Nemesis, and spoke of her Conduct, had in their Minds, as the Rule of the Nature or Character of that Goddess, the difference which that Philosopher observes between νέμεσις Indignation, and φθόνος Envy. I say 3. That nothing can be more prejudicial to the design of the Apologist, than his having recourse to Aristotle's Morals; for according to that Philosopher the Word φθόνος signifies the trouble and vexation occasioned by the Happiness of others in general, whether the Person that is happy deserves it or not. He that is subject to that Passion is called φθονερὸς (b). He exceeds the Person called νεμεσητικὸς, who feels what goes by the Name of νέμεσις, being sorry for the prosperity of those who are unworthy of it. It is certain that Herodotus has given the Epithet of φθονερὸς to God; therefore by Aristotle's Doctrine, he is more to blame than if he had used only the Word Nemesis or Nemesiticus. Therefore to alledge the 2d Book of Aristotle's Morals, is to furnish the Accusers of Herodotus with proofs against him. What did therefore Valesius think of? Had he not forgot his usual exactness, when designing to prove that φθόνος and νέμεσις are as vicious the one as the other, he confirmed his opinion by the Doctrine of that Philosopher? I say, 4. That he is in the wrong to assert, that when Envy or such like Imperfections, are ascribed to God, they lose what is Vicious in them, and that they must be favourably understood. This cannot reach so far as Moral Imperfections, or that sort of Faults we think to be inconsistent with an Honest Man. Such are Fraud, Cruelty, Treason, and that sort of base Envy which cannot bear any one's prosperity, and prompts one to persecute all those that excel. All the Blasphemies of the Poets, and all the Impious Doctrines upon which the Religious Worship of the Heathens was grounded, and which have been so solidly refuted by the Fathers of the Church, would be excusable, if the Maxim of Valesius was admitted. Let us therefore reject it, and lose no time in putting a Figurative sense upon Herodotus's Words. Let us rather say, that he took the Word Envy in an odious sense. We may judge of it as we judge of the Complaints, which the Pagans made of their Gods in their Calamities. Their Reviling of Fortune, and the Cruelty mitted a Miſtake, which I ſhall take notice of; it will give me occaſion to mention a (K) Political Aphoriſm. Cimon's Siſter undertook one Day to criticize the Conduct of Pericles, for which ſhe received a mortifying Anſwer. That Anſwer ſhews that Pericles had (L) a ready Wit. I have promiſed the Hiſtory

---

(e) Amm. Marcel. l. 14. c. 11. p. m. 59, 60.

(g) Jus quoddam sublime numinis efficacis . . . substantialis tutela . . . . quam Theologi veteres fingentes Justitiæ filiam ex abdita quadam æternitate tradunt omnia despectare terrena. Id. ib. p. 59.

(h) Ex Henr. Vales. in Marcel. p. 59.

(i) Vales. ib. p. 60. you will see at the end of this Rem. why I quote this Passage.

(k) Note that Valesius has not well ordered this Discourse; for Plutarch does not censure the Words of Artabanus, but those of Solon, which Valesius had quoted before he alledged those of Artabanus.

(l) Plut. in Paulo Æmilio p. 273. F.

(m) Ex Valesio ib.

(a) See Aristotle's Morals l. 2. c. 7. p. m. 19. and the Paraphrase of Andronicus p. m. 110.

(b) Ὁ μὲν γὰρ νεμεσητικὸς, λυπεῖται ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀναξίως εὖ πράττουσιν· ὁ δὲ φθονερὸς ὑπερβάλλων τοῦτον ἐπὶ πᾶσι λυπεῖται. Nam qui ad indignandum propensus est is dolet eorum rebus secundis qui eis indigni sunt. Invidus hunc superans, rebus omnibus secundis contabescit. Arist. ubi supra.

ety whereof they accuſed the Gods, were underſtood not in an Allegorical ſenſe, but in a Literal one: they deſigned to offend 'em by their Words, as they deſigned to offend them by their Actions, when they threw Stones at their Temples. Did the Roman People purifie the Idea of Cruelty, did they diveſt it of ſomething that was vicious, when they murmured at Fortune during the Triumph of Paulus Æmilius! Let us make uſe of Plutarch's Words, which follow immediately thoſe which we have ſeen above. They properly concern the Goddeſs Nemeſis, or that pretended Divine Virtue which Herodotus called Envy. "Æmilius had four Sons, " of which Scipio and Fabius were adopted into " other Families .... the other two which he had " by a ſecond Wife, and were yet but young, he " brought up in his own Houſe. One of theſe died " at 14 years of Age, five days before his Father's " Triumph, the other at 12, three days after. So " that there was no Roman without a deep ſenſe " of his ſuffering, and every one dreaded the Cru" elty of Fortune, that did not ſcruple to bring " ſo much ſorrow into a Houſe repleniſhed with " Happineſs, Rejoycing and Sacrifices, and to in" termingle Tears and Complaints with Songs of " Victory and Triumph." It is ſo true that the Word Envy was taken in the moſt odious Literal ſenſe, that ſome Wiſe Men oppoſed that Impiety, and ſaid in expreſs Words, that the Gods were not ſubject to that Paſſion. We have ſeen above the Remark of a famous Platoniſt, and we find in Stobæus four Greek Verſes of Phocylides, which ſay, that there is no Envy among the Gods, ἄφθονοι οὐρανίδαι, &c. 5. Laſtly, I ſay that Plutarch cannot be guilty of Herodotus's fault, becauſe he ſpeaks only in a doubtful way, he makes uſe of an If, he confines himſelf to a certain God, whoſe particular Commiſſion or Lot ſhould be to croſs the happineſs of Men. Whereas Herodotus affirms, that all the Gods are Envious and Turbulent. Let us conclude, that Henricus Valeſius has not been very happy in undertaking to juſtifie Herodotus, and to refute Plutarch's Cenſure.

He has put quite a different ſenſe from mine, upon a Paſſage of Herodotus. I give the Reader notice of it, and I confeſs that his Tranſlation is more Literal than that of Laurentius Valla, which I have (f) followed. I did ſomewhat ſcruple to make uſe of it, but conſidering on the one ſide, that Henry Stephens did not criticize it, and on the other ſide, that according to that Tranſlation, Herodotus reaſons more nicely and more clearly, I preferred it to that of the Learned Henricus Valeſius: perhaps I am in the wrong.

(K) The miſtake of Valerius Maximus will give me occaſion to mention an Aphoriſm.] He ſays that Ariſtophanes in one of his Comedies, introduces Pericles returning from Hell, and declaring that a Lion ought not to be brought up, and that if he be brought up and ſuffered to grow, he muſt be obey'd. (g) Ariſtophanis quoque altioris eſt prudentiæ præceptum, qui in comœdia introduxit remiſſum ab inferis Athenienſem Periclem, vaticinantem, non oportere in urbe nutriri leonem; ſin autem ſit alitus, obſequi ei convenire. Monet enim, ut præcipuæ nobilitatis & concitati ingenii juvenes refrenentur. Nimio vero favore ac profuſa indulgentia paſti, quo minus potentiam obtineant, ne impediantur: quod ſtultum ſit, & inutile, eas obtrectare vires, quas ipſe foveris. 'Tis Æſchylus, and not Pericles that ſays ſo in Ariſtophanes. Here are the Words of that Poet:

Οὐ (h) χρὴ λέοντος σκύμνον ἐν πόλει τρέφειν,
Μάλιστα δὲ λέοντα μὴ 'ν πόλει τρέφειν.
Ἢν δ' ἐκτραφῇ τις, τοῖς τρόποις ὑπηρετεῖν.
Catulum ne alas leonis in republica,
Ac maxime ipſum leonem ne alas ibi.
Quod ſi quis alitus; obſequendum moribus.

They were thus Tranſlated by Eraſmus, who obſerves (i) that Valerius Maximus quotes that Paſſage, but he does not cenſure him (k) for having taken Pericles for Æſchylus. He underſtood that Sentence better than Valerius Maximus: the latter reaſons thus; Since you have bred up a Man, you ought to conſider his Power as your own Work; it would be therefore a piece of folly to go about to deſtroy it, nay, you would not be able to ſucceed in it. This is a pitiful Reaſoning. The Greek Poet meant no ſuch thing. His meaning was without doubt, that the beſt way to avoid the Miſeries which ariſe from oppoſing a Power, which was ſuffered to grow too great, is to yield to the Stream. Admonet ænigma, they are the Words of Eraſmus (l), non eſſe fovendam potentiam quæ leges poſſet opprimere: quod ſi forte talis quiſpiam extiterit, non eſſe è rep. decertare cum illo, quem nequeas niſi magno reip. malo devincere. Tyrannus aut ferendus eſt, aut non recipiendus. It is a great fault in a Republick, when they ſuffer a factious and bold Subject to get too great an Authority. But it is a greater fault ſtill to oppoſe that Man, when they have ſuffered him to become Maſter of a Republick. There are a thouſand Abuſes which ought to be prevented; but when they are grown ſtrong, it is very often a leſſer Evil to tolerate them, than to undertake to reform them. Thoſe who undertake it, do moſt times as Sylla did (m), they make uſe of a Remedy worſe than the Diſeaſe. An Hiſtorian ſaid very judiciouſly, that it had been better to let the Sick and Wounded Republick lie quiet, than to ſtir it, in order to give it ſome Remedies, and dreſs its Wounds. (n) Expediebat quaſi ægra ſauciaque Reipublicæ requieſcere quomodocunque, ne vulnera curatione ipſa reſcinderentur. I might alledge a great many things concerning the Inconveniencies of certain Remedies, which are made uſe of to cure Publick Evils; but it would look too much like an Affectation of Common-Places.

(L) The Anſwer of Pericles to Cimon's Siſter, ſhews that he had a ready Wit.] Cimon and Pericles had very different Intereſts, and were of two contrary Parties. The Latter became ſuperiour to the other, and cauſed him to be Baniſhed (a). It was not the only advantage he had over him; for he contributed to his Recalling. That mark of Credit to do and undo things, did but increaſe the Jealouſie of Cimon's Family: The Victories of Pericles increaſed alſo that Paſſion. Wherefore Elpinice, Cimon's Siſter, being diſpleaſed with the Praiſes beſtowed upon Pericles's Victories, could not forbear reflecting upon them out of ſpite: Pericles paid her off with this ſmart Anſwer contained in a Greek Verſe: You ſhould uſe no Paint, you are too Old for that. Let us ſee the Words of Plutarch. " (b) Pericles after " the overthrow of Samos, as ſoon as he return'd " back to Athens, he took care that thoſe who died " in the War, ſhould be honourably Buried, and made " ſuch a Funeral Harangue, as the Cuſtom is, in " their Commendation at their Graves and Monu" ments, that he was highly admir'd and eſteem'd " for it. As he came down from the Pulpit (or " Place where they delivered their Speeches) the " reſt of the Ladies came and complimented him, " taking him by the Hand, and Crowning him with " Garlands and Ribbons, as they uſed to do with " Gameſters that won the Publick Prizes; only El" pinice coming near to him, ſaith ſhe, Theſe are " brave things, Pericles, that you have done, and " ſuch as deſerve our Chaplets, who have loſt us " as many brave worthy Citizens, not in a War " with Phœnicians or Medes, (Enemies and Foreign" ers) as my Brother Cimon was wont to do, but for " the overthrow of a City that was in Alliance, " and of the ſame Country and Kindred with us. " As Elpinice ſpoke theſe Words, (c) he gently " ſmiling, as 'tis ſaid, returned her this Verſe of " Archilochus for Anſwer.

Old Woman as you are,
You ſhould not Powder Hair,
Nor, as you walk, Perfume the Air,
Leave theſe things to the Young and Fair.

Could any thing be ſaid more to the purpoſe to mortifie that Lady? We are told of another Anſwer, which is not ſo glorious to Pericles. He was one of Cimon's Accuſers in a Capital Affair. Elpinice went and humbly beſought him to be favourable to her Brother: You are too Old, ſaid he to her, to ſucceed in ſuch a Sollicitation. (d) Ἐλθούσης δὲ πρὸς αὐτὸν τῆς Ἐλπινίκης καὶ δεομένης, μειδιάσας εἶπεν, Ὦ Ἐλπινίκη γραῦς εἶ, ὡς πράγματα τηλικαῦτα πράσσειν. Quum adiſſet autem eum ſupplex Elpinice, ridens, at enim anus es, inquit, Elpinice: anus es nimium, quàm ut res tantas tranſigas. The meaning of thoſe Words

(f) In the Art. of Artabanus.

(g) Val. Max. l. 7. c. 2. n. 7. in Exter.

(h) Ariſtoph. in Ranis, act. 5. ſc. 4. p. m. 264.

(i) Eraſm. adag. 77. chil. 2. cent. 3. p. m. 451.

(k) Leopardus Emendat. l. 8. c. 12. & Pighius, Comment. in hunc loc. Val. Maximi, cenſure Valerius Maximus for it.

(l) Eraſm. ib.

(m) Ingratus L. Sylla, qui patriam durioribus remediis quam pericula erant, ſanavit. Seneca de benef. l. 5. c. 16.

(n) Flor. l. 3. c. 23. See Balzac's Letters to Chapelain p. 107.

(a) Plut. in Pericle p. 157.

(b) Id. in Pericle.

(c) Ταῦτα τῆς Ἐλπινίκης λεγούσης, Περικλῆς μειδιάσας ἀτρέμα, λέγεται τὸ τοῦ Ἀρχιλόχου πρὸς αὐτὴν εἰπεῖν, Οὐκ ἂν μύροισι, γραῦς ἐοῦσ', ἠλείφεο. Sic fata Elpinice, ſubriſit Pericles, & ſubmiſſe hoc ei reſpondit Archilochi, Quando anus es, ungi minus tibi convenit. Plut. in Pericle, p. 167.

(d) Id. ib. p. 157. E.

Hiſtory of the (M) famous ASPASIA, and I will be as good as my Word.

Words ſeems to be this; If your Youth could perſuade me, that by granting me the poſſeſſion of your Body, you would pay the Service I ſhould do to your Brother, I would ſerve him; but you are too old to make me with ſuch a mark of thankfulneſs, you ſhall therefore obtain nothing from me. Two things might be ſaid for Pericles; Firſt, That he ſpoke in jeſt; Secondly, That he meant only, that the other Perſons whom ſhe would endeavour to prevail with, would deſpiſe her Old Age. A Young and Beautiful Sollicitreſs may obtain a thouſand things, which an Old Woman will never obtain. Plutarch obſerves, that notwithſtanding that Anſwer, Pericles did but weakly purſue his Accuſation. Others ſay, that he liked Elpinice very well, and lay with her as a Reward of the good Offices he had done Cimon. It was no very difficult thing to gain her, for ſhe lay with her Brother. (e) Καὶ Κίμωνος δ' Ἐλπινίκῃ τῇ ἀδελφῇ παρανόμως συνόντος, ὕστερον ἐκδοθείσῃ Καλλίᾳ, καὶ φυγαδευθέντος, μισθὸν ἔλαβε τῆς καθόδου αὐτοῦ ὁ Περικλῆς τὸ τῇ Ἐλπινίκῃ μιχθῆναι. Cum Cimon Elpinice ſorore, quam poſt nuptum Calliæ dedit, contra leges abuteretur, exilioque damnatus fuiſſet, ejus reditus mercedem Pericles accepit Elpinices concubitum. Beſides, ſhe proſtituted her ſelf to a (f) Painter. Obſerve 1. That Athenæus (g) from the teſtimony of Antiſthenes, ſuppoſes ſhe obtained Pericles's Vote for the Recalling of her Brother, by granting him the Enjoyment of her ſelf. 2. That according to Plutarch, ſhe received Pericles's denying Anſwer becauſe of her Old Age, as ſhe was ſolliciting him in a Criminal Proceſs which concerned Cimon (h), and which happened before the time mention'd by Athenæus. It is neceſſary to obſerve this; for if Plutarch had ſpoken of a Sollicitation that was poſterior to the Recalling of Cimon, we might believe that the only reaſon why Pericles favoured that Exile, was his Engagement to Elpinice. The Anſwer mentioned by Plutarch would make me believe, that Elpinice remembring that the laſt favours ſhe granted to Pericles, made him conſent that Cimon ſhould be Recalled, applied her ſelf to him again, to deſire him not to be againſt her Brother, who was concerned in a Criminal Proceſs; and that Pericles anſwered her in Words to this effect: “Don't expect to obtain any thing from me by your Sollicitations, you are no more what you was, when the amorous Sport you granted me, moved me to do your Brother a good Service; you are now too Old, to deſerve that I ſhould make ſuch an Exchange of Courteſie with you:” But as I have already ſaid, Plutarch ſuppoſes that Anſwer was made before Cimon's Oſtraciſm. However it be, Athenæus tells (i) us that Pericles was very much given to Women.

(M) I have promiſed the Hiſtory of Aſpaſia.] (k) She was born at Miletus: ſhe followed the ſteps of Thargelia, who gained the Affection of the Principal Græcians of Ionia by her Wit and Beauty, and engaged them to favour the King of Perſia. Aſpaſia was a Woman of ſo great Parts, that Socrates went to ſee her, and carried his Friends with him (l); and to ſpeak more clearly, ſhe taught him Rhetorick and Politicks. (m) Ἀσπασία μέντοι ἡ σοφὴ τοῦ Σωκράτους διδάσκαλος τῶν ῥητορικῶν λόγων. Aſpaſia ſapiens fœmina Socratis in eloquentia ſtudiis magiſtra. Πλάτων ἐν τῷ Μενεξένῳ τὸν Σωκράτην παρ' αὐτῆς φησι μαθεῖν τὰ πολιτικά. Plato in Menexeno teſtatur, Socratem ab ea didiciſſe politica (n). That which is moſt ſtrange, is, that they who frequented her, carried their Wives to her Houſe, that they might hear her Diſcourſes and Lectures, tho' ſhe kept many Whores at home. (o) Τὰς γυναῖκας ἀκροασομένας οἱ συνήθεις ἦγον εἰς αὐτήν, καίπερ οὐ κοσμίου προεστῶσαν ἐργασίας οὐδὲ σεμνῆς, ἀλλὰ παιδίσκας ἑταιρούσας τρέφουσαν. Fœminaſque ad audiendam eam duxerunt familiares: licet officinam tractaret parum decoram & honeſtam, quæ puellas ad quæſtum corpore faciendum aleret. She underſtood Politicks very well, and it was ſaid that Pericles kept Company with her, becauſe ſhe had a great knowledge of the Maxims of Government; but their great Acquaintance proceeded from ſome other Cauſes. Love had a ſhare in it: Pericles loved not his Wife, and parted with her with all his Heart to give her to another, and then he Married Aſpaſia, and loved her paſſionately. The Hiſtorian (p) who relates all theſe things, alledges as a very ſingular proof of his Love, a thing which would be looked upon now as a moſt ridiculous proof. Pericles, ſays he, never went to, or came from the Senate without kiſſing Aſpaſia. (q) Αὐτὸς δὲ τὴν Ἀσπασίαν λαβὼν, ἔστερξε διαφερόντως. καὶ γὰρ ἐξιὼν, ὥς φασι, καὶ εἰσιὼν ἀπ' ἀγορᾶς, ἠσπάζετο καθ' ἡμέραν αὐτὴν μετὰ τοῦ καταφιλεῖν. Aſpaſiam uxorem duxit, quam mire dilexit, nam, ſive exiret, ſive rediret à foro, ſalutabat ſemper eam oſculo. Perhaps that Author underſtood not well what he read upon that ſubject. I had rather ſay, as (r) an Author intimates in Athenæus, that Pericles went to ſee Aſpaſia twice a Day, and kiſſed her when he came in, and when he went out; which was before he Married her. It has been reported, that he turned out his Wife, and lodged with Aſpaſia a Megarian Whore, and plunged himſelf into Lewdneſs, and ſpent a great part of his Eſtate upon that Whore. (s) Περικλέα δὲ τὸν Ὀλύμπιόν φησιν Ἡρακλείδης ὁ Ποντικὸς ἐν τῷ περὶ ἡδονῆς, ὡς ἀπήλλαξεν ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας τὴν γυναῖκα, καὶ τὸν μεθ' ἡδονῆς βίον προείλετο, ᾤκει τε μετὰ Ἀσπασίας τῆς ἐκ Μεγάρων ἑταίρας, καὶ τὸ πολὺ μέρος τῆς οὐσίας εἰς ταύτην κατανάλωσε. Periclem Olympium Heraclides Ponticus ſcribit, libro de voluptate, expulſa domo uxore voluptati ſe tradidiſſe, cum Aſpaſia ſcorto Megarico (t) habitaſſe, & magnam rei familiaris partem in eam dilapidaſſe. Aſpaſia, after the Death of Pericles, applied her ſelf to a Man of a mean Extraction, whom ſhe raiſed to the principal Dignities of the Republick (v). Which ſhews that nothing was impoſſible to her Wit and Eloquence. She muſt needs have well underſtood the Art of Speaking, ſince many Athenians learn'd Rhetorick of her. She acquired ſo great a Reputation, that Young Cyrus gave the Name of Aſpaſia (w) to a Miſtreſs whom he loved and eſteemed above all things. Our Aſpaſia was the cauſe of the War, which the Republick of Athens declared againſt the Samians. They were at War with the Mileſians for the City of Priene, which the two Parties laid a claim to. The Samians got the Victory. Aſpaſia out of Love for her Countrymen, deſired Pericles to make the Athenians declare War againſt the Samians (a). It's ſaid alſo that ſhe was the cauſe of the Megarian War, which was the beginning of that of Peloponneſus, and that the motive which induced her to it was a very ſhameful one. Some young Athenians having drunk too much, went to Megara, and carried away a famous Whore. The Megarians carried away, by way of Repriſals, two Whores belonging to Aſpaſia. This was the ſubject of her Anger, which moved her, as it is ſaid, to make uſe of all her Credit to have the Megarians attack'd. (b) Μεγαρεῖς δὲ . . . . . . τὴν αἰτίαν εἰς Ἀσπασίαν καὶ Περικλέα τρέπουσι, χρώμενοι τοῖς περιβοήτοις καὶ δημώδεσι τούτοις ἐκ τῶν Ἀχαρνέων στιχιδίοις, Πόρνην δὲ Σιμαίθαν, ἰόντες Μεγαράδε νεανίαι κλέπτουσι μεθυσοκότταβοι· κᾆθ' οἱ Μεγαρῆς ὀδύναις πεφυσιγγωμένοι, ἀντεξέκλεψαν Ἀσπασίας πόρνα δύο. Megarenſes vero . . . . . . cauſam omnem in Aſpaſiam detorquent & Periclem, allegantque celebratos & vulgatos hoſce verſus Ariſtophanis ex Acharnibus,

Juvenes profecti Megaram ebrii auferunt
Simætham ex ſcortatione nobilem:
Megarenſis hinc populus dolore percitus,
Furatur Aſpaſiæ duo ſcorta haud impiger.

Plutarch had done well to ſet down the two following Verſes; for they contain the concluſion which the Poet draws from that Narrative, viz. That three Whores were the cauſe (c) of a general War in Greece.

Κἀντεῦθεν ἀρχὴ τοῦ πολέμου κατερράγη
Ἕλλησι πᾶσιν, ἐκ τριῶν λαικαστριῶν.
Hinc initium belli prorupit
Univerſis Græcis, ob tres meretriculas.

Athenæus (d), who alledges the ſix Verſes of Ariſtophanes, ſays juſt before, that the School of Aſpaſia filled the whole Country with Whores. (e) Καὶ Ἀσπασία δὲ ἡ Σωκρατικὴ ἐνεπορεύετο πλήθη καλῶν γυναικῶν, καὶ ἐπλήθυνεν ἀπὸ τῶν ταύτης ἑταιρίδων ἡ Ἑλλάς, ὡς καὶ ὁ χαρίεις Ἀριστοφάνης παρασημαίνεται λέγων τὸν Πελοποννησιακὸν πόλεμον, ὅτι Περικλῆς διὰ τὸν Ἀσπασίας ἔρωτα, καὶ τὰς ἁρπασθείσας ἀπ' αὐτῆς θεραπαίνας ὑπὸ Μεγαρέων, ἀνερρίπισε τὸ κατὰ Μεγαρέων ψήφισμα τὸ δεινόν. Dalechampius renders thoſe Greek words thus: Aſpaſia Socratica formoſas mulieres, & eas quidem multas, Athenis præbuit. Jam

inde

(e) Athen. l. 13. p. 589. F.

(f) To Polygnotus. See Plut. in Cimone p. 480.

(g) Ubi ſupra.

(h) Plut. in Pericle, p. 157. E. See alſo in vita Cimonis, p. 487, where he quotes Steſimbrotus a contemporary Hiſtorian.

(i) Ἦν δ' οὗτος ἀνὴρ πρὸς ἀφροδίσια πάνυ καταφερής. Fuit quidem ille ad Venerem multum propenſus. Athen. ib.

(k) Plut. in Pericle, p. 165.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Athen. l. 5. p. 219. See alſo Lucian de Saltatione p. m. 923. tom. 1.

(n) Harpocration voce Ἀσπασία.

(o) Plut. ibid. C.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib. D.

(r) Ἀντισθένης δὲ ὁ Σωκρατικὸς ἐρασθέντα φησὶν αὐτὸν Ἀσπασίας δὶς τῆς ἡμέρας εἰσιόντα καὶ ἐξιόντα ἀπ' αὐτῆς ἀσπάζεσθαι τὴν ἄνθρωπον. Antiſthenes Socraticus narrat amatorem illum Aſpaſiæ, bis quotidie ſalutaturum ad eam introire, exireque inde ſolitum. Athen. l. 13. p. 589. E.

(s) Id. l. 10. p. 533.

(t) She was born at Miletus according to Plutarch. Perhaps Heraclides gives her the Surname of Megarian, becauſe ſhe kept a Bawdy-Houſe at Megara before ſhe came to Athens.

(v) Plut. ib. See alſo Harpocration ub. ſup. and the Notes of Valeſius.

(w) See the Rem. C. of the Art. Cyrus.

(a) Plut. ib. p. 165, 166.

(b) Id. ib. p. 168. E.

(c) Note, that Plutarch does not adopt this Fact. See the Rem. G.

(d) Athen. l. 13. p. 570.

(e) Id. ib. p. 569, 570.

See the Remark M. I will make alſo a ſmall Collection of ſome miſtakes, (N) which concern

[illegible] abundant Græca, ut indicat facetus Ariſtophanes, Peloponneſiaci belli cauſam explicans, nempe ob amicam Aſpaſiæ, & raptas à Megarenſibus ejus ancillas, Periclem decretum infauſtum illud de bello Megarenſibus inferendo, velut ignem flabello, excitaſſe, & accendiſſe. I muſt not forget that Aſpaſia was accuſed of two Crimes by the Comedian Hermippus. He (f) made himſelf a Party againſt her in due form, and accuſed her before the Judges of Impiety, and of drawing Women into her Houſe to ſatiſfie the Luſt of Pericles. I don't know very well whether he pretended that ſhe had been a Bawd to Pericles after he had Married her: in ſuch a caſe the ſecond Crime had been as extraordinary as the firſt; for it is ſo rare a thing, that a Woman ſhould be her Huſband's Bawd, as it is a rare thing that ſhe ſhou'd have no Religion. During the Trial of Aſpaſia, Pericles uſed ſo many Intreaties, and ſhed ſo many Tears that he obtained her Abſolution. He expected not the ſame favour for Anaxagoras, who had been accuſed of Irreligion at the ſame time, under pretence that he explained (g) Meteors by Philoſophical Reaſons: he ſent him out of Athens to ſave him. (h) Ἀσπασίαν μὲν οὖν ἐξῃτήσατο πάνυ πολλὰ παρὰ τὴν δίκην, ὥς φησιν Αἰσχίνης, ἀφεὶς ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς δάκρυα, καὶ δεηθεὶς τῶν δικαστῶν· Ἀναξαγόραν δὲ, φοβηθεὶς, ἐξέπεμψε καὶ προύπεμψεν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως. Ac Aſpaſiam quidem eripuit Pericles precibus, per qua vim lacrymarum in cauſa dicenda (ut ſcribit Æſchines) profudit, obſecravitque judices: Anaxagoram trepidans ablegavit, atque ex urbe deduxit. Athenæus mentions another Author who relates the ſame Fact, and who obſerves, that when Pericles was in danger of loſing his Life, he ſhed not ſo many Tears as he did upon the account of Aſpaſia. (i) Καὶ φευγούσης ποτὲ αὐτῆς γραφὴν ἀσεβείας, λέγων ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς, πλείονα ἐδάκρυσεν, ἢ ὅτε ὑπὲρ τοῦ βίου καὶ τῆς οὐσίας ἐκινδύνευεν. Et cùm impietatis accuſata fuiſſet, orationem pro illa habuiſſe, effuſiùs lacrymantem, quàm cùm vitæ ac fortunarum periculum adiiſſet. Tanaquillus Faber, in the Lives of the Greek Poets, pag. 81. wraps up this Accuſation of Aſpaſia in Words which every one does not underſtand. "Aſpaſia, ſays he, deſerves that Honour, "ſince ſhe was the Miſtreſs of a Man who was "Maſter of Attica, and of the Iſlands of the "Ægean Sea; ſince ſhe was the Juno of the Olympian Pericles; ſince ſhe made Verſes and Harangues; and laſtly ſince ſhe knew as much "Rhetorick as Prodicus and Gorgias the great Cymbaliſt of Greece. But ſhe knew ſomething elſe, "which I would never tell you, were it not that I "am reſolved to ſpeak of Hermippus a Comick Poet, "who lived at the ſame time. Hermippus .... made "ſome Verſes againſt Pericles, and even accuſed "Aſpaſia of driving a certain Trade which Pericles "hated not. That Trade is the thing which I don't "know how to expreſs. However, let us ſee whether ſo naſty a Subject may not be explained with "honeſt Words. She did, Sir, for Pericles what "Livia did for Auguſtus, when he was diſguſted, "and the Nights ſeemed to him to be too long, &c. What Tanaquillus Faber ſays of Livia, is to be found in Suetonius Chap. 71. of the Life of Auguſtus. Circa libidines hæſit, poſtea quoque, ut ferunt, ad vitiandas virgines promptior, quæ ſibi undique ETIAM AB UXORE conquirerentur. I ſhall ſet down Plutarch's Words, that one may ſee the whole extent of the Crime which Aſpaſia was accuſed of: it will appear that ſhe debauched not Slaves and Outlandiſh Women, but the Noble Ladies of Athens. "(k) About this time Aſpaſia was Indicted of Impiety or Irreligion, upon the complaint of Hermippus a Writer of Comedies, who alſo laid further to her Charge, that ſhe was Bawd to Pericles, and entertained Citizens Wives and Daughters for his uſe; and Diopithes propoſed a Decree, "that Information ſhould be given in againſt ſuch "Perſons as deny a Deity, and thoſe who teach "or make Diſcourſes concerning Meteors and "other Appearances in the Sky; by theſe laſt "words aiming in ſhew at Anaxagoras, but really "ſtriking at Pericles."

(N) Of ſome miſtakes which concern Aſpaſia.] Quintilian has committed a miſtake in the Account he gives of the Queſtions which were put to Xenophon's Wife. She was aſk'd: If the Gold of your Neighbour was better than yours, which had you rather have, yours or her's? Her's, anſwered ſhe. If her Cloaths and Ornaments were finer than yours, had you rather have her's than yours? Yes, anſwered ſhe. But if her Huſband was better than yours, had you rather have him than yours? She was aſhamed of that Queſtion, and anſwered nothing. Cicero (l) relates this, and plainly ſays, thoſe Queſtions were put to Xenophon's Wife by Aſpaſia. But Quintilian ſays that they were put to Aſpaſia by Xenophon's Wife: (m) Ut apud Æſchinem Socraticum male reſpondit Aſpaſiæ Xenophontis uxor: quod Cicero his verbis transfert. Voſſius (n) cenſured that miſtake, but he was miſtaken in his turn; for he believed that Quintilian admitted of (o) two Aſpaſias. The miſtake does not conſiſt in that; but in believing that Aſpaſia mentioned by Cicero, was Xenophon's Wife. Colomeſius cenſures that fault of Quintilian (p), and obſerves that (q) Bruſonius follows it. I believe that overſight comes from the Copiſts, and that Quintilian ſaid apud Æſchinem Socraticum male reſpondit Aſpaſiæ Xenophontis uxor. A Copiſt not very Learned fancied it ſhould be Aſpaſia inſtead of Aſpaſiæ, and that it was the Name of Xenophon's Wife. Note, that Aſpaſia having by her captious Queſtions reduced the Wife to ſilence, applied her ſelf immediately to the Huſband, ask'd him the ſame Queſtions, and made him bluſh at the third, and reduced him to the ſame ſilence; and then ſhe made a very judicious Diſcourſe to both of 'em (r). The Learned Leopardus knew not that Quintilian, as we have him now, was the cauſe of Bruſonius's miſtake; he was contented to cenſure the modern Author. Idem Bruſonius, ſays he (ſ), eodem capite: Aſpaſia, inquit, Xenophontis uxor quum eſſet (ut muliebre ingenium eſt) rerum alienarum appetens atque invida, interrogata, ſi vicina tua, &c. Here is a fault which Leopardus took no notice of. Bruſonius ſuppoſes of his own Authority, that Aſpaſia, Xenophon's Wife, was a covetous and envious Woman. Where did he find ſuch a thing? Is it lawful to forge things of this nature? To what purpoſe is his Parentheſis? Having ſhew'd my ſmall Correction of Quintilian to a learned Humaniſt, he approved of it, and ſome days after, he ſhewed me his Edition of Quintilian Variorum, whereby it appears that Turnebus had already Corrected that Paſſage.

Suidas ſays falſely, that Pericles had two Sons by Aſpaſia, viz. Xanthippus and Paralus, for he had them by his other Wife.

Lloyd takes from our Aſpaſia a Paſſage of Xenophon, which might have made her very glorious: he underſtands it of another Aſpaſia, Wife of Cleobulus. But 'tis plain he is miſtaken, for 1. The Name of Xenophon's Interlocutor is not Cleobulus, but Critobulus. 2. Socrates, who is the other Interlocutor, does not ſpeak of Critobulus's Wife; he ſpeaks of the Rhetorician and Learned Aſpaſia; he ſays that ſhe will give Critobulus better Precepts than he (Socrates) can give him. (a) Συστήσω δέ σοι ἐγὼ καὶ Ἀσπασίαν, ἣ ἐπιστημονέστερον ἐμοῦ σοὶ ταῦτα πάντα ἐπιδείξει. Ego tibi exempli cauſa Aſpaſiam conſtituam, quæ doctius hæc omnia quam ego tibi monſtrabit.

Theſe words of a Commentator upon Minutius Felix are not very exact: (b) De Pythagora referunt Diogenes Laërtius lib. 8. & Lucianus in Gallo eum dixiſſe ſe primum fuiſſe Æthalidem Mercurii filium, inde Euphorbum Panthi filium, mox Aſpaſiam nobile Periclis ſcortum, deinde Cratem Cynicum. We have in thoſe Words three Removes of Pythagoras one after another: from the Body of Æthalides he went into that of Euphorbus, and then into that of Aſpaſia, and laſtly into that of Crates. If the Commentator was exact, that Liſt would be found intire both in Diogenes Laertius and Lucian; but there is only part of it in the one, and part of it in the other. This is no good way of quoting Authors. This ſhall be the firſt miſtake of that Author. The 2*d* conſiſts in giving a wrong account of the Narrative of Diogenes Laertius, who ſays that Pythagoras boaſted to have been ſucceſſively Æthalides, Euphorbus, Hermotimus, Pyrrhus and Pythagoras. 3*dly*, He does not give a better account of Lucian's Narrative; for had he tranſcribed him well, he would have ſaid that the Soul of Pythagoras was firſt in the Body of Euphorbus; and then in that of Pythagoras; and then in that of Aſpaſia; and then in that of Crates;

(f) Καὶ Ἀσπασία δίκην ἔφευγεν ἀσεβείας, Ἑρμίππου τοῦ κωμῳδοποιοῦ διώκοντος, καὶ προσκατηγοροῦντος ὡς Περικλεῖ γυναῖκας ἐλευθέρας εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ φοιτώσας ὑποδέχοιτο. Aſpaſia violatæ religionis eſt rea facta, accuſatore comœdiarum ſcriptore Hermippo: objecit præterea eam liberas fœminas, quibus illudebat Pericles, recipere. Plutarch. p. 169. D.

(g) Ψήφισμα Διοπείθης ἔγραψεν, εἰσαγγέλλεσθαι τοὺς τὰ θεῖα μὴ νομίζοντας, ἢ λόγους περὶ τῶν μεταρσίων διδάσκοντας, ἀπερειδόμενος εἰς Περικλέα δι᾽ Ἀναξαγόρου τὴν ὑπόνοιαν. Rogationem tulit Diopithes, nomina ut deferrentur eorum qui eſſe deos negarent, aut qui ſermones de rebus æthereis ſererent, ea ſuſpicione perſtringens Anaxagoræ cauſa Periclem. Id. ib. (h) Id. ib. E. (i) Athenæus l. 13. p. 589. ex Antiſthene Socratico. (k) Plut. in Pericle.

(l) Cic. de Invent. l. 1. fol. m. 92. A.

(m) Quintil. l. 5. c. 11. p. m. 243.

(n) Voſſ. Inſt. orat. l. 3. c. 5. p. m. 405.

(o) Quintiliani lapſus in duabus Aſpaſiis. Id. ib. in Indice rerum & verborum.

(p) Falſus eſt Fabius, quique eum ſecutus eſt Bruſonius in Apophthegm. Colomeſ. not. ad Quintil. p. m. 224. opuſcular.

(q) Here are all the Titles of that Author: L. Domitius Bruſonius, Contorſinus, Lucanus. He made a Collection of Apophthegms, intitled Septem facetiarum libri.

(r) See Cicero ub. ſup.

(ſ) Leopard. emendat. l. 12. c. 13.

(a) Xenoph. in Oeconom. p. m. 482.

(b) Ouzelius in Minut. Felic. p. 325. edit. 1672. in 8.

concern that Woman. I shall not forget the faults of Mr. Moreri (O), nor those of his Crates; afterwards in that of a King, &c. and lastly in that of a Cock. 4. He should not have quoted upon this subject, a Man who does nothing but droll, and who takes an Age posteriour to Pythagoras. He should have quoted those Authors only, who relate what Pythagoras himself said, speaking of the share he had in the Transmigrations of the Soul.

Moreri has not committed many mistakes. I find fault with him only for having said, that Aspasia was very Learned in Philosophy and Eloquence, but especially in Poetry. I don't blame Moreri for saying that she understood Philosophy and the Art of Speaking. I only say, that he was in the wrong to affirm, that Poetry was the Science that she excelled most in. This is so false, that one may very well doubt, whether she ever made any Verses. I think Athenæus is the only Author who might be alledged for it: but his Testimony is very weak; for he only says, that there were some Verses ascribed (c) to Aspasia, which had been published by Herodicus. To speak exactly of what she excelled in, we must say that it was Rhetorick. Pericles was not ashamed to recite (d) the Harangues which she composed. She understood Politicks better than Philosophy, and seeing Pericles consulted her about the Art of Reigning, it should not seem strange, that some other great Politicians should very much esteem the Counsels of Women. I said before that the Great Socrates learned that Science of her.

(O) The Faults of Mr. Moreri.] I. I doubt whether the Masters, who taught Pericles Philosophy, were jealous of the universal knowledge he acquired of it. The three Authors (e) quoted by Moreri say no such thing. I don't find that Circumstance in any ancient Author: yet I dare not say that Moreri invented it, or that the Modern Author, from whom he might have it, was the Inventer thereof; I only say, that his general way of quoting Authors, hinders me from denying many Falsities, and makes me speak in a doubtful manner. II. Seeing Plutarch says only that Pericles got a Victory over the Sicyonians (f) at Nemea, why does Moreri affirm, that this Battel was fought near the great River Nemea? III. If it be a River, it is not considerable enough to be called a great River. The following Mistakes are to be found in the Supplement. IV. Pericles did not fortifie the Isthmus of Corinth with a good Wall. Two things extreamly different one from another have been confounded together. He caused to be built at Athens what went by the Name of the (g) long Wall. It was rather the business of the Peloponnesians to fortifie the Isthmus of Corinth, than that of the Athenians. V. Plutarch and Herodotus are not well quoted; the latter says nothing of the Apophthegms or Actions of Pericles; and the other mentions only part of the things related in the Supplement. The fine Saying Amicus usque ad aras, being not in the Life of Pericles, the (h) Book of Plutarch wherein it is mentioned, should have been quoted. VI. The Article of Pericles's Son is very bad: any Reader would think that he commanded in Chief the Athenian Fleet, which defeated that of Lacedæmon near the Islands called Arginusæ; for we are told, that he did wonders in that Expedition, and burnt the Fleet of the Enemies. This Author should have exprest himself so, if he had meant a Man who had the whole Command. He said just before, that the Athenians chose him to succeed Alcibiades: Which will deceive more and more those who are not ignorant that Alcibiades (i) had been Captain-General of the Athenians. The truth is, that (k) Ten Generals were chosen in the room of Alcibiades, and that Pericles's Son was one of the Ten. Xenophon says so positively, and does not say that the Lacedæmonian Fleet was burnt; he only says, (l) that it was beaten, and went off, having lost 70 Ships. Note, That the Commander on the Day of the Battle, was not Pericles, but (m) Thrasybulus. If it be objected that the Collegues of Pericles are mentioned in the Supplement, for it says that he was condemned with the other Seven Captains of the Army, to lose his Head; I answer that my Censure is well grounded notwithstanding. An Author, who contradicts himself by using some Expressions which destroy one another, gives an ill account of a Fact, and confounds and deceives his Reader. Here is another Deceit; for a Reader being undeceived by this last Phrase, as to Pericles his Commanding in Chief, will be apt to believe, that there was but Eight Commanders on Board that Fleet. He will be therefore mistaken, for there were Ten: 'tis true, there was but Eight of them Condemn'd to lose their Lives. The Author of the Supplement ought to have exprest himself thus, he was condemned with Seven others. Xenophon observes (n) that Six only were put to Death, and that the other two were absent. He or Diodorus Siculus should have been quoted in the Supplement, and not Plutarch, who mention'd only the Son of Pericles (o) by the Bye, and without telling the circumstances of the causes of his Death. They were so unjust, that so enormous a thing was perhaps never seen under the most Despotick Monarchy. The Athenians put to Death Six Generals, who had lately obtained the most glorious Victory, that Grecians ever obtained over Grecians, and who had signalized themselves on many other occasions; they were put to Death, I say, because they had not buried those who died in the Battle. What they alledged in their defence was not at all minded, viz. That those whom they had intrusted with that care, met with a Storm, which hindred them from executing (p) that Commission. Socrates, one of their Judges, opposed (q) vigorously that Unjustice; but his Reasons were not minded. These brave Men suffered Death after such a manner as rendred that Iniquity most execrable. Diomedon spoke for all, and instead of Imprecations and Complaints, instead of setting forth their Services paid with Ungratefulness, he was contented to wish, that their Death might prove happy to their Country, and to desire the Assembly to accomplish the Vows which they had made to obtain the Victory. (r) Τὰ μὲν περὶ ἡμῶν κεκυρωθέντα συνενέγκαι τῇ πόλει· τὰς δὲ ὑπὲρ τῆς νίκης εὐχὰς ἐπειδήπερ ἡ τύχη κεκώλυκεν ἡμᾶς ἀποδοῦναι, καλῶς ἔχον ὑμᾶς φροντίσαι, καὶ τῷ Διὶ τῷ σωτῆρι καὶ Ἀπόλλωνι καὶ ταῖς σεμναῖς θεαῖς ἀποδοῦναι· τούτοις γὰρ εὐξάμενοι, τοὺς πολεμίους κατεναυμαχήσαμεν. Quod in capita nostra jam decretum est, id faustum ac felix civitati huic eveniat. At vota pro victori. Diis nuncupata, quia fortuna reddere nos prohibuit, vos accurare pium & honestum est. Jovi igitur servatori & Apollini & venerandis Deabus illa persolvitote. Horum enim numine invocato hostes profligavimus. The Historian who relates this, adds a Reflection upon the Fury which moved the People to such an Unjustice, the People, I say, incensed by their Orators. (s) Οὕτω δὴ ὁ δῆμος τότε παρεξέστη, καὶ παροξυνθεὶς ἀδίκως ὑπὸ τῶν δημαγωγῶν, τὴν ὀργὴν ἀπεσκήψατο εἰς ἄνδρας οὐ τιμωρίας ἀλλὰ πολλῶν ἐπαίνων καὶ στεφάνων ἀξίας. Tam perditè tunc populus insanivit, ut ab Oratoribus præter jus & fas exacerbatus, iram suam in viros, non modo nulli pœnâ, sed magnis insuper laudibus & coronis dignos, exoneravit. But why should that sort of Men go by such a Name? An Orator is defined, an honest Man who understands the Art of Speaking, (t) vir bonus dicendi peritus. The name of Orator or Preacher ought not therefore to be given to a shuffling, factious, and wicked Man, who uses his Eloquence and the Strength of his Lungs, to move the People to some Violence. I have said elsewhere, That Thomas Hobbes undertook the Translation of Thucydides, to put the English out of conceit with the Republican Spirit. It was well enough thought of; but it had been better still, if he had written a Book concerning the Internal State of Athens. The History we have of that People is only fit to impose upon us; we are charmed with the fair side of it; we are dazled with the Battles of Marathon and Salamis; with their Land and Sea-Forces, their Conquests, the Wealth of the Inhabitants, the Pomp of their Publick Shews, and the Magnificence of their Publick Buildings. All those things induce us to think, that to live under another Form of Government, is to be a Slave. But if we had a History which should but touch upon those things, and set forth at large the Tumults of their Assemblies, the Factions which divided that City, the Seditions wherewith it was agitated, the most illustrious Subjects persecuted, (e) banished, punished with Death at the Will of a violent Harangue-maker, we should be convinced, that the Atheeians who boasted so much of their Liberty, his Continuator, nor thoſe of another French Writer (P) concerning Pericles. Which will give me occaſion to obſerve the Unjuſtices and Diſorders which (P△) often prevailed under the Republican State of the Athenians.

(c) Ἐν τοῖς [illegible] in carminibus ipsi attributis, & ab Herodico Crateteio publicatis Athen. l. 5. p. 219. Gyraldus de Poetis Græcis p. 170. edit. 1696. says that Athenæus mentions Aspasia's Verses in some other places which he (Gyraldus) does not quote. I have not had time enough to verifie it.

(d) Plato in Menexeno, p. m. 517.

(e) Plut. in his Life: Diod. Sic. l. 12. Thucyd. l. 2, 3, & seq.

(f) Ἐν Νεμέᾳ, apud Nemeam. Plutarch in Pericle p. 163. D.

(g) Μακρὸν τεῖχος, longum murum. Id. ib. p. 160. init.

(h) 'Tis the Treatise de vitioso pudore, p. m. 531. See also Aulus Gellius l. 1. c. 3.

(i) See Plutarch in the Life of Alcibiades p. 210.

(k) See Xenophon l. 1. de gestis Græcor. p. m. 259. See also Diod. Sic. l. 13. c. 100.

(l) Xenoph. ib. p. 262.

(m) Diod. Sicul. l. 13. c. 97.

(n) Xenoph. ib. pag. [illegible]

(o) Plut. in vit. Periclis, sub fin. p. [illegible]

(p) See Xenoph. ib. p. 263.

(q) See the Life of Socrates, written by Mr. Charpentier, p. m. 153. & seq.

(r) Diod. Sic. l. 13. c. 102. p. m. 553. 'Tis the 221 p. of the Greek and Lat. edit. 1604. in fol.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) See Quintil. l. 12. c. 1. p. m. 552.

(e) Hos libros tum scripsisse dicitur (Thucydides) quum à Rep. remotus, atque id quod optimo cuique Athenis accidere solitum est, in exilium pulsus esset. Cicero de Oratore lib. 2. fol. 73. D.

Of all the Actions of Pericles, his Expedition into Samos, of the Motives whereof I have ſaid ſomething in one of my Remarks, was cried down † with the greateſt Malignity. You will find it in Plutarch, but he has omitted an odious Circumſtance, which he might have found in Alexis the Samian, in the Second Book of the Confines of Samos. That Author obſerved that the Whores who followed were at the bottom Slaves to a few Caballiſts, whom they called Demagogues, and who made 'em turn ſometimes one way, ſometimes another, according as their Paſſions changed: as the Sea drives the Waves ſometimes one way, ſometimes another, according as it is toſſed with the Winds. If you inquire into the Hiſtory of Macedonia, which was a Monarchy, it will not afford you ſo many Examples of Tyranny, as the Hiſtory of the Athenians will. But this is too long a Digreſſion. See the Remark P△.

(P) The faults of another French Writer.] He did not put his Name to his Book, which was Printed at Paris in 2 Vol. in 12. in the Year 1669, and is intitled A General Hiſtory of Greece. He ſays (d) That Phidias was accuſed of having in his Hands a great deal of Sacred Money, which was given him by Pericles. …… That the Athenians (e) charged Pericles with that Sacrilege, and accuſed Anaxagoras the Philoſopher his Preceptor of being an Accomplice of it, and of having given him ſuch Inſtructions. This Author has not well underſtood the Hiſtorian whom he tranſcribes; for we read in Diodorus Siculus, that (f) Phidias was accuſed of having converted to his own uſe a great Sum of Money, not without the knowledge of Pericles, who ordered him to make the Statue of Minerva. Whereupon the Enemies of Pericles moved the People to impriſon Phidias, and to bring an Action of Sacrilege againſt Pericles. They accuſed alſo Anaxagoras of impious Doctrines, and involved Pericles in the ſame Accuſation. It muſt be confeſt that an Hiſtorian, who repreſents that Fact as the Modern Author has repreſented it, does falſify, and conſiderably diſguiſe it. Some Pages after he ſays, (g) That Pericles having made the Funeral Oration which is in the Second Book of Thucydides ….. was ſo much careſſed and courted by the Athenian Ladies, that as he came down from the Pulpit, they imbraced him, kiſs'd his Hands, and crowned his Head with Flowers, as if he had returned Victorious from the Olympick Games. This Author confounds the times: the Harangue of Pericles, mentioned by Thucydides, was pronounced in Commendation of thoſe who had been killed in the Beginning of the Peloponneſian War. But the Orator was not careſſed by the Ladies at that time. If our Modern Author had carefully examined Plutarch whom he quotes, he might have known that Pericles received thoſe Careſſes after the Funeral Harangue he made (h) for thoſe who had loſt their Lives in the Samian War. There was a ſpace of 10 (i) Years between thoſe two Harangues. Here is another Miſtake of that Author. Having related what happened in the two firſt Campaigns of the Peloponneſian War, he ſays, that Pericles being diſpleaſed with the Reproaches of the People (k), harangued the Council of Athens, and repreſented many things, which made no great Impreſſion upon them, ſince (l) that Great Man was Fined. But, (the Hiſtorian goes on (m),) he was elected again General of the Athenian Army, an Honour he enjoyed not long, for he died two Years and a half after. He muſt then have lived till the 5th Year of the Peloponneſian War; but Thucydides (n) who knew it very well, ſays he died two Years and a half after the Beginning of that War. If that General Hiſtory of Greece was thus carefully examined, I think one would find ſuch Miſtakes every where.

(P△) The Unjuſtices and Diſorders which often prevailed among the Athenians.] See in the Remark O what I have ſaid upon this Subject by way of Digreſſion. I would add nothing to it, were it not that I know ſome Perſons have been diſpleaſed with that Digreſſion, and even affirmed that I am the only Man who ever made a Remark of that Nature. I will ſhew them that they have not read much, and that the Authorities which might be alledged againſt them, will not be more favourable to them than Reaſon: Reaſon, I ſay; for can any one have a good opinion of a Government, wherein the oppoſite Factions of Declaimers were a neceſſary Evil. (o) Ὁ δ' οὖν Μελάνθιος εἴτε παίζων εἴτε σπουδάζων, ἔλεγε διασώζεσθαι τὴν Ἀθηναίων πόλιν διὰ τὴν τῶν ῥητόρων διχοστασίαν καὶ ταραχήν· οὐ γὰρ ἀποκλίνειν ἅπαντας εἰς τὸν αὐτὸν τοῖχον, ἀλλὰ γίνεσθαί τινα τοῦ βλάπτοντος ἀνθολκὴν ἐν τῇ διαφορᾷ τῶν πολιτευομένων. Sanè Melanthius, ſive ſerio id, ſive joco, Athenienſium civitatem conſervatam fuiſſe dixit oratorum diſſidiis atque turbis. Ita enim non in unum univerſos parietem inclinaſſe, ſed eorum qui rempublicam tractabant in diſſidio quippiam fuiſſe quod repelleret à damnoſa parte urbem. I deſire you to compare two Paſſages of Ariſtotle together, that wherein he deſcribes the Diſorders of Democracies, and another wherein he obſerves how the City of Athens came to a Democratical Government. You will find by conferring thoſe two Paſſages one with another, that he muſt needs have look'd upon the Government, which was eſtabliſhed at Athens, after the Victories obtained over the Perſians, as a perfect Tyranny. He ſays (p), that ſince Solon intruſted ſome Judges, elected by the People, with the ſupreme Authority, the People were flattered as Tyrants uſe to be; that Ephialtes and Pericles leſſened the Authority of the Areopagus; that Pericles rendered Magiſtracy mercenary, and that the other Demagogues following thoſe Examples, introduced Democracy at laſt. He pretends that they acted not therein according to Solon's Intentions; and that the Pride of the Inhabitants after the Glory they acquired in the War againſt the Perſians, and the ill Qualities of the Demagogues produced that effect. Thus he acknowledges that Democracy reigned in Athens, that is, according to the Deſcription he made of that Form of Government in (q) another place of the ſame Book, a State wherein all things, the Laws themſelves, depend upon the Multitude ſet up for a Tyrant, and governed by the Flatteries of ſome Declaimers. Boetius brings in Philoſophy ſpeaking theſe Words, which are not advantageous to the Athenians: (r) Si cujus oriundus ſis patria reminiſceris, non uti Athenienſium quondam, multitudinis imperio regitur: ſed εἷς κοίρανός ἐστιν, εἷς βασιλεύς: qui frequentia civium non DEPULSIONE lætatur. There is ſcarce any thing more Satyrical againſt the Athenians, than the Verſes of Julius Cæſar Scaliger, wherewith a Learned Profeſſor of Hiſtory, in the Univerſity of an Imperial City, was extraordinary well pleaſed. I obſerve this, that one may ſee that a Profeſſor who received his Salary from a Republick, did not think himſelf obliged to have any regard for the Government of Athens. He is not contented to ſet down the Invective of Scaliger the Father, and to praiſe it; but he ſtrengthens it with Examples, and with an Apoſtrophe of Demoſthenes to Minerva. O Goddeſs, ſaid that Orator, being ready to go into Baniſhment, how come you to be ſo fond of three very troubleſome Beaſts, the Owl, the Dragon, and the People? (ſ) Cùm nulla cœna tam parca ſit, in qua non hilaritatis poculum circumeat; propinabo ejus loco lepidiſſimos hoſce verſus Julii Scaligeri de inſaniente Athenienſium vulgo:

Nulla eſt, puto Reſpublica nationè vera,
Commentitia, fictavè cogitatione,
Aut ſtultitiâ aut nequitiâ Atticâ priores.
Ita conſiliis flagitiiſque Demagogos
Tetris nugivoram excruciaſſe cerno plebem:
Fecem pelagi turbine turbulentiorem.
Juſtos opibus, patria & exuiſſe vita.

Nihil ſolemnius hoc poſtremo; & exemplo eſt Diomedon apud Valerium noſtrum, qui ad non meritum ſupplicium ductus nihil aliud locutus eſt, quam ut vota pro incolumitate exercitus ab ipſo nuncupata ſolverentur. Fertur, cum Demoſthenes jam exulaturus urbe cederet, extenſis verſus arcem manibus exclamaſſe: O Domina Polias (ita Minervam cognominabant) quid ita gaudes tribus moleſtiſſimis beſtiis, Noctua, Dracone & Populo.

(Q) The

---

† See Plutarch in the Life of Pericles p. 166. & seq.

(d) A General Hiſtory of Greece, tom. 2. p. 390.

(e) Ib. p. 441.

(f) Diod. Sicul. l. 12. c. 39.

(g) Ib. p. 466.

(h) See the Rem. L. let. b.

(i) The War of Samos happened in the 84th Olympiad, and that of Peloponneſus in the 87.

(k) A Gen. Hiſtory of Greece, p. 413.

(l) Ib. p. 415.

(m) Ib. p. 416.

(n) Thucydides l. 2. p. m. 118.

(o) Plut. de audiendis poetis, p. 20 C.

(p) Ariſt. politic. l. 2. c. 12. p. m. 252.

(q) Id. ib. l. 4. c. 4. p. 278.

(r) Boet. de conſol. Philoſ. l. 1. p. m. 15. See the Notes of Renatus Vallinus upon that place of Boetius.

(ſ) Chriſtophorus Adamus Rupertus diſſert. in Val. Max. l. 1. c. 1. p. 33, 34. edit. Noriberg. 1663.

lowed Pericles in that Expedition, got so much (Q) Money, that they built the Temple of Venus, surnamed of the Reeds, or of the Marshes in Samos. Which was a Reflection upon that General, as if he had not well observed Military Discipline.

PERIERS (Bonaventure des) born at Bar upon the River Aube in Burgundy, was Valet de Chambre to Margaret de Valois, Queen of Navarre, and Sister of Francis I. γ. He Published a Volume of French Poetry, which was Printed after his Death ε at Lyons, by John de Tournes, in the Year 1544, in 8; and the Translation § of Terence's Andria, and several other Stories in Prose, (A) intitled New Recreations ‡. I never saw his Cymbalum mundi: it is (B) said to be a most impious Book. He came to an unhappy End, for ⅓ he killed himself with a Sword, which he thrust into γ La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. p. 56.

ε Du Verdier Vau Privas, Biblioth. Franc. p. 131.

§ In French Verse.

‡ La Croix du Maine ibid.

⅓ Id. ib. p. 57.

(Q) The Whores ...... got so much Money that they built.] We find this Particularity in Athenæus. (a) 'Ἄλεξις δ' ὁ Σάμιος, says he, ἐν δευτέρῳ Ὥρων Σαμιακῶν τὴν ἐν Σάμῳ Ἀφροδίτην, ἣν οἱ μὲν ἐν Καλάμοις καλοῦσιν, οἱ δὲ ἐν Ἕλει, Ἀττικαὶ ἑταῖραι ἱδρύσαντο αἱ συνακολουθήσασαι Περικλεῖ, ὅτε ἐπολιόρκει τὴν Σάμον, ἱκανὰ ἐργασάμεναι ἀπὸ τῆς ὥρας. Alexis Samius libro secundo de Samiorum finibus, scribit, ædem Veneris in Samo, quam in arundinibus quidam vocant, alii in paludibus, meretrices Periclem secutas, cum obsideret Samum, ædificasse, ingenti quæstu prostitutæ formæ ditatas. Let us wonder at the Blindness of the Minds of Men: here are some Conscientious Whores, who consecrate to Religion a considerable Part of the Money they have got by their infamous Debaucheries. They cannot be better compared than with those Financiers, who being grown Rich with the Blood and Sweat of the People, build a magnificent Chappel, and adorn the Great Altar of a Cathedral with their Offerings.

(a) Athen. l. 13. c. 4. p. 572.

Si (b) l'on vient à chercher pour quel secret mystere
Alidor à ses frais bâtit un monastere.
Alidor, dit un fourbe, il est de mes amis,
Je l'ai connu laquais, avant qu'il fût Commis:
C'est un homme d'honneur, de pieté profonde,
Et qui veut rendre à Dieu ce qu'il a pris au monde.

(b) Boileau, Sat. 9.

Some Heathens have been more discerning Men than the Samians. Do you think the Emperor Alexander would have permitted that the Curtezans of Rome should spend part of their Gain in the Building of a Temple? He would not so much as permit that the Tribute paid by Publick Whores and Pimps, should be brought into his Treasury; he ordered that it should serve for the repairing of the Amphitheatre, &c. (c) Lenonum vectigal & meretricum, & exoletorum in sacrum ærarium inferri vetuit, sed sumptibus publicis ad instaurationem theatri, circi, amphitheatri & stadii deputavit.

(c) Lamprid. in Alexandro Severo c. 24. p. m. 917, 918. tom. 1. hist. August. scriptor.

(A) Several Stories in Prose, intitled New Recreations.] La Croix du Maine (9) says, that the two first Authors of that Work are James Peletier of Mans, a Physician and a Philosopher, and Nicolas Denisot, surnamed the Count de Alsinois. Stephen Pasquier speaks otherwise of it in a Letter which he writ to Tabourot Sieur des Accords, the Author of a Book intitled Les Bigarrures. I find, says he (d), “ That “ in this Second Edition, you ascribe the Recrea- “ tions of Bonavanture du Perier to James Pelletier. “ Give me leave to tell you that I think yon are “ not well informed. I was one of Pelletier's grea- “ test Friends, and he imparted his most secret “ Thoughts to me. I know what Books he told me “ he had made. He never mention'd this to me. “ He was a true Poet, and very Jealous of his “ Name, and I can assure you he would not have “ concealed it from me; the Book being so con- “ siderable by its Subject, that it does not deserve “ to be disowned by its Author, no more than the “ Facetiæ of Poggius Florentinus. Du Perier is the “ Author of them, and of another Book intitled “ Cymbalum mundi, which is a Lucianism, that “ deserves to be burnt, together with the Author, “ if he was alive. „ What is certain, is, That Des Periers is not the Author of all the Stories which are in his New Recreations. He cannot be the Author of that which is the first in the Edition mentioned by Voetius. 'Tis that of Rouen 1606, for Raphael du Petit-Val. 'Tis said in the first Story that this Book comes out very seasonably, to afford the Ladies some Diversion during the Civil Wars, which caused so many publick Evils. Des Periers could not say that, for he died a great while before the first Civil Wars of France. Let us see what that famous Divine thought of that Book. (e) Eum (librum) carptim percurrens, offendi nihil aliud esse quam colloquia prava; hoc est, narrationes & dissertationes, meris morologiis, vanitatibus, obscœnitatibus, nominis divini abusibus refertas, quæ quidem nemini nisi Epicureis (quibus voluptas summum bonum) placere potest. Et tamen librum cum auctore in cœlum tollit, qui ipsius præfationem præfixit ...... suffecerit ex prima novella quæ instar præambuli est, annotasse, quod dicat se libellum illum opportunè tunc edere, ut in mediis bellis civilibus & publicis calamitatibus habeant unde se oblectent imprimis matronæ & virgines, quas ad lectionem nominatim scurrilium quæ ibi occurrunt, contentiose invitat. Summam autem & maximè convenientem huic vitæ nostræ doctrinam esse: Bene vivere & lætari; quod postea interpretatur: ridere. Des Periers was not the only Author who published such Stories. The nine Matinees of the Lord de Cholieres are of the same stamp, Merry and Recreative, and very full of Obscenities. I think the first Edition is that of the Year 1585, Paris, for John Richer in 8. with the King's License.

(9) Bibl. Franc. p. 36. See also p. 193.

(d) Pasquier Letters Book 8. tom. 1. p. 493. Par. 1619. in 8.

(e) Gisb. Voet. Disp. Theol. Vol. 1. p. 200.

(B) His Cymbalum mundi: it is said to be a most impious Book.] He wrote it first in Latin, and then he translated it into French under the Name of Thomas du Clevier, Printed at Paris in the Year 1537. La Croix du Maine (f) who expresses himself thus, says that it is a detestable Book, and full of Impieties. We have already seen that Stephen Pasquier had the same Opinion of it. I have found a kind of Analysis of the Cymbalum mundi in the French Bibliotheque of du Verdier Vauprivas, and because most of my Readers cannot conveniently have recourse to that Bibliotheque, I thought they would be glad to find an Abstract of it here. (g) “ Thomas du Clevier “ translated out of Latin into French, a Treatise in- “ titled Cymbalum mundi, containing four Poetical “ Dialogues, very merry and pleasant, Printed at “ Lyons in 16. by Benoit Bonnyn, 1538. I have found “ nothing in that Book that deserves a greater “ Censure than Ovid's Metamorphosis, the Dialogues “ of Lucian, and the Books of Wanton Subjects “ and Fabulous Fictions. In the first Dialogue the “ Author introduces Mercury, Bryphanes and Curtalius, who being in an Inn at Athens, at the Sign “ of the White Coal, whether Mercury happened to “ come, being descended from Heaven by Jupiter's “ Order, who sent him to get a Book Bound, those “ two Rogues, whilst he went to divert himself, “ take this Book out of a Packet he had left upon “ the Table, steal it, and put another in the room “ of it, containing all the amorous Tricks and “ Follies of Jupiter, as when he turned himself “ into a Bull to ravish Europa; when he put on “ the Shape of a Swan to go to Leda; when he “ took the Form of Amphytrion, &c. In the Second “ Dialogue he brings in some Philosophers, look- “ ing for some pieces of the Philosophers Stone in “ the Sand of the Theatre; where, as they were “ formerly disputing about it, Mercury shewed it to “ them, and those Fools importuned him so much “ with their Intreaties, that knowing not to whom “ he should give it intire, he broke it to pieces, “ and then threw it into the Sand, bidding them “ look well for it, and that if they could find a “ little piece of it, they would do Wonders, trans- “ form Metals, break the Bars of Doors that are “ open, cure People that are not Sick, and obtain “ any thing from the Gods that was Lawful, and “ would necessarily happen, as Rain after fair Wea- “ ther, Flowers in the Spring, Dust and Heat in “ Summer, Cold and Dirt in Winter: whereby the “ Author laughs at the vain Labours of Alchymists. “ ...... (a) In the Third Dialogue he resumes “ the Discourse of the First Dialogue, about the “ Book stoln from the Author of all Thefts, inti- “ tled, Quæ in hoc libro continentur: Chronica rerum “ memorabilium quas Jupiter gessit antequam esset ipse. “ Fatorum præscriptum: Sive, eorum quæ futura sunt, (f) Bibliot. Franc. p. 55, 57.

(g) Du Verdier Vauprivas Biblioth. Franc. p. 1177.

(a) Id. ib. p. 1178.

into his Belly, being grown Mad. Several Authors speak (C) of his Despair. Mr. Allard says, that the Name of our Bonaventure was Perier, and that he was born in the Ambrunois, and that he wrote an Apology in Verse for Marot absent against Sagon, in the Year 1580 †. It is certain that he made that Apology, but not in that Year: for he died before the Year 1544.

PEROT (Nicolas) in Latin Perottus, born at Sassoferrato in Italy, was one of the most Learned Men of the XV. Century. He was of a Family which had been (A) formerly Illustrious in his Country, but it fell into an obscure Condition, as it may be gathered from the ‡ small Estate he had, and from his first Profession, † Allard. Biblioth. of Dauphiné p. 172.

‡ Huic quum deessent opes, corporis vires municipali frugalitate, atque duritia constitutæ, perpetuis lucubrationum vigiliis minime deterruerunt. Juvenis in ludo pueros honestos docuit, &c Jovius elog. c. 18. p. m. 45.

“ certa dispositiones. Catalogus Heroum immortalium, “ qui cum Jove vitam vivere sunt sempiterni. “ Wherein the Author ridicules first the Idolatrous “ Heathens, and their false God Jupiter, meaning “ that he never existed, or that if he did ever “ exist, he was a Man, and never did any wonder- “ ful Actions, and such as have been fabulously “ written of him. By the second Head of the Ti- “ tle of the Book, he laughs at Destiny, and fatal “ Necessity, and tacitly at Judicial Astrology. And “ by the third, he laughs at those who look upon “ themselves as Gods, by reason of their Grandure. “ Afterwards he brings in Mercury discoursing of “ the several Commissions which the Gods and God- “ desses have intrusted him with; and the same “ Mercury, by virtue of some Words which he “ mutters, makes a Horse called Phlegon, speak and “ reason with his Groom. In the fourth and last “ Dialogue, two Dogs .... discourse together of “ several pleasant things. „ It does not appear that Du Verdier Vau-Privas found any thing dangerous in that Book, but only the ridiculousness of the Pagan Religion, &c. Most other Readers are of opinion, that Bonaventure des Periers wrote against the true Religion, under pretence of ridiculing Paganism. It was the Opinion of Father Mersenne. That Man, says he, brings in the Fables of Jupiter and Mercury, &c. and designs by such means to ridicule the Catholick Faith, and reject the greatest Truths that we teach and believe concerning God. (b) Per quas (fabulas) fidem Catholicam irridere, & ea quæ de Deo verissima esse dicimus & credimus, rejicere velle videtur. He says that Bonaventure des Periers was only the Translator of the Cymbalum mundi, and that he was a most impious Knave, impiissimum nebulonem, and lookt upon as an Atheist by a great many People. Voetius, who had not seen that Book, does not say that the Author was an Atheist, nay he acquits him of Atheism, supposing the Cymbalum mundi to be only a Satyr against Purgatory, and many other Inventions of Christians. He adds, that a Man may insinuate Atheism, or Epicureism in a trifling and fabulous Book, and make use of that Artifice to come off, if he is prosecuted for it. He adds also, that in a Stage-Play intitled Iphigenia, one may laugh at Hecate, who had three several Shapes, and ridicule the Gods who will have Humane Victims, and run down the Priests who advise to offer such Sacrifices. A Man may design to ridicule the Trinity, and the Passion of the Son of God, and to open a Door to Deism and Socinianism; but he may also maintain, if there is any necessity for it, that they who understand it so, are Calumniators, and that he only designed to turn the Fables of Paganism into ridicule. I shall set down the Words of Voetius, they intimate that some such thing had happened upon the Stage of a Town in Holland. (c) Quibus reponi potest: nihil vetare, quin Lucianum omnesque prophanos & impios poetas atque antiquos literiones imitando quis subdolè Atheismum, Epicureismum, Gentilismum hominum animis instillet; quamvis stylum ludicris ambiguitatibus, & jocis, item mimesibus, prosopopæis, &c. ita moderetur, ut si quis hæc ad examen revocet, colore aliquo eludere & elabi possit. Quomodo meminimus à Sceptico-Libertinis & Epicureis nebulonibus alicubi in Belgio omnem pietatem & fidem Christianam differiis quibusque apud homines traductam esse: exempli gratia, Tragœdia scribitur, & in theatro exhibetur tit. Iphigenia: in quâ Ethnica illa, de Hecate triformi, de diis sanguine humano, idque ex consilio sacerdotum, placandis perstringuntur. Si quis pius metuat (ut quidem autores illos novit) eos mysterium Trinitatis, & redemptionis nostræ per sanguinem Christi velle deridendum proponere & sic Epicureismo, Deismo, aut Turco-Socinismo viam munire: quomodo hæc evincet; cum promptum semper sit effugium; videri tantum fabulas Gentilium.

(b) Mersen. in Genesim p. 669. apud Voet. ub. sup. p. 199.

(c) Voet. ub. sup.

The Reflections of that Professor of Divinity are very reasonable: There are two ways of ridiculing Superstition, the one very good, the other very bad. The Fathers of the Church, who have exposed the Ridiculousness of false Deities, are very much to be praised for it. They knew that by inspiring the Christians with Contempt and Aversion for Paganism, they strengthned their Faith, and gave them some Arms to resist Persecution. But Lucian, who did so much ridicule the false Gods of the Heathens, and made a most lively and agreeable Description of the Follies and Impostures of the Religion of the Grecians, deserves notwithstanding to be detested, since instead of doing it out of a good motive, he had no other design than to satisfie his Satyrical Humour, and was no less indifferent for Truth than for Lies. Those two Models, that of the Fathers of the Church, and that of Lucian, may serve to make one judge of several Satyrs, which have been made in these latter times, against Abuses in matters of Religion. Rabelais ought to be looked upon as a Copist of Lucian, and I think the same ought to be said of Bonaventure des Periers; for I find that the (d) Protestants are not less angry with the Cymbalum mundi than the Catholicks. Only we must observe that a great many Abuses have crept into Christianity, which are so like those of the Heathens, that one cannot write against the Pagans, without affording many devout Men a pretence to say, that the Christian Religion is run thro' the sides of the Pagan Religion. 'Tis the duty of those, who give occasion for such Reproaches, to examin seriously what was their Intention, and whether they did actually design, that their Descriptions of the Faults of the Heathens should be look'd upon as a Picture of Modern Abuses. Some Dissenting Protestants in England, are accused of having made a lively Description of the Corruption of the Ancient Clergy, only to draw a Picture which might cast an Odium upon the present State of the Episcoparians. We find in Milton's Life (e), that his History of England, as far as William the Conqueror, was Printed in the Year 1670, but not such as he writ it; for several Passages were struck out, which contain'd a Description of the Superstition, Luxury and Craft of the Ecclesiasticks, who lived under the Saxon Kings. The Revisors of the Manuscript fancied, that it was a Reflection upon the Clergy under the Reign of Charles II. The Author of that Life adds (f), that Sir Robert Howard having heard, that he was accused of having whipt, in a certain Book, the Clergy of England, upon the Back-side of the Pagan and Popish Priests, answered maliciously and subtilly, what have they to do there (g)?

(C) Several Authors speak of his Despair.] I shall only set down the Words of Henry Stephens: (h) “ I will not forget Bonaventure des Periers, the “ Author of a detestable Book, intitled Cymbalum “ mundi, who, notwithstanding the Care that was “ taken to observe him, (because it was known “ that he designed to make away with himself) “ was found run through with his Sword, upon “ which he threw himself, having fastened the “ Pommel against the Ground, so that the Point “ run through his Stomach to his Back. „ See also John Chassanion, Chap. 24, (i) of the 1st Book of the Memorable Histories of the great and wonderful Judgments and Punishments of God.

(A) Of a Family, which had been formerly Illustrious in that Country.] The Inscription of a Monument set up for him in the Year 1624, says, that the Town of Sassoferrato was delivered from Tyranny by his Ancestors, and was beholden to them for its Liberty and Happiness (a). James Philip Tomasini explains that Fact. He says (b), that whilst Innocent VI. kept his See at Avignon, the Towns of Italy, which did belong to St. Peter's Patrimony, were exposed to a thousand Miseries. Seditions were frequent there, every place had its Tyrant. Innocent VI. to remedy those Disorders, gave the Government of that Province to Cardinal

Giles

(d) La Croix du Maine whom I have already quoted, and Henry Stephens. See his Words in the next Remark.

(e) Toland, the Life of Milton, p. 138.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) The Reader will perhaps remember the Comedy intitled, The Pedant exposed, where, when he is told of his Son's Ransom, he asks so often, what the Devil had he to do in that Galley?

(h) Henry Stephens Apology for Herodotus, c. 18. sub fin. p. m. 231. See also c. 26. p. 309.

(i) Page 170. Genev. 1586. in 8.

(a) See Ughelli Ital. Sacr. tom. 7. p. 1159.

(b) Jac. Phil. Tomasinus in Petrarchâ redivivo p. 111.

feſſion, which was to teach the Latin Tongue. He acquitted himſelf very well in it, and got abundance of Scholars. He put the Rudiments of the Latin Tongue into a better Order, and a ſhorter Method, and publiſhed them to the great advantage of his Scholars. Afterwards he went to Rome, where he ſtudied the Greek Tongue with great application. To let the Publick know what Progreſs he had made in it, he undertook to Tranſlate Polybius into Latin. That Tranſlation (B) was very much eſteemed. He undertook another Work, which contained all the Harveſt of his Reading. It was a Commentary (C) upon Martial; but finding himſelf inveſted with a noble Employment, and a very eminent Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, he did Giles Albornati, a Man well skilled in Military Affairs, and very well qualified for ſuch an Employment. He made War againſt all thoſe Petty Tyrants, who oppreſt the Country, and was very well ſerved therein by Andrew PEROT, and amongſt other things in the Conſtruction of the Fortreſſes, which are to be ſeen ſtill at Saſſoferrato, whereby that Place was ſo well ſecured, that they who had Tyrannized it for a long time, loſt the hopes of getting it again. That Perot was the Father of Juſtina PEROT, an illuſtrious Maid for her Wit, and application to Learning. Petrarch had a great eſteem for her, and anſwered a Sonnet which ſhe addreſt to him: it is to be found in (c) the Petrarcha redivivus of Tomaſini. See alſo the (d) Meſcolanze of Menagius. Note, that Tomaſini calls that Lady JUSTINA DE LEVIS PEROTTA, and ſays, (e) that Andrew de Levis Perot her Father was of the Houſe of Levis, one of the moſt noble and illuſtrious Houſes of France, and that this Extraction is proved not only by old Deeds, but alſo by ſome Letters, which the Lords of that Houſe wrote from France to Rome, to Torquato Perot Chamberlain to Pope Urban VIII. They acknowledged in thoſe Letters, that he was iſſued from the ſame Stock with them: (f) quibus (literis) illum unum ſecum ejuſdemque radicis & familiæ ingenuè agnoſcunt. If this be true, it muſt be confeſt that our Arch-Biſhop of Siponto was of a good Extraction, for the Houſe of Levi is one of the nobleſt in France. I have read in a Book (g) Printed at Paris in 1557, that it comes from Levi, one of the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, out of which the Virgin Mary iſſued, whom Meſſieurs (h) de Ventadour call their Couſin.

(c) Pag. 111, 112.

(d) Pag. 279 of Tom. of the Rotterdam Edit. 1692.

(e) Tomaſin. ib. p. 110.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Intituled the preſent State of France. See the p. 439. of that Book.

(h) 'Tis a Branch of the Houſe of Levi.

(B) That Tranſlation of Polybius was very much eſteemed.] He made it by Order of Pope Nicolas V. It was looked upon as a better Tranſlation than thoſe of Thucydides, Diodorus Siculus, Plutarch and Appian, and ſome envious People fancied it was the Work of an Ancient Author, and that Perot ſtole it. (i) Non defuère tamen ex æmulis, qui ejus auctoris traductionem antiquiſſimam fuiſſe, furtoque ſurreptam exiſtimarint, quod Thucydidem, Diodorum, Plutarchum, & Appianum, clariſſimo ingeniorum certamine converſos unus Polybius egregia fide Latinus, æquabili, & prædulci Romani ſermonis puritate prorſus antecedat. It may be, that our Perot exceeded the Tranſlators who appeared ſome time before, and that he made a Maſter-piece, conſidering that he lived when the Study of Learning was but lately revived; but abſolutely ſpeaking, and even if he be compared with the Tranſlators of the XVI. Century, his Tranſlation cannot be accounted a tollerable one, and conſequently Mr. Varillas could not give a better proof of his Ignorance of the Belles Lettres, than by Paraphraſing, as he has done, the above-mention'd Words of Paulus Jovius. (k) "His firſt Eſſay was "the Tranſlation of Polybius, wherein he did ſo "admirably ſucceed, that it was queſtioned whe"ther he had made it, and whether he had not "found an ancient Tranſlation of Polybius, which "he Printed under his Name..... (l) He that "made his Epitaph, was in the right to uſe no o"ther Words but this, Here lies the Tranſlator of "Polybius; for if Perot be the Author of it, "none of thoſe who have Tranſlated Greek Writers "into Latin, can be compared with, or ſo much "as come near him.„ What a ſhame had it been for Varillas, if any Body had ſhewed him what Caſaubon ſays of Perot's Tranſlation? He does not deny, but he was learned in Latin and Greek (m) according to the time wherein he lived, and that he may be looked upon as a Man that has but one Eye, in the Kingdom of Blind-Men; but he accuſes him of having very ill performed the Commiſſion of Nicolas V. Jam ille eruditus Italus, quo ipſe (Nicolaus Quintus) uſus eſt interprete, partim ſæculi vitio, partim propria culpa, provinciam ſibi demandatam, ita geſſit male; facile ut appareat, non ob ſingularem aliquam eruditionem, in Græcis præſertim literis, Polybium interpretari fuiſſe juſſum; ſed quia nemo erat qui amplius ſciret, velut coelitem inter cæcos captum, qui in vacuam ſtationem pro tempore ſubſtitueretur (n). It would be an abſurd thing to ſuſpect that Caſaubon ſaid ſo out of Envy; for what Advantage could it be to him to leſſen the Glory of a Man, who had been dead above a Hundred Years? Beſides, he owns that ſuch Places of Polybius as Perot had well underſtood, were ſo well Tranſlated, that they looked like an Original. Nicolaus Perottus, ſays he (o), Literarum Latinarum, quas perdiu docuit, exquiſitè, ut illa erant tempora, fuit peritus, & cumprimis curioſus. ...... Erat præterea in hoc viro non vulgaris induſtria in Græcis ita vertendis (quæ quidem intelligeret) ut nullum perſæpè Græci Idiomatis in Latinâ ejus Verſione veſtigium appareret: quam interdum eſſe opus nativum quis dicas, non alieni Interpretationem. Quod ſi par fides reſponderet, inter excellentiſſimos Interpretes poterat ſine dubio Perottus recenſeri. Nemo enim illis temporibus Italorum erat, qui amplius Græcè ſciret, quàm hic Interpres: pauci qui tantum, quantum ille. One may therefore believe him as to what he cenſures in the Work of that Tranſlator. He pretends that it is a Copy ſo unlike the Original, that Polybius is altogether diſfigured. (p) Nos vero affirmamus, Perottum à fidelis Interpretis laude tantum abeſſe, quantum qui longiſſimè. Nullo enim pacto ferendus aut excuſandus eſt hic Interpres, homo Bellicarum rerum & totius Tacticæ adeo rudis & imperitus, ut qui in cæteris partibus Hiſtoriæ Polybianæ multa neſciret, in deſcriptionibus Præliorum omnia ignoraret, omnia peccaret; atque eâdem operâ tanto Scriptori, quod erat ferè præcipuum ejus decus, adimeret. Omnino prælium nullum, facinus militare nullum, à Polybio fuerat paulo diligentiùs narratum, in quo graviſſima & momenti maximi peccata ab hoc Interprete non ſint admiſſa. He blames him in another place, for having inſerted in his Tranſlation, many Words of Livy in the room of Polybius's Thoughts, and for having ſcarce Tranſlated any one Period (q) without committing ſome Faults. (r) Non neſcimus fuiſſe olim, & nunc quoque eſſe quibus Perotti verſio, propter aliquam Latinitatis ſpeciem, mire arrideat. Sed quo iſta Latinitas ſi deeſt fides, abeſt veritas? Nihil dicam de locis infinitis quos propterea aut tranſiit, aut malè interpretatus eſt Perottus, quia vel codices erant corrupti, vel occurrebat dictio aut phraſis aliqua minus vulgaris: cujuſmodi multas ſanè habet Polybius. Verum ubi nihil erat ejuſmodi, quis ferat longè adeo ab auctoris ſui verbis diſcedentem? aut quis neget flagitium eſſe inſigne, tot locis verba, periodos, atque adeo pericopas integras è Livio deſumpſiſſe, & lectoribus Græcæ linguæ imperitis obtruſiſſe pro Polybianis? ubi fides? ubi pudor? in tanta igitur errorum omnis generis copia, ſingula velle perſequi, quod petiverunt à nobis nonnulli, ejus ſit hominis, qui vetus dictum velit tollere in lente unguentum. What would Varillas have ſaid, if his Friends had ſhew'd him how contrary his Opinion was to that of ſo good a Judge, and ſo excellent a Critick? If the very firſt time he made bold to make ſuch raſh Judgments, he had been corrected by ſuch means, it had been a good ſervice done him. Note, That Perot did not Tranſlate all that we have of Polybius. The firſt Five Books of his Hiſtory were only found out at that Time, which Perot Tranſlated. The Abridgment of the Twelve following Books, and the Excerpta Legationum were found out ſince. Perot has alſo publiſhed a Tranſlation of Hippocrates's Oath.

(C) A Commentary upon (s) Martial.] He intitled it Cornucopia. I have already ſaid (t) why he did not publiſh it. His Nephew Pyrrhus PEROT gave it to the Publick after the Death of the Author. He ſaid in his Preface, that he had added very few things to it, except that he had explained more at large ſome Obſcene Places which his Uncle had but ſlightly touched upon. (u) Nihil fere de meo addidi, præterquam quod loca quædam, quæ ille,

(i) Jovius Elog. cap. 18. p. m. 45, 46.

(k) Varil. the Secret Hiſt. of Florence, p. 170.

(l) Ibid. p. 171.

(m) Partem illius (Polybii) librorum aliquam nactus (Nicolaus Quintus) ejus in Latinum ſermonem transferendæ, viro Græcæ & Romanæ linguæ ut erat captus ejus ætatis non ignaro, munus delegavit. Caſaub. epiſt. dedicat. Polybii.

(n) Caſaub. ib.

(o) Id. in præfat. ad lectorem.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Multa quidem in ſingulis fere periodis Perottus perperam interpretatur. Id. in comment. ad Polyb. p. 112.

(r) Id. ib. p. 60.

(s) 'Tis only a commentary upon Martial's Spectacula and the 1. Book of his Epigrams.

(t) In the Text.

(u) Pyrrhus Perottus in præfat. Cornucop. apud Geſnerum Bibl. fol. 523.

did not think fit to publiſh that Commentary. He thought it was beneath him and not ſuitable to the Decorum of an Arch-Biſhop's Dignity, by reaſon of the Obſcenities which were in Martial *. That Commentary was Publiſhed after his Death. The Author had a great ſhare in the Benefits and Eſteem of Cardinal Beſſarion; but 'tis ſaid, that he hindred (D) him from being made a Pope out of a great Imprudence. The Emperor Frederick III. gave him the † Poetical Crown in the City of Bologna, and honoured him with the Title of his Counſellor. That Dignity was leſs real than the Government of Perugia and Umbria §, which was given to Perot, and the Arch-Biſhoprick of ‡ Siponto, to which he was promoted ∥ the 17th of October 1458. He built a Houſe of Pleaſure near Saſſoferrato, and called it (E) Fugicura, meaning that it was a Retiring Place, where he Recreated himſelf

* Taken out of Paulus Jovius.
† Ughelli Ital. ſacr. tom. 7. p. 1158.
§ Jovius ibid.
‡ The modern name of that Arch-Biſhoprick is Mantredonia, but they ſay always in Latin Archiepiſcopus Sipontinus.
∥ Id. ib.

ille, quoniam impuritate quadam atque obſcœnitate verborum caſtis ac pudicis auribus execrabilia viderentur, curſim breviterque tetigerit, ipſe latius expoſuit. From whence it appears that Mr. du Cange was miſtaken, when he ſaid, (b) that Nicolas Perot, Biſhop of Siponto, publiſhed in the Year 1470, a great Volume of Commentaries upon the Latin Tongue, cui Cornucopiæ nomen indidit cum duobus ſingularum dictionum indicibus, Græco altero, altero Latino, qui ipſi Dictionarii vicem præſtant. We muſt remember that our Perot lived till the Year 1480. Geſnerus obſerves that the Cornucopiæ was Printed at Venice by Aldus, and at Baſil by Curio and Valderus more than once. He forgets the main thing, he does not ſet down the Year of the Firſt Edition. I cannot tell it neither, I can only ſay that the Strasburg Edition 1505, was better than the preceding or thoſe that went before; and that of Venice 1513, was more exact than that of Strasburg (c). Geſnerus adds, that it is a very Learned Work: (d) Plena Philologiæ & eruditionis variæ, ex optimis quibuſque veterum denſiſſima teſtimonia citans, multiplici cum ad rerum, tum ad vocabulorum cognitionem uſu. Perot is accuſed of having Tranſcribed what others had ſaid, without naming them. Martinius (e) upbraids him with it, having convicted him of having ſtollen a Paſſage of Laurentius Valla, and he makes this Obſervation in his Preface: Ambroſius Calepinus.... judicio uſus barbara à Latinis ſegregavit, & authoritate veterum verba ſua firmavit: rectius, quàm Perottus qui ſuum copiæ cornu diligenter quidem, at latenter, contexuit, ut eorum nomina à quibus ſua ſumpſerat, ferè ſubticeret. Several People will wonder to find in this Paſſage the ſincerity of Calepinus preferred to that of Nicolas Perot; for great Complaints have been made of Calepinus, as being an impudent Plagiary of Nicholas Perot. (f) “To ſay ſomething more particularly about the Conduct of Calepinus, I ſhall obſerve, that being not a Literate Man, he had no thoughts of ſetting up for an Author, till he ſaw the Cornucopia of Nicolas Perot; and having heard that Perot ſeem'd to be reſolved to diſown and give over that Fruit of his Secular and Prophane Studies, and to renounce the Quality of Father, as if that of Arch Biſhop would be diſhonoured by it, he thought he could take advantage of his Diſlike, and reſolved to inſert that Work in his Dictionary, as if he had been the Author of it. Floridus Sabinus (1) ſays that he did it moſt wretchedly, becauſe he diſſolved the Cornucopia with a world of filthy Stuff, which he gathered together out of the worſt Authors of the barbarous and ignorant Ages. He adds, that it contributed on the one ſide to celebrate the Merit of Perot, and to make People look for his Original Book, and on the other ſide, to ſhew the Impertinence of Calepinus, and the Impurity of his Dictionary. This is the Opinion of the Anonymous Author of the Apology for the Latin Poets (2), of the German Author of the Bibliographia curioſa (3), and of Leonardo Nicodemo in his Additions to Toppi (4).„

(D) He hindred Cardinal Beſſarion from being made a Pope out of a great Imprudence.] Varillas relates that Adventure thus: “That Cardinal, ſays he (g), would have been made a Pope, after the Death of Paul II. had it not been for the Imprudence of Nicolas Perrot ..... who ſerved him as a ConcLaviſt. One Evening, as Beſſarion was at his Study according to his Cuſtom, without much caring for the Intrigues of his Collegues; three Cardinals, Heads of ſo many Factions in the Conclave, who agreed at laſt upon his Election, went to his Cell, and aſk'd for him. Perrot fancied, that they came only to beg his Patron's Vote, and becauſe he knew him well enough, to be perſuaded that the Sollicitations of thoſe Cardinals would be to no purpoſe, he thought there was no need of interrupting Beſſarion's Studies. He therefore obſtinately refuſed to introduce them, and to acquaint his Patron that they would ſpeak with him, and what is moſt ſtrange is, that the more he was careſs'd, intreated and threatened, the more he reſolved to keep the Door ſhut, becauſe he confirmed himſelf ſo much the more in his Chimerical Suppoſition, that they were ſo earneſt to come in, only to beg the only Vote they wanted for the Cardinal upon whom they were agreed. The Conteſt laſted ſo long, that the three Cardinals being weary of it, ſaid amongſt themſelves, that it was not proper to raiſe to the Holy See a Man, who not only would not be beholden to them for his Election, but alſo would make 'em depend upon the Caprice of his Domeſticks, whenever they would ſpeak with him. Then they took ſome other Meaſures out of Spite and Indignation: and becauſe Cardinal Riaire flattered their Fancy moſt in that inſtant, they made him a Pope, tho' they had agreed before not to give their Votes to any Monk, and tho' Riaire had been a Cordelier. They thought that the Trouble Cardinal Beſſarion would be in, for having loſt the Papacy by the fault of his ConcLaviſt, would afford 'em ſome Pleaſure, and therefore they acquainted him with what had paſt. But Beſſarion changed neither his Countenance nor behaviour towards them, and was contented to tell Perrot, that he had hindred him from making him a Cardinal.„ There are few Paſſages in Varillas, whereby we may better know the liberty he took to joyn his Fancies and Conjectures to the Hiſtories he found in other Authors. All that long Narrative is only a Paraphraſe of theſe Latin Words of Paulus Jovius. (h) Paulo morte ſublato, in comitiis fatalis caſus tantæ ſpei Fortunam avertit. Fecerunt enim tres ſummæ authoritatis Cardinales, quum ex decreto, ut Pontificem ſalutarent, abditum in cella conclavis adiiſſent, nec admitterentur à Nicolao Perotto janitore, quod tum vir ineptus lucubranti parcendum diceret, uſque adeò ſtomachatos, ut ſeſe indignanter aversantes reſponderent, Ergo nec prenſanti, nec roganti quidem, ſumma dignitas erit inculcanda: ut quum è cælo ſuffragia expectet, ſuperbis demum ac ſtolidis janitoribus pareamus? ſtatimque ſuffragia Xysto detuliſſe, quo repentè renunciato, adoratoque Beſſarion dixiſſe fertur: Hæc tua, Nicolae, intempeſtiva ſedulitas, & tiaram mihi, & tibi galerum eripuit. I have ſet down that Latin Narration, that by comparing it with that of the French Author, one may ſee the Circumſtances he has added to the Text, which was his Original. He has forged them, as he thought fit; which is an intolerable thing. The Latter Hiſtorians ought not to adorn a Fact; they muſt publiſh it ſuch as they find it. Note by the bye, that if that French Writer had read all the Manuſcripts he quotes, which is very much doubted of, yet one might very well believe that he ſays a thouſand things of his own Invention; for ſince he was ſo bold as to flouriſh Paulus Jovius, who is a Printed Author, much more did he think he might be allowed to alter the Manuſcript Relations which he has only quoted in a very general way. Gyraldus (i) aſcribes Beſſarion's ill luck to another Cauſe; but he does alſo mention what is ſaid of Perot the ConcLaviſt, and he is much ſhorter than Paulus Jovius about that Incident. Menagius (k) ſuppoſes that Perot committed that fault in the Conclave wherein Paul II. was elected. I think he is leſs to be credited than the (l) two Italian Authors whom I have alledged.

(E) And called it Fugicura.] Moreri did not at all underſtand this, and has ſo much falſified it, that there

(b) Du Cange, præf. Gloſſarii Latin. p. 41.

(c) See Borrichius in Analectis ad cogitata de lingua Latina in appendice p. 42.

(d) Geſner. ub. ſup.

(e) Matthias Martinius in lexico philolog. voce ſarcina.

(f) Baillet, the Judgment of learned Men, tom. 4. p. 47, 48. See alſo tom. 3. p. 64. & Borrichius ub ſup.

(1) Franc. Florid. Sab. Apolog. l. 1. p. 111.

(2) Ap. Obert. Giffan. p. 505 item ap. G. M. Konig. Biblioth. V. & N. p. 153.

(3) Bibliogr. cur. Philologic. hiſt. p. 28.

(4) In additionib. ad Biblioth. Neapolit. Nic. Topp. p. 184.

(g) Varill. The Secret Hiſtory of Florence, p. 174, 175.

(h) Jov. in elog. cap. 24. p. 57, 58.

(i) Gyrald. de Poët. ſuor. tempor. dialog. 1. p. m. 551.

(k) Menag. Meſcolanze p. 280.

(l) Paul Jovius, & Lilius Gregorius Gyraldus.

ſelf after the Fatigue of Affairs, and where he lived without any Cares. He died in that place † in the Year 1480. He fell out with (F) Domitius Calderinus. Nature gave him a Quality that goes a great way; for, when he heard of any thing that was unknown to him, * he applied himſelf altogether to it, and laid aſide any other Buſineſs, and left off Sleeping, the better to mind it. Torquato PEROT who was of the ſame Family, and Chamberlain to Pope Urban VIII, and Biſhop of Ameria, cauſed a β Monument to be erected for him in the Great Church of Saſſoferrato, in the Year 1624, with a fine Inſcription γ, whereby it appears amongſt other things, that the Popes Eugenius IV. Nicolas V. Calixtus III. and Pius II. had a great Kindneſs for him, eſpecially becauſe he applied himſelf very much to reunite the Greek Church during the Council of Ferrara. The ſame Torquato deſign'd δ to put out a New Edition of Nicolas Perot's Works, which conſiſts of Tranſlations, Letters, Harangues, Commentaries upon Statius, Martial, &c. He deſign'd alſo to publiſh the Elogies of the Illuſtrious Men of Saſſoferrato, which he had compoſed. He is the Author of ſome Italian Works, Printed with thoſe of Antony Brunus ζ.

PERROT (Francis) Author of an Italian Book, which Bellarmin refuted. See the Remark A of the next Article, towards the End.

PERROT (Nicolas) Sieur d'Ablancourt, one of the Great Wits of his Age, was born η at Chalons upon Marne, the 5th of April, 1606 θ. He was of a Family very much diſtinguiſhed (A) among thoſe of the Long Robe, and he was Educated with a particular Care. ‡ He was ſent to the College of Sedan to ſtudy there, and he † Jovius ub. ſup.

* Volaterr. l. 21. p. m. 776.

β Jov. ib.

γ It is to be found intire in Ughelli.

δ Allatius in apibus urbanis.

ζ Id. ib.

η And not at Vitry le François, as 'tis ſaid in the Menagiana p. 331. of the firſt Dutch Edit.

θ *The Life of Mr. d'A*blancourt in the 2. tom. of Mr. Patru's Works, p. 334. of the Dutch edit. 1692.

‡ Ib. p. 335.

there is neither Rime nor Reaſon in it. Yet nothing can be clearer than theſe Words of Paulus Jovius: (a) Exceſſit è vita ſenex apud Sentinum in villa viridariis & fontibus peramæna, quam à pingui ocio Fugicuram appellavit. Moreri has Figurica inſtead of Fugicura, in the very Verſes of Myrteus, which he alledges, and which run upon the Alluſion to the avoiding of Cares.

(F) He fell out with Domitius Calderinus.] I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of Alexander ab Alexandro, which contains a thing which Paulus Jovius has not mentioned, and which he ſhould have mentioned, viz. that Nicolas Perrot read Publick Lectures to the Youth of Rome. He and Calderinus explained ſome Paſſages of Martial at the ſame time; and were more earneſt in contradicting one another, than in explaining that Poet; which occaſioned a world of injurious and empty Words, and after all, the Senſe of Martial was leſs underſtood than if they had been ſilent. (b) Nicolaus Perottus Sipontinus præſul, homo fuit accurato ingenio, & lectione multa exercitus: eum Domitius Calderinus, vir, ut in ea tempeſtate, doctus, & æmulatione doctrinæ, & morum diſſimilitudine oſum habebat, jurgiiſque & conviciis apud ſuos ſectatores plerunque inceſſebat, ſæpiuſque apud ſtudioſos in invidiam illum crimenque vocabat: & ut ſunt fere ingenia, in explicandis auctoribus ſi quid in controverſiam veniret, uterque potius, quo pacto diverſus ab altero diſſentiret, quam quid veræ lectionis eſſet, rimabatur. Cum autem in ſcholis Romæ eodem tempore Martialis apophoreta publice lectitarent, cujus hoc diſtichon fuit:

In precio ſcopas teſtatur palma fuiſſe,
Ocia ſed ſcopis nunc analecta dabunt.

Ita iſtos verſus uterque interpretatus eſt, (†) ut poſt multa deblatterata verba, vix aliquem ſenſum illorum ex dictis elicere queas, cum modo mendum in verſu poſtremo fuiſſe alter aſſeveret, & pro ocia, precium poni oportere, modo aſarota, non ab à privativa, ſed intenſiva dicta eſſe affirmet: alter ita pleraque nugalia jurgiis & maledictis plena effundat, ut equidem ſingula enarrare & referre pigeat. Here is another Paſſage whereby it appears, that Perot examin'd and criticiz'd in his Letters, the Notes of Calderinus upon Martial's Epigrams, and that Calderinus was accuſed of being Perot's Plagiary. (c) Domitii Calderini in Martialem commentarios notans, quamvis ſuppreſſo nomine, & furta ex ſcriptis patrui ſui, ſubdit: Recognoſci autem furta facillime poterant ex errorum multitudine, cujus commentarii ejus undique ſcatent, quorum bonam partem patruus meus duob. epiſtolarum, Romanarum ſcilicet ac Peruſinarum, præclaris voluminibus oſtendit. Angelus Sabinus having a Quarrel with Calderinus about Learning, was aſſiſted by Perot. The latter had the Name of Fidentinus given him in the Writings of Calderinus, and the other that of Brotheus. See Gyraldus in the firſt Dialogue (d) de Poetis ſuorum temporum.

(A) He was of a Family very much diſtinguiſhed amongſt thoſe of the Long Robe.] Paul PERROT de la Salle his Father, famous for his Works in Verſe and Proſe, and who had a hand in the Compoſition of the Catholicon, was Grandſon of Æmilius PERROT Councellor in the Parliament, and Son of Nicolas PERROT Councellor of the Grand Chamber. He ſtudied at Oxford, where he embraced the Proteſtant Religion, and returning into France, he retired to Chaalons, where part of the Parliament of Paris was then: Cyprian PERROT his eldeſt Brother, was a Councellor in that Parliament. He married at Chaalons, Anne des Forges, a noble Lady, by whom he had our Nicolas Perrot Sieur d'Ablancourt, and two Daughters, one whereof was Mother of Mr. Fremont d'Ablancourt (e), of whom I ſhall ſpeak (f) in this Article. Cyprian Perrot, Uncle of him who is the Subject of this Article, was Father of John Perrot, Preſident of the Inqueſts, who left a Son Cyprian PERROT, who was Maſter of the Requeſts. The Perrots of Geneva, the Good Perrotto of Fra Poalo, my Lord Perrot, who was for ſome time in Queen Elizabeth's favour, the Perrots of the Malmaiſon, one whereof was Provoſt of the Merchants, and the Beautiful Perrot of the Princeſs of Conti, are all iſſued from the ſame Stock. Chriſtopher de Thou firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Paris married one Perrot. Tne Chancellor Boucherat was Grand Son of another Perrot, not to mention many other Alliances in the Long Robe (g). This is what I have taken out of a Manuſcript Letter. The Life of Mr. d'Ablancourt, written by Mr. Patru, may ſerve as a Printed Proof. It begins thus: (h) “The Family of the Perrots is Ancient in the Parliament, and related to the moſt Illuſtrious Perſons of the Long-Robe.”

Thuanus (i) reckons amongſt thoſe who were killed in the Maſſacre of Paris, Denys PERROT, moſt worthy Son of Æmilius Perrot Councellor in the Parliament of Paris, and as illuſtrious for his Probity as for his Learning. I have ſaid elſewhere, that I don't believe this Æmilius Perrot to be a different Perſon from him, who makes a very great figure in Bunel's Letters.

The Good Perrotto of Fra Paolo, mention'd in the Manuſcript Letter, is without doubt the ſame Francis PERROT ſpoken of in the 82 Book (l) of Thuanus's Hiſtory, as the Author of a Piece which contained a Refutation of Pope Sixtus's Bull againſt the King of Navarre. That Piece was intitled Aviſo piacevole dato alla bella Italia. (m) “That Book (which was refuted by Bellarmin) is a Cenſure of the Court of Rome; the Style whereof is ſo fine, that the Italians themſelves admired it. The Author is a French Man, named Perrot, who, as Thuanus ſays in his Hiſtory upon the Year 1585, accompanied in his Youth Gabriel Aramont, Ambaſſador of his Majeſty to Solyman. Afterwards, being come into Italy, he got ſome conſiderable Acquaintances there. He knew amongſt other Great Men, Father Paul, a Divine of the Republick of Venice, to whom he vowed ſo great an Affection, that he continued it to him till he died. The Italians on their part had a particular Eſteem for him, ſtyling him commonly a true Iſraelite, by reaſon of his Candor and Meekneſs. We have (†) Tiraquellus makes this Note upon it: Perottus in Cornucopia ſecus interpretatur, quam hic accuſatur.

(a) Jovius elog. cap. 18. p. 46.

(b) Alexander ab Alexandro genial. dier. l. 4. c. 21. p. 1157. edit. Lugd. Bat. 1673.

(c) Geſner. ub. ſup.

(d) Pag. 332. oper. Gyraldi. Lugd. Bat. 1695.

(e) Taken from a Letter which Mr. Fremont d'Ablancourt wrote to me the 14 of April 1693.

(f) In the Rem. D.

(g) Taken from the ſame Letter.

(h) Patru's Works tom. 2. p. 334. of the Dutch edit. 1692.

(i) Thuan. l. 52. p. m. 1077.

(l) Pag. m. 33. ad 1585.

(m) Colomiès Bibliotheque choiſie, p. 20. & 21.

he made such a progress in his Studies, ι that being Thirteen Years of Age, he had gone thro' a Course (B) of Classick Learning. Then his Father sent for him home, and gave him a Learned Man, not only to run over all his Studies, but also to give him a Tincture of Philosophy. These Exercises lasted about three Years, and then he was carried to Paris, where he studied the Civil Law, a matter of five or six Months. Being Eighteen Years of Age, he was made an Advocate in the Parliament, and frequented the Bar. He soon took a Disgust at it, and plainly shewed his Repugnancy for the Law. His Uncle Cyprian Perrot, † Counsellor of the Great Chamber, was displeased with it, but he eased his Grief by forsaking the Protestant Religion, in which he was born. He abjured it * being Twenty Years of Age; yet he would not follow the Intentions of his Uncle, who design'd to make him a Churchman, hoping that he would prove a great Preacher in time. He spent five or six Years in such Diversions as are suitable to those of his Age β, yet without neglecting Learning altogether γ. It was then that he wrote the Preface to the Book intitled L'honneste femme, to please his Friend Father du Bosc. That Preface, one of the Master-pieces of our Tongue, was scarce published, δ but being about five or six and twenty Years (C) of Age, the fancy took him to return to the Religion he had left, the impressions whereof were never quite blotted out of his Mind. " ζ To do nothing without Knowledge, he betook " himself first to the Study of Philosophy, and then to the Study of Divinity, and " took for his Master Mr. Stuart, a Scotch Man and a Lutheran, but a very Learned " Man. He laboured with so much Eagerness and Ardour, that he spent twelve " and fifteen Hours every Day in his Studies, without acquainting any Body with " his Design, and he did so very near three Years...... He set out...... from " Paris to go into Champagne, where he made his second Abjuration in the Temple " of a Village called Helme near Vitry, and almost at the same time he went into " Holland, to let the Rumour of his new Change drop. He was near a Year at " Leyden, where he learned the Hebrew Tongue, and made himself acquainted with " Salmasius. From Holland he went over into England. „ He returned to Paris, and after he had been five or six Weeks in Mr. Patru's House, he took η Lodgings near Luxembourg, and sent for (D) two of his Nephews to live with him. " He lived χ a " very pleasant Life, and though he spent most of his Leisure-Hours in Reading,
" yet he frequented the Ladies, and the most Eminent Men of Paris for Learning.
" He went almost every Day to Messieurs Dupuy, to that famous Place whither all " Curious and Learned Men resorted...... In ‡ September 1637, he was admitted " into the French Academy with a general Applause. He undertook almost at the " same time the Translation of Tacitus...... But whilst he was about that laborious " Translation, he was forced to leave Paris, and to go into his Province, to " take care of his Estate, which was not considerable, and which the War lessen'd
" every Day. He therefore left off House-keeping, and retired with his Sister to " his Country Seat called Ablancourt, where he lived till he died. When he first " retired into the Country, he came pretty often to Paris, where he past all the " Winter..... But at last he left Paris altogether, and never went thither but to " get his Works Printed..... ↓ He had been troubled with the Gravel all his Lifetime
" : Nay, there was a time that he could neither Ride on Horseback, nor in a " Coach, and wanted a Stick to walk. But he fell a digging his Garden to use
" some Exercise, whereby his pain was much abated, and he recovered his Strength ι Ib.
" in

† Ib. p. 336.
* Ib.
β Ib.
γ Ib. p. 337.
δ Ib.
ζ Ib. p. 338.
η Ib. p. 339.
χ Ib.
‡ Ib. p. 340.
↓ Ib. p. 341.

" have also an Italian Translation by the same Perrot, " of the truth of the Christian Religion, written by " Mr. du Plessis-Mornay, and printed at Saumur in " the Year 1612. Amongst our French Authors, " Lewis de Masures in his Latin Poems, Hubert " Languet in his Letters to Sir Philip Sidney, and " Mr. de Liques in the Life of (n) Mr. du Plessis, " speak honourably of him.

(B) Being thirteen Years of Age, he had gone thro' a Course of Classick Learning.] I would make no Observation upon this, were it not that I must take notice of a fault very common among the makers of Encomiums. They love to exceed one another, and by such means they spoil the Truth. Richelet (o) not taking it to be so admirable a thing that d'Ablancourt should have made an end of his Classick Studies being but thirteen Years of Age, adds Philosophy to the Classick Studies. We may restifie that Mistake, seeing we have the Life of that Illustrious Man written by Mr. Patru: but if we had no other Author but Richelet, we should believe what he says, and mention it as a kind of Prodigy; for there were six Classes in the College of Sedan, the Promotions of the Scholars were made but once a Year, and the Course of Philosophy lasted two Years at least.

(C) Being about five or six and twenty Years of Age, the fancy took him to return to the Religion he had left.] The Continuator of Moreri, who took the Article of d'Ablancourt out of Mr. Patru stumbled in this Place. He did not perceive that Mr. Patru reckons three Years between the beginning of d'Ablancourt's Design, and the execution thereof: He says that d'Ablancourt left the Catholick Church being 25 Years of Age, and went into Holland, and was near a Year at Leyden, and made himself acquainted with Salmasius. His first Mistake was the occasion of another; for he supposes that d'Ablancourt left Leyden before he was 26 Years old, that is, before the 5th of April 1632. But Salmasius was not then at Leyden, he came thither only (*) towards the end of the same Year. It is almost impossible to misplace a Fact, without committing some other Anachronisms one after another.

(D) And he sent for two of his Nephews to live with him.] They were his Eldest Sister's Sons, and their Name was Fremont. (a) " Never any Children had a better Education. The second is " dead; but Mr. Fremont d'Ablancourt, who was the " Eldest of the two, has shewed that a barren Soil " was not cultivated. He is the Author of the " Dialogue of the Letters of the Alphabet, and of " the Supplement to the true History, which are to " be found at the End of his Uncle's Lucian, and " were so well received by the Publick. One of " the Great Princes of Europe would have him to be " his Son's Governour; and the important Employments " which he has so well discharged, are sufficient " proofs of his Capacity and Parts. „ Mr. Patru might have added to it the Esteem which Mr. de Turenne had for Mr. Fremont d'Ablancourt. Mr. de Turenne procured him the Quality of Envoy of France to the Court of Portugal, in the (†) Year 1663, and that of Resident of France in the City of Strasburg, in the Year 1675. That Resident returned (n) Page 13. where he is qualified Lord of Mezieres Parisian.

(o) Richelet, the Lives of the French Authors p. xxxiv. of the Dutch edit. 1699.

(*) Antn. Clement. in vita Salmas. p. xlii.

(a) Patru's Works ub. sup. p. 339.

(†) See Mr. d'Ablancourt's Memoirs p. 127, &c.

" in ſome meaſure. So that he could bear all Sorts of Carriages, and even lay " aſide his Stick, but he retook it ſoon after...... In the Year 1664, in the Be" ginning of October, he was ſo violently tormented with the Gravel, that it was " expected every Moment that he ſhould die of it. But at the End of three or " four Days his pain began to abate. „ It returned upon him ſoon after, † and laſted till he died. He bore ſo (E) long and ſo violent a Pain with great Conſtancy. He was attended all the Time of his Sickneſs by the Miniſter of Vitry, and by Mr. du Boſe, a famous Miniſter of Caen, who was then confined at Chalons. At laſt he died in the Arms of his Siſter and his Nephew d'Ablancourt, the 17th of November, being eight and fifty Years, * eight Months and twelve Days old. The Catalogue of his Works, moſt of them Tranſlations, may be ſeen in Moreri. The Reaſon, why he choſe rather to be a Tranſlator than an Author, deſerves to be (F) ſet down, as alſo the reaſon why he believed that Princes ſhould underſtand (G) Latin. He never was married; § he was not of a very amorous Complexion, and had a blunt way with him which did not very well ſuit with Love. " ‡ He uſed to Sleep, to Eat, and to Work indifferently at " any Hour of the Day or of the Night. But after he had been about two Hours " at Work, he refreſhed himſelf either by Walking, or by Reading a pleaſant " Book, and after half an Hour's Relaxation, he returned to his Work. He wrote " a very ill Hand, ſo that being in his declining Age, he could not very often " read it himſelf. He drank but little Wine at his uſual Meals, but he had a ſtrong " Head, and bore it well, ſo that he never drank too much. . . . . ‖ He was the " Son of a Man who made in his Life-time a hundred thouſand Verſes; yet he returned into France after the Death of his Father, and lived a quiet Life in it, reading good Books, and enjoying the Company of Ingenious Men, till the laſt Blow of the Perſecutors obliged him to look for Liberty of Conſcience in foreign Countries. He made ſome ſtay at Groningen, and then he came to the Hague, where he ſettled himſelf, and was extremely conſidered by the Prince and Princeſs of Orange. Beſides, he was gratified with a Penſion, together with the Title of Hiſtoriographer. He died at the Hague, about (b) ſix or ſeven Years ago. He was a Man of Merit, very zealous for the Proteſtant Religion, and who did not think it beneath him to write a French Catechiſm. He knew a World of thoſe things which are proper to be ſaid in Converſation, and told them with a good Grace. The Sweetneſs which appeared in his Manners, occaſioned the ſurprize of thoſe who read a little Book he publiſhed (c) againſt Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie, in the Year 1686. He expreſt much more Anger and Paſſion than could be expected from a Man of his Gravity and Age, and who had left his Country for his Religion. Several People endeavoured to excuſe him, upon the account of the Tenderneſs he had ſtill for his dear Uncle Mr. d'Ablancourt; but becauſe the Queſtion was not whether his Uncle had been an honeſt Man, but only whether his Tranſlation of Tacitus deſerved to be blamed, inſtead of enjoying the great Reputation it was in, I think his Apology might have been made with a more ſedate Mind. He publiſhed ſome Dialogues in the Year 1684. They were mention'd in the Nouvelles (d) de la Republique des Lettres. His Memoirs, containing the Hiſtory of Portugal from the Pyrenean Treaty in 1659 to 1668. have been publiſhed within theſe few (e) Days. They are worth Reading.

" could

(E) He bore ſo long . . . . . a Pain with great Conſtancy.] Mr. Patru does not mention what I am going to relate out of the Menagiana. (a) " Mr. " d'Ablancourt . . . . ſtudied in the Winter above an " Oven (b) at a Paſtry-Cook's. Being about (c) " threeſcore and three Years old, he was tormented with the Stone, and had a mind to go to Paris to be cut; but conſidering that being in November, he would be obliged to ſtay for the " Spring, and that he would be at great Charges; " he reſolved to abſtain from eating, to ſee an end " of his pain the ſooner, which he did. Notwith" ſtanding, being urged to eat ſomething, he was " perſuaded to it, but it was too late, and he died. „ 'Tis likely that Mr. Patru would have ſuppreſt that Circumſtance, even if he had known that it was true. There are ſome things, the Remembrance of which we rather chuſe entirely to ſuppreſs, than to ſhew the Falſity of them. We often believe, that 'tis more advantageous to the Memory of our Friends, that no Body ſhould know that they were Calumniated, than to diſcover the Falſity of thoſe Slanders. But there are ſome Occaſions in which we think ourſelves obliged to let the Publick know how cruelly Innocence has been abuſed. 'Tis what Mr. le Gendre did with reſpect to d'Ablancourt. " (†) God permitted that Mr. du Boſe ſhould attend " him at his Latter-end, to undeceive the World, as " to the falſe Reports that were ſpread abroad, as if " he had died in Deſpair. 'Twas a horrid Calum" ny, as Mr. du Boſe made it appear in his Letter to " Mr. Conrart, who was ſo much the more afflicted " at the Injury done to his Friend's Memory, be" cauſe it concerned all thoſe of the Reformed Re" ligion; for the King was further told, that it " was the Diſpoſition in which the Huguenots gene" rally died. „

(F) The Reaſon, why he choſe rather to be a Tranſlator than an Author, deſerves to be ſet down.] (d) " His Genius was much like that of Montagne; and " if he had been willing to work of himſelf, he " wanted nothing that was neceſſary for it. He " had a very copious Fancy, and his Mind was full " of good Learning. But when he was told of it, " he ſaid that he was neither a Preacher nor a " Lawyer, to make Pleas or Sermons; that the " World was full of Political Books; that all Mo" ral Diſcourſes were but Repetitions of Plutarch " and Seneca; and that to ſerve his Country, it " was better to tranſlate good Books, than to make " new ones, which moſt times contain nothing that " is new. „

(G) Why he believed that Princes ſhould underſtand Latin.] He ſaid, (e) that it was fit they ſhould learn that Tongue, becauſe they might learn thereby ſeveral things of the Ancients, which they cannot be told of, and ſee the honeſt Men of Antiquity condemn Princes who are wanting to their Duty. There is ſome Wit in that Thought, and I know not what that may dazzle and charm thoſe who do not examine things to the bottom. A Stroke of Cenſure that is well drawn, does very much ſet off a Moral Picture, eſpecially when Humane Grandeurs are the Object of that Cenſure. This is our Caſe. Mr. d'Ablancourt's Thought impoſes upon us for that Reaſon, it takes its greateſt Beauty from thence, but it is only an outward Beauty. Examine what he ſays, ſound it well, and you will find it is like Gilt-Wood. 'Tis but an Appearance and a ſuperficial Ornament. All Learned Nations tell Princes of their Faults in their Mother-Tongue, and may inſtruct them in their Duties as well as Latin Books. How can the Books of Ancient Rome teach Modern Princes? It is not by telling them You have committed an Unjuſtice, and a very great Fault in this or in that: 'tis only by the Cenſure of the Unjuſtices and Faults committed in Ancient Times. But do we want Books written in Vulgar Tongues, that repreſent the Duties of Princes with great force, and defame the Memory of thoſe who have reigned ill, either lately in ſome other Countries, or formerly in the very Country where thoſe Books are written? To ſay nothing of Sermons or Political Writings, let us only inſiſt upon Hiſtorians, Mezerai, for inſtance, who lived in the time of d'Ablancourt. I confeſs he has not written the Hiſtory of his own Time, but he comes infinitely nearer it than Livy, or Tacitus, or any of the Ancient Latin Authors, and cenſures with great liberty and force, the ill Adminiſtration of the Kings

of † Ibid. p. 343.

* It ſhould be ſeven.

§ Ib. p. 344.

‡ Ib. p. 344.

‖ Ib.

(b) I write this in January 1701.

(c) See the News from the Repub. of Learning, December 1686. p. 1460. & ſeq.

(d) March, in the Catalogue of new Books, n. iv. p. 50. & ſeq.

(e) I write this in January 1701.

(a) Menagiana p. 324, 325. of the 1ſt Dutch edit.

(b) See the Menagiana p. 397.

(c) There is a miſtake here, for d'Ablancourt lived not full 59 Years.

(†) Le Gendre's Life of Mr. du Boſe. p. 37.

(d) Patru ub. ſup. p. 345, 346.

(e) Menagiana p 389, 390.

" could never make two Verſes together. ,, His Converſation was (H) admirable. He made good uſe of the Advices of his Friends, (I) for the Correction of his Works; but he might have made a better uſe of them, had he not been ſo much in haſte to return into the Country when he was at Paris to get his Books printed. † His Way of Tranſlating was not approv'd by every body, tho' it was admir'd by all the Illuſtrious Men of our Age. 'Tis true, that ſometimes he takes ſome Liberty. He made an Apology for it in his Prefaces, * wherein he ſhewed, That he propoſed to himſelf the true Notion of a good Tranſlator, who ought to render the Senſe of the Original, without taking any thing from its Force, or Beauty. This is .... what he has ſo happily performed; and his lively and bold Expreſſions are ſo far from any Servileneſs, that whoever reads his Tranſlations, would think he reads ſome Originals, and not ſome Tranſlations. So ſays the Author of his Elogy; but every body does not agree, ‡ that he took no other Liberty but ſuch as he might take. He had a large Extent of Learning, (K) and apply'd himſelf more particularly to the Study of the Bible. We ſhall ſee what he (L) thought concerning the Immortality of the Soul. See his Elogy written by Mr. Patru, from which I have taken moſt of what has been ſaid: It contains many other things, which of France that come into his hands. He laſhes them and their Miniſters as meer School-Boys, when Truth requires it. Varillas uſes the ſame Freedom, tho' he was ſo great a Flatterer of his Contemporaries; and the greateſt Flatterers of the preſent Times do commonly cenſure the Faults of paſt Times with the greateſt freedom. So that the Reaſon why Mr. d'Ablancourt pretends, that Princes ſhould underſtand Latin, is falſe. It is ſo much the worſe, becauſe he could not be ignorant that the Writings of ancient Rome have been tranſlating for above theſe hundred Years; and if he thought it ſo uſeful a thing for Princes to underſtand that Language, why did he afford them ſo fair a Pretence not to ſtudy it? They needed but ſay, that his Tranſlations diſpenſed them with it. He deſtroyed therefore his own Theſis.

(H) His Converſation was admirable.] " (g) He " was, in his Youth, as gay as any one can be; he " was full of Vivacity and Wit, which was attended " with a certain Turn, which none but the genteel " part of the World can give..... His gay Hu- " mour laſted till he died. The Suburbs of St. " Germain afforded him the Acquaintance of all " thoſe Lords who made up the Court of the " Prince, and went, at that time, by the Name of " (h) Petits Maiſtres. But Mr. de Colligny and Mr. " de la Moussaye were extremely fond of him. When " any of them went through Vitry or Chalons, or " through ſome other Place, not very diſtant from " his Houſe, they would have him; and a Meal had " not been good if Mr. d'Ablancourt had not been at " it. He had always ſomething to ſay at Table, and " in Converſation. He ſpoke a great deal, but he " was never tedious; what he ſaid was always new " and agreeable. One would have thought he had " ſtudied every thing he ſaid, ſo proper and perti- " nent were his Ralleries, which he uſed to defend " himſelf, but ſo as never to offend any body. ,, I ſhall confirm this by a Paſſage of the Menagiana. (i) Mr. d'Ablancourt uſed to ſay ſo many good and agreeable things in Converſation, that Mr. Peliſſon ſaid, it were to be wiſh'd that he had had always a Regiſter by him, to write down every thing he ſaid.

(I) He made good uſe of the Advices of his Friends ..... but he might have made a better uſe of them.] What I am going to ſay, is not only a conſiderable part of the Character and Hiſtory of the Studies of our Perrot; but alſo an Inſtruction which may ſerve ſome other Authors, if they avoid what is defective in this Example. (a) " At firſt he conſulted no " body but Mr. Patru. But ſince he became ac- " quainted with Mr. Conrart and Mr. Chapelain, he " took alſo their Advice, eſpecially Mr. Conrart's, " with whom he reviſed all his Works, and ſo much " the more willingly, becauſe underſtanding neither " Greek nor Latin he gave him leſs trouble: For " when he came to Paris to Print his Works, he " was always in haſte to return into the Country; " and for that reaſon, when any thing was objected " to him, he anſwer'd it with great Heat, and, as it " were, in Anger; becauſe thoſe Difficulties put " him to Work, and conſequently retarded his Re- " turn. And that Humour did ſo far prevail upon " him, that towards the End of his Life, and in his " laſt Tranſlations, he conſulted, or at leaſt believed " no body: Which was neither out of Preſumption " or Vanity, but only out of Haſtineſs, and a preci- " pitate Deſire of laying down his Burden: For " when his Book was printed, he willingly receiv'd " all the Advices that were given him, and even " was preſſing upon his Friends to adviſe him about " it, that he might make uſe of their Remarks in " a Second Edition; and therefore it will not be im- " proper to mention a notable Particularity. He " had, till then, reviſed all his Works with Mr. Pa- " tru; but ever ſince his Arrianus, which they ex- " amined together, from the beginning to the end, " in eight or ten Afternoons, he printed all his " Books, for the firſt time, without acquainting " him with it in the leaſt, becauſe he vexed him " too much. He did the ſame as to his Lucian, but " when it was printed and publiſh'd, he deſir'd that " dear Friend to reviſe it. That dear Friend re- " viſ'd it, and ſent him his Remarks: he approv'd " moſt of 'em; and as for thoſe which he approv'd " not, he referr'd them to Mr. Conrart or Mr. Chape- " lain. Mr. Patru join'd with them, and they re- " ſolv'd thoſe Difficulties together: So that the Se- " cond Edition, which was made upon thoſe Obſer- " vations, is much more correct than the firſt. ,, (K) A large extent of Learning, and he applied himſelf ..... to the ſtudy of the Bible.] " He had a " quick (b) and penetrating Wit: When he under- " took to examine any Difficulty, he preſently ſaw " into the very bottom of it; he underſtood Philo- " ſophy, Theology, Hiſtory, and all the belles Lettres. " He underſtood Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Italian, and " Spaniſh; he was very well inſtructed in his Reli- " gion, and more than one would have deſir'd for " his Salvation. But ſo great a Variety of Know- " ledge, ſo deep a Learning, neither dulled his " Wit, nor confounded or impair'd his Judgment; " he clearly underſtood every thing, the ancient " Authors as well as the modern. In his declining " Age he ſcarce read any Books beſides the Holy " Scripture, and the Relations and Hiſtories of the " New World; but eſpecially the Holy Scripture, " which may be ſaid to have been his moſt tender " and laſt Love. He had all the good Commenta- " tors on the Bible, either general or particular " ones. There was not any one Difficulty in the " Bible, but what he was throughly acquainted " with. ,,

(L) What he thought concerning the Immortality of the Soul.] Having aſſerted in a Converſation, (c) That Religion and not Reaſon teaches us the Immortality of the Soul, he writ a (d) Diſcourſe, which he ſent to Mr. Patru, to juſtify his Opinion. He ſays in that Diſcourſe, (e) " That the perfect Knowledge " of our Souls is above the ordinary Strength of our " Minds, and that there are no Reaſons that can " prove their Immortality. ,, He alledges the chief of thoſe Reaſons, and adds, That they are good indeed to confirm in that belief a Soul that is already enlighten'd with Grace, but that they are not ſufficient to ſatisfy a Man who has no other Light than that of Nature. He ſpeaks (f) of the Blindneſs of Philoſophers, and of the Confuſion of Ariſtotle's Doctrine concerning this Subject, and he pretends that we ſhould not wonder at it: (g) The Light of the Goſpel had not yet enlighten'd the World; and that Truth being above Humane Reaſon, ſtood in need of a ſupernatural Help to be known..... You muſt confeſs, ſays he (h) to Mr. Patru his Friend, that we are made Chriſtians by Faith, and not by Natural Reaſon; and that I may be allowed to ſay, ſpeaking as a Philoſopher, that the Reſurrection is impoſſible, provided I believe that God by his infinite Power can do things that are impoſſible to Nature. So that I ſaid nothing but what I might ſay, when I ſaid, that which will not prove unacceptable to thoſe who are pleaſed with a very particular Account of the Lives of Illuſtrious Men. Note, That Mr. Patru aſcribes to Perrot the moſt excellent Moral Qualities that can be wiſhed for.

---

† Ib. p. 345.

* Ib.

‡ See Baillet's Jugement des Savans, Tom. 4. n. 950. Menage *used to call d'*Ablancourt's Tranſlation of Tacitus, a fair but an unfaithful one. Menagiana p. 424. of the 1ſt Dutch Edit.

(g) Patru ubi ſupra, p. 349.

(h) Vigneul Marville is therefore in the right, when he ſays in his Miſcellanies, p. 284. of the 1ſt Tome, that the Prince of Conde had ſome of thoſe petits-Maitres. What he ſays concerning the Origin and Character of thoſe Men is curious. To which you may add what the Continuator of la Bruyere, or the modern Theophraſtus ſays of 'em, p. 422. and ſeq. of his new Characters of Manners of the Dutch Edit. See alſo the Diverſitez curieuſes of Mr. Bordellon, 10. part. p. 259. of the Dutch Ed.

(i) Menagiana, pag. 325. of the 1ſt Dutch Edit.

(a) Patru, ubi ſupra, p. 345, 347.

(b) Id. ib. p. 348, 349.

(c) Patru ubi ſupra p. 355.

(d) It is to be found in the 2d Tom. of Patru's Works, p. 354. & ſeq.

(e) Ib. p. 356.

(f) Ibid. p. 357.

(g) Ibid. p. 356.

(h) Ibid.

PER-

that humane Diſcourſes cannot make me comprehend, that our Souls are Immortal, and that the Holy Scripture, and the Revelations of God to his Church have taught me that Truth, which is the foundation of our Religion. Afterwards he maintains, that his Opinion is much better than it would be, if it was grounded upon ſome Philoſophical Proofs. “(i) You believe the Immortality of the Soul, becauſe your Reaſon tells you ſo; as for me, I believe it againſt my Reaſon: I believe that our Souls are Immortal, becauſe our Religion commands me to believe it. Conſider thoſe two Opinions, and you will certainly confeſs, that mine is much better: Yours is not ſo much as Catholick. . . . . (k) As . . . . . it is not ſufficient to do good Works in order to be a Virtuous Man; but, beſides, our Intentions ought to be innocent, and our Actions to proceed from a good Motive: ſo it is not ſufficient, in order to be a Catholick, not to doubt of any thing which the Church will have us to believe, we muſt, beſides, believe like Chriſtians, and Humility, and not Preſumption, ought to be the Cauſe of our Faith. . . . . (l) We have not a perfect Truſt in God, if we rely upon our Reaſon in things which he will have us to believe. If our Reaſon never deceiv'd us, and if we had a perfect Knowledge of ſuch things as fall under our Senſes, perhaps our Raſhneſs would be excuſable; and it would be no wonder, if finding nothing upon Earth that could puzzle us, we inquir'd after ſuch things as are above us. But you know better than I do, what the Knowledge of Man is; and that there are ſtill ſo many things in Nature that are above Philoſophical Enquiries, that we may very well miſtruſt our Strength and our Reaſon. None but a Novice in Philoſophy will think that all manner of Queſtions may be eaſily reſolved. They who go further into the Knowledge of things, meet with greater Difficulties: Two contrary Opinions are often equally probable; and if they embrace one of them, it is rather out of Inclination than out of Reaſon. Man cannot judge certainly of any thing whatſoever; his Reaſon deceives him as well as his Senſes: we live among Errors and Doubts, and we have no certain Truths here below, but thoſe which God has reveal'd to his Church. Take a ſight of all the Schools of Philoſophy, conſider what they do and teach there; you will find Preſumption in ſome, Obſtinacy in others, and Ignorance, Error, and Weakneſs in all of 'em. Certainly we ſtand in need of our Imbecillity to keep to our Duty. . . . (m) ſince our Reaſon is ſo weak that the leaſt Difficulties puzzle it, and that it is deceived and miſtaken at every turn, let us be ſure not to truſt ſuch a blind Guide, and not to ground our Belief upon ſo weak a Foundation. We muſt not rely upon our Arguments, but upon him who made Heaven and Earth. . . . . . (a) Let us always remember that we muſt believe in God, and not in ourſelves, and that if we ſhould uſe our Reaſon in what concerns Divine things, we ſhould imitate the Cynick, who not contented with the light of the Sun, look'd for a good Man with a Candle at Noon-day."

Deſcartes and his moſt faithful Followers might find fault with ſome of thoſe Thoughts, but it would be only as meer Philoſophers; for aſſoon as they conſider themſelves as being Chriſtians, they muſt altogether approve d' Ablancourt's Opinion. They are perſuaded, that their Proofs of the Immortality of the Soul are demonſtrative; they would therefore take it ill that he ſhould ſay, that the Light of Reaſon affords no good Proofs of that Immortality: but, after all, he would be only look'd upon as an Hetorodox in Philoſophy; and they would confeſs, that as a Chriſtian he had the fulneſs of Orthodoxy. A Perſuaſion grounded upon the Light of Nature ought to be conſider'd in a Chriſtian as Eloquence in a Philoſopher, or as Agreeableneſs in a Hiſtory, (c) or as Beauty in a Wreſtler: They are things the privation whereof can be no great Prejudice, tho' it be no diſadvantage to enjoy them. (d) A Philoſopho ſi afferat eloquentiam, non aſperner: Si non habeat, non admodum flagitem. It is an advantage to be able to reconcile the Truths of the Chriſtian Religion with the Pinciples of Philoſophy; it is a good thing not to be neglected, but rather improv'd as much as it can be; but one muſt be always ready to loſe it without Grief, when it cannot be extended to the Doctrines that are above its reach, and above the Capacity of our Reaſon. One muſt be affected with reſpect to that Advantage, as wiſe Men are affected with reſpect to Fortune: if ſhe is conſtant in her Favours to them, they are glad of it; if ſhe runs away they are not much troubled for it: I praiſe her, ſaid Horace (e), when ſhe ſtays with me; but aſſoon as I perceive that ſhe is ready to forſake me, I return her her Gifts, and wrap up myſelf in my Virtue. True Chriſtians do the ſame, with reſpect to Philoſophical Knowledge: If after they have prov'd ſome Tenets of Religion, it ſeems to be againſt them, and to ſerve the contrary Tenets, we let it go, ſay they, and we wrap up ourſelves in our Faith. It is a thick and impenetrable Vail againſt the Injuries of the Air, that is to ſay, againſt all the Aſſaults of Humane Reaſon. Mr. d' Ablancourt did the ſame. There is nothing more judicious and ſolid than his Reflections upon the Nature of Faith, and upon the good uſe which ought to be made of the Uncertainty of Reaſon: the Certainty of Divine Faith is above that of Science. It would be therefore a very unjuſt thing to pretend, that a Faithful wants ſome Philoſophical Proofs to be ſure that his Soul is Immortal. Is it not enough for him to be certain of it by his Submiſſion to the Divine Authority, and by a firm Perſuaſion, that there is no Foundation ſo immutable and unmovable as the Word of God? and muſt not a Chriſtian, if he will act as a Chriſtian, believe the Immortality of the Soul, becauſe God has promis'd us an Eternal Felicity? If he believ'd the Immortality of the Soul for ſome Philoſophical Reaſons, it would be no Act of Faith, which yet he ought to perform, if he deſires to fulfil the Duties of Religion, and to be acceptable to God. Chriſtians have no regard to the Light of Reaſon in an Act of Faith, they lay it aſide, and rely only upon God's Veracity. See what the Schoolmen ſay when they inquire, whether Opinion, Science, and Faith can be in our Minds at the ſame time, with reſpect to the ſame Object.

I have now a very fair Opportunity to ſet down a Paſſage which I have promis'd in another place. Mr. Lock found himſelf almoſt in the ſame caſe with Mr. d' Ablancourt: he was blamed for having ſaid, that Natural Reaſon does not clearly prove the Immortality of the Soul. Let us ſee his Anſwer. “(g) This your Accuſation of my leſſening the Credibility of theſe Articles of Faith, [the Immortality of the Soul and the Reſurrection of the Body] is founded on this, That the Article of the Immortality of the Soul abates of its Credibility, if it be allowed, That its Immateriality (which is the ſuppoſed Proof from Reaſon and Philoſophy of its Immortality) cannot be demonſtrated from Natural Reaſon: which Argument of your Lordſhip's, bottoms, as I humbly conceive, on this, That Divine Revelation abates of its Credibility in all thoſe Articles it propoſes, proportionably as Humane Reaſon fails to ſupport the Teſtimony of God. And all that your Lordſhip in thoſe Paſſages has ſaid, when examined, will, I ſuppoſe, be found to import thus much, viz. Does God promiſe any thing to Mankind to be believed? It is very fit and credible to be believed, if Reaſon can demonſtrate it to be true. But if Humane Reaſon comes ſhort in the caſe, and cannot make it out, its Credibility is thereby leſſen'd; which is, in effect, to ſay, That the Veracity of God is not a firm and ſure Foundation of Faith to rely upon, without the concurrent Teſtimony of Reaſon, i. e. with Reverence be it ſpoken, God is not to be believed on his own Word, unleſs what he reveals be in itſelf credible, and might be believed without him. . . . . † Your Lordſhip ſays, You do not queſtion whether God can give Immortality to a material Subſtance; but you ſay it takes off very much from the Evidence of Immortality, if it depends wholly upon God's giving that which, of its own nature, it is not capable of. To which I reply, Any one's not being able to demonſtrate the Soul to be Immaterial, takes off not very much, nor at all from the Evidence of its Immortality, if God has revealed that it ſhall be Immortal, becauſe the Veracity of

(i) Id. ib. p. 361.

(k) Ibid. p. 362.

(l) Ibid. p. 363.

(m) Ibid. p. 364.

(a) Patru ubi ſupra p. 365.

(c) Lucianus in libello de hac re, unum ait eſſe opus Hiſtoriæ, unumque finem, utilitatem: jucundum verò ſi & ipſum ſequatur, melius hoc eſſe: perinde atque in athleta vires requiruntur, forma ac venuſtas laudantur. Famian. Strada prolus. 2. lib. 2. pag. m. 223.

(d) Cic. de finib. l. 1. fol. m. 215. A.

(e) Laudo manentem: ſi celeres quatit Pennas, reſigno quæ dedit, & mea Virtute me involvo. Horat. od. 29. l. 3.

(g) Mr. Lock's Reply to the Biſhop of Worceſt. Anſwer to his ſecond Letter. p. 418. 419. See alſo the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres Nov. 1699. p. 510.

† Mr. Lock ib. p. 420, 421.

PERSIUS (Caius *) was one of the moſt Learned (A) Men of his Time. He was Quæſtor † in the Year of Rome 608, and Prætor two Years after. The Poet Lucilius fear'd him, and ingenuouſly confeſt that he did not write for ſuch Men, and that he deſired not his Readers ſhould be ſo Learned as he was. It was thought by ſome, that Perſius made the ‡ Harangue which was pronounced by the Conſul Caius Fannius againſt Caius Gracchus in the Year of Rome 631. The Reaſon of it was * that Fannius was but an indifferent Orator, and that his Harangue was ſo fine that others believed ſeveral Great Men had contributed to it every one according to his Capacity. It was not at that Time a thing without Example, that a Man ſhould make a Diſcourſe, and another recite it. Nevertheleſs Cicero refutes thoſe who aſcribed not that Harangue to Fannius. Some by a ſtrange Error in Chronology (B) have confounded our Perſius with the Poet I am going to ſpeak of.

PERSIUS (Aulus Perſius (A) Flaccus) a Satyrical Poet under the Empire of Nero,

" God is a Demonſtration of the Truth of what he " has revealed, and the Want of another Demonſtration of a Propoſition, that is demonſtratively " true, takes not off from the Evidence of it. For " where there is a clear Demonſtration, there is " as much Evidence as any Truth can have, that is " not ſelf evident. . . . (h) Can any one who admits of Divine Revelation . . . . think this Propoſition leſs credible, The Bodies of Men, after " the Reſurrection, ſhall live for ever; than " this, The Souls of Men ſhall, after the Reſurrection, live for ever? For that he muſt do, if " he thinks either of them is leſs credible than the " other. If this be ſo, Reaſon is to be conſulted, " how far God is to be believed, and the Credit " of Divine Teſtimony muſt receive its Force from " the Evidence of Reaſon, which is evidently to " take away the Credibility of Divine Revelation, " in all ſupernatural Truths, wherein the Evidence " of Reaſon fails. "

The Reader may find ſeveral things in the Article of Pomponatius, which concern this matter; but it is to be obſerved here, that many School-Men have aſſerted that the Natural Reaſons of the Immortality of the Soul are not convincing. (i) Naturæ rationes Henricus atque Scotus probabiliter ſuadere aiunt, non neceſſario demonſtrare. Cajetanus, who had openly and haughtily rejected that Opinion (k), imbraced it at laſt; I believe, ſays he, that our Souls are Immortal, but I don't know it: (l) ſe credere quidem animam rationalem incorruptibilem eſſe, at neſcire tamen. He and Scotus, and Joannes de Janduno having examined all the Arguments alledged by Thomas Aquinas, declared that they were not demonſtrative, (m) Pronunciarunt tandem rem non eſſe demonſtratam, ſed creditam. Scotus (n) anſwered all the Arguments of Thomas Aquinas. The latter propoſed 21 probable Reaſons for the Immortality of the Soul, to which Joannes de Janduno added many more.

(A) One of the moſt learned Men.] Cicero mentions him in two or three places. He brings in (o) the Orator Craſſus who declares, that in imitation of the Poet Lucilius, he does not deſire that his Readers ſhould be altogether ignorant, or very learned Men: and upon this occaſion he tells us that Perſius, one of thoſe whom that Poet would not have to be his Reader, was in a manner, the moſt Learned Man that was ſeen at Rome. Nam ut Cajus Lucilius homo doctus & perurbanus dicere ſolebat ea quæ ſcriberet neque ab indoctiſſimis neque ab doctiſſimis legi velle, quod alteri nihil intelligerent, alteri plus fortaſſe quàm ipſe de ſe, quo etiam ſcripſit; Perſium non curo legere, hic enim fuit, ut noramus, omnium fere noſtrorum hominum doctiſſimus; Lælium Decimum volo, quem cognovimus virum bonum & non illiteratum, ſed nihil ad Perſium; ſic ego ſi jam mihi diſputandum ſit de his noſtris ſtudiis, nolim equidem apud ruſticos, ſed multo minus apud vos, malo enim non intelligi orationem meam, quàm reprehendi. Cicero declares in another (p) Place, that he is not of Lucilius's Mind; he wiſh'd that Perſius might have read his Works. Nec enim ut noſter Lucilius recuſabo quo minus omnes mea legant. Utinam eſſet ille Perſius; Scipio vero & Rutilius multo etiam magis, quorum ille judicium reformidans Tarentinis ait ſe & Conſentinis & Siculis ſcribere. Pliny deſigning to make uſe of Lucilius's Thought, choſe rather to take it from Cicero than from its Author; and it appears that he had in view a Paſſage of Cicero, wherein the thing was related with ſome different Explications from thoſe we have ſeen. Præterea, ſays Pliny (a), eſt quædam publica etiam eruditorum rejectio. Utitur illa & M. Tullius extra omnem ingenii aleam poſitus, & (quod miremur) per advocatum defenditur. (b) Nec doctiſſimis: Manium Perſium hæc legere nolo, Junium Congum volo. Quod ſi hoc Lucilius qui primus condidit ſtyli naſum dicendum ſibi putavit: ſi Cicero mutuandum, præſertim cum de Republica ſcriberet, quanto nos cauſatius ab aliquo judice defendimus. That Paſſage of Cicero was, without doubt, in the Preface to his Books de Republica; he had not then the ſame Thought that he had in the 1ſt Book de Finibus, but the ſame that he had in the 2d Book de Oratore. We ought not to wonder at thoſe Variations, for there are different Subjects. It is a more ſurprizing thing, that every time he mention'd that Thought of Lucilius, he brought in ſeveral Perſons oppoſite to Perſius, ſometimes Lælius Decimus, ſometimes the Sicilians and Tarentines, ſometimes Junius Congus. The Reaſon of it may be, either becauſe Lucilius mention'd ſeveral Perſons in the ſame Place, whoſe Penetration he did not much fear, or becauſe he made uſe of the ſame Thought in ſeveral places, ſometimes againſt one, ſometimes againſt another: For when an Author declares that he is afraid of being criticiz'd by a Man by reaſon of his great Learning, it may preſently afford him a Satyrical Stroke againſt thoſe whom he deſigns to expoſe, as Ignorant or Half-Learned Men, by oppoſing them to the Perſon whoſe Judgment he fears. Lucilius's Deſign was not ſo much to praiſe the Learning of Perſius, as to exerciſe his Satyrical Wit. He might in both Caſes give occaſion to Cicero to diverſifie the Perſons oppoſed to Perſius: And therefore Father Hardouin did very well to expunge Lælius Decimus out of Pliny, and in the room of it to aſſert Junius Congus, by virtue of the beſt and moſt ancient Manuſcripts.

(B) Some have confounded.] (c) Fungerus taking, without any reaſon for it, theſe Words of Cicero, nihil ad Perſium, for a Proverbial Expreſſion, fancied they were meant of Perſius, the Satyrical Poet, born towards the End of the Empire of Tiberius. Thoſe two Faults have been obſerved by Voſſius. He complains of a great number of ſuch Over-ſights, which he found in Ancient and Modern Authors. Vellem, ſays he (d), *ut juventus hinc videat quàm neceſſaria ſit doctrina temporum, cujus neglectu ſpiſſe fœdeque peccatur à viris alioqui non ineruditis. Quamquam nec tanti id foret, ſi unus ille (Fungerus) ſic exorbitaret. Sexcenta id genus poteram ex aliis adferre, pluſcula etiam ex veteribus ipſis.*

(A) Aulus Perſius Flaccus.] Thoſe who ſaid that the Surname of Flaccus was given him, becauſe he imitated Horace, did not obſerve that his (e) Father had the ſame Surname, and have not been more lucky in their Gueſs, than when they ſaid that he was called Severus, becauſe he profeſt the Stoick Philoſophy. Caſaubon affords me (f) thoſe two Remarks. He believes as to the ſecond, that an Inſcription found at Volterra occaſion'd that Error. Here is the Inſcription: A. Perſius A. F. Severus V. an. VIII. M. III. D. XIX. Which ſuppoſes that thoſe whom that great Critick cenſures, pretended that the Title of Severus was given to Perſius as a Surname of a Family, and if it be ſo, they might be cenſured for it; but if they conſidered that Title only as an Epithet, like that of Ardens, which Juvenal (g) beſtowed upon Lucilius, they could not be blamed for having taken notice of that Poet's Application to the Stoick Philoſophy, nor could it be pretended that they had any regard to the Inſcription of Volterra. No Man was ever more worthy of the Elogy of Severity than that Poet, conſidering the imperious Tone of his Invectives and Cenſures;

---

* Pliny calls him Manius in Harduin's Edition, See the Rem. A.

† According to Voſſius de Poet. Lat. p. 41.

‡ Alii a C. Perſio literato homine ſcriptam eſſe aiebant, illo quem ſignificat valde doctum eſſe Lucilius; alii multos nobiles quod quiſque potuiſſet in illam orationem contuliſſe. Cicero in Bruto.

* Eam ſuſpicionem propter hanc cauſam credo fuiſſe, quod Fannius in mediocribus Oratoribus habitus eſſet, oratio autem vel optima eſſet illo quidem tempore orationum omnium. Id. ib.

(h) Id. ib. p. 422.

(i) Melch. Canus loc. commun. l. 12. cap. ult. p. m. 724.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Id. ib. p. 725.

(n) Id. ib. p. 727.

(o) Cic. de Orat. l. 2.

(p) De finib. l. 1. circa init.

(a) In præf.

(b) So Father Harduin reads. In the other Editions 'tis Nec doctiſſimum Perſium legere nolo, Lælium Decimum volo

(c) In nova proverbior. farragine, apud Voſſium inſt. Orat. l. 4. c. 11. & de poet. Lat. p. 41.

(d) De poet. Lat. ib.

(e) Sueton. in vita Perſii.

(f) Notis in vitam Perſii.

(g) Sat. 1. So Perſius calls Horace, Vafer, and Ovid gives the Epithet of Doctus to Catullus.

Nero, was born at (B) Volterra in Tuscany. He was a Roman Knight, and related to Persons of the first Rank. He studied at Volterra till he was 12 Years of Age, and then he continued his Studies at Rome, under the Grammarian Palæmon, the Rhetor Virginius, and Cornutus a Stoick Philosopher, who entertained so great a Love for him, that there was ever since a most intimate Friendship between them. Persius has immortalized by * his Works that Friendship, and his Thankfulness for the good Offices of his Friend. Which he exprest more fully by a Codicil, for he left him his Library and a great deal of † Money; but Cornutus kept only the Books, and left the Money to the Heirs ‖. He advised the Mother of his Friend to suppress some Pieces of Poetry, which her Son made in the beginning of his Youth. He thought, without doubt, they would not answer the great Reputation of those which had been Published, and received by the Publick with so great an Admiration, that all the Copies were presently sold off. This is a Model to be proposed to those who publish so many sorry Posthumous Books, in hopes that the Glory of the Deceased will be a Safeguard to them. They supprest, amongst other Works of Persius, some Verses which he had made upon Arria, that Illustrious Roman Lady, who killed herself to give an Example to her dear Husband. Moreri (C) fancied that it was a Satyr against Arria, which is false; it was rather an Elogy, and it cannot be reasonably doubted of considering the great Love of the Author for Thrasea, Son-in-Law to Arria * his Kinswoman. He studied with Lucan, under Cornutus, and was so much admired by his School-Fellow, that when Persius recited Censures; which is the Reason Barthius gives of that Elogy. It was therefore an unreasonable thing to apply to him the severe Reprimand of Casaubon. What I say concerns Magirus (h); for having set down these Words of Barthius, (i) Severum veteres libri ab auctoritate castigandi & invectione in malos mores nominant, he adds, sed videtur huic vanissimo commento occasionem præbuisse inscriptio illa memoria avorum Volaterris inventa, ubi Aul. PERSII cujusdam ollennis pueri fit mentio, cui cognomen fuit Severo. Casaub. not. ad Persii vitam. This Application does not seem to me to be judicious.

(B) Born at Volterra.] All Authors don't agree about it; Etruria and Liguria contend for it. Persius might boast of having a good share in Homer's Destiny, two great Provinces strive which shall have him. The Etrurians ground their Pretension upon the Testimony of (k) some Ancient Authors, who say that Persius was of Volterra. The Ligurians ground theirs upon these (l) Words;

Mihi nunc Ligus ora
Intepet, hibernatque meum mare, qua latus ingens
Dant Scopuli, & multa littus se valle receptat
Lunai portum est operæ cognoscere cives.

They pretend that the Poet speaks of his Native Country, and consequently that he was born at Portus Lunæ, which is called now the Gulph della Spezzia. Don Gasparo Massa has treated that Matter learnedly, in a Dissertation printed at Genoa in 1667, della vita, Origine è patria di Aulo Persio Flacco. He believes that the Town (m) call'd formerly Luna, was situated in Tuscany, and therefore he is far from granting that it was the Native Country of our Poet; for his not being born at Volterra would signifie nothing to him, if he could not prove that he was born in the State of Genoa. He therefore says, that the Place of his Birth was Tigulia, near Portus Lunæ, situated in Liguria, 80 (n) Stadia distant from Luna. You must observe that the Town of Luna and the Port of Luna are distinguished one from another. Lewis Aprosio is of the same Opinion with Gasparo Massa, as it appears from his Dissertation della Patria d'A. Persio, printed at Genoa in the Year 1664. See how little one can rely upon Moreri, he pretends that Aprosio maintains that Persius was of Volterra, and that Gaspar Massa says he was born at Luna or la Spezzia. Which is very false with respect to Aprosio, and far from being exact with respect to Massa. Tho' the Arguments of those two Gentlemen are none of those which cannot be answered, yet they are probable enough, and if I was to choose, I had rather follow their (o) Opinion than that of Eusebius. I shall acquaint my Reader, that Soprani being not contented to place Persius amongst (p) the Writers of Liguria, and to give some Reasons for it, caused those two Discourses to be printed at the end of his Work.

(C) Moreri fancied ..... which is false.] I think the true Reason of his Mistake proceeds from these Words: (a) Scripserat in pueritia Flaccus ...... paucos in sororem Thraseæ & in Arriæ matrem versus quæ se ante virum occiderat. The Criticks (b) have corrected these Words thus, in socrum Thraseæ Arriæ matrem, or Arriam (c) matrem. The Preposition (d) In is Equivocal; it signifies sometimes against, and sometimes upon. One may easily perceive that it ought to be taken here in the second Sense; for is it likely that Persius should have written some Verses against a Lady who was his Kinswoman, and Mother of his best Friend's Wife, and famous for being dead in a most Heroical manner, according to the Notions of the Sect wherein our Poet was bred up? The Friendship of Persius and Thrasea, Son-in-Law of that Lady, lasted near ten Years, which signifies, as Casaubon observes, that Persius did not live above ten Years from the Time he contracted an intimate Friendship with Thrasea. Now because he lived but 28 Years, any one may see that their Friendship began whilst Persius studied Philosophy under Cornutus (e): and 'tis likely that he made the Verses in question after he had got such a Friend. The Word Pueritia is used by the best Latin Authors for young Men of 18 or 20 Years of Age. I shall place here in order the other Mistakes of Moreri. He says that Persius wrote a Book against Arria, which his Master Cornutius made him burn. Suppose this to be true, it was not a Book, but some few Verses, paucos versus. His Master's Name was not Cornutius, but Cornutus; and it was only after the Death of the Author, that he advised his Mother to suppress those Verses, and all those he had made in his Youth. (f) Omnia autem Cornutus auctor fuit MATRI ejus ut aboleret. Whereby the Author of the Epistle, which serves instead of a Preface to the new Translation of Persius, may be convinced of a Mistake. His Words run thus: (g) "He composed some Verses upon "(h) that Subject, which were no (i) Commenda-"tion of that generous and faithful Wife: but he "followed the Advice that was given him, he sup-"prest those Verses, and he did well." Moreri calls the Rhetorician, under whom Persius studied, Virginius Fulvius; he shou'd have call'd him Virginius Flaccus. He says that this pretended Virginius Fulvius and Rhemnius Palæmon took care of Lucan's Education. To what purpose does he make such a Remark, since he was to say nothing of Lucan's Love for Persius? But besides, none of the Authors quoted by him, mention that pretended Education. 'Tis with respect to Cornutus, that the Author of the Life of Persius observes, that he taught Lucan and Persius at the same time. We shall see hereafter (k) a Chronological Fault of Moreri.

Mr. Marais was pleased to acquaint me, that Moreri might have taken from Mr. (†) Geffrier what he says of Arria; for the Reputation of that Lady was so dear to Mr. Geffrier, that to make amends for the wrong which he pretends Persius had done her, he caused a Sonnet to be printed before his Translation, which Father le Moine composed to the Praise of Arria, and which is to be found in his Galerie des Femmes fortes.

---

* Pers. Sat. 5. passim.

† Five and twenty thousand Crowns according to the supputation of some. See the Preface of Persius's Translation by the Jesuit Tarteron.

‖ That is, Persius's Sisters.

* Ipse etiam decem fere annis summe dilectus apud Thraseam est, ita ut peregrinaretur quoque cum eo aliquando, cognatam ejus Arriam (the Daughter of that Arria who killed her self) uxorem habente. Suet. in vit. Persii. Instead of dilectus apud Thraseam, Lipsius in Ann. Tacit. l. 15. reads dilectus à Pæto Thrasea.

(h) Eponymolog. Critic. p. 648.

(i) VI Adversar. 1.

(k) The Author of Persius's Life. Euseb. in Chronic. Cassiodor. in Fastis.

(l) Pers. Sat. 6. v. 6.

(m) Pag. 40.

(n) Aprosio della Patria d'A. Persio, p. 14.

(o) 'Tis also the Opinion of Bartholomew Fontius in his Comment. upon Persius printed at Venice in 1491. and of Hippolitus Landinelli, Nell'origine di Luni cap. 11. apud Michael. Justiniani, Scritt. Liguri, p. 108.

(p) Printed at Genoa in 4. in the year 1667.

(a) Suet. in vita Persii.

(b) Casaub. not. in vit. Persii.

(c) Gronovius in eamd. vitam in Edit. Sueton. Graviana.

(d) Vid. Casaub. in Pers. Sat. 1. p. 110.

(e) Cum primum pavido custos mihi purpura cessit, Bullaque succinctis laribus donata pependit, Me tibi supposui. Pers. ad Cornutum Sat. 5.

(f) Suet. ub. sup.

(g) Epistle before the Translation of Persius by Father Tarteron.

(h) That is upon the Action of Arria.

(i) It is a Mistake, which I refute.

(k) In the Rem. E.

(†) De quo infra Rem. D. at the end.

recited his Verſes, Lucan could ſcarce forbear breaking out into Acclamations: Which is a rare thing among Poets of the ſame Rank, but ſometimes too common (C∆) out of Cunning and Vanity. Perſius became acquainted with Seneca very late, and could never like him. He was a good Friend, a (C∆∆) better Son ſtill, a better Brother, and a better Kinſman. He was very Chaſt, tho' a beautiful young Man: He was Sober, as Mild as a Lamb, and as ſuſceptible of Modeſty as a young Maid: So true it is, that we muſt not judge of a Man's Life by his Writings; for the Satyrs of Perſius are not very modeſt: beſides, they are ſharp and full of Bitterneſs. Nay, 'tis thought that he ſpared not the Cruel Nero, and that he did ſo (D) plainly hint at him, that Cornutus thought fit to alter ſome

---

(C∆) Sometimes too common out of Cunning and Vanity.] This is finely explained by a Modern Author, who does not pretend that Lucan was free from that Fault. “Perſius, ſays he (l), was much better pleaſed with Lucan, (m) who perhaps inſinuated himſelf into his Favour with much exclaiming at the fineſt Paſſages of his Satyrs, and often repeating theſe Words with great admiration, These are excellent Pieces indeed! For tho' an Author be never ſo modeſt, he will be eaſily allured by the Charms of flattering Applauſes, which he receives from a good Judge in a full Aſſembly. But, Sir, had not Lucan his Aim in it? Didn't he expect the like from Perſius? Poets and Authors, you know, do ſeldom give any thing for nothing; and when they come to engage one another with Praiſes and Compliments, they don't ſpare themſelves; they make Paſſes at one another with great force. You know ſome at preſent, as well as I, who are accounted for bravery of Wit, if I may ſay ſo, the Boutevilles of this Time: they challenge thoſe that have moſt Skill, and whether it be in a Rencounter, or in formal Duels, which were never prohibited by the King, they ſtrive to conquer one another, and are on both ſides extremely free of the moſt obliging and civil Expreſſions, even in Writing and in Print, that Poſterity may not doubt of it. In that ſort of Duels the weakeſt Man is always the Aggreſſor; 'tis he who ſends or even gives the Challenge. This is, Sir, Horace's Metaphor, and it will appear to you, at leaſt, as pleaſant as it is bold, you may find it in his Epiſtle to Florus. As for me, if the Title of Writer made me greedy of Praiſes, I had rather be commended by a good Author, whom I ſhould neither know by his Name, nor by Sight, and who could have no Intereſt in praiſing me; for ſuch Praiſes could not be ſuſpected.”

(C∆∆) He was a good Friend, a better Son ſtill, a better Brother, and a better Kinſman.] The Author who affords me theſe Words, will afford me alſo a Commentary upon them. “You wonder at it, ſays he (n), and perhaps you have your Reaſons for it. Nevertheleſs, there is nothing truer than this; and they who knew him beſt, ſay, (o) that he might be propoſed as an Example in that reſpect. In effect, he had a ſolid and true Love for his Siſters, and a reſpectful Tenderneſs for his Mother Fulvia, tho' ſhe was married again: and if he was but a Child when his Father died, if he was but ſeven or eight Years of Age when ſhe did that . . . . I had almoſt let fall the Word Folly, but we muſt be ſomewhat circumſpect in favour of thoſe Women; he was already clear-ſighted enough to perceive that it was no pleaſant thing, for Reaſon diſplays it ſelf much in ſuch Junctures, it grows ſtrong and lively, and does not always wait for the time appointed to make its Reflections, eſpecially when it happens to be in a Subject that has a diſpoſition to be Satyrical. But, Sir, we muſt ſpeak the whole Truth, the ſecond Husband (p) died in a ſhort time, and left Perſius in a condition of reſpecting and loving his Mother, as ſincerely as he did, when he was but a Child. I don't know whether Fulvia took great care of her Son's Education, and whether ſhe loved not herſelf too much to mind an Affair of ſo great Importance: This I cannot be ſure of, for a ſecond Wedding, and even the Condition of a young Widow, is a great hindrance to it; but that which I am ſure of, is, that the Roman Knight, though never ſo Young, neglected nothing to make himſelf as accompliſhed a Man as I have repreſented him to you.” I ſhall add theſe Words of Suetonius to that pretty Commentary; Reliquit circa H-S XX. matri & ſorori . . . . . Cornutus, ſublatis libris, pecuniam ſororibus, quam frater heredes fecerat, reliquit. What ſhall we ſay of an Hiſtorian, who in the ſame Page, where he ſays twice, that Perſius had but one Siſter, obſerves that Perſius left his Eſtate to his Mother and Siſter, and made his Siſters his Heirs?

(l) Epiſtle prefixed to the Tranſlation of Perſius by the Jeſuit Tarteron.

(m) Lucanus adeo mirabatur ſcripta Flacci, ut vix retineret ſe illo recitante à clamore quin illa eſſe vera poëmata diceret. Sueton. in vit. Perſii.

(n) Epiſtle prefixed to the New Tranſlation of Perſius and Juvenal by Father Tarteron.

(o) Pietatis erga matrem & ſororem & amitam exemplo ſufficientis. Sueton. in vita Perſii.

(p) Pater ejus Flaccus pupillum reliquit moriens, annorum fere ſex. Fulvia Siſennia mater nupſit poſtea Fuſio, Equiti Romano: & eum quoque extulit intra paucos annos. Idem.

(D) Did ſo plainly hint at Nero.] He made uſe of theſe Words in his Firſt Satyr;

Auriculas aſini Mida rex habet.

Cornutus adviſed him to change them into theſe:

Auriculas aſini quis non habet? (a)

If Cornutus thought that Nero was too plainly hinted at by theſe Words, he did wiſely to uſe that Precaution, tho', perhaps, that Emperor was ſtill in the firſt Years of his Reign, wherein he ſhewed himſelf a good Prince. But how comes it that Cornutus made no Alteration in the four Verſes inſerted in the ſame Satyr, and taken from a Tragedy of Nero? Was it a dangerous thing to ſay King Midas has an Aſſe's Ears, whilſt his Verſes might be propoſed as a Model of ridiculous Poetry without any danger? I find ſome Difficulty in it, and perhaps theſe four Verſes, Torva (b) Mimalloneis implerunt cornua bombis,

Et raptum vitulo caput allatura ſuperbo
Baſſaris, & Lyncem Mænas flexura corymbis Evion ingeminat: reparabilis adſonat Echo.

were at moſt but an indirect and obſcure Raillery; for if Nero had been the Author of thoſe Verſes, how could any Body be ſo bold, as to ſet 'em down Word for Word to laugh at them, ſince it was thought neceſſary to mend thoſe other Words, Auriculas aſini Mida rex habet? This is a very ſtrange Diſparity; a great Cowardice on the one hand, and a great Raſhneſs on the other. But I have more Scruples ſtill about it. Methinks Cornutus ſpoils the Thought of his Friend without any neceſſity, his Fear ſeems to me to be ill grounded. Perſius being told that it was dangerous to cenſure the Faults of other Men, and that he ſhould not ſo much as ſpeak of them to a Pit, anſwers, that he will at leaſt tell his Book buried in the Ground what he has ſeen, viz. That King Midas had an Aſſe's Ears?

Men' mutire nefas, nec clam nec cum ſcrobe? nuſquam.
Heic tamen infodiam. Vidi, vidi ipſe, libelle,
Auriculas Aſini Mida rex habet.

It is a manifeſt Alluſion to the Hiſtory (c) of Midas's Barber, which was very well known to Nero. It was not therefore very likely that he ſhould take it ill, that any one ſhould faithfully relate the beſt Paſſage of that Hiſtory, Auriculas aſini Mida rex habet. If you change thoſe Words into theſe, Auriculas aſini quis non habet; it is no more the Barber's Text, but a looſe Imitation of it. If I ſhould be told, that it is better to leſſen the Beauty of a Thought, than to exaſperate a Tyrant, I would anſwer as I did before, Why don't you take off the four Verſes; you ought to force the Author to blot 'em out, not only if they are borrowed from a Poem of Nero, but alſo if they only contain ſome of his Phraſes. In effect, it cannot be doubted but that Malherbe would have been offended at theſe Verſes of Mr. Deſpreaux, even if he had not been named in them:

Irai-je (d) dans une ode en phraſes de Malherbe,
Troubler dans ſes roſeaux le Danube ſuperbe,
Delivrer de Sion le peuple gemiſſant,
Faire trembler Memphis & palir le Croiſſant,
En paſſant du Jourdain les ondes allarmées
Cueillir mal à propos les palmes Idumées?

Mr. Deſpreaux names no Body when he ſays:

Tout (e) chantre ne peut pas ſur le ton d'un Orphée,
Entonner en grands vers la diſcorde étouffée:
Peindre Bellone en feu tonnant de toutes parts,
Et le Belge effrayé fuyant ſur ſes remparts.

Yet

(a) Suet. in vita Perſii.

(b) Perſ. ſat. 1. v. 99.

(c) Secedit humumque Effodit, & domini quales aſpexerit aures Voce refert parvæ terræque immurmurat hauſtæ. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 11. v. 186.

(d) Deſpreaux Sat. 9.

(e) Id. ib.

ſome of his Words *. He died (E) being twenty eight Years of Age. His Pater-

Yet can any Body doubt but that it may raiſe the Indignation of the Authors of thoſe Terms? Therefore it ſeems to me that the Torva Mimalloneis, &c. can neither be a Fragment of Nero's Poems, nor a Parody or an Imitation of his Verſes: for once more if he would have been diſpleaſed with the Auriculas aſini Mida rex habet, which was an old Hiſtory, how could it be expected that he ſhould patiently bear ridiculous Rhapſodies made up of his own Expreſſions? Wherefore, with the old Scholiaſt's Leave, I will not ſubſcribe to theſe Words of Mr. Deſpreaux till my Scruples be removed: Let us examine Perſius, ſays he (f), who wrote under Nero's Reign. He does not only rail at the Poets of his time, but alſo ridicules the Verſes of Nero himſelf. For every Body knows, and the whole Court of Nero knew it, that thoſe four Verſes, Torva Mimalloneis, &c. which Perſius does ſo ſharply reflect upon, were ſome of Nero's Verſes. Yet we don't find that Nero, as Cruel as he was, cauſed Perſius to be puniſhed for it; and that Tyrant, though an Enemy to Reaſon, and very fond of his Works, as it is well known, was ſo reaſonable as not to be offended at it, and did not think that upon ſuch an occaſion the Emperor ſhould concern himſelf for the Poet. I have done with that Scruple. Caſaubon pretends, that the four Verſes in Queſtion, were part of a (g) Tragedy intitled (h) Bacchæ, and to prove that Nero had compoſed ſuch a Piece, he quotes Dion Caſſius, who only ſays, that Nero played the Part of a Muſician when that Tragedy was acted. But is this a Proof that he was the Author of it? Beſides, Hexameter Verſes, I think, were not uſed in Tragedies; but the four Verſes in queſtion are Hexameter. If that Learned Commentator had compared his Opinion about Torva Mimalloneis with his Preface on the 4th Satyr, I doubt he would not have perſiſted in that Opinion. In effect, he ſays in that Preface, that the chief Deſign of Perſius in his 4th Satyr was to cenſure the Conduct of Nero; and that to avoid bringing himſelf into Trouble, he ſo diſguiſed his Deſign, that he made uſe of no ſtroke hinting at that Prince, and contrived the Matter ſo as to be able to come off, in caſe he ſhould be accuſed of aiming at the Government. Caſaubon obſerves alſo, that this Satyr was compoſed before Nero had ſhewn all his ill-nature. Cujus (ſatiræ quartæ) etſi præcipuus erat Scopus in Neronem invehi, atque ipſum ſatirico ſale defricare . . . . ſic tamen poëta in hoc argumento indignationi ſuæ habenas laxavit, ut neque palam neque plenis velis in flagitioſiſſimum principem inveheretur, verum tectè & longè mollius quam vel natura ipſius ferebat, vel Neronis flagitia ac ſcelera merebantur. Nos autem putamus tum ſcriptam eſſe hanc ſatiram cum nondum totus innotuerat Nero, cujus principium laude digna habuit multa. . . . . . Probè vero norat Perſius cum ad hanc ſatiram ſcribendam ſe accingeret, quantam rem & quàm periculoſam moliretur. Quamobrem conſilio prudentiſſimo hoc argumentum Platonis imitatione ſibi tractandum cenſuit, non ſolum nominibus inde petitis, ſed etiam ſententia propemodum univerſa; ut ſi quis forte Corycæus aut Cercops nomen ipſius deferret, probabili excuſatione poſſet factum ſuum defendere quaſi exercendi tantum ſtili cauſa petitum è libris ſummi philoſophi argumentum latinis verſibus tentaſſet complecti. Quare etiam ab omnibus illum videmus abſtinuiſſe, quæ Neronis perſonam propriè erant denotatura. Is is not a ſtrange thing, that a Man who was of that Opinion, ſhould believe that Perſius made bold to ridicule Nero's Verſes, and quoted them Word for Word without any diſguiſe? Perhaps it will be ſaid, that Nero was not much concerned for his Quality of Poet: but one muſt give good Proofs of it or not ſay ſo; for every Body (i) is commonly fond of his Poetry. The Crown and Scepter cure not a Man of that Fault; and we know that Nero was more ſenſibly affected (k) with the Cenſure of his Muſick, than with that of his Crimes. Which is a Reaſon to make one believe, that as a Poet he could not bear to be reflected upon. Did he not baniſh Cornutus, and (l) was he not like to put him to Death, for having had the boldneſs to ſay, that Nero ſhould make too many Verſes, if he compoſed four hundred Books of 'em, and that the Example of Chryſippus ſhould not be alledged in the caſe, ſeeing the Books of that Philoſopher were uſeful to Humane Life? Didn't he grow Jealous of the Poet Lucan, and did not he forbid him (m) to make any Verſes? Lucanum propria cauſſa accendebant, quod famam carminum ejus premebat Nero, prohibueratque oſtentare, vanus adſimulatione (n). Lucan was ſo exaſperated at it, that he joyned with the Conſpirators who endeavoured to kill that Prince.

It would be an endleſs thing to quote all the Authors (o) who believe that the four Verſes ridiculed by Perſius, were Nero's. I ſhall only cite the Notes which have been added to the new Tranſlation of Petronius. "(p) It has been lawful at all times to criticize ſorry Books, when they are publiſhed. The Defects of the Mind may be cenſured every where, and that Liberty is as ancient as the World. The Torva, &c. which we read in Juvenal (q), ſhews, that Nero himſelf, as Cruel as he was, was not offended at it, and never thought of treating as Enemies to the State, thoſe who criticized his Works: he was only out of Humour with thoſe who made Verſes better than he."

Note, That the Life of Perſius written (a) by Suetonius, as 'tis thought, does not tell us that the Torva Mimalloneis had any Relation to Nero. It alledges no other Example of the Liberty that Poet took to criticize him, than the Verſe wherein Mida Rex was to be found, which Cornutus adviſed him to alter. We have therefore but one Witneſs for the Torva Mimalloneis, viz. The Scholiaſt upon Perſius. An Engliſh Author, who made good Notes upon the Satyrs of that Poet, does not ſay poſitively, as ſo many others do, that Nero was the Author of the four Verſes in queſtion: Sive a Nerone, ſays he (b), ſive ab alio quopiam nobili Romano compoſita. Mr. Marais has acquainted me that there is ſuch a Paſſage in the Engliſh Commentator, and that Mr. Geffrier, who publiſhed a French Tranſlation or a Paraphraſe of Perſius at Paris in 1658, ſays thoſe four Verſes were Nero's.

(E) Being twenty eight Years of Age.] Which appears from the Conſulſhips of his Death and Birth. He was born Fabio Perſico, L. Vitellio Coſſ. the 4th of December, and he died Rubrio Mario, Aſinio Gallo Coſſ. the 24th of November. There being but 28 Years between theſe two Conſulſhips, it follows that Perſius lived 28 Years, within ſome Days. Therefore the Author of his Life made a very wrong reckoning, when after he had fixed the Day and Year of his Death and Birth with ſo much preciſion, he placed his Death in the 30th Year of his Age. St. Jerome's Miſtake is not ſo great, but he has not been exact enough. He ſays that Perſius was born in the 2d Year of the 203d Olympiad, and died in the 29th Year of his Life, and the 2d of the 210th Olympiad. Which cannot be true, but by ſaying that he was born in the firſt Months of the Year, and died ſome Months later: but beſides that St. Jerome makes no ſuch Diſtinction, we have ſeen that Perſius was born in December, and died in November. I am more ſurprized at Scaliger's approving St. Jerome's Supputation, than at St. Jerome's Miſtake. Scaliger ſays, that Father was in the right to reckon 29 Years from the Number 2050 to the Number 2078. He finds alſo 29 Years between the two above mentioned Conſulſhips, but he had done better to find but 28. The firſt of thoſe Conſulſhips falls upon the Year of Chriſt 34, the 20th of Tiberius, and the 786th of Rome; the other falls upon the Year of Chriſt 62, the 8th of Nero, and the 814th of Rome, according to Calviſius's Chronology. Moreri is not at all exact in this Point. He places the Birth of Perſius at the end of the 32 Year of Chriſt, and his Death when he was 29 Years of Age, in the 9th of Nero's Reign, and the 62d of Chriſt. To ſay this with any ſhew of Reaſon, he ſhould have added, that he died in the beginning of the 62 Year of the Chriſtian Æra; but then it had been falſe, ſince he died on the 24th of November. It is therefore certain, according to Moreri's Supputation, that when Perſius died he was near 30 Years old. Beſides, according to Moreri, the 32d Year of Chriſt anſwers the 18th of (c) Tiberius; but it is certain that there are 31 Years from the 18th of Tiberius to the 9th of Nero: ſo that it would follow that Perſius died being 31 Years of Age. The Edition of this Country places his Death in the Year of Chriſt 26. That Miſtake comes from a tranſpoſition of Numbers, which is but too common among Printers. Auguſtin Oldoini has committed ſome Childiſh Faults in his Supputation about the Life of Perſius.

---

* Taken from his Life written by Suetonius, as 'tis thought.

(f) Id. Diſcours ſur la Satyre.

(g) Hinc intelligimus Bacchas Neronis ejuſdem argumenti fuiſſe cum Bacchis Euripidis. Caſaub. in 1. Sat. Perſii p. 142.

(h) Sunt autem Neronis verſus ex ejus Bacchis, cujus carminis etiam Dio nominatim facit mentionem Id. ib. p. 140. Vide etiam p. 134.

(i) Scripſit ſummo vir ingenio & ſcientia ſingulari Philoſophus artifices omnes opus ſuum adamare, Poetas tamen præcipue. Menag. Ep. dedic. Carmin.

(k) Nihil æque doluit, quam ut malum ſe citharœdum increpitum. Sueton. in Nerone. c. 41.

(l) Xiphil. in Nerone.

(m) Id. ib. & Tacit. Ann. l. 15. c. 49.

(n) Tacit. ib.

(o) You will find one mentioned in the Rem. (G).

(p) Pag. 23. tom. 1. of the Dutch edit 1694.

(q) He ſhould have ſaid Perſius.

(a) It is at the end of Suetonius's Treatiſe de Claris Oratoribus.

(b) Joan. Bond. in Perſ. Sat. 1. p. m. 24.

(c) He ſays in the Article of Tiberius that that Emperor died in the 23d Year of his Reign, and the 37th of Chriſt.

Panegyriſts may (F) ſay what they will, it is certain that he wrote harſhly and obſcurely. He might be called (G) the Lycophron of the Latins. Scaliger the Father, and many other excellent Criticks † ſpeak very ill of him. Perhaps they run into an Extreme, which is leſs tolerable than if they had a great Eſteem for that Poet. Note, that the Hardneſs of the Time wherein he lived (GΔ) can be no Excuſe for the fier. He (d) ſays he was born in the Year of Rome 785, and died being 28 Years of Age, under the 8th Year of Nero's Empire. He pretends that the Time of his Birth anſwers the 202d Olympiad, and the 22d Year of Tiberius's Reign. Conſult Calviſius, and you'll ſee that the 1ſt Year of the 202d Olympiad is the 782th Year of Rome, and that the 8th Year of Nero is the 815 of Rome, and that there are but 28 Years between the 22d of Tiberius and the 8th of Nero.

Mr. Marais has acquainted me in a Letter, that Mr. Geſner places the Death of Perſius in the 203d Olympiad, in the Year 783 of Rome, and in the 22d of Tiberius's Empire.

(F) His Panegyriſts.] I reckon Iſaac Caſaubon (e) amongſt 'em. I grant that the Praiſes he beſtows upon Perſius, are not ſo great as thoſe of Quintilian and Martial, for he intermixes them with ſome Cenſures; but after all he acknowledges that Perſius was a Man of great Merit and Parts, and makes himſelf his Champion againſt the Great Julius Scaliger, tho' at the ſame time he humbles himſelf with great reſpect at the Feet of that terrible Antagoniſt. I ſhall only mention that part of the Diſpute, which concerns the Obſcurity of our Poet. Caſaubon wonders that Scaliger ſpoke of it more than once, conſidering that nothing was obſcure to him; but it ſeems to me that he falls into the Sophiſm, which Logicians call Ignorationem Elenchi, and which is not leſs common amongſt Criticks than amongſt Philoſophers. Scaliger pretended not that Perſius was obſcure to him; on the contrary (f) he declares, that he underſtood him from the beginning to the end: he only ſays, that Poet was formerly placed in the number of things that were unknown, and charges him with Impertinency, for having Written to be read, and not to be underſtood. He ſeems to inſult over him, becauſe the Interpreters have fruſtrated his Expectation, by removing the Darkneſs he had deſignedly ſpread over all his Writings, to be eternally buried in it, and eternally admired by Fools.

Omnia (g) enim ſtolidi magis admirantur amantque
Inverſis quæ ſub verbis latitantia cernunt.

The Encomiums which Quintilian and Martial beſtow upon him, put me in mind of thoſe which are beſtowed upon two of our French Poets. (h) "It "is not the Quantity of a Man's Works that makes "him Immortal. Two Sheets of Paper have tranſmitted Perſius to us: The Abbot de Cериſi will "live longer only by his Metamorphoſis of Phillis's "Eyes into Stars, than many Authors who take up "a great deal of room in our Libraries, and the "Temple (i) of Death will more eaſily break thro' "the rigour of Time, than the ſix hundred Volumes of Biſhop du Bellay.„ Which does pretty well agree with theſe two Latin Verſes;

Sæpius (k) in libro memoratur Perſius uno, Quam levis in tota Marſus Amazonide;

and with theſe Words of Quintilian, (l) Multum & veræ gloriæ quamvis uno libro Perſius meruit.

(G) The Lycophron of the Latins.] I have read ſomewhere (m), that the Senſe of the troubleſome Volumes of the Thalmudiſts "is ſo unknown to us, "out of Envy to their Succeſſors, that their Books "might be cut and tore with better reaſon than "the Satyrs of Perſius were by a Father of the "Church, who ſaid, that ſince he would not be "underſtood by the Out-ſide, as other Writers are, "he would ſee whether he was more intelligible in "the In-ſide.„ Here is another Paſſage wherein Lycophron and Perſius are coupled together. (n) "For my part I think that Trithemius his Book "ſhould be Sawn into two, as ſome Body Sawed "formerly Lycophron's Caſſandra, to ſee what there "was in the In-ſide, ſince nothing could be known "of it by the Out-ſide. Or, as it is alſo reported "of St. Jerome, that he did the like with the Satyrs of Perſius, whoſe Enigms and Obſcurities "being not able to underſtand, intellecturis (o) ignibus ille dedit.„ I would have this laſt Story and the others alſo, to be well warranted; for I ſee that Caſaubon relies upon St. Jerome's Teſtimony, to refute thoſe who cenſure Perſius (p).

Here is another Obſervation which Mr. Marais has imparted to me. The Elogy of John Bond's Commentary is to be found in a place where no Body would look for it; viz. in the Preface (q) to the Aloiſiæ Sigeæ Toletanæ Satyra Sotadica. The Words which contain that Elogy, contain alſo a Deſcription of Perſius's Obſcurity; Gratulerie tibi, Aule Perſi, Obvolviſti te ipſe cæca nocte, videri nolebas, altam verſibus & verſuum ſenſibus profudiſti caliginem. Nolebas intelligi: forte & tu te non intelligebas. Non fecerant ad te nox & caligo ut exturbaret; Joannes Bond venit, vidit, diſcuſſit noctem & caliginem. Perſpectum id omne habet, ut tute ſuperis, quod latet arcanâ non enarrabile fibrâ. Eripuit tibi te neganti conſpectum. Latebas intra te, ne te curioſa & erudita inveniret ſagacitas. Eras ipſe involucrum tibi. Quis vero fuit furor ille tuus! That Commentary of John Bond upon Perſius was printed a Year after the Death of the Author, by the Care of Roger Prowſe his Son-in-Law. I have the London Edition of 1614. If it be the firſt, as I think it is, we may know that John Bond died in the Year 1613. The Diarium of Mr. Witte ſays nothing of it.

(GΔ) Can be no excuſe for the obſcurity of his Stile.] I am ſorry I cannot be of the opinion of the Author, who has afforded me two Paſſages, the reading whereof is ſo agreeable. "I know very "well, ſays he, that Perſius is not at firſt very intelligible, and that he might have expreſt himſelf more clearly; but how could he do it under "Nero's Reign? He was a terrible Man, and could "not bear a Jeſt; and becauſe he had more reaſon "than any Body elſe to think he was concerned "in the ſharpeſt and moſt ingenious part of a Satyr, if there had been the leaſt colour for it, I "am not ſurprized to ſee that Perſius affected to be "Enigmatical and Myſterious. Therefore when Julius Scaliger called him Doctus Febricitans, 'tis likely he did not mind what he ſaid; and I am ſure "this proud and terrible Critick would have been "ſeized with a violent ſhivering, at the meer ſight "of Nero. Nay, I admire the Boldneſs of Perſius "in venturing once to ridicule that Emperor; for "theſe Words Auriculas aſini Mida Rex habet, were "put in on purpoſe for him. Perſius had been "undone, if the wiſe and diſcreet Cornutus had "not ſuppreſt the proper Name, and ſubſtituted in "the room of it a Word which concerns all Mankind. Nay, I cannot apprehend how that Philoſopher, who was baniſhed ſince by the Tyrant, "becauſe he could not in Conſcience approve the "Deſign of his Poem, ſuffered his Diſciple to expoſe himſelf, by producing with a malicious "deſign, the Torva Mimalloneis, &c. as a Model "of moſt excellent Verſes.„ Here are two Obſervations upon that Paſſage.

I. It is evident to any one who reads Perſius attentively, that he is Obſcure, not out of Policy, but becauſe he had ſuch a Taſte, and had given ſuch a Turn to his Genius; for if the Fear of bringing himſelf into Trouble had moved him to cover his Conceptions with a thick Cloud, he would have done it only in ſuch Matters as had ſome relation to the Life of the Tyrant. But we ſee that he twiſts his Words, and has recourſe to Alluſions and Enigmatical Figures, even when he is about to inſinuate only a Moral Maxim, the cleareſt Explication whereof could not have afforded Nero the leaſt pretence of being Angry with him. I ſhall give no Examples of it, and I refer my Readers to the very Satyrs of that Poet; they make but a little Book; every Body will be able to know in a little time whether I am in the right, or whether I am miſtaken. But if any one had rather not be at that trouble, and refer himſelf to the Judgment of a Learned Critick, he needs go no farther. Here is the Sentence. (b) Obſcuritatis hujus diverſas afferre cauſſas poſſumus, eaſque certiſſimas: in auctore ſunt aliquæ, aliæ extra illum, quædam in interpretibus. Non negabo perobſcura quædam eſſe in quarta, prima quoque: ſed poëtæ facilè ignoſco, cum cogito crudeliſſimi & [illegible] tyranni, in quem illa erant, metu, de induſtria the Obſcurity of his Stile, as ſome pretend. Some Italian (H) Genealogiſts will have it that the Falconcini of Volterra draw their Original from his Father.

---

† See the Preface of Mr. Baillet n. 1168.

(d) Athenæ Ligust. p. 80, 81.

(e) In the Prolegomena of the Commentary he publiſhed upon that Author at Paris in 8. in the year 1605. It was reinſerted in the Edition of Juvenal and Perſius in Holland 1695 in 4.

(f) Perſii ſtilus moroſus, & ille ineptus qui cum legi vellet quæ ſcripſiſſet, intelligi noluit quæ legerentur, quamquam nunc à nobis omnia intelliguntur. At fuit tempus cum inter ignota haberetur. Jul. Cæſar Scaliger Poetic. l. 6. cap. 6. p. m. 772. See alſo c. 97. of the 3d Book, p. 343.

(g) Lucret. l. 1. v. 642.

(h) Guerre des Auteurs p. 139.

(i) Mr. Habert of the French Academy is the Author of it.

(k) Mart. Epig. 29. l. 4.

(l) Quintil. l. 10. c. 1.

(m) In the 1ſt Tome of the Conferences du Bureau de Adreſſe.

(n) Vigenere, Traité des Chiffres, p. 12.

(o) Ex Ovidio Triſt. l. 4 eleg. 10.

(p) Certe aliud Quintilianus judicabat cum vera laude dignum pronunciaret, aliud Hieronymus cum diſertiſſimum fatuicum vocaret. Caſaub. ub. ſup.

(q) The Preface of my Edit. of Aloiſiæ, &c. Satyra Sotadica does not contain what Mr. Marais found in his.

(a) Epiſtle before the Tranſlation of Father Tarteron.

(b) Caſaub. in prolegomenis ad Perſ. fol. m. c. ij.

PERSONA (Chriſtopher) a Roman by Birth, and † Prior of the Convent of Saint ‡ Balbina, of the Order α of the Gulielmites, upon Mount Aventine, was a conſiderable Man in the XV. Century, for his Skill in the Greek Tongue. 'Tis ſaid that * he went into Greece to learn it. He tranſlated Agathias and ſome (A) other Authors into Latin. We are told ‡ that he died of the Plague in the Year 1486. Voſſius ſpeaks of him (B) with the greateſt Contempt. Yet ſome ſtrive who ſhall have him; the Auguſtins will have him to be one of their Order; but the Servites claim him, and place him in the Catalogue of their Authors §.

PETAVIUS (Dionyſius), in French, Petau, born at Orleans in the Year 1583, entred into the Society of the Jeſuits in the Year 1605. He taught Rhetorick in their College at Paris, and then Divinity ‡ with an extraordinary Capacity. He was one of the moſt Learned Men in Europe. I ſhall not give the Character of his vaſt and deep Learning, for it may be found in a new β Book ſold by all the Bookſellers. One may conſult alſo γ the Funeral Oration of that Jeſuit, written in Latin by Henricus Valeſius, and read in the δ Gallia Orientalis a large Collection of ſeveral things which have been ſaid of him, with the Titles of moſt of his Works, and the Time wherein they were Printed. The Titles and Dates of moſt of them are alſo to be found in Moreri's Dictionary. Mr. Baillet has collected Abundance of Things ſtria atramenti ſepiarum aliquid eſſe affuſum : neque dubito ſapientiſſimum præceptorum Cornutum ſcribenti adſuiſſe, qui vetus verbum crebro illi inſuſurraret, Σκότισον . . . . . Cum ſcribit idem [illegible], verecundiæ virginalis Parthenium noſtrum fuiſſe : aliud agens cauſſam nos docet cur ille locus tenebricoſè fuerit tractatus, cui vix alius toto libro obſcuritate par, obſcœnitate ſimilis nullus. [illegible] illum dico è quarta. At ſi unctus ceſſes. Etiam illud ultro concedimus, nonnulla Perſii loca tropis parum uſitatis & audacioribus eſſe offuſcata, hujus quoque non culpam, ſed cauſſam, ita enim dicere æquius, ingenio poëtæ aſſignamus : quod cum eſſet magnum, magna ſectabatur. . . . . . (c) Fuit præterea Flaccus noſter à [illegible] non, ſed amans brevitatis : quæ res obſcuritatem eſt ubi illum reddit. Caſaubon aſcribes the Obſcurity of Perſius to four Cauſes. 1. He was afraid of Nero. 2. He was Modeſt. 3. He had a great Genius. 4. He loved Brevity. Why ſhould theſe four Cauſes be reduced to the firſt, in the Preface of the New Tranſlation?

II. This Author having ſaid, that Perſius expreſt himſelf obſcurely, becauſe he was afraid of Nero, ſhould not ſuppoſe that the Torva Mimalloneis, &c. were ſome Verſes of that Prince. It is not enough to ſay, that one cannot apprehend how Cornutus permitted it; we muſt ſay poſitively that he would not have conſented to it, and that Perſius wanted no Corrector. Otherwiſe this will be a monſtrous Diſparity, which ſeems to ſurpaſs all the Caprices and Extravagances of the Minds of Men.

(H) Some Italian Genealogiſts.] Francis Stelluti makes uſe of this Reaſon (d) to prove that Perſius was born at Volterra. 'Tis thought, ſays he, by virtue of a Tradition, that the Falconcini came from Flaccus, a Roman Knight, who was Perſius's Father; which is ſo much the more likely, becauſe the Name of Perſius was preſerved in that Family, and conſtantly appeared in it for above theſe three hundred Years. But it is anſwered that Perſius had no Brother, nor Children; that the Surname of Flaccus was to be found in many Cities of Italy, and that the noble and illuſtrious Family of Perſius has been in Genoa above four hundred Years. See the above-mention'd Diſſertation of Gaſparo Maſſa. Hippolitus Landinelli (e) ſays, that they ſhew at Volterra a Houſe which is ſuppoſed to be that of Perſius.

(A) And ſome other Authors.] He tranſlated into Latin the Hiſtory of the Goths written by Procopius; but thoſe who ſay, as well as Paulus (f) Jovius, that he did alſo tranſlate the Hiſtory which the ſame Procopius wrote concerning the War of the Perſians, and that of the Vandals, are miſtaken. What he publiſhed of Procopius ſhewed the Impoſture (g) of Leonardus Aretinus, which I have mentioned in another place. He made ſeveral other Tranſlations, he tranſlated Origen's Books (i) againſt Celſus, 25 Homilies of St. Chryſoſtom, ſome Treatiſes of Athanaſius, and ſome Treatiſes of Theophylactus. Thoſe Tranſlations are not very good; but Paulus Jovius, and ſo many other Authors, who ſpeak of him, cannot be excuſed for ſaying nothing of them. Mr. du Pin is too much a Gentleman to take it ill that I ſhould ſay, there is ſome Obſcurity in theſe Words of his 1ſt Volume. (k) The Treatiſe of Origen againſt Celſus is divided into 8 Books, which were publiſhed in Greek a great while ago, with the Tranſlation of Gelenius, and ſome Notes of Eſchelius, and of one Chriſtopher Perſona, printed at Rome in 1471, and ſince very correctly in England in the Year 1658. I obſerve 1. that the Change of Hoeſchelius into Eſchelius may deceive a Reader; he would be apt to believe that there was a Writer named Eſchelius, different from the Learned Man of Ausburg, to whom the Publick is beholden for many Greek Books. 2. Mr. du Pin gives us clearly to underſtand that Perſona made no Tranſlation of that Book of Origen, but only ſome Notes to explain it. But Geſnerus (l) tells us, that Perſona dedicated to Sixtus IV. his Latin Verſion of the Eight Books of Origen againſt Celſus. 3. The Meaning of Mr. du Pin's Words is, that thoſe Books were printed at Rome in 1471, in Greek, with Gelenius's Tranſlation, and ſome Notes of Eſchelius and Perſona. Which ought not to be ſaid, for Gelenius lived in the XVI. Century, and the Greek Edition with Gelenius's Tranſlation came out only in 1605. It was a Preſent of Hoeſchelius.

I ſhall ſet down here a good Supplement which Mr. Simon affords me. The Printers have committed two great Miſtakes in it, by putting the Year 1581 inſtead of the Year 1481 (m), and Suſchelius inſtead of Hoeſchelius. " (n) We learn from Theodorus Gaza, " (1) that Pope Nicolas V. ſent a Man on purpoſe to " Conſtantinople, to fetch the Books which he writ " againſt Celſus, and that as ſoon as he receiv'd " 'em, he promiſed a good Reward to any one that " would Tranſlate them into Latin. But the Pope " being dead, they were not printed at Rome in " Latin only, but in the Year 1581, under Sixtus " IV. Gaza who expected not the ſame Reward " from Sixtus, as from his Predeceſſor, ingaged " Chriſtopher Perſona, Prior of St. Balbina, to tran" ſlate 'em into Latin, and we have had no other " Tranſlation of 'em till Suſchelius publiſhed them " in Greek and Latin at Ausburg, upon ſome other " Greek MSS. which he found in ſome Libraries of " Germany. Laſtly, Spencer an Engliſh Proteſtant, " publiſhed a very fine Edition of them at Cambridge in 1658, which does not differ from that " of Ausburg, becauſe he had no Greek MSS. He " was contented to correct the Tranſlation in ſome " places, and to add ſome new Notes to it. "

(B) Voſſius ſpeaks of him with the greateſt contempt.] The Publication of Procopius's Greek, ſays he, was a Preſent ſo much the more conſiderable, becauſe they had at that Time but ſome ſorry Tranſlations of it. He adds, that the moſt impertinent Chriſtopher Perſona omitted many things, and publiſhed his Dreams, rather than the Thoughts of that Hiſtorian. (a) Eſtque hoc egregii viri (Davidis Heſchœlii) beneficium eo majus, quod Latini interpretes toties abeant à Græcis : imprimis ineptiſſimus ille Chriſtophorus Perſona quatuor rerum Gothicarum libros vertit; ſi vertiſſe, & non pervertiſſe dici is debet, qui multa adeo omittit, & in iis, quæ refert, toties nobis ſua narrat ſomnia. I have obſerved in another Place a Miſtake of Voſſius, which Sandius his Critick took no notice of. Voſſius ſays (c), that Leonardus Aretinus having aſcribed to himſelf a Book of Procopius, † Jov. Elog. c. 119.

---

‡ Geſner. in his Bibliotheca ſays St. Albina.

α Id. ib.

* Konig. Biblioth. Vet. & nova.

§ Id. ib.

‡ Baillet Jugemens tom. 3. n. 812.

‡ Proſper. Mandoſius Biblioth. Romana cent. 1. n. [illegible] p. 57.

* Alegambe. Bibl. Scriptor. Societ. p. 95.

β The Elogies of Illuſtrious Men by Perrault, tom. 1. p. 63. & ſeq. of the Dutch edit. 1698.

γ It is in the Lives of Illuſtrious Men collected by William Bats, and printed in London 1681.

δ P. 217. & ſeq.

(c) Id. ib. fol. c. iij.

(d) The Life of Perſius before the Italian Paraphraſe on the ſame Poet.

(e) Nell' Origine di Luni c. 11. ap. Mich. Juſtiniani Scritt. Liguri p. 128.

(f) Jov. Elog. c. 9.

(g) Id. ib. & c. 116.

(i) Geſn. Biblioth.

(k) Du Pin, Bibl. of Eccleſ. Writers tom. 1. p. 133. of the Dutch Edit.

(l) Geſn. Biblioth. fol. 167. verſo.

(m) I ſuppoſe Mr. Simon had written 1481, and not as Mr. du Pin did 1471.

(n) Simon, choice Letters, p. 94. Edit. 1700.

(1) Theod. Gaza Epiſt. ad Chriſtoph. Perſon.

(a) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Gr. p. 259, 270. See alſo de Arte Hiſt. p. 94.

(c) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. p. 558.

Things which concern that Great Author. See the 3d Volume of his Jugemens des Savans, cap. 513, and the 4th Volume, cap. 951, and the 5th Volume about the Poets, cap. 1474. It is enough for me to have directed the Reader to those Books. I shall only add 1. that Petavius died at Paris ‡ on the 11th of December * 1652, thirteen Weeks after Salmasius (A) his Antagonist. 2. That without thinking on't, and against his Intention, he did (B) a great Service to the Socinians. 3. That it it moved Persons to translate Agathias. He should have said, That it moved him to translate that Book of Procopius into Latin. (d) Procopium Latine loquentem fecit, non dubie in Leonardum Aretinum conflata invidia, qui suppresso Græci authoris nomine Gothicum bellum tanquam è variis scriptoribus decerptum pro suo Juliano Cæsarino Cardinali qui ad Varnam ab Amurathe cæsus periit, nullo pudore nuncuparat. Vossius, who quotes that Passage, has thereby given himself up to his Criticks.

(A) After Salmasius his Antagonist.] They had a very long and very violent Dispute: it had not been possible to couple two better Wrestlers together. 'Tis pity they did not write with more moderation. Their first Quarrel began, if I am not mistaken, a little after Salmasius had published his Commentary upon Tertullian's Treatise de Pallio, in the Year 1622. Petavius criticized that Commentary under the false Name of Antonius Kercoëtius Aremoricus (e). He was answered in a Book printed (f) in the Year 1622, and intitled Confutatio animadversorum Antonii Kercoëtii ad Claudii Salmasii notas in Tertullianum de pallio. Auctore Francisco Franco J. C. He replied in a Book divided into three Parts, the first whereof was printed at Paris in the Year 1622; and the other two one after another the next Year in the same City. The first is intitled Antonii Kerkoëtii Aremorici Mastigophorus primus, sive elenchus confutationis quam Claudius Salmasius sub ementito nomine animadversis Kerkoëtianis opposuit. The second, Antonii Kerkoëtii Aremorici Mastigophorus secundus, sive elenchi confutationis .... pars secunda; and the Third, Antonii Kerkoëtii Aremorici Mastigophorus tertius, sive elenchi confutationis ..... pars tertia. I don't know whether his Reply was refuted, but I know that ever since that first Irruption, he never ceased to look for his Adversary, and to fight him where-ever he found him. Those who know Salmasius's Temper, do easily fancy that he defended himself, and attackt his Adversary in his turn. He made some very fine Latin Verses, which Menagius inserted in one of his Books, as I have observed in another Place, and which run upon a thing which has been said of Apes. Scaliger used the same Comparison, not only against Lydiat, but also against Scioppius. Scioppius, says he (i), scripsit adversus Jesuitas: he goes up too high, and makes himself as ridiculous as an Ape, who the higher he goes, the more he shews his Back-side. The Author of the Apology for Stephen Pasquier against Garasse, made use of the Latin Verses of Salmasius without naming him; he made a kind of a Paraphrase upon them, and alledged some of 'em as they are. Here is the Passage: (k) "They tell a pleasant Story "of a Monkey, which I may very well apply to "Garasse's Humour and Actions, which are meer "Apish Tricks. One Day an old Monkey without "Hair, but stuffed with Malice in the In-side, posted up Bills in all the Cross-Streets of the Commonwealth of Apes and Baboons, to give notice "that whoever desired to see a fine Show, should "come to a certain Place, at a certain Hour, and "that he would afford them good Sport. The Day "being come, every one makes himself ready, great "and little Monkeys, Apes and Baboons come from "all Parts in Crowds to the appointed Place: Such "a Concourse was never seen before.

" Conveniunt omnes, Cercopitheci, Simiæ,
" Clurinæ pecudes, omne genus Cercopium:
" Quæ sunt caudatæ, quæ sine caudis ambulant,
" Similes hominibus bestiæ turpissimæ.
" Erat inter illos ingens expectatio:
" Quidnam editurus, & miri novi foret,
" Tam grandium Minator ille SIMIUS.

"Every one takes his Place, and they staid a great "while for the Farce-Player; at last, after he had "kept 'em at a Bay a matter of four or five Hours, "he comes, and gets up a Tree, which was to "serve him instead of a Stage, he skips from "Bough to Bough, comes down, goes up again, "gets up to the top of the Tree, comes down again; and lastly, after so many turns, he stops "and shews his Back-side to the Assembly, to ridicule, by such an Action, those who trusted the "Promises of a Monkey. Poggius says, that a "certain Jack-Pudding plaid the same Trick in "the City of Bologna, but Garasse affords us a new "Example of it.... The Story mention'd by Poggius was applied to Laurentius Valla, and perhaps Menagius would have alledged it, if he had remembered it. Here is the Story with its Application: (l) Persimilis est Valla noster homini ridiculo: qui cum aliquando se ex quadam turri volaturum certo die profiteretur: & populus ad id spectaculum convenisset: homines Suspensos variis alarum ostentationibus ad vesperam usque detinuit. Deinde omnibus volatum cupide expectantibus: populo culum ostendit. Ita Laurentius noster post multas atque ingentes verborum pollicitationes; post tantam expectationem promissorum: tandem non quidem culum, ut ille, sed volantis cerebri insaniam, & pergrandem ignorantiæ supellectilem ostendit.

It cannot be denied that Petavius shewed too much Passion and Haughtiness, not only against Salmasius, but also against Scaliger and many others. It was well done to insert a Parenthesis upon that Subject, in the Article of that Jesuit, in the Dutch Edition of Moreri. I wonder Mr. Perrault chose rather to Paraphrase a Passage out of Henr. Valesius's Harangue, than suppress it. (m) Tanta ejus viri (Scaligeri) auctoritas omnium prope præjudicio roborata Petavium nostrum à scribendo minime deterruit. Immo vero ipsum eo magis impulit, ut quæ ab illo emendatore temporum peccata fuerant, ipse in suis de doctrina temporum libris emendaret. Non quod illius viri gloriæ obtrectaret; sed ne plerique forte auctoritate Scaligeri inducti, minime discussa rei veritate, in errorem præcipites laberentur. 'Tis what Henricus Valesius says, and here are Mr. Perrault's Words: (n) That Work of Scaliger was looked upon as a Rule to which every Body was to conform. Which hindred not Petavius from undertaking the same Work, and correcting in his Book de Doctrina temporum many Faults which are to be found in Scaliger's de Emendatione temporum, which he did, observing all the Rules of Civility which Scholars ought to observe one towards another; so that without obscuring the Glory of his Predecessor, he acquired a very great one in the same Science. If you read (o) a Passage of Mr. Morus and another of Guy Patin, you will not have so good an opinion of the Civil Behaviour of Scaliger's Adversary.

(B) Without thinking on't .... he did a great service to the Socinians.] I shall transcribe a long Passage of Mr. Simon, which concerns that Subject, and contains some other things relating to Petavius. (a) "Mr. Hardy told me that Mr. de l'Aubespine had also some difference with Petavius, "and threatned him to cause some of his Notes "upon St. Epiphanius to be condemned; but I am "perswaded, that that Learned Jesuit would have "made a very good Apology for himself. If there "be any thing to blame in Petavius's Works, 'tis "especially in the second Volume of his Dogmata "Theologica, wherein he seems to favour the Arians: "It is true, that he has softened those Passages in "his Preface; but because the Body of the Book remains intire, and the Preface which is an excellent Piece came too late, he has not altogether "remedied the Harm which that Book may do at "this time, wherein the New Unitarians boast, "that Petavius has given over the Tradition to "them. I have seen some Persons here, who believe that Grotius, who kept Correspondence with "Crellius, and some other Socinians, imposed upon that Learned Jesuit; but it is not at all likely "that so understanding a Man as Petavius should "have been deceived by Grotius who was his Friend. "It is more likely that he ingenuously wrote his "own Thoughts. It would be for the honour of "the Society to continue the Dogmata Theologica of "their Brother, and to follow his Method, which "is an excellent one. It is certain, that he himself had such a Design; for I have seen the Project he made about it, whereby I knew the Course "he it has been ſaid the Jeſuits were very much diſpleaſed with his Way of ſpeaking (C) of St. Auguſtin's Hypotheſis concerning Grace. 4. That his Dogmata Theologica, which were very dear and ſcarce, have been lately reprinted † at Amſterdam, with ſeveral Treatiſes added to them.

---

‡ The Parisian Gazett. Decemb. 14. 1652. where it is observed amongst other Elogies that he was demanded by several Princes, especially by Urban VIII but that he refused that honour as much out of modesty as out of obedience to Lewis XIII. who thought it was for the good and glory of his Kingdom to keep so great a Man in it.

* And not of Novem. as Father Labbe says, Chronol. Franc. tom. 5. p. 894.

(d) Jovius Elog. cap. 115. p. 253

(e) That Critical Answer intitled Animadversorum Liber was printed at Rhenes in the Year 1622. in 8

(f) At Paris, and not at Middleburg as the Title says.

(i) Scaligerana voce Scioppius p. m. 222.

(k) Apology for Stephen Pasquier Book 1. Sect. 7. p. 93. & seq.

(l) Poggius Invect. l. 1.

(m) Henr. Valef. in orat. funebri Dionys. Petav. p. 682. collect. Batesiana.

(n) Perrault, Illustrious Men, tom. 1. p. m. 65, 66.

(o) See the new Letters against Maimbourg p. 182.

(a) Simon, choice Letters p. 12, & 13.

PETIT

“ he followed in his Studies, wherewith I ſhall perhaps acquaint you in another Letter. A Friend of mine aſſured me, that he was not accounted a great Divine amongſt the Jeſuits, and that he was often obliged to have recourſe to ſome other Fathers of his Society, when the Queſtion was about a Theological Reaſoning. Many of (a) ours ſay the ſame of Father Morin, who is really a poor Man for the Reaſoning part. But whatever may be ſaid of Petavius in his Society, I admire him in all reſpects. Can any thing be more Charming than his fine Latin Stile in ſuch thorny Subjects? I only wiſh he had not been ſo diffuſe in his Expreſſions. An Author can never be too conciſe when he treats of ſome Doctrines; he ought to avoid long Phraſes as much as he can: 'Tis what Father Sirmond excelled moſt in, who found out the Secret of explaining himſelf in few Words, and with great clearneſs. Yet he was very much inferiour to Petavius as to Learning.„ Mr. Simon is in the right to ſay, that the Preface of Petavius was not a good Remedy; for the Socinians and new Arians have, notwithſtanding, taken advantage of the Collections of that Jeſuit, about the Tradition of the three firſt Centuries. Thoſe Collections encouraged Sandius to write a Book, which vexed the Orthodox and gave them a great deal of Exerciſe. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (b) in the Abſtract of one of Dr. Bull's Books. See alſo Mr. Jurieu's Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 224, and 263. But obſerve that that Miniſter deſigning to take advantage of Petavius's Teſtimony, falſified it, and that the Biſhop of Meaux took him up for it. This I am going to prove.

(c) Laſtly the Theology of the ancient Fathers, ſays Mr. Jurieu, was ſo imperfect about the Doctrine of the Trinity, that the Jeſuit Petavius was forced to own in expreſs Words, that they gave us (1) only the firſt Lineaments of it. Here is the Biſhop of Meaux's Anſwer. “ (d) Now how can you truſt your Miniſter when he quotes ſome Paſſages? No, my Brethren, he does not read them, or he reads them curſorily; he looks for Difficulties in them, and not for Solutions, that he may thereby perplex your Minds, inſtead of inſtructing you, and he omits nothing to impoſe upon you. As when to make you believe, (2) that the Theology of the Fathers was imperfect about the Myſtery of the Trinity, he makes Petavius ſay in expreſs Words, that they gave us only the firſt Lineaments of it. But that Learned Author ſays the contrary in the Place quoted by the Miniſter, which is the Preface to the 2d Volume of his Dogmata Theologica. For he (3) undertakes to prove, that the Catholick Doctrine was always the ſame about that Subject; and in the very firſt Chapter of that Preface he ſhews, that the main and ſubſtance of that Myſtery was always very well known by Tradition; that the Fathers of the firſt Centuries agree with us in the main, in the ſubſtance, and in the thing itſelf, tho' not always in the manner of expreſſing it: Which he further proves in the ſecond (4) Chapter by the Teſtimony of St. Ignatius, St. Polycarp, and all the ancient Doctors: Laſtly, in the third (5) Chapter which the Miniſter objects to us ſpeaking of St. Juſtin, who of all the Ancients is moſt ſuſpected by Mr. Jurieu, that Learned Jeſuit ſays poſitively, that that Holy Martyr has excellently and clearly propoſed the main and ſubſtance of that Myſtery: which he proves alſo (6) of Athenagoras, Theophilus Antiochenus, and others, who all believed, as he ſays, the main and ſubſtance of that Doctrine without any ſpot; from whence he concludes, that if there are ſome Paſſages more obſcure in the Writings of thoſe Holy Men, it is becauſe having to do with Heathens and Philoſophers, they declared not with the greateſt ſubtility and Preciſion the Secret of that Myſtery in the Books which they publiſhed; and in order to gain thoſe Philoſophers, they explained it in a manner more agreeable to Platoniſm, which they had learned; as it was likewiſe practiſed for a long time after in the Catechiſms that were made to inſtruct thoſe whom they had a mind to bring over to Chriſtianity, to whom they gave only in the Beginning the firſt Strokes, or as the Miniſter renders it, the firſt Lineaments of the Myſteries: Not but that they were well known, but becauſe it was believed thoſe weak Souls could not bear the whole weight of them; ſo that it was thought fit to introduce them into ſo great a Secret with a caution ſuitable to their Weakneſs: This is what that Father ſays in expreſs Words. Your Miniſter makes him ſay the quite contrary in expreſs Words. He makes him ſay that their Theology was imperfect, becauſe he ſays that it was tempered and accommodated to the Capacity of the Ignorant, and he takes for Ignorance in the Maſters the wiſe Temperament which they made uſe of towards their Diſciples.„ The Biſhop of Meaux had ſaid before, (e) that the learned Preface of Petavius is the unravelling of all his Doctrine about that Subject. I think it is as good an unravelling as a moſt Learned Man could give; but it appears notwithſtanding, that that Learned Jeſuit contradicted himſelf, or fell into thoſe perplexing Variations, which all Writers are ſubject to, when they come to have a different Intereſt and different Motives during the courſe of their Writings. He deſigned at firſt, ingenuouſly to repreſent the Doctrine of the three firſt Centuries. He did not Diſguiſe the Opinion of the Fathers, who had falſe Notions of the Myſtery of the Three Perſons. He was contented to ſet down things as they were, and to add to them the moſt natural Explications which the Words were capable of. Whereby he acquainted the Publick, that many Fathers of the Primitive Church had publiſhed very abſurd Falſities about the Generation of the Word, and the Myſteries that are annexed to it. Which ſtrikes at the Authority of the Canons of the Council of Nice; for it might be concluded from thence, that the Article of the Trinity is not a Fundamental Doctrine, ſince thoſe who erred in that Point were ſaved notwithſtanding. The new Anti-Trinitarians could draw many Conſequences from it. Petavius was told of it, and found himſelf obliged to remedy that Evil as well as he could. He therefore made his Preface with ſuch a Deſign, having now a quite different Aim, and quite different Motives; he made it now his buſineſs to aſſert the Orthodoxy of the Fathers, he was oblig'd to give 'em ſatisfaction, in a Word, he was forced to contradict himſelf. Mr. Jurieu has undergone the ſame Trial. He wrote a Paſtoral (f) Letter, wherein he uſed his utmoſt endeavours to ruin the Foundation of the Hiſtory of the Variations. It was then neceſſary for him that the Fathers ſhould have erred in the moſt important Doctrines of the Chriſtian Faith. He therefore depreſſed them as much as he could, and enlarged upon the abſurd Notions they had of the Trinity. He minded only his preſent Intereſt, and was not able to contain himſelf. But ſome time after he had occaſion (g) to oppoſe thoſe who ſay, That the Doctrine of the Trinity is not neceſſary to Salvation, and conſequently that the Socinians ought to be tolerated. It was then neceſſary for him that the Fathers ſhould have been Orthodox; he therefore aſſerted their Orthodoxy, and made them whiter than Snow; he ſet up for their Apologiſt, and Panegyriſt, and laſtly, for the Accuſer (h) of thoſe who deſpiſed 'em, and relied upon his Example. This is to banter the Publick, and to expoſe one's ſelf to ſhame: notwithſtanding his Variations, it has been proved to him (i) that he had ſaved the Socinians againſt his Will. Compare with this the Remark C of the Article Rodon.

(C) The Jeſuits were very much diſpleaſed with his way of ſpeaking . . . . . of Grace.] It has been ſaid, that they vexed him ſo much, that he was like to leave their Houſe: But they maintain that it is a meer Story. Let us quote a printed Book. Dom Denys de Sainte Marthe, a Benedictin, obſerves (a), that 'tis pretended that Petavius retracted in the 10th Book of his 1ſt Volume what he had ſaid in the 9th Book, in favour of St. Auguſtin's Doctrine. But it has been anſwered (b) that it is falſe, and that “ The Society never gave any trouble to that Learned Old Man upon that Account, and that had they had any ſuch Deſign, they would

---

† In the year 1700. See what Mr. Bernard ſays of it in his Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Aug. 1700. p. 180. & ſeq.

(a) That is the Fathers of the Oratory, for Mr. Simon was amongſt 'em, when he wrote this.

(b) Sept. 1685. in the Catal. of new Books n. 4. See alſo June 1685 art. 2. p. 611. & June 1684 art. 8. p. 399. of the 2d Edit.

(c) Jurieu's 6th Paſtoral Letter of the 3d year p. 134. in 12.

(1) Theol. Dogm. tom. 2. pref. c. 3.

(d) Boſſuet, firſt Advertiſement to the Proteſtants n. 27. & 28. p. 28. of the Dutch Edit.

(2) Lett. VI. p. 45.

(3) Theol. Dogm. tom. II. Praef. c. 1. n. 10, 12.

(4) Ibid. c. 2.

(5) Ibid. c. 3.

(6) Ibid. n. 3.

(e) Boſſuet, ib. n. 25. p. 25.

(f) The 6th of the 3d year, dated the 15th of Novemb. 1688.

(g) See his 6th & 7th Letters of the Tableau du Socinianiſme printed in the year 1690.

(h) See Mr. Saurin's Examination of Mr. Jurieu's Theology p. 670. & ſeq.

(i) See the Book intitled Janua Cœlorum reſerata p. 126. & ſeq.

(a) See the Book intitled How the Benedictin Fathers behaved themſelves ſince their Edition of St. Auguſtin was cenſured p. 55.

(b) Ib. p. 57. & ſeq.

PETIT (John) Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris, in the Beginning of the XV. Century, acquired a great Reputation by his Eloquence and Learning; but he made ſometimes an ill uſe of his Talents, to defend ſome bad Cauſes. He ſpoke * for the Univerſity of Paris before the King's Council in the Year 1406, to ſhew that Cardinal de Chalant, Pope Benedict's Legate, complained without reaſon of thoſe who had forſaken their Obedience to that Pope. His Concluſion was, that their Withdrawing ſhould be obſerved and executed for the time to come . . . . . . and the Church of France delivered from the Exactions unjuſtly introduced by the Court of Rome. The King's Council referred that Cauſe to the Parliament. It was pleaded in the Great Chamber β the 7th of June in the ſame Year. John Petit made a long Diſcourſe, and as ſtrong as could be wiſhed. The Parliament gave no Sentence, but were forced γ ſome time after to give one which favoured the Demands of the Univerſity. John Petit was in the famous Embaſſy which France ſent into Italy, for the Pacification of the Schiſm, and ‡ he made a Harangue in Rome the 20th of July 1407. Every thing goes well hitherto, he makes uſe of his Eloquence in lawful things; but we ſhall ſee by and by that he made an ill uſe of it. The Duke of Burgundy having cauſed the Duke of Orleans, the King's only Brother, to be aſſaſſinated, was ſo bold as to own that Action, which was an enormous Crime in all (A) its Circumſtances. He ‖ returned to Paris as it were in Triumph, and demanded Audience to ſhew that he had good Reaſons to cauſe the Duke

“ have taken another Courſe; for inſtead of obliging him to retract himſelf in the 10th Book, “ they would have made him correct the 9th, ſince “ thoſe Books made part of the ſame Volume.„ From whence 'tis concluded, That (c) Petavius never thought of Removing, and that it is but a poor Story contrived by the Janſeniſts, Father de Sainte Marthe being only their Echo. What is certain is, that ſome Paſſages of Petavius, which favour the Hypotheſis of the Auguſtinians, (d) have been cited in the Writings of the Janſeniſts, and it has been ſaid that when he wrote againſt Janſenius's Friends, he renounced his firſt Opinion. Read this Paſſage of the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm: “ (e) Petavius . . . . could not “ refuſe to come to the aſſiſtance of his Brethren, “ to defend the Honour and Doctrine of his Society, againſt his own Opinion, and at the coſt of his “ Reputation. He publiſhed at firſt a Treatiſe de “ Lege & Gratia againſt Janſenius, which came out “ in that Year; and then he endeavoured to refute “ what Mr. Fromond had written againſt his Diſſer- “ tation concerning Liberty. And that Book came “ out towards the end of the ſame Year, with this “ Title: Elenchus Theriacæ Vincentii Lenis, ſive Li- “ berti Fromondi, Doctoris Lovanienſis. Pariſiis 1648.„ This happened in the Year 1648, but the following Paſſage concerns the Year 1651. “ (f) Petavius “ a Jeſuit, who, after he had taught in his Dogmata “ Theologica the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, as that of “ the Church, which every Body ought to follow, “ renounced it to defend the Intereſt and Opinions “ of his Society, undertook to explain, according “ to Molina, St. Auguſtin's Diſtinction between that “ Grace, whereby a Man is enabled to do ſome- “ thing, auxilium quo, which is an efficacious Grace; “ and between that Grace, without which a Man “ can do nothing, auxilium ſine quo non, which is a “ ſufficient Grace. He intitled that Book, Diſſer- “ tatio brevis de Adjutorio SINE QUO NON & “ de Adjutorio QUO; ad mentem B. Auguſtini.„

That my Readers may ſee more amply and clearly what the Anti-Moliniſts have publiſhed on this Head, I ſhall copy one Paſſage more. “ (g) Father Petavius had almoſt a general Knowledge, “ and his Name is famous among the Learned. If “ his Judgment had been anſwerable to his Read- “ ing, thoſe who ſet a greater value on that Part “ of a Man than upon a vaſt Reading, and believe “ that an excellent Man is ſuch a one who can “ judge well of things with an indifferent Learning, “ would be more ſatisfied with his Works than they “ are. 'Tis ſomewhat ſurprizing and incompre- “ henſible to ſee, how in his Dogmata Theologica, “ he has delivered up the Fathers of the three firſt “ Centuries to the Arians, and how he makes them “ all Favourers of that Hereſy. I am far from “ thinking that he was not a good Catholick, nor “ will I draw from this all the other extravagant “ Conſequences which the Calviniſts, the other “ Proteſtants, and the Socinians have drawn. I only “ find fault with his Judgment. 'Tis true, that he “ thought to mend his fault in ſome meaſure, by a “ Preface, which the Doctors of the Sorbonne oblig- “ ed him to make; but this was only to adminiſter “ the Remedy after the Diſtemper, and not to heal “ it: he ſhould have burnt that unfortunate Work, “ and by that means he would have avoided a great “ deal of Shame. His Judgment appeared no better “ in what he writ about Grace. For being obliged “ by order of his Superiours to retract the Auguſti- “ nian Doctrine of Grace and Predeſtination, which “ he had embraced and maintained as the Doctrine “ of the Church in the 9th Book of his 1ſt Tome; “ he declared againſt that Doctrine in the 10th, for “ fear he ſhould be conformable to the Adverſaries “ of his Society: but it was without removing the “ foundation which he had laid in the preceding “ Book . . . . . . I don't ſay this to inſult the Author, “ who was certainly a Man of Merit, nor for the “ pleaſure of ſpeaking ſlightingly of a Jeſuit; but “ to ſhew that it is fit to beware of great Book- “ makers and Collectors of Paſſages, and to take “ good heed of not relying on them, without con- “ ſidering, 1. Whether they write with Judgment, “ and give themſelves time to conſider of what “ they Write. 2. Whether they write freely and “ without Intereſt; that is to ſay, whether they are “ not of a Body which profeſſes not to ſuffer cer- “ tain Opinions, and to imbrace others, and which “ obliges every Member blindly to follow the En- “ gagements of the Society, under the pain of Re- “ moving, as Father Petavius told one of his Friends, “ ſhewing the Reaſon of his Change. I am too old “ to Remove, ſaid he to Mr. de Marolles, Abbot of “ Villeloin.„

(A) An Enormous Crime in all its Circumſtances.] I have ſpoken of it in the Article of that Duke, but without mentioning a Fact which does very much aggravate the Enormity of that Murder. The Monk of St. Denys, who wrote the Hiſtory of Charles VI. which Mr. le Laboureur tranſlated into French, ſays, that the Princes of the Royal Family no ſooner heard that the Burgundian had cauſed the Duke of Orleans to be aſſaſſinated, (h) “ but they de- “ teſted ſo execrable a Treaſon, and wiſhed alrea- “ dy, that the Author of it were in the everlaſting “ Torments which the Enormity of his Crime de- “ ſerved. That which ſhewed them better ſtill the “ Blackneſs of the Burgundian's Soul, is, that he “ had very lately, not only reconciled himſelf, but “ alſo made an Alliance of Brotherly Friendſhip “ with the Duke of Orleans. Beſides, they had “ newly confirmed it both by Letters and Oaths, “ even ſo as to take God to witneſs, and commu- “ nicate together. They ſeemed to be perfectly “ united in the management of the War, which “ they took upon themſelves; they had defended “ one another's Honour in the ill ſucceſs they had: “ it ſeemed that they had but one and the ſame “ Intereſt, and for a greater ſign of Union and Love “ the Duke of Burgundy knowing that the Duke of “ Orleans his Couſin was indiſpoſed, viſited him “ with all the Marks, I will not ſay of Civility, but “ of Tenderneſs, and even was perſuaded to come “ and dine with him the next Day, which was a “ Sunday. The other Princes of the Blood, who knew “ that, could not but conceive an extreme Indig- “ nation for ſo horrible a Proceeding, and there- “ fore they refuſed to hear his Excuſes, they reti- “ red with Tears in their Eyes from the King's “ Council,

---

* Hiſt. of Charles VI. by a Monk of St. Denys, tranſlated into French by Mr. le Laboureur Book 26. c. 2. p. 544.

β Id. ib. p. 544.

γ Id. ib. cap. 4. p. 547.

‡ Id. Book 27. cap. 15. p. 606.

‖ Id. ib. Book 27. cap. 27. p. 631.

(c) Ib. p. 58, 59.

(d) See the Abridged Hiſtory of the Congregation de auxiliis p. 73. & ſeq. 1687.

(e) Hiſt. of Janſeniſm tom. 1. p. 247. ad an. 1648. See alſo p. 377, 378. ad. ann. 1650.

(f) Ib. p. 505. ad an. 1551.

(g) Notes on the 3 Anſwer of the Prince of Conti to Father d'Champs p. 74, &c.

(h) Hiſt. of Charles VI. tranſlated into French by Mr. le Laboureur, Book 27. cap. 23. p. 627.

Duke of Orleans to be killed. He chose John Petit to be his Orator, a Mercenary (B) Soul and an Instrument of Iniquity, who maintained in the Great Hall of the Royal Hotel of St. Paul, on the 8th of March 1408, that the Murder of that Duke was lawful †. His Plea * was made Publick: The Honour of the Duke of Orleans was torn with greater Rage by it, than his Body had been by the Assassines. The Duke's Widow caused it to be refuted by the Abbot of St. Denis ‡ who pleaded for her, and for the Memory of the Deceased before the King's Council, with great Eloquence, on the 11th of September 1408. The Doctrine of the Duke of Burgundy's Orator was so (C) enormous, and so proper to introduce all manner of Confusion into the State, that it was condemned by the Bishop of Paris as soon as the Duke's Faction proved less powerful. The Proxies of that Prince appealed to the Pope,

† Id. ib.

* You will find the Sum Lines of it in the Monk of St. Denys, B. 27. c. 23. and you may see it intire in Monstrelet, B. 1. c. 38, 39.

‡ Id. ib. B. 28. c. 15. p. 660, 661.

‖ See the Rem. D.

" Council, and the next Day, as he was coming to " the Parliament, they sent him Word to retire." The Widow's Orator (i) did very much insist upon these Circumstances. Observe here how Humane Nature can joyn in the same Soul the Baseness of Hypocrisy with the most insolent Boldness. There was never a Prince more Haughty nor more Courageous than the Duke John of Burgundy; he was Surnamed Without Fear. Nevertheless, what a shameful Craft and Dissimulation don't we find in his Conduct? Here is an Instance of it. He repaired to the Church whether the Body of the Duke of Orleans was brought. (k) He pretended to be as much afflicted as any Body else, he put on Mourning afterwards, as all the Princes did, and was not ashamed to assist with them at the Funeral Pomp in the Church of the Celestins, where that Duke, when alive, desired to be buried. He pulled off his Mask only when he saw (l) that the King's Council was upon the Point of ordering that Robert de Canni, suspected of (m) the Murder, should be Imprisoned.

(B) A Mercenary Soul and an Instrument of Iniquity.] The greatest Blot in the Reign of Charles VI. is the Triumphant Impunity of the Duke of Orleans's Assassin: but it is not so much a Blot in the King, as in his Kingdom; for most times that unhappy Prince had not the use of his Reason, he was not therefore answerable for the Disorders of the State. The French Nation is to blame: The French did not support and joyn with the Princes who desired to take Vengeance of that Crime; they were divided, and so made the Party of the Assassin more formidable than the other. The City of Paris, where the King's only Brother was massacred, is most of all to blame, for having left that Crime unpunished; the Burgundian would have been treated according to the Exigency of the Case, if that City had desired it. It would be a peice of Unjustice to tax the University of Paris, because one of their Professors of Divinity was so wicked, as to undertake to make an Apology for that Murder; for they approved not the ill Principles of that furious Declaimer, and seconded the Bishop who condemned them authentically, as soon as he could do it safely. 'Tis what we shall see in the next Remark. Before I make an end of this, I must observe, that John Petit was very sure of the Peoples Approbation, when he engaged in the Defence of so detestable a Cause; besides, he knew that he should speak for a Prince whom the King himself dreaded. It is certain that Charles VI. (a) sent the Count de St. Paul to the Burgundian, to offer him a publick Audience, with Impunity as to himself, and the only thing that was demanded of him, was, that he should deliver up the Assassines, that they might be tried according to Law; but he sent him back very much disappointed, seeing the King was obliged to treat with Honour about the reparation of an Action that was more than wicked, and to send to him the Duke of Berry, and the King of Sicily at Amiens. The noble Duke of Bourbon was named to be one of that Embassy, but he generously excused himself, he would not so much as stay at Court, he desired leave to retire into his House, and chose rather to part with the share he had in the Government, than to give his consent to compound with the State, for the Murder of his Nephew; and therefore he said openly, and at several times, as I have been informed, That he would never see with a good Eye the Author of so base and villanous a Treachery. Those two Considerations, I mean the People's Favour, and the Credit of the Duke of Burgundy, cannot excuse the Advocate. The Reason why the People did not much care that the Assassin should be punished, was the Hatred they had conceived against the Duke of Orleans, who was the Author of many Taxes. Hence it is, that they rejoyced at his Death, and applauded the Duke of Burgundy; so true it is that Men are more tender of their private Interest, than of the Fundamental Laws of the State. (b) Ita nimirum publica mala sentimus quantum ad privatas res pertinent: nec in eis quicquam acrius quam pecuniae damnum stimulat. Montagne knew very well this Vanity: They are not concerned, says he (c), for the Confusion, and in as much as it is prejudicial to the Interest of the Publick, and of the State; but they are only concerned, because it touches them Personally. Hence it is that they are so earnest about it, and even beyond Justice and publick Reason. Non tam omnia universi, quam ea, quae ad quemque pertinent, singuli carpebant. The Impunity of the Duke of Burgundy was a mortal Wound given to Justice, and Authority, and to the Majesty of the State. What then? Private Men did not feel it, they saw but afar off the pernicious Consequences of it; and every Body hoped to avoid 'em. But the Taxes of the Duke of Orleans fell upon every Citizen. This is the Reason why they did not much care to revenge his Death. We shall see by and by that the Mob of Paris changed their Mind, when the Bishop had condemned the Apology for the Duke of Burgundy.

(C) The Doctrine of John Petit was so Enormous . . . . . that it was condemned by the Bishop of Paris.] Before the Condemnation (d) many Learned and Virtuous Men were offended at the Propositions of that Professor of Divinity, and were afraid that they would have very dangerous Consequences, if they were not censured. " For my part, says a Monk of " St. Denys, I did often very much wonder that the " Bishop of Paris and the Inquisitor of the Faith, " neglected a Cause that was so prejudicial to " good Manners, and the Service of God; but I " was always answered, that the formidable Authority of the Duke of Burgundy was the Rea- " son of it, and that it was prudently done of " them to let that Plague lie as it were buried in a " deep Silence, rather than venture to see it Au- " thorized by the Credit of that Prince. Which " proved true in its time, for that Safety so much " desired, did no sooner appear, than they ordered " the Members of the Venerable University of Pa- " ris, to bring whatever they had in their Sheets " and Collections relating to the Proposition of the " said John Petit, which served the pretended " Justification of the Duke of Burgundy. They cal- " led together in the great Hall of the Bishoprick, " the most famous Doctors and Batchelors of Divi- " nity, and the Doctors of the Canon and Civil " Law, that by their Advice, what was erroneous " in them might be examined; and after they had " applied themselves to it for several Days with all " the diligence which the Interest of Faith re- " quired, on the 16th of January they elected out " of that numerous Company sixteen Doctors, cho- " sen in the Colleges of Paris, who made an Ab- " stract of the Assertions and Propositions advanced " by that Doctor, which they judged to be condem- " nable as follows." That Historian sets down afterwards 9 Propositions of John Petit, with the Censure past upon 'em, and then he adds: " (e) " Such was the Advice of all the Doctors and Re- " gents there met, and that the whole Piece of " John Petit was unworthy of a Man of Parts, and " even deserved not to be mention'd: Wherefore " on the 23d of (f) February, the said Bishop and " Inquisitor of the Faith, being met in the Hall of " the Bishoprick, in presence of many Prelates and " Eminent Doctors, and a great Croud of People, " thought fit to censure it, as being erroneous as " to Faith and good Manners, and to condemn it, " as being Scandalous in several Respects, to be " burnt in the Porch of Nostre Dame. Two Days " after,

(i) Ib. B. 28. c. 10. p. 656.

(k) Id. ib. B. 27. c. 22. p. 625.

(l) Id. ib. c. 23. p. 625.

(m) He hated the Duke of Orleans, because that Duke loved his Wife for a long time. Id. ib.

(a) Id. ib. p. 627.

(b) Annibal ad Carthaginienses ap. Livium l. 30. sub fin. p. m. 555.

(c) Montagne's Essays, B. 3. c. 10. p. m. 410, 411.

(d) Hist. of Charles VI. B. 33. c. 28. p. 931, 932.

(e) Id. ib. p. 933.

(f) It was in 1414. reckoning the beginning of the Year from January.

Pope, ‡ and he himſelf wrote to the Council of Conſtance, to recommend the Cauſe of John Petit; his Ambaſſadors and Partizans maintained, that the Propoſitions that were condemned, were not (D) to be found in the Book of that Doctor; the Commiſſioners of the Council broke the Sentence of the Biſhop of Paris. Gerſon appealed from their (E) Judgment to the Council, and obtained not all the Satiſfaction he might reaſonably expect. That Aſſembly ſhewed, that a Prince who has an Army is a very good Protector of a Heretick. The Council made only a general

" after, the Execution was made in their Preſence " upon a Scaffold ſet up upon that Account, before " a great Multitude of People, when Benedict Gencien, a famous Doctor, had ſhewed the Enormity " of thoſe Opinions. " You ſhall ſee now an Example of the People's Inconſtancy; (g) " It was a " ſenſible Affront to the Duke of Burgundy, who " learned by an Experience neceſſary to give an " Example, how ſhameful it is for Great Men to " degenerate from the Glory of their Birth; but " his greateſt Spite was to hear, that that fooliſh " Juſtification had made him odious to the wiſeſt " and moderateſt Men, that he was laughed at and " deſpiſed by them, that the Mob derided him, " and that he was the publick Talk, and the Subject of a thouſand Satyrical Songs, wherein he " was publickly called a Traytor and an Aſſaſſin. "

Note, That Gerſon (h), Chancellor of the Univerſity, did very much contribute to that Cenſure. He preached often againſt the Propoſitions of John Petit, and (i) refuted in the Name of the Univerſity before the King all the parts of the Diſcourſe and Book of that Profeſſor. Note alſo, that the Nine Propoſitions that were cenſured, may be reduced to this: (k) That it is Lawful for any Body, and even a commendable and meritorious thing, to kill a Tyrant of one's private Authority; and that in order to it, all manner of ways may be made uſe of, and even Treaſons and Flatteries, to make him fall into the Snare that is made ready for him, notwithſtanding any Alliances and Oaths whatſoever.

(D) Maintained that the Propoſitions, that were condemned, were not to be found in the Book of that Doctor; the Commiſſioners of the Council.] It was the only way they could take, for unleſs they had renounced all Shame, they could not deny that the Cenſure of thoſe Nine Propoſitions was a lawful one. They were therefore obliged to do what the Janſeniſts did a long time after, to have recourſe to the Diſtinction de facto & de jure, and to maintain that the Nine Propoſitions were not to be found in the Book of John Petit. They failed not to do it. Read what follows. I go ſomewhat higher, that my Reader may be more fully informed of that Affair.

(l) " That (m) Sentence being extremely ſhameful for the Duke of Burgundy, whoſe Juſtification " was burnt in that Book, with an eternal Reproach " to his Name; his Proxies appealed to the Holy " See. (1) The Duke undertook to protect the " Pope, to make a Friend of him. . . . . . (2) But " when he heard that he had been arreſted at Friburg, before he could get into the County of Burgundy, he wrote again to the Council, in anſwer " to the Advice the Council had given him of the " Pope's Flight, that having promiſed to protect " him only upon condition that he would keep " his Word, (3) he was now reſolved to forſake him, ſeeing they approved not of his Conduct, and to adhere intirely to the Council. Having thus induſtriouſly diſpoſed their Minds, he " added, that he was informed his Enemies had " undertaken to defame him, under pretence of " cauſing certain Heretical Propoſitions to be condemned by the Council, which they aſcribed to " the late Dr. John Petit, who had defended his " Cauſe like an Honeſt Man; that for as much as " his Honour was concerned in it, he entreated the " Fathers, that before they ſhould decide a Point " of that Importance, and condemn the Book of " that Doctor, they would examine in the preſence " of his Ambaſſadors, whether thoſe Propoſitions " were truly his, or whether they were not maliciouſly contrived by others, who endeavoured to " cauſe them to be condemned under the Name of " that famous Profeſſor, and even under his own " Name. (4) The Council thereupon appointed " ſome Commiſſioners, viz. the Cardinals of Albano, Aquileja, Florence, and d'Ailli. The Ambaſſadors of the Duke of Burgundy, who had made " a powerful Party by their Intrigues, and had at " their Head Martin Porree, Biſhop of Arras, and " Doctor of Divinity, excepted againſt Cardinal " Peter d'Ailli, as having been John Gerſon's Maſter, " and maintained boldly, that the Propoſitions " which the Biſhop of Paris had condemned, as " being in the Book of Dr. John Petit, intitled, The Juſtification of the Duke of Burgundy, were not to be " found in it in ſuch terms as they were produced; " that John Gerſon being jealous of the Glory Dr. " Petit had acquired in the Univerſity, formed " them according to his Fancy, to give 'em an Heretical Senſe, which they themſelves would readily condemn; but that as they were worded in " the Doctor's Book, they were ready to prove that " they were very Orthodox. (5) On the other " Hand, Cardinal d'Ailli, who had been excepted " againſt, joyned with Dr. John Gerſon, and Dr. Jourdan Morin, and theſe three proteſted, That nothing could be more falſe (6) than what the Ambaſſadors of Burgundy had advanced; that any one " who has Eyes, and can read, and underſtand " French, will plainly ſee that the Propoſitions which " had been condemned, but eſpecially that which " all the reſt had been reduced to, were not only " advanced by John Petit, but contained alſo the " Subſtance of his Libel, wherein he makes it his " buſineſs to eſtabliſh them by his pretended Proofs " and falſe Reaſonings. At laſt, after ſome long " Debates about that Point, the Queſtion being only " a plain matter of Fact which the Burgundians denied obſtinately, the three Cardinals Commiſſioners, who were for them, made uſe of a very ill " Expedient. For, on the one Hand, approving " not thoſe wicked Propoſitions, and on the other " Hand being not willing to condemn the Advocate " of the Duke of Burgundy, (7) they declared that " the Biſhop of Paris was an incompetent Judge in " that Cauſe, which did belong to the Holy See; " and thereupon annull'd his Sentence. " Their Judgment was proclaimed by Sound of Trumpet in the Porch of the Cathedral Church of Paris (a). You may ſee in a Book of Gerſon by what Intrigues the Faction of Burgundy compaſt the whole Matter. Inſtituit inter Volucrem & Monimum, id eſt, inter ſe & fratrem ſuum dialogum, ubi καθ' ἕκαστα & ſingillatim exponit, quibus molitionibus Burgundiones uſi ſunt ut Pariſienſis cenſura caſſa & irrita declararetur (b).

(E) Gerſon appealed from their Judgment to the Council, and obtained not all the ſatisfaction.] He deſired, without doubt, that the Council ſhould confirm the Sentence of the Biſhop of Paris, by condemning namely the Book which contained the Duke of Burgundy's Apology; but the Council did it not, (c) " Whether it be that they had not " the Libel of John Petit at Conſtance, but only an " Abſtract which contained his Propoſitions; or " whether they would not examine it to diſoblige " no Body, as (8) the Emperor adviſed them; " they were contented according to his Advice, to " apply themſelves to the Doctrine in general, and " to condemn the Fundamental Propoſitions which " contained the Subſtance of all the reſt; which " they did in theſe Words. It has been remonſtrated to this Holy Council, that ſome Propoſitions have " been taught, which are Erroneous and moſt Scandalous, and tending to the Subverſion of the State of " the whole Commonwealth, amongſt which this has " been preſented to the Council. (9) Any Tyrant may " and ought lawfully and meritoriouſly to be kill'd by " any of his Vaſſals or Subjects, and even they may uſe " in order to it Snares, Flatteries and feigned Careſſes, " notwithſtanding any Oath or Alliance made with him, " without waiting for the Sentence or Command of any " Judge whatſoever. The Holy Council, in order to " exterminate that Error, declares and defines, upon " mature Deliberation, that ſuch a Doctrine is againſt " Faith and good Manners, and reproves and condemns " it as Heretical and Scandalous, and giving occaſion " to Frauds, Cheats, Lies, Treaſons, and Perjuries. " Further, it defines and declares, that they who obſtinately maintain that moſt pernicious Doctrine, are " Hereticks, general Decision, which prejudiced neither the Book of John Petit, nor the Burgundian. The King of France on the (F) contrary, caused that Libel to be condemned with the greatest Severity, and expelled many Doctors from Paris, who opposed the good Design the others had of ingaging the University in the Cause of the Bishop. But, two Years after, that Prelate was obliged to cause his Sentence (G) to be revoked out of Complaisance to the Duke of Burgundy. John Petit died † in the Year 1411, at Hedin, a Town belonging to that Duke. He fled thither for Refuge, fearing the Sons of the Duke of Orleans, who designed to prosecute him as a Heretick. He * was not a Cordelier, as some have said, but a Secular Priest.

---

‡ See the Rem. D.

(g) Il. ib.

(h) Cancellarius contra Joannis Parvi aſſertiones concionatur ſæpius, has accurato & diligenti ſtudio expendit, & detectos in iis contra fidem errores configit. Tum curante potiſſimum Gerſone errorum cenſura à Theologiæ facultate & Pariſienſi Epiſcopo confecta eſt. Joh. Launoius hiſt. Gymn. Navarr. p. 482.

(i) Maimbourg, hiſt. of the great Schiſm, l. 4. p. m. 235.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Ib. p. 237.

(m) That is the Sentence of the Biſhop of Paris.

(1) J. Juvenal.

(2) Cod. Victor. ap. Spond.

(3) Act. Victor. ap. Spond.

(4) T. 5. Hiſt. Un. p. 299. ex Monſtrel. J. Juvenal. Cod. Victor.

(5) J. Juvenal.

(6) Cod. Victor.

(7) J. Juvenal.

(a) Dati ſunt à Concilio & ſelecti judices, qui repugnante Gerſone, & aliis qui ab ejus ſtabant partibus, Pariſienſem cenſuram abrogarunt, politicis potius quam Theologicis rationibus ducti. Cenſuræ abrogatio & lecta & publicata eſt buccis concrepantibus in propylæo Ædis beatæ Mariæ Pariſ. Hæc Juvenalis Urſinus ut vidit, ita & retulit in Hiſtoria Caroli VI. Jo. Launoius ubi ſupra p. 489.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Maimbourg, ub. ſup. p. 242.

(8) Cod. Victor.

(9) Act. Concil. Conſt. Seſſ. 15.

PHAON, of Mitylene in the Isle of Lesbos, was a handsom Man, extraordinarily beloved by the Fair Sex. The poor Sappho fell in Love with him, as well as many others; but she found him so unkind that she fell into Despair, as I shall say in her Article. The Poets, who have recourse to Miracles at every turn, say, that his Beauty, so powerful upon the Hearts of the Ladies, was given him by the Goddess Venus, as the Reward of the services she had received of him, when he was Master of a Ship. One Day β he took her on Board his Ship, without inquiring who she was, and conveyed her with all speed to the (A) Place she was to go to. He asked nothing γ for his Pains, but he was very well paid notwithstanding. Venus presented him with a Vessel of Alabaster full of an Oyntment, wherewith he had no sonner rubbed himself, than he became the Beautifullest of all Men. He inflamed the Women of Mitylene with Love. His Youth ζ returned upon him, and what follows. He made an ill use of it, and it cost him his Life; for he was killed

" Hereticks, and as such, ought to be punished according to the Ordinance of the Holy Canons. Such was " the Decree of the Council, which for certain " Considerations, and especially for fear of disobliging the Duke of Burgundy, would not joyn the " Fact with the Doctrine in this Cause. „

That Conduct did so much the more vex John Gerson, (d) because he had been accused of acting not out of love for Truth, but upon the account of some Differences he had had with John Petit. They reproached him also, that he had reduced all the Doctrine of that Man to one Proposition, and then that he had made Nine Propositions (e), when he knew that the Examinators were not ignorant that he had mutilated the opinion of his Adversary. He exposed himself so much to the Hatred of the House of Burgundy, that he ran a great many Dangers after the sitting of the Council. (f) He had not the liberty to go to Paris, to re-assume his Place of Chancellor. He was forced to retire thro' some Byways; he went to hide himself for some time in the Mountains of Bavaria, and then he crossed Swisserland, and arrived at Lyons, where he staid till he died.

(F) The King of France ..... caused that Libel to be condemned with the greatest Severity, and expelled many Doctors from Paris.] The following Account begins with the last of those two Facts. (g) " Our Doctors who were at Constance, (1) fearing " what came to pass, that the Cardinals Commissioners would favour the Burgundians, had written " to their Brethren at Paris, that they should endeavour to get the University to side with the " Bishop, that his Sentence against the Doctrine of " John Petit might be confirmed: But it happened " that many Members of that great Body, having " been gained by the Party of the Doctor, and of the " Duke of Burgundy, raised so great a Cabal against " 'em, that they prevented them from obtaining what " they demanded. The honest Doctors, especially " those of the illustrious Sorbonne and of Navarre, " sticking close to the good Party, which Gerson defended with great zeal and force, having made their " Complaints to the King; His Majesty, to clear the " University from those turbulent Fellows, who disturbed the Church and State, ordered above " forty of the most Factious to depart from Paris " that very Day upon pain of Death. ..... Afterwards, lest so abominable a Doctrine should be " revived, if the Book which contained it, should " remain; His Majesty sent his Declaration to the " Parliament, against the Errors contained in the " Libel of (2) John Petit, intitled, The Justification of the Duke of Burgundy, ordering them to tear, in a " full Court, as many Copies of it as could be found, " forbidding every Body to keep any of them upon " pain of forfeiting their Lives and Goods, ordering " further, that this Declaration be registred with " the Sentence of the Bishop of Paris, containing " the Doctrine and the Fact joyned together, in the " Condemnation of the most pernicious Errors of the " Libel of Dr. John Petit, intitled, The Duke of Burgundy's Justification, which begins with these " Words, Before the most Noble and most High Royal " Majesty, and was publickly (1) Sold in Paris and " other Places. The whole was registred in the Parliament on the 4th of June 1416; and on the 16th " of September in the same Year, the Parliament at " the Request of the University, published a severe " Decree against all those who should be so bold as " to maintain still the Doctrine of that detestable " Libel, declaring them liable to all the Punishments " which, they that are guilty of High Treason, de" serve. „

One may easily perceive that Mr. Maimbourg gives a touch to the Jansenists.

(G) That Prelate was obliged to cause his Sentence to be revoked.] What has been seen at all times was seen in the Cause of John Petit: Toleration, Condemnation, Absolution, &c. as the Prince his Protector grew stronger or weaker. His Credit was lost at Paris in the Year 1414. Then they proceeded rigorously against his Apologist. He could do any thing in that City in the Year 1418, then the Censure was annulled. I shall quote for this an Author of the same Century. At this time, says he (a), a general Procession was made at Paris, wherein the University appeared, and especially the Vicars of the Bishop of Paris, who was then Sick at St. Omer. Which Vicars revoked there, in Sermon time before the whole Assembly, the Condemnation which the said Bishop published heretofore against the Proposition of Dr. John Petit, and against the Honour of the Duke of Burgundy, repairing, in that respect, his Honour and Fealty, as of a true Champion of the Crown of France, and they made appear the Power they had received from the Bishop to that effect, so that the Duke of Burgundy was satisfied.

(A) To the Place she was to go to.] There is a Passage of Lucian from whence we learn, not whither she was conveyed, but where she took Shipping. (b) Μῶν ϗ σύ τινα ὥσπερ ὁ Φάων τ̃ Ἀφροδίτην ἐκ Χίου διαπορθμεύσας εἶτά σοι εὐξαμένῳ ἔδωκε νέον εἶναι ϗ καλὸν ἐξ ὑπαρχῆς ϗ ἀξιέραστον. Num tu quoque, says Simylus to Polystratus, ut & Phaon ille venerem è Chio transvexisti, ut optanti tibi illa dederit juvenescere, ac denuo formosum atque amabilem fieri? It might be inferred from these Words, that Phaon demanded as his Reward, that his Youth and Beauty should be restored to him; but Palæphatus says nothing like it: he says that Phaon had been a Seaman all his Life time, and never abused any Body, nor made poor People pay for their Passage; that upon this Account he was admired in the Isle of Lesbos; that Venus having put on the Shape of an old Woman, went on Board his Ship; that he carried her over with all speed, and asked nothing for it; but killed upon the Fact ‡, I mean, being surprized in an Adultery. Some said that the Virtue of a (B) certain Herb was the cause of Sappho's Love for him.

(d) Spondan. ad ann. 1415. n. 51. p. 751.

(e) Sentiens nihilominus Gersonius Theologos illos agnovisse fraudem in truncatione propositionum Parvi illas ad novem conclusiones proposuerit. Id. ib.

(f) Launoius ub. sup. p. 490.

(g) Maimbourg, ub. sup. p. 242, 243.

(1) John Juvenal p. 327. Printed at the Louvre.

(2) Hist. Univ. t. 5. p. 400. Quam M. Joannes Parvi nuncupatus justificationem Ducis Burgundiæ fecit appellari, ejus quaternos & particulas apud quemcumque inveniri poterunt, &c. Prædicta Propositio M. J. Parvi in sese, & in suis assertionibus principaliter intentis & in ea contentis est abolenda atque damnanda tanquam in fide erronea, &c. & eam sic abolemus & damnamus, &c. Quam justificationem D. Ducis Burgundiæ appellavit complures in se errores pestiferos continentem, & quæ in tantum in dictis villa & Diœcesi Parisiensi publicata extitit, quod venditioni publicè exposita & à pluribus empta fuerit. p. 301.

† Monstrelet lib. 1. c. 39. apud Spond. ad ann. 1408. n. 1. p. 704.

* Spond. ib. p. 704.

β Ælian. Hist. div. l. 12. c. 18.

γ Palæph. de fabulis.

δ Ælian. ib.

ζ Palæph. ib. Lucian. Dial. mort. tom. 1. p. 234.

(1) Publicæ venditioni exposita, quæ sic incipit. Before, &c. p. 302.

(a) John le Fevre Lord of St. Remi, Hist. of Charles VI. c. 88. p. 124.

(b) Lucian. Dial. mort. tom. 1. p. 234.

PHASELIS, a Sea-Town in Lycia * upon the Borders of Pamphylia. It was one of the Towns that grew the Richer by the Piracies of the Cilicians; which was the reason why † Publius Servilius ruined it, after the Victories he obtained over those Pirates. It was in a miserable Condition (C) when Pompey landed at it after the Battle of Pharsalia. 'Tis said that it was built by Mopsus §. That Town has been very much spoken of, upon the account of a Miraculous (D) Favour which but that of an Old Man, she made him a handsom Young Man. Servius (c) touches upon that Story, and adds a Particularity to it which he borrows from two Comick (d) Poets, viz. That Phaon built a Temple to Venus upon Mount Leucate, from whence a Woman, who was very much in Love with him, threw her self into the Sea. Lucian thought that Phaon (e) was of the Isle of Chio, but I think he was mistaken.

(B) The Virtue of a certain Herb.] 'Tis a strange thing, that the passionate Love of Sappho should not be ascribed meerly to her Temper. Pliny ascribes it to a Cause which is as fabulous as the Ointment of Venus; he is in the right to say, that the Virtue of that Herb is a monstrous thing. (f) Portentosum est quod de ea traditur, radicem ejus alterutrius sexus similitudinem referre, raram inventu: sed si viris contigerit mas, amabiles fieri. Ob hoc & Phaonem Lesbium dilectum à Sappho. Multæ (g) circa hoc non Magorum solum vanitates, sed etiam Pythagoricorum. He speaks of the white Eryngium, which the Latins call centum capita. Du Pinet renders it chardon à cent têtes.

(C) In a miserable Condition when Pompey.] If we believe Lucan, there was more People in Pompey's Ship than in that Town.

> (h) Te primum parva Phaseli
> Magnus adit. Nam te metui vetat incola rarus,
> Exhaustæque domus populis, majorque carinæ
> Quam tua turba fuit.

Yet Strabo, who lived after Pompey, speaks of Phaselis as of a considerable Town, which had three Ports. 'Tis likely he represents it (i) as it was heretofore, but he should not have exprest himself in the Present Tense. (k) Εἶτα Φασηλὶς, τρεῖς ἔχουσα λιμένας, πόλις ἀξιόλογος. At deinde Phaselis, tres habens portus, urbs memorabilis.

(D) A miraculous Favour which Alexander was said.] Josephus having described the Passage thro' the Red-Sea, makes this Observation upon it. (l) "No Body ought to look upon it as an impossible "thing, that Men who lived an innocent and simple Life in those first Times, should have found "a Passage through the Sea to make their Escape, "whether it opened of it self, or whether it was by "the Will of God, since the same thing happened "a long time after to the Macedonians, when they "went thro' the Sea of Pamphylia under the Conduct of Alexander, God being willing to make use "of that Nation to destroy the Persian Empire, as "it is reported by all the Historians who wrote the "Life of that Prince. However, I leave to every "Body the liberty of judging of it as he thinks "fit." It is not true that all the Historians of Alexander represented as a Miracle, his Passage thro' the Streights of Pamphylia near Phaselis. I shall quote a great Author, who clearly shews that there was nothing miraculous on that Occasion. (m) "Alexander passed his Army along the Sea-Coasts of "Pamphylia with such Expedition, that many Historians have describ'd and extoll'd it with that "height of Admiration, as if it were no less than "a Miracle, and an extraordinary Effect of Divine "Favour, that the Waves which were wont to come "rowling in from the Main, and hardly ever "leave so much as the Beach under the steep broken Cliffs at any time uncovered, should on a "sudden retire to afford him Passage. Menander, "in one of his Comedies, alludes to this wonderful "Event, when he says,

> " How this resembles Alexander's high > " Exploits? This Fellow of his own accord is here.
> " Ask him to wade the Sea, and he'll reply,
> " Ev'n that to him does passable appear.

"Alexander himself in his Epistles, mentions nothing unusual in this at all, but says, he went "from Phaselis, and marched through the Streights "which they call the Ladders." We are beholden to Plutarch for having mentioned the Letters of that Conqueror; for they resolve the Difficulty, and shew the Imposture of those who described that Passage as being Supernatural and a signal Miracle. If there had been any Prodigy in it, and an extraordinary Favour from Heaven, Alexander had certainly mention'd it in the Letters he wrote concerning that March of his Army. He could have no Political Reason to be silent about so wonderful an Event; on the contrary, several important Motives might have induced him to speak of it. It was a thing of the greatest Consequence, to convince all the World, that the Gods had visibly declared for him, that the most untractable Elements were submitted to him, and that Nature left its usual Course to hasten the Ruin of the King of Persia. He should have therefore acquainted his Mother, and Antipater, and all the Nations of Greece with that great Miracle; he should have sent the News of it where ever he desired it should be known. He should have taken care to make his Letters as Authentick as they could be; yet nothing could be plainer than what he wrote upon that occasion. Let no Body say that he would be beholden to his Valour only; it is not true: We have shewed in his (a) Article that the extravagant Ambition he exprest of being accounted a God, was in a great measure the effect of Policy. His whole Conduct shewed, that de desired nothing so eagerly as to see the Nations persuaded of the Ascendant of his Fortune, and of the immutable Happiness of his Destiny. A Man may go a thousand times farther with such a Reputation, than with the Fame of a most Valiant and skilful Captain: for every Body knows that the Valour and Prudence of a General have their Bounds; whereas People are apt to think that nothing can stop a Conqueror for whom Fortune declares, and who has Heaven and Earth, the Sea and the Winds at his disposal, Cui militat æther, Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti (b). So that the greatest Interest of Conquerors, is to be look'd upon as Men, whom God has appointed for some great Revolutions, and favours with Miracles. If it abates something of their Glory, with respect to their Courage or Genius, that Loss is plentifully made up in some other respects. The Extent of their Conquests, the Number of their Victories, the Rapidity wherewith great Exploits are performed when Fortune directs them, and when she takes almost all upon herself, without caring for the concourse of Prudence, all those things, I say, are an Object of Admiration, a thousand times more dazzling, than those limited and mean Conquests, which are only owing to the most consummate Prudence and Intrepidity. Are there any Humane Virtues that can inspire us with the same Respect, Veneration and Esteem, which we do naturally conceive for those whom we look upon as chosen Vessels, Men appointed by God for the foundation of Empires, and his Favourites and Darlings? Such Men are much more admired, than if they were only recommendable for their Prudence and Courage. Lastly, we must observe, that there are some things independent upon the Valour and Wisdom of a Conqueror. Those Qualities can never open a way through the Sea and Rivers for the Passage of an Army. When therefore it is said that the Sea and Rivers opened in his behalf, and miraculously gave way to his Troops, he is not deprived of his due Praises, that they may be bestowed upon Fortune; for every Body knows that the Courage and Skill of a great Captain can never produce these Effects: he would be looked upon as a Fool, and laugh'd at, if he should venture to say, that he had found out the Invention of passing a great Army thro' an Arm of the Sea, without Pontons and Ships. No good Reasons can therefore be given, why Alexander should have supprest the Miracle in question: We must therefore conclude, that he made no mention of it in the Letters he wrote concerning his March, because there had been nothing extraordinary in it.

WHETHER ALEXANDER could have any Reasons to suppress a Miracle wrought in his behalf.

‡ Ælian. ubi sup.

* Strabo, l. 14. p. 458. See also Liv. l. 37. c. 23.

† Nec mari submovisse contentus, validissimas urbes eorum & diutina præda abundantes, Phaselin & Olympon evertit, Isaurumque ipsam arcem Ciliciæ. Flor. l. 3. c. 6.

§ Pompon. Mela l. 1. c. 14.

(c) Servius in Æn. 3. v. 279. Read in the Leyden Edition of 1680 in anus formam, instead of in navis formam.

(d) Menander & Turpilius.

(e) In Navigio tom. 2. p. 656.

(f) Plin. l. 22. c. 8.

(g) Father Hardouin refers us hereupon to a Book falsly intitled Kiranidum Kirani p. 37.

(h) Lucan. l. 8.

(i) Note, that it is not at all likely that Town should have been repaired from the Battle of Pharsalia to the time of Strabo.

(k) Strab. l. 14. p. 458.

(l) Joseph. Ant. Jud. l. 2. sub fin.

(m) Plut. in vit. Alexand. p. 673, 674.

(a) See the Art. Macedonia Rem. G. and that of Olympias Rem. F.

(b) They are Claudian's Words in 3. Consul. Honorii Augusti v. 95. It concerns a Prodigy whereby Theodosius obtain'd a Victory over Eugenius in the year 394. See Flechier's Life of Theodosius l. 4. p. 479. Edit. in 12. & Barth. in Claudian. p. 509. & seq. Here is the whole Passage of Claudian: O nimium dilecte Deo, cui fundit ab antris Æolus armatas hiemes, cui militat æther, Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti.

which Alexander was ſaid to have received from the Gods in that Place. I ſhall make a Remark upon that Subject, as I have promiſed.

P H OC.

I will ſtrengthen this Reaſoning with a very good Obſervation. The moſt ambitious Princes, the Warriors that are moſt greedy of Praiſes, are not ſo inventive (c) as their Flatterers, nor ſo ingenious as a Panegyriſt, in things that may ſet off the Glory of a Conqueror. Since therefore the Flatterers of Alexander, the Orators and the Poets, who beſtowed Praiſes upon him, ſaid that the Sea of Pamphylia withdrew its Waves, to facilitate the Paſſage of his Army, which happened by a great Miracle, we may very well believe they were perſuaded, that by taking ſuch a Turn, they might more eaſily immortalize his Glory, and make it more admirable. He himſelf did not think of ſuch an Invention; he did not equal in that ſort of Devices the Fecundity of the Wits, of the Flatterers and Rhetoricians, and therefore he plainly and ingenuouſly related how he got over that Place. If there had been any Policy in the Matter, if he had been ſilent about that Prodigy, for fear of leſſening his Glory, by confeſſing that the Gods had ſeconded him; the Flatterers would have known his Judgment about it, they would have accommodated themſelves to it, and had never ſpoken a Word of the Miracle. If we had all the Verſes and looſe Sheets which came out about that Subject, during the Life of that Prince, we ſhould find a great many idle Fancies in them; but becauſe it is the Fate of thoſe little Books to die as ſoon as, or ſooner, than their Authors, Poſterity has not been peſtered with them. We have only the Reduction of them made by ſome more grave Writers; and it is no difficult thing to have a juſt Notion of that Adventure, by conſulting a learned Geographer. Strabo tells us, that Mount Climax lies ſo near the Sea of Pamphylia, that it is only parted from it by a narrow Way, which one may go a Foot when that Sea is calm; but it is covered with Water when that Sea is rough. Alexander truſting his good Fortune, ordered his Army to go thro' that Place, without waiting for the Time of the Year when the Waters go off. The Soldiers went over having the Water to their Bellies: this is all the Miracle: (d) Περὶ Φασηλίδα δ' ἐστὶ τὰ κατὰ θάλατταν στενὰ, δι' ὧν Ἀλέξανδρος παρήγαγε τὴν στρατιάν· ἔστι δ' ὄρος Κλῖμαξ καλούμενον· ἐπίκειται δὲ τῷ Παμφυλίῳ πελάγει, στενὴν ἀπολεῖπον πάροδον ἐπὶ τῷ αἰγιαλῷ, ταῖς μὲν νηνεμίαις γυμνουμένην, ὥστε εἶναι βάσιμον τοῖς ὁδεύουσι· πλημμύροντος δὲ τοῦ πελάγους, ὑπὸ τῶν κυμάτων καλυπτομένην ἐπὶ πολύ. ἡ μὲν οὖν διὰ τοῦ ὄρους ὑπέρβασις, περίοδον ἔχει καὶ προσάντης ἐστὶ, τῷ δ' αἰγιαλῷ χρῶνται κατὰ τὰς εὐδίας. Ὁ δὲ Ἀλέξανδρος εἰς χειμέριον ἐμπεσὼν καιρὸν, καὶ τὸ πλέον ἐπιτρέπων τῇ τύχῃ, πρὶν ἀνεῖναι τὸ κῦμα ὥρμησε, καὶ ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν ἐν ὕδατι γενέσθαι τὴν πορείαν συνέβη, μέχρι ὀμφαλοῦ βαπτιζομένων. Apud Phaſelidem ſunt ad mare anguſtiæ, per quas exercitum traduxit Alexander. Eſt enim ibi mons Climax, Pamphylio incumbens mari, & propter litus arctum relinquens tranſitum: qui tranquillo mari nudatur, & à viatoribus perambulari poteſt: mari exundante, fluctibus admodum obtegitur. Alexander autem hybernam incidit in tempeſtatem, cumque fortunæ maximam eventus partem crederet, antequam defluerent undæ profectus eſt: itaque contigit, ut totum diem milites per aquam iter facerent uſque ad umbilicum in eam demerſi. Others ſay, that the Southerly Winds, which had blown for ſeveral Days, and overflowed all the way to the foot of the Mountain, left off blowing as ſoon as Alexander appeared, and that a North Wind aroſe, which drove the Waters toward the Shoar. Freinſhemius (e) quotes the Authors who mention this, I ſhall tranſcribe his Words and Quotations. (1) Parte exercitus ad Pergenſium urbem per montes præmiſſa; cæteros ipſe per litus ducebat, qua Climax mons Pamphylio mari imminens anguſtam euntibus ſemitam relinquit, quoties mare tranquillum eſt; at quum æſtus incubuit, fluctibus operitur. Idque hyeme frequens & prope perpetuum eſt. At Alexander nihil æque ac moram metuens, exercitum per æqua, per iniqua, eodem ardore atque impetu rapiebat. Continui per eos dies Auſtri flaverant, qui mare in litus propellentes, omnia itineris veſtigia altis paludibus opplent: adſidua etiam magnæque pluviæ, ut ventis iſtis ſpirantibus ſolet, ruebant. Sed adventante Alexandro ſubito exortus Aquilo cælum purgavit imbribus, undas rejecit in mare, & Macedonibus tranſitum aperuit. Sic quoque unius (2) diei itinere per incerta vada emergendum fuit; aqua ad umbilicum ferme pertingente. Tantum in periculis Alexandri felicitatem, at ab ipſius ingenio profectam non dubito; ita frequentibus prodigiis & ominibus auctam confirmatamque fuiſſe crediderim: poſtquam decreto numinis, clariſſimis maximiſque rebus ſe deſtinari concepit. Joſephus ſhews no great Judgment, when he compares the Paſſage thro' the Red Sea, with the Paſſage thro' the Sea of Pamphylia. He hoped that the Miracle of Alexander would make the Greeks believe that of Moſes; but he ſhould have feared that the Paſſage thro' the Red Sea would be aſcribed to ſome Natural Cauſes, as that of the Sea of Pamphylia was aſcribed to the North Wind. If Genebrard had not made uſe of ſo outragious a Cenſure, one could not blame the Remark he made upon theſe Words of Joſephus: (a) The Egyptians were miſtaken, they knew not that God had opened that way only for his People, and not for their Perſecutors, who followed them only to deſtroy 'em. Here is his Note. "(b) From hence thou may'ſt know how "execrable is the Impiety of Joachim Vadianus, "who was ſo bold as to ſay in his Commentary upon Pomponius Mela, that Moſes waited for the "time when the Red Sea was to retire into the Ocean, and leave the Bottom dry, as it happens "twice a Day at Mount St. Michael in Normandy. "For, beſides that God deſigned to ſhew his Power by it, the Red Sea never leaves its Channel by "a Flux and Reflux, being always full, as it is "certain by Geography and Sea-Charts." Joſephus ſhould have ſo much the more abſtained from ſuch a Parallel, becauſe there was ſome reaſon to fear, that the Greek Philoſophers would take advantage of what is obſerved by the Sacred Hiſtorian, that (c) God cauſed the Sea to go back by a ſtrong Wind all that Night. They might have ſaid, that thoſe two Miracles were like one another, and the effect of the Wind. There aroſe a North Wind for Alexander, which drove back the Waters of the Sea; another Wind did the ſame for Moſes. Several Hiſtorians, to make the Conqueſts of the Macedonian Army wonderful, took for a Miracle a North Wind which proved uſeful to him by chance. The Hiſtorian of the Hebrews (d) did the like. Therefore to prevent thoſe Objections, Joſephus ſhould have avoided the Parallel which he made uſe of very improperly. A Commentator for the uſe of the Dauphin Cenſures him ſeverely for it. (e) Ut imperite, ne dicam impie, feciſſe Joſephus videatur, qui narrato Iſraëlitarum tranſitu per rubrum mare, quo credibile probaret eſſe miraculum, ſimile quiddam Alexandro contigiſſe agnoſcit, & ab omnibus affirmari tradit qui res ejus geſtas literis mandarunt.

Note, That it is a very eaſie thing to obſerve a capital Difference between what paſſed near Phaſelis, and what happened in Ægypt. The Wind which drove the Red-Sea back, was preceded by an Humane Action, which ſhews that God interpoſed therein after a ſpecial manner: (f) Moſes ſtretched out his Hand over the Sea. Beſides, there happened a thing which cannot be aſcribed to the Wind; the Sea opened, and the Iſraelites went upon the dry Ground, and the waters were a wall unto them on the right hand and on the left. If it be ſaid that the Wind was the cauſe of that Gap; it muſt be confeſt that it was not Natural, I mean, that it blew only upon a very ſmall part of the Sea, and that leaving the Waters at reſt on the Right and on the Left, it made a way in the Middle; it drove only the Waters that were in that Intermedium, and kept up the reſt on each ſide. If any one ſhould aſk me why it was neceſſary that the Wind ſhould blow all Night, ſeeing God does not at all want the help of Second Cauſes to dry up an Arm of the Sea in a Moment: I would anſwer, that Creatures are not to preſcribe to their Creator the manner of his Conduct. Beſides, thoſe who ſay, that the Miracles of the Ancient Law were produced upon occaſion of the Will of a Creature, are not perhaps miſtaken. See what Father Mallebranche and Mr. Arnauld (g) think of it. If the Angel, who was entruſted with the Conduct of the Iſraelites, had been the Occaſional Cauſe of all the Miracles of Moſes; it would be no wonder that the Action of Bodies, the Violence of the Winds, &c. ſhould have been made uſe of. Many Difficulties may be accounted for by that means. Perhaps, a Heathen would ſay,

(c) To this may be applied the Words of Pliny the younger in Paneg. Traj. c. 55. Ingenioſior eſt ad excogitandum ſimulatio veritate, ſervitus libertate, metus amore.

(d) Strab. l. 14. p. 458.

(e) Supplem. in Q. Curt. l. 2. c. 11. n. 18. See alſo his Index upon Q. Curt. at the Word Pamphylia.

(1) Strab. l. 14. Curt. 5. 3. 22. c. 3. 16. Artemon. in Seneca Suaſor. 1. Arrian. 1. 8, 3. Euſtath. in Dionyſ. v. 855, & 855. Appian. l. 2. de Bell. Civ. Joſeph. Ant. l. 2. extrem. Plut. c. 27, & 28.

(2) Strab. l. 14.

(a) Joſeph. ub. ſup.

(b) Genebrard in the Margin of his Tranſlation of Joſephus ſub. fin. l. 2. Ant. Jud. fol. 53. Paris 15[illegible]4. in 8.

(c) Exod. XIV. 21.

(d) Let all this be aſcribed to thoſe Greek Philoſophers, whom I mention'd before.

(e) Michael le Tellier Not. in Q. Curt. l. 5. capite ipſi undecimo p. 193.

(f) Exod. ub. ſup. See Mr. le Clerc's Diſſertation mention'd in the Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans, Octob. 1695. p. 59, 60.

(g) Mr. Arnauld publiſhed in the year 1685. a Diſſertation concerning the manner how God wrought the Miracles of the Old Law by the Miniſtry of Angels. He refutes Father Mallebranche.

PHŒBADIUS, Biſhop of Agen in the IV. Century, expreſſed a very great Zeal for Orthodoxy, and againſt Arianiſm. He writ a Book * againſt the ſecond (A) Form of Faith, which Oſius and Potamius had drawn up at Sirmium in the Year 357. He aſſiſted at the Synod of Ariminum in the Year 359, and maintained the Nicene Form of Faith to the End of that Council, and refuſed to ſubſcribe to that which was propoſed there. " † Neither Fear nor Threatnings could " make him change his Reſolution; but Taurus the Governor, perceiving that he " could not overcome his Conſtancy by that means, betook himſelf to Intreaties, " and beſought him with Tears to take the mildeſt Courſe, to deliver a great Number " of Biſhops who had been ſhut up in a Town ſeven Months, and were very " much tired, by reaſon of the Sharpneſs of the Winter, and the Scarcity of all " things .... Phœbadius anſwered, That he was ready to go into Baniſhment, " and ſuffer all ſorts of Torments rather than do what was required of him, and " that he would never approve of a Form of Faith made by the Arians. Some " Days were ſpent in that Conteſt; but at laſt, ſeeing there was no hopes of a " Peace, he abated of his Conſtancy, when Urſacius and Valens had declared, That " the Profeſſion of Faith they propoſed was Catholick, and that thoſe to whom it " ſhould not appear to be ſufficient, might add to it what they ſhould think fit. „ Some Orthodox Propoſitions were added to it, namely this, That the Son of God was not a Creature; but Urſacius and Valens did cunningly inſert in it, That he was not a Creature as others are; and by ſuch a Fraud they obtained the Subſcriptions they would have. ‡ Phœbadius being returned into his Country, was one of the Biſhops who expreſt the greateſt Sorrow for their Fault, and made amends for it by their Declarations and Proteſtations againſt what they had done by ſurprize. He aſſiſted at the Council of Valence in the Year 374. We have a Letter of St. Ambroſe directed to him and Delphinius Biſhop of Bourdeaux. St. Jerome aſſures us in his Book concerning Illuſtrious Men, that Phœbadius was ſtill alive in his time †, and that he was very Old. He adds, that he had compoſed many other Works, beſides that which we have mentioned. The Memory of that Saint is particularly honoured at Agen, where he is commonly called (B) St. Fiari.

PHÆDRUS, the Author of the Five Books of Fables in Latin Iambick Verſes, was ‡ a Thracian by Birth. He was made Free by (A) Auguſtus, and * lived till

* Du Pin's Biblioth. tom. 2. p. 147. of the Dutch Edit.

† Id. ib.

‡ Id. ib.

† That is in the year 392. when St. Jerome write that Book. See Father Labbe diſſert. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. tom. 2. p. 221.

‡ Phædrus in præf. l. 3.

* Vid. Scheffer. in vit. Phædr.

according to the Language of thoſe who ſpoke ſo much of the Genii of the Emperors, that the Genius of Alexander ſtopt the South Wind, and formed a North Wind the very ſame Day that Conqueror deſigned to go along the Shoar of Phaſelis. But to perſuade us of it, it were neceſſary to ſhew, that ſuppoſing Alexander had been quiet in Macedonia, a North Wind had not ſucceeded a South Wind the ſame Day that he marched his Army along that Shoar: which it is a thing that can neither be prov'd nor known. One may apprehend that the Genii of the Emperors might, by uſing their Phyſicks, applicando activa paſſivis, ſtop a Wind, and raiſe another; but it cannot be known whether they do it in ſuch a place, or at ſuch a time.

(A) He writ a Book againſt the Second Form.] That Work is extant. You will find the Subſtance of it in (h) Mr. du Pin's Bibliotheque. Father Labbe ſays, that Petrus Pithœus was the firſt that publiſhed it. (i) Primum prodiit ſtudio Petri Pithœi cum aliquot aliorum Veterum Galliæ Theologorum ſcriptis, Pariſiis apud Nivellium 1585. in 4. hoc titulo: liber contra Epiſtolam ſive edictum ſub nomine Conſtantii Imp. emiſſum in Synodo Mediolanenſi. He adds, that it was inſerted ſince in the Editions of the Bibliotheca Patrum, and that Barthius made ſome Notes upon it. Mr. du Pin ſays alſo, that the firſt Edition is that which was publiſhed by Petrus Pithœus, but he places it in the Year 1587. John Darnalt in his Antiquities of Agen, chap. 5. mentions a foregoing Edition. That Epiſtle of Phœbadius, ſays he (k), was found in our time, and immediately publiſhed by Robert Stephen, and ſince by Nivelle in 1586. They that have Libraries may enquire whether it be ſo.

(B) Particularly honoured at Agen, where he is commonly called St. Fiari.] The Name of that Illuſtrious Prelate has undergone ſeveral ſtrange Metamorphoſes. (a) Sulpicius Severus calls him Fegadius. He is called Sœbadius in St. Jerome, and in the Greek Tranſlator of his Book...... We read Fygadius in St. Ambroſe. Arnalt bewails thoſe Alterations, and the Deſtruction of the Church conſecrated to that Biſhop. " (b) I ſhall ſay by the by, " that the Name of that Holy Biſhop has been ſo " unfortunate, that it is at this Day ſo changed and " altered, not only amongſt the Vulgar, but alſo in " the Books of his own Church, that ſome call him " Fedarium, others Phœbadium and Feudarium, Ephionius calls him Sebaydium, he is commonly cal" led St. Fiari. I ſhall add to the alteration of his " Name, that the Injuries of Time and of the Age " have been ſo great and ſo deplorable, that his " Church was firſt pulled down, and levelled to the " Ground in this City, and the Place where it ſtood " was converted into a prophane uſe. „ Beza mentions a thing that is ſomewhat Curious, which belongs to the Year 1561. " (c) At that time John " Barrelles, a Miniſter at Toulouſe, being at Agen by " reaſon of his Illneſs, where he ſtaid to be cured " of it, preached in the Day time in the Houſe of " Rouſſanes a Councellor, and the Aſſembly grew " ſo numerous every Day, that at laſt on the 15th " of March he preached in a little Church called " St. Fiari, who was formerly Biſhop of Agen, and " a very learned Man, having written againſt the " Arians in St. Jerome's time, as he himſelf ſays in " his Treatiſe concerning Eccleſiaſtical Writers, " where his Name is falſly written Sebadius inſtead " of Fedarius. There was in that Church a Marble " Sepulchre, which was ſaid to be that Biſhop's; " the Nurſes were wont to ſcrape it, and to ſwallow the Scrapings with their Porridge, that they " might have abundance of Milk. Yet there is a " little Town near Toulouſe called Benerque, upon " the River † Rege, where, on the 25th of April, " which is the Feſtival of the ſaid St. Fiari, the " Neighbours uſe to meet in Arms, (which is an " ancient Cuſtom amongſt 'em) for fear, as they " ſay, that the Inhabitants of Agen ſhould come and " carry away the Body of that Saint, which they " maintain to have ſtollen from them. Let 'em " debate the Matter amongſt themſelves; but the " Sepulchre having been open'd at laſt at Agen, " there was nothing found in it but a Scull with the " Teeth very well preſerved, conſidering the ſaid " Biſhop had been buried there above twelve hundred Years. „

(A) Made Free by Auguſtus.] He is called Auguſti Libertus in the Title of his Fables. Lipſius, Andreas Schottus, Dempſterus, Borrichius, and many other Criticks underſtand it of Tiberius (d). But Florens Chriſtianus, Voſſius, Schefferus, &c. had rather underſtand it of Auguſtus. I follow the laſt Opinion, tho' I confeſs that the Proofs that can be given for it, are not demonſtrative. That which is certain, is, that our Phædrus relates, as an Ocular Witneſs, ſome things that happened under the Empire of Auguſtus. See the 11th Fable of the 3d Book, (h) Pag. 107, & 108. of the 2d Tom. of his Biblioth. of Eccleſ. Authors, of the Dutch Edit.

(i) Labbe de Script. Eccleſ. tom. 2. p. 221.

(k) Darnalt the King's Attorney in the Preſidial of Agen, Antiquit. of Agen fol. 32. verſo Paris 1606. 8vo.

(a) Du Pin ub. ſup. p. 109.

(b) Arnalt. ub. ſup. fol. 33.

(c) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 5. p. 790, 791.

† He ſhould have ſaid Ariege.

(d) See the Notes of Schefferus in Phædrum till after the Death of Sejanus. He ‡ was oppreſt by that Favourite of Tiberius. He ſpeaks of himſelf as of a Man who did not (B) care to grow Rich. All the Criticks don't agree that he is the ſame Phædrus mentioned in one (C) of Martial's Epigrams. It is to be obſerved, that Caſaubon, who was ſo Learned a Man, knew not that there was one (D) Phædrus amongſt the Ancient Authors, but when Petrus Pithœus publiſhed Phædrus's Fables. Since that firſt Edition which came out in 1596, there has been many others with the Notes of the greateſt Criticks. See the Catalogue of them in the Preface of John Schefferus upon that Author, to which you may add the Edition † of the Year 1698, publiſhed by Mr. Burman, which contains the Notes of Gudius, never before publiſhed, the intire Com-

Book, but not the 8th of the 4th Book, wherein Bathyllus is mentioned; for Voſſius (e) is in the wrong to ſay that Phædrus ſpeaks of it as having ſeen it.

(B) Who did not care to grow Rich.] See the Preface of his 3d Book: he mentions this amongſt the things which ſhould facilitate his promotion to the Rank of Poets:

Quamvis in ipſa natus ſim pene ſcholâ,
Curamque habendi penitus corde eraſerim,
Et laude invitâ in hanc vitam incubuerim,
Faſtidioſe tamen in cœtum recipior.

See alſo the 5th Fable of the 5th Book (f).

(C) That is mentioned in one of Martial's Epigrams.] Here are the Words of that Poet:

Dic (g) Muſa quid agat Canius meus Rufus?
Utrumne chartis tradit ille victuris
Legenda temporum acta Claudianorum?
An quæ Neroni falſus adſtruit ſcriptor?
An æmulatur improbi jocos Phædri?

The Note of Scriverius upon the laſt of thoſe five Verſes is extremely injurious to thoſe, who think that Martial ſpeaks of our Phædrus: (h) Poſſunt ne magis decipere de judicio, ac magis ludere de otio ſuo viri docti, qui exiſtimant Fabulatorem Phædrum à Clariſſimo Pithœo editum, & cujus Avienus quidam, ſive Avianus, in præfatione Fabularum ſuarum Æſopiarum ad Theodoſium meminit, hunc eundem eſſe, de quo loquitur Martialis? Volunt nos credere ſcilicet, Libertum illum Auguſti Cæſaris fuiſſe, illo atque tempore parem proximumve Laberio vel Publio Mimo, & quidem, quantum conjiciunt, ſub Tiberio vixiſſe, atque adeo poſt Sejanum damnatum: Nugæ. Certè niſi vehementer fallor, avo illo dignus cenſeri minime poteſt ſcriptor ille, cuicui tandem ille alapam & libertatem debeat. Scriverius boaſts that he can prove his Opinion by ſeveral Reaſons, and obſerve, amongſt other things, that Perot, Archbiſhop of Siponto, is the Author of (i) one of the Fables publiſhed under the Name of Phædrus. It is certain, that the Fable which Perot ſays he took from Avienus, and publiſhed in Iambick Verſes, differs very little from the other. Alluſit ad fabulam, ſays he in his Commentary on the 77th Epigram (k) of the 1ſt Book of Martial, quam nos ex Avieno in Fabellas noſtras adoleſcentes Iambico carmine tranſtulimus:

Olim quas vellent eſſe in tutela ſua
Divi legerunt arbores, &c. (l).

But the Criticks did not fail to ſay, that Prelate aſcribed it unjuſtly to himſelf. However, one may very well wonder, that ſo pleaſant a Book as that of Phædrus ſhould have been almoſt unknown for many Ages. Suppoſing that Martial ſpeaks of it, we have but two (m) Authors that ſpoke of it. I have ſaid in another Place (n), that Seneca knew nothing of it, and I am going to ſay that Caſaubon was for a long time in the ſame caſe. Which ought to make us leſs wonder at the Obſcurity wherewith the Name and Glory of Quintus Curtius has been covered during ſo many Years. To which I add that Paterculus had the ſame Fate.

(D) Caſaubon .... knew not there was one Phædrus.] He wrote the following Words to Petrus Pithœus: Ex epiſtola tua primum de Phædro Auguſti liberto cognovi: nam plane mihi ante id nomen incognitum, proinde de eo quæ ſcripſerit quæ ſcripto vel legi nihil, vel ſi eſt aliter non memini. That Letter of Caſaubon was written in the Year 1596, and Petrus Pithœus publiſhed Phædrus's Fables in the ſame Year at Troyes. He ſent a Copy of it to Father Sirmond who was then at Rome. That Jeſuit ſhewed it to the Learned Men of Rome, who thought at firſt that it was a ſuppoſititious Book; but having more carefully examined it, they changed their Opinion, and found ſome Characters of the Age of Auguſtus in it. (o) Memini equidem Jacobum Sirmundum narrare mihi ſolitum, cum Petrus Pithœus hos Phædri Æſopiarum fabularum quinque libros (p) Lutetiæ edidiſſet primum, & ad ſe Romam pro veteri amicitia muneri miſiſſet; percuſſos illico Romanos novitate voluminis, atque ut gens eſt emunctæ naris, natura nunquam verba cui potuit dare, ſuſpicari cœpiſſe num quidnam partus ille recens ac ſuppoſititius eſſet, qui tanto intervallo appareret, tamque delituiſſet diu: verumtamen libro perlecto toto, neminem dubitaſſe, quin ætatem redoleret Auguſti, ac ſummam illam facilitatem ſtili & ſcripturæ, & beatam copiam repræſentaret; tuncque vixiſſet auctor, cum latè bene loquendi temporum potiùs, quam hominum fuit; ibique etiam apud Cæſarem ſerviſſet, ubi ſolem ac domicilium eruditi colloquii videretur; quo in domo illic & noſter, intimi & familiares, ſervi & liberti literas egregie didiciſſent. These are the Words of a Jeſuit, who immediately after makes ſome Reflection upon this Paſſage of Seneca, Æſopeos logos intentatum Romanis ingeniis opus. He pretends, that Seneca does not ground what he ſays upon Phædrus's being not a Roman, but a Thracian; he does ſolidly refute thoſe who have recourſe to ſuch an Explication, and believes either that Seneca's Memory failed him, or that the Succeſſors of Tiberius cauſed Phædrus's Book to be immediately ſuppreſt, becauſe their Tyranny was repreſented in it, and ſo Seneca knew not that Book. I ſhould not like the laſt Conjecture; for if that Work had been ſuppreſt for that Reaſon, Seneca would have more eaſily remembred it. Let's hear the Jeſuit: (a) Miror vehementer, cur affirmavit Seneca, Æſopios logos eſſe intentatum Romanis ingeniis opus: cum Phædrum hunc haberet, quem opponere poſſet toti Græciæ. Nam quod, clariſſima lumina ſuperioris ſæculi duo, Petrus Pithœus & Juſtus Lipſius prodiderunt, vere id a Seneca dictum; quia Phædrus non genere aut ortu Romanus, ſed Thrax, ſicut ipſe teſtatum reliquit, eſſet: minus ea probabilis videtur expoſitio Senecæ. Quaſi vero Romanis ingeniis opus intentatum, ſit quidquam aliud, quam Latinis literis nondum illuſtratum nec elaboratum opus: aut comœdia fuerit carmen intactum Romanis, quamvis id ſolus natione Afer Terentius tractaſſet: aut ſi percenſeret Seneca, qui philoſophiam ſcriptores Latine explicaſſent; de eo ſe numero eximeret ipſe; propterea quod natione foret Hiſpanus, patria Cordubenſis. At non exemit Quintilianus, qui quo loco de Philoſophis egit Latinis, his illum potiſſimum annumeravit; cum inter oratores, & poëtas, & alios diverſi generis ſcriptores potuiſſet referre. Citius dixerim Senecam vel parum hic attendiſſe, quid ſcriberet: vel iſtud, ut alia, oblitum prorſus, memoriæ vitio peccaſſe. .... (b) Illud veriſimilius, iniquiſſimis Tiberii, Caligulæ, Claudii, Neronis temporibus, cum ſcripta edictis abolerentur & ſenatuſconſultis, ſi cui poëtæ aut hiſtorico verbum excidiſſet opportunum delationi & calumniæ; cum ne liberæ quidem relictæ cogitationes; & opinio tacita de principe, ſicunde vel ex vultu argui poſſet, majeſtatis rea fieret: libellum fabularem, cujus in apologis pleriſque mera illius ſæculi tyrannis notaretur, ſuppreſſum fuiſſe continuo, ac evanuiſſe tandem, & ignoratum a Seneca, & reliquæ poſteritatis oculis ſubductum. We muſt not forget that Gabriel Faernus dealt unfairly with the Publick, if we believe Thuanus (c). He had a Manuſcript of Phædrus, but he took care not to boaſt of it, and not to impart it to the Publick. He was afraid of leſſening the value of the Fables he had made in Latin Verſes, in imitation of Æſop, if the World ſhould know that a like Book of Phædrus, Auguſtus's Freed-Man, was ſtill extant. We muſt not forget neither Mr. Perrault's Remark upon that Paſſage of Thuanus. It is to be found in the Preface of his Tranſlation of Faernus's Fables into French Verſes, which was Printed in the Year 1699. “Faernus has been called a ſecond Phædrus, “by reaſon of the excellent Style of his Fables, “tho' he never ſaw Phædrus, who did not come to “our Knowledge, but above thirty Years after his “Death; for Pithœus having found that Manuſcript

---

‡ See the ſame Author ib.

† At Amſterdam for Henry Wetſtein.

(e) Voſſ. de Poet. Lat. p. 38.

(f) He ſays it is [illegible] fabulis [illegible] periculoſum ſemper [illegible] Lectum.

(g) Mart. Ep. 20. l. 3.

(h) Scriverius in Mart. Ep. 20. l. 3. p. m. 88.

(i) 'Tis the 16th of the 2d Book in the Hamburg Edit. 1673.

(k) And not the 20th of the 3d Book as Menagius ſays in his Meſcolanze, p. 280.

(l) You may ſee what remains in Menagius ib.

(m) Avienus mentions it, as Scriverius obſerves in the above-cited Words.

(n) In the Art. of Æſop. See the Words of the Jeſuit Vavaſſeur in the next Remark.

(o) Franc. Vavaſſor de Ludicra Dictione p. 206, 207.

(p) He publiſhed Phædrus at Troyes in Champagne.

(a) Id. ib. p. 207.

(b) Id. ib. p. 208.

(c) Thuan. l. 28. ſub fin. p. m. 578. ad ann. 1561. Du Rier hath not well tranſlated theſe Words of Thuanus, Si Phædri cujus ſive imitatione ſive æmulatione luſerat, nomen non diſſimulaſſet, which he renders thus: s'il n'eût point caché le nom de Phedre ſur lequel il s'étoit joué.

Commentaries of Conradus Ritterſhuſius, Nicolas Rigaltius, Nicolas Heinſius, John Scheſferus, and John Lewis Praſchius, with an Abſtract of ſome other Commentaries. The Edition † which came out ſince that, by the care and with the Notes of Mr. Hoogſtraten, is the fineſt that has been ſeen as yet, both with reſpect to the Character and Figures. 'Tis for the uſe of the young Prince of Naſſau, Governor of Frieſland and Groningen. The French Tranſlation, which Moreri commends, comes from Port-Royal. Tho' it be a good one (E) Tanaquillus Faber found many faults in it.

PHÆDRUS (Thomas) Profeſſor of Eloquence at Rome, towards the End of the XV. Century, and in the Beginning of the XVI. was accounted the Cicero (A) of his Time. He * was Canon of Lateran, and Keeper of the Vatican Library. He ‡ was beholden for the beginning of his Fortune to the Repreſentation of Seneca's Hippolytus, where he acted Phædra. Hence it is that he was called Phædrus. The cauſe of his (B) Death was very ſingular. One Day as he was Riding upon a Mule in the City, he met ſome Wild Oxen which drew a great Cart. His Mule ſtartled and threw him down. He was ſo lucky, that the Cart went over him without hurting him: he found himſelf between the Wheels; but his Fright and his Fall did ſo ſpoil the Maſs of his Blood, that he contracted a Sickneſs, of which he never was cured. Had he lived longer, 'tis likely he would have publiſhed (C) ſome Books, which would perhaps confirm what was ſaid of him, that his Tongue ‡ was better than his Pen. Parrhaſius his Collegue, who was very much * beholden to him, regretted mightily the loſs of that Friend. I don't know whether Phædrus made the Sermon (D) which Eraſmus criticized with great Reaſon. Voſſius thought † At Amſterdam for Francis Halma 1701. in 4.

* Parrhaſ. de quæſitis per epiſt. p. 34.

‡ See the Rem. A.

‡ See the Rem. A.

* See the Rem. B. of the Art. Parrhaſius

" in the Duſt of an old Library, publiſhed it in the " beginning of this Century. Thuanus, who makes " a very honourable mention of our Author in his " Hiſtory, pretends, that Phædrus was not unknown " to him, and even blames him for having ſuppreſt " that Author, to conceal what he had ſtoll'n from " him: but there is no ground for what he ſays, " and it is only the effect of the ſtrong Perſuaſion of " all thoſe who are ſo great Admirers of Antiquity, " as to think that a Modern Author can do nothing " that is excellent, unleſs he has an Ancient Author " for his Model. Out of the hundred Fables which " Faernus publiſhed in Latin Verſes, there are but " five that have been handled by Phædrus, and " out of thoſe five there is but one or two that " have been handled in the ſame manner: which " happened only, becauſe it is impoſſible that two " Men, who treat the ſame Subject, ſhould not jump " ſometimes in the ſame Thoughts, or in the ſame " Expreſſions.„ The latter part of this Paſſage is as full a Vindication of Faernus as he could have wiſhed.

(E) Tanaquillus Faber found many faults in it.] He publiſhed very good Notes upon Phædrus, in the Year 1657, and he was already very famous for his Learning; yet the Learned Scheſferus had not heard of him in the Year 1660. He knew then the Name of that Author, and the worth of his Phædrus, by a Letter (d) which he received from Gronovius. Mihi ſane, ſays he (e), adeo ad Diem illum Faber fuit ignoratus, ut illius nihil ante, ac ne notas quidem in ſcriptorem noſtrum niſi ſero, ut prædixi, viderim vel legerim. This I obſerve, that one may ſee that the moſt Learned Men are ſometimes unknown to one another, tho' they flouriſh at the ſame time.

(A) Was accounted the Cicero of his Time.] I ſhall quote Eraſmus, who tells us ſome curious things about that Phædrus. (f) Romæ . . . . . cognovi & amavi (g) Petrum Phædrum, linguâ veriùs quàm calamo celebrem: mira erat in dicendo tum copia, tum autoritas. Magna felicitatis pars eſt Romæ innotuiſſe: ille primùm innotuit ex Senecæ Tragœdia, cui titulus Hippolytus, in qua repræſentavit perſonam Phædræ, in area, quæ eſt ante Palatium Cardinalis Raphaelis Georgiani. Sic ex ipſo Cardinale didici, unde & Phædro cognomen additum. Is obiit minor annis, ni fallor, quinquaginta, dictus ſui ſeculi Cicero. Pierius Valerianus commends our Phædrus for his Eloquence: (h) Neque diu felix fuit Thomas Phædrus affluentiſſimum eloquentiæ flumen, quo non alius eo tempore orando clarior, neque vehementior fuit, Romanæ ipſe quoque cathedræ decus, & ornamentum. To which you may add what I have quoted out of Parrhaſius in the Remark C, and the Teſtimony of Petrus Bembus: he was a good Judge of Eloquence; he praiſes very much our Thomas for it, in the 3d Letter of the 4th Book, dated at Venice the 13th of January 1505. out of which I ſhall obſerve this Particularity. Some Body writ to him, that Phædrus grew big: All the better, ſaid he, for then we may treat him after the manner of the Ancient Hero's, illum certe poſſumus heroum more ἥρως μέγας dicere.

(d) Scheſfer. præf. in 2. Edit. Phædri.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Eraſm. Ep. 5. l. 23. p. 1210.

(g) Parrhaſius & Pierius Valerianus call him Thomas.

(h) Pierius Valerian. de litter. infelicit. l. 1. p. 25.

(B) The cauſe of his Death was very ſingular.] This is very well expreſt by Pierius Valerianus. (i) Quàm verò miſerabiliter, quàmque inopino mortis genere ſurreptus interiit, dum ſcilicet mula media urbe vehitur junctis factus obviam bubalis, qui viſendæ magnitudinis carrucam trahebant: Conſternata ſiquidem mula, bubaliſque identidem perterrefactis ſimul ab ea calcitroſa excuſſus eſt tam magnæ corporaturæ vir, quantum hominem noſtis, ſimul à plauſtro ſuperatus, quamvis in rotarum medium intervallum incidens eliſionem evitarit, corrupto tamen præ timore, & gravi caſu intra viſcera ſanguine, multa inde longa, & occulta valetudinis incommoda perpeſſus, in ejuſmodi ærumna vita functus eſt.

(C) 'Tis likely he would have publiſhed ſome Books.] The Reader will be glad to know the Titles of them, which Parrhaſius has preſerved, and therefore I ſhall tranſcribe the following Words. It is a great Encomium beſtowed upon Phædrus; but we muſt remember, that the Author of it is an Orator, who had received many benefits from him. (a) Quis eſt in hoc orbis terrarum domicilio, (cujus antiquum ſcenæ decus inſtauravit) quis in hac excultiſſima academia, (quæ Phædro rhetore cælum vertice contingebat) quis adeo barbarus à Muſis abeſt & Gratiis, qui ad extincti Phædri nomen ubertim non fleat? O deteſtandam fati importunitatem. Silet, heu, T. Phædre, vox illa tua jucundè ſonora: illa argutæ linguæ ſuadela, quæ mentes hominum in omnes affectus impellebat, quæ Romanam facundiam à Goticis uſque temporibus amiſſam reſtituit. Ubi nunc eſt ille geſtus cum ſententiis congruens? Ubi illa incorrupti Latini ſermonis integritas? Quis ultimam manum tot inchoatis operibus imponet? Quæ (non ſecus ac Apellis illa decantatiſſima Venus) interrupta pendent: luculentiſſima ſcilicet orationes, Apologia Ciceronis in obtrectatores, quam mihi paucis ante diebus quam expiſſet æſtuare, domi ſuæ per ſummam voluptatem legit: Annalium breviarium, quo res omnes à populo Romano geſtas complexus eſt: in Horatii poeticam vigilantiſſima commentaria: in Plauti comœdias ſcrupuloſiſſimæ quæſtiones. If we knew the Date of that Oration, we might know the Year of Phædrus's Death. Note, That Volaterranus, having ſhewed the Series of Ancient Wars, expreſſes himſelf thus: (b) Bellorum igitur hujuſmodi excurſum T. Phædri noſtri ex magna parte diligentia collectum, non ab re fuerit ſimul ordine repetiiſſe.

(D) The Sermon which Eraſmus (c) criticized with great Reaſon.] That Sermon was preached before Pope Julius II. upon a Good-Friday. Eraſmus heard it, and was not pleaſed with it; the Preacher made it his only buſineſs to appear Ciceronian. Eraſmus (d) does not Name him, but one may believe that he denotes one of the Profeſſors of Eloquence, of whom he had ſaid: (e) Florebant id temporis Romæ præter cæteros dicendi laude Petrus Phædrus & Camillus hoc ætate minor, ſed eloquendi viribus major, niſi quod ille jam hujus laudis arcem occuparat.

(i) Id. ib.

(a) Jani Parrhaſii in orat. ante prælectionem epiſt. Cicer. ad Attic. p. 145, 146.

(b) Volaterr. comm. urban. lib. 38. p. m. 1459.

(c) See his Ciceronianus p. m. 39. & ſeq.

(d) Nomen Oratoris non edam ne cui videar hominis probi & eruditi famam arrodere voluiſſe. Eraſm. in Ciceroniano p. 39.

(e) Id. ibid. p. 38.

(E) Voſſius

thought that our Roman Professor was the Author of the Antiquities (E) of Hetruria, which were published under the Name of Prosper.

PHERON, King of Egypt, and Successor of Sesostris, undertook no War, and became Blind, as a punishment of the Boldness he had to throw a Dart upon the Waters of the Nile. They were upwards of 18 Cubits high above the Fields, and very much tossed by the Wind. When the King saw this, he threw a Dart, and lost his Sight immediately. He was ten Years in that condition, and then he was told by an Oracle, that the time of his Misfortune was almost ended, and that he should recover his Sight, if he washed his Eyes with the Urine of a Woman that never lay with any Man but her Husband. He began to make use of his Wife's Urine, but he got no benefit by it. Afterwards he used the Water of other Women, and at last he recovered his Sight. He caused all the Women, whose Water had not been beneficial to him, to be carried into a certain Town, and to be all burnt together with the Town, and then he married the Woman to whom he was beholden for the Recovery of his Sight, and consecrated in the Temples several Monuments of his Thankfulness towards the Gods, namely (A) two Obelisks, a hundred Cubits high, and eight Cubits broad, in the Temple of the Sun. A Man of Memphis, whom the Greeks called Proteus, reigned after him ‡. This Article being to be found in Moreri's Dictionary, I was resolved to pass it by; but I changed my Mind, having observed that some have taken the liberty to falsifie that Fact. As I designed to censure that Licence, it was requisite that I should set before the Eyes of the Reader, a faithful Exposition of that old Story, that he may compare it (B) with the false Copy of some Modern Writers.

‡ Taken from Herodotus l. 2. c. 111, 112. p. m. 129, 130. See also Diod. Sicul. l. 1. c. 59.

PHILETAS.

(E) Vossius thought that Phædrus was the Author of the Antiquities of Hetruria.] Here are his Words: (f) Fuere qui fatum crederent Guilielmi Postelli. Sed verus auctor est Thomas Phedrus qui vixit anno CIↃ CCCC XC. A great deal of wrong has been done to Vossius, in the Treatise of Placcius de scriptis anonymis; for next to the Words, which I have just now set down, and those that go before, we read these following Words. (g) Cujus Thomæ ulteriorem nullam nec apud ipsum, nec apud Gesnerum, aliosve illius generis auctores invenio mentionem. Verum enim vero non opus est ut de eo multum hic solliciti simus, cum non illum, sed ipsum CURTIUM INGHIRAMIUM, qui fragmenta illa primus ac si Scornelli prope Vulterram ea sub terra invenisset, Florentiæ publicavit, parentem hujusce supposititii figmenti fuisse prolixè docuerit Leo Allatius in suis ad dictas antiquitates annotationibus, Parisiis 1640. & biennio post Romæ iterum excusis. This whole Passage is printed in Italick Letters, as well as the Words that are cited out of Vossius, and there is nothing whereby one may distinguish the first part of the Passage from the last; so that any Reader may very well fancy that Vossius is the Author of all those Words, and consequently that he knew not what Parrhasius, Erasmus and Pierius Valerianus said of him. But the worst of all is, that one may think he did so far blunder as to say in the same Page, that Thomas Phedrus is the true Author of a Book which Curtius Inghiramius composed. To conclude, the wrong Orthography of Vossius has been the occasion of Konig's (h) multiplying an Author into two: he gives us Thomas Fædrus as a different Author from Thomas Phædrus, and refers us to Hallervord.

(f) Voss. de Hist. Lat. l. 1. c. 9. in fine, p. 41.

(g) Placcius, de scriptis anonymis, in Appendice p. 30.

(h) See his Biblioth. vetus & nova p. 310, & 628.

(A) Namely, two Obelisks in the Temple of the Sun.] Sir John Marsham (i) thinks they are both at Rome, and that one of them is that which Sixtus V. caused to be set up before St. Peter's Church. He thinks also that Caligula caused one of those Obelisks to be carried to Rome. He relies upon some Passages of Pliny, which do not signifie such a thing. Here are the Words of Pliny, according to Father Hardouin's Edition, wherein the wrong Reading, which Sir John Marsham followed, has been corrected. (k) Tertius (obeliscus) Romæ in Vaticano Caii & Neronis principum Circo, ex omnibus unus omnino fractus est imitatione ejus, quem fecerat Sesostridis filius Nuncoreus. Ejusdem remanet & alius centum cubitorum, quem post cæcitatem visu reddito, ex oraculo Soli sacravit. See how Sir John Marsham quotes that Passage. (l) Plinio appellatur Nuncoreus Sesostridis filius ille, qui Obeliscum centum cubitorum post cæcitatem (visu reddito ex oraculo) Soli sacravit. Ejusdem remanet & alius Romæ (in Vaticano Caii & Neronis principum Circo) ex omnibus unus omnino fractus est in molitione. And observe that Pliny (m) does not say that the Obelisk which was brought to Rome under the Empire of Caligula, was one of the two Obelisks of the Son of Sesostris.

(i) Marsham. Chron. Can. sectio 15. p. m. 413, 414.

(k) Plin. l. 36. c. 11. p. m. 299.

(l) Marsh. ub. sup.

(m) Plin. l. 36. c. 9. p. 296, 297.

(B) That he may compare it with the false Copy of some Modern Writers.] I have nothing to say against Mr. Chevreau, for he has not falsified (n) the Narration of Herodotus. 'Tis true, that he adds a Circumstance to it, viz. That the Woman who restored Pheron's Sight was a Gardener's Wife, but that Addition is of no consequence: besides, an Ancient Historian (o) whom he does not quote, says that she was a Gardener's Wife. I don't blame the Reflection which follows that History in the Chevræana. Any Author, who relates what he has read, may add some Moral Reflections to it: he must only take care that the Reader be not at a loss to know whether those Reflections are his, or whether they are ascribed to the Author that has been quoted. Mr. Chevreau does not keep us in suspence; we easily apprehend that these following Words are his, and not Herodotus's: " (p) If there was a Pheron at " this Day, if the Remedy which cured him was " in use, and the same Punishment renewed, many " Women would not be afraid of starving with " Cold. „ This is a Gloss which suits the Text; for there is no doubt that this is a meer Story or Satyrical Invention against Women. I need not tell my Readers, 1. That there has been no Oracle that foretold, that a King having been Blind for the space of ten Years, should recover his Sight soon after. 2. That it is not true that the Urine of a Chast Woman did ever restore any one's Sight. Christians are persuaded that this whole Relation of Herodotus is a meer Fable, and a Story forged in the times of Ignorance, for the same end as the Apologues, or the Fictions of Æsop, I mean, to inspire Men with the fear of the Gods, and to censure Vice. They were sometimes attended with Railleries and sorry Jests against Women. This was not forgotten in the Story of Pheron; but some Modern Authors finding it too plain, and too carelessly drest, have been at the Charges of adorning it. It is to be found in the Saint-Evremoniana drest in this manner: " (q) That a King called Pheron having lost " his Sight, and asking the Oracle how he should " recover it, was ordered to use the Urine of a " Woman faithful to her Husband; that his own " Wife, and all the other Wives of his Kingdom " wanting that Virtue, he was obliged to dispatch " some Ambassadors to look for one in the Neighbouring Kingdoms; that after a long Search, " there was one found by chance who cured him; " that he caused his Wife to be burnt first, and " then married the Woman who had restored his " Sight; that she proved not so Chast afterwards, " and the King having ask'd her, why she had been " faithful to her first Husband, she ingenuously answered him, that she was never asked before. „ Let Boccacio and Douville make a Story as pleasant as ever they can, no Body can find fault with them for it. The Ground they work upon is altogether their own, and consequently they may flourish it as they please; but when an Author relates a Story which is to be found in the best ancient Writers that are extant, he is not allowed to adorn it with a new Dress, by adding to it some Circumstances

(n) See the 2. part of the Chevræana p. 395. of the Dutch Edit.

(o) Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. c. 59.

(p) Chevræana ib. p. 395.

(q) Saint Evremoniana p. 132, 133. of the Dutch Edit.

PHILETAS, a Grammarian, a Critick and a Poet, was born in the Isle of Cos, and lived in the time of Alexander the Great, and of Ptolemy I. of that Name, King of Egypt, who made him Preceptor of his Son Ptolemy * Philadelphus. He published several pieces of Poetry, whereof we have only some Fragments in Athenæus, and in some other (A) Ancient Authors who quoted him. He did so well succeed in Elegies, that many Authors gave him the second Rank in that sort of Poetry. It is not certain that Propertius, a good Judge of such things, was contented to give (B) him the second Rank. If we consider that Elegies were chiefly made use of on sorrowful Occasions, and about the Disgraces of Lovers, it cannot be denied that Philetas had a particular Talent to keep up by his Mien, and by his Out-side the Character of the Poems wherein he excell'd, and to prevent the want of Occasions which makes the Muses faint and languid. He was so little and so thin, that he was obliged to put some Lead (C) in his Shoes, lest the Wind should carry him away. He was not therefore liable to the Reproaches which Lent-Preachers are so often exposed to, when with a fresh and red Complexion they bewail the Corruption of the World, and the contempt of the Laws of Mortification. It would become them better, if they were as Lean as our Philetas. Besides, one may easily apprehend, that he had very often Reason to Sigh for the Cruelty of his ‡ Battis; for such an Air as his was, and a Body so wasted and so lean, that the least Wind could throw him down, was no very great Charm in point of Love. Perhaps this was the Reason of his great skill in Elegies. 'Tis very likely that he was seldom fortunate in his Amorous Attempts, and that he suffered continual Repulses. However, the Hectick and wasting Condition he was in, of which he died at last, was not ascribed in his Epitaph (D) to his good or ill luck in point of Love, but to his intent Studies: which would be much more advantageous to his Memory than it is, if he had spent his Time in things of great Moment; but the poor Man wore out his Strength and his Health † in running after the captious and intangled Sophisms of the Logicians, particularly after that which was called Mentiens, which was a meer (E) Childish Subtilty. 'Tis thought that stances lately invented. Yet this has been done in the Saint-Evremoniana. We are told that Mr. de St. Evremont (b) is not the Author of that Book, and he disowns it from the beginning to the end. Yet there are very good things in that Work, and they seem to have been exprest upon his Model; but whoever is the Author of it, Mr. de Vigneul Marville would freely give him this Advice: " (c) The " more Particularities, like those that are to be " found in Brantome, a Writer publishes, the more " he raises himself above common Writers, and " makes himself useful to the Publick. Those who " publish them, must only take care that they be " true and well grounded: FOR a Writer is not " allowed to invent Chimera's to adorn his History. ,,

I shall observe by the by, that this is not the first time that Authors and Booksellers have published some Works under the Name of Mr. de St. Evremont. That Trick begins to be worn out, and one cannot think of it without comparing that Illustrious Author with that Man to whom seven Women should say, (d) We will eat our own Bread, and wear out our own Apparel, only let us be called by thy Name to take away our Reproach.

(A) Ancient Authors who quoted him.] Parthenius (e) borrows from him the second of his Amorous Adventures. Stephanus Byzantinus quotes him in the Words ἴγναι & χαλιός. He is quoted three or four times in the Great Etymologicum. Stobæus mentions something of his Pægnia in the Discourse, which contains the Subjects of Consolation παραμυθητικά. I suppose that Philetas quoted by them is that of Cos; for it does not appear that Philetas of Ephesus, mentioned only by Suidas, wrote any Book. I will not say, as many do, that Claudian mentions Philetas in this Verse, Fors juvat audentes, Coi sententia vatis; for it is not (f) certain whether we ought to read Coi rather than Cei, or Chii, or Prisci.

(B) Gave him the second Rank . . . . . . It is not certain that Propertius . . . . . was contented to give him the second Rank.] I refer it to the Judgment of any one who considers these three Passages of Propertius:

Tu (g) satius memorem musis imitere Philetam,
Et non inflati somnia Callimachi.
Inter (h) Callimachi sat erit placuisse libellos,
Et cecinisse modis Coe poëta tuis.
Callimachi (i) manes & Coi sacra Philetæ
In vestrum quæso me sinite ire nemus.

I don't desire that these Passages should be understood in the Sense which Joseph Scaliger put upon them; for I think he is mistaken when he says that Propertius advises not to imitate the swoln Callimachus, and when instead of Coe poëta tuis, he reads pure poëta tuis, to conclude from thence that Propertius looks upon Philetas as a Poet whose Verses are the sweetest. I desire no such thing; I am sure that without such a help one may perceive that, all things duly considered, Propertius does not place Philetas beneath Callimachus. I don't know why Ælian (k) reckons Philetas amongst the Heroick Poets, nor why Lorenzo (l) Crasso makes Callimachus say, that Philetas obtains the second Rank in point of Elegy. He should have quoted Quintilian; Elegiæ princeps habetur Callimachus, says he Chap. 1. of the 10th Book of his Institutions, secundas confessione plurimorum Philetas occupavit. See also Proclus in the Abstracts of his Chrestomathia to be found in Photius (m).

(C) Some Lead in his Shoes.] He tied some Leaden Balls to his Feet, if we believe Athenæus (n), or soled his Shoes with Lead, if we believe the Authors transcribed by Ælian, (o) tho' he looks upon it as a meer Story. The Reason of his not believing it, is, that a Man who was not strong enough to resist the Wind, could by no means wear so heavy Shoes.

(D) In his Epitaph.] Athenæus has preserved that particular Fact. You run the hazard, says he (p), (speaking to a Curious Man, who never touched any Meat, without inquiring how long since it had the Name it went by) of wearing out your Life by such Inquiries, as Philetas wore out his in examining a Sophism; for that Study did so waste his Body, that he died of it. As it appears from this Inscription of his Sepulchre, &c. Muretus, in his Notes upon the first Elegy of the 3d Book of Propertius, stretches out the Testimony of Athenæus a little more than he should have done; for he makes that Author say, that Philetas lost his Sight with much Studying, and because he was vexed that he was not able to find out the Solution of a Sophism. Athenæus says nothing of that Vexation. If Muretus had said so out of Conjecture, I should not blame him for it; but one must always scruple to impute to any Body what they have not said. The Reader does not desire to confound our Paraphrases, and our Glosses and Conjectures, with the Text of the Ancient Authors quoted by us (z).

(E) A meer Childish Subtilty.] The Sophism which the Greeks called ψευδόμενον, is called Men-

* Suidas. See also Athen. l. 9. p. 401.

† Nec curtum Coo Callis imitata ... Ovid.

‡ Athen. l. ..., Suidas.

(b) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres. Febr. 1701. p. 145.

(c) Vigneul Marville, Memoires d'Histoire & de litterature, tom. 2. p. 150. of the Dutch Edit.

(d) Isaiah cap. 4. v. 1.

(e) Parthenius is quoted wrong in Moreri's Dictionary in the Art. of Philetas. Instead of in Erat. read in Erot. that is in Eroticis.

(f) See Barthius in Claud. Epist. ad Probin. p. 957.

(g) Propert. l. 2. Eleg. 34.

(h) Id. l. 3. El. 8.

(i) Id. l. 3. El. 1. There is another passage El. 6. l. 4. where he hints at these two Poets, and first at Philetas. Statius Silv. 2. l. 1. names Philetas before Callimachus.

(k) Ælian. var. hist. l. 1. c. 6.

(l) Istor. de Poet. Græc. p. 231.

(m) Phot. c. 239.

(n) Athen. l. 12. c. 12. p. 552.

(o) Ælian. var. hist. l. 9. c. 14. See also l. 10. c. 6.

(p) Κινδυνεύεις ἄν ποτε διὰ ταύτας τὰς φροντίδας ὥσπερ ὁ Κῷος Φιλητᾶς ζητῶν τὸν καλούμενον ψευδολόγον τῶν λόγων, ὁμοίως ἐκείνῳ διαλυθῆναι· ἰσχνὸς γὰρ πάνυ τὸ σῶμα διὰ τὰς ζητήσεις γενόμενος ἀπέθανεν, ὡς τὸ πρὸ τοῦ μνημείου αὐτοῦ ἐπίγραμμα δηλοῖ, Ξεῖνε, Φιλητᾶς εἰμί, λόγων ὁ ψευδόμενός με Ὤλεσε, καὶ νυκτῶν φροντίδες ἑσπέριοι. Est itaque periculum ne ob has curas aliquando ut Philetas Cous pervestigans rationem mentientem dictam exolutus pereas: Nam corpore ob id studium valde attenuato is obiit, quod insculptum ejus monumento declarat hoc epigramma, Hospes Philetas sum mendax & captiosa ratio Me perdidit, vespertinæque ac nocturnæ studiorum curæ. Athen. l. 9. p. 401.

(z) See the Rem. B. of the Article Pheron.

that he intitled one of his Poems Telephus, because it was his Father's Name. The Scholiast α upon Apollonius mentions it under that Title; but, according to Vossius pag. 401. of his Greek Historians, that Scholiast speaks of a Poem intitled Templum.

P H I L Y R A, Daughter of Oceanus, was so sensible of the Declaration of Love which Saturn made her, that she granted him the last Favours. Rhea, Saturn's Wife, knew nothing of it for some time; but at last suspecting something, she had a watchful Eye over those two Lovers, and surprised them in the Fact. Saturn put on (A) the Shape of a Horse to disguise himself; but Philyra was so confounded that she (B) left the Country, and wandred thro' the Mountains of the Pelasgi, where she was delivered of the Centaur Chiron β. She was so afflicted at the Birth of such a Child, made up of the Nature of a Horse, and of a Man, that she besought the Gods (C) to change her into something else. They heard her Prayers, and transformed her into γ a Tree.

P H I L I S T U S, a Greek Historian, born at Syracusa, had a great share in the Friendship of Dionysius the Tyrant, and λ did very much help him to establish his Power. He obtained of him the Government of the Citadel of Syracusa. Nay, 'tis thought that he lay with the Mother of that Tyrant, not without her Son's knowledge. He lost his Favour after he had married, without acquainting that Prince with it, the Daughter of Leptines μ his Brother, and being Banished, he pitched upon the Town of Adria for his Retirement. He was recalled after the Death of that Tyrant: those who persuaded young Dionysius to send for him, were contrary to Dion *, and feared that Plato would change the Mind of the Tyrant, and thought that none could be fitter than Philistus to cross that Philosopher. They were not mistaken; for as soon as Philistus was restored, he made it his business to oppose Plato, and moved the Tyrant to expel Dion ⸸. The latter found himself quickly in a capacity of making War against Dionysius, and besieged him in the Fortress of Syracusa, and beat the Fleet which Philistus brought to the assistance of the Besieged, † the first Year of the 107th Olympiad ‡. Some say that Philistus having (A) lost the Battle, killed himself; others say, that he fell into the Hands of his

α In Lib. 4. ap. Andr. Schottum in Procli Chrestom.

β Taken from Apollonius Argon. l. 2. v. 1235. & seq.

γ Viz. A Lime-tree. See the Rem. C.

λ Plut. in Dion. p. 962.

μ That is to say Brother of Dionysius.

* He was Brother of the second Wife of old Dionysius.

⸸ Taken from Plut. ub. sup. p. 962, 963.

† Id. ib. p. 970, 973.

‡ Diod. Sicul. l. 16. c. 16.

---

tiens by Cicero in the 2d Book de Divinatione. It is one of the most renowned Sophisms that Eubulides (a), Successor of Euclid, produced. It consisted in certain Terms which seem to destroy one another, or as Africanus the Civilian says (b), it is a way of Reasoning qua quicquid verum esse constitueris, falsum esse reperietur. Here is an Example of it (c): If you say that you Lye, and if by saying so you speak Truth, you Lye: But you say that you Lye, and herein you speak the Truth; Therefore you Lye when you speak Truth. It is a Syllogism whereby you prove that a Man does not speak Truth, for that very Reason that he speaks it. One may make the same Sophism by supposing that a Man who Perjures himself, Swears that he Perjures himself; for at one and the same time he Swears Truth, and consequently he does not Perjure himself; and he Swears a Falsity, and consequently he Perjures himself. They drew the same contradictory Consequences from what was said by Epimenides, a Cretian Poet, that all Cretians were Lyars. The Stoicks fell headlong into those false Subtilties of the Sect of Megara. Our Modern Logicians use sometimes the Propositions which they call seipsas falsificantes; such as this is, semper mentior, I Lie always. A little Judgment is sufficient to know the illusion of that sort of Sophisms; yet Aristotle (d) declares very seriously, that the Sophism called Mentiens is a very perplexing one. I am not so well pleased to hear him say so, as to see Seneca (e) laugh at the great number of Books that were made upon that Sophism. Quid me detines in eo quem tu ipse pseudomenon appellas, de quo tantum (f) librorum compositum est? ecce tota mihi vita mentitur, hanc coargue, hanc ad verum, si acutus es, dirige. See the Rem. D. of the Art. Euclid.

(A) Saturn ...... put on the Shape of a Horse.] Virgil adds, that he run away as fast as ever he could, and that Mount Pelion (g) rung all over with his Neighing:

> Talis (h) & ipse jubam cervice effundit equina
> Conjugis adventu pernix Saturnus, & altum
> Peliona hinnitu fugiens implevit acuto.

This is not unlikely, for a Husband surprised by his Wife in the Fact, is exposed to such a shower of hard Words, and to such Scoldings, that the best thing he can do is to run away. Some say that Saturn (i) put on the Shape of a Horse to enjoy Philyra. The Presence of his Wife was not therefore the Reason of it. Perhaps he used that Trick out of Precaution: he was afraid of the Vigilance of Rhea, and so he was resolved before-hand to deceive her.

(B) Philyra was so confounded that she left the Country.] Authors don't agree about the Scene of this Act. Some place it (k) in Thrace, others in (l) Thessaly, others in an Island of the Euxine Sea. Apollonius (m) follows the last Opinion; he says Philyra run away as far as Thessaly, from whence you may judge how much asham'd she was.

> Ἠ' (n) δ' αἰδοῖ χῶρόν τε καὶ ἤθεα κεῖνα λιποῦσα
> Ὠκεανὶς Φιλύρη, εἰς οὔρεα μακρὰ Πελασγῶν > Ἦλθ'.
> Sed loco & sedibus illis relictis pudore
> Philyra Oceani filia in celsos Pelasgorum montes > Migravit.

Some pretend that Saturn (o) changed her into a Mare, to save her the shame of her Fault. Note, that he was then in prosperity: he enjoyed (p) his Kingdom, his Son Jupiter was still a Nursing; but some will have it that even after he was Dethroned, and after he retired into Italy, he plunged himself into the same Debauchery:

> Advena (q) quos profugus gignens, & equina libido
> Intulit Italiæ: Tuscis namque ille puellis
> Primus adhinnivit simulato numine mœchus.
> Mox patre deterior silvosi habitator Olympi
> Juppiter, incesta spurcavit labe Lacænas.

Which is likely enough; for as I have observed in another place, the Banishment of Lewd Kings is not a remedy for Love. That Passage of Prudentius does not agree with these following Verses:

> Credo (ſ) pudicitiam Saturno Rege moratam
> In terris visamque diu: cum frigida parvas
> Præberet spelunca domos, ignemque laremque
> Et pecus & dominos communi clauderet umbra.

(C) She besought the Gods to change her into something else.] Hyginus pretends that she addrest herself to Jupiter: but because Apollonius observes that Chiron was born during the Infancy of Jupiter, 'tis better to say that Philyra had not recourse to him; for it is not at all likely that she staid till he became Master of Heaven, after he had expelled Saturn from it. (t) Philyra postquam inusitatam speciem se peperisse vidit, petit ab Jove ut se in aliam speciem commutaret, qua in arborem Philyram hoc est tiliam commutata est.

(A) That Philistus killed himself, others say that his Enemies caused him to be cruelly put to Death.] The best thing I can do is to set down the Account which Plutarch gives of it: "(a) Those who took "Philistus Prisoner, used him in a most barbarous "and cruel manner. Ephorus relates, that when he "saw that his Ship was taken, he slew himself. But "Timonides, who from the Beginning of the War "was with Dion in all the considerable Actions, "writing to Speusippus the Philosopher, relates the "Story, That Philistus's Galley running a-ground, "he was taken Prisoner alive, and first dis-armed, "then

(a) Diog. Laert. l. 2.

(b) L. qui quadring. 88. ad leg. Falc.

(c) See Cicero Academ. 4.

(d) Ethic. Nicom. l. 7. c. 3.

(e) Seneca, Ep. 45.

(f) Chrysippus wrote 11. Books on that Subject. Diog. Laert. in ejus vita.

(g) A Mountain in Thessaly.

(h) Virg. Georg. l. 3. v. 92.

(i) Pherecydes ap. Scholiast. Apollonii in l. 2. v. 1237.

(k) Hygin. c. 138.

(l) Philargyrius in Virgil. Georg. l. 3. v. 93.

(m) Apollon. l. 2. v. 1236.

(n) Id. ib. v. 1242.

(o) Adventante uxore se in equum, illam in equam convertit, atque ita uterque effugerunt. Philargyr. ub. sup.

(p) Apollon. ib. v. 1237.

(q) Prudent. in Symmach. l. 1. v. 56.

(ſ) Juven. Sat. 6. init.

(t) Hygin. c. 138.

(a) Plut. in Dion. p. 973.

his Enemies, who caused him to be cruelly put to Death. He was a Man of Merit, if we consider only his Wit, his Learning, and his Writings, and even ‡ his Bravery: but his Moral Qualities are not to be praised, since he made use of his Talents to hide † under some fair pretences the Unjustice of Tyranny. There would be some Generosity in his Conduct, if it (B) had not been mixed with Self-Love. Of all the Books he wrote (C), his History of (D) Sicily was most esteemed. He imitated the

‡ See the Rem. A.

† See the Rem. B.

"then stripped and exposed stark naked, that an "old Man, to all sorts of Scorn and Contumely; "afterwards they cut off his Head, and gave the "Rabble his Body, who dragg'd it along the Acradina, and then threw it into a Common-shore. Timeus upbraiding him, adds further, that the Boys "tied him by his lame Leg, and so drew him thro' "the Streets of the City, while the Syracusians insulted over his Carcass, to see him tied by the "Leg, who said, It would not become Dionysius to "be beholden to the swiftness of his Horse to fly "from his Throne, but rather to be dragged from "thence by the Heels; tho' Philistus relates, that "this was said to Dionysius by another (b), and "not by himself." Diodorus Siculus (c) is one of those who relate, that Philistus killed himself for fear of falling into the Hands of the Enemies, and to avoid the Torments and the Ignominy they would have exposed him to. Note, That the Fight was obstinate, (d) and that Philistus had the advantage in the beginning, by reason of his great Bravery: but at last he was surrounded with many Ships of the Enemies, who used their utmost endeavours to take him. The same Historian (e) relates, that his dead Body was most ignominiously used, and left unburied. He observes, 1. That Philistus did very great Services to the two Dionysius's, and with a much greater Fidelity than all the rest of their Friends. 2. That the Tyrant finding no Body that was worthy to fill up the Place vacant by the Death of Philistus, the most valiant of his Friends, began to despond, and offered one half of his Kingdom, and then his whole Crown to Dion. 3. That Philistus (f) shewed a great Courage in a Land-Expedition, and that young Dionysius gave him the Command of all his Forces, as soon as he heard that the Syracusians had promoted Heraclides, a great Friend of Dion, to the same Employment.

(B) Some Generosity in his Conduct, if it had not been mixed with Self-Love.] Dionysius the Tyrant loved, and bestowed several Benefits upon him, and afterwards banished him. It is a common thing for an Historian to follow the Resentment of a present Injury, rather than the Remembrance of past Favours; I mean, that if he writes his History during the Banishment which his Patron and Benefactor condemned him to, he blames him more than he praises him. Philistus did quite otherwise; he wrote a History during his Disgrace, and said nothing in it whereby it appeared that he hated Dionysius; on the contrary, he had a great regard for him, and excused and praised him. One would have thought that he wrote at Syracusa, being in that Prince's Favour, and enjoying the noble Employments he had obtained of him. If the good Offices which Princes receive from the Pen of an Historian, to the prejudice of Truth, were sometimes to be commended, none should better deserve it, than those that are done by an Historian to a Prince who has banished him. It is a Sign of a great Soul to preserve more carefully the Remembrance of a Favour, than the Remembrance of an Injury; but because Philistus flattered Dionysius in hopes of being recalled to Syracusa, that personal Interest, that mixture of Self-Love spoils his Action, and we must by no means excuse him, as (g) Pausanias did.

(C) Of all the Books he wrote.] Suidas (h) ascribes to him a Treatise concerning Oratory; Ægyptiaca in 12 Books; Res Siculæ in 11 Books; some Orations, and one amongst others concerning the City of Naucratis; the History of Dionysius the Tyrant; three Books about the Theology of the Egyptians; a Treatise concerning Libya and Syria. He observes first of all that Philistus was born at Naucratis, or at Syracusa; which makes me suspect that he makes but one Author of two. There are many Works in his Catalogue, which do not seem to have been written by our Philistus, and I should willingly ascribe them to another Philistus born at Naucratis. The Jesuit Ragusa (i) who quotes Constantin Lascaris, admits of two Philistus's, the one of Syracusa or Naucratis, and the other of Syracusa. The first, says he, was related to Dionysius the Tyrant, and died in a War against the Carthaginians: he wrote several things concerning Sicily. The second was banished by old Dionysius, and composed in his Banishment a good part of his History. Plura scripsit de rebus Ægyptiacis lib. 12. de Sicanicis lib. 11. item de Bacchis: de Theologia Ægyptiorum lib. 6. de Syria & Libya. This Author confounds the Matter; for admitting of two Philistus's, he divides what he should have left intire for either of them, he changes the (k) Circumstances, and ascribes to the Syracusian what it had been better to ascribe to him, whose Native Country is doubtful.

(D) His History of Sicily was most esteemed.] It was divided into two parts; the first (l) contained in 7 Books, the History of above 800 Years, and ended with the taking of Agrigentum, that is, in the 3d Year of the 93d Olympiad; for that City was then taken by the Carthaginians. The second Part which contained 4 Books, began (m) with the Reign of old Dionysius, that is, where the first ended; for that Dionysius made himself Master of Syracusa the Year after the taking of Agrigentum. These are the eleven Books Rerum Sicularum which Suidas ascribes to Philistus; but besides, he ascribes to him the particular History of the Tyrant Dionysius in 6 Books. Vossius pretends that Cicero in the Passage which I am going to quote, has only regard to the above-mentioned Division, viz. That of the History of Sicily into two Parts; one whereof contained 7 Books, and the other 4: (n) Siculus ille (Philistus) capitalis, creber, acutus, brevis, pene pusillus Thucydides: sed utros ejus habueris libros (duo enim sunt corpora) an utrosque, nescio. Me magis de Dionysio delectat: ipse est enim veterator magnus & perfamiliaris Philisto Dionysius. The Opinion of Vossius is perhaps very reasonable; but it may be also that Cicero placed, on the one hand, the general History of Sicily, and on the other, the particular History of the Tyrant Dionysius, mention'd by Suidas. Dionysius Halicarnasseus seems to be a little more favourable to those, who should say, that the History of the Tyrant does not differ from the 2d part of the History of Sicily, than to those who should say the contrary (o). However, Cicero was pleased with our Philistus considered as an Historian, and consequently they who despised him may be looked upon as Men who had a depraved Taste, or were too Nice. (p) Dionysii mater ejus qui Syracusanorum tyrannus fuit ut scriptum apud Philistum est, & doctum hominem & diligentem & æqualem temporum illorum, quum prægnans hunc ipsum Dionysium alvo contineret, somniavit se peperisse Satyriscum. Those who will weigh the Praises which Cicero bestowed upon Thucydides, will lay great stress upon his declaring immediately after, that Philistus has very well imitated Thucydides: (q) Hunc consecutus est Syracusius Philistus, qui quum Dionysii tyranni familiarissimus esset otium suum consumpsit in historia scribenda, MAXIMEQUE Thucididem est, sicut mihi videtur, IMITATUS. Quintilian (r) says that Philistus is clearer than Thucydides: which is a fine Encomium; for Obscurity is a great Fault, and it may very well balance the advantage which some think Thucydides has over Philistus. Perhaps, if we could compare their Writings together, we should find that Dionysius Halicarnasseus (s) placed Thucydides a little too much above Philistus. However, this may be said for the Honour of Philistus, that he was called The little Thucydides by Cicero. Those who styled a Comedian of Paris, the little Moliere, designed to bestow no small Encomium upon him.

I shall observe two Faults, which have been committed upon the pene pusillus Thucydides: One of them was criticized by Vossius, and the other by a Jesuit. A learned Commentator was of opinion, that Philistus was so called by Cicero, because he wrote but little in comparison of Thucydides. It is a Mistake. (a) Id referri eo minime debet quod præ Thucydide pauca admodum scripserit, qua (1) Pauli Manutii sententia est, (nam longe aliud apparet ex iis qua

(b) Diod. Sicul. l. 14. c. 8. p. 571. supposes that Philistus said so.

(c) Diod. Sicul. l. 16. c. 16. p. m. 748.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Id. ib. p. 747.

(g) Εἰ δὲ καὶ Φίλιστος αἰτίαν δικαίαν εἴληφεν, ἐπελπίζων τὴν ἐν Συρακούσαις κάθοδον ἀποκρύψασθαι τῶν Διονυσίου τὰ ἀνοσιώτατα. Nam si Philistus venia dignus habetur, qui cum Syracusas se restitutum iri speraret multa Dionysii flagitia dissimulavit. Pausanias l. 1. p. 13.

(h) Suidas in Φίλιστος.

(i) Hieron. Ragusa in Elogiis Siculorum p. 232, 233.

(k) Philistus who died in the War, did not fight with the Carthaginians, but against the Troops of Dion of Syracusa.

(l) Diod. Sic. l. 13. c. 103. p. m. 554.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) Cic. ad Quint. Frat. Ep. 12. l. 2.

(o) See Dionys. Halicarn. Ep. ad Pompeium p. m. 261.

(p) Cic. l. 1. de Divin. fol. 307. A.

(q) Id. l. 2. de Oratore, fol. 73. D.

(r) Philistus quoque meretur qui turbæ quamvis bonorum post hos authorum eximatur, imitator Thucydidis, & ut multo infirmior ita aliquatenus lucidior. Quintil. l. 10. c. 1. p. m. 469.

(s) Dionys. Halic. Ep. ad Pomp. p. 261, & 262. See also p. 190.

(a) Vossius de Hist. Græcis l. 1. c. 6. p. 27.

(1) Notis ad eum Ciceronis locum.

the concise Style of Thucydides, and avoided Digressions (F) to an excess. The Historian [illegible] sed quia non paulo quidem inferior sit Thucydide, ut Fabius (a) quoque censet, attamen imitatur eum non infeliciter. An Author, who made a Collection of the Mistakes of Great Men, fancied that Cicero spoke of Thucydides with great Contempt, and called him Little Thucydides. Here is the Refutation of that Over-sight. (b) Ille fere palàm hallucinatum fuisse Ciceronem dixit, qui de erroribus magnorum virorum scripsit, illius sententia ut hic illius liber in manus meas incidit. In pagina nonagesima extrema ait, Thucydidem historicum videri ne enarratorem quidem interdum, idemque pene pusillum Ciceroni dictum. Non animadvertit scriptor, tam prorsus aliud agens, neque quemquam ab illis vocari solere pene parvum, aut pene magnum, sed omnino parvum, aut magnum; neque ibi apud Tullium, ubi pene pusillus Thucydides dicitur, usurpari hoc de Thucydide. Father Vavasseur shews afterwards that Cicero means our Philistus.

I must make another Observation. Cicero says that he was better pleased with the History of Dionysius, than with the other History, because Dionysius was a very Crafty Man, and lived familiarly with that Historian. Vossius being afraid that it would give occasion to speak ill of Cicero, takes care to clear the Matter. Cicero, says he, does not praise the intention of Philistus, he only minds in that History the use that can be made of the knowledge of the Craft of that Tyrant. (c) Non animum Philisti laudavit Tullius, sed utilitatem libri prædicavit: atque id imprimis quidem propter prudentiam quam ex vafri adeo tyranni vita capere esset: sed & propter dictionem quam Thucydidea æmulam fuisse etiam ex secundo de oratore cognoscimus, ac propterea idem in Bruto, &c. These last Words are altogether needless, not to say worse; for the Question was not to excuse Cicero, because he took pleasure in the reading of Philistus; but because he was better pleased with the History of the Tyrant Dionysius. It is nothing to the purpose to say, that Philistus wrote well. We don't know whether that Talent was more conspicuous in his History of Dionysius, than in the other. We may therefore say, that Vossius had rather make way for a Transition, than argue as he should have done. Those who know how difficult it is to write in a coherent manner, I mean so as to manage Transitions well, and yet to observe very exactly the Precisions of Logick, will less wonder, that Faults of the nature of that of Vossius, should be so frequent in Authors.

To conclude, Vossius's Apology for Cicero is very solid. Any Curious Man, especially if he meddles with the Affairs of the Common-wealth, will be of that Illustrious Roman's Mind, without acting against Probity. He will rather chuse to read the particular History of a cunning Politician, who is a very wicked Man, and a bold and crafty Usurper, than general Histories, especially when the Writers of it were familiarly acquainted with the Tyrant. If it be said that they will misrepresent things, and give a good turn to the Crimes of their Hero, as Philistus practised it: I answer, that an understanding Reader will discover those Artifices, and make a good use of them. I don't question but several Persons would part with four or five ancient Authors that are extant, in order to recover that only Book of Philistus. We should find a great many things in it, that are unknown to us. We know very little of Dionysius the Tyrant, besides his cruel Actions, and his Diffidence; which is but a very small part of his Picture. A Man who makes himself Master of a potent Republick, and maintains himself many Years in his Usurpation, notwithstanding a thousand Obstacles, is commonly a Man that has many good Physical Qualities. We are ignorant of that mixture with respect to that Dionysius, we have no particular Account of his Conduct, and of many Faults of the Syracusans. It would be an useful thing to see how Philistus described all those things: The Maxim Interest Reipublicæ cognosci malos, ought to reach as far as that. Who hears but one Party, knows nothing, or cannot judge right; and if he should judge right, it would be only by chance.

(E) He avoided Digressions to an Excess.] It is a Fault to delight in rambling from one's Subject; the Historian Theopompus was justly (d) blamed for it: but it does not follow that it is a vertue never to leave the main Subject; on the contrary it is to ever do a good thing (e), and to spoil it. There is a Medium between those two Extremes, as Theon judiciously observes. (f) [illegible] Neque enim oportet simpliciter fugere digressiones, quod Philistus fecit: quia in his animus auditorum acquiescit. Verum illas, quæ adeo sunt prolixæ, ut abducant auditorum animos, ut necesse sit ea, quæ ante dicta sunt, in memoriam revocari: ejusmodi digressionibus utitur Theopompus in Philippicis. You see that he blames Philistus for making no Digressions, and says that they are sometimes necessary, and serve as so many Resting-Places. He is in the right, a little Variety is necessary in all ingenious Works, and it is observed, that the most regular Writers are not read with the greatest pleasure. I could mention some Histories, which make the Reader Gape, and even Sleep, tho' they are written with an exact Observation of all the Rules of Art; tho' their Style be grave, concise, correct and sententious; tho' the Narration be free from Incidents and trifling Niceties; no Particulars, no Excursions; those Authors are always upon the streight Line, because (g) it is the shortest. Some other Writers, who sometimes lay aside their Gravity, either with respect to the Language, or to the Subject, and make no scruple to go out of the way to take in an Episode, write a History that never tires the Reader. He goes thro' it before he is weary of it. I shall not examine whether it be a Proof of one of these two things, rather than of the other, either that the Rules, or the Judgment of the Reader, are false. I insist upon the Fact, and refer myself to the Remark of a Man of a very good Taste. "What a "prodigious distance, says he (h), there is between "a fine Work, and a perfect or regular Work! "I don't know whether there has been any yet of "the latter sort. It is, perhaps, less difficult for a "rare Genius to attain to Greatness and Sublimity, "than to avoid all manner of Faults. The Cid had "but one Voice at its Birth, viz. that of Admiration; it prevailed over Authority and Policy, "which endeavoured in vain to destroy it; it re-"united in its favour those that are always divid-"ed in their Opinions and Sentiments, Great Men "and the common People; they all agree in learn-"ing it by heart, and in preventing the Actors up-"on the Stage when they recite it. To conclude, "the Cid is one of the finest Poems that can be "made; and one of the finest Censures that ever "was made of any Subject, is that of the Cid.". This is the finest Example that can be alledged of the Insufficiency of the Rules. The Author of the Cid observed almost none of them. The French Academy declared him an Infringer of them; yet he charmed, and charms still the Publick. He lost his Cause before the Masters, but he carried it every where else: he appeal'd to the People, as that Horatius who killed his Sister, and caused the Sentence of the Judges to be revoked by that Tribunal. Montagne's Essays are another Example of a happy Irregularity. Whoever should undertake to make that Book very Methodical, would deprive it of its chief agreeableness.

To conclude, I am not so much concerned in vindicating Digressions, as one might think; for the Historical Part of this Work is a thousand times more agreeable to the manner of Philistus than to that of Theopompus; and as for my Commentary, I need not make an Apology for the Digressions contained in it. It is a sort of Work which requires or naturally bears them. It is a Compilation, 'tis what we call Miscellanea. Variety is essential to that sort of Compositions, and it ought chiefly to be allowed to those who (i) cannot hope to prevent any other way the weariness of the Reader. Note, that a Digression cannot be said to be too long, only because it fills up many Pages, but when every part of it takes up too much room; for though you be never so short upon every one of them, the Conjunction of many will make you prolix. (k) Solet enim esse quædam partium brevitas quæ longam tamen efficit summam. I make use of that Thought of Quintilian in another Sense than he.

(a) Lib. 10. c. 1.

(b) Franc. Vavassor de Ludicra Dictione p. 156, 157.

(c) Vossius ubi sup. p. 27.

(d) See the Art. of Theopompus in the Remarks.

(e) Insani sapiens nomen ferat, æquus iniqui, Ultra quam satis est virtutem si petat ipsam. Horat. Epist. vi. l. 1.

(f) Theon in Progymnasm. c. 4. p. m. 44.

(g) A puncto ad punctum linea recta est omnium brevissima.

(h) La Bruyere the Characters of this Age, in the Chap. concerning Ingenious Works, p. m. 75, 77.

(i) Liber fuit & opusculis varius & metris: ita solemus qui ingenio parum fidimus satietatis periculum fugere. Plin. Ep. 21. l. 8.

(k) Quint. l. 4. c. 2. p. m. 183.

Historian Timæus used him very ill. Plutarch cenſures him for it, (F) tho' on the other hand he blames Ephorus for having beſtowed ſome Praiſes upon Philiſtus.

PHILLA, one of the moſt illuſtrious Ladies of Antiquity, was Daughter of Antipater, Governor of Macedonia during the Abſence of Alexander. She was a † very Witty Woman, and very fit to manage great Affairs. She did ſo dexterouſly behave herſelf, according to the ſeveral Humours of thoſe whom ſhe was to bring or keep to their Duty, that ſhe hindred an Army full of factious and turbulent Men from making an Inſurrection: She married poor Maids at her own Charges, and oppoſed the Oppreſſors of Innocency with ſo much vigour, that ſhe ſecured many Perſons who were upon the point of being oppreſt by their Calumniators. Her Capacity was not the Fruit of Experience; for being but a young Maid, ſhe was conſulted about Affairs of the greateſt Moment by her Father Antipater, one of the wiſeſt Politicians of that Time ‡. We might know the Particulars of that Princeſs's Capacity §, if we had all the Books of Diodorus Siculus; but we have loſt that part of his Hiſtory which contained them. Philla married γ firſt Craterus δ, who of all the Captains of Alexander was moſt beloved by the Macedonians. After the Death of Craterus ſhe married ζ Demetrius, and was the cheif (A) of her ſecond Husband's Wives; but ſhe had no great ſhare in his Love: He was a voluptuous Prince η, who kept ſeveral Miſtreſſes at the ſame time, ſome of whom had frequented Bawdy-Houſes. He grew weary θ of Philla under pretence that he was younger than ſhe; yet he was extremely fond of the Curtezan κ Lamia, tho' ſhe did begin to decline. Philla died after a Tragical manner; for when ſhe heard that Demetrius had loſt his Dominions, ſhe had not the Courage to ſee him as a miſerable Fugitive, λ but ſhe poiſoned herſelf, curſing the Fortune of her Husband, who had been leſs Conſtant in her Favours to him, than in her ill Uſage *. She had by him τ a Son, and the famous ζ Stratonice, who was Seleucus's Wife, and whom Seleucus yielded to his Son Antiochus ξ. A Niece of the Deceaſed (B) did quickly take up her Place.

PHILOMELUS, General of the Phoceans, in the beginning of the War that was called Sacred, found no better Expedient to reſiſt the Enemies (*A*Δ) of his Country, than to invade the Temple of Delphos. He took a Journey to Lacedæmon to impart his Deſign to Archidamus ‡, who anſwered him, That he could not openly aſſiſt him in his Undertaking, but that he would ſecretly furniſh him α Diod. Sic. l. 19. c. 6?. p. 1?1?.

† Id. ib. p. ?14.
‡ See Diod. Sic. ib.
γ Id. ib. p. ?1?.
δ Plut. in Demetrio p. ?89. A. ζ Diod. Sic. ib. Plut. ib.
η Plut. ib.
θ Id. ib. p. 9?2. C.
κ See the Article Lamia, Rem. B.
λ Id. ib. p. 911.
* [illegible] Fortunam eius execrata quæ in adverſitatibus eſſet quam ſecundis rebus ſtabilior, atque hauſto veneno extincta eſt. Id. ib.
τ Id. ib. p. 90?. E. His Name was Antigonus. Id. ib. p. 915.
ζ Id. ib. p. 903. D.
ξ Id. ib. p. 907.
‡ He was King of Lacedæmon.

(F) Plutarch cenſures Timæus, tho' on the other hand he blames Ephorus, &c.] "But Timæus takes "this occaſion, and truly a juſt one, of his zealous "and conſtant adherence to the Tyranny, to vent "his own Spleen and Malice againſt him. Thoſe "indeed who were injured by him are the more "excuſable, if they expreſt their Reſentment to his "dead Body; but thoſe who write his Hiſtory after his Death, and were no way wronged by him "in his Life-time, but have had the advantage of "his learned Writings, in Honour ought not with "opprobrious and ſcurrilous Language upbraid him "for thoſe Misfortunes, which many times by unhappy Accidents have befallen even the beſt of "Men. On the other ſide, Ephorus is as much out "of the way in the laviſh Encomiums he beſtows "on Philiſtus; for tho' he is very good at diſguiſing baſe and unworthy Actions, with fair and "colourable Pretences, and in his Expreſſions is "very Florid and Rhetorical, yet when he has "done his beſt, he can never acquit him of the "Imputation he lies under, of being of all Mankind the moſt zealous Aſſertor of Arbitrary Government, and that no Man ever more induſtriouſly promoted, or fondly admired the Luxury, "Power, Riches and Alliances of ſuch as made "themſelves abſolute Princes. But between both "theſe Extreams, he that neither praiſes Philiſtus "for his Faults, nor inſults over his Misfortunes, "ſeems to me beſt to conſult his own Credit, and "perform the part of an Hiſtorian (ζ)". What Plutarch ſays of thoſe Alliances of Tyrants may be confirmed by theſe Words of Cornelius Nepos: (a) Philiſtum Hiſtoricum Syracuſas reduxit hominem amicum non magis tyranno quam tyrannidi: and by theſe Words of Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus: Philiſtus Thucydidem ſequitur moribus exceptis: hic enim liber eſt & animi magnitudinis ac gravitatis plenus: ille tyrannorum & aliorum cupiditati plus nimio ſubſervit (b).

(A) And was the chief of Demetrius's Wives.] He had many at one and the ſame time: our Phylla: Euridice (c) iſſued from Miltiades, and Widow of Ophelles King of Cyrene: Deidamia (d) Daughter of Æacides King of Epirus, and Siſter of Pyrrhus. Phylla was moſt eſteemed and moſt in Credit. I with the Author who ſays ſo, had imputed that preference to the great Merit of that Lady; but he aſcribes it only to the Glory of Antipater and Craterus. (e) Πολλαῖς ἅμα συνὼν γυναιξὶν ἐν ἀξιώματι μέγιστον εἶχε καὶ τιμὴν Φίλλα, διὰ Ἀντίπατρον τὸν πατέρα, καὶ διὰ τὸ συνῳκηκέναι Κρατερῷ. Multas uno tempore conjuges habebat (Demetrius) quarum erat maxima in dignatione & honore Philla, tum propter patrem Antipatrum, tum quod etiam matrimonio juncta fuiſſet Cratero. I believe that Antigonus pitched upon her to be his Daughter-in-Law, conſidering that ſhe was a good Match for thoſe two Reaſons. Demetrius was very much diſpleaſed with it, by reaſon of the diſproportion of their Age; but his Father whiſpered to him in the Ear a Paſſage of Euripides, wherein he made ſome alteration. The meaning of it was, that a Man ought to marry a Woman in ſpite of Nature, when ſhe brings a good Portion. (f) Ἀπαξιοῦντος δ' ἐκείνου, λέγεται πρὸς τὸ οὖς Εὐριπίδειον εἰπεῖν, Ὅπου τὸ κέρδος, παρὰ φύσιν γαμητέον· ὁμοιόπτωτόν τι τῷ δουλευτέον ἀντιπαρεμβαλόντα. Abhorrenti vero dicitur in aurem hoc Euripideum inſuſurraſſe.

Ubi lucrum ſuadet, reluctetur licet
Natura, ducas conjugem.

Ubi Ducas conjugem, pro Servias, ſcitè ſubjecit. It is likely that Demetrius eſteemed Philla, and took care to give her ſome outward marks of his Eſteem, but that he kept her not for his Pleaſure. Note, that he (g) deputed her to Caſſander to juſtifie his Conduct towards Pliſtarchus, who complained very much of him. 'Tis a ſign that he thought his Wife was fit for a Negociation. Note alſo, that he grew very angry (h) becauſe the Rhodians gave the King of Egypt, a Ship which they had taken, wherein was the Letter which Philla writ to him, and the fine Goods ſhe ſent him.

(B) A Niece of the Deceaſed did quickly take up her place.] She was Daughter of Ptolemy and Euridice, Siſter of Philla, and her Name was Ptolemais (i). She had been betrothed to Demetrius (k) during the Life of Philla. He had a Son by her called Demetrius, who was afterwards King of Cyrene (l). 'Tis without doubt the ſame whom I have mentioned in the Article of Arſinoe.

(*A*Δ) To reſiſt the Enemies of his Country.] Viz. the Thebans: for they cauſed the Senate of the Amphictyones to lay an exorbitant Fine upon the Phoceans, and they were upon the point of ordering, that if it were not paid, the Lands of the Phoceans ſhould be forfeited to the profit of Apollo (m).

(ζ) Plut. in Dione p. 974.
(a) Corn. Nep. in vit. Dionyſ.
(b) Dionyſ. Halic. ub. ſup. p. 190.
(c) Plut. in Demetrio p. 894. E.
(d) Id. ib. p. 900. B.
(e) Id. ib. p. 894, 895.
(f) Id. ib. p. 895.
(g) Id. ib. p. 904. A.
(h) Id. ib. p. 898. See alſo Diod. Sic. l. 20. c. 94.
(i) Id. ib. p. 911. E.
(k) Id. ib. p. 904.
(l) Id. ib. p. 915.
(m) Diod. Sic. l. 16. c. 23.

him with Men and Money. With ſuch a Succour, Philomelus made himſelf Maſter of the Temple, and put to the Sword thoſe who oppoſed him. He was attackt ſoon after by the Locrians, and he beat them. He was ſo fluſht with that Victory, that he took the Decrees of the Amphyctions out of the Temple of Delphos, and forced the Prieſteſs to give him an Oracle. The Anſwer he received could not but be acceptable to him, for the Tenor of it was, That it was lawful for him to do any thing that he had a Mind to. He got an Act of that Revelation, and cauſed it to be read publickly, that every Body might know he ſhould act for the time to come under the Authority, and with the Approbation of God, whatever he ſhould undertake. He ſent ſome Ambaſſadors to all the Nations of Greece. The Athenians and Lacedemonians (A) made a Confederacy with him; but the Thebans and ſome others joyned in a League againſt him. Which occaſioned the Sacred War. Philomelus left the Treaſures of the Temple untouched; he was contented to lay great Taxes upon the Inhabitants of Delphos, who were grown Rich with the Spoils of the Devotion of other Nations. He took the Field with a great Army, and beat the Locrians. That Victory ſwelled his Courage, and abated that of the Vanquiſhed, but it increaſed the number of his Enemies. Therefore finding himſelf obliged to oppoſe greater Forces to them, he laid aſide the Thoughts of (B) reſpecting the Temple, and took great Treaſures from it. Having promiſed a great Pay to the Strangers that ſhould liſt themſelves under him, he eaſily raiſed many Troops, tho' * Conſcientious Men refuſed to ſerve under him. He entred into the Country of the Enemies, and had the advantage in the firſt Rencounters: but ſoon after there happened an Occaſion which forced him to maintain a running Fight thro' a very

* Τῶν δ' ἐπιεικῶν ἀνδρῶν οὐδεὶς ἀπεγράφετο πρὸς τὴν στρατείαν διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐσέβειαν· οἱ δὲ πονηρότατοι καὶ διὰ τὴν πλεονεξίαν ὀλιγωροῦντες τῶν θεῶν ἕτοιμοι συνέτρεχον πρὸς τὸν Φιλόμηλον. Modeſtorum tamen virorum nullus eam in militiam nomen ſuum eſt profeſſus, quòd pietas erga deum aliud ſuadebat. Interim deterrimus quiſque, deoſque lucri ſui gratiâ nauci habens, cupidè Philomelo ſeſe aggregat. Diod. Sic. l. 16. c. 30. p. 759. edit. Lat. in 8.

(A) The Athenians and Lacedemonians made a Confederacy with him.] We learn from this Hiſtory one of the Political Cuſtoms of States. We have already ſeen that (a) the King of Lacedemon, inſtead of diſſuading Philomelus from invading the Temple of Delphos, incouraged him to it, and inabled him to do it. Only he ſo managed the buſineſs, that it could not be proved that he had openly taken the Party of Philomelus. He took care that the Publick Authority ſhould not appear in the Succours of Men and Money wherewith he furniſhed the Phocean General. The Succeſs of that Enterprize being doubtful, it was without doubt a piece of Prudence not to expoſe the Glory of Lacedemon by ſome publick Steps againſt the Intereſt of Religion: but becauſe the Invaſion of that Temple was like to prejudice a Nation (b) which was then the moſt dreaded by all its Neighbours, it was a Political thing to favour the impious Deſign of thoſe who had a mind to ſubdue the Oracle of Delphos. Such was the cauſe of the Conduct of the King of Lacedemon. When that Deſign was executed, he pull'd off the Mask, and joyned openly in a League with Philomelus, tho' he was to have for his Enemies, thoſe who declared that they took up Arms to ſet the Oracle of Delphos at liberty, and to puniſh the Impiety and Sacrilege of the Phoceans. The Athenians and Lacedemonians ſhewed themſelves the moſt ready and zealous to maintain the Uſurpers of the Temple, either during the Life of Philomelus, who began to Plunder it, or during the Adminiſtration of his Succeſſors, who prophaned all its Treaſures, thoſe ancient and rich Monuments of the Piety of ſo many Princes and Nations. Nevertheleſs, the Cities of Athens and Lacedemon pretended to Religion. Feaſts, Vows and Sacrifices were great things amongſt 'em. Wo to any one that ſhould have had the boldneſs to ſay any thing againſt the Worſhip of the Gods: the greateſt Philoſopher in the World would have run the hazard of his Life, if he had been ſo bold. How comes it therefore to paſs, that thoſe two Cities ſupported and made a League with the Phoceans, who were guilty of an impious Action, and had prophaned and deſtroyed the greateſt Object of the Devotion of all Greece, and even of the Barbarians? The Reaſon of it is this: the Phoceans could not have been puniſhed for their Impiety, without letting the Glory and Power of the Thebans grow more formidable than before. But the Political Intereſt of the Athenians and Lacedemonians required that the Thebans ſhould be weakened: therefore, tho' the Intereſt of Religion required that the Phoceans ſhould be puniſhed, it was thought more expedient to ſupport and make a Confederacy with them againſt the Thebans, who were the Heads of a kind of Cruſade for the Liberty of Apollo. The Temporal Good of the State has been in all times preferred to Religion.

AN EXAMPLE ſhewing that the Temporal Good of the State is preferred to Religion.

Diodorus Siculus (c) obſerves, that the Phoceans furniſhed the Athenians and Lacedemonians with more Subſidies than it was neceſſary for the payment of the Troops. It was not therefore a chargeable Alliance, but it was a very odious one; for every Body knew that the Athenians and Lacedemonians had a ſhare in the profit of the Sacrilege. They furniſhed the Phoceans with Troops, and received from them a Subſidy more than ſufficient for the Pay of thoſe Troops. There happened another thing which gave occaſion to talk againſt the Athenians. Dionyſius Tyrant of Sicily, was ſending into Greece ſome Gold and Ivory Statues, which he deſigned to conſecrate in the Temples of Delphos and Jupiter Olympian. Iphicrates commanded then an Athenian Fleet near Corcyra. He took amongſt other Ships thoſe which carried the Statues, and ask'd his Maſters what he ſhould do with them. The People being met about it, made a Decree whereby Iphicrates was ordered not to examine ſo narrowly what concerns the Gods, but to take a ſpecial care of the Subſiſtence of the Troops. (d) Περιτυχὼν δὲ κομιζούσαις αὐτὰ ναυσὶν ὁ Ἰφικράτης καὶ κρατήσας αὐτῶν, διεπέμψατο πρὸς τὸν δῆμον, ἐπερωτῶν τί χρὴ πράττειν. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι προσέταξαν αὐτῷ μὴ τὰ περὶ τῶν θεῶν ἐξετάζειν, ἀλλὰ σκοπεῖν ὅπως στρατιῶται διατραφῶσιν. Iphicrates in naves, quæ dona votiva portabant, fortè fortuna incidens, in poteſtatem redactas Athenas mitteret, cum hac ſciſcitatione, quid facto nunc opus eſſet? populuſque contra, non ſcrupuloſè Deorum res examinare, ſed quomodo militem alat, providere, ipſum juberet. He underſtood ſo well the meaning of that Decree, that he cauſed all the Statues to be ſold, as well as the other Goods taken by his Capers. The (e) Athenians were ſeverely upbraided with it, and Diodorus obſerves, that they plundered Apollo by Sea and Land, tho' they acknowledged him to be their Founder. He obſerves likewiſe the fantaſtical Humour of the Lacedemonians, who pretended to be beholden to the Oracles of Apollo for their Glory and Proſperity, and yet made a Confederacy with the impious Men who plundered the Temple of Delphos. So the World goes, and ſo it will go. (f) Ἀθηναῖοι μὲν οὖν περὶ τὸ θεῖον τοιαῦτα ἔπραξαν, καὶ ταῦτ' εὐχόμενοι τὸν Ἀπόλλωνα πατρῷον αὐτῶν εἶναι καὶ πρόγονον. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ τῷ περὶ Δελφοὺς μαντείῳ χρησάμενοι, καὶ τὴν θαυμαζομένην παρὰ πᾶσι πολιτείαν διὰ τούτου κτησάμενοι, καὶ περὶ τῶν μεγίστων ἔτι καὶ νῦν τὸν θεὸν ἐπερωτῶντες, ἐτόλμησαν τοῖς τὸ ἱερὸν συλῶσι κοινωνῆσαι τῆς παρανομίας. Hæc tum Athenienſes in Numen committere non verebantur, qui tamen Apollinem Deum patrium & progenitorem ſuum eſſe gloriari ſolebant. Lacedæmonii etiam, quamvis Rempublicam ſuam cunctis gentibus admirabilem Delphici oraculi conſilio inſtituiſſent, deque rebus maximis (ut ad hanc uſque tempeſtatem factitant) Dei voluntatem exquirerent, cum profligatiſſimis tamen fani expilatoribus ſacrilegæ impietatis ſocietatem inire non dubitant.

(B) He laid aſide the Thoughts of reſpecting the Temple.] I ſhall quote Diodorus Siculus. (g) Ὁ Φιλόμηλος ἔκρινε μισθοφόρων ἀθροίζειν πλῆθος, προσδεόμενος δὲ τοῦ πολέμου χρημάτων πλειόνων, ἠναγκάζετο τοῖς ἱεροῖς ἀναθήμασιν ἐπιβαλεῖν τὰς

(a) In the Text of this Article.

(b) The Thebans.

(c) Diod. Sic. l. 16. c. 58.

(d) Id. ib. p. 453. The Latin Tranſlation of theſe Words in the Edit. in 8. is in the 781 page.

(e) See in Diod. Sic. ib. the Letter which Dionyſius the Tyrant writ to them.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Diod. Sic. l. 16. p. 430, 431. edit. Hanov. 1604.

very bad Way; so that being unwilling to be taken, and being not able to avoid it, but by killing himself, he precipitated himself from a Rock. Onomarchus, his Brother, succeeded him. His other Brother, Phayllus, succeeded Onomarchus. The latter made an end of Plundering the Treasures of the Temple. They used some caution at first; but at last they plunder'd it altogether, and the Athenians and Lacedæmonians departed not from their Alliance for all that §. These things happen'd in the Time of Philip of Macedonia, Father of Alexander the Great. The Historian who relates them, does not forget the Tragical (C) End of those who committed that Sacrilege.

Nay, He observes that the Divine Justice did severely pursue ß the Women who made bold to adorn themselves with the Ornaments taken by their Husbands from the Temple of Delphos; but he does not mention a Woman Dancer, to whom such a (D) Present proved very fatal. Justin observes, That tho' the Action of the Phoceans was abhorred by every body, yet they were less hated for it, than γ those who reduced them to that necessity δ. The Envy or Hatred of an infamous Action is commonly divided in such a manner, and that Distribution is not altogether unjust; for they who force a Man to do a desperate thing, act more freely than he. Pausanias makes an Observation which will not be improperly set down in this place. Philomelus, says he, having advised the Phoceans to plunder the Temple of Delphos, and having made use of several plausible Reasons, persuaded them to do it *, whether God had blinded them, or whether they naturally preferred Gain to Religion. He tells us, that ζ Philomelus was a Native of Ledon, a Town of Phocis, and that the Temple was plunder'd the fourth Year of the 105th Olympiad.

PHLEGON, surnamed η Trallianus, composed several Works, of which there is but (A) little extant. He was a Freed-Man of the Emperor Hadrian. Those who were of Opinion θ that he was Augustus's Freed-Man, had never read his Books. He lived, at least 'till the 18th Year of the Empire of Antoninus Pius, for he mentions § Taken from Diodorus Siculus, lib. 16. c. 23. & seq. ad Olympiadem 106.

ß See the Rem. A of the Article Callirhoe, at the end, and the Rem. D of the Art. Helena.

γ Viz. the Thebans.

δ Justin, lib. 8. c. 1.

* Εἴτε ἢ γνώμην σφίσι τῦ θεῦ βλάψαντος, εἴτε ϗ αὐτοῖς πεφυκόσιν ἐπίπροσθεν εὐσεβείας τὰ κέρδη ποιεῖσθαι. Sive quod mentem Deus à rectis consiliis avertisset, seu quod is populus suapte natura religioni solitus esset quæstum anteponere. Pausan. l. 10. p. 318.

ζ Id. ibid. p. 317.

η That is, born at Trallis, (a City of Lydia.)

θ Suidas in Φλέγων mentions that Opinion.

‡ The Year of Christ 156.

[illegible] ϗ συλᾶν τὸ μαντεῖον. (h) Philomelus majore conductitii militis robore se confirmare statuit. At quia majores bellum sumptus flagitabat, donariis sacris manus injicere coactus, templum deprædatur. It does plainly appear from these words, that Philomelus spared not the Treasures, or the ex voto and other Gifts of the Temple of Delphos. Nevertheless, Diodorus Siculus affirms the contrary in the same Book. I don't know whether that Contradiction was ever taken notice of. (i) Τῶν δὲ προγεγενημένων στρατηγῶν ὁ μὲν πρῶτος ἄρξας Φιλόμηλος ἀπέσχετο τῶν ἀναθημάτων, ὁ δὲ δεύτερος προσαγορευόμενος μὲν Ὀνόμαρχος ἀδελφὸς δ' ὢν Φιλομήλου πλεῖστα τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ χρημάτων κατεδαπάνησε, τρίτος δὲ Φάϋλλος ὁ ἀδελφὸς Ὀνομάρχου στρατηγήσας οὐκ ὀλίγα τῶν ἀναθημάτων κατέκοψεν εἰς τὰς τῶν ξένων μισθοφορίας. (k) Priorum sanè ducum, qui primus imperium gesserat, Philomelus à sacris templi donariis se continuerat, successor vero ejus & frater Onomarchus plurimum de consecratis Deo ad belli sumptus convertit. Tertius inde Phayllus Onomarchi frater, dum Prætoris munere fungitur, non pauca de repositis in templo, ad persolvendum conductitiis stipendia, concidit.

(C) Does not forget the tragical End of those who committed that Sacrilege.] This Observation of the Historian (a) ought not to be look'd upon as a superstitious one; for tho' the Temple of Delphos was consecrated to a false God, yet it was an impious thing, and a Sacrilege to plunder it, when they believed that Apollo was a true God. I own that none but the true God can change the nature of prophane things, they cannot become Sacred but by his Institution. Thus all the Gifts consecrated in the Temple of Apollo remain'd in their former state. The golden Tiles which King Crœsus (b) consecrated in it were nothing but Gold; it was as lawful to coin it, as it is to coin an Ingot that comes from the Mine; it was, I say, lawful for those who profess'd not the Religion of the Heathens: but they who believed that the Gifts of the Temple of Delphos were consecrated to God, could not invade 'em without committing a downright Sacrilege, which the true God, who is the only infallible Judge of the quality of humane Actions, and the only Dispenser of Rewards and Punishments, thought fit to punish; I speak of the Punishments which the Jews had deserv'd (c) if they had plunder'd the Temple of Solomon.

That the Reader may know how great was the Devotion of the Heathens towards their False Gods, I shall observe by the by, that the Gold and Silver taken out of the Temple of Delphos on that occasion, and turn'd into current Money, amounted to Ten (d) Thousand Talents (e). Some say that the Wealth which the Phoceans took out of it, equals what Alexander found since in the Treasures of King Darius (f).

(D) A Woman Dancer to whom such a Present.] That is, a Present taken out of the Spoils of the Temple of Delphos. Our Philomelus gave the Golden Crown of the Cnidians to Pharsalia, a Woman-Dancer. What a Destination was this, and how little agreeable to the Intention of the Cnidians! Non hos quæsitum munus in usus. What a Jump from the Vault of a Temple, to the Head of such a Woman! However, she had an ill Bargain on't: She went over from Greece into Italy, and one Day, as she was Dancing at Metapontum, in the Temple of Apollo, some young Men rush'd upon her Crown, and striv'd so hard to take away the Booty from one another, that they tore in pieces the Body of Pharsalia, as we read in (g) Plutarch.

(A) Composed several Works, of which there is but little extant.] He writ a History of the Olympiads, divided into sixteen Books. (h) It was an universal (i) History, which reached from (k) the first Olympiad, to (l) the 229. It is sometimes quoted under the Name of Olympiads, and sometimes under the Name of Chronicles. Photius joins those two Titles together, ἀνεγνώσθη, says he, (m) Φλέγοντος Τραλλιανοῦ . . . ὀλυμπιονικῶν ϗ χρονικῶν συναγωγή. Lecta mihi Phlegontis Tralliani . . . Olympicorum & Chronicorum collectio. Origen (n) and Maximus (o) have quoted it under the Title of Chronicles; Stephanus Byzantinus did the same (p), but he quoted it oftner under the Name of Olympiads. Salmasius (q) was of Opinion, that Phlegon's Chronicles were, perhaps, a Book by itself, and divided into eight Books. I don't know whether he would have said so, if he had taken notice of the Title mention'd by Photius, and of the Citations to be found in Origen and Maximus. The former quotes the 13th or 14th Book of the Chronicles, and the latter the 14th, to prove, by the Testimony of a Heathen, the same Matters of Fact which Eusebius relates (r) as being contain'd in the 13th Book of Phlegon's Olympiads. I don't think that these words of Suidas, τὰ πραχθέντα πανταχοῦ, res ubique gestæ, ought to be separated from what goes before, and only referr'd to what follows; for they do exactly suit with the History of the Olympiads which he mentions just before. But if I don't follow the Opinion of Salmasius (s) herein, I don't reject it as to this, viz. that Suidas meant that Phlegon composed another Work, divided into eight Books, which contain'd also τὰ πραχθέντα πανταχοῦ, res ubique gestas. It happens

(h) They who have no other Edition but the Latin one in 8o. 1611. will find this in the 30th Chapter of the 16th Book, p. 759.

(i) Id. Diodor. ib. p. 452.

(k) Pag. 780. of the Edit. in 8o.

(a) Ubi supra c. 57. p. 779, 780. (b) Id. ib. p. 780. (c) See the Pensée sur les Cometes, n. 118. See also these words of Seneca, lib. 7. c. 7. de Benef. Injuriam sacrilegus Deo quidem non potest facere, quem extra ictum sua divinitas posuit: sed punitur, quia tanquam Deo fecit. Opinio illum nostra, ac sua, obligat pœnæ.

(d) 'Tis about 20 millions of French Livres.

(e) Id. Diod. ib.

(f) Ib.

(g) Plut. de Pythiæ Oracul. p. 397, 398.

(h) Suidas in Φλέγων.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Phot. Biblioth. n. 97. p. 269.

(l) Suid. ib. Anonymus in descriptione Olymp.

(m) Phot. ib.

(n) Orig. l. 2. cont. Cels.

(o) Maxim. in Schol. ad Dionysii Areopag. Ep. 7. apud Meursium not. ad Phlegontem, p. 170.

(p) Vid. Meurs. ib. p. 169.

(q) Salmas. in Spartian. histor. Adriani c. 16. p. m. 151. tom. 1.

(r) See the Rem. D.

(s) Salmas. ib.

tions]; the Conſuls of that Year, which is the 152 Year after the Death of Auguſtus. He had a Freed-Man, who (B) was an Author. 'Twas thought that the Hiſtory of Hadrian, which (C) was publiſh'd under the Name of Phlegon, was written by Hadrian himſelf. *Phlegon ſpeaks of the Reſurrection of a Maid as an ocular Witneſs. See Mr. de Tillemont †. 'Tis pretended that he ſpoke of the (D) Darkneſs which happen'd during our Saviour's pens often, that a General Hiſtory is compoſed according to different Methods, by the ſame Author. Photius, who had read (t) the five firſt Books of Phlegon's Olympiads, ſets down a ſummary of the 177th Olympiad, where they ended. One may judge of the whole Piece by that Pattern, and it muſt be acknowledg'd, as Voſſius ſays, that if we had that Chronicle, it would be very uſeful to clear a great many things; but this does not prove, that Photius had no reaſon to blame the inſignificant things upon which Phlegon inlarged, which (u) tir'd the Readers, and cover'd the moſt memorable Facts with their Shadow. And therefore there is ſomething in the following words of Voſſius, which may be diſapprov'd: (w) Non penitus probare poſſum quod idem (Photius) reprehendit anxiam illam curam in Olympiadibus recenſendis, atque iis annotandis quæ ſingularum tempore contigerunt. Imo vero utinam totum Chronicon extaret. Multum enim lucis abſque dubio priſcæ inde Eccleſiæ temporibus accederet. It will appear from the words of Photius, which I ſhall quote in the Remark E, that what he cenſures has been miſrepreſented by Voſſius. There is nothing extant of that Work of Phlegon, beſides a Fragment, which does not take up ſix Pages in the Leyden Edition 1622, in 4to. His Treatiſe περὶ μακροβίων, de longævis, is ſhort enough, and it is likely we have it not (x) entire; for there is nothing in it concerning ſome illuſtrious Perſons, who lived to a very great Age. As for his Treatiſe περὶ θαυμασίων, de rebus mirabilibus, it contains 125 Chapters, moſt of them very ſhort, and there is ſomething wanting in the begining. Theſe are the broken Remnants of Phlegon's Works. Xylander rendred them into Latin, and publiſh'd them at Baſil, together with the Greek, and ſome Notes, in the Year 1568. Meurſius put out a new Edition of them at Leyden, with his own Remarks, in the Year 1622. You will find in Suidas the Titles of part of the other Writings of Phlegon.

(B) He had a Freed-Man who was an Author.] As it appears from theſe words of Spartianus: (y) Legiſſe me apud Ælium Maurum Phlegontis Tralliani libertum memini, Septimium Severum immoderatiſſime cum moreretur lætatum quod duos Antoninos pari imperio reipublicæ relinqueret. Andreas Schottus (a) pretends, without any good Reaſon for it, that there is a Fault in theſe words, and that they ought to be read thus: apud Ælii Hadriani libertum Phlegontem Trallianum. He wonders the Criticks had not yet made that Correction: (b) quod mendum magnos ævi noſtri Criticos fugiſſe quos nihil pene fugit, equidem miror: ſed & poſteris ſpicas relinquunt non inviti. He had no reaſon at all to wonder at it, for it is not at all likely that Spartianus did quote Phlegon in that place. How can any one fancy that Phlegon outlived Severus, who died 74 Years after Hadrian? See (c) Voſſius, who made uſe of that Chronological Reaſon againſt Andreas Schottus. The Printers have been very (d) faulty in that place.

(C) The Hiſtory of Hadrian, which was publiſhed under the name of Phlegon, was written by Hadrian himſelf.] I have already made that Obſervation in another place, but I repeat it here, and I ſhall add to it the very words of Spartianus; (f) Famæ celebris Adrianus tam cupidus fuit, ut libros vitæ ſuæ ſcriptos à ſe libertis ſuis literatis dederit, jubens ut eos ſuis nominibus publicarent: nam Phlegontis libri Adriani eſſe dicuntur. Thoſe words have been taken in a wrong Senſe by a German Author, who ſays, (g) Eos (libros de mirabilibus, Olympiadibus & longævis) tanti æſtimavit Hadrianus, famæ percelebris cupidus, ut pro ſuis venditarit, ut colligere licet ex Ælio Spartiano in vita Hadriani. How ſtrangely are the words of Spartianus perverted! This German Author pretends, that Hadrian put his Name to Phlegon's Writings, and in order to prove it he quotes an Author who ſays, that Hadrian cauſed the Name of Phlegon to be put to his own Work. Before I leave off I muſt obſerve a Miſtake of Moreri: He has committed few Faults that deſerve more than this to be mended. Phlegon, ſays he, the Emperor Adrian's Freed-Man, had a great ſhare in that Prince's Friendſhip, who publiſhed a Hiſtory of his Life under his Name. He relates in his 13th Book, that the 4th Year of the 202 Olympiad, &c. The conſtruction of theſe words is ſo odd, that 'tis a very hard matter to underſtand them: they ſignify, according to the Laws of our Grammarians, That Hadrian ſet his Name to the Hiſtory of his Life which he publiſhed; but this is falſe and againſt Moreri's Intention: Now thoſe words being contrary to the Rules of Grammar, they may be underſtood as if that Emperor had publiſhed Phlegon's Hiſtory under Phlegon's Name; or, as if he had publiſhed it under his own Name. Here is another Fault. The Conſtruction of thoſe words is ſuch, that every Reader will think, the Event of that 4th Year of the 202 Olympiad, is to be found in the 13th Book of the Hiſtory publiſhed by Hadrian. The Reader will be therefore deceiv'd, for if he gets out of that Snare, he will fall into another, he'll think that Phlegon compos'd but one Work.

(D) 'Tis pretended that he ſpoke of the Darkneſs which happen'd during our Saviour's Paſſion.] Since the Book, which contain'd the words on which this Pretenſion is grounded, is not extant, the beſt thing I can do is to ſet down the words of Euſebius: That Author does not affirm, in a general way, that Phlegon ſaid this or that; he quotes his very words, (h) Γράφει δὲ καὶ Φλέγων ὁ τὰς Ὀλυμπιάδας . . . . . περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ ιγ. ῥήμασιν αὐταῖς ταῦτα. Τῷ δ' ἔτει τῆς σβ Ὀλυμπιάδος ἐγένετο ἔκλειψις ἡλίου μεγίστη τῶν ἐγνωσμένων πρότερον. καὶ νὺξ ὥρᾳ ς' τῆς ἡμέρας ἐγένετο, ὥστε καὶ ἀστέρας ἐν οὐρανῷ φανῆναι. σεισμός τε μέγας κατὰ Βιθυνίαν γενόμενος τὰ πολλὰ Νικαίας κατεστρέψατο, καὶ ταῦτα ὁ δηλωθεὶς ἀνήρ. That is according to St. Jerom's Tranſlation; (i) Scribit vero ſuper his & Phlego qui Olympiadorum egregius ſupputator eſt, in tertio decimo libro ita dicens: quarto autem anno CCII. Olympiadis magna & excellens inter omnes quæ ante eam acciderant, defectio ſolis facta: dies hora ſexta in tenebroſam noctem verſus, ut ſtellæ in cœlo viſæ ſint, terraque motus in Bithynia Nicææ urbis multas ædes ſubverterit. Hæc ſupradictus vir. You ſee that Euſebius pretends, that thoſe words of Phlegon relate to the Prodigies which attended the Crucifixion of Chriſt. Several other Fathers pretended the ſame thing; but it is a Pretenſion liable to ſome Difficulties, the greateſt whereof, in my Judgment, lies in this. No Man was more deſirous than Phlegon (k) to compile wonderful Events, and to obſerve the ſupernatural Circumſtances thereof. How comes it then, that a Man of ſuch a Character did not obſerve what was moſt prodigious in the Eclipſe, which, 'tis ſaid, he ſpeaks of, I mean, that it happen'd when the Moon was full? This Objection was, without doubt, propoſed; and, 'tis likely, that ſome found the beſt way to anſwer it was to aſſert, That Phlegon had ſet down that Circumſtance. (l) Φλέγων ἱστορεῖ ἐπὶ Τιβερίου Καίσαρος ἐν πανσελήνῳ ἔκλειψιν ἡλίου γεγονέναι: Narrat Phlegon imperante Tiberio Cæſare ſolis eclipſin plenilunio contigiſſe. Thoſe words of Africanus are quoted by Syncellus, wherein 'tis poſitively ſaid, that Phlegon mentions an Eclipſe of the Sun which happen'd under the Empire of Tiberius in a full Moon. But Phlegon ſaid no ſuch thing: if he had, Euſebius had not fail'd to mention it; and Origen would not have ſaid, that Phlegon omitted that Circumſtance. (m) Et Phlegon quidam in Chronicis ſuis ſcripſit in principatu Tiberii Cæſaris factum: ſed non ſignificavit in luna plena factum. If it be (n) objected, that he does not ſay neither, that the Eclipſe in queſtion happen'd the Moon being new. I anſwer, That there was no need for him to ſay ſo, it being a thing to be ſuppoſed. The Obſervation of Philoponus is of no uſe; it is a falſe Gloſs: he pretends that Phlegon having mention'd an Eclipſe not like thoſe that were obſerved till then, intimated the Darkneſs which happen'd at the time of our Saviour's Paſſion. (o) Ἐγένετο ἡλίου ἔκλειψις ἐκ ἐγνωσμένων πρότερον . . . . . . μὴ ἐγνῶσθαι τὴν τοιαύτην ἔκλειψιν τοῖς πρότερον χρόνοις. Contigit eclipſis ſolis cujuſmodi nulla ante cognita eſt . . . . ſuperioribus non eſſe cognitam eclipſim hujuſmodi. That Author ſhews too great an Inclination to make People ſpeak according to the Intereſt of his Party, and at the coſt of Sincerity. Phlegon did not ſay our's Passion. Photius blames him for inlarging too much upon insignificant things, and for having collected too many Answers of the Oracles. That Censure is (E) so judicious, that it deserves to be set down.

---

* Phleg. de reb. mirabil. c. 1.

† Phleg. ib. c. 1. Tillem. Hiſt. of the Emperors, Tom. 2. p. 457. of the Bruſſels Edit.

(t) Phot. ubi ſupra pag. 258.

(u) I have ſet down the words of Photius in the Remark E.

(w) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Gr. l. 2. c. 11. p. m. 219.

(x) Voſſ. ubi ſupra.

(y) Spartian. in vita Severi c. 20. p. m. 632. tom. 1.

(a) And. Schott. Obſervat. humanar. lib. 2. c. 19. p. 57.

(b) Id ib.

(c) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. lib. 2. c. 2. p. 176.

(d) They have put in Trullanus twice, inſtead of Trallianus, and anno inſtead of uno. They have alſo left out ſeveral words.

(f) Spartian. in Adriano c. 16. p. m. 150.

(g) Tobias Magirus Eponymolog. Critic. p. 659. Edit. 1687.

(h) Euſeb. in Chron. ad Olymp. 203. p. 222. Edit. Scal. Amſtel. 1658.

(i) See the ſame Edit. of Scalig. pag. 158.

(k) Ex quo loco apparet qualis fuerit argumentum librorum Olympiadum Phlegontis. Nam ſub quaque Olympiade, quid toto orbe geſtum eſſet recenſebat, prodigia præcipue & monſtra, reſque alias mirabiles memorabileſque, Salmaſ. in Spart. pag. 152. tom. 1.

(l) Africanus apud Georgium Syncellum in Chronographia citante Huetio demonſtr. Evangel. propoſ. 3. p. m. 49.

(m) Orig. in Matthæum tract. 35.

(n) Atque neque interlunio factum id adnotavit. Quare rem in medio reliquit. Huet. ib.

(o) Philoponus de mundi creatione lib. 2. apud Huet. ib.

PHRÆA † (John) a Learned English-man, taught polite (A) Learning in Italy with great Reputation. He ‡ translated out of Greek into Latin some Trea-say in general, that the Eclipse we speak of was of another nature than all those that were seen before. Such a general way of speaking wou'd bear several Interpretations, and might favour the Cause of Philoponus. But Phlegon made use of a limited Expression; he said, that Eclipse was greater than those that were observed before. That Expression may be fully understood, by supposing that he mentions an Eclipse which happen'd during the Perigæum of the Moon, and was a central one. Such an Eclipse happens so seldom, that an Historian who relates such things according to the impression they make upon the Minds of Men, and not according to the exact Observations of an Astronomer, who has consulted the Ephemerides of all Ages, might have made the Observation which Phlegon made. See what the French Historians observe about the Eclipse of the second of October 1605.

tises

It is not certain that Phlegon said, that the Earthquake which overthrew many Houses in the City of Nicea, happen'd at the time of the Eclipse. Perhaps he meant only, that those two Events were observed in the same Year. If you will have it by any means that Phlegon denoted the same Day, you lie open to another Difficulty; for you must suppose that the light of the Sun disappeared at Noon in Bithynia, and consequently that the Darkness at the time of our Saviour's Passion, was general over all the Earth. That Opinion was always refuted (p) by some Persons who had no design to prejudice Orthodoxy, and it is liable to a Difficulty, the weight whereof is not easily born; for how can it be apprehended, (q) that if that Darkness had happen'd all over the World, Phlegon should be the only Man, or (r) almost the only one that mention'd it? We must not forget that M. Huet (s) blames Kepler for asserting that Phlegon's Eclipse ought to be placed under the 24th of November, of the second Year of the 202 Olympiad.

I come now to a critical Observation of another kind. Eusebius pretends, that Phlegon writ that in the 13th Book of his History. Origen (t) says, that it was in the 13th or 14th. Maximus (u) quotes only the 14th. Meursius is of Opinion, that the Quotation of Maximus is the right one; for which he gives this Reason: Phlegon, says he, (w) had a mind that each Book of his History should contain fifteen Olympiads; but having not lived long enough to make an end of the last Book, it contain'd only four Olympiads. It appears, by Supputation, that he was to treat of the 202d Olympiad in the 14th Book, therefore he mention'd the Eclipse in that Book. The Supputation of Meursius is right, but his Supposition is false; for that Distribution of fifteen Olympiads for each Book is a meer fancy, since Photius (a) affirms, that the five first Books of Phlegon reached to the 177 Olympiad. It had been as necessary for Salmasius, as for Meursius, to remember that Passage of Photius; he (b) fancied, for want of knowing it, that Phlegon did so divide his Work, that the eleven first Books contain'd each fourteen Olympiads, and the five last contain'd each fifteen. This is all false; but here is a reasonable Conjecture. Phlegon divided that History into sixteen Parts, almost equal: he found Materials for it more and more, as he came nearer his Time; and therefore every one of his last Books contain'd but a small number of Olympiads, whereas the five first contain'd 177. Thus Mezerai's Chronological Abridgment (c) contains in the first Volume the Reigns of 31 Kings, and the space of 518 Years, and only the Reign of Henry IV. in the last Volume. The like Observation may be made about all the Histories of a Nation (d) divided into Books; the first contain more Years than the last. If Salmasius had consider'd this, he had not undertaken to correct a Passage of Stephanus Byzantinus. In voce (e) Ὀλύμπιον, says he, (f) citat (Stephanus) Phlegontem ἐν πεντεκαιδεκάτῳ Ὀλυμπιάδων: in quo nisi fallor mendosæ sunt editiones, legendum enim ἐν ἕκτῳ καὶ δεκάτῳ Ὀλυμπιάδων. Cujus emendationis hæc ratio est. Meminerat eo libro Phlegon Olympii ab Hadriano vel potius sumptibus Hadriani ab Atheniensibus ædificati. Atqui ejus rei mentionem non nisi ultimo libro, id est decimo sexto facere poterat Phlegon. Nec enim altera tempora Hadriani Olympiadis jam contexuit. This critical Observation is grounded upon two insignificant Reasons; the first is, that Phlegon could not speak of a Building erected at the Charges of the Emperor Hadrian, but in the Book which contain'd the Olympiads belonging to the Reign of that Emperor. The second is, that he writ the History of those Olympiads only in his last Book. If you desire to know the falsity of the first Reason, you need only consider, That the best Annalists are apt to make some incident Observations, wherein they relate both what happen'd before, and what came to pass since. If they mention the burning of a Town, they do not scruple to observe, that it was founded by such a one, who flourished at such a time, and to say, by way of anticipation, that it was rebuilt thirty Years after. They are pleased with those Anticipations, especially when they serve to praise the reigning Prince. It may very well be, therefore, that Phlegon spoke of an Olympeium under an Olympiad anterior to the Empire of Hadrian his Master and Benefactor; for treating of a thing which happen'd in the Isle of Delos, before the Reign of that Prince, he might say, that the Place where it happen'd, received afterwards a great Honour, seeing the Athenians built there an Edifice, which they call'd (g) Hadrian's new Athens, because that Emperor furnish'd them with the Money they wanted. It is very likely, that he took hold of every occasion that offer'd to Praise that Prince, and spoke of him in season and out of season; and therefore the Reason alledged by Salmasius is not good. Nevertheless I will not deny that Phlegon mention'd the construction of that Building, under the very same Year that it was built; but this does not prove, that he spoke of it in his last Book. In all likelihood he enlarged more upon the Reign of Hadrian, than upon the Time that went before. It is the constant Practice of all Historians. It is therefore likely, that his fifteenth and sixteenth Books contain'd only the Olympiads of Hadrian's Reign; and so the second Reason of Salmasius is not better than the other. He might be further criticised, because he affirms, that Phlegon's History did not reach farther than the Reign of that Emperor; yet Father Pagi (h) and some other Learned Men maintain, that the whole 229th Olympiad was in it; from whence it follows, that it contain'd also the four first Years of the Empire of Antoninus.

(E) That Censure of Photius is so judicious, that it deserves to be set down.] Here it is, (i) Ἔστι δὲ τὴν φράσιν οὔτε λίαν χαμαιπετής, οὔτε τὸ ἀττικὸν ἐς τὸ ἀκριβὲς διασώζων χαρακτῆρα. ἄλλως τε δὲ καὶ ἡ περὶ τὰς ὀλυμπιάδας, καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐταῖς τῶν ἀγωνισμάτων ὀνόματα, καὶ τὰς πράξεις, καὶ ἡ περὶ τοὺς χρησμοὺς ἄκαιρος φιλοπονία τε καὶ φιλοτιμία, εἰς κόρον ἀπάγουσα τὸν ἀκροατὴν, καὶ μηδὲν ἄλλο πού ἐν τῷ λόγῳ προκύπτειν συγχωροῦσα, ἀηδῆ τε φράσιν τὸν λόγον δεικνύει, καὶ χάριτος οὐδὲν ἔχειν παρατίθησι. χρησμοῖς δὲ παντοίοις ἐς ὑπερβολὴν ἐστι κεχρημένος. Auctoris stylus neque omnino humi serpit, neque Atticum usquequaque characterem servat. Aliòquin illa nimis putida ipsius accuratio atque diligentia in Olympiadibus percensendis, singulorumque certaminum nominibus, & rebus gestis, atque ipsis etiam oraculis referendis, non tædium modo lectori adfert, dum per eam reliqua omnia in hoc libro obteguntur, neque apparere sinuntur: verumetiam injucundum propemodum reddit sermonem, quique gratia nihil habere judicetur. Et vero omnis generis Deorum responsa sine modo inculcat.

(A) Taught polite Learning in Italy.] This I find in a Dedicatory (k) Epistle of Beatus Rhenanus: Is Joannes Phraa, says he, quod non sine publico Britanniæ, quam nunc Angliam vocant, honore dixerim, utramque linguam egregie percalluit, bonas literas summa cum laude non paucos annos, idque in Italia professus. Observe that he calls him Phraa, and not Phreas, or Phreus, as Vossius (l) calls him. Our Author calls himself Joannes Phraa, in the Title of a Book which I am going to speak of.

(B) It

---

† See the Rem. A.

‡ Voss. de Hist. Lat. p. 634.

(p) Vid. Anton. Bynæum de morte Christi l. 3. p. 30 & seq.

(q) Vid. Voss. harm. Evang. l. 2. c. 10. p. 322

(r) I use that Restriction because M. Huet ubi supra p. 41. says, that it is mention'd likewise by the Historian Tallus, to which he adds the Testimony of the Chinese as is to be found in the History of China, written by Hadrian Gresson.

(s) Huet. ubi supra p. 40.

(t) Orig. cont. Cels. lib. 2.

(u) Maxi. Schol. ad Epist. 7. Dionys. Areopag.

(w) Meurs. not. ad Phlegont. p. 170.

(a) Phot. ubi supra.

(b) Salmas. ubi supra p. 151.

(c) Of the Dutch Edition divided into 6 Vol. in 12

(d) See the History of France, written by Gaguinus, Paulus Æmilius, &c.

(e) It shou'd be Ὀλυμπιεῖον.

(f) Salmas. ib.

(g) Steph. Byzant. v. Ὀλυμπιεῖον.

(h) Pagi against Baronius, ad ann. 135. n. 4.

(i) Phot. Bibl. n. 97. p. 268.

(k) Prefixed to the Translation of the Encomium Calvitiei. See the Rem. B.

(l) Voss. de Hist. Lat. p. 634.

tiſes of Xenophon, and ſome Books of Diodorus Siculus. He had tranſlated before that time a † Diſcourſe of Syneſius. It was his (B) firſt Eſſay. Pope Paul II. was ſo well pleaſed with the Tranſlation which that Learned Engliſhman dedicated to him, that he would make him Biſhop of § Bath; but Death permitted not John Phræa to enjoy that Favour. He * died (C) in the Year 1465, before he was inſtalled. 'Twas thought that he was poiſoned by his Competitor ‡.

Phræa was Fellow of † Baliol-College in Oxford. 'Tis ſaid that (D) Poggius appropriated to himſelf Phræa's Tranſlation of Diodorus Siculus.

PIASECKI (Paul) in Latin, Piaſecius, Biſhop of Premiſlia in Poland, lived in the XVII. Century. He † publiſhed in 1646 a fine Hiſtory of whatever paſſed in the Kingdom of Poland from Stephen Batthory to that Year. He did accidentally inſert in it the principal Affairs of Chriſtendom. Mr. le Laboureur, of whom I have borrowed thoſe Words, will tell us (Z) what he thought of that Work.

PICARDS. That Name was beſtowed upon the Sectators of a certain Man, who over-ſtretched the Error of the Adamites, with reſpect to Nakedneſs. His Name was Picard: he went from Flanders into Germany, and as far as Bohemia. It has been ſaid that he deceived the People with Preſtiges. However it be, he had in a little time a great number of Followers, both Men and Women. He commanded them to go always Naked: which was more than was practiſed by the Adamites mentioned by St. Epiphanius, who were contented to ſtrip themſelves Naked in their Aſſemblies. He ſtyled himſelf * the Son of God, and pretended that he was ſent into the World by his Father, as a new Adam, to reſtore the Law of Nature, which he ſaid did chiefly conſiſt in two things, viz. the Community of Women, and the Nakedneſs of all the parts of the Body. He retired into an Iſland of the River Luſmik, ſeven Leagues from Thabor, the Place of Arms of the famous Ziſca. It happened unluckily for him, that forty of his Followers having committed great Diſorders, drew the Forces of that famous General upon the whole Crew. Thoſe forty Adamites being gone upon a Party, plundered ſome Country-Houſes, and killed above 200 People. Whereupon § Ziſca cauſed the Iſland to be attacked, made himſelf Maſter of it, and put all the Picards to the Sword, except two (A) whoſe Lives he ſaved, that he might know from them what was their Religion. 'Tis ſaid, that tho' there was no Marriages amongſt them, yet no Man lay with a Woman without the permiſſion of the Head of the Sect. Any one, who had an inclination for a Woman, was obliged to take her by the Hand, and to bring her before Picard, to whom he ſaid, My Spirit is grown hot for this Woman ‡: Picard anſwered him, Go, encreaſe and multiply. One of the great Principles of that Sect was, that they were the only free Perſons in the World: all other Men being Slaves, eſpecially when they hid their Privy-Parts. This is what ſome Women of that Sect meant,

(B) It was his firſt Eſſay.] He ſays in his Epiſtle Dedicatory, that he would not follow the Method of other Tranſlators. They begin with ſome Authors that are not difficult; and when Time and Labour have increaſed their Strength, they undertake more difficult Tranſlations. He does not blame them for it; but he declares, that he thought he ſhould do well to take quite another way, and to begin with Syneſius, one of the moſt obſcure Writers that is. Every Body, ſays he, ought to know what is proper for him: and Syneſius muſt needs be a difficult Author, ſince none of the Learned Men, who have tranſlated out of Greek into Latin, undertook to tranſlate him. Here are his Words. (m) Nos vero etſi nonnullis perſuaſi rationibus, quas nunc conſulto præterire libet, converſum ordinem magis ad doctrinam conducere arbitramur: ea tamen modeſtia hanc noſtram defenſamus opinionem, ut neque mihi ipſi arrogare, neque quod ſecus alii ſenſerint, id vitio illis dare velim. Suis enim quiſque in rebus, quid magis, quidve minus ſibi conducat, explorator eſt, & judex optimus. Itaque mihi in hoc à reliquis diſſentienti, à Syneſio ſummo Philoſopho, autoreque graviſſimo, interpretationis initium auſpicari placuit. Quos autem hic ſcripſit libros, tot ac tantis obſtructi ſunt difficultatibus, ut haud ſciam ſi qua alia apud Græcos extent volumina, quæ cum his aut ſententiarum perplexitate, aut obſcuritate verborum auſim conferre. Cujus profecto rei argumentum eſt non mediocre, quod in tanto numero interpretum, quos noſtra, quoſve prior ætas vidit, nemo unquam inventus ſit, quod ſciam, qui hujus autoris opus aliquod attigerit. Amongſt the Writings of Syneſius, Phræa pitched upon his Encomium of Baldneſs to tranſlate it. Beatus Rhenanus publiſhed that Tranſlation at Baſil in the Year 1515, to which he added a Commentary. It is not mentioned by Father Labbe, nor by Mr. du Pin.

(C) He died in the Year 1465.] 'Tis a ſtrange thing that Moreri having faithfully ſet down that Date (n), ſhould ſay notwithſtanding that Phræas lived in the XIV. Century.

(D) That Poggius appropriated to himſelf.] Read theſe Words: (a) Burton hiſt. linguæ Gr. p. 55. ait Johannem Phræam Anglum Colleg. Baliolenſis Socium Diodori 6. libros vertiſſe, illamque verſionem Poggium nactum fuiſſe, & pro ſuo in publicum extruſiſſe, idque teſtari quoque Brian. Twyn. Antiq. Oxon. l. 3.

(Z) What he thought of that Work.] He ſays that Prelate was not well enough informed of ſome Affairs of France: "Abating of that, ſays he (b), it "is a Piece worthy of the labour of a Man of his "Rank; for he is very impartial, and has ſo generous an abhorrence of Flattery, that he does no "more ſpare the Faults of the late (*) King, than "thoſe of his Son who reigns at preſent, whom "he never Praiſes without having a good Reaſon "for it. He takes notice of the Ambition of the "Houſe of Auſtria; he blames the unjuſtice of their "Proceedings, and praiſes with great Ingenuity the "Reaſon of our taking up Arms, and the Alliances "we made, to oppoſe the deſign they had upon "all the States of Europe." Here is the Judgment which a German Author gives about that Hiſtory: (c) Quæ noſtram ætatem ſpectant, ea Paulus Piaſecius in Chronicis geſtorum in Europa ſingularium luculentiùs ſubminiſtrat; negant tamen Piaſecio in omnibus ſecurè fidem adhiberi aliqui, & certum eſt, non eſſe ipſum ab omni in hiſtoria errore immunem. Piaſecki's Hiſtory has been reprinted at Amſterdam from the Poliſh Edition. Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie quotes it, in his Notes upon Cardinal d'Oſſat's Letters, in ſuch a manner as ſhews that he eſteems it.

(A) Except two.] Mr. Varillas (d) pretends, that there was not one Man ſaved; but that the Women who proved to be big with Child were ſaved. He adds, "That after they were delivered, they re"fuſed to renounce the Licentiouſneſs of their Sect, "and ſo they were condemned to be burnt, and "threw themſelves into the Fire with a laughing "Countenance." I don't know why he does not keep to the Account which Æneas Silvius gives of it, who ſays that Ziſca gave Quarter only to two Men, Adamitas omnes gladio delevit, duobus tantum reſervatis, ex quibus gentis ſuperſtitionem cognoſceret. Perhaps he had a mind to rectifie that Narrative by another Paſſage of the ſame Hiſtorian, who ſpeaks of ſome Women of that Sect, who Lay-In in a Priſon, and then endured the puniſhment

† The Encomium of Baldneſs.

§ in England.

* Idem.

‡ Veneto ſe competitore extinctum fuiſſe ſuſpicantur. Idem.

† See the Rem. D.

† Le Laboureur, a Relation of the Queen of Poland's Journey, 2. part. p. 117.

* Varillas, the Hiſt. of Wiclefaniſm, 2 part p. 43. & Hiſt. of Hereſie, l. 2. ad ann. 1420.

§ John Slechta in a Letter to Eraſmus in the year 1519. ('tis the 20th of the 14th Book of Eraſmus's Letters) ſays, that Picard communicated his Errors to Ziſca and his whole Army.

‡ In hanc ſpiritus meus concaluit.

(m) Jo. Phræa in Epiſt. dedicat. Encomii Calvitiei.

(n) There is a tranſpoſition of numbers in the Dutch Edition. It ſhould be 1465. inſtead of 1455.

(a) Henr. a Sypeſtein in Epiſtola de Plagiatu p. 70. at the end of Almeloveen's Amænitates Theologico-Philologicæ.

(b) Le Laboureur, the Journey of the Queen of Poland, 2 part p. 117. That Relation was written in the year 1645.

(*) That is, of the K. of Poland.

(c) Maurit. de princip. jur. publ. c. 2. n. 25. ap. Magirum eponymolog. p. m. 661.

(d) Varil. Hiſt. of Wiclefian. 2 part p. 43. and Hiſt. of Hereſie l. 2. ad. ann. 1420.

ments, whom a Bohemian Lord kept Priſoners for ſome time. They ſaid that thoſe who wore Cloaths, eſpecially thoſe who wore Breeches, ought not to be accounted Free. They were brought to Bed in Priſon; and having been condemned to be burnt with their Husbands, they ſuffered that Puniſhment laughing and ſinging ‖. There has been ſome Doting Men among the (B) Anabaptiſts, who had a mind to renew the Extravagancies of the Picards, with reſpect to Nakedneſs. That ſort of Men have been as much abhorred by the Proteſtants, as by the Catholicks, as it is acknowledged by Cardinal † Hoſius. Nevertheleſs, the Brethren of Bohemia (C) were called Picards, tho' they had nothing common with thoſe that were exterminated by Ziſca. Thoſe who * pretend that Tandemus revived the Hereſie of the Adamites in the XII. Century, as Picard revived it in the XV. are not exact; for it is not true that Tandemus ‡ commanded his Followers to wear no Cloaths. We have more reaſon to ſay ſo of the Turlupins, as I ſhall ſhew in its proper place.

PICCOLOMINI (Alexander) Archbiſhop of Patras, and Coadjutor of Sienna, deſerves to be reckoned among the Illuſtrious Men of the XVI. Century. He was born at Sienna, being of the ſame Family γ with Pope Pius II. He had a great extent of Learning, as he ſhewed by the Books (A) he compoſed upon ſeveral ſorts of Subjects. Yet I would not have every Body believe all that is ſaid of (B) him by his Panegyriſts. He wrote ſome Philoſophical Books in his Mother's Tongue,

‖ [illegible]

† Lib. de [illegible] ſpecial. commun. apud [illegible]

* Moreri in the Art. of the Adamites.

‡ See his Article.

γ Thuanus lib. [illegible] p. 233.

ment of Fire with Joy. But that Paſſage cannot ſettle Mr. Varillas, for we ſee that thoſe Women were in a Priſon with their Husbands, and condemned to be burnt with them. To adjuſt all the parts of that Piece, we muſt ſuppoſe either that all the Adamites were not in the Iſland that was forced by Ziſca, or that ſome of them were impriſoned before the Slaughter. If thoſe two Suppoſitions be denied, it is not true that he ſaved only two Adamites. The Proteſtants (e) have praiſed Ziſca very much for that Action.

(B) Some Doting Men amongſt the Anabaptiſts.] I have touched upon this in the Article of the Adamites, and quoted Lindanus, an Author of no great Authority. But here is a much more credible Author, viz. Lambertus Hortenſius (f) in his Relation of the Tumults of the Anabaptiſts, dedicated to the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, whilſt the Memory of thoſe things was ſtill freſh. He ſays, that on the 14th of February 1535. ſeven Men and five Women met at Amſterdam, in the Houſe of John Sibert. One of thoſe Men, whoſe Name was Theodoret Sartor, pretended to be a Prophet; he lay upon the Ground to pray to God, and having made an end of his Prayers, he told one of his Brethren, that he had ſeen God in his Majeſty; that he had ſpoken to him; that he was deſcended from Heaven into Hell, and that he knew that the Day of Judgment was near at hand. They met again the ſame Day, and after they had ſpent four Hours in Prayers and Expoſitions, the Prophet all of a ſudden pulls off his Helmet and his Armour, and throws them into the Fire with the reſt of his Arms, and ſhews himſelf Naked to all the Company. He bids them all do the like: every one obeys ſo exactly, that they did not ſo much as leave a Ribbon upon their Heads to keep their Hair tied. They throw every thing into the Fire, as a Burnt-Offering unto the Lord. Then the Prophet bids them follow him, and do as he does. They go out all of them, and run into the Streets with moſt horrid Cries, Væ, væ, væ, divina vindicta, divina vindicta, divina vindicta! Wo, wo, wo, Divine Vengeance, Divine Vengeance, Divine Vengeance! The People being frighted with ſuch Howlings, think that the Town is taken, take up their Arms and go out. The naked Crew are apprehended, and brought before the Judges: they ſcorn to put on the Cloaths that are preſented to them. In the mean time the Houſe, from which that infamous Proceſſion ſet out, was a burning, and they had much ado to put out the Fire. On the 25th of March the ſeven Men were put to Death; and nine of their Accomplices were puniſhed in the ſame manner ſome few Days after. Gui de Bres, a Miniſter, relates that Hiſtory in a (g) Book againſt the Anabaptiſts printed in 1565. He did not underſtand well the Roman way of Dating, tertio Id. Februarii, quinto Kal. Mart. which Hortenſius makes uſe of; for he renders it the 3d of February, and the 5th of March. He gives a faithful Account of the reſt, only he ſays that thoſe Men were put to the Rack and beaten. The Latin Original does not mention the Rack, and the Word percutiuntur ſignifies a Capital Puniſhment.

(C) The Brethren of Bohemia were called Picards.] Such they called all thoſe who oppoſed Popery with the greateſt vigour in Bohemia: for Sleidan divides the Bohemians in this manner. (a) At Bohemis quod attinet, ſic habet. A morte Joannis Huſſi in tres potiſſimum ſectas diviſus eſt populus. Una eſt eorum qui Pontificem Romanum et Eccleſiæ Principem, & Chriſti Vicarium agnoſcunt: altera eorum, qui cœnam Domini percipiunt integram, & in Miſſis non illa recitant lingua populari; cætera autem in rebus à Pontificiis nihil differunt: tertia eſt eorum qui dicuntur Picardi; Pontificem hi Romanum & clientelam ejus omnem appellant Antichriſtum, & meretricem illam in Apocalypſi depictam; præter Biblica ſcripta nihil recipiunt; Sacerdotes & Epiſcopos ſibi deligunt ipſi; matrimonia nemini interdicunt; mortuis nullas faciunt exequias; dies feſtos & ceremonias habent perpaucas. But Rudigerus in his Hiſtory of the Brethren of Bohemia, rejects (b) the Name of Picards that was impoſed upon them, and thinks that it was given 'em by their Enemies, "To diſhonour them by ſo infamous a Title, as if we had been only, ſays he, the wretched Remains of the lewd Picard, who renewing the ancient Hereſy of the Adamites, introduced Nakedneſs and infamous Actions."

(A) By the Books he compoſed.] Ghilini mentions theſe that follow: (c) La Filoſofia morale: la Theorica de' pianetti: l'Inſtituzione dell' huomo: l'Inſtituzione del Principe Chriſtiano: della grandezza dell' acqua e della terra: Parafraſi ſu la Rettorica d'Ariſtotile: Della creanza delle donne: delle ſtelle fiſſe: due Comedie cioè l'Aleſſandra e l'Amor Coſtante: la Sfera: i ſonetti: Tradizione della poetica d'Ariſtotile: annotazione ſopra la medeſima poetica d'Ariſtotile: Teſoro dell' huomo in tre parti diviſo trattà del buon nome, e nella terza fa menzione dell' amor ſopranaturale. Voſſius (d) obſerves that our Piccolomini printed at Venice in 1565. a Latin Commentary upon Ariſtotle's Mechanical Queſtions. He praiſes that Author very much: (e) Philoſophus planè eximius fuit; tum ob ingenium, & induſtriam; tum quia feliciter adeo Matheſin & philoſophiam conjunxit. Utrique ſanè excelluit; ut præclara tot ejus opera oſtendunt.

(B) All that is ſaid of him by his Panegyriſts.] I believe there is an Hyperbole in this Paſſage of Thevet. "(f) Certainly he was a Man who ſhewed a Divine Eloquence in his Writings, and his way of Speaking was ſo admirable, that he ſeemed rather to charm the Ears of his Hearers, than perſuade them by the Artifice of his Eloquence. He was inferiour to none in his Time as to Languages, either for the Antiquity and Propriety of the Hebrew Tongue, or for the Elegancy and Sweetneſs of the Latin Style, which he underſtood ſo well, that Cicero and the other excellent Orators, could not have expreſt their Thoughts better than our learned Alexander did. He made ſuch a progreſs in Divinity, the Civil Law, Phyſick, Mathematicks and Philoſophy, that there is no Secret or Receſs but what he carefully look'd into, as may be atteſted by thoſe who had the happineſs to frequent and converſe with him, and to caſt their Eyes upon his learned and excellent Works. The Facility wherewith he explained and made the moſt difficult Authors intelligible, is particularly praiſed. Let any one take his Commentaries (g) upon Ariſtotle's Meteors, and ſome other Books of that Ancient Philoſopher,

(e) See du Pleſſis Mornay, in his Myſtery of Iniquity p. 512. and Rivetus, Remarks in the Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, 2 part p. 504.

(f) He was Rector of the College of Naerden, his Book was printed at Baſil in 1548.

(g) Intitled, The Root, Spring and Foundation of the Anabaptiſts of our time. See alſo the Hiſt. of the Anabaptiſts printed at Amſterdam in the year 1595. p. 95. & ſeq. There is a tranſpoſition of numbers p. 95. viz. the year 1553. inſtead of 1535.

(a) Sleid. l. 4. See alſo Thuan. l. 6. and the Letter of John Slechta among thoſe of Eraſmus l. 14. p. 675.

(b) P. 1[illegible].

(c) Ghilini Teatro d'huomini letterati, tom. 1. p. 8.

(d) Voſſ. de Scient. Mathem. p. 322.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Thevet, Elogies of illuſtrious Men tom. 8. c. 3. p. 32, 33. edit. in 12. 1671.

(g) The Abbreviators of Geſner ſay only that he tranſlated the Commentaries of Alexander Aphrodiſienſis upon the 4 Books of Ariſtotle's Meteors.

Tongue, and is accounted the firſt (C) who did ſo. The Treatiſe he publiſhed by order of Francis de Medicis, Great Duke of Tuſcany, concerning the Reformation of the Calendar, α had the Approbation of the moſt Learned. He is very much to be praiſed for having joyned good Manners and a moſt exemplary Life with the Theory of the Mathematicks and Phyſicks §. He was a ſtrict Follower of ε Ariſtotle's Opinions, and a Member of the γ Academy of the Infiammati at Padua. Notwithſtanding his Gravity, and his great Application to ſome Philoſophical Works, he compoſed (D) ſome Plays, which were very much eſteemed. He died at Siena the 12th of March † 1578, being threeſcore and ten Years old, and was buried in the Cathedral Church ‡. What Thuanus (E) ſays of him is ſomewhat curious, and of a good Example for thoſe who ſtudy: he ſpeaks of it as an Oculer Witneſs. I muſt criticize (F) his Tranſlator.

α Joh. Imperial. in Muſ. Hiſt. p. 82, 83.

§ Id. ib. p. 83.

ε Id. ib.

γ Ghilini Teatr. part. 1. p. 8.

† He was not therefore alive in 1580, as Moreri affirms it.

‡ Imper. ub. ſup.

PICCOLOMINI (Francis) was born at Siena, being of the ſame Family with the foregoing. He was a very famous Philoſopher in the XVI. Century. Tho' he was very young when he taught Logick in the Univerſity of Siena, yet the whole Town admired him upon the account of his Lectures. Afterwards he taught Philoſophy in the Univerſity of (A) Macerata, and then for the Space of ten Years in that of Perugia. His Reputation increaſed to ſuch a degree, that the City of Padua reſolved to have him for the ſame Employment. He was made extraordinary Profeſſor of Philoſophy there in the Year 1560, and about four Years after Ordinary Profeſſor in the ſame Faculty. He publiſhed ſeveral Commentaries upon Ariſtotle, which were very much eſteemed, by reaſon of their Clearneſs “ loſopher, and it will be found that he has ſo dexterouſly dived into the Senſe of his Author, that Ariſtotle himſelf could ſcarce have explained his Opinions better than our Piccolomini did. „

(C) The firſt who did ſo.] Imperialis blames him for it, as being a thing which makes Learning contemptible, and does not agree with the Reſpect due to the Language of Ancient Rome. Efferbuit mire, ſays he (h), ingenium Alexandri Piccolominei Senenſis in cogendo ſub Etruſcis vexillis agmine ſcientiarum omnium, quo intentato aliis facinore immortalem ſibi pararet in Italica celebritate triumphum. Memorabilis profecto induſtria niſi trito proteri ſermone rerum apices præclariſſimarum eſſet, contemptum ipſarum quendam apud viliores inducere, & quod magis intereſt, eſſet Latinæ locutionis majeſtatem ac ſtudium abdicare qua ultro utiliſſima quæque comprehenſa & conſignata eſſe palam eſt. See what Boccalini (i) makes our Alexander ſay upon Parnaſſus. Some Men would be glad that the Key of Learning ſhould not be imparted to the People. They would have all Philoſophical and Learned Books to be publiſhed in Latin, and the Commonwealth of Learning to deal with Ancient Books, as the Church of Rome deals with the Scripture. She does not allow the Reading of it in a vulgar Tongue, but with a thouſand Precautions. It is a Sanctuary where prophane Men are not permitted to enter. See the Complaint (k) which Mr. du Pin has refuted in the Preface of his New Bibliotheque of Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

(D) Some Plays, which were very much eſteemed.] I ſhall quote John Imperialis for it: (l) Neque tamen his dicatus gravioribus muniis abſtinuit interdum à luſibus poetarum comicas concinnando fabulas, quarum inſigniores duæ amoris conſtantis, & Alexandri titulo feruntur impreſſæ, in quibus ſic excelluit, ut ideo comicorum Italicorum princeps Trajani Boccalini judicio cenſeatur. I think that by vertue of theſe Words Menagius might have placed our Piccolomini among (m) the Eccleſiaſticks, who wrote amorous Verſes.

(E) What Thuanus ſays of him.] He followed Paul de Foix, whom Charles IX. ſent Ambaſſador into Italy in the Year 1573. That Ambaſſador being come to Siena, went to ſee our Piccolomini, and found him reviſing his Commentaries upon Ariſtotle. All the Servants of the good old Man were gone out, ſo that having had no notice of the Ambaſſador's Viſit, he was ſurprized by him as he lay down. I ſhall ſet down in Latin what he told him about the Comfort he found in Reading in the midſt of the Infirmities of old Age. (a) Dum in urbe eſſet Foxius, Alexandrum Piccolomineum veneranda canicie ſenem in ædibus ſuis inviſit, quem culcitra incumbentem, & Ariſtoteli ſuo, hoc eſt à ſe diverſis explicationibus illuſtrato, recognoſcendo vacantem improviſus invenit. Nam ſolus erat, & famuli huc illuc per feſtum diem diverſi abierant. Quod ille anxietate ſumma excuſavit, & gratias Foxio pro tam honorifica ſalutatione egit, tum ſedere juſſis qui cum Foxio aderant, in iiſque Thuano. Multa de ſtudiis ſuis diſſeruit, eorumque ſe demum in ea ætate dulciſſimum fructum capere dixit, aliis oblectamentis deficientibus quibus aliæ ætates innocenter & citra offenſam gaudere poſſunt. Quod cum dicebat, non tam ſenectuti ſolatium quærere dicebatur, quam adoleſcentes qui aderant, qua humanitate erat, ad deſidiam vitandam & Philoſophiæ ſtudia capeſſenda exemplo ſuo cohortari.

(F) I muſt criticize Thuanus's Tranſlator.] Let us compare his Tranſlation with the Latin Words of Thuanus. Alexander Piccolomini, ſays he (b), would make People believe that he was of Æneas Silvius's Family, who being raiſed to the Papal Dignity, took the Name of Pius II. Here are Thuanus's Words: (c) Alexand. Piccolomineum Æneæ Silvii, qui Pontifex Pius II. dici voluit, Gentilis, &c. It is evident that Thuanus affirms, that our Alexander was related to Pius II. but the Tranſlator makes him ſay a thing very injurious to the Memory of that Learned Man, as if he had falſly pretended to be related to that Pope. If it be an enormous Over-ſight, becauſe it wrongs an illuſtrious Man, it is no leſs enormous if it be conſidered how eaſy it was to underſtand the Words of the Original. The Tranſlator adds, that John Baptiſt Sacriſtan, Deiphobus Arch-Prieſt, and his other Brothers beſtowed upon (d) him a noble Elogy. I think theſe Words of Thuanus are not well rendred, in majore patriæ urbis templo ſepultus, & honorifico à Jo. Baptiſta æditus, Deiphobo Archipresbytero aliiſque fratribus elogio ornatus. I fancy that theſe Words aliiſque fratribus ſignifie the other Canons of the Cathedral of Siena, and not the Brothers of Alexander Piccolomini.

(A) In the Univerſity of Macerata, and then .... of Perugia.] He was 25 Years of Age when he left Siena to go to Macerata, and his Deſign was rather to ſit down amongſt the Scholars, than to get into the Pulpit as a Profeſſor; but as ſoon as he appear'd at Macerata he was made firſt Profeſſor of Philoſophy. So ſays (e) Imperialis. He does not intimate in the leaſt what is affirmed by Tomaſini, viz. that Piccolomini was Profeſſor of Logick at Siena before he went to Macerata. Imperialis adds, that he ſtaid no longer than one Year in this laſt Town, and that being called over to Perugia, he took hold of that opportunity of ſhewing his Capacity upon a nobler Stage. He taught Philoſophy there for the ſpace of ten Years, and publiſhed a Volume de Morali Philoſophia, which was admir'd: (f) Tantis omnium cœtuum laudibus exceptum, cum nihil eo, vel ad efformandos mores utilius, vel ad Rempublicam recte gerendam accomodatius, vel ad omnem bonorum malorumque notitiam ſuavius excogitari poſſit. Father le Moine (g) ſpeaks well of that Book, and criticizes ſome Paſſages in it. Take notice of this Title, Franciſci Piccolominei Senenſis univerſa philoſophia de moribus nunc primum in decem gradus redacta & explicata. Venetiis in fol. 1583. It ſeems to ſignifie that the firſt Edition came out in the Year 1583. If it be ſo, Imperialis is miſtaken when he ſays, that Piccolomini publiſhed that Book being Profeſſor at Perugia, and deſerved by reaſon of ſo fine a Work (h) to be called over to Padua; for according to Imperialis's reckoning, he began to teach Philoſophy at Padua being about 37 Years of Age, that

(h) Imper. in Muſæo, Hiſt. p. 82.

(i) Boccal. Ragguagli di Parnaſo Cent. 1. c. 72. p. m. 221, 222.

(k) It is mentioned in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, June 1686. Art. 4 p. 653. See a Paſſage of Cicero in orat. pro Muræna alledged by Eraſmus under the Adage Cornicum oculos configere. 'Tis the 75th of the 3d Century of the 1ſt Chiliad. p. m. 123.

(l) Imper. in Muſ. Hiſt. p. 83.

(m) Menagius mentions ſome Eccleſiaſticks in the 145th Chap. of his Anti-Baillet Tom. 2.

(a) Thuan. de vit. ſua l. 1. p. m. 1170. Col. 1.

(b) and Teiſſier, Elogies taken from Thuanus tom. 1. p. 484, 485.

(c) Thuan. Hiſt. l. 65. p. 25, ad ann. 1578.

(d) That is, upon Alexander Piccolomini.

(e) Jo. Imper. in Muſ. Hiſt. p. 114.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) In his peintures morales.

(h) Hoc unum effecit poſtea ut graviſſimo Venetorum judicio ad Patavinum Gymnaſium fuerit convocatus. Imper. ub. ſup.

Clearneſs and Subtilty. He endeavoured to revive the Platonick (B) Philoſophy, and to ſhew that at the bottom it agreed with that of Ariſtotle §. The famous James Zabarella was his Antagoniſt, againſt whom he publiſhed ſomething. I ſhall ſay in another Place (C) wherein he exceeded him. * Having obſerved that the Diſputations which the Profeſſors had appointed in the Afternoon, were the Cauſe of many Diviſions and Quarrels, he wiſely ſuppreſt them; which he was the more willing to do, becauſe † he enjoyed a Penſion of 1400 Florins. He would have been a happy Man, had he been able to put an end to the Quarrels of his Family, as he did to thoſe of his Scholars: but his Sons hated one another ſo violently, and were ſo wicked, that they made him extreamly uneaſie in his old Age. He gave over the Function of a Profeſſor, after he had glorioully exerciſed it (D) for the ſpace of 53 Years, and retired to Siena, where he died (E) very old: he left a great Eſtate to his Heirs ‡. It appeared by his Funeral how much he was eſteemed by the Inhabitants of Siena; for every * Body went in Mourning, and all the Courts of Judicature were ſhut up. He had been a Diſciple of the famous Zimara β, and Schoolfellow of Felix Peretti, who was Pope by the Name of Sixtus V. and boaſted as long as he (F) lived, that he had been able to anſwer his Objections at a publick Diſputation.

PIENNE (Jean de Halluin Demoiſelle de) Maid of Honour to Catherine de Medicis, was paſſionately beloved by Francis ‡ de Montmorenci, Eldeſt Son to the Conſtable Anne de Montmorenci. He promiſed her to marry her, without (A) acquainting his Father or his Mother with it, ſo much he feared that they ſhould oppoſe his Deſign. 'Tis not likely that they would have conſented to it, tho' that Lady was very Illuſtrious by her Birth, and commendable for her Beauty and Virtue; but there was a particular Reaſon which moved them to oppoſe that Engagement openly, viz. becauſe Henry II. was deſirous that his Natural Daughter, Widow of the Duke of Caſtro, ſhould marry the Lover of the Lady de Pienne. The Conſtable's Ambition was too much favoured by ſuch an Alliance, to give him leave to ſuffer that his Son's Engagement ſhould paſs for a good one. Therefore he omitted nothing to get it broke, and being in the greateſt Favour with the King that ever that is to ſay, in the Year 1557. That Hiſtorian cannot be excuſed, but by ſaying that Piccolomini publiſhed his Morals before the Year 1557, and put them afterwards in a new Order, and ſo the abovemention'd Title will denote a ſecond Edition. He inſerted in his Morals printed in the Year 1582, a Treatiſe de Methodo, wherein he refuted Zabarella his Collegue and Rival: The latter anſwered him, but Piccolomini made a Reply intitled Comes politicus adverſus Jacobum Zabarellam.

(B) To revive the Platonick Philoſophy.] Imperialis ſays, That he began to apply himſelf to that Study, after he had given over the Functions of a Profeſſor; but Tomaſini ſays, that he read Lectures, and wrote ſomething about it even at Padua. Here are the Words of Imperialis: (i) Hac igitur egregie navata Venetiis opera per annos duos & viginti patriam ſibi tandem vivendam commiſit, in qua extremos etiam ſpiritus hauſit. Ac interim pluribus ad magnum Etruriæ Ducem (k) legationibus perfunctus plurimiſque honoribus auctus amœniſſime Platonis philoſophiæ vacare cœpit, quam etiam commentariis exornandam ſuſceperat, ipſum namque dicere ſolitum accepimus, Platonis & Ariſtotelis philoſophiam duos quaſi oculos humani aciem intellectus dirigere, quorum alterutro ſi quis careat Cyclopis inſtar in hac rerum univerſitate labatur neceſſe eſt: ſed communia fata præclaros hoſce illius conatus interciderunt. See the Words of Tomaſini (l) in the Margin, and make the neceſſary Compariſons.

(C) I ſhall ſay (m) in another Place wherein he exceeded Zabarella.] But I muſt obſerve here that he was inferior to him in ſome reſpects. He did not dive into the bottom of his Subject, as Zabarella did, he rambled from one Subject to another, and preſented them rather as a Wine to be taſted, than to be drank off. This ſeems to be the meaning of Imperialis. Piccolomineus, ſays he (n), oratione quidem utitur expedita, gravi, & illaborata, cæterum ſententiarum nexu frequentior quam forte conveniat, excurrit enimvero, nec in concluſionibus hæret, novis at ſubinde doctrinæ cumulis urget, ut libanda potius quam guſtanda propoſitorum veritas offerri videatur, propterea bene ſentientium calculis ſancitum, hujus ſcripta magis provectiorum auribus inſervire, illius autem juniorum.

(D) Exerciſed it for the ſpace of 53 Years.] So ſays Tomaſini: but the Account he gives of it cannot be reconciled with the Words of Imperialis, who ſays that Piccolomini was one Year at Macerata, ten Years at Perugia, and two and twenty at Padua, which makes up but 33 Years. It would be needleſs to ſay that he forgot his profeſſing of Logick at Siena; for it could not laſt 20 Years, ſeeing Piccolomini was but 25 Years old, when he was made Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Macerata. Ghilini (a) takes in the 53 Years of Tomaſini, and he is more excuſable than Paul Freherus, (b) who admits of them after he had ſaid that Francis Piccolomini was made Profeſſor at Macerata, being 25 Years of Age, that he kept that Profeſſorſhip but one Year, that he exerciſed that of Perugia only ten Years, and that of Padua twenty two Years. Such are the Miſtakes, which an Author will be guilty of when he joyns together ſeveral oppoſite Relations.

(E) Where he died very old.] Tomaſini and Imperialis agree in making him live 84 Years: they have forgot to ſet down the Year of his Death; but we know from the Date of his Epitaph, as it is in (c) Ghilini, that it was the Year 1604. Imperialis obſerves that that venerable old Man (d) was ſo happy as never to want Spectacles.

(F) And boaſted as long as he lived, that he had been able to anſwer.] I ſhall ſet down the matter of Fact, as it is related by Imperialis. (e) Et quidem Fœlix adhuc Minorita quod ſemel propoſitarum in Templo Theſium ex utraque philoſophia publicum impugnatorem ſortitus erat Franciſcum, ſæpius porro pontifex ejus diei memoriam recolebat, ſibi digniſſimum reputans cum acerrimo, ut ipſe ajebat, ingenio in celebri conſeſſu haud ſegniter doctrinæ atque ingenii gloriam ſuſtinuiſſe.

(A) He promiſed her to marry her, without acquainting his Father or Mother with it.] Mr. le Laboureur who had (f) the Originals of all the Proceedings, ſays, they began with the Interrogatory of the two Lovers made in the Louvre on the 5th of October 1556, that Jane de Halluyn was called firſt, and ſaid ſhe was about 19 or 20 Years old, and that 5 or 6 Years before Meſſire Francis de Montmorenci "had "ſpoken to her of Marriage, in the Palace of Pa- "ris, or at St. Germains, where he ſaid that he took "her for his Wife, and ſhe anſwered, that ſhe took "him for her Husband: That he had ſpoken to her
"about it ſeveral times before, but ſhe would not have
"him, becauſe he was too young, and beſides, ſhe was "afraid that the Conſtable would take it ill; to "which he anſwered, that he would ſtay ſo long, and
"be ſo obedient to him, that he would make him ap- "prove of it: and ſhe would not have declared it, if
"the ſaid M. de Montmorenci had not ſpoken of it,
"becauſe of the Marriage of the Dutcheſs of Ca-"ſtro. She ſaid further, that ſhe had received "no Gift nor any Preſent, and that every thing
"was done by word of Mouth, without Wit-
"neſſes, and without acquainting any of her Rela"tions with it. That he wrote to her about it
"whilſt

§ Taken from James Philip Tomaſini, Elog. part 1. p. 106. & ſeq.

* Id. ib.

† This ſhews that the Profeſſors got ſomething by them. Id. p. 107.

‡ Freher. ibid.

* Et ab his etiam quod inſolito civium ſqualore, [illegible], Lacrymis eius in patria funus elatum. Imper. in Muſeo hiſt. p. 115.

β Id. ib. p. 114.

‡ Who was made Mareſchal of France in the year 1559.

(i) Id. ib. p. 115.

(k) He mentions one of theſe Deputations in the Dedicatory Epiſt. of his Book de rerum definitionibus dated from Siena in 1600.

(l) Platonicam diſciplinam fere collapſam & legendo & ſcribendo in integrum reſtituere conatus eſt, illud in primis enitens ut Platonem cum Ariſtotele in pluribus conciliaret. Tomaſin. elog. part. 1. p. 209.

(m) In one of the Rem. of the Art. Zabarella.

(n) Imper. ib. ſup.

(a) Ghilini, teatro, tom. 1. p. 62. Witten in Diario Biogr. ad an. 1604. mentions only 52 years.

(b) Freher. in Theatro p. 1498.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Ex eo fœlix in tanto ſenio quod oculorum vim nullo unquam chryſtalli ſubſidio juvit. Imper. ib. ſup.

(e) Imper. ib. p. 114.

(f) Le Laboureur, addit. to the Memoirs of Caſtelnau, tom. 2. p. 419.

ever a Subject was in, he moved that Prince to uſe all imaginable means to get the Promiſe, which might be alledged by the Lady de Pienne, declared null. ǂ That Affair became the greateſt in Chriſtendom, becauſe of Pope Paul IV. who had a mind to marry that Daughter of Henry II. (who was already Widow of an Italian, and a Pope's Grand-Son) to another Italian his Nephew. . . . . . The Pope's Intereſt was the only obſtacle to the Diſpenſation which was demanded of him, and which Francis de Montmorency went to ſollicite in Perſon. The King did not believe that the Pope would deny him any thing, in ſo favourable a Time as that of the League which they were then treating of againſt Spain. Nevertheleſs, Paul IV. appeared (B) ſo averſe to it, that the King was obliged to have recourſe to ſome other Expedients. He ǂ Le Laboureur addit. to Caſtelnau tom. 2. p. 419.

" whilſt he was in Priſon, but that ſhe burnt " his Letters, that he continued to ſpeak of it ſince " his Return, namely, in the Abbey of Vauluiſant where " he was lately, and even Yeſterday in the Evening in " the Conſtable's Houſe, he repeated the ſame things " to her, and deſired her not to be angry. She added that ſhe knew not that the ſaid Marriage was " clandeſtine and prohibited, and that ſhe thought he " might marry of himſelf, tho' he had a Father and a " Mother, becauſe Marriage belongs to God, and Ceremonies to the Church. For the reſt, ſhe referred it to the Sieur de Montmorenci, and ſhe put " her Hand to her Anſwer. That Lord made a like " Anſwer, and after he had ſaid that he was 26 " Years of Age, he confeſt every thing, even that " the Day before in the Evening, he had made a " new Promiſe of Marriage to her, as he was ſpeaking of the Trouble he was in; only being ask'd, " whether having a Father and a Mother, he knew " not that it was not in his power to contract a " Marriage without their Conſent, he ſaid, that " when he did that Folly, he conſidered not all theſe " things, and that his Age did not bear it, and that if " he was to do the ſame again, he would think more of " it. . . . . (g) Thoſe Depoſitions were ſent to Rome, " with abundance of Paſſages collected out of the " Scripture and the Fathers, againſt Marriages contracted without the Conſent of Parents, and the " Pope received the whole graciouſly enough at firſt, " made a great Reception to the Sieur de Montmorency, " and promiſed him all manner of Satisfaction: but " either he diſſembled, or had not yet thought of this " occaſion of Allying his Family with the Houſe of " France, which made him put off that Buſineſs, " that he might have time to think by what means " he might effect his Deſign. „ In an Act of Proteſtation which Mr. de Montmorenci cauſed to be drawn up in the Houſe of Cardinal du Bellai at Rome, the 23d of March 1557, he declared: (h) " That five Years ago and above, being in the Heat " of his Youth, he became in Love with the Lady " Jane de Halluin de Pienne, and contracted a Marriage with her by word of Mouth, without the " conſent of the King, and of his Father and Mother; that ſince that time the King and his Father being reſolved to marry him to Diana of " France, he came to Rome by their Order to have " the Pope's Abſolution and Diſpenſation; that for " the ſpace of four Months he had not ceaſed to " ſollicite His Holineſs about it, and even juſtified " the Lawfullneſs of his Demand by a Diſpenſation " granted by him in a like Caſe. Whereupon he " had been amuſed with hopes, and referred to a " Congregation of Divines and Canoniſts, ſummoned to meet on the 23d of this Month, with the " Cardinals, Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops, under pretence of making the thing more Juridical; but " in effect, as he had it from very good Hands, to " prejudice his Deſign, notwithſtanding the Promiſes of the Pope, who favoured the Opinions " for his Adverſe Party, and was diſpleaſed with, " and uſed very ill thoſe who were for his Abſolution, and appeared evidently to be contrary to " him. Wherefore having had notice of the Renunciation of the Lady de Piennes, he proteſts " againſt whatſoever the Pope may order for the " future, againſt the Liberty which he pretends to " have of Marrying, and demands that the Petitions preſented by him to his Holineſs, and the " Diſpenſation granted by the Pope in a like Caſe, " be entered into a Regiſter. „ We ſhall ſee (i) by and by the Reaſons of his Complaints.

(g) Id. ib. p. 420. Obſerve theſe Words of Brantome in his Encomium on the Conſtable of Montmorenci tom. 2. of his Memoirs p. 137. As the Conſtable had procured a Match between him and the Natural Daughter of K. Henry. . . . when his Father told him of it, and of the Day appointed for the Wedding, M. de Montmorency anſwered him that he could not hearken to it, becauſe he was engaged to marry Mademoiſelle de Pienne. The old Man was ſtrangely ſurpriſed, and had more recourſe to Tears, &c.

(h) Le Laboureur ib. p. 432.

(i) See the Rem. B.

(B) Paul IV. appeared ſo averſe to it that the King was obliged.] Mr. le Laboureur goes on. " The " Pope (k) kept a great while Francis de Montmorenci in Rome, putting him off from Congregation " to Congregation; but at laſt his Game was found " out, and the King and Conſtable being diſappointed in their hopes of the Pope, reſolved to " bring to a concluſion that Buſineſs, which had " made ſo great a Noiſe, and in order to it they " cauſed an Edict to be drawn up, which was made " on purpoſe, publiſhed and verified, whereby " Clandeſtine Marriages were declared to be Null: " Beſides, the poor Lady was forced to deſiſt; for " ſhe was ſhut up in the Convent of the Filles Dieu " at Paris, where deſpairing to ſucceed in her " Hopes, and fearing of being treated worſe, ſhe " was at laſt perſuaded that the Sieur de Montmorency had obtained the Pope's Diſpenſation. „

(k) Id. ib. p. 420.

That we may well underſtand how much the Intereſt of the Pope's Family did work upon him, we muſt not loſe the ſight of this Capital Point, viz, That Paul IV. deſired to marry his Nephew with the Natural Daughter of Henry II. and that he could not ſucceed in it, if he declared the Promiſe made to the Lady de Pienne to be Null. We ſhall ſee that he wiſhed on this occaſion that the Papal Authority were leſſened, and that he was deprived of a Right, of which he would have been very jealous in another Caſe. The particular Advantage of his Family was more dear to him than the Priviledges of Papacy, whether it be that he believed his Succeſſors would eaſily remedy the Prejudice he deſigned to do them, or that he abſolutely preferred perſonal Advantages to thoſe of the Holy See. This Affair was purſued with great heat by the Court of France; they omitted nothing to make it ſucceed. They preſented (a) the Act whereby the Lady de Pienne renounced her Pretenſions, and the Edict againſt Clandeſtine Marriages. They got (b) a Copy of a Diſpenſation which the Pope had granted in a like Caſe. Here is a Paſſage of the Relation which (c) Doctor de la Haye ſent to the Conſtable: It is a curious thing: " Paul IV. (d) ſent immediately for the Datary to know how that Diſpenſation had been drawn up; wondring at it, and " much more how it came into our Hands: to " which the Datary anſwered, that it had been " granted in a full Signature, and by His Holineſs; " which he might remember, being deſirous to " know and underſtand, more than any of his Predeceſſors did, what paſſes in his Signature. His " Holineſs was amazed at it, and asked the Datary, " by what means the ſaid Diſpenſation might be " retracted, a thing which the Datary ſaid could " not be done, becauſe it was already in the Hands " of the Parties, and that they were married by " virtue of the ſame. „ I ſhall give alſo ſome Abſtracts of the Reſult of the firſt Congregation held for the Diſpenſation of that Marriage. (e) The Pope preſided in it: many Divines and Canoniſts were called to it . . . . . the Pope began, and having propoſed the Matter of Fact, he ſaid: (f) " We " ask whether a Marriage contracted by Word of " Mouth, which is a true Marriage and a true Sacrament, according to the Opinion of the moſt " Holy Divines, may be diſſolved and broke by us, " I mean when a Carnal Copulation has not intervened. And then he added, Do not inſiſt, I deſire you, on the Examples and Facts of our Predeceſſors, which I proteſt I will not follow, but " in as much as the Authority of the Scripture, and " the Reaſons of the Divines will induce you to it. " He went on and ſaid, I do not doubt but that my " Predeceſſors and I may have erred ſometimes, " not only in this Fact, but alſo in many others; " nevertheleſs, we ought not to be condemned " for it; for God does ſo direct his Church as " to conceal many things from Her for a time, " which he reveals afterwards: this Chriſt himſelf has clearly enough intimated to us, as when " he ſaid to St. Peter, What I do now, thou doſt not " underſtand, but thou ſhalt underſtand it hereafter. " And

(a) Le Laboureur ub. ſup. p. 424.

(b) Ib. p. 425.

(c) Ib. p. 424.

(d) Ib. p. 426. See alſo the Rem. D.

(e) Ib. p. 427.

(f) Ib.

He publiſh'd an Edict, whereby Clandeſtine Marriages were declar'd to be null, and order'd that the Lady de Pienne ſhould be ſhut up in a Nunnery, and a Declaration of her deſiſting was extorted from her; and at laſt the Pope was hector'd, (C) for the Marriage of Mr. de Montmorency and the Daughter of Henry II. was celebrated with Pomp, altho' the Diſpenſation had not been granted. The Pope made an Acknowledgment which deſerves (D) to be here related. There was a great

“ And in another Place he ſaid, I have many things to ſay, which you cannot comprehend now, but the Spirit, which my Father ſhall ſend in my Name, will teach you all things. Who knows therefore but that God will now declare by Us what he permitted to be formerly unknown to others, concerning the Indiſſolubility of the Holy Marriage? Therefore, my Brethren and Children, uſe your endeavours to help me in this Affair; and without minding what ſuch and ſuch a one of my Predeceſſors did, as I have already ſaid, ſee whether it be not true, that they have not well underſtood what we are now examining, concerning the Indiſſolubility of Marriage. Having thus ſpoken, he made his Application to Archbiſhop Conſance, heretofore the Pope's Nuncio at the Court of the Emperor, and commanded him to give his Opinion. Conſance uſed his utmoſt endeavour to ſhew, that ſuch a Marriage could not be diſſolved by any means, and the Pope appear'd to be very well pleaſed with his Opinion; which moved the ſaid Archbiſhop to ſay a great deal more than he deſign'd, as it appears from his Writings and former Conferences about this Matter, from ſo many Smiles, Winkings, Nods, and Clappings of Hands. The Pope ſaid farther, with a loud Voice, That the ſaid Archbiſhop had given the right underſtanding of that Affair. Biſhop Antoniellus ſpoke next to him, a very old and venerable Man, who was of a contrary Opinion; and, in a few words gave and made out this Concluſion, That the Pope might do the thing which was in Queſtion. Whom the Pope anſwer'd, That he would not thank him for giving him ſo great a Power on this occaſion. And becauſe the ſaid Biſhop had made uſe of ſome Paſſages out of St. Thomas, the Pope added, That St Thomas might have ſaid many things being young, which he afterwards retracted, having acquir'd a greater degree of Knowledge; adding theſe Words of St. Paul, When I was a Child I ſpoke like a Child, but when I grew a Man I left childiſh things. Afterwards he went on and ſaid, 'Tis not without reaſon that I give you this Warning; I do it that none of thoſe who are to deliberate concerning this Matter, may rely upon ſuch Paſſages of St. Thomas, which he may have writ in his Youth. The Sacriſt ſpoke next, and was of the ſame Opinion with Biſhop Antoniellus, viz. That the Pope might and ought to diſſolve ſuch Marriages, when there is a reaſonable Cauſe for it. And becauſe in his Proofs, which were very long and learned, he happen'd to mention a Paſſage of Durandus, concerning Marriage, which we do not approve of, and which he did only to alledge that Doctor's Opinion, and not to defend it; the Pope being already offended at his Deliberation, grew very angry with him, as if he had been the Author or Defender of Durandus's Error. And the ſaid Sacriſt excuſing himſelf to His Holineſs, he ſtopt his Mouth with hard Words and great Threatnings, often repeating, that he deſerv'd Correction, and that he would ſpeak to him further about it in private. Which ſo diſcourag'd the reſt, that many of them reſolv'd to alter their Deliberations.,,

There were ſeven Perſons only who gave their Opinions in this Congregation; (g) the others were reſerved to be heard another time. The Cardinals went out very much diſſatisfied, and one might perceive, (h) without any further Intelligence of what paſt in it .... that there had been as much confuſion and diſorder in it as there is amongſt Sheep, when their Shepherd is wounded: for every body went home, one one way, another another way, in a great Conſternation, and almoſt with Tears in their Eyes, without being able to tell any Friend or Servant how the thing went, and what Reſolution had been taken. Cardinal du Bellay, and Mr. de Montmorency having inform'd the Conſervator of Naples, that the King's Edict would eaſily ſupply the Pope's Diſpenſation; and that he ſhould remember, (i) that a leſſer thing than that occaſion'd the withdrawing of Germany and England from their Obedience to the Holy See, the Conſervator ſent the Datary to tell Cardinal Caraffa, and Cardinal de Piſa, “ (k) That he very much wonder'd at the manner of proceeding of His Holineſs, and that he could never believe he would be a Judge and a Party in this Affair, and think that the Holy Ghoſt was in his Head, and in no body's elſe, deſpiſing every one's Opinion, with little reſpect for himſelf, and for thoſe whom he had appointed and commanded to ſpeak their Thoughts freely and impartially; and that for a leſs thing than this, by reaſon of Cardinal Cajetan's Obſtinacy, Germany was in ſuch a Condition as every body knew, without any great hopes of Amendment, except by an extraordinary Grace of God. And that they ſhould well conſider the Tenour of the ſaid Edict; by virtue whereof, together with the Cenſure of the Sorbonne, and the Authority of the Ordinary, without any other Diſpenſation of His Holineſs, the ſaid Mr. de Montmorency might ſet himſelf at liberty, and take ſuch a Wife as he thinks fit.,, This was repreſented to the Pope, but made him not change his Conduct. From whence it may be concluded, that the Court of France look'd upon this Negotiation as a thing of great Moment; but the Pope thought it not leſs important for his Intereſt to come to no Concluſion. If we had two or three Volumes in Folio of ſuch Relations, like that of Dr. de la Haye, and that (a) of Cardinal du Bellay, it would be one of the moſt curious Works that could be put into a Library.

(C The Pope was hector'd, for the Marriage .... was celebrated .... altho' the Diſpenſation had not been granted.] “ (b) The King and the Conſtable thought that they could not better revenge themſelves upon the Pope, for the little regard he had ſhewn to their Recommendation, than by paſſing on to the Marriage, by virtue of the Edict againſt Clandeſtine Marriages; and it was kept with the greater Magnificence at the Arrival of Mr. de Montmorency in the Month of May 1557, the Court being at Villiers Cotretz.,, (D) The Pope made an Acknowledgment which deſerves to be related.] This was done in the Congregation abovemention'd. “ I am not ignorant, ſaid he (c), that the Popes, my Predeceſſors, have granted ſeveral Diſpenſations in this Caſe; they are, in the preſence of God, to give him an account of it. If they have been miſtaken I have no mind to follow them; perhaps they may have done it through Ignorance, and that Age might not then know certainly, what the other Ages clearly perceive, according to the Words of JESUS CHRIST: Scietis autem poſtea, &c. Non poteſtis omnia portare modo, &c. Veniet paracletus, &c. And as to what is ſaid, That I have granted a Diſpenſation in a like Caſe, I would not have this to cauſe any prejudice to this Matter; for God knows that I never underſtood it. In the Signing-Office there is a multitude of People, Prelates, Referendaries, and others, who make a great noiſe; ſo that an old decrepit Pope cannot mind every thing for the Crowd. As to myſelf I proteſt that I never underſtood it: And moreover, that tho' I ſhou'd have err'd in one thing or another, yet I would not continue in my Error.,, This is a Paſſage taken out of a Relation of Cardinal du Bellay, which Mr. le Laboureur has inſerted in his Additions to Caſtelnau's Memoirs. And here you may ſee a Man who built upon a very weak Diſpenſation; for the Pope himſelf, who granted it, declar'd to the Sacred College, that he never underſtood that Queſtion, and that a Perſon of his great Age could not give ear to all the particular Matters, amidſt the great Noiſe that is rais'd in the Place where the Diſpatches are Sign'd. And yet the Man who had obtain'd this Diſpenſation thought himſelf well married; but if it was null he did commit Adultery great (E) deal of unfair Dealing in those Proceedings, and the Constable's Son

---

(g) Ibid. pag. 429.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. pag. 430, 431.

(k) I

(a) Mr. le Laboureur ſets it down at full length ubi ſupra, p.431, &c.

(b) Id. i pag. 43

(c) Ibid. pag. 43

dultery every time that he had to do with his Wife. Nothing appear'd shameful to Paul IV. provided he might find Pretences not to annul the Marriage of Mr. de Montmorency.

(E) There was a great deal of unfair dealing in those Proceedings.] Nothing could be more proper for the Pope's Design, than to be able to say, that the Lady de Pienne demanded the accomplishment of the Marriage. Therefore to take that Weapon out of his Hands, they provided themselves with an Act in due Form, whereby it appear'd, that she had no Pretensions to M. de Montmorency. But to obtain such a Declaration from her, they were forced to make her believe, that the Pope had already granted the Dispensation. Wherefore her Lover made no scruple to write such an untruth to her. Here is his Letter, it is as dry as those which he wrote to her before, were sweet and passionate. "(d) Mademoiselle de Pienne; Being sensible of the Error into "which I fell unawares, and being sorry that I "have offended God, the King, my Lord and my "Lady Constable, I have acquainted our Holy Fa- "ther the Pope how things past between us, and "begged His Holiness's Pardon, which he, out of "his Bounty and Clemency, has granted me; and, "inasmuch as it was necessary, he has given me a "Dispensation, to be restor'd to my former Liberty, "which I thought fit to give you notice of: and in "order to free ourselves from the Miseries and "Trouble we are in, I desist from all the Words "and Promises of Marriage which past between us, "from which, by virtue of the said Dispensation, "we remain discharged; and I declare you to be "so, beseeching you to do the like towards me, "and to take such a Party as you'll like best; for "I am resolved to keep no longer any Correspon- "dence with you; not but I look upon you to be "a sober and virtuous Lady, but to do my Duty, "and avoid the Mischiefs and Inconveniencies "which might ensue from it; but especially to give "them an occasion to His Majesty, and my said "Lord and Lady to forget the Offence I am guilty "of, that I may be able, not only to make it up, "and endeavour to make myself worthy of their "Favour, but also to perform what I owe them, "according to the Command of God, whom I be- "seech to keep you, Mademoiselle de Piennes, under "his Holy Protection. Rome the 5th of February. "He, whom you will find ready to serve you, "MONTMORENCY." Francis de la Porte, Gentleman to M. de Montmorency, a Master of the Requests, and one of the King's Secretaries, attended with two Notaries of the Chastelet, went to the Nunnery, where the Lady had been shut up. They had entrance (e) by virtue of a Letter signed with the King's own hand. They called for the Lady, and when she had read aloud M. de Montmorency's Letter, the Sieur de la Porte told her, "Mademoiselle, All that "I have to say comes from M. de Montmorency, and "I shall tell it you, if you please, because he has "order'd me so to do. You have seen by his Let- "ter, which you have just now read, how greatly "he thinks he has offended God..... (f) and he "has most humbly Supplicated His Holiness to par- "don him the Offence he had committed, by "promising to marry you, and to dispence both "him and you, that you might marry to ano- "ther whenever you shall think fit. This our "Holy Father has done, and by this means re- "stor'd Mr. de Montmorency and you to your "former Liberty, as he has mention'd to you "in his Letter, which was just now given you. "And he being despens'd with, and by that Dis- "pensation made free as he was before, to marry "another whenever he shall think fit; I declare to "you, by his Command, that he acquits you "from all Promises, which may have been in "any manner between you two before this time; "and I pray and require you, in his Name, that "you likewise declare to me, whether you do "not also acquit him from them on your part. To "which the said Lady de Pienne, with Tears in her "Eyes, has mournfully answer'd in these words: "M. de la Porte, I had rather that the breach of "the Promises of M. de Montmorency and of mine, "should come from him than from me. He shows "plainly, by the words you have spoke to me in "his Name, that he has a Heart less than a Wo- "man, and is not such a Man as he pretended to be, "when he told me, That he would lose his Life "rather than change his Resolution. He has very "much abus'd me; and I see plainly, that he had "rather be Rich, than an honest Man." This Answer containing nothing positive, Mr. de la Porte return'd to the Charge, and insisted chiefly upon the Papal Dispensation, and desir'd her to declare her Mind plainly: "Whereupon the said Lady, weeping as "before, spoke these words, Alas, Mr. de la Porte, "what Answer would you have me to make? Had "Mr. de Montmorency the Heart to write me such a "Letter?" This second Answer being as indefinite as the former, a third Question was put so precisely, that the Lady must needs answer to the Matter in hand. "Mr. de la Porte, said she (g), since the "Desire of Mr. de Montmorency is, that I should ac- "quit him from the Promises of Marriage between "us, and that now he leaves me, I neither will "nor can hinder him from doing what he plea- "ses, and I cannot have a Will contrary to his." Mr. de la Porte was not sufficiently satisfy'd with this third Answer, but he urg'd her still, and at last obtain'd that which follows: "(h) Mr. de la Porte, "Since Mr. de Montmorency does now acquit me "from the Promises of Marriage which were made "betwixt him and me, if he were the Son of a "King, or a Prince, having written to me as he "has done in his Letter which you just now deli- "ver'd, I would not marry him, and so I acquit "him. Nevertheless I wonder at his Way of wri- "ting in that Letter, and I cannot well believe that "he writ it, since he was wont to write to me in "another Way and Style." To this it was re- ply'd, That Mr. de Montmorency had been seen to write this whole Letter with his own Hand. As the Lady retir'd she made some efforts of Courage to excuse the Tears she had been seen to shed, but it was impossible for her to appear bold: every thing she said favour'd of her Humiliation, Grief, and Trouble, for not marrying this fickle Lover. 'Tis commonly said in Jest, or by way of Gallantry, That a Mistress has much ado to speak the terrible Yes, which she is to answer to the Question, Do you consent to be the Wife of such a Man? But 'tis very probable, that there never was a Yes of that nature more troublesome than that, which the Lady de Pienne answer'd to the Question, Do you consent that Mr. de Montmorency should not marry you?

There happen'd another thing, wherein according to all appearance he was perjur'd; which was this: "Being return'd from Rome (a) he gave a Declara- "tion in Writing, before the Chief Persons of the "King's Council, importing, that there had been no "Marriage between him and the Lady de Pienne, "really contracted in words; but only an Agree- "ment between them to make it believ'd, that by "this means they might endeavour to make the "Constable, his Father, agree to it." He (b) affirm'd upon Oath, That this Declaration written with his own Hand, contain'd the truth; and that if he had desir'd a Dispensation of the Pope by confessing to him more than he should, he did it in hopes to obtain it easily, by means whereof it had not appear'd that he had impos'd a Falsity; but that finding at Rome many Difficulties, he, at last, resolv'd to declare to His Majesty and the Constable the truth of the Matter. This is as if he had said, I never promis'd Marriage to the Lady de Pienne, but only agreed with her to say, That we had mutually given our Promise to one another; and we had no other design but to Induce, by this Lye, my Father and Mother to consent to this Marriage. Having publish'd many times this Falshood, I was troubled to unsay it again; and that I might not be forc'd to contradict myself, I chose rather to desire of the Pope a Dispensation, and I persisted in my Lye to the Holy Father: but not being able to avoid Contradictions this Way, I acknowledge, at last, that my Discourses were false, and I swear before the principal Members of the King's Council, and attest in Writing, that I have told a Lye for a long time, on purpose to deceive my Father and Mother, the Pope, &c. Must not Ambition have a very tyrannical Power to engage People to make such Confessions? And is there any Probability that this Lover had only so slight an Engagement with so young and so beautiful a Mistress? The Scruples wherewith he was tormented, as I shall now show, justify my Opinion †.

Here

(d) Ibid. pag. 421.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 422.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Ibid. pag. 423.

(a) Ibid. pag. 437.

(b) Ibid. pag. 432.

† Add to this the Discourses which the Lady de Pienne held with the Sieur de la Porte, which may be seen above.

ſon felt ſome Remorſe of Conſcience, which (F) oblig'd him to aſk the Abſolution of Pope Pius the Fourth. The Lady married, (G) ſome time after, a Man who was very inferior to the Gallant ſhe had loſt. We have here a very remarkable Inſtance, whereby it appears that the Paſſions of a Prince, which frequently occaſion many Abuſes, prove ſometimes a Remedy for the Diſorders of the State. The

Here I intend to examine an Anſwer which appears to me very Sophiſtical: The Cardinal of Lorrain, after the faſule which I have mention'd in another place, cauſ'd a Letter to be publiſh'd, wherein are found theſe words: (f) " I have heard ſome " others aſcribe the bad diſpoſition of the ſaid " Mr. de Montmorency to a more ancient Cauſe, " from the very time when he was perplex'd a" bout his Marriage with the Lady de Pienne, which " he confeſs'd and declar'd before the ſaid Lord " Cardinal, and other Lords deputed in this caſe " by the late King Henry, and quickly after denied, " and ſwore to the Pope, that he had never made " any Promiſe to the ſaid Lady; inſomuch that the " ſaid Mr. de Montmorency was aſham'd to be known " by the ſaid Lord Cardinal to be a perjur'd Man, " and one that might be excepted againſt, and de" graded from all Honour." See here what the Proteſtant anſwer'd who refuted this Letter: " (g) The ſecond Cauſe of the Hatred of Mr. de " Montmorency proceeds from hence, as you ſay, " becauſe you take him to be a Perjur'd Man, upon " the account of the Marriage of the Lady de Pienne. " Before I purge him from this Calumny, by true " Teſtimonies and Authorities, I humbly pray the " King's Majeſty to conſider your Boldneſs, whereby " you have exceeded the bounds of Reaſon, in " daring to publiſh, that the Marriage of his Siſter " is unlawful. Is it poſſible to draw any other " Conſequence from your Diſcourſe? I ſhould wil" lingly pardon your Ignorance, if it were not at" tended with Malice. Can the Promiſe of " Children (although your Accuſation were as " true as it is falſe) be of any Validity to con" clude their Marriage, unleſs it be approv'd by the " Conſent of their Parents, under whoſe Authority " they live? The Examples of Abraham and Iſaac " ſhow us ſufficiently that it belongs to Fathers to " marry their Children as they pleaſe. And if a " Vow (which is a Promiſe we make to God) made " by a Daughter without the Conſent of her Father is " null by the Law of Moſes; much more a Promiſe " of Marriage, made by one Perſon to another, will " be null if the Father conſent not to it. And al" tho' the Grecians have been too uncertain in theſe " Marriages, yet they were not ſo far depriv'd of " the Light of Nature, but a Maid made Anſwer, to " one who courted her, in theſe Verſes of Euripides,

" I cannot marry a Man
" Without the Will of my Father,
" To whom I ſubject am.

" If any one alledges, that the Authority of Fathers " is not ſo great over their Sons as over their Daugh" ters, all the Laws are againſt him; by which the " Fathers can even ſell them in their Neceſſity." After this the Author alledges the Scripture, the Councils, the Fathers, and the Civilians, to prove, that the Marriage of Children ought to be ſubject to the Will of thoſe from whom they receiv'd Life. But all this long Diſcourſe is nothing but a ſly Evaſion; for this is to ſhift the State of the Queſtion, and to paſs de Genere in genus. The Queſtion was not whether the Marriage of Mr. de Montmorency with the natural Daughter of Henry II. was lawful: The Author of the Letter had not touch'd upon that String; but he had only ſaid, that the Mareſchal was perjur'd for confeſſing and denying ſolemnly, that he had promis'd Marriage to the Lady de Pienne. Theſe two Facts are a plain proof of Perjury, whether the Promiſe was obligatory or not: For if a Man ſhou'd promiſe to commit a Crime, he wou'd eaſily obtain before all the Courts of Juſtice a Releaſe from his Promiſe; but if he ſhou'd ſwear before one Court, that he did promiſe it; and before another, that he did never promiſe it, he would be found guilty of Perjury. This was the Caſe of Mr. de Montmorency, as was pretended; this was the Subject of the Accuſation. The Enquiry was not whether he ought to keep his Promiſe of Marriage, nor whether it was lawful or unlawful: and yet the Proteſtant who anſwer'd the Letter of the Cardinal of Lorrain ſuppoſes, that all the Accuſation was grounded upon this, That that lawful Promiſe had not been kept. Having made this falſe Suppoſition, he rambles about, he alledges the Divine Laws and the Law of Nature, he handles the Common-place of Paternal Right, he ſays a hundred needleſs things, and ſays nothing at all to the purpoſe. This is the common practice of thoſe who cannot make a good Anſwer, and are afraid leſt they ſhould do a Prejudice to their Cauſe by being ſilent. They change the State of the Queſtion, that they may open a way whereby they may ramble from the Subject in hand. I believe many Readers thought, that the Apologiſt for Mr. de Montmorency had obtain'd a full Victory, and were very much pleas'd to ſee that he brought Henry the Second's Daughter into his Cauſe: a Stratagem too frequent in Polemical Writings, and which, at the bottom, is a meer ſhift.

(F) Some remorſe of Conſcience, which oblig'd him to aſk the Abſolution.] " (c) Thus things ſtood while " the Pope and the King liv'd; but either becauſe " Mr. de Montmorency had afterwards ſome Scruple " about it, and attributed to it the bad ſucceſs of the " many Big-bellies of his Wife, who had but one " live Child of the many ſhe had conceiv'd, which " died immediately after, or for ſome other Reaſons, " he had recourſe once more to the Holy See, and " ſent a Supplication to Pope Pius IV. after the " Death of Paul, whereof I have the Original Me" morial; wherein he declares, How by a ſurpriſe " of Love he had formerly made a Promiſe of Mar" riage to the Lady de Piennes, on condition, never" theleſs, that he ſhould obtain the Conſent of his " Father, and not otherwiſe; which he being not " able to obtain, the ſaid Lady did freely acquit " him from his Promiſe, as well by Word of " Mouth, as by a Declaration ſign'd by her, in the " preſence of Witneſſes, wherein ſhe perſiſts to " this Day, and he married; and nevertheleſs, " upon account of ſome Aſſertions made by him, " he deſires Abſolution, by way of Caution, and " that the Commiſſion ſhould be addreſs'd to the " Biſhop of Paris. Pope Pius IV. who had not the " ſame Intereſt with his Predeceſſor, made not ſo " much ado about it, and ſent him a good and ample " Diſpenſation..... (d) This Diſpenſation qui" eted his Conſcience, but did not change the Con" dition of his Marriage, which continued ſtill to " be barren." Mr. le Laboureur was very much inclin'd, for ſome domeſtick Reaſons, to juſtify, as much as poſſible, thoſe of the Houſe of Mr. de Montmorency; nevertheleſs, he ſeems to believe that it was not true, that the Promiſe I ſpeak of was not made but upon Condition: (e) " If this Marriage " of Diana of France with Mr. de Montmorency, " ſays he, was altogether advantageous and glorious " in the Eyes of the World, yet it is juſtly doubted " whether it was pleaſing to God, becauſe it was " contracted with more Violence than Juſtice, to " the prejudice of an Engagement, of Affection and " Promiſe on the part of the Mareſchal with Jane " de Halluin."

(G) The Lady married, ſome time after, a Man who was very inferior.] 'Tis Brantome who informs me of this, in a Parentheſis which he has inſerted in the Narrative he has given us of the Reſtitution of the Places of the Duke of Savoy. What he ſays is a proof that Love creeps in every where, and ſerves as a Spring to the moſt important Affairs of State. There were ſome wiſe Heads in the King's Council, who were of Opinion, that all the Towns which the Duke of Savoy demanded back again ſhould not be reſtor'd to him. The King of Navarre (f) argued, " That this Reſtitution ſhould be made abſo" lutely, otherwiſe he ſhould not have the King" dom of Sardinia: and that the Duke of Savoy had " acquainted and promis'd him, that he would uſe " his Intereſt for him with the King of Spain..... " In concluſion, after many Debates, the weaker " Party carried the Cauſe againſt the ſtronger; and " therefore they diſpatch'd into Piemont, from " Bois de Vincennes, after the taking of Bourges, " the Lord d'Alluye (Florimond Robertet) one of the " Four Secretaries of the Commands, who was very " much

(f) A Letter of a Lord of the Country of Haynault, ſent to his Neighbour and Friend who followed the Court of Spain, pag. m. 5 & 6.

(g) An anſwer to the Epiſtle of Charles de Vaudemont, Cardinal of Lorrain, fol. E iij verſo.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 439.

(d) Ibid. pag. 440.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 419.

(f) Brantome, Memoir. apud le Laboureur ubi ſupra Tom. I. p. 448.

The Edict whereby all (H) clandestine Marriages were declar'd void, occasion'd the enacting of a very good and sound Law; but it was not out of Zeal for the Publick Good that Henry II. enacted so good a Law, it was to promote the Intereſt “much in love with the Lady de Pienne . . . .

. . . .

. . . .

. . . .

. . . .

whom he deſired very much to Marry. The King of Navarre promiſed him, that if he did manage the Buſineſs to his content, he would make her marry him, of which there was no probability, but by his Favour; foraſmuch as this Lady was of one of the beſt and moſt honourable Houſes of France, and one who had refuſed, in her time, ſo high and ſo great Matches, that there was no Reaſon to think that a meer Secretary of the Commands ſhould marry her; who, nevertheleſs, married her afterwards, more out of Humour, and a capricious Fancy in the Maid, than upon any reaſonable Motive. This I have heard many of our Courtiers ſay, and not that the thing had been done by the Favour of the King of Navarre, for he had been dead above a Year; nevertheleſs 'twas he who firſt indulg'd him in his Love, and encouraged and aſſiſted him in it as much as he could: Thus, in theſe Matters, the Grandees at Court can do very much, and be very ſerviceable, and even their Companions and particular Friends.,, The King of Navarre knew very well how to make choice of his Tools, ſince he made uſe of a Man who was very much in Love, whom he filled with hopes of poſſeſſing the beloved Object.

(H) The Edict whereby Clandeſtine Marriages were declared void, occaſioned the enacting of a very good and ſound Law.] One of the ableſt Advocates of the Parliament of Paris argues very well upon this Subject, in his Letter to Robert and Fournier, Profeſſors of the Civil Law at Orleans, and he is troubled that the Law was not ſevere enough. He would not have had things done by halves, but that abſolutely all Marriages contracted without the Knowledge, or againſt the Will of the Fathers, ſhould have been annull'd. Here follows the beginning of his Letter: “(b) The Edict about Marriages has been publiſhed in our Court of Parliament, which is indeed great and magnificent, but greater ſtill, if you underſtood the Motive of it; becauſe ſome of thoſe who hold the chief Places of France, were the Cauſe of it. 'Tis ſaid, that the greateſt part of bad Examples, proceed commonly from ſuch things, as were formerly wiſely and holily ordained, but turn into Abuſes in proceſs of Time. On the contrary, never was there a good Law which did not proceed from ſome ſcandalous Practice; the Diſeaſe muſt firſt come, before the Remedy be found out. As to this Edict, every one rejoyces at it, as being brave and worthy of a King: I alone, like another Timon or Man-hater, mourn, ſigh and lament, not but that I am glad of the Authority that is given to Fathers over their Children; becauſe that I am ſorry that it is not granted more fully, and that as Alexander the Great being arrived in Aſia, did not amuſe himſelf with untying the twiſtings of the Gordian Knot, like the other Princes who had gone that way before him, but for a greater Diſpatch, cut it quite aſunder; ſo I wiſh this Matter had been fully ſettled, and that by an Ordinance made with the common conſent of the Gallican Church, all Marriages of Children had been declared null, for which there are only Promiſes, without the Authority and Conſent of the Fathers and Mothers. Upon this Account I pity France, which tho' it was never weary of bringing all Eccleſiaſtical Matters under a good and laudable Diſcipline, dares not put the laſt Hand to this Work.,, What he adds, contains ſeveral judicious Remarks; but his Concluſion is too ſevere, for he would have thoſe who allure any Body with fair Words into the Snare of Marriage, to be puniſhed with Death.,, Our Anceſtors, ſays he (a), being ſenſible, that it was a thing of a very ill Example, that any one under five and twenty Years of Age, ſhould be thought to be lawfully married by Word of Mouth, to the prejudice of the Paternal Authority, introduced the Action of Rape, (which we commonly call Raptum in parentes) which is unknown to all other Nations. Whereby Fathers and Mothers, and even Guardians, were permitted to bring an Accuſation before a Royal Judge, againſt a Man or a Woman, who with ſuch fair and affected Words, ſhould entice and draw any of their Children into the Snare of Marriage: and ſuch is the Power and Effect of this Purſuit, that whilſt it laſts, it ſuſpends and ſtops all the Proceedings which might be made before an Official, or an Eccleſiaſtical Judge, for the Validity of the Marriage. But what Advantage did you ever get by ſuch an Accuſation? None at all; only like true French men, we are in the Beginning ſtronger than Men, but we prove at laſt weaker than Women. Every Body ſtirs himſelf in the beginning of the Purſuit, the very Judges ſeem mightily to favour the Plaintiffs. But when all is done, you never ſaw an Exemplary Puniſhment made upon ſuch an Account, and at laſt he, who committed the Rape, triumphs over the Law and the afflicted Family, remaining in full poſſeſſion of the Perſon raviſhed. For my part I am of Opinion, either that ſuch an Accuſation ſhould not have been introduced amongſt us, or that it ſhould terminate with the Death of the Guilty; that the Diſſolution of his Life might alſo produce the Diſſolution of his Marriage.,, Perhaps he did not ſpeak his whole Mind, he meant perhaps thoſe, who not contented to ſeduce a young Maid, perſuade her to conſent to her being raviſhed. Suppoſing that out of Inadvertency he omitted this part of the Definition of a Rape, and that he had it in his Mind, his Concluſion cannot be look'd upon as too ſevere in France, for the French puniſh with Death all thoſe who raviſh a Maid, whether ſhe conſents to it or not. I think that Law was not eſtabliſhed yet, when Paſquier wrote his Letter to the two Profeſſors of Orleans. I fancy it was eſtabliſhed ſince, becauſe they perceived that the Law which puniſhed only the Raviſhers of a Maid not conſenting, was almoſt of no uſe. It was eaſily eluded, for it was no difficult thing to perſuade a Maid to confeſs that ſhe had conſented to it: ſuch a Confeſſion ſaved a Man's Life, and the Maid was not unwilling to ſave the Life of a Man, who profeſſed that Love had forced him to raviſh her. beſides, ſhe found her ſelf diſhonoured, very much ſuſpected, and in danger of meeting with no good Match, and of being look't upon as the Remains of another, having been for ſome time in the power of a Raviſher; and all thoſe things being duly conſidered by the Daughter and her Parents, they reſolved to ſave the Man, and in order to it, the raviſhed Maid was only to confeſs that ſhe had conſented to it: So that ſuch an Affair ended as thoſe (c) mentioned by Paſquier, and ſo Rapes became a very common thing; the old Law proved uſeleſs, and it was thought neceſſary to make another more ſevere, that ſhould have no regard to the Declaration which Maids ſhould make of having conſented to their being raviſhed. It was thought fit to puniſh their Conſent; for Impunity tends very much to the multiplying of ſuch ill Examples: thoſe who ſucceed firſt, are an encouragement to others, and then no Body is aſhamed of treading in a way frequented by ſeveral People. See the Remark of the Article Arioſto.

Our Lawyer examines the Permiſſion which the Edict gave (d) to Fathers and Mothers to diſinherit their Children, who have been ſo imprudent as to enter into the Bond of Marriage without their Will. He ſhews that it is neither a Remedy, nor a Conſolation, but a new (e) Calamity, and maintains that the only Remedy (f) is that ſuch Marriages ſhould be declared null by an Ordinance of a Council. He alledges the Scripture, the Fathers, the Roman Law, the French Law under King Charles the Bald, and he ſays that he does not find that there has been any Council ſince, that took away that noble Juriſdiction from Parents with reſpect to their Children. He goes on and ſays, “This I know, that ſome hundred Years ſince, ſome Monks, Patchers of old Gloſſes, have inſinuated to us this barbarous and bruitiſh Opinion, that by the Canon Law the Conſent of Fathers and Mothers was requiſite for the Marriage

“of

(g) At this Gap comes in a Parentheſis in the Text of Mr. le Laboureur, which would ſerve to no purpoſe here.

(b) Paſquier, Letters, Book 3. p. 111. of tom. 1.

(a) Id. ib. p. 112, 113.

(c) When there has been a Rape there is at firſt a great ſtir about it, the Raviſher is firſt threatned with puniſhment; but that eagerneſs cools by degrees, the Raviſher remains Maſter of his Prey, and it is declared to be a good prize. 'Tis fear'd that when he has had ſport enough with his Miſtreſs, he will leave her in the lurch. He muſt be intreated, and ſo he becomes Maſter of the Terms of the Contract.

(d) Paſquier ib. p. 113.

(e) Is it not to make my old Age miſerable, that I muſt ſee that Fool unhappy in a great meaſure for having fooliſhly bound himſelf, and that I can have no comfort but by making him altogether miſerable, by diſinheriting him as the Law impowers me to do it? Id. ib. p. 114.

(f) Id. ib.

reſt of his Favourite, and to avoid the Shame † of yielding to the artificious Intrigues of the Pope. The Houſe of Guiſe did mightily contribute (I) to the Oppoſitions which Francis de Montmorenci met with at the Court of Rome.

† See the Rem. E.

PIGHIUS (Albertus) was born at Campen, in the Province of Over-Yſſel, and is reckoned among the Learned Men of the XVI. Century. Moreri ſpeaks of him at large, but he has not obſerved a groſs Miſtake of Lewis (A) Guicciardin, which

“ of their Children, only out of Honour, and not “ out of Neceſſity. Thoſe Monks made a perpetual “ Profeſſion of Celibacy, and would to God, that “ as that wiſe King of Sparta Ageſilaus, being ſurpriſed by a Friend, as he was playing with his “ Children, deſired him to ſuſpend his Judgment “ about it till he was a Father; ſo thoſe Monks had “ not been ſo buſie as to interpoſe their Opinion “ concerning Marriage, ſince their Vow and their “ Rule diſpenſed them from being Fathers. Hence “ it is that they meaſure Paternal Affection by their “ own, I mean by a common and trivial Affection. (g) „ I wonder how he forgot to ſay, that the Permiſſion of Diſinheriting is not a ſufficient Terror to young Lovers; for there are ſo many Fathers, who have eaſily forgiven the fault of Marrying againſt their Will, and we have ſo few Examples of Fathers who kept their Reſentment as long as they lived, and expreſt it by their laſt Will, that Children flatter themſelves with the hopes of being ſoon reconciled. They relie much upon the natural (h) Force of Paternal Love, and they know very well, that a ſhort Mortification will expiate great Faults with a Father, pro peccato magno paulum ſupplicii ſatis eſt Patri (i).

(g) Id. ib. p. 117.

(h) O nimium potens Quanto parentes ſanguinis vinclo tenes Natura! quàm te colimus inviti quoque! Seneca in Hippolyto act. 4. v. 1114.

(i) Terent. in Andria act. 5. ſc. 3. in fine.

Paſquier's Cenſure is at the bottom a great Encomium upon the Edict of Henry II. For ſince that learned Lawyer would have the rebellion of Children under Age, to be more ſeverely puniſhed, he praiſes and approves the new degrees of Puniſhment, which it was made liable to. Beſides, it is to be obſerved, that he declares that what is wanting therein ought to proceed from the Eccleſiaſtical, and not the Royal Authority.

A REFUTATION of thoſe, who endeavour to juſtifie clandeſtine Marriages and Rapes.

Let no Body ſay, that ſuch an Edict is prejudicial to thoſe Perſons, whoſe Fathers are ſo covetous or capricious, that they will never conſent to the Marriage of their Children. This is no reaſonable Objection, there is no Law altogether convenient to every Body, we muſt be therefore contented with ſuch Laws as remedy the greateſt Evils. Now there are infinitely more Children, who in the Heat and Folly of Youth, will marry improperly, than there are Fathers who will oppoſe reaſonable Matches. 'Tis therefore better that the Laws ſhould reſtrain the Liberty of Children, than if they ſhould leſſen the Paternal Authority. Beſides, Children after a certain Age were no longer reſtrained by the Edict of Henry II. Let no Body ſay neither that the Liberty of marrying without the conſent of the Fathers, gives honeſt People, who have no Eſtates, an opportunity of making their Fortune. This I have heard ſome Engliſhmen ſay, who endeavoured to make an Apology for the Priviledges of ſome Churches in London, where a Prieſt may give the Nuptial Benediction without the Obſervation of any preliminary Formalities, and conſequently legitimate the moſt clandeſtine Marriages. It has been ſeen by ſuch means, ſaid they to me, that the Patrimony of a very rich Heireſs dropt into a poor Family, which flouriſhed afterwards, and was the Glory of the Country. The very ſame Argument might ſerve to juſtifie the Impunity of Rapes. But this is a weak Apology; for the greateſt Abuſes will ſometimes prove convenient to ſome private Men: but that is not a Reaſon to keep them up. Can any one be a true honeſt Man, a Man of true Merit, who endeavours to enrich himſelf by depriving a Father of the Power which Divine and Humane Laws give him over his Children? If we reckon right, we ſhall find that for one Man of Merit, who raiſed himſelf that way, there are twenty who have only the Art of Wheedling a young Maid, who is either very ſimple, or diſcontented with the Severity of a Mother, or a Guardian, &c. and the falſity of the Apology for the Priviledges of thoſe Churches has been plainly perceived; for we have read not long ſince in the Gazettes, that the Parliament of England was about to take them away.

(I) The Houſe of Guiſe did mightily contribute to the oppoſitions.] “ (l) The Preſence of the Duke of “ Guiſe at Rome, and the mutual Jealouſie between “ him and the Conſtable, gave ſo much the more “ occaſion to ſuſpect that he croſt that Diſpenſation, becauſe the intended Marriage was very advantageous to the Houſe of Montmorency. He and “ the Cardinal his Brother, were nearly allied with “ Pope Paul IV. and all the Houſe of the Caraffa's, “ they had been the chief Authors of the Rupture of “ the Peace with Spain in their behalf, and the Conſtable had oppoſed it; and therefore it was likely “ that they ſet the Pope at Work, and that if they “ did not propoſe to him to ask Diana of France “ for one of his Nephews, they made him hope “ however, that he might obtain her by ſtarting “ ſome Difficulties againſt the Diſpenſation, and “ made him ſenſible of the Advantages which would “ accrue to his Relations by it. So that they would “ not only have broken a Marriage of great importance to the Houſe of Montmorency, but alſo made “ another with a moſt noble Houſe indeed, but unequal in Riches and Grandeur. „ The Guiſes found ſo many Advantages in the Marriage of Francis de Montmorency with the Lady de Pienne, as Mr. le Laboureur ſhews, that there can be no doubt but that they played the Game which he ſpeaks of; and if they had not prepoſſeſt the Pope, and helpt him on, 'tis not likely at all that ſo cunning and crafty a Pope ſhould have had ſo little Power over his Paſſions. You have ſeen (a) how he expreſt his Partiality by his rough Proceeding, and inveighing againſt thoſe who gave not their Opinion according to his Deſires. Had he left to every one the liberty of giving their Votes, he could not have compaſt his Deſign, that is to ſay, the Execution of the Projects which the Guiſes put him upon. Had it not been for that, he had commanded his Paſſions, and covered his Deſign, and perſuaded ſeveral People that his Zeal for the Diſcipline obliged him not to violate the Holy Canons in the leaſt, tho' he might thereby pleaſe the Moſt Chriſtian King, and raiſe the Papal Authority to ſuch a Degree, as his Predeceſſors had raiſed it more than once. Had the Pope's Conduct been ſuch, it might have afforded Mr. Eſprit an Example of the Deceitfulneſs of Humane Virtues.

(l) Le Laboureur, ub. ſup. tom. 2. p. 437.

(a) In the Rem. B.

(A) A groſs Miſtake of Lewis Guicciardin.] He ſays that Albertus Pighius, a great Divine, and a great Mathematician, left Italy, where Hadrian VI. Clement VII. and Paul III. had heaped up Honours and Riches on him, and returned into his Country, and died in it glorioſly ſome Years after; and then he adds, that nevertheleſs ſome Authors have ſaid that he died in the Year 1530, at Bologna by the Fall of a Bridge. He obſerves, that Paulus Jovius is the firſt who told that Story, and that Surius and ſome others did blindly tranſcribe him: and from thence he takes occaſion to cenſure the raſhneſs of ſome Copiſts. (b) Paulus tamen Jovius, quem ſecuti ſunt poſtmodùm Frater Laurentius Surius, & alii quidam Scriptores, qui non inſtituta priùs collatione, neque adhibitâ ullâ conſimili diligentiâ, (digni ſanè hoc nomine qui reprehendantur) alienâ fide ſubnixi ad alios ſeſe perpetuò referunt: Paullus (inquam) Jovius, libro hiſtoriarum ſuarum vigeſimo ſexto, Albertum hunc, multò anteà tempore, anno ſcilicit Chriſti 1530, & in ipſa Caroli Quinti Cæſaris inauguratione, fortuita pontis ruinâ Bononiæ mortuum perhibet. Here's a Cenſure very ill placed! Guicciardin does ſharply condemn the Authors, who admit of any Relations, without examining whether they be true or not, he ſpeaks of them with great Contempt, and yet for all that commits the ſame Fault for which he blames them. For if he had been at the pains to conſult Paulus Jovius, and Brother Laurentius Surius, he might have ſeen that they do not ſay that Pighius loſt his Life in the Year 1530. He did therefore blindly tranſcribe ſome Writers, who aſcribed that falſehood to thoſe two Authors. I have conſulted Paulus Jovius in the Place quoted by Guicciardin, and I found nothing in it relating to the Matter in hand: I look'd for the Place where he deſcribes the Coronation of Charles V. and I found only that Pighius was one of thoſe who fell, when the Bridge tumbled down. (c) Ibi plerique militibus immixti, (b) Ludovicus Guicciardinus, in Deſcriptione Belgii Provinciarum p. m. 237.

(c) Paul Jovius hiſt. l. 2 fol. m.11 verſ.

which I ſhall cenſure, not the extream (B) Uglineſs, and the ill Pronunciation of Albertus Pighius. (C) Moreri has committed ſome conſiderable Faults. Beza ſays, that Pighius wrote a Book againſt Calvin, to (D) be promoted to the Dignity of a Cardinal. Others affirm, that the Reading of Calvin's Works made Pighius (E) Heterodox, concerning the Merit of good Works, and the Juſtification of Sinners. 'Tis pretended by others, that Pighius examined Calvin's Works with ſo great a deſire of refuting them, that his Averſion for the Opinions of that Adverſary made him run into another Extream. They ſay, that he followed the Steps of the Pelagians, and therefore Cardinal Bona † adviſes the Reader to read Pighius's Works with caution. His Treatiſes concerning Free Will againſt Calvin, and concerning Original Sin, have been placed amongſt the prohibited Books by the Spaniſh Inquiſition.

immiſti, fed è caſu procidentes, ſeſe pilis atque ſecuribus induerunt; inter quos fuit Albertus Pighius Belga theologus Lutheromaſtix, minime tamen pro tumultu clades incidit. A Man who ſays that the Fall of the Bridge made more noiſe than hurt, and doth not ſay that Pighius, the only Perſon he names amongſt thoſe that fell, was killed by it, intimates plainly enough, that he recovered of it. Note, that he calls him Lutheromaſtix, whereby Guicciardin may be convicted of a new Over-ſight, for he accuſes (d) Paulus Jovius of having charged Pighius with Lutheraniſm. His Charge againſt Surius is very ill grounded, for that Carthuſian doth (e) faithfully tranſcribe Paulus Jovius, and beſides, he ſays in another place, that Pighius died only in the Year (f) 1543. To which I ſhall add, that Paulus Jovius obſerves, that the Piety of Pighius preſerved him from the diſmal Conſequences of the Fall of the Bridge. (g) Quum id volumen (de hierarchia) commentaretur . . . . . . cum è ſummo vitæ periculo certiſſimum Dei maximi numen eripuit. Bononiæ enim in celeberrima pompa, quum tranſeunte coronato Cæſare Carolo Quinto, pars lignei pontis juxta Cæſarem turbæ pondere corruiſſet, Albertus tignorum, atque hominum ruina ita oppreſſus eſt, ut probitatis, ac inſtituti operis merito ſervaretur. Obiit nondum ſenex in patrio ſolo, ſacerdotiis à Clemente & Paulo liberaliter honeſtatus. Hoſpinian in anſwer to thoſe who alledged, as an Argument againſt the Doctrine of Zuinglius, that he died of a violent Death, retorts this Argument upon them amongſt other Reaſons. He names ſome Perſons, zealous for Popery, who ended their Days after a tragical manner, and reckons Pighius amongſt them. De Pighio aliqui ſcribunt, ſays he (h), fuiſſe illum in tumultu oppreſſum in magna hominum frequentia una cum pecunia illa quam à Papa & Cardinalibus propter operam ſuam in cauſa pontificia defendenda collocatam, acceperat. We find in all Chriſtian Societies, ſome Hiſtorians who take advantage of a falſe Report: The Orthodox themſelves are not free from that Fault. See in the Remark F a Divine of the Confeſſion of Augsburg, who advances the ſame falſity with Hoſpinian.

(B) The extream Uglineſs and the ill Pronunciation.] Paulus Jovius pretends, that Nature abuſed Pighius with a kind of Impudence, by covering his great Learning and Chriſtian Eloquence with a hideous Face. (i) Magna hercle naturæ illudentis inverecundia, excellentem doctrinam cum illuſtri eloquentia conjunctam ſi Chriſtiani ſcriptoris decus ſpectetur, multa infaceti oris truculentia opertam, in Alberto Pighio conſpeximus. . . . . . In diſſerendo vultus Scythico more contuſus & enormis, & aſpero gutture vox educta, & graviter reſonantis naſi tumultus, totam ferè ſapientiæ gloriam deformabant.

(C) Moreri has committed ſome conſiderable Faults.] I. I will not be poſitive about this Queſtion, whether Pighius's Father was a Gentleman; but I dare ſay that Moreri aſſures it ſomewhat raſhly. The Word Patricius, upon which he relies, is an equivocal Word; it does commonly ſignifie, when 'tis uſed for Modern Families, a Man, whoſe Anceſtors have been Senators, Burgo-Maſters, &c. The Patrician Families in ſome Imperial Towns, and in ſome other Places, are ſometimes Noble; but whether they be ſo or not, they are called Patrician Families, provided they have been for ſome time in poſſeſſion of the Magiſtracy from Father to Son. Perhaps this was all the Gentility of Pighius's Father (k). I am not ignorant that Pighius had (l) many Lordſhips, and that it is commonly a ſign of a noble Extraction; but becauſe it is not a demonſtrative Proof of it, I will not be poſitive about it. It is enough for me that I have obſerved the ambiguous Senſe of the Word, which gave occaſion to Moreri's Obſervation. II. This Expreſſion is wrong, Mark of Benevento had ſpoiled the Opinion of Alphonſus, concerning the ſituation of the Eighth Circle. There are two Over-ſights in thoſe Words, for Moreri ſhould have ſaid, that that Man had ſpoiled (m) the Hypotheſis of Alphonſus concerning the Motion of the Eighth Heaven. III. Theſe Words, he wrote in 1538 an Apology for the General Council, which Pope Paul III. had publiſhed, are abſurd; for that Pope did not publiſh an Apology for the Council, but a Bull for the Celebration of a Council. IV. That Apology of Pighius was not rewarded with a Preſent of two thouſand Ducats, and with the Provoſtſhip of St. John at Utrecht; for Pighius received thoſe two Gratifications in the Year (n) 1535, three Years before the Publication of the Apology. V. When Moreri ſays that he died at Utrecht the 24th of Decemb. 1543, he miſtakes the Senſe of Valerius Andreas, who ſaid obiit, VII. Kalend. Januarii, anni ineuntis CIↃ IↃ XLIII. The meaning of it is, that Pighius departed this Life the 25th of December 1542. Valerius Andreas is not miſtaken, and ſo Spondanus committed a Fault when he ſaid that Pighius and Eckius died in the Year 1543, in a Month's time. He places Eckius's Death on the 10th of February (a). Swertius (b) places that of Pighius on the 29th of December 1543, wherein Bullart (c) tranſcribes him. They are miſtaken, for Cardinal Sadoletus mentions the Death of Pighius in a (d) Let- Letter bearing Date June 17. 1543. See the Remark F.

(D) To be promoted to the Dignity of a Cardinal.] That Book of Pighius, ſays Beza, was deſpiſed by honeſt Men, and the Author was deceived by Satan. Such was his Reward. (e) Adverſus Albertum Pighium Campenſem, ſophiſtam illius ætatis facile principem, à quo etiam fuerat pro Antagoniſta delectus, ex quo videlicet reportata inſigni victoria, galerum mox, à Pontifice conſequeretur. At ille hoc ſuo labore fruſtratus, id unum aſſequutus eſt quod merentur veritatis hoſtes, nempe ut & doctis ſaniſque hominibus fæteret, & ab ipſo Satana deciperetur.

(E) The Reading of Calvin's Works made Pighius Heterodox.] Theophilus Raynaudus having ſaid that there are ſome Hereticks, who cannot be read without danger by one that has not a deep Learning, but that there are ſome other Hereticks, who vent their Errors in ſo groſs a manner, that a Reader, tho' not very learned, needs not be afraid of reading them; that Author, I ſay, having once laid down that Foundation, brings in Luther and Calvin. He reckons Calvin amongſt the Hereticks of the firſt Claſs, and Luther amongſt thoſe of the ſecond, and alledges Pighius as a pregnant Example of what he ſays. (f) Qua ratione Lutherus, qui ubique ſtercora, & cænum crepat, ſuamque animi impotentiam ubique prodit, minorem legentis peritiam expoſcit, quàm Calvinus, cujus in ſcribendo vafrities, etiam mediocriter doctis fraudi eſſe queat, ut in Alberto Pighio eſt deprehenſum, quem conſtat ex lectione librorum Calvini impactum non raro eſſe in ſcopulos: tametſi homo erat non ineruditus, quod edita ab eo volumina teſtatum faciunt. An Engliſh (g) Proteſtant aſſures us that Pighius is altogether Orthodox in his Belief concerning Juſtification. Another Proteſtant of the ſame Country ſays, that the Papiſts accuſe Pighius of having ſpoiled himſelf by reading Calvin, and that Pighius maintained that he took his Doctrine only from the Scripture. (h) Dicunt Pontificii Pighium, alioqui Catholicum Doctorem, ſeductum ex Lectione librorum Calvini. At Pighius ipſe teſtatur, ſententiam ſuam ſe è lectione Scripturarum hauſiſſe: O Calvinum † Albertus Pighius in pr[illegible] Pelagianorum ſectator veſtigia ut opera ejus cum legenda merito cenſuerit Cardinalis Bona. Narratio Chronol. Cauſæ Michaelis Baji p. 192. tom. 2. oper. Baii edit. 1696. See the Rem. G Letter e and t.

(d) Lutheraniſmi inſuper, etſi injuſtiſſimè quidem, eum inſimulans: cùm (ut diximus) à doctrinâ Lutheri fuerit alieniſſimus, adeoque ſummus illius hoſtis & antagoniſta. Ludov. Guicciardin, ub. ſup.

(e) Surius commentar. p. m. 239. ad ann. 1530.

(f) Id. ib. p. 491. ad ann. 1543.

(g) Jovius in Elogiis, c. 105. p. 246.

(h) Hoſpinian. hiſt. ſacrament. tom. 2. p. 210.

(i) Jov. in elog. p. 245.

(k) Albertus Pighius [illegible]penſis [illegible]nſiſa[illegible]s patricio ſan[illegible]e na- Valer. [illegible]reas [illegible] Belg. [illegible]8.

(l) See the Rem. F.

(m) The Words of Valerius Andreas ub. ſup. p. 39. which Moreri has not well tranſlated, are, poſitionem Alphonſinam de motu octavi orbis depravantem.

(n) Valer. Andreas ib.

(a) Spond. Ann. Eccleſ. ad ann. 1543. n. 12. p. m. 479. He took it from Surius, except the Day of Eckius's Death not to be found in Surius.

(b) Swert. Ath. Belg. p. 115.

(c) Bullart, Academ. des Sciences tom. 2. p. 14.

(d) See p. 66[illegible]. of Sadoletus's Letters. Lyons 1554.

(e) Beza in vita Calvini ad ann. 1543.

(f) Theoph. Raynaudus de malis ac bonis libris n. 453. p. m. 263. (g) Mortonus, Antidot. contra merita cap. 7. ſect. 1. apud Pope Blount cenſ. author. p. 423. (h) Epiſc. Carleton. Conſenſ. Eccleſ. Cathol. contra Tridentin. cap. 3. apud Pope Blount ib.

quiſition. Poſſevinus * acquaints his Reader, that Pighius's Doctrine concerning Original Sin, and Grace, are not approved by the Divines, becauſe he ſeems to have departed from the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, which the Church approves of. The Janſeniſt, who publiſhed ſome Letters of the Prince of Conti, has expreſſed himſelf more ſharply. He ſays, that Pighius muſt needs be looked upon † as a wretched Divine, ſince he is a Man who ſuſpects the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, a Man who adviſes thoſe who are deſirous to underſtand the true Doctrine of Free Will, rather to read the other Works of St. Auguſtin, than thoſe which he writ againſt the Pelagians, &c *. I ſhall ſet down ſome Remarks that have been made againſt John Gerhard, which (F) contain ſome Particulars, not unfit to be inſerted in this Article, and I ſhall not forget that Pighius is (G) accuſed of being a Plagiary, and that thoſe ‡ who wrote againſt him, own that he was an Eloquent and Ingenious Man, and that he vel Adverſariorum teſtimonio beatum, cujus Scripta tantum cum Sacris Scripturis conſenſum retinent, ſi quod Pontificius Doctor celeberrimus fatetur ſe ex Sacræ Scripturæ lectione habuiſſe, id alii Pontificii lectioni librorum Calvini tribuant. Profectò niſi Scholaſticorum ſententia cum manifeſtis Scripturis pugnaſſet, nunquam illam deſeruiſſet Pighius. I ſhall now quote a French Miniſter: " (i) Cardinal Roffenſis and Pighius " who wrote alſo againſt Luther, maintained the " Doctrine of Grace; nay, the latter affirmed, that " we are not juſtified by any inherent Righteouſneſs " that is within us: but he was ſharply cenſured by " the (†) Dean of the Univerſity of Louvain, who " upbraided him with having ſhamefully departed " from the Doctrine which they had received toge- " ther in the School of Adrian VI. and that he was " ſpoiled by the reading of Calvin's Inſtitution. " I have juſt now peruſed the Treatiſe de Fide & Juſtificatione, which is the ſecond of the nine Controverſies which Pighius publiſhed at Cologne in the Year 1542, with this Title, Controverſiarum præcipuarum in comitiis Ratiſponenſibus tractatarum, & quibus nunc potiſſimum exagitatur Chriſti fides & religio, diligens & luculenta explicatio, and I have found ſome things in it which make me wonder, how any Body could ſay with any ſhew of Reaſon, that his Opinion about Juſtification was altogether the ſame with the Opinion of the Proteſtants. He refutes them with all his Might, and ſays in expreſs Words, that when God juſtifies and ſaves a Sinner, he has a ſpecial regard to his good Works. Ad amorem noſtrum atque opera præcipuum a Deo & majorem quam fidei reſpectum haberi in donando nobis juſtificationis & ſalutis gratiam. This is the Summary which he put in the Margin, folio 63. verſo, and in the next folio, opera noſtra coram Deo eſſe meritoria. I find that the Doctrine of the Text does perfectly agree with the Summary of the Margin. We ſhall ſee (‡) hereafter, that Calvin and the Janſeniſts accuſe him of being a downright Pelagian.

(F) Some Remarks, have been made againſt John Gerhard, which contain ſome Particulars.] The Author of thoſe Remarks was of Utrecht, and a Lawyer by Profeſſion: his Name was Giſbertus Lappius à Waveren. He ſent them to Nihuſius, who inſerted them in his Hypodigma, printed in the Year 1648. They contain a ſharp Cenſure of a Paſſage of John Gerhard, Profeſſor of Divinity at Jena. That Paſſage is to be found in the 5th Tome of the Loci communes of that Profeſſor, Sect. 14. where he refutes the 14th Mark which Bellarmin has given of the true Church, viz. that her Oppoſers die of a miſerable Death. John Gerhard retorts this Argument againſt Bellarmin, and ſpeaks of the unfortunate Death of the Perſecutors of the Proteſtant Religion, and reckons Pighius amongſt 'em. Eodem anno Chriſti CIↃ IↃ XLIII, ſays he, mortuus eſt Albertus Pighius, Papatûs defenſor non poſtremus; de quo ſcribunt, fuiſſe illum in tumultu oppreſſum, in magna hominum frequentia, unà cum pecunia, quam à Papa, & Cardinalibus propter operam ſuam, in cauſa Pontificia defendenda collatam, acceperat. The Critick proves by the Words of Paulus Jovius which I have (k) quoted, that the Fall of the Bridge happened in the Year 1530, and that Albertus Pighius did not die by it. He adds, that the Pope's Liberality towards him happened after the Year 1530. So that at the worſt, he could not have been cruſhed by the Fall of the Bridge with his Money, as the Profeſſor of Jena ſuppoſes. Afterwards he ſhews that Albertus Pighius (l) Præpoſitus & Archidiaconus Eccleſiæ Divi Johannis, liber Dominus in Midrecht, Wilnes, Cudelſteert, Zevenhoven, Tamen; Dominus in Achtienhoven, Blocklant, Nuythoorn, died having received the Sacraments of the Church, and with a great Preſence of Mind on the 26th of December 1542, in a magnificent Houſe which he had at Utrecht. (m) Ultrajecti in ædibus clauſtralibus, quas in immunitate collegiatæ Eccleſiæ Divi Johannis magnificas poſſidebat. The Date of the Day and Year of his Death is to be found in a Letter which John Vaſtius de Lombeca, Dean of the Cathedral Church of Utrecht, and one of the Executors of the laſt Will of Albertus Pighius, wrote the 29th of December 1542, to Gerard Hamont, Prior of the Charter-Houſe of Cologne. The Critick gives an Abſtract of that Letter: There is a remarkable thing in it. Pighius being offended at a Book which Bucer wrote againſt him, was ſo moved with it, that notwithſtanding his Illneſs, he was buſie every Day in writing his Apology, and no Body was able to perſuade him to have ſome regard to the ill State of his Health. He would never leave off writing an Anſwer to Bucer's Book, which haſtened his Death. His Anſwer remained imperfect, and was printed (n) notwithſtanding. Here are the very Words of the Dean's Letter: (o) Hoc adjiciam, præfatum Præpoſitum, D. Pighium, libello quodam, nomine Buceri emiſſo, quo eum acrius punxit, ita, durante ſua ægritudine, fuiſſe commotum, ut nulla perſuaſione induci potuerit, ut aliqua ſuæ valetudinis habita ratione, Apologiam quandam reſponſivam edere, & indies ſcribere, voluerit omittere. Quam quidem, inchoatam tantum, morte præventus reliquit: quæ certe indubitata fuit cauſa celerioris ejus deceſſus. Eandem Apologiam, ſic inchoatam, curabo viſitari, ac deinde typis excudi. As to what Gerhard ſays, that the Cardinals gave a great deal of Money to Pighius, the Critick anſwers, that it is very likely they expreſt only in Words the Eſteem and Affection they had for him. He quotes two Letters, one of Cardinal Sadoletus, written in the Year 1539, and the other of Cardinal Marcellus Cervinus written from Rome the 27th of October 1542. Sadoletus aſſures Albertus Pighius that he will recommend him to the Pope and to the Cardinals. Cervinus promiſes him to repreſent his Services and his Want to the Pope, and proteſts that if he could afford him wherewith to ſatisfie his Creditors, he would do it with all his Heart: (a) Quantum verò attinet ad æs alienum tuum, ſi ejus diſſolvendi facultas in mea poteſtate eſſet poſita, non laborares. Et tamen, quamvis S. S. D. N. multis magniſque hoc tempore impenſis ſimul gravetur, non deëro tua merita atque neceſſitates commemorare, & juvare rem tuam familiarem, quantum potero. Laſtly, he obſerves that Pighius grew poor by reaſon of ſeveral Suits at Law, the chief whereof was that which he ſtoutly maintained againſt the Emperor, and againſt the Court of the Province, who called the High Juriſdiction of the Provoſtſhip of St. John into queſtion.

It cannot be denied by one who narrowly obſerves all his Steps, that he was an Intriguing Man, and a great Faciendaire. I uſe this old French Word, which ſeems to me to be very expreſſive, and which I have found in ſome (b) good Authors. I wiſh it had been kept up, and I wonder it is not to be found in Nicot nor in Monet, nor in Furetiere. But there are many other Words as remarkable as that, which they knew nothing of.

(G) Pighius is accuſed of being a Plagiary.] Calvin accuſes him of it. The Catalogues of Plagiaries, which we have ſeen hitherto, ſay nothing of it. Pighius began his Book concerning Free Will, with the Connexion that is between the Knowledge of God and the Knowledge of Man. He found that Method in Calvin's Inſtitution, and made uſe of it, without acknowledging from whence he had it. Calvin blames him for it, and cannot apprehend what ground there is for ſo great a Familiarity.

---

* Poſſevin. in Apparatu.

† See at the end of the Prince of Conti's Letters to Father de Champs printed in 1686. the Treatiſe which is intitled St. Auguſtin juſtifié de Calviniſme p. 181, 182.

* You'll ſee the ſequel of this Paſſage towards the end of the Rem. G.

‡ Calvin, Bucer, &c.

(i) Baſnage Hiſt. de la Religion des Egliſes Reformées tom. 2. p. 39. Edit. 1690 in 12.

(†) Tapperus.

(‡) In the Rem. G. towards the end.

(k) See the Rem. A.

(l) Giſbertus Lappius à Waveren apud Nihuſium in Hypodigmate p. 339, 340.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) See Cochlæus in actis Luther ad ann. 154 fol. ma

(o) Apud Nihuſium ib. p. 34

(a) Ib. 342, 3

(b) Du Pleſſis Mornai makes of it times.

he had all the Qualities of a good Sophiſt, and of a good Defender of a bad Cauſe; that he knew how to give an odious Turn to the Doctrines of his Adverſaries, and how to declaim, when he found an Occaſion of ſtirring the Indignation of the Reader againſt 'em, by the help of certain Principles which moſt People will eaſily reliſh; that he knew very well how to hide the weak Side of his Cauſe, grow bold upon it, and ſo to perplex his Matter, as to make one loſe the ſight of the main Difficulty; and that in general he treated his Subject very methodically. He took care to inſert in a * Preface, what his Adverſaries owned concerning his Talents.

P Y L A D E S, born in (A) Cilicia, was a very famous Pantomimus at Rome, under the Empire of Auguſtus. He perfected, by (B) ſome new Inventions, the Art of Dancing a whole Play, as I have already ſaid in the Article of Bathyllus. He wrote ‡ a Book concerning that Subject. One may judge of the Skill wherewith he performed his Art, if it be conſidered that Auguſtus having recalled him to Rome

miliarity. He can find no other Reaſon for it but the Right of Preſcription, becauſe Pighius had been uſed for a long time to this ſort of Plundering. (c) Miror qua fronte auſus fuerit, nulla mei mentione facta, tam familiariter ſumere de meo libro, quod in ſuum tranſcriberet. Neque enim quo jure id faciat, video: niſi fortè præſcriptionem obtendat, quia ſic facere pridem ſolitus ſit. Nam in magno illo libro, quem adverſus noſtram confeſſionem edidit, integras ſæpe ex inſtitutione mea paginas, ubi viſum eſt, inſercit, ac ſuo commodo ſic adaptat, quaſi aliunde non ſumpſiſſet. Velim nunc ſcire quo jure aut titulo mea ſic profuſè uſurpet. Si qua magna eſſet inter nos neceſſitudo, ego hanc confidentiam amicitiæ non difficulter concederem. Sed nunc huic veniæ non eſt locus. An quia hoſtis ſum, ſe jus direptionis in omnia mea habere putat? At hoc prædæ genus nullo, nec jure, nec more, defendi poteſt. Unus ergo prætextus reſtat, homini docto potuiſſe non minus venire in mentem quæ dixeram, quàm mihi prius venerant. Sed lectores obſecro, ſi tantum habeant ocij, ut caput primum libri Pighiani cum primo Inſtitutionis meæ capite conferant. Nihil dico: niſi quod non ſine riſu ac ſtomacho perſpicient nimis perditam hominis impudentiam. Quod ſi ulterius pergere libeat, percurrant quæ de Juſtificatione tractat in altero illo opere, & ad ſextum Inſtitutionis meæ caput exigant: mirum ſi bilem continere queant. Neque enim clanculum furatur aut carptim: neque artificio tegere ita ſtudet ſuas rapinas, ut apud ſe natum videatur, quod apud me legit, ſed ita palam mea ad verbum recitat, ut videatur paginas ipſas totas pigritia aſſuiſſe, quo deſcribendi laborem fugeret. Si fateretur authorem, cum dicerem mutuari: nunc quid cauſari poteſt, quo minus plagiarius palam vocetur? You ſee that he is accuſed of having ſtolen ſeveral Pages, Word for Word, out of Calvin's Inſtitution, to make them his own, without any Alteration. It is a ſurpriſing Security; but Calvin adds, to excuſe him, that he was contented to pleaſe thoſe who never conſulted the Writings of his Adverſaries, and approved of every thing that was publiſhed againſt the Proteſtants. (d) Mirabitur quicunque leget, unde tantus homini ſtupor: qui nihil veritus ſit, in ipſo ſtatim veſtigio deprehendi. Ego verò dum omnia bene reputo, habeo quod pro hominis excuſatione dicam: eum ſecuritate magis quàm ſocordia id feciſſe. Satis enim habuit, ſi modò iis placeret, qui non minori religione à noſtris abſtinent, quàm facilitate omnia laudant ac mirantur, quæ nos quovis modo impugnant. Note, that Calvin does not acknowledge that his Works had made Pighius Orthodox in the leaſt: on the contrary he calls him a Pelagian. (e) Hoc totum non modo Pelagii ſcholam redolet, ſed mera eſt Pelagianæ impietatis magna ex parte profeſſio..... (f) Quod autem toties cum Pelagianis nihil ſe habere commune jactat, neſcio quos hic Pelagianos comminiſcatur. Neque enim tantùm cum iis, quos deſcribit Auguſtinus, multa habet ſimilia, ſed eorum quibuſdam multò eſt deterior...... (g) Ergo, ut aliquando claudatur hic liber, fruſtra, aut ſe à Pelagio disjungere conatur Pighius, cujus ſocietate eum teneri implicitum tam apertè demonſtravimus: aut nos Manichæis, aliiſque hæreticis adjungere, à quibus non minus diſſidemus, quàm ipſe ab orthodoxo Eccleſiæ ſenſu.

The Janſeniſt, ſome of whoſe Words I have ſet down in the Text of this Article, calls him alſo a Pelagian. "He is a Man, ſays he †, who could not "apprehend the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, nor that "of the Church, having but an imperfect Knowledge of the Corruption of Nature, and Original "Sin, which is the Key of that Doctrine. He is a "Man full of Pelagian Errors about that Matter; "he ſpeaks againſt Predeſtination, and the Doctrine "of efficacious and free Grace, with great Indiſcretion and Ignorance, to ſay no more, tho' he "acknowledges it is the Opinion of St. Auguſtin. "He takes the Writings of Gennadius, a Semi-Pelagian, for a Rule of Faith, and the Confeſſion of "Faith made by Pelagius for a Work of St. Auguſtin. Laſtly, having thus abuſed his Doctrine, he "does not ſpare him, and repreſents him as a Caviller; declinat, fugit, diſſimulat, aliud quærit quod cavilletur. He aſcribes to him as little as he can, "deprives him of all his Strength, and uſes Diſſimulation and Craft to depreſs and weaken him." This Janſeniſt concludes, "‡ That 'tis no wonder "if the whole Faculty of Louvain in the famous "Cenſure of the Year 1587, calls..... Pighius a "Favourer and a Collegue of the Semi-Pelagians; "if the Faculty of Douay likewiſe in their Cenſure, "reckons him among the Diſciples of Fauſtus; if "the Learned Eſtius..... ſpoke of him much in "the ſame manner; and if Dr. John Molanus ſays, "that the moſt Learned Divines blame him for having "departed from the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, which "is that of the Church, concerning Original Sin, Predeſtination and Grace: to which Aubertus Miræus "ſubſcribes."

(A) Born in Cilicia.] This we learn from Suidas: what follows, wherein he had perhaps ſet down the Name of his Native Country, is ſo dark, that the Criticks have not been able yet to clear it. Bulengerus (h) fancied without any Reaſon for it, that there was an oppoſition between thoſe who make Pylades a Cilician, and the Anthologia which ſays, as Bulengerus underſtands it, that he came from Thebes in Egypt; whereupon he quotes theſe Words:

Βάκχας
Ἐκ Θηβῶν ἰταλὴν ἤγαγε πρὸς θυμέλην
Ἀνθρώποις Πυλάδης.

Id eſt quando Bacchas ex Thebis ad pulpitum Italicum hominibus Pylades adduxit. The Meaning of them is only that Pylades ſhewed to the Romans the Repreſentation of a thing which happened at Thebes, and not that he was born at Thebes, or had lived there before he came into Italy: beſides, 'tis plain that no other Town can be meant here but Thebes in Bœotia, where Bacchus and his Feaſts had their principal Stations. I add that ἰταλὴν πρὸς θυμέλην is very well rendred ad pulpitum Italicum, upon the Italian Stage; but thoſe who have rendred it (i) Italicum ad Sacrificium, have committed a very groſs Miſtake.

(B) By ſome new Inventions.] I obſerved in general in the Article of Bathyllus what Alterations were made under Auguſtus in the Dances of the Pantomimi. But to be more particular, I ſhall ſay now that Pylades, if we believe St. Jerome (k), is the firſt who danced at Rome, whilſt others played upon Flageolets, and whilſt the Chorus ſung, and that before him the Pantomimi danced and ſung themſelves at the ſame time. Salmaſius (l) does not grant all this: He ſhews that from the Time of Livius, a Poet and a Comedian, the Dancer was excuſed from the fatigue of Singing, and (m) that they gave him a Boy, who ſung, whilſt another was playing on the Flute; but he owns that Pylades is the firſt who danced whilſt the Chorus ſung, and others played upon Flageolets, fiſtulas & chorum ſibi ſaltanti ut præcineret curaviſſe. This agrees with the Anſwer he returned to Auguſtus, who asked him what he had joyned to Dancing, (n) Αὐλῶν συρίγγων τ' ἐνοπὴν, ὁμαδόν τ' ἀνθρώπων, the ſound of Flageolets and Flutes, and the ſymphony of Men; becauſe before him there was but one Flute appoint-

ed

---

* See Cochlæus in Actis & Scriptis Lutheri ad ann. 1542. pag. in fol. m. 322.

‡ Athen. l. 1. c. 17. Suidas in Πυλάδης.

(c) Calvin. Reſponſ. contra Pighium de libero arbitrio p. 149. Opuſcul. theolog.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib. p. 163, 164.

(f) Id. ib. p. 188. col. 1.

(g) Id. ib. p. 191. col. 1.

† St. Auguſtin juſtifié de Calviniſme p. 182.

‡ Ib. p. 184.

(h) Jul. Cæſ. Bulengerus de Theat. l. 1. c. 48. fol. m. 115. & 117. verſo. You'll ſee in the Rem. E, Letter 1, where theſe Greek Verſes are to be found.

(i) That Fault is in the Anthologia of Lubin's Edit. in 4. p. 760.

(k) Pylades Cilix Pantomimus, quum veteres ipſi canerent & ſaltarent, primus Romæ chorum ſibi & fiſtulas præcinere fecit. In Chron. Euſeb. ad ann. 1995.

(l) Salmaſ. in Vopiſc. p.835. edit. Lugd. Batav. in 8.

(m) Valer. Maxim. l. 2. c. 4. p. m. 161. See alſo Lucian de Saltatione p. m. 925. tom. 1.

(n) 'Tis the 13th Verſe of the 10th Book of the Iliad.

quiſition. Poſſevinus * acquaints his Reader, that Pighius's Doctrine concerning Original Sin, and Grace, are not approved by the Divines, becauſe he ſeems to have departed from the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, which the Church approves of. The Janſeniſt, who publiſhed ſome Letters of the Prince of Conti, has expreſſed himſelf more ſharply. He ſays, that Pighius muſt needs be looked upon † as a wretched Divine, ſince he is a Man who ſuſpects the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, a Man who adviſes thoſe who are deſirous to underſtand the true Doctrine of Free Will, rather to read the other Works of St. Auguſtin, than thoſe which he writ againſt the Pelagians, &c *. I ſhall ſet down ſome Remarks that have been made againſt John Gerhard, which (F) contain ſome Particulars, not unfit to be inſerted in this Article, and I ſhall not forget that Pighius is (G) accuſed of being a Plagiary, and that thoſe ‡ who wrote againſt him, own that he was an Eloquent and Ingenious Man, and that he

* Poſſevin. in Apparatu.

† See at the end of the Prince of Conti's Letters to Father de Champs printed in 1689, the Treatiſe which is intitled St. Auguſtin juſtifié de Calviniſme p. 181, 182.

* You'll ſee the ſequel of this Paſſage towards the end of the Rem. G.

‡ Calvin, Bucer, &c.

vel Adverſariorum teſtimonio beatum, cujus Scripta tantum cum Sacris Scripturis conſenſum retinent, ſi quod Pontificius Doctor celeberrimus fatetur ſe ex Sacræ Scripturæ lectione habuiſſe, id alii Pontificii lectioni librorum Calvini tribuant. Profectò niſi Scholaſticorum ſententia cum manifeſtis Scripturis pugnaſſet, nunquam illam deſeruiſſet Pighius. I ſhall now quote a French Miniſter: " (i) Cardinal Roffenſis and Pighius " who wrote alſo againſt Luther, maintained the " Doctrine of Grace; nay, the latter affirmed, that " we are not juſtified by any inherent Righteouſneſs " that is within us: but he was ſharply cenſured by " the (1) Dean of the Univerſity of Louvain, who " upbraided him with having ſhamefully departed " from the Doctrine which they had received together in the School of Adrian VI. and that he was " ſpoiled by the reading of Calvin's Inſtitution. „ I have juſt now peruſed the Treatiſe de Fide & Juſtificatione, which is the ſecond of the nine Controverſies which Pighius publiſhed at Cologne in the Year 1542, with this Title, Controverſiarum præcipuarum in comitiis Ratiſponenſibus tractatarum, & quibus nunc potiſſimum exagitatur Chriſti fides & religio, diligens & luculenta explicatio, and I have found ſome things in it which make me wonder, how any Body could ſay with any ſhew of Reaſon, that his Opinion about Juſtification was altogether the ſame with the Opinion of the Proteſtants. He refutes them with all his Might, and ſays in expreſs Words, that when God juſtifies and ſaves a Sinner, he has a ſpecial regard to his good Works. Ad amorem noſtrum atque opera præcipuum a Deo & majorem quam fidei reſpectum haberi in donando nobis juſtificationis & ſalutis gratiam. This is the Summary which he put in the Margin, folio 63. verſo, and in the next folio, opera noſtra coram Deo eſſe meritoria. I find that the Doctrine of the Text does perfectly agree with the Summary of the Margin. We ſhall ſee (‡) hereafter, that Calvin and the Janſeniſts accuſe him of being a downright Pelagian.

(F) Some Remarks, have been made againſt John Gerhard, which contain ſome Particulars.] The Author of thoſe Remarks was of Utrecht, and a Lawyer by Profeſſion: his Name was Giſbertus Lappius à Waveren. He ſent them to Nihuſius, who inſerted them in his Hypodigma, printed in the Year 1648. They contain a ſharp Cenſure of a Paſſage of John Gerhard, Profeſſor of Divinity at Jena. That Paſſage is to be found in the 5th Tome of the Loci communes of that Profeſſor, Sect. 14. where he refutes the 14th Mark which Bellarmin has given of the true Church, viz. that her Oppoſers die of a miſerable Death. John Gerhard retorts this Argument againſt Bellarmin, and ſpeaks of the unfortunate Death of the Perſecutors of the Proteſtant Religion, and reckons Pighius amongſt 'em. Eodem anno Chriſti CIↃ IↃ XLIII, ſays he, mortuus eſt Albertus Pighius, Papatûs defenſor non poſtremus; de quo ſcribunt, fuiſſe illum in tumultu oppreſſum, in magna hominum frequentia, unà cum pecunia, quam à Papa, & Cardinalibus propter operam ſuam, in cauſa Pontificia defendenda collatam, acceperat. The Critick proves by the Words of Paulus Jovius which I have (k) quoted, that the Fall of the Bridge happened in the Year 1530, and that Albertus Pighius did not die by it. He adds, that the Pope's Liberality towards him happened after the Year 1530. So that at the worſt, he could not have been cruſhed by the Fall of the Bridge with his Money, as the Profeſſor of Jena ſuppoſes. Afterwards he ſhews that Albertus Pighius (l) Præpoſitus & Archidiaconus Eccleſiæ Divi Johannis, liber Dominus in Midrecht, Wilnes, Cudelſteert, Zevenhoven, Tamen; Dominus in Achtienhoven, Blocklant, Nuythoorn, died having received the Sacraments of the Church, and with a great Preſence of Mind on the 26th of December 1542, in a magnificent Houſe which he had at Utrecht. (m) Ultrajecti in ædibus clauſtralibus, quas in immunitate collegiatæ Eccleſiæ Divi Johannis magnificas poſſidebat. The Date of the Day and Year of his Death is to be found in a Letter which John Vorſtius de Lombeca, Dean of the Cathedral Church of Utrecht, and one of the Executors of the laſt Will of Albertus Pighius, wrote the 29th of December 1542, to Gerard Hament, Prior of the Charter-Houſe of Cologne. The Critick gives an Abſtract of that Letter: There is a remarkable thing in it. Pighius being offended at a Book which Bucer wrote againſt him, was ſo moved with it, that notwithſtanding his Illneſs, he was buſie every Day in writing his Apology, and no Body was able to perſuade him to have ſome regard to the ill State of his Health. He would never leave off writing an Anſwer to Bucer's Book, which haſtened his Death. His Anſwer remained imperfect, and was printed (n) notwithſtanding. Here are the very Words of the Dean's Letter: (o) Hoc adjiciam, præfatum Præpoſitum, D. Pighium, libello quodam, nomine Buceri emiſſo, quo eum acrius punxit, ita, durante ſua ægritudine, fuiſſe commotum, ut nulla perſuaſione induci potuerit, ut aliqua ſuæ valetudinis habita ratione, Apologiam quandam reſponſivam edere, & indies ſcribere, voluerit omittere. Quam quidem, inchoatam tantum, morte præventus reliquit: quæ certe indubitata fuit cauſa celerioris ejus deceſſus. Eandem Apologiam, ſic inchoatam, curabo viſitari, ac deinde typis excudi. As to what Gerhard ſays, that the Cardinals gave a great deal of Money to Pighius, the Critick anſwers, that it is very likely they expreſt only in Words the Eſteem and Affection they had for him. He quotes two Letters, one of Cardinal Sadoletus, written in the Year 1539, and the other of Cardinal Marcellus Cervinus written from Rome the 27th of October 1542. Sadoletus aſſures Albertus Pighius that he will recommend him to the Pope and to the Cardinals. Cervinus promiſes him to repreſent his Services and his Want to the Pope, and proteſts that if he could afford him wherewith to ſatisfie his Creditors, he would do it with all his Heart: (a) Quantum verò attinet ad æs alienum tuum, ſi ejus diſſolvendi facultas in mea poteſtate eſſet poſita, non laborares. Et tamen, quamvis S. S. D. N. multis magniſque hoc tempore impenſis ſimul gravetur, non deëro tua merita atque neceſſitates commemorare, & juvare rem tuam familiarem, quantum potero. Laſtly, he obſerves that Pighius grew poor by reaſon of ſeveral Suits at Law, the chief whereof was that which he ſtoutly maintained againſt the Emperor, and againſt the Court of the Province, who called the High Juriſdiction of the Provoſtſhip of St. John into queſtion.

It cannot be denied by one who narrowly obſerves all his Steps, that he was an Intriguing Man, and a great Faciendaire. I uſe this old French Word, which ſeems to me to be very expreſſive, and which I have found in ſome (b) good Authors. I wiſh it had been kept up, and I wonder it is not to be found in Nicot nor in Monet, nor in Furetiere. But there are many other Words as remarkable as that, which they knew nothing of.

(G) Pighius is accuſed of being a Plagiary.] Calvin accuſes him of it. The Catalogues of Plagiaries, which we have ſeen hitherto, ſay nothing of it. Pighius began his Book concerning Free Will, with the Connexion that is between the Knowledge of God and the Knowledge of Man. He found that Method in Calvin's Inſtitution, and made uſe of it, without acknowledging from whence he had it. Calvin blames him for it, and cannot apprehend what ground there is for ſo great a Familiarity.

(i) Baſnage Hiſt. de la Religion des Egliſes Reformées tom. 2. p. 39. Edit. 1690 in 12.

(1) Tapperus.

(‡) In the Rem. G. towards the end.

(k) See the Rem. A.

(l) Giſbertus Lappius à Waveren apud Nihuſium in Hypodigmate p. 339, 340.

(m) Id. i

(n) See Cochlæ in actis Luthe ann. 15 fol.ma

(o) And. Nihuſiu ib. p. 3

(a) I 342,

(b) De Pleſſi Morna makes of it tiens.

he had all the Qualities of a good Sophiſt, and of a good Defender of a bad Cauſe; that he knew how to give an odious Turn to the Doctrines of his Adverſaries, and how to declaime, when he found an Occaſion of ſtirring the Indignation of the Reader againſt 'em, by the help of certain Principles which moſt People will eaſily reliſh; that he knew very well how to hide the weak Side of his Cauſe, grow bold upon it, and ſo to perplex his Matter, as to make one loſe the ſight of the main Difficulty; and that in general he treated his Subject very methodically. He took care to inſert in a † Preface, what his Adverſaries owned concerning his Talents.

PYLADES, born in (A) Cilicia, was a very famous Pantomimus at Rome, under the Empire of Auguſtus. He perfected, by (B) ſome new Inventions, the Art of Dancing a whole Play, as I have already ſaid in the Article of Bathyllus. He wrote ‡ a Book concerning that Subject. One may judge of the Skill wherewith he performed his Art, if it be conſidered that Auguſtus having recalled him to Rome

† See [illegible] in [illegible] pro ſcriptis Lutheri ad ann. 1542. ſub fin. fol. m. 422.

‡ Athen. l. 1. c. 17. Suidas in Πυλάδης.

miliarity. He can find no other Reaſon for it but the Right of Preſcription, becauſe Pighius had been uſed for a long time to this ſort of Plundering. (c) Miror quâ fronte auſus fuerit, nullâ mei mentione factâ, tam familiariter ſumere de meo libro, quod in ſuum tranſcriberet. Neque enim quo jure id faciat, video: niſi fortè præſcriptionem obtendat, quia ſic facere pridem ſolitus ſit. Nam in magno illo libro, quem adverſus noſtram confeſſionem edidit, integras ſæpe ex inſtitutione meâ paginas, ubi viſum eſt, infercit, ac ſuo commodo ſic adaptat, quaſi aliunde non ſumpſiſſet. Velim nunc ſcire quo jure aut titulo mea ſic profuſe uſurpet. Si qua magna eſſet inter nos neceſſitudo, ego hanc confidentiam amicitiæ non difficulter concederem. Sed nunc huic veniæ non eſt locus. An quia hoſtis ſum, ſe jus direptionis in omnia mea habere putat? At hoc prædæ genus nullo, nec jure, nec more, defendi poteſt. Unus ergo prætextus reſtat, homini docto potuiſſe non minus venire in mentem quæ dixeram, quàm mihi prius venerant. Sed lectores obſecro, ſi tantum habeant ocij, ut caput primum libri Pighiani cum primo Inſtitutionis meæ capite conferant. Nihil dico: niſi quod non ſine riſu ac ſtomacho perſpicient nimis perditam hominis impudentiam. Quod ſi ulterius pergere libeat, percurrant quæ de Juſtificatione tractat in altero illo opere, & ad ſextum Inſtitutionis meæ caput exigant: mirum ſi bilem continere queant. Neque enim clanculum furatur aut carptim: neque artificio tegere ita ſtudet ſuas rapinas, ut apud ſe natum videatur, quod apud me legit, ſed ita palam mea ad verbum recitat, ut videatur paginas ipſas totas pigritia aſſuiſſe, quo deſcribendi laborem fugeret. Si fateretur authorem, cum dicerem mutuari: nunc quid cauſari poteſt, quo minus plagiarius palam vocetur? You ſee that he is accuſed of having ſtolen ſeveral Pages, Word for Word, out of Calvin's Inſtitution, to make them his own, without any Alteration. It is a ſurpriſing Security; but Calvin adds, to excuſe him, that he was contented to pleaſe thoſe who never conſulted the Writings of his Adverſaries, and approved of every thing that was publiſhed againſt the Proteſtants. (d) Mirabitur quicunque leget, unde tantus homini ſtupor: qui nihil veritus ſit, in ipſo ſtatim veſtigio deprehendi. Ego verò dum omnia bene reputo, habeo quod pro hominis excuſatione dicam: eum ſecuritate magis quàm ſocordia id feciſſe. Satis enim habuit, ſi modò iis placeret, qui non minori religione à noſtris abſtinent, quàm facilitate omnia laudant ac mirantur, quæ nos quovis modo impugnant. Note, that Calvin does not acknowledge that his Works had made Pighius Orthodox in the leaſt: on the contrary he calls him a Pelagian. (e) Hoc totum non modo Pelagii ſcholam redolet, ſed mera eſt Pelagianæ impietatis magna ex parte profeſſio. . . . . (f) Quod autem toties cum Pelagianis nihil ſe habere commune jactat, neſcio quos hic Pelagianos comminiſcatur. Neque enim tantùm cum iis, quos deſcribit Auguſtinus, multa habet ſimilia, ſed eorum quibuſdam multò eſt deterior. . . . . . (g) Ergo, ut aliquando claudatur hic liber, fruſtra, aut ſe à Pelagio disjungere conatur Pighius, cujus ſocietate eum teneri implicitum tam apertè demonſtravimus: aut nos Manichæis, aliiſque hæreticis adjungere, à quibus non minus diſſidemus, quàm ipſe ab orthodoxo Eccleſiæ ſenſu.

The Janſeniſt, ſome of whoſe Words I have ſet down in the Text of this Article, calls him alſo a Pelagian. "He is a Man, ſays he †, who could not "apprehend the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, nor that "of the Church, having but an imperfect Know- "ledge of the Corruption of Nature, and Original "Sin, which is the Key of that Doctrine. He is a "Man full of Pelagian Errors about that Matter; "he ſpeaks againſt Predeſtination, and the Doctrine "of efficacious and free Grace, with great Indiſcretion and Ignorance, to ſay no more, tho' he "acknowledges it is the Opinion of St. Auguſtin. "He takes the Writings of Gennadius, a Semi-Pelagian, for a Rule of Faith, and the Confeſſion of "Faith made by Pelagius for a Work of St. Auguſtin. Laſtly, having thus abuſed his Doctrine, he "does not ſpare him, and repreſents him as a Caviller; declinat, fugit, diſſimulat, aliud quærit quod cavilletur. He aſcribes to him as little as he can, "deprives him of all his Strength, and uſes Diſſimulation and Craft to depreſs and weaken him." This Janſeniſt concludes, "‡ That 'tis no wonder "if the whole Faculty of Louvain in the famous "Cenſure of the Year 1587, calls . . . . . Pighius a "Favourer and a Collegue of the Semi-Pelagians; "if the Faculty of Douay likewiſe in their Cenſure, "reckons him among the Diſciples of Faultus; if "the Learned Eſtius . . . . . ſpoke of him much in "the ſame manner; and if Dr. John Molanus ſays, "that the moſt Learned Divines blame him for having "departed from the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin, which "is that of the Church, concerning Original Sin, Predeſtination and Grace: to which Aubertus Miræus "ſubſcribes."

(A) Born in Cilicia.] This we learn from Suidas: what follows, wherein he had perhaps ſet down the Name of his Native Country, is ſo dark, that the Criticks have not been able yet to clear it. Bulengerus (h) fancied without any Reaſon for it, that there was an oppoſition between thoſe who make Pylades a Cilician, and the Anthologia which ſays, as Bulengerus underſtands it, that he came from Thebes in Egypt; whereupon he quotes theſe Words:

Βάκχας
Ἐκ Θηβῶν ἰταλὴν ἤγαγε πρὸς θυμέλην
Ἀνθρώποις Πυλάδης.

Id eſt quando Bacchus ex Thebis ad pulpitum Italicum hominibus Pylades adduxit. The Meaning of them is only that Pylades ſhewed to the Romans the Repreſentation of a thing which happened at Thebes, and not that he was born at Thebes, or had lived there before he came into Italy: beſides, 'tis plain that no other Town can be meant here but Thebes in Bœotia, where Bacchus and his Feaſts had their principal Stations. I add that ἰταλὴν πρὸς θυμέλην is very well rendred ad pulpitum Italicum, upon the Italian Stage; but thoſe who have rendred it (i) Italicum ad Sacrificium, have committed a very groſs Miſtake.

(B) By ſome new Inventions.] I obſerved in general in the Article of Bathyllus what Alterations were made under Auguſtus in the Dances of the Pantomimi. But to be more particular, I ſhall ſay now that Pylades, if we believe St. Jerome (k), is the firſt who danced at Rome, whilſt others played upon Flageolets, and whilſt the Chorus ſung, and that before him the Pantomimi danced and ſung themſelves at the ſame time. Salmaſius (l) does not grant all this: He ſhews that from the Time of Livius, a Poet and a Comedian, the Dancer was excuſed from the fatigue of Singing, and (m) that they gave him a Boy, who ſung, whilſt another was playing on the Flute; but he owns that Pylades is the firſt who danced whilſt the Chorus ſung, and others played upon Flageolets, fiſtulas & chorum ſibi ſaltanti ut præcineret curaviſſe. This agrees with the Anſwer he returned to Auguſtus, who asked him what he had joyned to Dancing, (n) Αὐλῶν συρίγγων τ' ἐνοπὴν, ὁμαδόν τ' ἀνθρώπων, the ſound of Flageolets and Flutes, and the ſymphony of Men; becauſe before him there was but one Flute appointed

(c) Calvin. reſponſ. contra Pighium de libero arbitrio p. 119. Opuſcul. theolog.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib. p. 163, 164.

(f) Id. ib. p. 128. col. 1.

(g) Id. ib. p. 191. col. 1.

† St. Auguſtin juſtifié de Calviniſme p. 182.

‡ Ib. p. 183.

(h) Jul. Cæſ. Bulengerus de Theat. l. 1. c. 45. fol. m. 115. & 117. verſo. You'll ſee in the Rem. E. Letter 1, where thoſe Greek Verſes are to be found.

(i) That Fault is in the Anthologia of Lubin's Edit. in 4° p. 760.

(k) Pylades Cilix Pantomimus, quum veteres ipſi canerent & ſaltarent, primus Romæ chorum ſibi & fiſtulas præcinere fecit. In Chron. Euſeb. ad ann. 1995.

(l) Salmaſ. in Vopiſc. p. 836. edit. Lugd. Batav. in 8.

(m) Valer. Maxim. l. 2. c. 4. p. m. 161. See alſo Lucian de Saltatione p. m. 925. tom. 1.

(n) 'Tis the 13th Verſe of the 10th Book of the Iliad.

Rome *, from whence he had been expelled by a Faction, did ſo pleaſe the People, that it was one of the Reaſons for which they ceaſed to be angry with ſome inconvenient Laws which that Emperor had made. Others β do not aſcribe the Baniſhment of Pylades to the Credit of a contrary Faction, and ſay, that it was a Puniſhment which Auguſtus inflicted upon him, becauſe he pointed (C) at one of the Spectators. But it may be, that Mæcenas, who favoured Bathyllus the Rival of Pylades, took hold of this Opportunity to remove the latter. Pylades had another Competitor, (D) whoſe Name was Hylas, who had been his Diſciple. We find ſeveral Particulars about it in γ Macrobius; that there was a popular Inſurrection δ upon the Account of their Jealouſie, and that Hylas dancing one Day a Song, which ended thus, Great Agamemnon, expreſt the thing by the poſture of a Man who ſhould meaſure a Perſon of a great Stature. Pylades, to find fault with him, cried out, You make him a Tall Man, and not a Great Man, and was forced by the Aſſembly to dance the ſame Song. He did it, and when he came to Great Agamemnon, he aſſumed the Poſture of a Meditating Man ζ. One Day as he was Dancing the Tragedy of Hercules Furens, ſome People found fault with his Steps; he pull'd off his Mask, and told the Laughers, O ye Fools, don't you ſee that I act a Fool? That very Day he threw ſome Arrows among the Spectators; he threw ſome alſo, when he acted the ſame Play in the Chamber of Auguſtus. That Prince expreſt no Anger for being treated as the Roman People were. All theſe things are a great deal more pleaſant in the Original η; the Curious will do very well to have recourſe to it. There are ſome Epigrams (E) in the Anthologia, to the Honour of our Pylades. He left ſome Diſciples, who went ſucceſſively by his Name. We find under the Empire of Trajan, a Dancer θ whoſe Name was Pylades, particularly beloved by that Prince. We read of another, whom λ Didius Julianus cauſed to dance in the Palace where Pertinax had been murthered juſt before. Galen ſpeaks of a Pantomimus named Pylades ‡, and found out that a Woman was paſſionately in Love with him: he is without doubt one of them. The Inſcriptions of Gruterus ‡ mention ſome Pantomimi who had the ſame Name.

P I N (John Du) in Latin Pinus, Biſhop of Rieux in the XVI. Century, was born at Toulouſe. He went into Italy to cultivate his Mind, he ſtudied Eloquence and the Civil Law at Bologna, and publiſhed there ſome Books (A), for which he was eſteemed. Thoſe which he publiſhed ſince, confirmed and encreaſed his Reputation. He minded the Politeneſs (B) of the Latin Style. He was Counſellor in the Parliament of Toulouſe, and Ambaſſador of France, I know not where, but I think it was in Italy. I would not expreſs myſelf in ſuch general Terms, and I would be ed for the uſe of the Pantomimi, whereas many were appointed for him. We read in Lucian that ſeveral other Inſtruments, cithara, cimbala, were uſed when the Pantomimi danced, as well as certain Stampings of the Feet, which, as Salmaſius thinks, were of the ſame uſe as the Motion of the Hands, which we call now to beat Time. The ſame Author has (a) obſerved, that it was chiefly under Auguſtus that Dancing came to its Perfection. Pylades is to be praiſed for it, (b) qui ferebatur mutaſſe rudis illius ſaltationis ritum quæ apud majores viguit, & venuſtam induxiſſe novitatem.

(C) Pointed at one of the Spectators.] Auguſtus muſt needs have been very indulgent to thoſe who hiſſed in a Play, for that Spectator hiſſed at Pylades. (c) Pyladem urbe atque Italia ſummoverit quod ſpectatorem à quo exſibilabatur demonſtraſſet digito, conſpicuumque feciſſet. If an Actor at Paris ſhould now (d) revenge himſelf in ſuch a manner, he would not be blamed for it. We have ſeen in the Publick News, that a ſevere Regulation has been made in France againſt thoſe who hiſs, whoſe Boldneſs was raiſed to the higheſt Degree. The Petition which a Poet preſented to the King, in order to get their Fury reſtrained, is a very pretty Piece of Poetry. It has been printed in the Mercure Galant, and again in the Collection which comes out every Month at the Hague. An Epigram about the Origin of Hiſſing has been inſerted in the Fureteriana. It is aſcribed to an Author very Illuſtrious for his Tragedies; but the Reputation of the Ingenious Man, who is abuſed therein, is ſo well eſtabliſhed, that it can do him no wrong (e). There is a fault in the Dutch Edition, (f) Hiſtorien inſtead of Hiſtrion.

(D) Another Competitor, whoſe Name was Hylas.] So ſays Macrobius: (g) Hylam diſcipulum uſque ad æqualitatis contentionem eruditione provexit: populus deinde inter utriuſque ſuffragia diviſus eſt. Several Learned Men (h) take Hylas and Bathyllus to be one and the ſame Perſon: they ſay he had that Name given him, becauſe he had the ſame ſhare in the Love of Pylades, which Hylas had in the Love of Hercules. In a Word, they fancy that there was a Commerce of Pæderaſty between 'em. But this ſeems to me far-fetch'd and ſtrain'd. No Body ſays that Bathyllus had been Pylades's Scholar, as Macrobius ſays that Hylas was. We muſt therefore be contented to ſay, that 'tis likely they have been confounded one with another, as to the Reaſon which moved Auguſtus to be angry with Pylades; and let us believe that Hylas and Bathyllus have been two different Pantomimi. See the Remark E in the Article Bathyllus.

(E) Some Epigrams in the Anthologia.] That (i) which Bulengerus and Lubinus have miſinterpreted, aſcribes to Pylades Hands that ſpeak every thing, παμφώνους. If any one undertook to collect the Paſſages, wherein the Ancients have happily repreſented the Manual Language of the Pantomimi, it would make a large Volume: I ſhall only ſet down a Paſſage out of Caſſiodorus (k), His ſunt additæ Orcheſtarum loquaciſſimæ manus, linguoſi digiti, ſilentium clamoſum, expoſitio tacita, and another out of Nonnus, (l) Νεύματα μῦθον ἔχων, παλάμην στόμα, δάκτυλα φωνήν. Nutus ſermonem habens, manum os, digitos vocem. Let this ſuffice; I paſs by St. Cyprian (m), who ſays, cui ars ſit verba manibus expedire.

(A) He publiſhed ſome Books, for which he was eſteemed.] He wrote the Life of Philippus Beroaldus (n) the Father, and that of Catherine of Siena: they were printed at Bologna in the Year 1505. A Letter and ſome Epigrams to the Praiſe of Codrus Urceus were printed with the Works of that Author. He wrote alſo a Treatiſe de vita aulica: His Book de claris fœminis, of illuſtrious Women, was printed at Paris in the Year 1521, in folio (o). His Life of St. Roch was printed at Paris in 4o. apud Joannem Parvum. He was then Senator Toloſanus & Orator Regius (p). The Allobrogicæ narrationis liber was printed at Venice in 4o. in the Year 1516, and ſince at Paris by Badius, in the ſame Year (q).

(B) He minded the Politeneſs of the Latin Style.] I ſhall prove this by a Paſſage of Eraſmus. (r) Poſſet inter hujus laudis (Tullianæ dictionis) competitores numerari, (Joannes Pinus) niſi & hunc negotiorum tumultus & eccleſiaſtica dignitas à ſtudiis avulſiſſent. Olim certè præclarum ſui ſpecimen dedit, quùm Bononiæ Muſarum ſacra coleret. Nunc epiſcopum audio factum, quid acceſſerit be more particular, if I had his Books, or if the Authors who ſpeak of him, and whom I have been able to conſult, had ſaid ſomething relating to his Hiſtory; but they know nothing of it. Catel, his Country-man, knew him ſo little, that he made a pitiful (C) Anachroniſm ſpeaking of him. I cannot tell in what time Du Pin was made Biſhop of Rieux, nor when he died, I know only that he was in poſſeſſion of that Biſhoprick in 1530, and (D) that he was dead after the Year 1538.

---

* Dio lib. 54.

β Sueton. in Auguſto c. 45.

γ Macrob. Saturnal. l. 2. c. 7.

δ See the Rem. E. in the Art. Bathyllus.

ζ Nihil magis ratus magno duci convenire quam pro omnibus cogitare. Macrob. ib.

η Ap. Macrob. ib.

θ Xiphilin. in Trajan.

λ Id. in Did. Juliano.

‡ See Voſſius inſt. poet. l. 2. p. 184. He refutes Brodæus, who ſays in his Notes upon the Anthologia, that there have been only two Pantomimi named Pylades.

‡ See Scaliger in Euſeb. p. 169. Salmaſ. in Vopiſc. p. 824. edit. in 8o.

(a) Οὐ πάλαι ἀρξαμένη ἐς ποσοῦτον κάλλος ἐπιδέδωκε, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν Σεβαστὸν μάλιστα. Lucian. ubi ſupra apud Salmaſium ib. p. 836.

(b) Macrob. Saturn. l. 2. c. 7.

(c) Sueton. in Aug. c. 45.

(d) I write this in the year 1696.

(e) See the Hiſtorical Letters of March 1696. p. 288, 289. (f) Fureteriana p. 72. (g) Macrob. ub. ſup. (h) Iſaacus Pontanus in illum locum Macrobii.

(i) Anthol. l. 4. c. 2, n. 8 p. m. 750.

(k) Lib. 4. variar.

(l) Dionyſ. l. 7. v. 13.

(m) Lib. de ſpectac.

(n) And not Peter as Moreri has it.

(o) Ex epitome Bibl. Geſneri p. 485. vel ex Voſſio de hiſt. Lat. p. 662.

(p) Du Verdier Vau-Privas in ſupplem. Epitomes Bibl. Geſner. p. 53.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Eraſmus in Ciceroniano p. m. 74.

PINEAU (Severin) in Latin Pineus, born at † Chartres, publiſhed at Paris, where he practiced Chirurgery, a Latin Book in 1593, which has been reprinted ſeveral times *. He treats of the Signs of a Maid's Virginity, which in all appearance has been the chief Cauſe of the Sale of that Book. 'Tis affirmed, that (T) the German Tranſlation of it, publiſhed at Francfort about the Beginning of the XVII. Century, was prohibited by the Magiſtrates: they did not approve that ſuch a Subject ſhould be treated in a Vulgar Language. The Author wrote his Book in French at firſt, and deſign'd to publiſh it in that (Z) Language; but when he ſaw that the Specimen, which he ſhewed to ſome Perſons, gave occaſion to ſeveral obſcene Reflections, or ſorry Jeſts, he reſolved to write only for Learned Men; and he put, at the End of his Preface, theſe Verſes of an Ancient ‡: Odi profanum vulgus, & arceo: Favete linguis: carmina non prius Audita, Muſarum ſacerdos Virginibus pueriſque canto.

Gabriel du PINEAU, in Latin Pinellus, Counſellor in the Preſidial of Angers, has been a famous Man. He died at Angers in the Year 1644, being in his 73 Year §.

PINET (Antony du) Sieur de Norey, lived in the XVI. Century, and (A) publiſhed many Books. He ‡ was of Bezançon, and he ſhewed by ſome of his Works, that he was zealous for the Proteſtant Religion. Which does chiefly appear acceſſerit eloquentiæ neſcio. Fieri poteſt ut plus acceſſerit eruditionis quàm dignitatis.

(C) Catel . . . . made a pitiful Anachroniſm.] See in his Memoirs (a) concerning the Hiſtory of Languedoc, the Catalogue of the Biſhops of Rieux, and you'll find John du Pin two Degrees higher than Peter Lewis de Valtan Biſhop of Rieux in the Year 1515.

(D) He was in poſſeſſion of that Biſhoprick in 1530. . . . . he was dead after the Year 1538.] The firſt of theſe two Facts may be proved by a Letter (b) which Sadoletus wrote Pino Rivenſi Epiſcopo the 1ſt of March 1530. It contains ſeveral great Encomiums upon our du Pin, to whom the Author ſent a Copy of his firſt Production, which was a Commentary on the 90th Pſalm. I ſhall prove the ſecond Fact by ſome Verſes of Hubert Suſſanneau in obitum Pini Rivorum Epiſc. cum interfuiſſet ejus funeri. They are in the 41 folio verſo of the four Books Ludorum of that Author, of the Paris Edition, apud Simonem Colinæum 1538. in 8o. There we find that that Prelate was buried at Toulouſe with great Pomp.

(T) 'Tis affirmed that the German Tranſlation.] I have found this Particularity in a Letter written to Goldaſtus, which is the 172d of the Collection printed at Francfort in 1688. One of his Friends, whoſe Name was Segeth, writing to him from Hanaw the 5th of Auguſt 1607, deſires him to buy that Tranſlation for him at any Rate, and he is ſo much the more deſirous to have it, becauſe he heard that it was prohibited. Si in libellum quendam Severini (c) Pevini de dignoſcendis virginibus è Gallica in Germanicam linguam verſo incidas, eum mihi quocunque pretio compares, quod cum gratiarum actione reddetur. Audio illbic apud Spieſſium excuſum, & interdictum ejus venditione, quod fateor mihi calcar addidit ad poſcendum.

(Z) And deſigned to publiſh it in that Language, but when he ſaw.] He had a good Intention: He deſign'd to do ſervice to the Judges, who found themſelves very often perplexed in ſome Cauſes, where Women were Plaintiffs, ſometimes becauſe they had their Virginity ſtill, ſometimes becauſe they had loſt it. In the firſt Caſe, a Woman complained of being married to an Impotent Man, and in the ſecond Caſe, of having been violated. Perhaps there was ſome Abuſe in thoſe two ſorts of Complaints, as well as in the Information of the Fact; for either the Judges and other Perſons appointed to ſearch and inſpect their Parts, were ignorant of Nature, or unfair in their Proceedings: and therefore Pineau thought himſelf obliged to impart his Diſcoveries to the Publick, and to make them intelligible to thoſe who underſtood not Latin; but he changed his Mind for ſome other Reaſons. Here are his Words. (d) Te autem monitum volumus (amice lector) hoc opuſculum primum nos Gallicum feciſſe, ſicque in publicum proditurum decreviſſe ad eorum ſublevationem, qui judicibus & parentibus referre debent de conformatione naturali, aut vitiata pudendorum virginum nuptarum aut innuptarum, quarum hæ maximam vim à procis integritati ſuæ; ille vero nullam à maritis aut ſaltem ſponſis imbecillioribus & fatuis illatam fuiſſe conqueruntur. Sed cum primas delineationes quibuſdam expoſuiſſemus, cognoviſſemuſque horum alios ad laſciviam, alios ad vaniloquium & procacitatem potius quam ad fructum aliquem ex eo ſibi & reipublicæ utilem colligendum expetere, inſtituti noſtri rationem mutavimus, atque in ſermonem Latinum convertimus, philiatriſque ſolis & literatis hominibus devovimus Horatii exemplo impulſi (e). Note, that his Book is divided into two Parts. He examines in the firſt Part, the Signs of Virginity, and he maintains in the ſecond, that there are two (f) Bones which part aſunder, when Women bring forth Children. He exhorts the Phyſitians and Surgeons to remember his Hypotheſis; either to facilitate the Disjunction of thoſe two Bones, or to rejoyn them when the Child is born. (g) Propterea mulieres in utero habentes, & pueros adhuc in eo degentes ac ſtabulantes non ſic negligendos eſſe hortamur, ſed omni auxilio & arte juvandos, ut non minus ſaltem diligentes ſe præbuiſſe videantur Medici & Chirurgi in partibus dilatandis, per quas exit fœtus de utero matris, quam quum editus eſt, in iiſdem conſtringendis ſolliciti ſunt. Quod fit apte & convenienter, ſi medicamenta emollientia quæ voles formâ parata ſymphyſibus prædictorum oſſium pubis & ilium adhibita fuerint, ut natura docet, atque ipſamet quantum poteſt, præſtat. Quæ oſſa his in ſymphyſibus adeo vehementer conſtricta ſunt reliquo vitæ tempore, ut citius alibi, puta, in medio ſui frangerentur, quam à cauſa quadam procatarctica ab invicem diducerentur, quæ tamen tempore partus diſtrahuntur.

(A) And publiſhed many Books.] The moſt conſiderable are only ſome French Tranſlations. I ſhall ſpeak of the beſt of 'em all in the laſt Remark of this Article. His other Tranſlations are that of (h) the third Part of the Letters of Don Antonio de Guevara, and that of a Treatiſe of the ſame Guevara, concerning the Work and Priviledges of Galleys. That of the (i) Commentaries of P. Andreas Matthiolus upon the Hiſtory of Plants of Pedacius Dioſcorides Anazarbeus, Lyons in folio (k) 1566. That of the Secret Wonders of Nature, of Levinus Lemnius, a Phyſitian of Zirickzee, Lyons (l) 1567. That of the Common Places of the Holy Scripture, collected by Wolfangus Muſculus in 66 Titles, at Geneva, by Euſtace Vignon, in folio 1577 (m). That of the Tax of the Caſual Forfeitures, &c. I ſhall ſpeak of it in the following Remark. Amongſt the Books of his own compoſing, there are ſome which treat of Controverſy, the Conformity of the Reformed Churches of France,

---

† Cenomanenſis, and not Carnotenſis, as in Draudius, or Carnutenſis, as in Lindenius renovatus.

* Lindenius renovatus mentions 8 Editions of it.

‡ Horace Od. 1. l. 3.

§ See Menage, Remarks on the Life of William Menage p. 333. where he gives a Catalogue of Pineau's Books that are publiſh'd or not publiſhed.

‡ La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Fran. p. 19.

(a) Pag. 1035.

(b) In the 4th Book of Sadoletus's Letters p. 150. Edit. Lugdun. 1554. in 8.

(c) Read Pinæi.

(d) Severin. Pinæus in præfat. ad Lector. p. 22.

(e) He places here the Verſes of Horace, which I have alledged at the end of the Text of this Article. The application of thoſe Verſes is agreeable to the Title of a Book de Organis Generationis. It has been intitled Sacra Eleuſinia patefacta. See the Nouvel. de la Repub. des Lettres. July 1684. p. 535. But obſerve that Reunerus Rolfincius, the Author of that Book, did not intitle it ſo. It was by a Bookſeller's Trick, that his Book came out as new under that Title, in the Year 1684, and without the Name of the Author.

(f) Os Pubis and Os Ilium.

(g) Id. ib. p. 21, 22.

(h) Du Verdier Vau-Privas Bibl. Franc. p. 76. who ſays that thoſe two Tranſlations were printed together at Lyons in 4o. in the Year 1560.

(i) Id. ib. p. 78.

(k) La Croix du Maine p. 19.

(l) Id. ib. p. 20.

(m) Du Verdier Vau-Privas ubi ſupra p. 78.

pear from the Notes (B) which he added to the French Tranſlation of the Tax of France, and of the Primitive Church in Policy and Ceremonies, Lyons 1564 in 8o (n). Sermons upon the Revelation (o). Here is a Book of another kind. (p) Plans, Draughts and Deſcriptions of many Towns and Fortreſſes, as well in Europe, Aſia and Africa, as in the Indies and America, their Foundations, Antiquities, and Manner of Living: with many general and particular Maps, &c. Lyons, by John d'Ogerolles in the Year 1564, in folio. See in the Remark C, a Critical Obſervation againſt that Compilation.

(B) The Notes which he added to the French Tranſlation of the Tax of the Chancery of Rome.] Here is the Title of the Book. The Tax of the Caſual Forfeitures of the Pope's Shop, in Latin and French, with ſome Annotations taken from Decrees, Councils and Canons, either Ancient or Modern, for the Verification of the Diſcipline anciently obſerved in the Church, the whole inlarged and reviſed. By A. D. P. The Epiſtle dedicated To all faithful Chriſtians, is dated from Lyons the 26th of March 1564. I ſhall tranſcribe a Paſſage out of it, that the Reader may judge of this Author's freedom of ſpeaking. " (q) " Which is the Reaſon why I have only ſet before " them the Aſſeſſment of their Souls, according to " the Rates which their Terreſtrial God has ſet upon " them: To the end, that ſeeing the Trade they " make of 'em, and of their Conſciences, and the " Tyranny they are reduced to, and how dangerous " it is, they may lift up their Eyes towards Heaven, and know at laſt how great is the Grace of " God to thoſe whom he delivers from ſuch a Slavery. And leſt any Dataries, Auditors, Bulliſts, " Copiſts, Expeditionary Bankers, and ſuch like, " ſhould fancy that this is a quid pro quo, I have truly " ſet down the Latin Text of the Tax of the Papal " Chamber, with the French Tranſlation, adding " ſome Annotations to it for the good of the Church. " For the Contents of the Text are ſo ſhameful and " deteſtable, that I muſt intreat you, my Brethren, " to forgive me for having dedicated it to ſo Holy " a Company as yours, amongſt whom nothing is to " be heard but Holy Songs, Pſalms and Praiſes to the " Lord our God. But it behoves us to ſhew a Villain " his Villany, and a Fool his Folly, leſt we ſhould be " thought to be like them. „ One may eaſily conjecture, that a Man who ſpeaks ſo in his preliminary Epiſtle, has expreſt himſelf very bluntly in his Gloſs upon a Text ſo liable to Invectives as that of the Tax of the Roman Chancery. I wiſh that all the Notes of du Pinet did not ſavour of Controverſie, and that he had explained certain ways of Speaking, which come in very often. But I fancy he was not verſed enough in the Canon Law, nor in the Style of the Court of Rome, to be able to clear ſuch an Obſcurity. He undertook in the Beginning of his Commentary, to ſhew the Price of every Tax, but he was forced to confeſs, that it was above his Capacity. No Reader can remain ſatisfied with what he ſays on that Subject. I ſhall convince you of it. The three ſorts of Money mentioned in that Apoſtolical Tarif of Rome, are turonenſes, ducatus and Carlinus. Du Pinet has rendred thoſe Words Tournois d'Or, Ducat de Chambre and Carlin; upon which he makes this Obſervation: (a) " As to the " Gold Tournois, ſome take it for a Livre Pariſis; " others ſay that it is an old Crown; others are of " Opinion, that it is worth a Philippus. In ſhort, I " have not hitherto found out any thing certain con" cerning that Money, tho' the Tournois de Chambre is " commonly worth a Real: a Ducat is worth a Piſtole and four pence Tournois: and a Carlin is " worth four pence. „ Thoſe who love to underſtand every thing they read, want a much better Explication than that; and it is certain that this was one of the Paſſages which the Author of the Notes ſhould have explained with the greateſt Clearneſs, if he could have done it. His Work was reprinted (b) at Leyden in the Year 1607. It was reprinted at Amſterdam, with a new Preface, in the Year 1700. The Author of that Preface tells us, that all poſſible care has been taken to reduce to our Money the Tournois, Ducats and Carlins, mentioned in the Tax of the Pope's Chancery; but that nothing could be found out to clear that Matter, and that if any Diſcovery be made about it hereafter, it ſhall be inſerted in a new Edition. He alledges what du Pinet has obſerved concerning the Value of thoſe three ſorts of Coins, and he adds, that the Author of the Notes upon the Confeſſion of Sanci aſſures, that there is at the end of the Book of the Taxes of the Roman Chancery, (c) a Tarif which reduces the Groſs to four pence Tournois, the Ducat to forty pence, and the Carolus to eight Blanks. The Author of thoſe Notes makes that Obſervation in his Commentary, upon a Part of this Paſſage of d'Aubigne. (d) " There is another Book which thoſe whom I mentioned before, " were very deſirous to deſtroy; but the Holy See " will never permit it. . . . . 'Tis the Book of Taxes, " wherein a good Catholick ſees a low Price ſet " upon Sins, and knows in a Moment what he is to " pay for them. He, who has deflowred a Virgin, " ſhall pay ſix Groſſes for it. Whoſoever has had " a Carnal Copulation (but with a mutual Conſent) " with his own Mother, Siſter, Couſin German, &c. let " him pay five Groſſes. But if it be known in the " Church, he ought to pay ſix. For having killed " one's Father or Mother, one Ducat, and five Carlins. „ Upon theſe Words five Groſſes, the Commentator ſays, that this is to be found in the 35th folio verſo. He means without doubt, the Edition mentioned by d'Aubigne, which is that of Paris (e) 1570, by Touſſaint Denis, in St. James-Street, at the Wooden Croſs, with this Title, Cancellaria Apoſtolica; for here is his Note upon theſe Words, in the Book of Taxes. " (f) Taxa Cancellariæ Apoſtolicæ, & Taxa Pœnitentiariæ itidem Apoſtolicæ, print" ed at Paris with the King's Licenſe for three " Years in 1520, by Touſſaint Denis, in St. James-Street, at the Wooden Croſs, having in the Frontiſpiece the Arms of the Scutcheon of France, " and thoſe of the Houſe of Medicis, of which Leo " X. was. „ He pretends that " That ſame Book " tranſlated into French in the Year 1564, by Antony du Pinet, reprinted in the ſame Year in 8o " at Lyons, by John Saugrain, and reprinted with " the (g) Latin at Leyden in 1607, with this Title, " Taxe de Parties Caſuelles de la Boutique du Pape, " is to be found among the condemned Anonymous " Authors of the Letter A, in the Catalogue of prohibited Books in 1625, by a Mandamus of the " Arch-Biſhop of Paris: and the Authors of that " Catalogue did not think it neceſſary to mention " the Latin Gothick Original; becauſe the Book of " du Pinet is written in French, and full of Annotations, wherein the Author pretends to ſhew a " great deal of Turpitude in the old Book of Taxes; " whereas, it may be thoſe Gentlemen believed " that the Original was no more to be found; and " beſides, they durſt not, without doubt, ſuppreſs " it, by reaſon of the two great Authorities where" with it is attended. I add, that the Tax of the " Chancery, &c. was reprinted in 1512. with the " Pragmatick Sanction. „ He will give me leave, I am ſure, to tell him, that the Book which du Pinet tranſlated, is not the ſame with the Book quoted by d'Aubigne. There is no Money call'd a Groſs in the Tax which du Pinet tranſlated and explained with Notes. The Chapter of Perpetual Diſpenſations mentioned by d'Aubigne, is not to be found in it, nor any thing concerning the Tax of thoſe who have committed Inceſt with their Mothers, Siſters, &c. But ſince the Author of the Notes affirms, that thoſe Men are only taxed five Groſſes, folio 36. verſo, we have reaſon to believe that d'Aubigne does not tell a Lye. How comes it therefore to paſs, that neither du Pinet, nor thoſe who reprinted his Tranſlation and his Commentary, knew that other Tax which is much more infamous than that which they took care to print? I very much wonder at it, and he is to blame for not ſaying what Edition he made uſe of. The Commentator of d'Aubigne gives us for the firſt Edition, that of Paris 1520. But I know that in 1664, Stephen du Mont, Bookſeller of Boiſleduc, put out in Latin and Dutch from an Edition of Rome, a Book intitled, Taxa Cancellariæ Apoſtolicæ, & Taxæ Sacræ Pœnitentiariæ Apoſtolicæ, which he had compared Word for Word with his Edition of Rome; whereof a Secretary of the Town of Boiſleduc gave a Certificate, which is printed pag. 131. It is ſaid in the Preface, that this Book was printed at Cologne in 1515, apud Goſuinum Colinium. I know alſo, that a (h) Profeſſor of the Civil Law in the Univerſity of Franeker, publiſhed in 1651, with ſome Notes, Taxa Cameræ Apoſtolicæ, which differs from the Book printed at Boiſleduc.

If what d'Aubigne alledges, is really to be found in the Book of Taxes quoted by him, one may very well wonder how ſuch a Book came out, and how it of the Chancery of Rome. He publiſhed ſome extravagant Notions concerning the Genealogy (C) of ſome Families. Of all his Works, the Tranſlation of Pliny (D) was moſt eſteemed.

(n) Id. ib. p. 79.

(o) Id. ib. p. 75.

(p) Id. ib. p. 79.

(q) Pinet Epiſt. Dedicat. of the Taxe des Parties Caſuelles, &c.

(a) Du Pinet, Taxe des Parties Caſuelles, &c. p. 7.

(b) Note, that the Leyden Edit. is not the ſame in every thing with the Lyons Edit. 1564.

(c) Note upon the Confeſſion of Sanci, p. [illegible] Edit. 1693.

(d) Confeſſion of Sanci l. 2. c. 2. p. [illegible]

(e) It ſeems to be a fault of the Print inſtead of 1520.

(f) Note upon the Confeſſion of Sanci p. 100, 101.

(g) The meaning of it is that the Edit. of 1564. did not contain the Latin, but it is certain that it did.

(h) Laurentius Banckius.

P I N Sit came to be authentically reprinted, even after it had afforded the Proteſtants the matter of ſo many Triumphs, I ſhall ſet down the reproachful Words of a Miniſter of Paris to the Biſhop of Belley. (i) “ I dare not ſay of this Book all that Dr. (1) Eſpenſe ſaid of it, even ſo as to apply theſe Words to it ;

“ Proſtat & in quæſtu pro meretrice ſedet.

“ Thoſe of your Communion are ſo far from being aſhamed of that Book, which invites Cuſtomers with ſound of Trumpet, that they ceaſe not to publiſh and expoſe it to Sale. I have ſeen three Paris Editions of it. The firſt came out in the Year 1520, and it has been often quoted by our Authors. The ſecond in the Year 1545 (2). And the third in the Year 1625, by that very Man who prints your Books (3). I have among my Books the Edition of 1520, and that which was publiſhed in our Time, in the Year 1625. I have compared them, and found 'em the ſame. But eſpecially theſe Words, which cry for Vengeance before God. Et nota diligenter quod hujuſmodi gratiæ & diſpenſationes non conceduntur pauperibus, quia non ſunt, ideo non poſſunt conſolari. That is to ſay, And be ſure to obſerve (and indeed the thing deſerves it) that ſuch Graces and Diſpenſations are not granted to the Poor : for, becauſe they have not wherewithall to pay, they cannot be comforted. Thoſe Words, I ſay, which are in folio 23 of the old Edition 1520, are alſo to be found p. 208. of the late Edition of 1625, and thoſe who have the Edition of the Year 1545, will find them folio 140. „

If any one had ask'd d'Aubigne how it came to paſs that the Court of Rome, ſo much cried down for her Covetouſneſs, taxed but 20 pence Tournois the worſt of Inceſts, he had without doubt anſwered, that a Seller who has ſome Wares which coſt him nothing, gets more by ſelling them at low Rates, becauſe he ſells a greater quantity of 'em upon that Account, and ſo he indemnifies himſelf by reaſon of the great number of Buyers who flock to him, moſt of whom could eaſily be without thoſe Wares, if they were exceſſively dear. But let no Body miſtake the matter : the Tax ſet down in that Book is not all that muſt be paid : One muſt beſides treat with a Datary, and compound with him according to one's Ability (a).

(C) He publiſhed ſome extravagant Notions concerning the Genealogy of ſome Families.] One of our beſt Hiſtoriographers ſpeaking of Francis d'Agoult, Count de Sault, (b) the greateſt Lord of Provence, and one of the greateſt Captains in his Time, and very much addicted to the Party of the Huguenots, for which he was killed with John d'Agoult, his Brother, in the Battle of St. Denys, in the Year 1567. That Hiſtoriographer, I ſay, making that Lord's Encomium, expreſſes himſelf thus : (c) “ He was Brave, Generous and Magnificent, and a Man of great Parts, he loved Learning, and it was out of (†) reſpect to him, that Antony du Pinet S. de Noroy collected in his Treatiſe of the Cities and Fortreſſes of the World, ſome trifling Traditions concerning the Origin of the Houſe of Sault ; to make a Romance of it leſs credible than the Apologues and the Converſations of Men with Beaſts, and by which the Reputation of that Author had been ruined, had he not maintained it by his Tranſlation of Pliny's Works. I don't believe that Poetry would allow of ſuch Fictions, ſo wonderful and incredible this ſeems to be, as well as the Fable of Berold of Saxony, the pretended Anceſtor of the Dukes of Savoy, and of Ferry Borſtelſtickel, whom Thevet the Romancer makes the Head of the illuſtrious Houſe of the Chabots : and 'tis a ſtrange thing that ſome Daughters of Kings or Emperors, muſt loſe their Honour to lay the Foundation of a falſe Tranſmigration. All that can be ſaid to excuſe du Pinet, is, that he wrote in a time when Phantaſms were given for Anceſtors to thoſe, who having loſt the Memory of thoſe from whom they iſſued, afforded, in order to dreſs 'em up, ſome Traditions, and old Wives Tales, whereof Flatterers made ſome Myſteries with the Alluſions they look'd for in the Names and Arms of thoſe Families ; not knowing that Arms and Sirnames have their limited time, and not ſuſpecting that a knowing Age, ſuch as ours is, ſhould ſucceed an ignorant one, ſo as to penetrate into the foreign Countries, whither they went to look for the firſt Heros of every Race. He, whom du Pinet choſe for the Houſe of Agoult, is one High Prince of Trie, an imaginary State in Pomerania, whom his Bravery and Beauty made worthy of the Love of the Infanta Valdegue, Daughter of King Valdegue of Pomerania. He had a Son by her, whom that Princeſs, who was a Priſoner, letting down from a Window, to deliver him into the Hands of a Country-man, who was to carry him to his Nurſe, a She-Wolf came in of a ſuddain, who ſnatched him out of his Hands, and carried him to her Den with her young ones. She ſuckled him till the next Day, when the King finding her as he was a Hunting, purſued and killed her with her young ones, and found the Child wrapt up in a rich Cloth, whom he cauſed to be baptized, and having heard the Hiſtory of his Birth, he legitimated him by marrying his Daughter to Prince Hugh. She died a little while after, and the Prince went to make War againſt the Grecians, and married the Daughter of the Emperor of Conſtantinople, where he ſettled, and had many Children by her. Wolf of Trie, his Son by his firſt Marriage, ſo named in Memory of ſo wonderful an Accident, married Sidrac, Daughter of the King of Ruſſia ; and his eldeſt Son of the ſame Name having married a Princeſs of Saxony, came with Berold of Saxony to the Service of the King of Arles (of Burgundy) and conquered the Territory and Valley of Sault in Provence, where he built the Caſtle of Agoult, and his Poſterity took their Sirname from it, and left that of Trie. He adds, that the Country of Sault was infeoffed to him in the Year 1200. Here is a Hotch-potch of Hiſtory, Chronology and Coſmography, and the whole is grounded upon this, that the Arms of Agoult are, not a She-Wolf, as they ſhould have been, but a Wolf with the Marks of his Maſculinity, and that ſome of that Houſe took in their Latin Titles, the ſeveral Sirnames de Agoult and de Tritis, becauſe of the Mannor of Trez, an ancient Lot of the Viſcounts of Marſeilles, which fell unto them by a Marriage. „

This is not the only Place, where le Laboureur inveighs with great Reaſon againſt the abſurd Impertinences of the Genealogiſts. See p. 801. of the 1. Tom. of his Additions to Caſtelnau's Memoirs, and you'll ſee that du Cheſne has undeceived the Houſe of Rochefoucaut, (with Honour to that Houſe as well as to himſelf) as to the ſilly and fooliſh Impoſtures of Brother Stephen de Luſignan, who derives more Tribes from his (d) Melluſine, than God promiſed Abraham. See alſo p. 559. of the 2d Tom. where he ſays, “ That in 1560, Renatus de Sanzay compiled with John le Feron, King at Arms of France, that Genealogy of the Houſe of Sanzay, made up of near fifty Degrees of Generation, moſt of them quoted Year by Year, with the Names, Sirnames and Arms of the Women, and all thoſe Names, Families and Arms are true Phantaſms. . . . . Brother Stephen de Luſignan, a Friar, having had that fine peice of Work imparted to him, made uſe of it to build his Romance of the 67 Illuſtrious Houſes ſprung from that of Luſignan, more incredible ſtill than that of Melluſine ; out of whoſe Tub, as out of a publick Fountain, he let out the Nobility and Blood of Luſignan to any that was ambitious of it. „ See the Margin (e).

(D) The Tranſlation of Pliny.] I believe that the firſt Edition of it is of the Year 1562, Lyons, in 2 Vol. in Folio. Du Verdier Vau-Privas mentions none but that of the Year 1566, Lyons, by Claudius Senneton. I make uſe of the fourth, printed at Paris 1608, by John Houzé. It may be ſaid without flattering du Pinet, that he deſerved great Praiſes on account of that Tranſlation. He took great pains about it, he conſulted the Ancient MSS. and the old Editions of Pliny ; he corrected and compared with

(i) Drelincourt, Reply to the Anſwer of the Bp. of Belley pag. 570, 571.

(1) In Epiſt. ad Titum c. 1. Digreſ. 2. See p. 479. of the Paris Edit. 1619.

(2) Apud Galeotum a Prato.

(3) Apud Gervaſium Alliot.

(a) See the Rem. C in the Art. Parrhaſius.

(b) Le Laboureur, Addit. to the Memoirs of Caſtelnau tom. 2. p. 511.

(c) Id. ib.

(†) I fancy that this Count de Sault was one of thoſe whom du Pinet means in his Preface to Pliny's Tranſlation, when he ſays, for fifteen Months that I have been labouring hard at this Tranſlation, I have been often ſick, and charged with ſome Affairs for the Service of ſome great Lords to whom I am devoted.

(d) See what he ſays of Melluſine ib. p. 702, 703.

(e) At that time, ſays le Laboureur, p. 420 of the 2 Tom. they had not the Method of drawing up Genealogies upon Deeds and Records, they were contented with Traditions, and old Womens Stories, to ſupply the Defect of Memory : they ſcarce knew their Grand-Fathers by Rules, and above that they received for true whatever was vented by ſome falſe Antiquarians, and downright Viſionaries, ſuch as John le Maire de Belges, Author of the Romance intitled Le Chevalier du Cygne, compoſed in the behalf of the Houſe of Cleves, Forcatel, a Civilian, Author of the Montmorency Gaulois, Brother Stephen de Luſignan, a great Impoſtor, and John le Feron, whom I ſhall only charge with Credulity, who as a King at Arms, ſuffered his Name to be put to many falſe Genealogies, as did in his imitation Bernard de Girart Sieur du Haillan, a Genealogiſt of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt.

PINSSON (Francis) Professor of Law at Bourges, was installed in that Employment on the 8th of February 1611. He had already taught for some time the Institutes in that City. He was so exact in the Exercise of his Profession, that he never failed to make his Lectures, and rather than miss any of them, he often came from his Country-House, which was five Leagues off, to be in the Auditory at the very same Hour he was expected there. He taught the Canon-Law for a long time, and he had always five or six hundred Scholars. He died at Bourges in the Year 1643, being 63 Years of Age. His first Wife was Mary Bengy, Daughter (A) of Antony Bengy, of whom I shall speak in the Remarks, and his second Wife was N. d'Amours: He had no Children but by his first Wife. We may expect the * Publication of what he dictated in the Schools of Bourges in the Year 1615, ad Philippi Imperatoris rescripta, and his Commentary on the Epistles of Pope Honorius III. and his Funeral Oration pronounced at the opening of the Schools of Bourges in the Year 1643, by Mr. de Roye, who was afterwards Professor of Law at Angers †.

PINSSON (Francis) Son of the foregoing, was born at Bourges, the 5th of April 1612, and having finished his Studies there, and taken his Degrees, he came to Paris, where he was admitted a Lawyer the 5th of November 1633. He applied himself to the Chatelet at first, and afterwards to the Palace, where he had a great deal of Practice, especially in what relates to Beneficial Matters. He published several Books on that Subject. See underneath the Catalogue (B) of all the Books he printed, from which you may rightly conclude that he was a Man of great Capacity, with them, what he wrote; he made a great many Marginal Annotations; he drew up two large Indexes; he composed a Treatise of ancient Weights and Measures, reduced to the French, and prefixed it to his Translation: which required abundance of Time. I know he has committed a great many Faults, some whereof are very absurd. "He (f) made two Roman Gentlemen of two sorts of Marble, the one "called Lapis Numidicus, and the other Sinandicus: "'tis in the 1st Chap. of the 45th Book." He who has afforded me that Remark, adds, that he has observed a great number of other Faults in that Author, whose Work is notwithstanding very useful. Any one that has never so little Equity, and knows the Difficulty of the Undertaking, will be much more disposed to praise that Author, by reason of so many Passages which he has happily translated, than to despise him by reason of his Over-sights. Read his Preface, and you'll see that he knew very well where the Difficulty lay, and what helps were necessary for such an Undertaking.

(A) Daughter of Antony Bengy.] Antony Bengy, Esq; Sieur de Puy-Vallée, was called from the Bar, being 26 Years of Age, to succeed Cujas in the Profession of the Law at Bourges, in the Year 1595. He exercised it with great diligence till the Year 1616, wherein he died. He had once two thousand Scholars. He dictated, amongst other things, the Treatise concerning Benefices, as far as the 4th Chap. de oneribus & immunitatibus Ecclesiarum. I shall speak (g) of it. He was made Echevin of Bourges in the Years 1603 and 1604. The Discourse he made, when he began his Lectures in the Year 1600, was printed in the same Year at Bourges, with this Title, Concio funebris in memoriam defuncti Joannis Mercerii Juris utriusque Doctoris in Schola Biturigum (h). He is the Author of an Epitaph of Cujas, which is to be found only in the Collection of the Priviledges and Antiquities of Bourges, by John Chenu, but not in the last Collection of the Works of Cujas in ten Volumes, made by Mr. Fabrot. In the Year 1614, he made an Epitaph for the Marshal de la Châtre, which was never printed. Note, that he had been a Counsellor in the Provostship of Bourges. He left among other Children a Son, who was Counsellor and the King's Advocate in the Presidial of Bourges, and then the King's Advocate in the Court of the Finances, and who married in the Year 1618. Frances Chenu, Daughter of John Chenu, a famous Lawyer, who has writ many Books (a).

(B) The Catalogue of all the Books he printed.] It appears to me to be so well done, that I shall give it as I have received it. "The first Book which "Francis Pinsson published, is his Treatise of Eccle-"siastical Benefices in Latin, which he finished af-"ter the Death of Mr. Bengy his Grand-Father by "the Mother's side; which is the Reason why the "Title of that Book runs thus: Antonii Bengii in Alma "Biturigum Academia Antecessoris primicerii, & Fran-"cisci Pinssonii Parisiensis Advocati ejusdem ex filia "Nepotis Tractatus de Beneficiis Ecclesiasticis ex defi-"nitione desumptus ad usum fori Gallici & libertatum "Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ accommodatus, Parisiis sumptibus "Antonii de Sommaville 1654. in folio. dedicated to "the First President de Bellievre. He has revi-"sed, corrected, and considerably inlarged that "Work, which is ready to be printed, having ob-"tained a Licence for it from the Chancellor. He "printed in 1663 in 4to Sancti Ludovici Francorum "Regis Pragmatica Sanctio, & in eam historica præ-"fatio & Commentarius, dedicated to the King. In "1666, he published that of Charles VII. with this "Title: Caroli Septimi Francorum Regis Pragmatica "Sanctio cum glossis Domini Cosmæ Guymier Parisini su-"premæ Galliarum curiæ Senatoris, & Inquisitionum "præsidis, & additionibus Philippi Probi Biturici ad "Pragmaticæ Sanctionis & Concordatorum dissidia com-"ponenda; accedunt historia Pragmaticæ Sanctionis & "Concordatorum, annotationes marginales, & veterum "instrumentorum supplementa, opera & studio Francisci "Pinssonii Biturici Advocati Parisiensis, Parisiis apud "Franciscum Clouzier 1666. in folio, dedicated to the "King. He answered, in 1674, some Treatises, "which came out at that time under the Title of "L'Abbé Commendataire, a Work in 2 little Vo-"lumes, in 12. printed at Cologne, by Nicolas Schou-"ten in 1673, one under the Name of the Sieur des "Bois, Doctor of Law, who is thought to be Dom "Gabriel Gerberon, a Benedictin Monk, and the se-"cond Part in 1674, under the Name of the Sieur "Fromont, done, as it is said, by Dom .... Delfau, "another Benedictin. That Answer was never prin-"ted: it will be inserted in the new Edition of his "Treatise concerning Beneficial Matters. In 1668, "on the 18th of December, he wrote a Consultati-"on, printed since in his second Volume of his "Treatise concerning the Regalia, to shew that the "King, by virtue of the Treaty of Peace of Aix la "Chapelle, containing the Cession of the City of "Ath, has a good Claim to the strong Place of Conde, "as being a Dependency of the Chatelleny of "Ath. He made another since, on the 17th of June "1669, printed in the same Place, which is a Con-"tinuation of the foregoing, wherein he shews, "that the Additions made to the Town of Conde "ought to belong to the King, as the Body of the "Place. In the Year 1673, he published some Sum-"mary Notes upon the Indults granted to the King, "printed in 2 Vol. in 12. by Charles de Sercy, and "dedicated to the King. In the Year 1681 he print-"ed his Notes on the Body of the Canon-Law, "which are to be found among the Works of Charles "du Moulin, in the 4th Vol. of this last Edition, "with this Title, Francisci Pinssonii Biturici Parisien-"sis Advocati Manuale juris Pontificii Cæsarei & Gal-"lici, compactum ex annotationibus Caroli Molinæi ad "jus Pontificium sive Canonicum; adversariis Gabrielis "(d) du Pineau Senatoris Andegavensis ad Molinæa-"nas annotationes, animadversionibusque ejusdem Pins-"sonii ad utrumque; in quibus jus quotidianum & fo-"rense exhibetur ex libertatum Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ the-"siori penu: constitutionum Regiarum tùm antiquiorum, "tùm recentiorum inexhausto fonte, & superiorum Gal-"liæ tribunalium decretorio stylo. Those Notes are "dedicated to Mr. Colbert, in folio, Paris, for Gui-"gnard, &c. Finally, In the Year 1688, his singular "Treatise concerning the Regalia, (e) or the King's "Rights

---

* Mr. Pinsson des Riollet, his Grand-Son designs to publish it.

† Taken from a MS. Memorial.

(f) La Mothe le Vayer, hexamer. rustiq. p.m. 30.

(g) In the Rem. B. of the next Art. in the Title of the first Book published by Francis Pinsson the Lawyer.

(h) That Funeral Oration was printed with honestorum virorum lamenta Latinis Græcis & Gallicis versibus scripta: which makes in all 38 pages in 4o.

(a) Taken from a MS. Memorial.

(d) 'Tis he whom I have mentioned before, p. 2615.

(e) See an Abstract of it in the Journal of Leipsick in the 1. tom. of the Supplem. p. 570. & seq.

Capacity and Reputation. He was Batonnier (C) of the Society of the Lawyers and Attorneys of the Parliament in 1681, and was made one of the 24 Honorary Doctors of the Faculty of Law at Paris, in the room of Mr. Boſeiger, the 25th of February 1688. He died Sub-Dean of the Society of the Lawyers, the 10th of October 1691, being above 79 Years old, and was buried at St. Stephen du Mont. He left many Children ‡, and amongſt others, Mr. Pinſſon des Riolles, a Lawyer in the Parliament of Paris, a Man of Merit, and very well known to the Learned, and one of the moſt officious Friends that can be ſeen. He is writing, amongſt other things, the Lives of the Profeſſors of Bourges.

PYRRHO, a Greek Philoſopher, born at Elis in Peloponneſus, was a Diſciple of Anaxarchus, and accompanied him as far as India β. He followed, without doubt, Alexander the Great, from whence one may know in what time he flouriſhed. He had γ been a Painter before he applied himſelf to the Study of Philoſophy. His Opinions did not differ much from (A) thoſe of Arceſilaus; for he did almoſt teach, as well as he, the Incomprehenſibility of all Things. He found ſome Reaſons to affirm and deny every thing; and therefore he ſuſpended his Aſſent after he had well examined the Arguments pro and con, and reduced all his Concluſions to a non liquet, let the Matter be further enquired into. Hence it is that he ſought Truth as long as he lived, but he ſo contrived the Matter, as never to grant that he had found it. Tho' he is not the Inventer of that Method of Philoſophizing, yet it goes by his Name: the Art of Diſputing about every thing, without doing any thing elſe but ſuſpending one's Judgment, is called Pyrrhoniſm: 'tis its moſt common Name. It is not without Reaſon deteſted (B) in the Schools of Divinity, where β Diog. Laert. in Pyrrhone l. 9. init. n. 61.

‡ Taken from the ſame Memorial.

γ Id. ib.

(f) The Journaliſts of Leipſick excuſe themſelves for not giving an Abſtract of that part of Work, and give a very good Reaſon for it: quia, ſay they, ib. p. 574. nec res nec verba facile intelligi poſſunt ab iis qui extra Galliam vivunt, & tabem illam fori Eccleſiaſtici, liteſque innumeras, ut & diſſenſiones ignorant quæ non ſolum inter partes fervent, ſed & ſæpe inter Parlamentum & Tribunal regium.

“ Rights over Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, and dedicated to the King, was printed for John Guignard and Antony Dezallier, in 2 Vol. in 4to. He added to that Work the Conference about the Edict of the Controll, and the Declaration of Eccleſiaſtical Inſinuations (f), with many other Inſtructions concerning Beneficial Matters, dedicated to the Advocate-General de la Moignon, and to Mr. de la Moignon de Baſville, Intendant of Languedoc. He has alſo had a Hand in the Edition of the Works of Antony Mornac, printed in 4 Vol. in folio, for Antony de Sommaville, in the Year 1654, and in the two laſt Editions of Charles du Moulin's Works. He made alſo ſome Remarks upon a Book of Mr. du Bois, Advocate in Parliament, intitled Maxims of the Canon-Law, which have been publiſhed with that Book ſeveral times, for John Guignard, in 2 Vol. in 12. in 1678, 1684, &c. by Denis Simon, Counſellor in the Preſidial, and Aſſeſſor in the Marſhalſey of Beauvais (g). „

(C) He was Batonnier of the Society of the Lawyers.] I ſhall ſet down here the Explication of the Word Batonnier, for the ſake of thoſe who ſhall read this without having Furetiere's Dictionary. (h) “ Baſtonnier is a Law-term, and ſignifies an ancient Lawyer, who is choſen every Year according to Seniority, to be the Head of the Society of Lawyers and Attorneys, to be Maſter of their Chappel and Fraternity, and to preſide when they meet for the maintaining of the Diſcipline of the Palace, and of the Regulations. To him alſo belongs the Commiſſion of the Places of Inferior Judges, when they are interdicted. „

(A) Did not differ much from the Opinions of Arceſilaus.] Did I follow punctually Aſcanius Abderita, I ſhould ſay that there was no difference between thoſe two Philoſophers. (a) Γενναιότατα δοκεῖ φιλοσοφῆσαι τὸ τῆς ἀκαταληψίας καὶ ἐποχῆς εἶδος εἰσαγαγών, ὡς Ἀσκάνιος ὁ Ἀβδηρίτης φησί. Nobiliſſimè philoſophiam tractaſſe videtur, commentus modum quo de omnibus nihil decerneret, neque quicquam comprehendi poſſe diceret, ut Aſcanius Abderites auctor eſt. This is poſitively to affirm, that according to Pyrrho, the Nature of things is incomprehenſible: now this was the Doctrine of Arceſilaus. Nevertheleſs, I had rather acknowledge that there was ſome difference between them, becauſe Pyrrhoniſm does not formally ſuppoſe Incomprehenſibility. They were called (b) Scepticks, Zeteticks, Ephecticks, Aporeticks, that is to ſay, Examinators, Inquirers, ſuſpending and doubting Men. Which ſhews, that they ſuppoſed that it was poſſible to find out Truth, and that they did not poſitively affirm that it was Incomprehenſible. We find in Aulus Gellius, that they condemned thoſe who affirm that it is Incomprehenſible; and therein, ſays he, lies the difference between the Pyrrhoniſts and (c) Academicks: in every thing elſe they were perfectly alike, and they gave one another the above-mentioned (d) Names. (e) Cum hæc autem conſimiliter tam Pyrrhonii dicant quàm Academici; differre tamen inter ſeſe & propter alia quædam, & vel maximè propterea exiſtimati ſunt, quod Academici quidem ipſum illud nihil poſſe comprehendi, quaſi comprehendunt; & nihil poſſe diſcerni, quaſi diſcernunt: Pyrrhonii ne id quidem ullo pacto videri verum dicunt, quod nihil eſſe verum videtur. Sextus Empiricus (f) found another difference between 'em; Arceſilaus pretended, that the ſuſpenſion of the Mind was naturally Good, and Affirmation naturally Evil; but according to Pyrrho, they were only ſo in appearance, οὐ κατὰ φύσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ φαινόμενον, non ſecundum naturam, ſed ſecundum id quod apparet. After all, the one was not more for Doubting than the other, and there was nothing more eaſie than to reconcile them. They ſhould only have been deſired to expreſs themſelves more clearly and ſincerely (g).

(B) It is not without Reaſon deteſted in the Schools of Divinity, where it endeavours.] Pyrrhoniſm is dangerous with reſpect to that Divine Science; but it is not very dangerous with reſpect to Natural Philoſophy or the State. There is no great harm in ſaying, that the Souls of Men are too narrow to diſcover any thing in Natural Truths, in the Cauſes which produce Heat, Cold, the Flux of the Sea, &c. It is enough for us to endeavour to find out ſome probable Hypotheſes, and to make a Collection of Experiments; and I am ſure that there are very few good Philoſophers in our Age, but are convinced, that Nature is an impenetrable Abyſs, and that its Springs are known to none, but to the Maker and Director of them. So that all thoſe Philoſophers are, in that reſpect, Academicks and Pyrrhoniſts. The Civil Life needs not be afraid of it; for the Scepticks did not deny, (h) but that Men ought to conform to the Cuſtoms of their Country, and practiſe Moral Duties, and reſolve upon thoſe things from a probable Reaſon, without ſtaying for Certainty. They might ſuſpend their Judgment upon this Queſtion, Whether ſuch a Duty was naturally and abſolutely Lawful; but they did not ſuſpend it upon this Queſtion, Whether it was to be practiſed on ſuch and ſuch an Occaſion. From whence it follows, that Pyrrhoniſm is only dangerous to Religion; for it ought to be grounded upon Certainty: the Deſign, and the Effects, and Uſe of Religion vaniſh away, as ſoon as the firm Perſuaſion of its Truth is blotted out of the Mind. But on the other ſide, we need not be uneaſie at it; there was never, and there will never be, but a ſmall number of Men capable of being deceived by the Arguments of the Scepticks. The Grace which God beſtows upon the Faithful, the force of Education in other Men, and, if you will, (i) Ignorance, and the natural Inclination Men have to be peremptory, are an impenetrable Shield againſt the Darts of the Pyrrhoniſts, tho' that Sect fancies it is now more formidable than it was anciently. Let us ſee upon what Grounds they build ſuch a ſtrange Pretenſion.

About two Months ago a Learned Man gave me a full Account of a Conference at which he had been preſent. Two Abbots, one whereof had but common Learning, the other was a good Philoſopher, grew ſo hot by Degrees in their Diſpute, that they

(g) Taken from the ſame MS Memorial.

(h) See the Word Baſtonnier in Furetiere's Dictionary.

(a) Diog. Laert. l. 9. n. 61.

(b) See aſſendus, libro œmiali Philoſo- ia univerſè cap. p.m. 24. e alſo usGel- ub. inf.

Viz. ſe of the Academy nded by ceſilaus

Aulus lius l. c. 5.

Id. ib.

(f) See Voſſius de Philoſophorum ſectis, p. 107.

(g) See the Paſſage of Ariſtocles ap. Euſebium præpar. Evangelic. l. 14. quoted by Voſſius ib. p. 106.

(h) See Diog. Laert. at the end of Pyrrho's Life.

(i) 'Tis a Saying of Simonides thoſe Men are not ſubtle enough to be deceived by ſuch a one as I am. Balzac ſaid the ſame thing of the Maids of his Village. Ageſilaus complained that he had to do with Enemies who underſtood not the War, his Stratagems were uſeleſs, he could not deceive unexperienced Troops. See Plutarch in his Life towards the end.

where it endeavours to get a New, tho' a Chimerical Strength; but it may be of uſe were like to fall out in earneſt. The firſt had ſaid ſomewhat coldly, that he did forgive the Heathen Philoſophers, their floating in the uncertainty of their Opinions; but that he could not apprehend how there could be any Pyrrhoniſts under the Light of the Goſpel. To which the other anſwered, You are in the wrong to reaſon in ſuch a manner. If Arceſilaus ſhould return into the World, and was to Diſpute with our Divines, he would be a thouſand times more formidable than he was to the Dogmatiſts of Old Greece; the Chriſtian Theology would afford him ſome inſoluble Arguments. All the Aſſiſtants heard this with great ſurprize, and deſired the Abbot to explain himſelf, and doubted not but he had vented a Paradox which would turn to his Confuſion. He anſwered thus, applying himſelf to the firſt Abbot. I will not make uſe of the Advantages which the New Philoſophy gives to the Pyrrhoniſts. The Name of Sextus Empiricus was ſcarce known in our Schools; what he propoſed with ſo great Subtilty concerning Suſpenſion, was not leſs unknown there, than the Terra Auſtralis, when Gaſſendus (k) gave an Abridgment of it, which opened our Eyes. Carteſianiſm has put the laſt Hand to the Work, and none among good Philoſophers doubts now whether the Scepticks were in the right to maintain, that the Qualities of Bodies which ſtrike our Senſes, are only meer Appearances. Every one of us may ſay, I feel heat by a Fire, but not I know that Fire is ſuch in itſelf as it appears to me. Such was the Style of the ancient Pyrrhoniſts. But now the New Philoſophy ſpeaks more poſitively: Heat, Smell, Colours, &c. are not in the Objects of our Senſes; they are only ſome Modifications of my Soul; I know that Bodies are not ſuch as they appear to me. They were very willing to except Extenſion and Motion, but they could not do it; for if the Objects of our Senſes appear to us coloured, hot, cold, ſmelling, tho' they are not ſo, why ſhould they not appear extended and figured, at reſt and in motion, tho' they had no ſuch thing (l). Nay, the Objects of my Senſes cannot be the cauſe of my Senſations: I might therefore feel Cold and Heat, ſee Colours, Figures, Extenſion and Motion, tho' there was not one Body in the World. I have not therefore one good (m) Proof of the Exiſtence of Bodies. The only Proof they can give me for it, is, (n) that God ſhould deceive me, if he imprinted in my Soul the Idea's I have of Body, if there were no Bodies; but that Proof is too weak; it proves too much. Ever ſince the beginning of the World all Men, except, perhaps, one in two hundred Millions, do firmly believe that Bodies are coloured, and yet 'tis a Miſtake. I aſk, whether God deceives Men with reſpect to thoſe Colours? If he deceives them in that reſpect, what hinders but he may deceive them with reſpect to Extenſion. This latter Illuſion will not be leſs innocent nor leſs conſiſtent than the former, with the moſt perfect Being. If he does not deceive them with reſpect to Colours, 'tis without doubt becauſe he forces them not to ſay, thoſe Colours exiſt out of my Soul, but only, it appears to me that there are ſome Colours there. The ſame may be ſaid with reſpect to Extenſion. God does not force you to ſay, that it does exiſt, but only to judge that you feel it, and that it appears to you to exiſt. A Carteſian can as readily ſuſpend his Judgment about the Exiſtence of Extenſion, as a Peaſant affirm that the Sun ſhines, that the Snow is white, &c. And therefore if we are miſtaken in affirming the exiſtence of Extenſion, God will not be the Cauſe of it, ſince you acknowledge that he is not the Cauſe of that Peaſant's Error. Such are the Advantages which the New Philoſophers would procure to the Pyrrhoniſts, but I will not take hold of 'em.

Immediately the ſame Abbot, who was a Philoſopher, declared to the other, that if he would have the better of a Sceptick, he muſt before all things, prove, that Truth may certainly be known by ſome Marks. They are commonly called Criterium veritatis. You'll have Reaſon to maintain againſt him, That Evidence is a certain Character of Truth, for if Evidence was not that Character, we ſhould have none. Let it be ſo, will he ſay, 'tis what I'd have you be at: I'll ſhew you ſeveral things of the greateſt Evidence, which you reject as falſe. I. It is evident, that (a) things which do not differ from a third, do not differ from each other: 'tis the baſis of all our Reaſonings, all our Syllogiſms are grounded upon it; nevertheleſs we are aſſured by the Revelation of the Myſtery of the Trinity, that it is a falſe Axiom. You may invent as many Diſtinctions as you pleaſe, but you'll never be able to ſhew, that that Maxim is not contradicted by that Great Myſtery. II. It is evident, that there is no difference between Individuum, Nature and Perſon: nevertheleſs, the ſame Myſtery has convinced us, that Perſons may be multiplied, and that Individuums and Natures will not ceaſe for all that to be one. III. It is evident, that for a Man to be really and perfectly a Perſon, it is enough to unite together a humane Body and a reaſonable Soul. But the Myſtery of the Incarnation has taught us, that this is not ſufficient. From whence it follows that neither you nor I can be ſure whether we are Perſons; for if it was eſſential to a humane Body and a reaſonable Soul united together to conſtitute a Perſon, God could never do the contrary: We muſt therefore ſay, that Perſonality is merely accidental to them. But every Accident may be ſeparated from its Subject in ſeveral manners; God therefore may hinder us ſeveral ways from being Perſons, tho' we are made up of a Body and a Soul: and can any one aſſure us, that he does not make uſe of ſome ſuch means to ſtrip us of our Perſonality? Is he obliged to reveal to us the ſeveral ways he diſpoſes of us? IV. It is evident, that a humane Body cannot be in ſeveral Places at one time, and that its Head cannot be penetrated, with all its other parts, under an indiviſible Point; nevertheleſs, the Myſtery of the Euchariſt (†) teaches us, that thoſe two things happen every Day: from whence it follows, that neither you nor I can be ſure whether we are diſtinguiſhed from other Men, and whether we are not at this very Moment in the Seraglio of Conſtantinople, in Canada, and in Japan, and in every Town of the World, under ſeveral Circumſtances in each Place. Would God, who does nothing in vain, create many Men, when one Man only created in many Places, and cloathed with ſeveral Qualities, may ſuffice? That Doctrine deprives us of the Truth, we find in Numbers; for we know no longer what Two or Three are; we know not what Identity and Diverſity are. If we judge that John and Peter are two Men, 'tis only becauſe we ſee them in diſtinct Places, and becauſe the one has not the Accidents of the other. But that Ground of Diſtinction becomes null from the Doctrine of the Euchariſt. It may be that there is but one Creature in the World multiplied in ſeveral Places by Production, and by the diverſity of Qualities: we caſt up long Accounts in Arithmetick, as if there were many things diſtinct (b); but this is only a vain Imagination. We are not only ignorant whether there are two Bodies in the World; but we do not ſo much as know whether there is a Body and a Spirit: for if Matter is penetrable, 'tis plain that Extenſion is only an Accident of the Body, and ſo the Body according to its Eſſence, is a Subſtance not extended: it is therefore capable of all the Attributes which we conceive in a Spirit, as the Underſtanding, the Will, the Paſſions, and the Senſations: ſo that we are left without any Rule whereby we may diſcern whether a Subſtance is Spiritual by its Nature, or whether it be Corporeal. V. It is evident, that the Modes of a Subſtance cannot ſubſiſt without the Subſtance, which they modifie; but the Myſtery of (‡) Tranſubſtantiation has taught us that this is falſe. All our Idea's are confounded by it; we can no more define a Subſtance: for if an Accident can ſubſiſt without any Subject, a Subſtance may in its turn ſubſiſt dependently upon another Subſtance, as Accidents do: a Spirit may ſubſiſt after the manner of Bodies, as in the Euchariſt, Matter exiſts after the manner of Spirits: the latter may be impenetrable, as Matter is penetrable in the Euchariſt. Now if by coming from the Darkneſs of Paganiſm to the Light of the Goſpel, we have learned the falſity of ſo many evident Notions, and of ſo many (c) certain Definitions, what will it be when we ſhall come from the Darkneſs of this Life to the Glory of Heaven? Is it not likely that we ſhall then learn the falſity of a thouſand things which appear to us undeniable? Let us make a good uſe of the Raſhneſs of thoſe who lived before the Goſpel, and who affirmed that ſome evident Doctrines were true, the Falſity whereof has been revealed to us by the Myſteries of our Theology.

(k) In his Book de fine Logicæ, c. 3. p. 72. & ſeq. of the 1. Vol. of his Works, Lyons 1658.

(l) The Abbot Foucher propoſed this Objection in his Refutation of the Search of Truth. Father Mallebranche made no anſwer to it. He was ſenſible that it is a ſtrong Objection. See the following Citation.

(m) F. Mallebranche ſhews in one of his Explications of ſome Paſſages of the Search of Truth, That it is very difficult to prove the Exiſtence of Bodies, and that nothing but Faith can convince us that ſome Bodies do really exiſt.

(n) See the 28 Chap. of Mr. Arnaud's Treatiſe concerning true and falſe Idea's, where he refutes the abovementioned Explication of F. Mallebranche, by ſome Reaſons taken from this Principle.

(a) Quæ ſunt idem uni tertio ſunt idem inter ſe.

(†) Note, that this is the Diſcourſe of an Abbot. I am obliged to give the Reader notice of this in this 2. Edit. becauſe I know that ſeveral Perſons of the Proteſtant Religion have been offended to ſee the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation parallell'd with the Doctrines of the Real Preſence and Tranſubſtantiation.

(b) Note, that if a Body may be produced in ſeveral Places, any other Being, Spirit, Place, Accident, &c. may be multiplied the ſame way, and ſo there will not be a multitude of Beings, but all things will be reduced to one only created Being.

(‡) See the preceding Marginal Note.

(c) Thoſe who hold Tranſubſtantiation place the Eſſence of Matter in the Faculty of receiving Extenſion, and it with the Eſſence of every thing: nothing is actual, every thing is a paſſive Capacity: but that Capacity may conſiſt with a Spirit, which confounds our Definitions.

uſe to oblige Man out of a Senſe of his Ignorance, to call for (C) the Help of God, and to ſubmit to the Authority of Faith. Now becauſe what I have related

I come now to Morals. I. It is evident, that Evil ought to be prevented, if it be poſſible, and that 'tis a ſinful thing to permit it when it can be prevented. Nevertheleſs, our Theology ſhews us, that this is falſe: it teaches us that God does nothing but what becomes his Perfections, when he permits all the Diſorders that are in the World, and which he might eaſily have prevented. II. It is evident, that a Creature which does not exiſt, cannot be Accomplice of an ill Action. III. And that it is unjuſt to puniſh that Creature as being guilty of that Action. Nevertheleſs, our Doctrine concerning Original Sin ſhews us the Falſity of thoſe Evidences. IV. It is evident, that what is Honeſt ought to be preferred before what is profitable, and that the more Holy a Being is, the leſs Freedom he has to prefer what is Profitable to what is Honeſt. Nevertheleſs, our Divines tell us, that it being in God's Choice to make a World perfectly regulated, and adorned with all Virtues, and a World like ours, wherein Sin and Diſorder prevail, preferred the latter to the former, as being more conſiſtent with the Intereſt of his Glory. If you ſhould tell me, that the Duties of the Creator ought not to be meaſured by ours, you'll fall into the Net of your Adverſaries. They would have you there; the main thing they aim at (d) is, to prove that the abſolute Nature of things is unknown to us, and that we know only ſome Relations they have one to another. We know not, ſay they, whether Sugar be Sweet in itſelf, we only know that it ſeems to us to be Sweet, when we taſte it. We know not whether a certain Action is Honeſt in itſelf and by its Nature, we only believe that with reſpect to ſuch a one, and by Reaſon of certain Circumſtances it has the outſide of Honeſty. But it is another thing in other reſpects, and under ſome other Relations. See therefore how you expoſe yourſelf, by telling them that the Idea's we have of Juſtice and Honeſty are liable to Exception, and are Relative. Beſides, I would have you to obſerve, that the more you raiſe the Rights of God to the Priviledge of acting contrary to our Idea's, the more you deſtroy the only means left you to prove that there are Bodies, viz. that God does not deceive us, and that he ſhould do it if the Corporeal World did not exiſt. To ſhew a People a thing which does not exiſt out of their Minds, would be a Deceit: but they will anſwer you, diſtinguo: if a Prince did ſo, concedo: if God, nego: for the Rights of God are quite different from thoſe of Kings. Beſides, if the Exceptions you make to the Principles of Morality are grounded upon the incomprehenſible Infinity of God, I can never be ſure of any thing; for I ſhall never be able to comprehend the whole extent of the Rights of God. I conclude therefore, that if Truth was to be known by any Mark, it would be by Evidence: but Evidence is no ſuch Mark, becauſe it ſuits with Falſities; therefore, &c.

The Abbot, to whom this long Diſcourſe was directed, had much ado to forbear interrupting him: he heard him with great uneaſineſs, and when he perceived that every Body was ſilent, he fell into a (e) great Paſſion againſt the Pyrrhoniſts, and ſpared not the Abbot for having laid open the Objections which they take from the Syſtems of Divinity. This Abbot replied modeſtly, that he knew very well thoſe Objections were very inconſiderable and meer Sophiſms; but that it is reaſonable, that thoſe who ſo much deſpiſe the Pyrrhoniſts, ſhould not be ignorant of the State of things. He went on, and ſaid, you did believe hitherto that a Pyrrhoniſt could not puzzle you, anſwer me therefore: you are 45 Years of Age, you don't doubt of it, and if there be any thing that you be ſure of, 'tis that you are the ſame Perſon to whom the Abbey of .... was given 2 Years ago. I am going to ſhew you, that you have no good Reaſon to be ſure of it: I argue from the Principles of our Theology. Your Soul has been created; God muſt therefore at every moment renew its Exiſtence; for the Conſervation of Creatures is a continued Creation. How d'ye know but that God permitted this Morning your Soul to relapſe into Nothing, which he had continued to create till then, ever ſince the firſt Moment of your Life? How d'ye know but that he has created another Soul modified (a) as yours was? That new Soul is that which you have now. Shew me the contrary; let the Company judge of my Objection. A learned Divine who was there, anſwered, and acknowledged, that the Creation being once ſuppoſed, it was as eaſie for God to create a new Soul at every Moment, as to reproduce the ſame; but that the Idea we have of his Wiſdom, and eſpecially the Light which his Word affords us, are ſufficient to aſſure us, that we have the ſame Numerical Soul to Day, which we had Yeſterday, the Day before, &c. and he concluded that it was needleſs to Diſpute with the Pyrrhoniſts, and that their Sophiſms could not eaſily be eluded by the meer force of Reaſon; that before all things they ſhould be made ſenſible of the weakneſs of Reaſon, that they may have recourſe to a better Guide, viz. Faith. This is the Subject of the following Remark.

(C) Oblige Men ..... to call for the help of God.] A Modern Author, who made a more particular ſtudy of Pyrrhoniſm than of any other Sect, looks (b) upon it as a Party the leaſt contrary to Chriſtianity, and that will receive the Myſteries of our Religion with the greateſt Docility. He confirms his Opinion by ſome Reaſons, and then he ſpeaks thus: "(c) 'Tis "not without Reaſon that we believe the Syſtem "of the Scepticks, which is grounded upon an in"genuous Acknowledgment of Humane Ignorance, "to be leſs contrary to our Belief than any o"ther, and the fitteſt to make one receive the ſu"pernatural Light of Faith. We ſay nothing here"in but what is agreeable to the beſt Theology, "ſeeing that (1) of St. Dionyſius teaches nothing in "more expreſs Terms, than the Weakneſs of our "Minds, and their Ignorance, eſpecially with re"ſpect to Divine Things. Thus that great Doctor "explains what God himſelf ſaid by the Mouth of "his Prophets, (2) That he made his Retreat in "Darkneſs. For this being ſo, we cannot come "near him, without entring into that myſterious Ob"ſcurity: from whence we draw this important In"ſtruction, that he cannot be known but obſcurely, "covered with Enigms or Clouds, and as the "Schools ſay, by being Ignorant of him. But as "thoſe, who have always profeſt Humility and Ig"norance, will be better pleaſed than others with "that Spiritual Obſcurity; the Dogmatiſts on the "contrary, who never feared any thing ſo much as "to appear Ignorant, are preſently loſt in it: "and being ſo preſumptuous as to believe, that "they are clear-ſighted enough to overcome "all manner of Obſcurity, their Blindneſs increaſes "ſo much the more, becauſe they fancy that they "move forward in a Darkneſs, into which Humane "Nature cannot penetrate. However, I am of Opini"on that Scepticiſm is of no little uſe to a Chriſtian "Soul, when it loſes by ſuch means all thoſe Ma"giſterial Opinions which St. Paul does ſo much "deteſt." He enlarges more exactly upon that Subject (d) in another Book.

When a Man is capable of apprehending all the common Places of Suſpenſion, which have been laid open by Sextus Empiricus, he may then perceive that that Logick is the greateſt Effort of Subtilty that the Mind of Man is capable of; but he will ſee at the very ſame time, that ſuch a Subtilty will afford him no Satisfaction: it confounds itſelf; for if it were ſolid, it would prove that it is certain that we muſt doubt. Therefore there would be ſome Certainty, there would be a certain Rule of Truth. That Syſtem would be deſtroyed by it; but you need not fear that things would come to that: the Reaſons for doubting are doubtful themſelves: one muſt therefore doubt whether he ought to doubt. What Chaos! what Torment for the Mind! It ſeems therefore, that this unhappy State is the fitteſt of all to convince us, that our Reaſon is the way to wander, ſince when it diſplays itſelf with the greateſt Subtilty, it throws us into ſuch an Abyſs. What naturally follows from thence, is to renounce that Guide, and beſeech the Cauſe of all Things to give us a better one. It is a great Step towards the Chriſtian Religion, which requires of us, that we ſhould expect from God the Knowledge of what we are to believe, and do, and that we ſhould captivate our Underſtanding to the Obedience of Faith. If a Man is once convinced, that he can expect no Satiſfaction from his Philoſophical Enquiries, he will find himſelf better diſpoſed to pray to God, to ask him the Perſuaſion of the Truths which he ought (d) The ſtrongeſt part of their Logick or Topicks conſiſted in one common place, viz. In that of Relation, which was the Eighth out of Ten, whereby thoſe of that Sect ſhew that we judge of things only by compariſon, which they expreſs thus, πάντα πρός τι, omnia ſunt ad aliquid. La Mothe le Vayer de la Vertu des Payens, tom. 5. p. 217.

(e) Compare this with what la Mothe le Vayer relates in the 2. part of his Proſe chagrine in the 9*th tom. of his Works.*

(a) That is to ſay, with the Reminiſcence which he would have reproduced, if he had continued to create the Soul of the Abbot.

(b) La Mothe le Vayer, de la Vertu des Payens, tom. 4. of his Works p. 229. See alſo the Diſſertations of the Abbot Foucher concerning the Philoſophy of the Academicks.

(c) La Mothe le Vayer, ib. p. 231.

(1) Lib. 1. de Myſt. Ph. c. 1. & 2.

(2) Poſuit tenebras latibulum ſuum.

(d) In the 2. part of the Proſe Chagrine in the 9. tom. of his Works.

lated * concerning a Conference wherein two Abbots diſputed about Pyrrhoniſm, might perplex many Readers, I deſign to clear that Matter at the End of this Work. The Stories of Antigonus Caryſtius ‡ concerning Pyrrho, ought to be look'd upon as ſorry Jeſts, or rather as Impoſtures, viz. that Pyrrho did not prefer any Thing to any Thing, and that a Chariot and a Precipice never made him go a Step backwards or aſide, and that his Friends who followed him, ſaved his Life very often. 'Tis not likely at all, that he (D) ſhould have been ſo great a Fool: but there is no doubt that he taught that § the Honour and Infamy of Actions, and their Juſtice and Unjuſtice depended only upon Humane Laws and Cuſtom. That Doctrine, tho' never ſo abominable, does naturally ariſe from that Pyrrhonian Principle, that the abſolute and internal Nature of Objects is unknown to us, and that we can be ſure only of what they appear to us in ſome reſpects. The Indifference of (E) Pyrrho ought to believe, than if he ſhould flatter himſelf with a good Succeſs in Reaſoning and Diſputing. It is therefore a happy Diſpoſition to Faith, to know the Defects of Reaſon: hence it is that Paſcal and ſome others have ſaid, that to convert Libertins, they muſt be made ſenſible of the Weakneſs of Reaſon, and taught to miſtruſt it. Calvin is admirable on this Subject, for thus he ſpeaks in the Liturgy (*) for Baptiſm, that is to ſay, thus he begins his Inſtructions for the Candidates of Chriſtianity. "Herein (e) therefore God admoniſhes us to humble and be diſpleaſed with our ſelves; and by "that means he prepares us to deſire and require "his Grace, whereby all the Perverſity and Malediction of our firſt Nature may be removed. For "we are not capable of receiving it, before we are "void of all manner of Confidence in our Virtue, "Wiſdom and Juſtice, even ſo as to condemn every "thing that is in us. But after he has repreſented "to us our Miſery, he does likewiſe comfort us by "his Mercy, promiſing us to regenerate us by his "Holy Spirit into a new Life, which may be to us "as an entrance into his Kingdom. That Regeneration conſiſts of two things, viz. That we deny "ourſelves, following not OUR OWN REASON, "our Pleaſure and Will; but that CAPTIVATING "OUR UNDERSTANDINGS, and our Hearts to the "Wiſdom and Juſtice of God, we mortifie whatever belongs to us and to our Fleſh. And then "that we FOLLOW THE LIGHT OF GOD, to "comply with and obey his good Will, as he teaches "us by his Word, and we are directed to it by his "Holy Spirit." However, there are ſome learned Men who maintain, that there can be nothing more oppoſite to Religion than Pyrrhoniſm. (f) "It is "the total Extinction not only of Faith, but alſo of "Reaſon, and there is nothing more impoſſible than "to reclaim thoſe who run themſelves into ſuch an "Exceſs. The moſt ignorant Men may be inſtructed, the moſt conceited may be convinced, and "the moſt incredulous may be perſuaded. But it is "impoſſible, I will not ſay to convince a Sceptick, "but to Reaſon cloſe with him; for it is not poſſible to urge him with any Argument, but what is "a Sophiſm, and even the groſſeſt of all Sophiſms, "I mean a Begging the Queſtion. In effect, there "is no Argument that can be concluſive, but by "ſuppoſing, that whatever is evident is true, that "is to ſay, by ſuppoſing what is in queſtion. For "Pyrrhoniſm, properly ſpeaking, conſiſts only in not "admitting that (g) Fundamental Maxim of the "Dogmatiſts." See Voſſius (h), who having ſaid that Pyrrhoniſm and Epicureiſm are very contrary to the Chriſtian Religion, confirms his Opinion by a Paſſage out of Clemens Romanus. (i) Hinc Nicetas de ſe, & fratre Aquila in epitome Clementis Romani, de geſtis B. Petri pag. 56. ed. Adr. Turnebi, in Latinâ Perionii tralatione ex Pariſienſi editione Sonnii fol. 596. Ἠκριβώσαμεν δὲ ϗ τὰ φιλοσόφων, ἐξαιρέτως τὰ ἀθεώτατα. λέγω δὴ τὰ Ἐπικούρου ϗ Πύῤῥωνος, ἵνα ϗ μᾶλλον ἀνασκευάζειν δυνάμεθα. Accuratè etiam ea inquiſivimus, quæ à philoſophis traduntur: præcipuè illa, quæ maximè repugnant pietati erga Deum: Illa, inquam, Epicuri ac Pyrrhonis, quò magis ea refellere poſſemus. Nempe Nicetas quidem fuerat Epicureus: Aquila vero Pyrrhonios erat ſecutus, ut apud ipſum eſt Clementem in octavo Recognitionum libro (3), quod opus Græcè non exſtat, ſed Latinè ex tralatione Rufini Aquilejenſis.

* In the Rem. H.

‡ Apud Diog. Laert. ubi ſup. n. 61.

§ Diog. Laert. ib. n. 61.

Obſerve that la Mothe le Vayer excludes the Pyrrhoniſts from the Grace he beſtowed upon many Ancient Philoſophers: what he ſays thereupon, contains ſome Facts which belong to this Article. (k) "I deſpair of the Salvation of Pyrrho, and of "all his Diſciples, who entertained the ſame Opinions concerning the Deity. Not that they profeſt themſelves to be Atheiſts, as ſome have believed. One may ſee in (4) Sextus Empiricus "that they admitted the Exiſtence of the Gods, as "the other Philoſophers did, that they paid the "common Worſhip to them, and denied not their "Providence. But beſides that they never acknowledged a Firſt Cauſe, whereby they would have "deſpiſed the Idolatry of their Time; it is certain, "that they believed nothing concerning the Divine "Nature, but with a ſuſpention of Mind, and confeſt nothing of what we have ſaid but in a doubting way, and only to accomodate themſelves to "the Laws and Cuſtoms of their Age, and of the "Country where they lived. And conſequently "ſeeing they have not had the leaſt Light of that "implicite Faith, on which we have grounded the "hopes of the Salvation of ſome Heathens, who enjoyed it together with an extraordinary Grace of "God, I cannot ſee how any Scepticks or Pyrrhoniſts of that kind, could avoid going into Hell."

(D) That he ſhould have been ſo great a Fool.] I ſhall ſet down another Paſſage out of La Mothe le Vayer. (a) "I know that Antigonus Caryſtius ſaid, "that Pyrrho would not go out of his way for a "Chariot, nor for a Precipice, or a Mad Dog, and "that his Friends only preſerved him from all "thoſe Inconveniencies. But why ſhould we rather "believe Antigonus, than Æneſidemus, who wrote "Eight Books concerning the Sect (1) of the Pyrrhoniſts, and aſſures, that their Head never committed any ſuch Extravagancies? Indeed they are "ſo unlikely, and it is ſo difficult to imagine how "ſo many Philoſophers ſhould have approved of "'em, that I ſhould ſcruple to believe them, even "tho' they had not been contradicted by any Body, "and tho' the remaining part of Pyrrho's Life did "not ſhew the Falſity thereof. In effect, 'tis agreed "that he lived near fourſcore and ten Years, and "ſpent the greateſt part of that Time in Travelling, for he went to ſee the Magi of Perſia, and "the Gymnoſophiſts of India. Is it likely that a Man, "who had expoſed himſelf to all manner of Dangers, ſhould have attained to ſo great an Age? "And how could he have Friends enough every "where to deliver him from ſo many Perils, which "can ſcarce be avoided by thoſe who Travel with "the greateſt care and prudence? However, he is "to be look'd upon as the Founder of a great Sect, "and which conſequently was, without doubt, conſiderable in many reſpects. If we had nothing to "alledge but what we read in his Life, that he "was made High-Prieſt by his Countrymen, it "would be ſufficient to ſhew the Calumny of his "Enemies; for it is not likely at all, that ſo important a Dignity ſhould have been beſtowed upon "a Man ſubject to ſo many Caprices. . . . . (b) "He never wrote any thing; ſo that one cannot "judge of his Capacity by his Works. But beſides "what we may preſume from his great Reputation; "the meer privilege of Immunity which the City "of Elis, the Place of his Birth, granted to all Philoſophers upon his Account, and the Honour which "the Athenians did him (c) by making him one of "their Citizens, which they granted to few Perſons, "are ſufficient to perſuade us that he was a Man of "great Merit."

(E) The Indifference of Pyrrho.] I ſhall alledge but one Example of it. Anaxarchus being fallen into a Ditch, was ſeen by Pyrrho, but received no help from him. Pyrrho went his way, without vouchſafing to reach his Hand to him. He was juſtly blamed for it, for he ſhould have helped in ſuch a Caſe, a Man unknown to him, but much more his Profeſſor. The Maſter knew more than the Diſciple (*) Obſerve that that Liturgy is uſed by all the Churches of the Confeſſion of Geneva, and ſo the Maxime contained in it ought to be look'd upon as the general Opinion of thoſe Churches, and not as a particular Opinion of Calvin.

(e) That is, by telling us we muſt be born again.

(f) La Placette, Traité de la Conſcience p. 377.

(g) That Maxim was formerly more invincible, for Example, in the Hands of the Stoicks than it is now, that one may maintain to Divines ad hominem, that ſome evident Propoſitions are falſe. See above the Diſpute of the two Abbots.

(h) Voſſius de Philoſoph. ſectis p. 107, 108.

(i) Id. ib. p. 108.

(3) Fol. 81. 6.

(k) De la Vertu des Payens, p. 226.

(4) Lib. I. Pyr. Hyp. c. 1.

(a) La Mothe le Vayer ibid. p. 213, 214.

(1) Diog. Laert. Photius in Bibl.

(b) La Mothe le Vayer ibid. p. 227.

(c) I'll ſhew in the Rem. H that this is falſe.

Pyrrho was a wonderful one: he loved nothing, † and was never angry for any thing; and no Man was ever more perſuaded of the (F) Vanity of things. When he ſpoke, he did not care much whether any Body gave ear to what he ſaid or not, and he went on ſtill, tho' his Hearers retired ‡. He kept Houſe with his Siſter, and had an equal ſhare (G) in the ſmalleſt Domeſtick Concerns. Thoſe who ple about that Point, for Anaxarchus did not ſo much as complain of Pyrrho, and approved not that he ſhould be cenſured; but beſides, he praiſed him for his Indifferency, and for loving nothing. Could any one do a thing more ſurpriſing under the Diſcipline of La Trape? (d) Καὶ ποτε Ἀναξάρχου εἰς τέλμα ἐμπεσόντος, παρελθεῖν μὴ βοηθήσαντα· τινῶν δὲ αἰτιωμένων, αὐτὸν Ἀνάξαρχον ἐπαινεῖν τὸ ἀδιάφορον καὶ ἄστοργον αὐτοῦ. Et cum aliquando Anaxarchus in ſcrobem incidiſſet, ille pertranſiit nihil ei opem ferens. Idque cùm plerique culparent, Anaxarchus ipſe laudabat, ut indifferenter & ſine affectu ſe habentem. Which puts me in Mind of a Repartee to be found in a Book of the Abbot de St. Real. I might, ſays he (e), anſwer you as an Ancient did, who being told in a reproachful manner, that for a Philoſopher he had no great value for Philoſophy: 'tis that very thing, replied he, which I call to be a Philoſopher. This is worthy of Pyrrho and Anaxarchus.

I add, that Pyrrho maintained, that to die and to live were the ſame thing. Why don't you die then, ſaid one to him; becauſe, anſwered he, there is no difference between Death and Life. Diogenes Laertius does not mention this, but Stobeus has preſerved it. (f) Πύῤῥων ἔλεγε μηδὲν διαφέρειν ζῆν, ἢ τεθνάναι· καί τις εἶπε πρὸς αὐτὸν, τί οὖν οὐκ ἀποθνήσκεις; ὁ δὲ, Ὅτι, εἶπεν, οὐδὲν διαφέρει. Pyrrhon ajebat, nihil intereſſe inter vitam & mortem. Et cùm quidam ad eum diceret, cur igitur ipſe non moreris? Quia nihil intereſt, reſpondit. Let no Body ſay that he would have forgotten his Maxims, if the Danger of Death had been preſent. Let no Body ſay

Era fuor de perigli un ſacripante,
Ma ne perigli havea cara la vita.

He ſhewed the contrary when he was in great Danger of ſuffering Shipwrack. He was the only one that was not afraid of the Storm; and when he ſaw every Body ſtruck with Fear and Sorrow, he deſired them with a great ſedateneſs of Mind, to look upon a Hog that was there, and eat as he uſed to do: Such ought to be, ſaid he, the Inſenſibility of a Wiſe Man. Τῶν γὰρ ἐμπλεόντων ἐσκυθρωπακότων ὑπὸ χειμῶνος, αὐτὸς γαληνὸς ὢν ἀνέῤῥωσε τὴν ψυχὴν, δείξας ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ χοιρίδιον ἐσθίον, καὶ εἰπὼν, ὡς χρὴ τὸν σοφὸν ἐν τοιαύτῃ καθεστάναι ἀταραξίᾳ (h). Navi aliquando vehebatur, & cum ſocii tempeſtate acti mæſtiores eſſent, ipſe tranquillo animo porcellum in navi edentem oſtendebat, dicens, oportere ſapientem tali animi tranquillitate eſſe.

(F) More perſuaded of the Vanity of things.] He deſpiſed above all things Humane Nature, and he was never weary to repeat the Words wherein Homer compares Men with the Leaves of Trees. (i) Θαυμάζων αὐτὸν καὶ συνεχὲς λέγων,

(k) Οἵηπερ φύλλων γενεὴ, τοιήδε καὶ ἀνδρῶν.

Miratum eum (Homerum) aſſidueque pronuntiare ſolitum ejus verſiculum, tale quidem genus eſt hominum quale eſt foliorum. Gaſſendus is of Opinion, that he was pleaſed with that Parallel (l), becauſe he found in it the Mortality of Men, and the Inconſtancy of their Opinions, which makes 'em turn like Leaves with the Wind. (m) He uſed to praiſe very much ſome other Paſſages of Homer, wherein Men are compared to Birds and Flies, and wherein their Infirmity and Childiſhneſs are deſcribed. (n) Καὶ ὅσα συντείνει εἰς τὸ ἀβέβαιον, καὶ κενόσπουδον ἅμα καὶ παιδαριῶδες τῶν ἀνθρώπων. Sicut & cætera illius, quibus infirmitas & inania ſtudia atque pueriles hominum motus indicantur. I wonder they don't ſay that he was a great Admirer of this Saying of Homer:

Τοῖος (o) γὰρ νόος ἐστὶν ἐπιχθονίων ἀνθρώπων,
Οἷον ἐπ' ἦμαρ ἄγῃσι πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε.
Talis enim ipſorum eſt hominum mens terricolarum,
Qualem ipſis hominum & divum pater indit in horas.

It ſignifies, that the Mind of Man is uncertain, and that God gives 'em their Proviſion of Reaſon as a kind of Daily Bread, which he renews every Day. Which ſuits admirably well with the Pyrrhonian Hypotheſis; they were always ſeeking, and always unſteady, and ready at all Times to reaſon after a new manner, according to the various Occurrences they met with. A certain Doctor of Divinity does the ſame, if we believe his Adverſary: (p) but above all things he does not forgive him his Variations, and perpetual Contradictions. He ſhews him that he lays down ſome Principles, according as he ſtands in need of 'em; and that as ſoon as they begin to incommode him, he ſubſtitutes ſome others in the room of 'em: and if I may tranſcribe his Expreſſions, he upbraids him with Reaſoning, if one may ſay ſo, from Hand to Mouth, and according to the Paſſion, whoſe Turn it is to command in his Soul: and yet that Doctor is very peremptory; he does magiſterially and readily affirm and deny. He is as bold as the Scepticks were reſerv'd. He ſhould not encroach upon their Rights, but leave them the Priviledge of Reaſoning (a) from Hand to Mouth, which they aſcribe to themſelves in Tully. I ſhall conclude with ſaying, that the Inconſtancy of Humane Opinions and Paſſions is ſo great, that one would think Man is a ſmall Republick which often changes its Magiſtrates.

(G) The ſmalleſt Domeſtick Concerns.] He (b) carried Chickens, Pigs, &c. to ſell them in the Market, and ſwept the Houſe, and cleaned the Goods, juſt as if he had been the Maid of the Houſe. Every thing was indifferent to him; he believed not that one thing was better than another. Τὰ σκεύη τῆς οἰκίας καθαίρων ἀδιαφόρως, domique indifferenter munditiem curabat (c). He was not always the ſame Man, for he happened one Day to be angry with his Siſter; and being told that his Anger was not conſiſtent with the Indolence he profeſt, he anſwered, D'ye think that I will practiſe that Virtue for a Woman? Χολώσας τι περὶ τῆς ἀδελφῆς πρὸς τὸν λαβόμενον εἰπεῖν, ὡς οὐκ ἐν γυναίῳ ἡ ἐπίδειξις τῆς ἀδιαφορίας. Cum ſorori quandoque ſuccenſuiſſet, argueretque illum quiſpiam ut immemorem inſtituti ſui, non, inquit, muliercula documentum erit noſtræ indifferentiæ. Do not fancy that his Meaning was, that he did not renounce Love, it was none of his Thoughts; he meant, that every Subject does not deſerve that a Man ſhould exerciſe his Doctrine againſt Anger. The Cauſe of his Anger was very unworthy of a Philoſopher, and eſpecially of ſuch a Philoſopher as he was: he grew angry with his Siſter becauſe he had been forced to buy the things which ſhe wanted to offer for a Sacrifice; a Friend who had promiſed to get 'em ready, kept not his Word. This we learn from Euſebius. (d) Φιλίστης δὲ τῆς ἀδελφῆς αὐτοῦ θυούσης, ἔπειτα τῶν φίλων τινὸς ὑποσχομένου τὰ πρὸς τὴν θυσίαν, καὶ μὴ παρασχομένου, τοῦ μέντοι Πύῤῥωνος πριαμένου, καὶ ἀγανακτοῦντος, ἐπειδὴ ὁ φίλος ἔλεγεν, ὡς οὐ ποιήσαιτο σύμφωνα τοῖς λόγοις, οὐδ' ἄξια τῆς ἀπαθείας· εἰπεῖν αὐτὸν, ἐν γοῦν γυναικὶ οὐ δεῖ τὴν ἀπόδειξιν αὐτῆς ποιεῖσθαι. καίτοι δικαίως ἂν εἶπεν ὁ φίλος, ὅτι ματαία καὶ ἐν γυναικὶ, καὶ κυνὶ, καὶ πᾶσιν. Cum Philiſta ejus ſoror ſacrificium adornaret, quendam ex amicis, qui res ad illud neceſſarias pollicitus fuerat, promiſſis non ſtetiſſe. Pyrrhonem igitur eos ſumptus facere coactum, graviter id acerbeque cum ferret, ex ſuo illo amico audiiſſe, parum ſe omnino ſuorum ex decretorum præſcripto facere, atque ab omni perturbatione vacuum oſtendere. Tum enimvero Pyrrhonem homini repoſuiſſe, hujus rei fidem in muliercula cauſa fieri non debere. Cui ſane amicus ille ſuus merito reſponderet, in muliere, in cane, in reliquis omnibus inane totum hoc diſputandi genus futurum. In theſe laſt Words the Author made Alluſion to the Anſwer which Pyrrho return'd, when he was jeſted upon for having fled from a Dog which purſued him: It is a difficult thing, ſaid he, to put off Man. (e) Ἀντίγονος ὁ Καρύστιος κατὰ τοὺς αὐτοὺς γενόμενος χρόνους, καὶ ἀναγεγραφὼς αὐτῶν τὸν βίον, φησὶ τὸν Πύῤῥωνα διωκόμενον ὑπὸ κυνὸς, ἀναφυγεῖν ἐπί τι δένδρον· σκωπτόμενον δ' ὑπὸ τῶν παρόντων, εἰπεῖν ὡς χαλεπὸν εἴη τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἐκδῦναι. Antigonus Caryſtius, qui ſub eadem vivebat tempora, quique illorum vitam conſcripſit, Pyrrhonem commemorat, ut ſeſe inſequenti cani eriperet, quandam ad arborem confugiſſe: qua de cauſa cum ab iis, qui aderant, rideretur, ægre admodum hominem exui reſpondiſſe.

(H) A

---

† Don't take this in a ſtrict Senſe; there is no doubt but that he had rather enjoy his Health than be Sick, &c.

‡ Diog. Laert. ub. ſup. n. 63.

(d) Diog. Laert. ub. ſup. n. 63.

(e) Céſarion, ou Entretiens divers p. 21, 22. of the Hague Edition.

(f) Sermone 118.

(h) Diog. Laert. ib. n. 68.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) It is the 146th Verſe of the 6th Book of the Iliads.

(l) Quaſi exinde ſignificetur non hominum modo, perinde ac foliorum naturam caducam, ſed opinionem quoque inconſtans & perinde mutabilis ac minimo vento ſunt arborum folia mobilia. Gaſſend. de Logicæ fine c. 2. p. m. 70.

(m) Diog. Laert. ib. n. 68.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Homer's Odyſſes l. 18. See St. Auguſtin de Civitate Dei l. 5. c. 8.

(p) Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Oct. 1694. p. 72. in the Extract of Mr. Saurin's Book Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu.

(a) Tuſcul. l. 5. fol. 273. D.

(b) Diog. Laert. ib. n. 66.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Ariſtocles, apud Euſeb. Præp. Evang. l. 14. c. 18. p. m. 763.

(e) Id. Ariſtocles ib.

who ſay that he was made Citizen of Athens for having killed (H) a King of Thrace, are groſly miſtaken. I cannot upbraid Moreri (I) with many Faults.

PYRRHUS, Son of Achilles, and Deidamia, Daughter of Lycomedes, King of the Iſle of Scyrus, was born in that Iſland a little while before the Trojan War. He was educated there till Ulyſſes and Phœnix α came to fetch him, and to lead him to that famous Siege after his Father's Death. He went to it notwithſtanding the Tears of his (A) Grand-Father by his Mother's ſide. The Græcians had been told, that they ſhould never take Troy without the Son of Achilles. He was called β Neoptolemus, by reaſon (B) of his great Youth, and Pyrrhus, by reaſon (C) of the Colour of his Hair γ. He ſhewed himſelf worthy of the Blood from which he ſprung; for he was a valiant, brutiſh and fierce Man. His Exploits and good Counſels have been as admirable as Homer δ a long while after, and other Poets were pleaſed to make them. One of his nobleſt Combats was againſt ε Eurypylus, Son of Telephus. He kill'd him, and he was ſo pleaſed with that Victory, that upon that occaſion he inſtituted the ζ Dance which was called Pyrrhick from him. The Dancers were to be armed from Top to Toe. He appeared bolder than any of the reſt, when the Græcians were to get η into the Wooden Horſe; and his great Intrepidity freed them from the Fear they were ſtruck with. The Night that the Town was taken he made a horrible Slaughter θ, and even barbarouſly murthered (D) King Priamus, without any regard to his Old Age, or the Holineſs of the Place where he had taken Sanctuary. With the ſame Barbarity he precipitated from the Top ι of a Tower young Aſtyanax, Hector's Son; and 'twas he who ſacrificed, with his own Hands, Polyxena κ upon the Grave of Achilles. He proved not ſo hard-hearted to Andromache, Widow of the Valiant Hector; he made a ſhift with ſome remains of Beauty he found in her, and made her his Wife μ or Concubine. Authors

(H) A Citizen of Athens, for having killed a King of Thrace.] The Conformity of the Name has occaſioned that Lye. A certain Pytho (f) Diſciple of Plato, was made Citizen of Athens for (g) having killed Cotys King of Thrace. From thence comes the Miſtake of thoſe (h) who ſay, that our Pyrrho committed that Murther, and obtained that Reward for it.

(I) I cannot upbraid Moreri with many Faults.] Five only. I. Theſe Words, Pyrrho pretended that Men do every thing out of Cuſtom, are abſurd. He was not ſo great a Fool as to ſay ſo; he knew very well, that ſome Philoſophers maintained, that there is a natural Difference between Virtue and Vice, and that abundance of People do a thouſand things to conform to the Laws. He ſhould have expreſt himſelf thus. Pyrrho maintained that there was not really any one thing that was this or that, and that the Nature of Things depended upon Laws and Cuſtoms; that is to ſay, That Men by their Laws and Cuſtoms made ſome things to be good, laudable, ill, blameable, &c. Such was his Doctrine. If Diogenes Laertius underſtood it otherwiſe, 'tis his Fault. I ſay ſo, becauſe his Words are not clear enough to make one believe that their Meaning is, that Men by their Laws and Cuſtoms make every thing to be ſo or ſo. (i) Καὶ ὁμοίως ἐπὶ πάντων, μηδὲν εἶναι τῇ ἀληθείᾳ. νόμῳ δὲ καὶ ἔθει πάντα τοὺς ἀνθρώπους πράττειν· οὐ γὰρ μᾶλλον τόδε ἢ τόδε εἶναι ἕκαστον. Eadem ratione & de omnibus, nihil verè eſſe: cæterum lege atque conſuetudine cuncta homines facere. Neque enim eſſe quicquam iſtud potius quam illud. II. I don't know where he found that Pyrrho loved not to be interrupted in his Philoſophical Meditations. Diogenes Laertius does not ſay ſo, tho' he makes him a Lover of Solitude; nay, (k) he ſays, that thoſe who ask'd him Queſtions, were never diſſatisfied with his Anſwers. III. That is but a ſmall Fault if compared with this, Yet 'tis confeſt that he lived fourſcore and ten Years. As if a Man, who loves to be alone, and not to be interrupted in his Meditations, could not live long. Moſt Men, who love Meditation, are extreamly deſirous to go on with it; for the leaſt Interruption breaks the ſeries of their Thoughts, and makes 'em loſe Time: and if a Man deſires to be alone, and is weary of Company, the beſt way to prolong his Life, is to permit him to be alone as long as he will. I conclude therefore that Moreri made uſe of a Yet very ill placed. IV. I don't find that Pyrrho was made Citizen of Athens. That Fault has been tranſcribed out of La Mothe le Vayer (l). V. If that Author had been faithfully tranſcribed by Moreri in another thing, theſe Remarks would be ended already. La Mothe le Vayer ſays (m), that by the Eighth Mood of Suſpenſion, which is that of Relation, the Pyrrhoniſts ſhew, that we judge of things only by Compariſon. Moreri adds to it, the Word Prejudices; The Scepticks, ſays he, pretend that we judge only by Prejudices or by Compariſon. It is no good Disjunction; for the Mood ſpoken of there does not concern Prejudices; but only the Judgments we make of Relative Qualities, ſuch as Heavineſs, Hardneſs, Bigneſs, Smallneſs, &c.

(A) Notwithſtanding the Tears of his Grand-Father by his Mother's ſide.] We find this Particularity in Tully, Chap. 20. of his Book de Amicitia, p. 515. of Grævius's Edition. Rectè etiam, ſays he, præcipi poteſt in amicitiis, ne intemperata quædam violentia (quod perſæpe fit) impediat magnas utilitates amicorum, nec enim (ut ad fabulas redeam) Trojam Neoptolemus capere potuiſſet, ſi Lycomedem, apud quem erat educatus, multis cum lacrymis iter ſuum impedientem, audire voluiſſet. Langius pretends that there is a voluntary or unvoluntary Miſtake in thoſe Words; but he is miſtaken. Here are his Words, p. 515. of Grævius's Edition. Quod de Neoptolemo Lælius ait, omnes de Achille narrant. Itaque vel errat per memoriam Cicero: vel, quod potius credo, de induſtria Lælio, ut illa ætate, Græcanicarum fabularum ignorationem concedit: quod etiam in Catone majore factum videmus; tametſi iſte jam ſenex Græcis litteris ſedulam operam navaverit.

(B) He was called Neoptolemus by reaſon of.] Pauſanias (n) gives another Reaſon for it, but it is a pitiful one; viz. that Phœnix gave him that Name becauſe his Father Achilles was very young when he began to bear Arms.

(C) By reaſon of the Colour of his Hair.] Some Authors ſay (a), that he was named Pyrrhus for another Reaſon, viz. becauſe his Father was called Pyrrha (b), whilſt he wore a Woman's Cloaths in the Court of Lycomedes. That Fact was not very well known to the Grammarians, ſince Tiberius having a mind to puzzle them with ſome hard Queſtions, ask'd 'em (c) amongſt other things, what Name Achilles went by when he was in a Woman's Dreſs.

(D) And even barbarouſly murthered King Priamus.] This is very nobly deſcribed by Virgil:

> (d) Hoc dicens, altaria ad ipſa trementem
> Traxit, & in multo lapſantem ſanguine nati
> Implicuit comam læva, dextraque coruſcum
> Extulit, ac lateri capulo tenus abdidit enſem.
> Hæc finis Priami fatorum: hic exitus illum
> Sorte tulit.

The Altar mentioned in this Place, (e) is that of Jupiter Herceus. 'Tis true, that all Authors did not agree that Priamus was killed there: Some ſay (f) that he was taken out of his Palace by Neoptolemus, and that having been drawn to the Grave of Achilles, he was beheaded, and that his Head was carried upon a Pike all over the Town. Others (g) affirm, that he was taken by force out of the Temple of Jupiter, and that afterwards Pyrrhus having met him at the Gate of his Palace, kill'd him. It ſeems α Sophocl. in Philoct. See alſo Homer Odyſſ. l. 11.

β Euſtath. in Il. 19.

γ Servius in Æn. 2. v. 469.

δ Odyſſ. l. 11. Quint. Calab. l. 7, 8.

ε Quint. Calab. ib.

ζ Heſychius, & Scholiaſtes Pindari in Pyth. Od. 2.

η Homer. Odyſſ. 11.

θ Virgil. Æn. l. 2. v. 500, 550. Quint. Calab. l. 13. Vid. etiam Pauſan l. 10. p. 343.

ι Pauſan. l. 10. p. 342.

κ Euripid. in Hecub. Lycophr. Ovid. Met. l. 13. Seneca in Troad. Hygin. c. 110.

μ Virgil. Æn. l. 3. v. 325. & ibi Servius.

(f) Plut. adverſ. Colotem, circa fin. p. 1126. See alſo de laudando ſeipſo, p. 542. & de gerenda republica p. 816.

(g) Demoſthenes adverſus Ariſtocratem, p. m. 445.

(h) Diocles ſays ſo ap. Diog. Laert. ub. ſup. n. 65.

(i) Diog. Laert. ub. ſup. n. 61. p. 581.

(k) Ibid. n. 64.

(n) Lib. 10. p. 343.

(a) Hygin. c. 97.

(b) Hygin. c. 96. Sidonius Apollin. Carm. 9. v. 137.

(c) Sueton. in Tiber. c. 71. See ſome like Queſtions in Juvenal Sat. 7.

(d) Æn. l. 2.

(e) Eurip. in Troad. Seneca Agamemn. Pauſan. l. 4. p. 12

(f) Apud Servium in Æn. l. 2. v. 506.

(g) Leſches apud Pauſan. l. 1

(l) See the Rem. D. (m) La Mothe le Vayer de la Vertu des Payens, tom. 5. p. 217.

Authors do not agree about the Country that he went to after the Sacking of Troy; some say that he went to take possession of his Father's Kingdom, which was Phthia in ‖ Thessaly; others maintain that he went directly into Epirus §, and that he settled and founded a State there. 'Tis said that Helenus, Priamus's Son, and a good Diviner, one of the Prisoners that fell to him by Lot, advised ✝ him to return into his Country by Land, because of the great Storms which he foresaw the Grecian Fleet would meet with. 'Tis likely enough that Pyrrhus followed his Advice, for we read, that in his way he made War against Harpalicus in Thrace ‖. He married the beautiful Hermione, ¶ Daughter of Menelaus and Helena; but it proved not a happy Marriage. Hermione had no ‡ Children by him, and grew jealous of Andromache, by whom Pyrrhus had a Son. Her Jealousie made her resolve * to kill her Rival, together with her Son: but she met with some Obstacles; and her Design being known, she feared her Husband's Resentment, which made her hearken to Orestes, who proposed to steal her away, to bring her back to her Father, and to marry her. She had been promised to him (E) before she was promised to Pyrrhus. Others say, that Orestes being resolved to revenge himself upon his Rival, had recourse to a more dismal Expedient, than that of taking away his Wife, with whom he lived not very well †, and that he killed him (F) or caused him to be killed in the very Temple of Delphos. It is certain enough that Pyrrhus was killed in it; but it is not so certain, whether (G) he was buried there. He had three Wives, Hermione, by whom he had no Children, Lanassa and Andromache: he had some by the two last. It is not known whether the Kings who have been in possession of Epirus, to the time of Him who shall be the Subject of the following Article, descended from (H) the Sons of Lanassa, or from those of Andromache: Authors are divided about it. They agree only in this, that they descended from our Pyrrhus.

seems that others (h) have said, that Pyrrhus killed him near an Altar of Mercury: thus the learned (i) Meziriac understands these Words of Quintus Calaber, Ἑρμαίῳ πάρ βωμόν. Rhodomannus renders them ad aram Jovis Hermai; but it is very likely that we must read Ἑρκείῳ, Hercai, instead of Ἑρμαίῳ. See the Notes of Dausquejus on that Poet, p. 35.

(E) Had been promised to him before &c.] Ovid says, (k) that Tyndarus, her Grandfather by the Mother's side, had promis'd her to Orestes, during the War of Troy, in the absence of Menelaus, who, during the same time (l) promised her to Pyrrhus. Sophocles, as he is cited by (m) Eustathius, said so in a Tragedy which is not now extant. On the contrary, Euripides (n) says that Hermione was promis'd to Orestes by Menelaus, to prevent her being kill'd by Orestes, as he had kill'd Clytemnestra his own Mother. Therefore that Promise was made eight Years after the Taking of Troy. Sophocles relates the thing differently in another (o) Tragedy; he says, that Menelaus promised Hermione to Orestes, before the Expedition of Troy; and that he promis'd her to Pyrrhus during the Siege. (p) Hyginus follows a particular Opinion, viz. That Menelaus, notwithstanding the Promise he had made to Pyrrhus before Troy, gave his Daughter to Orestes, and then took her away from him to keep his first Promise, when Pyrrhus went to Lacedæmon to put him in mind of it. Here are many different Opinions; but it is a common thing, and we ought not to wonder at it. We should rather wonder how Authors came to place among Facts, the Intrigues of a Tragedy, and relate, as the History of Hermione and Orestes, what a Poet was pleas'd to fancy, in order to fill up his Play with surprising things and Incidents. A Man must have a great deal of Leisure, a Thousand Years hence, if he thought himself obliged not to omit in the History of Cæsar and Pompey, what we read in Scuderi's and Corneille's Tragedies concerning the Circumstances of the Death of those two Illustrious Romans.

(F) And that he kill'd him, or caus'd him to be kill'd.] Here's a Fact attended with the Fictions of Tragick Poets: For those who relate the various Accounts of Writers concerning the unhappy Death of Pyrrhus, do not forget what Euripides (q) says, viz. That Pyrrhus, who was gone to Delphos to upbraid Apollo with the Death of Achilles, and to ask him Satisfaction for it, return'd thither to beg his Pardon for that Insult, and to appease his Anger. Authors have given some other Reasons of that Journey: 1. That Pyrrhus went to Delphos (r) to offer up the Spoils of the Trojans. 2. That he went (s) to know of the Oracle by what means he might get Children by his Wife. 3. That he (t) design'd to plunder the Temple. However, he was kill'd in that Temple by the (u) Command of Apollo, and by a Priest, whose Name was Machareus, Μαχαιρεύς. For so we ought to read in the Scholiast upon Euripides (w), in that Place where the Death of Pyrrhus is mention'd: here is the Passage according to the Vulgar Editions: κὴ ὁρῶν κτ' τὸ χρηςήριον κρέα δὲ ἐπιζῶντας τοὺς Δελφοὺς ἀφαιρεῦντας τὰ κρέα αὐτοῦ. ἑαυτὸν δὲ κτείνει μαχαίρᾳ. (x) Meziriac reads in the beginning ὁρῶν, and at the end, αὐτὸν δὲ κτείνει Μαχαιρεύς: So that instead of saying, that Pyrrhus kill'd himself with his own Hand, we must say, That perceiving that the Delphians, near the place of the Oracle, took away the flesh of his Sacrifice, he took it away from them, and was killed by Machareus. The Scholiast upon Pindar, and (a) Pindar himself mention that Quarrel. But the most common Opinion is, That (b) Orestes was the chief Author of Pyrrhus's Death; whether he put himself at the Head of the Delphians, having made them believe, that they were to prevent the plundering of the Temple; or whether (c) he suborned some Assassins, without being present at it. Virgil says, that Pyrrhus was kill'd by him:

> Ast (d) illum ereptæ magno inflammatus amore
> Conjugis, & scelerum furiis agitatus Orestes, > Excipit incautum patriasque obtruncat ad aras.

Velleius (e) Paterculus, and (f) Hyginus affirm the same thing.

(G) It is not so certain whether he was buried there.] For some Authors maintain, that his Bones were scatter'd upon the Frontiers of Ambracia. (g) Cujus ossa per fines Ambraciæ sparsa sunt quæ est in Epiri regionibus. Ovid is of the same Opinion:

> Nec (h) tua quam Pyrrhi felicius ossa quiescant, > Jacta per Ambracias qua jacuere vias.

Mr. de Boissieu in his Commentary on these two Verses, justly censures Casaubon and Corradus, for having understood 'em of that Pyrrhus, who made War against the Romans; for it is certain, from the Testimony of three (i) Authors, that that Pyrrhus had an honourable Burial. He censures Reineccius too for applying the same Words to another Pyrrhus than the Son of Achilles. Besides, it is most certain, that we find very great Authorities to prove that our Neoptolemus was Interr'd at Delphos. Some (k) say, that his Sepulcher was to be seen in the Grove consecrated to Apollo. Others (l) observe, that he was buried under the Door of the Temple, and that Menelaus caused him to be removed into the Sacred Grove. Pausanias (m) not contented to say, that his Sepulcher was to be seen on the left hand as one goes out of the Temple, adds, That the Delphians made every Day some Funeral Expiation to his Honour. It is true, that they used him for a long time (n) as an Enemy, without paying any Honour to his Memory; for they did not honour him before he appear'd in the heat of the Battle, fighting for them against the Gauls, who endeavour'd to take the Town, and plunder the Temple.

(H) Descended from the Sons of Lanassa.] Justin (p) tells us, that Lanassa, Grand-daughter of Hercules, was stolen away by Pyrrhus, who met her in the Temple of Jupiter Dodonæus. He adds, That Pyrrhus had eight

---

‖ Euripid. in Troad. Dictys l. 6. Homer. Odyss. l. 4.

§ Pausan. l. 1. p. 10. Pindar. Nem. 7. Justin. l. 17.

✝ Servius ub. sup.

‖ See the success of that War in the Art. of Harpalicus, & ap. Hygin. c. 193.

¶ Hygin. c. 123.

‡ Pherecydes apud Schol. Eurip. in Oreste. Pausan. l. 1. p. 10.

* Eurip. in Androm.

† Ovidius Epist. Herm. ad Orestem.

(h) Quint. Calab. l. 13. v. 222.

(i) Upon Ovid's Epistles p. 847.

(k) Epist. Hermion. ad Orest.

(l) Homer. Odyss. 4.

(m) In Odyss. l. 4.

(n) In Oreste.

(o) In Androm.

(p) Cap. 123.

(q) In Androm. Schol. Pind. in Nem. Od. 7. Strabo l. 9.

(r) Pind. Nem. Od. 7.

(s) Pherecydes ap. Schol. Euripid. in Oreste.

(t) Schol. Pind. & Strabo ub. sup. vid. etiam Pausan. l. 10.

(u) Pausan. l. 1. p. 13.

(w) In Orest.

(x) Upon Ovid's Epistles p. 855.

(a) Od. 7. Nem.

(b) Eurip. in Andr.

(c) Dictys l. 6. Justin l. 17. c. 3. Pausan. l. 2. p. 72.

(d) Virg. Æn. l. 3.

(e) Patercul. l. 1. c. 1.

(f) Hygin. c. 123.

(g) Hygin. ib.

(h) Ovid. in Ibin v. 305.

(i) Valer. Maxim. l. 5. c. 1. Plut. in Pyrrho. Auctor. de viris illustrib.

(k) Strabo l. 9.

(l) Schol. Pindar. in Od. 7. Nem.

(m) Pausan. l. 10. p. 341.

(n) Id. l. 1. p. 4.

(o) Lib. 6.

(p) Justin. l. 17. c. 3.

PYRRHUS, King of the Epirotes, ſprung from the (A) preceding, and famous by reaſon of his Wars with the Romans, was one of the (B) greateſt Captains of all Antiquity. He was Son of Æacides and Phthia, Daughter of Menon the Theſſalian. He was expoſed to a violent Perſecution in the Beginning of his Life; for the Moloſſians who had dethroned Æacides, and killed as many of his Friends as they could apprehend, endeavoured to ſeize on his Son, who was ſtill at Nurſe: but ſo much diligence was uſed to ſave him, that notwithſtanding thoſe Purſuits, he was carried into Illyricum to King Glaucias, who took great care of his Education, and reſtored him to his Kingdom, being twelve Years of Age. Five Years after there happened a new Inſurrection, whereby Pyrrhus loſt his Kingdom. He retired to his Brother-in-Law † Demetrius. He was (C) with him at the memorable Battle of Ipſus ‡, where he gave great proofs of his Courage. The Peace being made between Demetrius, and Ptolemy, King of Egypt, Pyrrhus was ſent an Hoſtage to the Court of the latter, where he became ſo conſiderable, that he married Antigone, whom Berenice had by her firſt Huſband, before ſhe married Ptolemy. By the help of that Marriage, he got the Troops and Money he wanted, to recover his Kingdom. He divided it with the Uſurper *; but that Partition did not laſt long. Pyrrhus having diſcovered that that Man deſign'd to poyſon him, prevented him; for having invited him to Dinner, he killed him in cold Blood. Not long after he began to think of ſatisfying his Ambition, by the Conqueſt of Macedonia. The Miſ-underſtanding of the Sons of Caſſander afforded him an Occaſion for it. Alexander demanded ſome Succours of him againſt Antipater his Eldeſt Brother. He obtained it; but he paid ſeveral Provinces for it. Demetrius, of whom Alexander had alſo demanded ſome Succours, came to him very late, and yet too ſoon; for he killed Alexander to prevent him, and got himſelf proclaimed King of Macedonia. This occaſioned a War between him and Pyrrhus, in which there was a Battle fought, and Pyrrhus, who behaved himſelf with a wonderful Bravery, got the Victory. The Irruption he made afterwards into Macedonia, might have been very happy, had he not been obliged to retire with great Precipitation, and the Loſs of part of his Army. Notwithſtanding the Peace which was made ſoon after, he encouraged (D) the Succeſſors of Alexander, who deſign'd to attack Demetrius. The Macedonians forſook Demetrius, and gave up themſelves to Pyrrhus, who finding himſelf

† He had married Deidamia, Pyrrhus's Siſter.

‡ In the Year of Rome 451. according to Calviſius.

* His Name was Neoptolemus.

---

eight Children by her, and that his Son Pialis was his Succeſſor. Meziriac (q) maintains againſt him, from the Teſtimony of Plutarch, that Lanaſſa was Grand-daughter of Hyllus; but Hyllus was the Son of Hercules. On the other ſide, he obſerves, that, according to Pauſanias, (r) he who ſucceeded Pyrrhus was called Pielus, and was Andromache's Son.

(A) Sprung from the preceding.] See the laſt Remark of the foregoing Article, and the Remark E of the Article of Andromache. Lloyd and Hofman have adopted, for want of attention, this Overſight of Charles Stephen's, That Pyrrhus deſcended from Achilles, by his Mother's Side, and from Hercules, by his Father's Side: This was ſaid of Alexander the Great, not of Pyrrhus. They ſhould have ſaid quite the contrary, (ſ) as Aurelius Victor did.

(B) One of the greateſt Captains of all Antiquity.] He was ſo valiant a Man, that thoſe who ſaw him fight with ſo much Bravery, ſaid, That Alexander was revived in him; and that whereas other Kings were the Picture of that Conqueror, only by their Purple, their Life-Guards, the bending of their Necks, and the loud Tone of their Voice, Pyrrhus did repreſent him by his Valour and Noble Exploits. He had compoſed ſome Books (t) concerning the Art of War, which were an undeniable Proof of his Ability in Incamping, and Drawing up an Army in order of Battle, &c. and (v) he invented the Art of teaching that Diſcipline, by a kind of Game at Cheſs. Therefore he was early (w) look'd upon as one who would prove the greateſt Captain of his Age, if he lived. Annibal gave him the upperhand of all the greateſt Captains, when he told Scipio, that Pyrrhus was the Firſt of all, he (Scipio) the Second, and Himſelf the Third (x). But it muſt be confeſs'd, that Livy relates the Matter quite otherwiſe: He ſays, That Annibal having given the firſt place to Alexander, and the ſecond to Pyrrhus, aſcribed the third to himſelf. What would you ſay, ſaid Scipio to him, if you had overcame me? If I had, anſwered Annibal, I ſhould think myſelf to be above Alexander, above Pyrrhus, and above all the Captains of the World. I ſhall ſet down the Words of Livy, that one may know from whence he had this. (y) Claudius ſecutus Græcos Acilianos libros, P. Africanum in ea fuiſſe legatione tradit: eumque Epheſi collocutum cum Annibale. Et ſermonem etiam unum refert, quo quærenti Africano, quem fuiſſe maximum imperatorem Annibal crederet, reſpondiſſe, Alexandrum Macedonum regem; quod parvâ manu innumerabiles exercitus fudiſſet, quodque ultimas oras, quas viſere ſupra ſpem humanam eſſet, peragraſſet. Quærenti deinde, quem ſecundum poneret; Pyrrhum dixiſſe. . . . . Exſequenti, quem tertium duceret; haud dubiè ſemetipſum dixiſſe. Tum riſum obortum Scipioni & ſubjeciſſe. Quidnam tu diceres, ſi me viciſſes? Tum me verò, inquit, & ante Alexandrum, & ante Pyrrhum, & ante omnes alios imperatores eſſe. Et perplexum Punico aſtu reſponſum, & improviſum aſſentationis genus Scipionem moviſſe: quod è grege ſe imperatorum velut ineſtimabilem ſecreviſſet. Here follow the Reaſons for which Annibal eſteem'd Pyrrhus: (z) Caſtra metari primum docuiſſe, ad hoc neminem elegantius loca cepiſſe, præſidia diſpoſuiſſe, artem etiam conciliandi ſibi homines eum habuiſſe, ut Italicæ gentes regis externi, quam populi Romani tamdiu principis in ea terra, imperium eſſe mallent. Add to this that Juſtin ſays, That beſides his Military Virtues he was a Man of great Probity, and lived a very Holy Life. (aa) Satis conſtans inter omnes auctores fama eſt, nullum nec ejus, nec ſuperioris ætatis regem comparandum Pyrrho fuiſſe; raroque non inter reges tantum, verum etiam inter illuſtres viros, aut vitæ ſanctioris, aut juſtitiæ probatioris viſum fuiſſe: ſcientiam certe rei militaris in illo viro tantam fuiſſe, ut cum Lyſimacho, Demetrio, Antigono, tantis regibus, bella gerens, invictus ſemper fuerit Illyriorum quoque, Siculorum, Romanorumque, & Carthaginienſium bellis, nunquam inferior, pleramque etiam victor extiterit, qui patriam certe ſuam anguſtam, ignobilemque, fama rerum geſtarum, & claritate nominis ſui, toto orbe illuſtrem reddiderit. Cicero (bb) praiſes him alſo for his great Probity. We ſhall ſee in the Remark L, that he knew very well how to make uſe of thoſe Intrigues, the Art whereof is one of the beſt Parts of a Great Captain.

(C) Was with him.] Moreri ſays, That at the Battle of Ipſus, Victory favour'd the Party of Pyrrhus, againſt Antigonus and Demetrius. There is nothing of Truth in all this; for the Party of Pyrrhus was, at that time, the ſame with that of Antigonus and Demetrius; or, to ſpeak more exactly, Pyrrhus was in that Battle only in the Quality of an Adventurer, or a Volunteer of Demetrius's Party. Hofman has committed the ſame Fault.

(D) The Succeſſors of Alexander, who deſign'd.] Pyrrhus (a) did eaſily yield to the Temptation, when (q) Upon Ovid's Epiſtles p. 851.

(r) Lib. 1.

(ſ) Pyrrhus rex Epeirotarum paterno genere ab Achille, materno ab Hercule oriundus.

(t) See Tully Ep. Fam. 25. l. 9.

(v) Pyrrhus peritiſſimus ſtrategematon fuit, primuſque quemadmodum ea diſciplina per calculos in tabula traderetur oſtendit. Donat. in Terent. Eun. act. 4. ſc. 7.

(w) Antigonus ſaid it. Plut. in vit. Pyrrhi p. 387.

(x) Plut. ib.

(y) Tit. Liv. l. 35. p. m. 652.

(z) Id. ib. See alſo Ammian. Marcel. l. 24. init.

(aa) Juſtin. l. 25. ſub. fin. p. m. 452, 453.

(bb) Cum duobus ducibus de imperio in Italia decertatum, Pyrrho & Annibale. Ab altero, propter probitatem ejus non nimis alienos animos habemus, alterum propter crudelitatem ſemper hæc civitas oderit. Cicero de amicitia, c. 8.

(a) See Plutarch ub. infr.

ſelf by that means Maſter of Macedonia, did notwithſtanding divide it with Lyſimachus. He loſt his Half in the ſame manner he had got the Whole; for the Macedonians forſook him to joyn with Lyſimachus, who was their Country-man. Thus Pyrrhus was reduced to his Patrimony. He ſtaid not long in it; for he was a reſtleſs Man, who knew not how to ſpend his Time, without (E) attacking his Neighbours, or being attacked by them: ſo he willingly hearkened to the Propoſals (F) of the Tarentines, who deſired him to come over into Italy, to be their General againſt the Romans. Cineas of Theſſaly, a Diſciple of Demoſthenes, endeavoured to diſſuade Pyrrhus from that Expedition; but it was to no purpoſe, Sic erat in fatis. That Prince went † over therefore into Italy, with very good Troops, and becauſe the Romans ſaved him part of the way, he advanced as far as Heraclea (G) towards the River Siris, without ſtaying for all the Troops of the Allies, and offered his Mediation to the Conſul Lævinus, who anſwered him, that the Romans would have none of his Arbitration, and were not afraid of having him for their Enemy. He went to take a view of the Roman Army, and ſaid, that thoſe Barbarians (H) had nothing of Barbarity in their manner of Encamping. There was a Battle fought not long after, in which Pyrrhus was in great danger of being kill'd, and the Fight proved doubtful for a conſiderable time; for they gave Ground ſeven times on both ſides, but at laſt the Epirots got the Victory, becauſe (I) of the Elephants, whoſe Smell frighted the Roman Horſes. The conſequences of this Victory proved very conſiderable, when the Heads of the Confederacy repreſented to him, that he took not a prudent Courſe. He had a mind to obſerve the Treaty of Peace whilſt Demetrius would be ingaged in a great War: whereby he would have loſt the occaſion of ſucceeding in his Deſign, and his Neighbour might have had time enough to expect a favourable opportunity for himſelf. Why, ſaid they to Pyrrhus, had you not rather conquer Macedonia upon a Prince who cannot defend it, by reaſon of the great number of Enemies who will attack him, than expoſe your ſelf to the trouble of defending your own Country againſt him, when he has made a Treaty of Peace? They did alſo repreſent to him, how he had been wrong'd by Demetrius, who had raviſhed his Wife, and taken the Iſle of Corcyra from him. In order to underſtand this, we muſt know that Lanaſſa, Daughter of Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuſa, brought that Iſland to Pyrrhus for her Portion; but perceiving that her Husband ſhewed more kindneſs to his other Wives than to herſelf, ſhe looked for another Husband: and becauſe Demetrius was accounted a Prince more eaſily to be induced to a new Marriage than any other, ſhe propoſed to him to come and meet her in the Iſle of Corcyra, whither ſhe had retired. He did it, and married her, and left a Garriſon in the Iſland (b). Thoſe Reaſons were more than ſufficient to move ſo ambitious a Prince as Pyrrhus was, not to obſerve a Treaty of Peace. I ſhall add by the bye, that he had by Antigone, a Son called Ptolemy, who was killed (c) by the Lacedæmonians, and by Lanaſſa he had Alexander, who ſucceeded him, and by Bircenna, Helenus (d) of whom I ſhall ſpeak in the Remark P. I ſhall ſpeak of his Daughters in the next Article.

† In the Year of Rome 473, the laſt of the 124th Olympiad.

(b) Taken from Plutarch in vit. Pyrrhi p. 388, 389.

(c) See the Rem. B. in the Art. Cleonymus.

(d) Plut. in vit. Pyrrhi: but Juſtin. l. 23. c. 3. ſays, that Helenus was Son of the Daughter of Agathocles.

(E) Without attacking his Neigbours, or being attacked by them.] Pyrrhus was a Man of an exorbitant Ambition, and of a ſtirring and reſtleſs Spirit. Plutarch (e) compares him with Achilles, ——— Who (f) languiſhed there,

When left alone, deſiring Noiſe and War.

He underſtood War (g) to admiration; he executed his Deſigns with an incomparable Courage and Reſolution: but he was much fitter to Conquer than to preſerve what he had conquered; becauſe, at the very ſame time that he made new Conqueſts, he fram'd vaſt Deſigns, and fill'd his Mind with new hopes, which kept him from thinking by what means he might preſerve what he had acquired. Ut (h) ad devincenda regna invictus habebatur, ita devictis acquiſitiſque celeriter carebat. Tanto melius ſtudebat acquirere imperia quam retinere. Antigonus compared him with a Gameſter, who has a fair Game to play, but knows not how to make an advantage of it. The ſame thing was ſaid of Annibal; (i) Non omnia nimirum eidem Dii dederunt; vincere ſcis Annibal, victoria uti neſcis. It is not an unuſual Fault: Our Age affords us ſeveral Examples of Generals, who knew not how to make an Advantage of their Victories. Things are directed by God in that manner, leſt a Nation be too much oppreſt at one time. One might quote a thouſand Sayings like theſe two. (k) Non minor eſt virtus quàm quærere parta tueri. (l) Parari ſingula acquirendo facilius poſſunt, quàm univerſa teneri.

(e) Ub. ſup. p. 390.

(f) Hom. Iliad. l. 1. v. 491. Φθινύθεσκε φίλον κῆρ Αὖθι μένων, ποθέεσκε δ' ἀϋτήν τε πτόλεμόν τε.

Mace- bat um cor lic ma- ens, de- derabat tem amo- mque gnam- e.

) Plut. 400.

) Juſt. 25. c. 4.

) Livy l. See alſo rus l. c. 6.

) Ovid. Arte andi l. v. 13.

) Livy 7. See us l. c. 17.

(F) He willingly hearkened to the Propoſals of the Tarentines.] That People fell out with the Romans without a Cauſe, and afterwards, tho' (m) they were inferiour to them, they could never reſolve to make a Peace with them. A certain ſort of Men called Demagogues, put all things in a Combuſtion by their Harangues, and ſtirred up every Body to take up Arms, ſo far as to move the People to call for a Foreign Prince, rather than make a Peace. What was the Conſequence of all this? They were forced to ſubmit to the Roman Yoak ſooner than they would have done otherwiſe.

I ſhall obſerve, that the Deputies of the Tarentines repreſented to Pyrrhus the Service they had done him in the War againſt the Corcyreans, and added, that Italy was a finer Country than Greece. But obſerve eſpecially, that that Prince flattered himſelf with a good Succeſs, conſidering that he was ſprung from Achilles, and that the Romans were a Trojan Colony (n). We can never too much reflect on the Weakneſs and fooliſh Superſtition of Great Men.

(m) Μήτε φέρειν τ̀ πόλεμον δυνάμενοι, μήτε διὰ θρασύτητα ϗ μοχθηρίαν δημαγωγῶν. Pares cùm eis armis non eſſent, neque poſſent ea ob ferociam & pravitatem concionatorum ſuorum deponere. Plut. in Pyrrho p. 390.

(n) Pauſan. l. 1. c. 12.

(G) Near Heraclea towards the River Siris.] Florus (o) committed a Fault in Geography, ſaying: Apud Heracleam & Campaniæ fluvium Lirim, Lævino Conſule, prima pugna. Salmaſius in his Notes upon that Author, ſhews very well, that Heraclea was not in Campania, and that Florus has confounded the River Liris with the River Siris. The former is in Campania, and not the latter: but becauſe it was certain that the firſt Battle was fought near Heraclea, they who confounded thoſe two Rivers, placed Heraclea in Campania. See Cluverius, Chap. 14. of the 4th Book of his Italia antiqua. He reads in Florus, Apud Heracleam & Lucaniæ fluvium Sirim, &c.

(o) Flor. l. 1. c. 18.

(H) That thoſe Barbarians had nothing of Barbarity.] Aurelius Victor makes him ſay a thing on this occaſion, in which there is no Senſe, becauſe it has been removed out of its place. Viſo, ſays he, Lævini exercitu eandem ſibi ait adverſus Romanos, quam Herculi adverſus hydram, fuiſſe fortunam. According to Plutarch, (a) Cineas made uſe of that Compariſon, when he ſaw how eaſily the Romans had encreaſed their Army after the firſt Battle, and what a Multitude of Inhabitants remained in Rome, after all thoſe new Levies. It was then very proper to remember the Heads of the Hydra; but it had been an abſurd thing to think of it before the firſt Battle. Now becauſe Authors ſeem to have ſworn never to agree in their Relations, Florus aſcribes that very Thought to Pyrrhus himſelf. (b) Video me planè Herculis ſidere procreatum, cui quaſi ab angue Lernæo tot cæſa hoſtium capita de ſanguine ſuo renaſcantur.

(a) Plut. in Pyrrho p. 395.

(b) Flor. ibid.

(I) Becauſe of the Elephants.] The Romans called (c) 'em Boves Lucas, becauſe, as 'tis reported, the Romans ſaw them for the firſt time in Lucania, in the time of Pyrrhus's War. Pliny ſays that this happened in the Year 472, and he obſerves that ſome were ſeen at Rome ſeven Years after at a Triumph. He ſeems thereby to ſuppoſe, that that War laſted ſeven Years, and according to Pliny it ended in the Year 479. Plutarch ſays, that Pyrrhus returned into his Country ſix Years after his Departure. According to the Supputation of Calviſius, as you

(c) Plin. l. 8. c. 6. Varro de Ling. Lat. l. 6.

conſiderable, tho' Pyrrhus had loſt a great many brave Men, and many good Officers. He remained Maſter of the Field, and advanced within 36 † Miles of Rome: Which did not alter in the leaſt the Conſtancy and Reſolution of the Romans, nor ſo much as move them to take the Command from Lævinus, tho' many People complained (K) of his Conduct. Pyrrhus being deſirous to make a Peace, ſent (L) Cineas to * Rome. The Eloquence and inſinuating Ways of that Ambaſſador had in ſome meaſure prevailed upon the Senate. But Appius Claudius, who, by reaſon of his great Age and want of Sight, had quite laid aſide the Care of Publick Affairs, was carried to the Aſſembly, and made a Speech, which moved the Senate to declare to Cineas, that if Pyrrhus deſired the Friendſhip of the Roman People, he muſt firſt draw his Forces out of Italy, and then they would treat with him. The Conſul Fabricius was leſs unfortunate than Lævinus, and did an Action which was as good as a Victory, with reſpect to the true Glory of a Nation; for he let β Pyrrhus know that his Phyſician offered to Poyſon him. The Battle ‡ fought near Aſculum, was very Bloody. Some Hiſtorians ſay that the Epirots won it; others maintain that it (M) was doubtful, and that the Retreat was ſounded on both Sides. Pyrrhus's Army was ſo much leſſened, that he anſwered thoſe who came to Congratulate him, We are undone, if we get another Victory. He was therefore very well pleaſed to have a pretence to carry his Arms elſewhere, that is to ſay, to go over ⸸ into Sicily, from whence Ambaſſadors had been ſent to him to come to their Aſſiſtance, and to free that Iſland from the Yoke of the Carthaginians, and ſeveral other petty Tyrants. That Expedition was attended with a very good Succeſs; but thoſe Iſlanders, whoſe Republican Spirit did not ſuit with Pyrrhus's Humour, could not endure that he ſhould not treat 'em as kindly and civilly as he did in the Beginning: ſo that the ſame Spirit, which moved them to have recourſe to his Protection, made 'em ſoon look for other Maſters. In this difficult Juncture, he received very ſeaſonably ſome Letters from the Tarentines, who acquainted him that they ſtood in great need of his Aſſiſtance, ſo that he had a fair Pretence of Boaſting, that he was not forced to leave Sicily, but that he went to ſuccour ſome other Allies. He had much ado to get into Italy, the Carthaginians deſtroyed his Fleet, and the Mamertines did very much annoy his Troops after their landing. It was then † that Pyrrhus, tho' wounded in the Head, fell with ſuch a Fury upon a Barba-† Eutropius reckons but 18 Miles, Florus in. Victor primo prælio Pyrrhus, ſays he, l. 1. c. 18. totam trementem Campaniam, Lirim Fregellaſque populatus, prope captam urbem à Præneſtina arce proſpexit, & viceſimo lapide oculos trepidæ civitatis fumo ac pulvere implevit.

* In the Year of Rome 474

β See the Rem. D in the Art. Fabricius.

‡ In the Year of Rome 475.

⸸ In the Year of Rome 475.

† In the Year of Rome 478.

may ſee in the Margin, that War began in the Year 473, and ended in the Year 478. But Father Labbe places the Beginning of it in the Year 474, and the End in the Year 480. Is it not a ſad thing, that Authors ſhould not agree about Matters of that Importance? To return to the Elephants, they proved both uſeful and miſchievous to Pyrrhus, they did him good Service in the firſt Battle: but they were not much feared in the ſecond; one (d) of 'em was wounded, whereby it appeared that they were not Immortal: in the third Fight they cauſed a great Diſorder among Pyrrhus's Troops. Eadem feræ, ſays Florus, quæ primam victoriam abſtulerant, ſecundam parem fecerant, tertiam ſine controverſia tradidere. That Hiſtorian knew not that ſome few Lines before he had ſaid, that Pyrrhus was quite overcome in the ſecond Battle, which he confirms before he ends his Chapter. He had ſaid juſt before, that the Romans did not leave off killing till the Night put a ſtop to it, and that Pyrrhus was the laſt of thoſe who fled; and ſince he affirms in the Recapitulation of his Narrative, that the King's Camp was plundered twice, bis exuto caſtris, he muſt needs mean that the firſt plundering happened in the ſecond Battle. What was therefore his meaning, when he ſaid ſecundam parem fecerant?

(K) Many People complained of the Conduct of Lævinus.] Fabricius ſaid (e), that the Loſs was not to be aſcribed to the Roman Soldiers, but to their General, and that the Epirots had not overcome the Romans, but that Pyrrhus had overcome the Conſul Lævinus. Pyrrhus had already beſtowed this Encomium upon himſelf; for he cried out, Oh how eaſie it would be for Pyrrhus to conquer the World, if the Romans were his Soldiers, or for the Romans, if Pyrrhus was their King! (f) O quam facile erat orbis imperium occupare aut mihi Romanis militibus, aut me rege Romanis?

(L) Sent Cineas to Rome.] Pyrrhus's Courage and Bravery were ſo great, that one would think he ſcorned to be beholden to any thing beſides his Sword: but he had too much Experience to have ſuch Thoughts; for the greateſt Warriours have moſt times (g) made uſe of Intrigues and Negociations. Pyrrhus uſed to ſend Cineas before him, that he might prepare his way, and remove difficulties. Cineas made out by his Eloquence the Truth of Euripides's Saying (h), that any thing that may be done with the Sword, may be done likewiſe with Words. Pyrrhus confeſt, that he had got more Towns by the fine Speeches of Cineas (i), than by his Arms. Methinks Cicero is not juſt enough to Pyrrhus, becauſe he does not except him from thoſe who were involved (k) under this hard Sentence of the Poet Ennius, Semper fuit ſtolidum genus Æacidarum, belli potentes ſunt magis quam ſapientipotentes: he only believes that that Prince underſtood the Ambiguity of this Oracle, Aio te Æacida Romanos vincere poſſe. I ſhall obſerve by the by, that Cicero alledges four Reaſons to prove that this Oracle was invented by Ennius: 1. The Grecians never ſaid any thing of it: 2. Apollo never anſwered in Latin: 3. He had ceaſed to anſwer in Verſes in the Time of Pyrrhus: 4. That Prince was too ſharp-ſighted not to perceive the Illuſion of it. But if he ſhould be anſwered, that Ennius rendred in a Latin Verſe, an Anſwer which was given in Greek Proſe, it would very much weaken his Arguments.

(M) That it was doubtful.] It is not an Invention of our Age for thoſe that are worſted to have recourſe (l) to this ſhift out of Vanity, Shame, or Policy; tho' perhaps that ſort of Unſincerity is now more in vogue than formerly. The Romans did not deny that Pyrrhus won the firſt Battle, but ſome of their Hiſtorians have ſaid that the Advantage was equal in the ſecond, and others, that (m) Pyrrhus was defeated. Plutarch quotes two Authors, one of whom ſays that the Romans loſt about 15000 Men in the firſt Battle, and Pyrrhus 13000; the other ſays, that the Romans loſt ſeven thouſand Men, and Pyrrhus near four thouſand. As to the ſecond Battle, the one ſays that the Romans loſt ſix thouſand Men, and Pyrrhus 3505, as it appeared from the Records of that Prince; the other ſays in general, that 15 thouſand Men fell on both Sides. From whence it appears that Moreri ſhould not have ſaid, that the Loſs of the Romans in the two firſt Battles, was leſs than that of the Epirots. He is miſtaken alſo as to the Time to which he applies that Reflection of Pyrrhus, We are undone, if we get another Victory: that Reflection was made after the ſecond Battle. To conclude, the two Authors mention'd by Plutarch do very much differ from Eutropius, who ſays that the Romans had all the Advantage of that Day. Pyrrhus, ſays he, vulneratus eſt, elephanti interfecti, viginti millia cæſa hoſtium, & ex Romanis tantum quinque millia. Pyrrhus Tarentum fugatus. Frontinus (n) makes the Loſs amount to the ſame number of Men.

(N) He

(d) Caius Minucius quartæ legionis haſtatus unius proboſcide abſciſſa, mori poſſe belluas oſtenderat. Florus l. 1. c. 18.

(e) Plut. in Pyrrho p. 394.

(f) Flor. l. 1. c. 18.

(g) See the Rem. B. in the Art. Attila.

(h) Ὅτι πᾶν ἐξαιρεῖ λόγος ὃ καὶ σίδηρος πολεμίων δράσειεν ἄν. Omne id expugnare verba compta ferrum quod minax poſſit. Plut. in Pyrrho p. 391. B.

(i) Plut. ib.

(k) Cicero de Divinat. l. 2.

(l) See the Rem. F in the Art. Fabricius.

(m) See Florus's Contradiction in the Rem. I.

(n) Stratag. l. 2. c. 3.

Barbarian, who had challenged him, that he (N) cut his Body aſunder with a Blow he ſtruck on his Head with a Hanger. As ſoon as he came to Tarentum, he haſtened his March againſt the Romans and loſt a Battle * near Beneventum: after which he reſolved to return into his Country, where ſo many Viciſſitudes of Fortune that he went through, could not teach him to be quiet. He engaged in ſeveral new Expeditions. He ſucceeded in that of Macedonia; he beat the Army of Antigonus, Son of Demetrius, and took from him the beſt part of his Kingdom. Afterwards he made a War againſt the Lacedemonians, at the Sollicitation of Cleonymus γ, who was diſcontented becauſe he reigned not in Sparta: but he was ſo vigorouſly repulſed by them, that he was forced to reſt contented with waſting the Country, and taking Winter Quarters in it. In the mean while Ariſtias perſuaded him to go to Argos, where a Faction had lately broke out between the ſame Ariſtias and Ariſtippus. Antigonus came to the Aſſiſtance of the latter. Tho' Pyrrhus was introduced into the City by Ariſtias, he could not make himſelf Maſter of it; he was obliged to fight in the Streets with the Inhabitants and the Troops of Antigonus, and there he died δ, being wounded in the Head with a (O) Tile. Antigonus (P) treated him very generouſly after his Death. Very ſtrange Things (Q) have been reported of Pyrrhus; as for Example, that he cured the Spleen with the Touch of his Right Foot, and that his Great Toe had a Divine Virtue ‡.

PYRRHUS, King of Epirus, Grand-Son to the former, ſucceeded his Father Alexander, and was at firſt under the Tuition of his Mother Olympias. During his Minority, the Ætolians were ſo unjuſt as to undertake to deprive him of part of Acarnania, viz. that which fell to the Share of his Father, in the Partition of a Conqueſt which he had made with 'em. Olympias had recourſe to Demetrius King of Macedonia; and the better to ingage him to ſuccour her, ſhe gave him in Marriage her Daughter Phthia. The Hiſtorian ǂ ſtops here, without acquainting us with any other Conſequences of the Deſign of the Ætolians, except the Irruption which they made into the Frontiers of Epirus in the Time of Ptolemy, Brother and Succeſſor of our Pyrrhus. There muſt be there a Chaſm, for undoubtedly ſome Years paſſed between the Minority and Death of Pyrrhus. However, the Princeſs Olympias made uſe of too violent a Remedy, to cure her Son of his Love;

(N) He cut his Body aſunder.] This is one of the Feats of our ancient Paladins, who cut aſunder the moſt daring Giants to the very Saddle-bow. It is certain that Plutarch has related ſome Actions of Pyrrhus, which look rather like the Actions of a Romantick, than of a real Hero: he did well to fortifie himſelf with the Authority of Homer, (a) who has obſerved ſomewhere, that of all Virtues, Bravery only is ſubject to Fanatical Tranſports, and Fits of Frenzy. Τῶν ἀρετῶν μόνην τὴν ἀνδρείαν φορὰς πολλάκις ἐνθουσιώδεις καὶ μανικὰς δεχομένην. Fortitudinem unam identidem lymphatyco & phanatico motu ferri. The Northern Nations in the time of Paganiſm, believed that the God Odinus who preſided over the War, inſpired Men with ſo great a Fury, that one of the weakeſt was able to fight ten Men. Horum primarius Deus erat Odinus, qui res bellicas dirigere credebatur, furoremque hominibus, quem Berſerkicum vocabant, immittere, quo qui correptus erat, vel decem aliis poterat obſiſtere, utut infirmus extra raptum ac debilis (b).

There is in Plutarch another Paſſage, which it will not be improper to ſet down here: (†) "Not "only in Poetry, (as Plato very well obſerves) he "that is Inſpired by the Muſes, and as it were poſ"ſeſſed by a Poetical Fury, will make him, who is "otherwiſe a Maſter of his Trade, and an exact "Critick in Poetry, appear Ridiculous: But alſo in "Fighting, thoſe who are Elevated and Inſpired "with a Noble Rage, and a Reſolution (*) and "Courage above the common Pitch, become Invin"cible, and are not to be withſtood. And this is "that Warlike Fury which the Gods, as Homer will "have it, infuſe into Men of Honour,

"He ſpoke——And every Word new Strength Inſpir'd.
"And again
"This more than Humane Rage is from the Gods.

(O) With a Tile.] 'Twas a Woman, who from her Windows threw that Tile at the King's Head. The Argivi, to make a wonderful thing of that Accident, or to keep up the Credulity of the People, publiſhed that Ceres had done it, having put on a Woman's Shape. The Poet Leuceas failed not to inſert that Tradition in his Hiſtory of the Argivi (c).

(P) Antigonus treated him generouſly.] Pyrrhus's Head being cut off, came into the Hands of Alcyoneus, who carried it to his Father Antigonus. The latter having known it, cudgelled his Son for it, called him a cruel and barbarous Man, cover'd his Face and wept. Afterwards he cauſed the Head and the reſt of Pyrrhus's Body to be honourably Interr'd. Alcyoneus learn'd better Manners, for having found Helenus, Son of Pyrrhus, he made much of him, and carried him to Antigonus. That Prince praiſed that Action, and told his Son that it had been more acceptable to him, if he had taken from Helenus the ſorry Cloak he had on. Afterwards he ſhewed a great deal of Kindneſs to Helenus, and ſent him well equipp'd into Epirus (d).

(Q) Very ſtrange things have been reported of Pyrrhus.] When he was to cure any Body of the Spleen, he prepared himſelf for it by ſacrificing a white Cock; and then the ſick Perſon lay upon the Ground, and Pyrrhus preſt the Spleen gently with his Foot. He was always willing to cure the pooreſt ſort of People. He was preſented with a Cock after he had performed his Sacrifice, and that Preſent was very acceptable to him. His upper Gum was a continued Bone, with ſome Lines in it, which mark'd the number of his Teeth. The Divine Virtue of the Great Toe of his Right Foot appeared when his Corps was burnt, for that Toe was found entire. This is what we find in Plutarch (e). We read in Pliny (f), that the ſame Toe had the Gift of Healing, and that having not been damaged by the Flames, it was buried by itſelf in a Temple. It was without doubt honoured as a Holy Relick: and can we now object againſt the Heathens, that they had no Kings like our Chriſtian Princes, who cure the Jaundice and the King's Evil? Now becauſe I have promiſed elſewhere, to ſpeak in this Place of a Falſity which concerns Achilles, I ſhall ſet it down here. Camerarius (h) having ſaid that Pyrrhus's Great Toe had a Divine Virtue, and that it was found intire in the Flames which had conſumed the reſt of the Body, adds immediately after, that Homer affirms the ſame thing concerning Achilles. Caſpar à Reies ſays more than once, but always in general (i), that Pyrrhus's Finger cured thoſe that were ſick of the Spleen; to which he adds in one place, (k) that Homer writes almoſt the ſame thing of Achilles. He was deceived by Camerarius. I would fain know who deceived the latter. Homer ſays no ſuch thing, and I can ſcarce believe that any of the Ancients mentioned it. That Toe of Pyrrhus puts me in Mind of a Story of the Rabbins. It is mention'd by Agrippa. They ſay that there is in the Body of Man a little Bone called Luz, which cannot be broken nor burnt, out of which our Bodies ſhall grow up again in the Time of the Reſurrection, as a Plant grows up again out of its Seed. (l) Eſt in hu-

---

* In 478.

α In 481.

γ See the Article of Cleonymus.

δ In 480 according to Calviſius, or 482 according to F. Labbe.

‡ Taken from Plut. in the Life of Pyrrhus.

ǂ Juſt. l. 28. c. 1. & ſeq.

(a) In vit. Pyrrhi p. 398.

(b) See the Journal of Leipſick 1690. p. 3. in the Abſtract of a Book of Thomas Bartholinus, intitled Antiquitatum Danicarum de cauſis contemtæ à Danis adhuc Gentilibus mortis.

(†) Plut. de Virtute Morali towards the end. p. 452.

(*) Περὶ τὰς μάχας τὸ παθητικὸν καὶ τὸ ἐνθουσιῶδες, ἀνυπόστατον δεῖ καὶ ἀήττητον· ὃ καὶ τοὺς θεοὺς Ὅμηρος ἐμποιεῖν φησι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις (ὡς εἰπὼν ἔμπνευσε μένος μέγα ποιμένι λαῶν. καὶ, οὐχ ὅγ' ἄνευθε θεοῦ τάδε μαίνεται.) In præliis etiam animo Concitati ac furore correpti ſubſiſti ſuperarique nequeunt: qualem inſtinctum Homerus ait a diis homini inſeri. Sic ait atque duci per magna flamina vires inſpirat: & furium non abſque inſtinctu furit hic ita inſanus.

(c) Pauſan. l. 1. p. 12, 13.

(d) Ex Plutarcho ſub fin. vit. Pyrrhi. See alſo Juſtin. l. 25. c. 4. Val. Max l. 5. c. 1.

(e) Pyrrho p. 384.

(f) Lib. 7. c. 2.

(h) Horar. ſucciſ. Cent. 3. c. 42.

(i) He never ſays that it was the Great Toe of the Right Foot. See his E. Elyſius Campus, quæſt. 24. n. 4. & n. 31. & quæſt. 28. n. 24, & 26.

(k) Quæſt. 28. n. 26.

(l) Agrippa de Occulta Philoſophia l. 1. c. 20. p. m. 32.

Love; for ſhe cauſed † his Miſtreſs (Z) to be poyſoned. Ptolomy, who ſucceeded his Brother Pyrrhus, did not out-live him long. Their Mother follow'd 'em ſoon after, being overwhelm'd with Grief for the loſs of her two Sons. There remained but two Princeſſes of the Royal Family, Nereis and Deidamia, Olympias's Siſters *, and Daughters of Pyrrhus, Grand-father of This. Nereis was the Wife of Gelon, King of Sicily. Deidamia was kill'd near the Altar of Diana in a Sedition. The Gods, to puniſh that Crime, afflicted the Epirots ſeveral ways, and they were almoſt deſtroyed by Famine, and by Civil and Foreign Wars †.

PYTHAGORAS, is the firſt of the Ancient Sages who took the (A) Name of Philoſopher. He flouriſhed in the Time of Tarquin the laſt King of Rome, not in Numa's (B) Time, as many Authors ſay. He made himſelf very Illuſtrious by mano corpore os quoddam minimum, quod Hebræi Luz appellant, magnitudine Ciceris mundati, quod nulli corruptioni obnoxium, nec igne quidem vincitur, ſed ſemper conſervatur illæſum: ex quo (ut dicunt) velut planta ex ſemine, in reſurrectione mortuorum corpus noſtrum animale repullulaſcet. I am beholden for this Paſſage to Mr. Drelincourt, Profeſſor of Phyſick; and 'tis a great Satiſfaction to me to make this publick Acknowledgment of it.

---

(Z) Cauſed his Miſtreſs to be poyſoned.] She was of (a) Leucas, and her Name was Tigris. Mr. Boiſſieu (b) rejects all the Explications that have been given of theſe two Verſes of Ovid:

Utque nepos dicti, noſtro modo carmine, regis
Cantharidum ſuccos dante parente bibas.

and is of Opinion that they are meant of our Pyrrhus, and that his Mother Olympias gave him no Quarter no more than to his Concubine Tigris. If it be ſo, Juſtin ſhould not have aſcribed the Death of that Princeſs to her Grief for the Loſs of her two Sons. An honourable Name ought not to be given to the Deſpair of a Mother tormented with the Remorſes of Conſcience, for having been the Cauſe of her Son's Death.

(A) The firſt ..... who took the Name of Philoſopher.] Before him, thoſe who excelled in the Knowledge of Nature, and made themſelves conſpicuous by an Exemplary Life, were called Sages, σοφοί. That Title appearing to him too Great, he took another, which ſhewed that he aſcribed not to himſelf the poſſeſſion of Wiſdom, but only the Deſire of poſſeſſing it. He therefore called himſelf Philoſopher, that is to ſay, a Lover of Wiſdom. The Profeſſors of the Science of Nature, and of Morals, have retained that Name ever ſince. Cicero tells us the Native Country of that new Title, what gave Occaſion to it, and its Signification. (c) A quibus ducti deinceps omnes, qui in rerum contemplatione ſtudia ponebant, ſapientes & habebantur, & nominabantur: idque eorum nomen uſque ad Pythagoræ manavit ætatem: quem, ut ſcribit auditor Platonis Ponticus Heraclides, vir doctus in primis, Phliuntem ferunt veniſſe, eumque cum Leonte, Principe Phliaſiorum, doctè, & copioſè diſſeruiſſe quædam: cujus ingenium, & eloquentiam cum admiratus eſſet Leon, quæſiviſſe ex eo, qua maximè arte confideret: at illum artem quidem ſe ſcire nullam, ſed eſſe philoſophum: admiratum Leontem novitatem nominis, quæſiſſe, quinam eſſent Philoſophi, & quid inter eos, & reliquos intereſſet, Pythagoram autem reſpondiſſe, SIMILEM ſibi videri vitam hominum, & mercatum eum, qui haberetur maximo ludorum apparatu totius Græciæ celebritate: nam ut illic alii corporibus exercitatis gloriam, & nobilitatem coronæ peterent: alii emendi, aut vendendi quæſtu, & lucro ducerentur: eſſet autem quoddam genus eorum, idque vel maximè ingenuum, qui nec plauſum, nec lucrum quærerent, ſed viſendi cauſa venirent, ſtudioſeque perſpicerent, quid ageretur, & quo modo: item nos quaſi in mercatus quandam celebritatem ex urbe aliqua, ſic in hanc vitam ex alia vita, & natura profectos; alios gloriæ ſervire, alios pecuniæ: raros eſſe quoſdam, qui, cæteris omnibus pro nihilo habitis, rerum naturam ſtudioſè intuerentur: hos ſe appellare ſapientiæ ſtudioſos, id eſt philoſophos: & ut illic liberaliſſimum eſſet, ſpectare, nihil ſibi acquirentem, ſic in vita longè omnibus ſtudiis contemplationem rerum, cognitionemque præſtare. Nec vero Pythagoras nominis ſolum inventor, ſed rerum etiam ipſarum amplificator fuit.

(B) Not in Numa's Time.] I cannot ſet down the Birth day of the Word Philoſopher, the very Year of its Birth is unknown. We only know that Pythagoras made that Diſcourſe (d) before he came over into Italy, and we are only told in general, that it was under the Reign of Tarquinius. (e) Hanc opinionem (de immortalitate animæ) diſcipulus (f) ejus Pythagoras maximè confirmavit, qui cum regnante Tarquinio ſuperbo in Italiam veniſſet, tenuit magnam illam Græciam cum honore & diſciplina, tum etiam auctoritate. (g) Pythagoras fuit in Italia temporibus iiſdem quibus L. Brutus patriam liberavit. The Miſtake (h) of thoſe who ſaid that he came over into Italy in the Time of Numa, is glorious to him; for the only Reaſon which made 'em fancy ſo, is, that they could not believe that Numa ſhould have been ſo great a Philoſopher, had he not been a Diſciple of Pythagoras. (i) Quinetiam arbitror, ſays Cicero, propter Pythagoreorum admirationem, Numam quoque regem, Pythagoreum à poſterioribus exiſtimatum: nam cum Pythagoræ diſciplinam, & inſtituta cognoſcerent, regiſque ejus æquitatem, & ſapientiam à majoribus ſuis accepiſſent, ætates autem & tempora ignorarent, propter vetuſtatem, eum, qui ſapientia excelleret, Pythagoræ auditorem fuiſſe crediderunt. Note, that Cicero alledges only ſome ſlight Conjectures to ſhew that (k) the Romans were acquainted with the Doctrine and Reputation of Pythagoras. He had not ſaid ſo, if that Philoſopher had been a Citizen of Rome, as Epicharmus (l) publiſhed it. I ſhall ſay by the by, that an Oracle (m) having ordered that the Romans ſhould Erect a Statue to the beſt and wiſeſt of the Græcians, they erected one to the Honour of Alcibiades, and another to the Honour of Pythagoras. Pliny tells us in what Time this happened. Invenio, ſays he (n), & Pythagoræ & Alcibiadi, in cornibus Comitii poſitas, cum bello (o) Samniti Apollo Pythius fortiſſimo Graiæ gentis juſſiſſet & alteri ſapientiſſimo, ſimulacra celebri loco dicari: eæ ſtetere donec Sylla Dictator ibi Curiam faceret. Mirumque eſt, illos patres Socrati cunctis ab eodem Deo ſapientia prælato Pythagoram prætuliſſe, aut tot aliis virtute Alcibiadem aut quenquam utroque Themiſtocli. Pliny wonders how the Romans came to chooſe Pythagoras rather than Socrates. But how did he know, that they had heard of the Oracle which concerns Socrates. Beſides, they may be juſtified by theſe two (p) Reaſons. They knew not Socrates ſo well as they knew Pythagoras, for the latter had taught for a long time in Italy with great Reputation; and their Minds were prepoſſeſt in his behalf, becauſe they fancied that Numa had been his Diſciple. It was the common Opinion, and tho' it was never ſo falſe, the Magiſtrates took care to keep it up. Which appeared when it was reported, that Numa's Sepulchre and Books (q) had been found out; for it was publiſhed abroad, that they concerned the Pythagorean Philoſophy, and ſome Hiſtorians followed that Opinion. (r) Adjicit Valerius Antias libros Pythagoricos fuiſſe: vulgatæ opinioni qua creditur Pythagoræ auditorem fuiſſe Numam, mendacio probabili accommodata fide. Caſſius Hemina and Lucius Piſo followed that popular Opinion in their Writings (s). If I ſhould be ask'd, why the Romans had rather believe that Numa had been a Diſciple of Pythagoras, than aſcribe to Italy the Glory of having produced ſo Wiſe a King, who was not beholden for his Philoſophy to the Inſtructions of any Foreigner; I ſhould Anſwer 1. That in all likelihood they did not think of that Intereſt of their Country, when they began to divulge that Opinion. 2. That perhaps they fancied that the Merit of that Prince would be more eaſily believed, by giving him ſo famous a Tutor. Was it an eaſie thing to believe, that a Barbarian ſhould have attained to ſuch a Degree of Capacity without the help of the Græcians? St. Auguſtin would have eaſily believed that Numa was one of Pythagoras's Diſciples, for he ſays that Thales (t) lived during the Reign of Romulus. But we know that Thales and Pherecydes were Contemporary; and that Pythagoras was Diſciple of Pherecydes. Some pretend (v) that Thales himſelf was alſo his Diſciple. However, it is certain that Anaximander, a Diſciple of Thales, † Athen. l. 13. p. 589.

* She had married her Brother Alexander. Id. lib. 18. cap.

† Juſt. 28. cap.

(a) Athen. l. 13. p. 58.

(b) In Ibin. p. 95.

(c) Cicer. Tuſcul. Quæſt. l. 5. circa init. Diogenes Laertius relates much the ſame thing. See his Proem. n. 12. where he quotes Heraclides Ponticus ἐν τῷ περὶ τῆς ἄπνου, in libro de femina ſeptem diebus exanimi. He ſays that that Diſcourſe was made in Sicyon. See alſo what he ſays in the Life of Pythagoras, where he quotes Soſicrates in ſucceſſionibus.

(d) Qui quum poſt hunc Phliaſium ſermonem in Italiam veniſſet, exornavit eam Græciam quæ magna dicta eſt, & privatim & publice, præſtantiſſimis & inſtitutis & artibus. Cicero ib.

(e) Id. Tuſcul. l. 1. fol. 242. A.

(f) That is to ſay of Pherecydes.

(g) Cicer. Tuſcul. l. 4. init.

(h) Ovid follows that falſe Tradition in the 15th Book of his Metam.

(i) Cicero ib.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Plut. in Numa p. 65.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) Plin. l. 34. c. 6. p. m. 93.

(o) It was a long War: it began in the Year 411. of Rome.

(p) Voſſ. de Philoſoph. ſect. p. m. 37. alledges them.

(q) 535 Years ſince the beginning of his Reign, Plin. l. 13. c. 13. and not about 400 Years after his Death as Plutarch ſays in Numa p. 74.

(r) Liv. l. 40. p. m. 783.

(s) Vid. Plin. l. 13. c. 13.

(t) Eodem Romulo regnante Thales Mileſius fuiſſe perhibetur unus è ſeptem ſapientibus. Auguſt. de Civit. Dei l. 18. c. 24.

(v) Tzetzes affirms it. See his Words ap. Menag. in Laert. l. 1. n. 11 by his Learning and Virtue, and proved a very useful Man in Reforming and Instructing the World. His Eloquence must needs have been very powerful, seeing his Exhortations moved the Inhabitants of a great City, plunged into Debauchery, to avoid * Luxury and good Cheer, and to live according to the Rules of Virtue. Nay, he prevailed upon the Ladies to part with their fine (C) Cloaths, and all their Ornaments, and to make a Sacrifice of 'em to the Chief Deity of the Place. He prevailed upon his Disciples to practise the most difficult Things: for he made 'em undergo a Noviciate † of (D) Silence, which lasted two Years at least; but he made it last five Years for those whom he knew to be most inclined to Speak. What I have said in another Place, persuades me of the Force of his Censures. He made 'em live ‡ all in common; they left the Property of their Patrimony, and brought all they had to the Feet of their Master. An ill Construction (E) was put upon Thales and Pythagoras lived at the (w) same time. None of the Commentators of Diogenes Laertius tell us that these Words are not well rendred, (x) Φιλοσοφίας δὲ δύο γεγόνασιν ἀρχαί, ἥ τε ἀπὸ Ἀναξιμάνδρου, καὶ ἡ ἀπὸ Πυθαγόρου· τοῦ μὲν Θαλοῦ διακηκοότος. Ceterum Philosophiæ duæ fuere successiones: quarum altera ab Anaximandro, altera à Pythagora fluxit. Anaximandri Thales auditor fuit. 'Tis plain they signifie not that Thales was Disciple of Anaximander; but on the contrary, that Anaximander was Disciple of Thales.

I shall conclude with a Passage of Pliny (y), who says that Pythagoras was in Egypt in the Reign of Semneserteus. Which can scarce be reconciled with what we read in Laertius (a), that Pythagoras went into Egypt with Letters of Recommendation from Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, to Amasis King of Egypt. Father Hardouin (b) endeavours to clear the Difficulty, by supposing, that Pythagoras went into Egypt under the Reign of Amasis, and staid there long enough to see the Death of that Prince, and the Reign of Semneserteus his Successor. But that Supposition is inconsistent with the Account given us by Herodotus (c), who says that Cambyses subdued Egypt half a Year after the Death of Amasis, whom Psammenitus his Son did succeed. Perhaps it might be said, that the Name of Psammenitus, was by degrees changed into that of Semneserteus; and we must not forget, that it seems that Pythagoras was in Egypt when Cambyses took possession of it; for it appears that he was one of the Slaves which that Monarch trasported into Persia. This can't be better proved, than by a Passage of Apuleius, but it must be corrected by changing Ægyptum into Ægypto. Which would too much confound the Sense of the Author. 'Tis better to say, that this Passage only proves that Pythagoras was in Egypt in Cambyses's Time. See the Remark B of the Article Zoroaster towards the end. These are Apuleius's Words, (d) Sunt qui Pythagoram aiunt eo temporis inter captivos Cambysæ Regis Ægyptum cum adveheretur, doctores habuisse Persarum Magos, ac præcipue Zoroastrem omnis divini arcani antistitem: post eaque a quodam Gillo crotoniensium Principe recuperatum. Verum enim vero Celebrior fama obtinet sponte eum petisse Ægyptias disciplinas, atque ibi a sacerdotibus Cerimoniarum incredendas potentias, numerorum admirandas vires, Geometriæ solertissimas formulas didicisse. John Bernartius did not succeed in criticizing Pliny; for (e) he alledges Eusebius against him, as saying, that the Reign of Semneserteus began in the 43d Olympiad, and ended in the 45th, that is to say, that King Amasis came to the Throne about 30 Years after the Death of Semneserteus. If it were so, it would be impossible to justifie Pliny, or to reconcile him with Diogenes Laertius. But we need not be concerned for him: for John Bernartius is mistaken; Eusebius does not speak of a King whose Name was Semneserteus.

(C) The Ladies to part with their fine Cloaths.] All that Justin tells us concerning the Reformation introduced by Pythagoras into the City of Crotona, is so remarkable, that I shall set down the whole Passage. (f) Crotonam venit, populumque in luxuriam lapsum, auctoritate sua ad usum frugalitatis revocavit. Laudabat quotidie virtutem; & vitia luxuriæ, casusque civitatum ea peste perditarum enumerabat; tantumque studium ad frugalitatem multitudinis provocavit, ut aliquos ex his luxuriatos incredibile videretur. Matronarum quoque separatam à viris doctrinam, & puerorum à parentibus frequenter habuit. Docebat nunc has pudicitiam, & obsequia in viros; nunc illos modestiam, & literarum studium. Inter hæc velut genitricem virtutum frugalitatem omnibus ingerebat, consecutusque disputationum assiduitate erat, ut matronæ auratas vestes, cæteraque dignitatis suæ ornamenta, velut instrumenta luxuriæ deponerent, eaque omnia delata in Junonis ædem ipsi Deæ consecrarent, præ se ferentes, vera ornamenta matronarum pudicitiam, non vestes esse. In juventute quoque quantum profligatum sit, victi feminarum contumaces animi manifestant. The last Words of that Author are somewhat Satyrical; for he reasons thus: If Pythagoras was able to overcome the Obstinacy of Women, you may judge of the progress he made in the Reformation of young Men. It is certain that the (g) Love of fine Cloaths is a piece of so great Resistance, that nothing will so much reflect back the Darts of a Preacher. See the efficacy of Capistran's Sermons against Gamesters. 'Tis not said that he had the same Success against Jewels. Conette made more Conquests over Head-dresses with Stones thrown by Children (i), than with Rhetorical Figures. Thus some Christian Preachers could not do what a Heathen Philosopher did with great success. But let us not forget the noble Action of the Roman Ladies (k) in the Time of Camillus.

A Modern Author has given us in a few Words, the finest Strokes that may serve for the Picture of Pythagoras's Eloquence. " (l) According to the " same Porphyrius, when he came into Italy, he altered the Policy of a great many Cities, and restored their Liberty: by one Exhortation he " gained and brought over above two thousand " Men to his Philosophy. He taught 'em to overcome their Passions, to suppress all the Motions " of Avarice and Ambition, to have all their Wealth " in common, and to love Silence, Retreat and " Contemplation. „ Let no Body object to me that I represent that Philosopher under the Notion of a Rhetorician; 'tis not my Intention: I am fully persuaded that he assaulted not Vice with Harangues set with Flourishes, and composed according to the Rules, and the shining Subtilties which the Sophists of the following Ages made use of. But notwithstanding, we may very well ascribe a wonderful Eloquence to him, seeing his Discourses were so persuasive. The force of his Eloquence consisted, without doubt, in the grave Exposition of his Reasons, and in the Authority which the Wisdom of his Conduct gave to his Words. He preached by his Life: his very Silence was Eloquent, and contributed as much as his Voice to the Reformation, as an Ancient Poet has very well observed:

Annon (m) Pythagoræ monitus annique silentes
Famosum Oebalii luxum pressere Tarenti?

(D) A Noviciate of Silence.] It was a hard Discipline. (n) Ἐστὶ δὲ πάντων χαλεπώτατον ἐγκρατευμάτων τὸ γλώττης κρατεῖν, that is, the most difficult Victory that can be gotten, is to have the mastery of one's Tongue. See among Cato's Distichs, the Encomium that is bestowed on those (o) who know how to be Silent when it is fit they should. Servius (p) mentions the Noviciate of five Years, and here is what Apuleius observes concerning that which was imposed a matter of five Years on such Disciples as were not so cautious and discreet as others. (q) *Non in totum tamen (Pythagorici) vocem desuescebant, nec omnes pari tempore elingues magistrum sectabantur; sed gravioribus viris brevi spatio satis videbatur taciturnitas modificata. Loquaciores enim vero ferme in quinquennium, velut in exilium vocis mittebantur.*

(E) An ill Construction was put upon that Union.] That Society of Students was look'd upon as a Faction which conspired against the State; Sixty of 'em were destroyed, the rest ran away. (r) Sed trecenti ex juvenibus cum sodalitii juris sacramento quodam

nexi

---

* Justin. l. 20. c. 4. See the Rem. C. † Aulus Gellius l. 1. c. 9. ‡ See the Rem. E at the end.

(w) Diog. Laert. l. 1. says that Anaximander flourished chiefly in the Time of Polycrates Tyrant of Samos.

(x) Laert. in Proœm. n. 13.

(y) In obeliscus quem Divus Augustus in circo magno statuit, excisus est a rege Semneserteo, quo regnante Pythagoras in Ægypto fuit. Plin. l. 36. c. 9. p. m. 297.

(a) Diog. Laert. l. 8. n. 3.

(b) In hunc loc. Plinii.

(c) Herodot. l. 3. c. 14.

(d) Apul. Florid. p. m. 351.

(e) Joan. Bernartius in Boetium de consol. Philosoph. l. 1. p. 169.

(f) Justin. l. 20. c. 4. p. m. 335.

(g) See the Article [illegible]

(i) See the Article Conette.

(k) See the Article Camillus, Rem. C.

(l) Thomassin, Methode d'étudier & d'enseigner la Philosophie, l. 1. c. 13. p. 155.

(m) Claudian. de Mallii Theodori Consulatu, v. 156. Read annon, and not non without an Interrogation, as in the Edit. of Barthius: and observe that Barthius, who is too prolix every where, says almost nothing on this Passage. Claudian a little before says, Quicquid Democritus risit, dixitque tacendo Pythagoras. Ibid. v. 90.

(n) Jamblichus l. 1. c. 31.

(o) Proximus ille Deo est qui scit ratione tacere.

(p) Serv. in illud Æn. 10. v. 564. tacitis regnavit Amyclis.

(q) Apul. in Florid. (r) Just. l. 20. c. 4. See the Rem. O.

upon their Union, and it proved very fatal to them. One of his greateſt Cares was to correct the Abuſes (F) committed by married Perſons; he did not believe that without this the publick Peace, and Liberty, a good Form of Government, and nexi ſeparatam à ceteris civibus vitam exercerent, quaſi cœtum clandeſtinæ conjurationis haberent, civitatem in ſe converterunt, quæ eos, cum in unam domum conveniſſent, cremare voluit. In quo tumultu ſexaginta ferme periere, ceteri in exilium profeſſi. We can neither learn from that Paſſage of Juſtin, nor from what follows, whether that Storm was excited during the Life of Pythagoras. It ſeems more reaſonable to believe, that that Philoſopher was not involved in that Perſecution, than to believe he was. One would think therefore that Juſtin relates the ſame Fact which Polybius ſpeaks of. Now according to Polybius (s), the Pythagoreans were burnt in Great Greece, ſome time before the War which Dionyſius, Tyrant of Syracuſa, made againſt the Crotoniates: it ſeems therefore that they were not burnt during their Maſter's Life; for there are 120 Years (t) between the Expulſion of Tarquinius, and that War of Dionyſius againſt Crotona. But Pythagoras came into Italy under the Reign of Tarquinius, and died at Metapontum (v), after he had been 20 Years in Crotona. Voſſius obſerves (w), that Juſtin, Polybius, Porphyrius, Jamblichus mention the ſame Accident; but the two latter obſerve that none but two Men, viz. Archippus and Lyſis, eſcaped from the Fire: it will be ſaid therefore, that it was not a Cruelty exerciſed on the School of Pythagoras during his Life. For Lyſis having retired to Thebes (x), was there Preceptor to Epaminondas; who died 145 Years after the Expulſion of Tarquinius. Theſe are Doubts, I grant it, but no ſtrong Proofs againſt thoſe who ſhould maintain, that the Fire out of which Lyſis made his Eſcape, happened during the Life of Pythagoras. Note, that according to Plutarch the two Pythagoreans who made their Eſcape, were Philolaus and Lyſis. He ſays ſo in his Treatiſe concerning (y) the Genius of Socrates, and calls Cyclonians thoſe who ſet Pythagoras's College on Fire. He calls 'em Cylonians in another Place, and obſerves that they burnt Pythagoras. (z) Καὶ ὁ Πυθαγόρου ζῶντος ἐμπρησμὸς ὑπὸ τῶν Κυλωνείων. Quod Pythagoræ vivo à Cyloneis illatum eſt incendium.

If you deſire to know the Name of the Author, who tells us, that the Diſciples of that Philoſopher deprived themſelves of the Property of their Eſtates, I ſhall refer you to theſe Words of Aulus Gellius: (a) Omnes ſimul qui à Pythagora in cohortem illam diſciplinarum recepti erant, quod quiſque familiæ pecuniæque habebat, in medium dabant, & coibatur ſocietas inſeparabilis, tamquam illud fuerit antiquum conſortium, quod re atque verbo appellabatur κοινόβιον.

(F) The Abuſes committed by married Perſons.] He repreſented to them, that the thing which is to be aimed at in the Copulation of both Sexes, is to produce in a lawful way another Perſon like one's-ſelf; that one muſt endeavour to get well made, ſound and luſty Children; that they muſt be uſed to Labour and Sobriety, and removed from Venereal Pleaſures till they come to be 20 Years of Age, and then they muſt be told not to enjoy them too often. (b) Neceſſum eſſe ut pueri & virgines in laboribus & exercitationibus omnibuſque tolerantiæ ac temperantiæ generibus congruentibus educentur; ut conveniens victus ipſis adhibeatur, & laborum amans, temperans & continens eorum vita ſit: ut de uſu rei venereæ ſero erudiantur; ac pueros ſic inſtitui & educari oporteat, ut intra viceſimum ætatis annum talem congreſſum nullo modo quærant. Cum autem ad ætatem Veneri maturam pervenerint, hac raro utendum eſſe; incontinentiam enim, bonamque corporis habitudinem, rarius conjunctas eſſe. He (c) condemned altogether thoſe who perform that Act after they have eaten too much, but much more thoſe who perform it whilſt they are drunk. He would have Husbands not only to leave off Concubinage, but alſo to obſerve the Laws of Chaſtity and Modeſty towards their Wives. They neither did the one nor the other; but 'tis ſaid that they were ſo ſenſibly moved with his Remonſtrances, that they ſhewed a great zeal in reforming themſelves. (d) Fertur & Pythagoras Crotoniatas à pellicum & illegitimarum feminarum conſuetudine abduxiſſe; maritos etiam monuiſſe, ut erga uxores ſuas caſti & pudici forent: quo factum, ut Crotoniatæ omnem incontinentiam & luxuriam, quæ tum temporis in urbe, ceu peſtis, graſſabantur, e medio tollere laboravint. The Inhabitants of Crotona lived a very looſe and diſſolute Life. They married only pro forma, they took a Wife ad honores, they neglected and deſpiſed her, and minded only their Concubines. They gave a very ill Example; their Conduct was Contagious; they did not conſider that it was to be feared that they might be imitated, and perhaps they did not much care for it. The Maxim frangenti fidem frangatur eidem, is but too common with reſpect to Conjugal Fidelity. Pythagoras undertook to correct ſuch a Diſorder. If we may believe Juſtin, the Force of his Inſtructions proved ſufficient for it; but ſome Authors intimate, that they proved not effectual enough, and that he was obliged to have recourſe to a more powerful Engine. He pretended therefore that he was juſt come from Hell, and had ſeen in great Torments ſuch Husbands as do not pay the Matrimonial Duty to their Wives. He became very conſiderable upon that Account. (e) Φησὶ δ' Ἱερώνυμος κατελθόντα αὐτὸν εἰς ᾅδου τὴν μὲν Ἡσιόδου ψυχὴν ἰδεῖν πρὸς κίονι χαλκῷ δεδεμένην καὶ τρίζουσαν· τὴν δ' Ὁμήρου κρεμαμένην ἀπὸ δένδρου, καὶ ὄφεις περὶ αὐτήν, ἀνθ' ὧν εἶπε περὶ θεῶν. κολαζομένους δὲ καὶ τοὺς μὴ θέλοντας συνεῖναι ταῖς αὑτῶν γυναιξί. καὶ διὸ καὶ διὰ τοῦτο τιμηθῆναι ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν Κρότωνι. Hieronymus vero ait deſcendiſſe ad inferos atque Heſiodi quidem animam columnæ æreæ vinculis adſtrictam, ſtridentemque vidiſſe; Homeri autem, ex arbore pendentem, ſerpenteſque illam circumdantes, propter ea quæ de diis finxerat. Eos item cruciari qui ſuis uxoribus congredi nollent: ejuſque rei gratia à Crotoniatis honoratum. That Story is without doubt the ſame which Hermippus relates. He ſays (f) that that Philoſopher being arrived into Italy, ſhut up himſelf in a Subterranean Place, having deſired his Mother to keep an Account of what ſhould happen. When he had been in that Place as long as he thought fit, his Mother delivered her Table-Book to him, as it had been agreed between 'em. He found in it the Dates and other Circumſtances of what paſt: he came out of that Place with a pale and lean Face; he called the People together, and aſſured them that he came from Hell, and to perſuade 'em of the Truth of it, he told them what had paſt in the City. All his Hearers were ſo moved with what he ſaid, that the whole Aſſembly fell a Groaning and Crying; and they doubted no longer but he was a Divine Man, and they gave him their Wives to inſtruct them. It was without doubt on that occaſion that he frighted ill Husbands, by telling them that thoſe who refuſe to pay the Matrimonial Duties to their Wives, are tormented in Hell with great ſeverity. In all likelihood he ſpoke alſo of the Puniſhments that are inflicted upon wanton Women, and we ought to believe that it was one of the Reaſons which moved the Crotoniates to ſend their Wives to his School. Obſerve the Contradiction of that Great Maſter. He taught the Metempſychoſis on the one hand, without confining himſelf to the three Removings mentioned (g) by Pindar: and on the other hand, he was ſo bold as to ſay, that he had ſeen in Hell the Souls of Homer, Heſiod, &c. very much tormented. The Metempſychoſis deſtroyed Hell, as he declares it in Ovid:

> O genus (h) attonitum gelidæ formidine mortis,
> Quid Styga, quid tenebras, & nomina vana timetis,
> Materiem vatum, falſique pericula mundi?
> Corpora ſive rogus flamma, ſeu tabe vetuſtas
> Abſtulerit, mala poſſe pati non ulla putetis.

But he rather choſe to acquire ſome Authority, and make himſelf fit to extirpate Debauchery by contradicting himſelf, than to follow a coherent Method of Teaching, which would not have proved ſo uſeful.

I ſaid that he confined not himſelf to the three Removings mentioned by Pindar, and I ſhall give an evident Proof of it by the Verſes of Ovid, which I ſhall quote (i) hereafter. Therefore Forcatulus does not ſpeak the Truth when he ſays the contrary. Conſtat, ſays he (k), Druidum imitatorem Pythagoram, deſultoriam animarum migrationem nonniſi tertiam aſſeruiſſe. Nam ſi perenni ſerie animas in alia atque alia corpora tranſcripſiſſet, quis quæſo locus fuiſſet Elyſiis campis, aut cœli ſedibus? quod miror ſatyricis ſcriptoribus ſalſis admodum inſulſè derelictum. Quicunque, inquit Pindarus, ter in utraque vita à vitiis alieni

(s) Polyb. l. 2.

(t) See Calviſius p. m. 95, 165.

(v) Juſt. ub. ſup.

(w) Voſſius de Philoſoph. ſectis c. 6. n. 26. p. m. 38.

(x) Diog. Laert. ib. n. 7. Corn. Nepos in Epaminonda. Ælian. var. hiſt. l. 3. c. 17.

(y) Plut. in Socrat. Genio. p. 583.

(z) Id. de Stoicor. repugn. p. 1051.

(a) A. Gell. l. 1. c. 9. See alſo Laert. l. 8. c. 10.

(b) Omeiſius in Ethica Pythag. p. 38. ex Jamblicho in vita Pythag. l. 1. c. 31.

(c) Idem p. 39. ex eodem ib.

(d) Jamblich. ib. c. 27. ap. Omeiſium ib. p. 40.

(e) Diog. Laert. l. 8. n. 21. p. 505.

(f) Apud Diog. Laert. ib. n. 41. p. 522. See alſo the Scholiaſt upon Sophocles. Menagius in hunc locum Laertii p. 372, 373. quotes his Words.

(g) Olymp. Od. 2.

(h) Ovid. Met. l. 15. v. 153.

(i) In the Rem. M.

(k) Forcat. de Gallor. imperio & philoſophia l. 1. p. m. 90.

and other such things, about which (G) he was very zealous, would be able to make private Men happy. I wonder how a Philosopher, so Learned in Astronomy, Geometry, and the other Parts of Mathematicks, took delight in delivering his fine Precepts under the Veil of Enigms. That Veil was so thick that it has afforded the Interpreters (H) a large Field of Conjectures, and as many mystical Senses as came into their Mind. Some take in a Literal Sense the Order he gave to abstain from eating (I) of Beans. Few Men, in those Times, Travelled * in so alieni fuerunt, viam sibi à Jove destinatam adiere ad Saturni urbem. Ἔνθα μακάρων νᾶσον ὠκεανίδες αὖραι περιπνέουσιν, ἄνθεμα δὲ χρυσοῦ φλέγει, id est, Ubi beatorum insulam Oceanides auræ circumflant, & flores aurei fulgent.

(G) About which he was very zealous.] His Affection for the Publick Good moved him to carry his Instructions to the Palaces of Great Men (l): he easily perceived that if he could work upon the Minds of Princes, and of the chief Magistrates, other Men would plentifully reap the Fruits of his Philosophy. He had the Happiness and the Glory of teaching some Disciples, who proved excellent Law-givers, such as Zaleucus, Charondas, and some others (m). A Law-maker ought to be looked upon as the best Present that can be given a Society. Those who made Laws are more worthy of Admiration, and of an immortal Glory, than the greatest Conquerors. Yet their Memory is not come to us with the same Noise as that of Cyrus and Alexander. The Reason of it is, that our Minds being not very capable of knowing true Grandeur, do falsly joyn the Idea of it with such Actions as make a Noise. They cannot discern what is (n) Great from what is Shining; and so the Life of a Man who makes it his Business to cure the internal Distempers of a State with good Laws, is an Object that makes no great Impression, because such a Work goes on slowly. But if a Man subdues Cities and Provinces, and destroys some Millions of Men, and reduces ten times as many to Beggary, he acquires so much Glory, that the remotest Posterity will speak of him with Transports of Admiration. However, it will be an eternal Glory for Pythagoras, in the Opinion of those who know how to judge of Things, to have furnished the World with some good Law-givers. It is a Glory which redounds upon the whole Philosophy, as Seneca has well observed. (o) Postquam, surrepentibus vitiis, in tyrannidem regna versa sunt, opus esse cœpit legibus, quas & ipsas inter initia tulere sapientes. Solon, ... Lycurgus . . . . . . Zaleuci leges Charondæque laudantur: hi non in foro, nec in consultorum atrio, sed in Pythagoræ tacito illo sanctoque secessu didicerunt jura, quæ florenti tunc Siciliæ, & per Italiam Græciæ ponerent. Besides, he took a particular care to pacifie the (p) Wars which arose in Italy, and the Intestine Factions of the Cities. He used to say, that War should be made only against these Five Things, the Diseases of the Body, the Ignorance of the Mind, the Passions of the Heart, the Seditions of Cities, and the Discord of Families. They are Five Monsters which ought to be prosecuted with Fire and Sword. (a) Sustulisse penitus omnes discordias, non à notis solùm & familiaribus, eorumque posteris ad aliquot secula, sed ab omnibus omnino Italiæ atque Siciliæ civitatibus, tam intestinas quam externas, auctor est Porphyrius in ejus Vita: qui addit, hoc apophthegma crebrò ei in ore fuisse, Fugandum omni conatu, & igni atque ferro, & quibuscumque denique machinis præcidendum, à corpore quidem morbum; ab anima, ignorantiam; à ventre, luxuriam; à civitate, seditionem; à familia, discordiam. 'Tis no wonder if the Inhabitants of Crotona desired, that their Senate should be directed by the Counsels of so excellent a Man. Valerius Maximus says so, to shew that the Authority of Pythagoras was acknowledged out of his College. (b) Pythagoræ tanta veneratio ab auditoribus tributa est, ut quæ ab eo acceperant, in disputationem deducere nefas existimarent: Quinetiam interpellati ad reddendam caussam, hoc solum respondebant, Ipsum dixisse: Magnus honos, sed schola tenus. Illa urbium suffragiis tributa est. Enixo Crotoniatæ studio ab eo petierunt ut senatum ipsorum, qui mille hominum numero constabat, consiliis suis uti pateretur. The same Author tells us, that several Cities of Italy (c) felt the good Effects of that Philosopher's Studies.

(H) It has afforded Interpreters a large Field of Conjectures.] See, for Example, what they have said upon this Precept of Pythagoras, Don't sit upon a Chœnix, Chœnici ne insideas, in the Learned Dissertation which I have mention'd in (d) another place. Mr. du Rondel is the Author of it. That Symbolical way of Teaching was very much in use in the Eastern Countries and Egypt. Pythagoras had it, without doubt, from thence. He came from his Travels loaded with the Learning he had got in all the Countries he went through. 'Tis thought that he made a plentiful Harvest among the Jews, and that he learn'd a great many things of Ezekiel and Daniel. Nay, 'tis pretended that his Tetractys is the same thing with the Name Tetragrammaton, a Name not to be pronounc'd, and full of Mysteries, as the Rabbins say. See the Learned Huetius, Adde, says he (e), & veri persimilem conjecturam Seldeni, & Wendelini, qua mirificam illam Pythagoræ τετρακτὺν ipsum esse suspicantur Dei nomen τετραγράμματον, יהוה, atque ejus notitiam à Daniele jam sene Pythagoram, cum in Babylonia degeret, accepisse. Danieli adjungi poterat & Ezekiel, ut ostendam infra. Others say, That the Tetractys, that great Object of Veneration, and by which they used to swear, (f) was only a mysterious way of Teaching by Numbers. Consider these Words of the Leipsick-Journal, pag. 204, of the Year 1685, in the Abstract of an English Book of John Turner. Ex hac ipsa tamen gentilium notitia inscite à quibusdam colligi ait, Pythagoræorum Tetractyn, quam tam reverenter habuerunt, & per quam jurare etiam soliti leguntur, esse unum idemque cum nomine tetragrammato, quod à Judæis ipsi acceperint . . . . . Aliam proinde viam demonstrat Autor tetractyn istam explicandi, desumptam puta à methodo Pythagoræorum mystica, qua dogmata sua fere per numeros certos indicare & explanare fuerint soliti. But we must not forget to say, that Pythagoras and his Successors had two ways of Teaching, the one for those that were Initiated, and the other for Strangers and Profane Men. The first was Clear and Perspicuous, the second was Symbolical and Enigmatical. See the 13th Chapter of a Book of John Schefferus, Professor at Upsal, entitled De natura & constitutione Philosophiæ Italicæ, Printed at Upsal in the Year 1664, in 8o.

(I) To abstain from eating of Beans.] They who explain that Prohibition in a literal Sense, alledge, amongst other Reasons, that Pythagoras was taught by the Egyptians, and even suffer'd himself to be Circumcised, that he might be admitted to their most secret Mysteries. (g) Δι' οὓς καὶ περιτέμνετο, ἵνα δὴ καὶ εἰς τὰ ἄδυτα κατελθὼν, τὴν μυστικὴν παρ' Αἰγυπτίων ἐκμάθοι φιλοσοφίαν. Propter quos (Prophetas Ægyptios) etiam fuit circumcisus, ut adyta ingrediens Ægyptiorum mysticam disceret philosophiam. But the Egyptians abstain'd from Beans: they (h) sowed none, and if they found any that had not been sown, they would not touch 'em. Their Priests carried the Superstition farther, they durst not so much as look upon 'em, they accounted 'em Unclean, and had rather chosen to eat the Flesh of their Fathers. (i) Θᾶττον ἂν τὰς κεφαλὰς φαγεῖν φασι τῶν πατέρων ἢ κυάμους. Dicunt se parentum capita citius esuros quam Fabas. From whence they conclude, that Pythagoras, who had been their Disciple, forbad the eating of Beans in a literal Sense. Several grave Authors among the Ancients understood it so. Some say he chose rather to be kill'd by those that pursued him, (k) than to make his escape through a Field of Beans, so great was his Respect or Abhorrence for that Plant! I think Aristoxenus is the only Author who says, that Pythagoras would eat them often. (l) Aristoxenus musicus vir litterarum veterum diligentissimus, Aristotelis philosophi auditor, in libro, quem de Pythagora reliquit, nullo sæpius legumento Pythagoram dicit usum quàm fabis: quoniam is cibus & subduceret sensim alvum & lævigaret. Verba ista Aristoxeni subscripsi: Πυθαγόρας δὲ τῶν ὀσπρίων μάλιστα τὸν κύαμον ἐδοκίμασε· λίαν κινητικόν τε γὰρ εἶναι, καὶ διαφορητικόν· διὸ καὶ μάλιστα κέχρηται αὐτῷ. Our Learned Men do not much value the Testimony of Aristoxenus; they believe he was mistaken, and look upon that Pythagorean Abstinence as a certain Matter of Fact, and enquire into the Reasons of it. Aristotle

---

* See Apul. in Florid.

(d) In the Art. Epicurus Remark R.

(e) Dem. Evangel. prop. 4. c. 2. n. 8. p. 80. Edit. Lips. 1694. See also Marsham's Chron. Can. Ægyptiac. sec. 11. p. m. 277, 278.

(l) Πυθαγόρας τοῖς πρωτεύουσιν Ἰταλιωτῶν. Ac Pythagora principes Italorum. Plutarchus, cum principibus viris philosopho esse disputandum, p. 777. A.

(m) Vid. Jambl. in vit. Pythag. l. 1. c. 30.

(n) Vid. Plin. Ep. 15. l. 3. where he shews alia esse clariora, alia majora.

(o) Senec. Ep. 90. p. m. 369. Vid. Miscellaneæ observationes of Petrus Petitus p. 265.

(p) See the Letter which they say he wrote to Anaximenes, ap. Laert. l. 8. n. 49.

(a) Menag. in Laert. l. 8. n. 50.

(b) Val. Max. l. 8. c. 15. n. 1. in extern.

(c) Plurimis & opulentissimis urbibus effectus suorum studiorum approbavit. Id. ib. c. 7. n. 2. extern.

(f) Διὸ καὶ ἐφθέγγοντο οἱ Πυθαγόρειοι, ὡς μεγίστου ὅρκου ὄντος τῆς τετράδος. Οὐ μὰ τὸν ἀμετέρᾳ ψυχᾷ παραδόντα τετρακτύν. Παγὰν ἀενάου φύσεως ῥιζώματ' ἔχουσαν. Itaque sanctissimum jusjurandum Pythagorei quaternario sunt complexi, quam tetractyn vocant. Per tibi nostræ animæ præbentem tetrada juro Naturæ fontemque & firmamenta perennis. Plutarch. de placit. lib. 1. c. 3. p. 877. A.

(g) Clem. Alexandr. Strom. l. 1. p. 302.

(h) Herod. l. 2. c. 37.

(i) Sextus Empiricus Pyrrhonic. hypotypos. l. 3. p. 156. See also St. Chrysostom Hom. 2. in Joann.

(k) See the Rem. Ò. Letter i.

(l) Aul. Gell. l. 4. c. 11. p. m. 131.

ſo many Places as he did. He is look'd upon, by ſome, as a great (K) Magician:

Ariſtotle gives four or five Reaſons for it. He pretends (m) that Pythagoras prohibited the eating of Beans, either becauſe they are like certain Parts, which I will not name, or becauſe they are like the Gates of Hell, or becauſe they provoke Luſt, or becauſe they reſemble the Nature of the Univerſe, or becauſe they were made uſe of in the Election of Magiſtrates. Thoſe who pretend that that Prohibition was a Moral Precept, and that Pythagoras underſtood it only in an Allegorical Senſe, fancy that he forbad thereby his Diſciples to meddle with the Government. This is grounded upon the Cuſtom of ſome Cities, wherein every Body gave his Vote with Beans, when they proceeded to the Election of Magiſtrates. Others think that he forbad the Venereal Pleaſure. Here is a Paſſage of Aulus Gellius, taken from the Chapter wherein the Author alledges and approves the Teſtimony of Ariſtoxenus. (n) Videtur autem de κυάμῳ non eſitato cauſam erroris fuiſſe, quia in Empedocli carmine qui diſciplinas Pythagoræ ſecutus eſt, verſus hic invenitur:

Δειλοί, πάνδειλοι, κυάμων ἄπο χεῖρας ἔχεσθαι.

opinati enim ſunt plerique κύαμον leguminentum vulgo dici. Sed qui diligentius anquiſitiuſque carmina Empedocli arbitrati ſunt, κυάμους hoc in loco teſticulos ſignificare dicunt; eoſque more Pythagoræ opertè atque ſymbolicè κυάμους appellatos, quia ſint εἰς τὸ κυεῖν δεινοὶ καὶ αἴτιοι τοῦ κυεῖν; & genitura humanæ vim præbeant, idcircoque in Empedocli verſu iſto non à fabulo edendo, ſed à rei venereæ proluvio voluiſſe homines deducere. Mauro in a Poem, wherein under the Name della Fava (o) he denotes ſomething that is Laſcivious, joins together the Opinion of Ariſtoxenus, and that which is contrary to it. He pretends that Pythagoras prohibited the uſe of Beans, that is to ſay, Venereal Pleaſures; and nevertheleſs that there was no Food which he uſed more frequently than that: He forbad others what he himſelf practiſed; and if we believe Mauro ſuch a Conduct is very common.

Non (p) fè Natura mai coſa sì ghiotta,
Che ſenza quaſi romperla co i denti
Pare, ch'ogni perſona ſe la inghiotta.
Furon certi Filoſofi prudenti,
De' quali fù Pitagora il maeſtro,
Che vietava la Fava a quelle genti.
Eran ribaldi, e ladri da capeſtro,
Che ingannavan con arte gli ignoranti,
E poi ſe ne mangiavano un caneſtro.
Così fanno hoggi certi mormoranti,
Che ogni perſona ſepeliſcon viva,
Chiamando Amore, Venere i furfanti.
Riprendono in altrui la vita attiva,
Et eſſi ogn'hor di veſpro, è di mattino
Hanno in uſo l'attiva, e la paſſiva.
Così Maometto gia per torre il vino,
Seppe perſuader provincie, e regni
Co'l ſuo ſottile ingegno, e diavolino.
Gli parue, che i plebei non foſſer degni
Di quel liquore, e così ſempre al mondo
Sovra la forza ſen ſtati gl'ingegni.
Pitagora, c'havea peſcato al fondo,
E de le coſe la ragion ſapea,
Ogni gran ſavio ſea parer ſecondo.
E de le Fave nemico parea,
Ma ſe ne confortava il guſto, e'l tatto,
E d'altra coſa quaſi non vivea.

Cicero intimates, that the Prohibition of Beans was grounded upon their hindring Men from dreaming Divinatory Dreams; for they heat too much, and by that Irritation of the Spirits they ſuffer not the Soul to enjoy that Quietneſs which is neceſſary for the Search of Truth. (a) Ex eadem item opinione M. Cicero in libro de divinatione primo, hæc verba poſuit; Jubet igitur Plato ſic ad ſomnum proficiſci corporibus affectis, ut nihil ſit quod errorem animis perturbationemque afferat. Ex quo etiam Pythagoreis interdictum putatur, ne faba veſcerentur; quod habet inflationem magnam is cibus tranquillitatem (b) mentis quærentibus contrariam. Hæc quidem M. Cicero. The Learned Windet has inquir'd more Learnedly than any Body elſe into the Reaſons of that Abſtinence: He lays the greateſt ſtreſs upon the Gates of Hell. We have ſeen that one of Pythagoras's Reaſons was taken from the Reſemblance between Beans and thoſe Gates. Windet (c) does not approve the Opinion of thoſe who ſay, that by κύαμος Pythagoras underſtood a Woman's Breaſt, or the Teſticles. He ſticks to the Literal Senſe, but he owns that Beans were forbidden out of a Principle of Chaſtity. What he ſays is full of exquiſite Learning: He ſhews, that in the Opinion of Pythagoras, to deſcend into Hell, ſignified to be Begotten, and denoted only the Change which a Soul undergoes when it comes out of the Upper Regions, to be united with an organized Body upon Earth. (d) Cum autem ἐν ᾅδῃ (localiter) ſit regio naturæ corruptibilis, hinc Pythagoricis animæ cæleſte ſolum vertentes atque ἰέναι εἰς γένεσιν dicuntur etiam κατελθεῖν εἰς ᾅδα. He ſhews, that Beans having no Knots in their Stalks, reſemble the Gates of Hell, thro' which the Souls have always a free Entrance, in order to Generation. He adds, that Pythagoras conſidering this Life as a kind of Death or Baniſhment, endeavoured to perſuade Men not to Beget Children, but to return to the Heavenly Places. (e) Atque in eo Portæ Inferni ſimilis eſt Faba, διὰ τὸ ἀγόνατον εἶναι, quod genuum expers ſit, ut loquitur (f) Ariſtoteles: vel διὰ τὸ δι' ὅλου τετρῆσθαι, καὶ μὴ ἐγκόπτεσθαι τ̃ μεταξὺ τῶν γονάτων ἐμφράξεων, id eſt, propterea quod penitus perforetur, nec articulorum obicibus intercipiatur: perinde ac porta inferni nunquam oppeſſulata animabus εἰς γένεσιν κατιούσαις in generationem deſcendentibus perpetuo patet. Pythagoras ergo Fabas vetando, cavit à generatione continua ac perpetua; inſinuans ſuis, ſatius fuiſſe pollutum corruptibilis hujuſce regionis hoſpitium nunquam intrâſſe, ſed quando id integrum jam non fuerit, ſaltem ut admiſſi quàm primum generationem ſiſtant, atque ad ſuperiora redire nitantur. He refutes thoſe, who believe (g) that the Diſciples of Pythagoras were forbidden to eat Beans, becauſe they are unclean Food; and he ſays that it was for ſome Holy and Myſterious Reaſons, which they kept to themſelves. Some of 'em choſe to die rather than to reveal ſo great a Secret. A Pythagorean Woman cut off her Tongue (h), leſt the ſeverity of the Torments ſhould force her to ſpeak. (i) Ipſum autem Pythagoram ferunt ſe vita potiùs ſpoliandum perſequentibus ultro ſtitiſſe, quam per Fabetum fuga ſibi conſulere voluiſſe. Jamblichus decem, Suidas quinquaginta Pythagoreis itidem factum memorat. Millias Crotoniata mori maluit, quàm Dionyſio cauſas exponere propter quas Pythagorei Fabis abſtinerent. Perinde etiam eſt quod de ipſo Pythagora refert Suidas. Milliæ uxor Timycha, in ſimilem quæſtionem veniens, ſuam ſibi linguam præmordit, ne, tormentis victa, cogeretur τῶν ἐχεμυθουμένων τι ἀνακαλύψαι, arcanorum quidpiam detegere, referente Jamblicho. Menagius quotes a Paſſage taken from the Life of St. Artemius, which ſays that (k) Theano, a Scholar and Wife of Pythagoras, refuſing to tell the Reaſon why they abſtained from Beans, was put to Death; but her Tongue was cut off, before ſhe was put to Death.

I ſhall obſerve by the by, that the School of Salerno, in the Edition of Renatus Moreau, forbids to eat Beans; Manducare fabam caveas, facit illa podagram. The learned and large Collections which that Phyſician has publiſhed on that Precept, deſerve to be conſulted. They contain a great many Remarks which concern Pythagoras.

(K) For a great Magician.] I ſhall quote a Paſſage out of the Apology for Great Men accuſed of Magick. "He was look'd upon as a Sorcerer and an " Inchanter, becauſe, firſt, he made a long Stay in " Egypt, and read the Books of Zoroaſter, wherein
" he learned, as one may gueſs, the Properties of " certain Herbs, which he called Coraceſia, Callicia,
" Menais, Corinthas and Aproxis, the two firſt
" whereof turned Water into Ice, when they were " put into it, the two next were an excellent Remedy
" againſt the Biting of Serpents, and the " laſt would be kindled of a ſudden at any diſtance
" from the Fire. Likewiſe in one of his Symbols
" he expreſly forbad the uſe of Beans, which according " to the ſame Superſtition he boyl'd and " expoſed to the Moon for ſome Nights, till by a " great power of Magick they turned into Blood;
" which perhaps ſerved him to make that other " Preſtige mentioned by Cælius Rhodiginus (1) after " Suidas and the Interpreter of Ariſtophanes in the " Comedy of the Clouds, who ſay, that that Philoſopher
" uſed to write with Blood upon a Looking-glaſs,
" any thing that he had a mind to, and " holding thoſe Letters againſt the Face of the " Moon

(m) Ariſt. in libro de Fabis ap. Diog. Laert. in Pythagora l. 8. n. 34.

(n) Aul. Gell. ub. ſup.

(o) See the Art. Molza.

(p) Mauro, capitolo in lode della fava fol. 78. verſo, in a Collection of Rime Piacevoli, printed at Vicenza 1603.

(a) Aul. Gell. ub. ſup.

(b) There is in Tully, inflationem magnam is cibus tranquillitati mentis quærenti vera contrariam. Aul. Gell. muſt needs have quoted thoſe Words without Book. See Philip. Caroli animadverſ. in A. Gell. p. m. 266, 267.

(c) Eſt qui nixus parum firmo tibicine de papillis muliebribus intellexit; alii teſtes operte ſignificari volunt, alii, alia quæ parumper attinet deſpicere. Ja. Windet de vita functorum ſtatu p. 79. edit. Lond. 1677.

(d) Id. ib. p. 108.

(e) Id. p. 110, 111.

(f) Apud Diog. Laert. l. 8. n. 34. ἢ ὅτι ᾅδου πύλαις ἀγόνατον γὰρ μόνον. Sive quod inferni januis (ſimiles ſunt fabæ) ſolæ enim geniculatæ non ſunt.

(g) Nimis autem populariter dictum eſt Ægyptios & Phenetas ipſumque Pythagoram Fabas utpote immundas adſpernatos: cùm revera non ob immunditiem ſed ob ſacras rationes abſtinuerint. Id. ib. p. 81.

(h) Compare with this what the Curtezan Leæna did at Athens. Plin. l. 34. c. 8. p. m. 122. Athen. l. 13. p. 596. Pauſ. l. 1. p. 41. and Polyæn. l. 8. ſpeak of it. See Father Bouhours, Entretien du Secret p. m. 197, 198.

(i) Id. Windet. ib. p. 84.

(k) Θεανὼ δ', ἡ τούτου γαμετὴ καὶ μαθήτρια, μὴ θέλουσα τὴν αἰτίαν ἐξειπεῖν, δι' ἣν τῶν κυάμων οὐκ ἐσθίουσι, τὴν γλῶτταν ἐκτμηθεῖσα, τύραννον καὶ αὐτὴ σφ- ἀπόλλυται, &c. Vita Sancti Artemii in codice MS. Bibliotheca Colbertina numero 82. p. 48. apud Menagium notis in Diogen. Laert. l. 8. n. 50. p. 378.

(1) Lib. 9. c. 23.

tain; we shall see upon what Grounds. I shall observe that Naudæus clears (L) him from that Accusation. I might observe a great many other things; but I must be short, and I avoid every thing that may be found in Moreri. Nevertheless, the " Moon when it was at Full, he saw in that Planet " every thing he had written upon his Looking-" glass. To which may be added, that he appear'd " at the Olympick Games with a Golden Thigh, " that he was saluted by the River Nessus, that he " stopt an Eagle that was flying, tamed a She-" Bear, killed a Serpent, and drove away an Ox " which spoiled a Field of Beans, only by the Virtue " of some Words. Besides, he was seen the " very same Day, and at the same Hour in the Ci-" ties of Crotona and Metapontum, and used to fore-" tell Things to come with so great a Confidence, " that many are of Opinion he was named Py- " thagoras, because the Answers he gave were " not less certain and true than those of Apollo Py- " thius. " Thus far Naudæus in the 15th Chap. pag. 215. of his Apology for Great Men. He tells us, p. 214, that what he has said may be collected out of Jamblichus, Pliny, Tertullian, Origen, St. Augustin, Ammianus Marcellinus, the Jesuit Delrio, and Boissardus.

(L) Naudæus clears him from that Accusation.] See his Apology for Great Men; I shall only transcribe the following Words. (l) " The Proofs which " are grounded upon that Philosopher's prohibiting " the use of Beans, and his way of turning their " Juice into Blood, may be as easily refuted as the " foregoing, since Reuchlin despises with great " Reason all the Fooleries which many crack-brain'd " and Fantastical Men have invented about that " Prohibition, such as that of Hermippus in Dio- " genes, who believed that Pythagoras chose to be " kill'd near a Field of Beans, rather than go thro' " it to escape from his Enemies; and if it be true " that he forbad 'em, he did it for no other Reason " than the First out of the Five, which Mr. Moreau " gives for it (2) in the above-mention'd Place of " his Commentary on the School of Salern...... " (m) In like manner it may be said, that there " was nothing extraordinary in his converting " Beans into Blood; for Mr. Moreau very clearly " shews in the said Commentary, that according to " the Principles of Chymists, who reckon Simili-" tude and Resemblance as Causes of Actions, it is " a thing that may be done and explained by " Natural Reasons: but there is no need to believe " that Pythagoras made use of that Elixir of Beans, " or Human Blood, to write upon his Looking-" glass: for besides that, he could have no Reason " to use Blood rather than any other Liquor, Cam- " panella (3) proves with very solid Reasons, that " such an Operation is altogether impossible; and " when Agrippa (4) boasted that he had that Se-" cret, and Natalis Comes (5) wrote that in the " time of Francis I. and Charles V. they knew at " Paris in the Night, every thing that past in the " Castle of Milan in the Day; the former said so " only to commend himself, and to be cried up, " as we shall shew more fully in his Chapter, and " what the latter says, is a meer Fable and Lye, " contrived by those who had a mind to add Ma-" gick to the Arms of those two Great (a) " Princes, as we are told that Ninus and Zoroaster, " Pyrrhus and Cræsus, Nectanebus and Philip of Ma- " cedonia formerly did. From whence we may " judge, that all that is said of Pythagoras's Look-" ing-glass is as falsely ascribed to him, as the Su-" perstitious Arithmetick, and the Wheel of Ono-" mancy, or that if he practised it at any time, it " was doubtless some Trick, Prestige and Subtilty; " and to conclude with Suidas, παίγνιον διὰ κα-" τόπτρου..... (b) It would be needless to insist " any longer upon his killing, with the muttering " of some Words, a Serpent which wasted the Coun-" try of Italy, because Boissardus, who alledges A- " ristotle for it, does not quote the Book out of " which he had it, and if any one will more nar-" rowly enquire into the Truth of that Story, it " will be found to be altogether false, being found-" ed only upon the Ignorance of those who change " Socrates into Pythagoras, and take as a true Histo-" ry the Fable concerning the former, which " may be read in a Book of the Causes and Pro-" perties of the Elements, which (1) Patricius " shews to have been falsly ascribed to Aristotle. " But that Inadvertency of Boissardus might be ea-" sily excused, had he not committed another much " worse, when he quotes Plutarch in the Life of " Numa, to give Credit to the History of the Ox, " which Pythagoras (2) drove out of a Field of " Beans, after he had whispered something in " his Ear. It had been better for him to confess " that he had it from Cælius Rhodiginus who does " indeed quote Plutarch in the Beginning of " his Chapter, but upon a Subject different from " that Story, of which he never made any men-" tion. "

(l) Nau-deus, Apology for Great Men accused of Magick p.
225, 226.

(2) Cap.
19.

(m) Nau-
dæus ib. p.
226, 227.

(3) Lib. 4.
de sensu
c. 15.

(4) Lib. 1.
de occult.
Philosoph.
c. 6.

(5) Lib. 3.
c. 17. My-thol.

(a) See
the Art.
Francis I.
Rem. H.

(b) Nau-
dæus ib. p.
227.

(1) Discuss.
Peri.
tom.
l. 3.

(2) Lib.
Tertii.

I think the Reader will be glad to find here the Greek Words of Aristophanes's Scholiast corrected by the learned Meziriac. I shall conclude this Discourse, says he (c), with a pretty Remark, which the Scholiast on Aristophanes and Suidas make upon these Words, Θετταλὴ γυνὴ, which concern a Magical Operation about the Moon. Ἐστὶ δὲ καὶ Πυθαγόρου παίγνιον διὰ τοῦ κατόπτρου τοιοῦτο· πανσελήνου τῆς σελήνης οὔσης, εἴ τις ἐν κατόπτρῳ ἀπογράψειεν αἵματι ἃ βούλεται, καὶ προειπὼν ἑτέρῳ, σταίη κατόπιν αὐτοῦ, δεικνὺς πρὸς τὴν σελήνην τὰ γράμματα, κἀκεῖνος ἀτενίσαντα ὁ[illegible] εἰς τὸν τῆς σελήνης κύκλον, ἀναγνῶναι πάντα τὰ ἐν τῷ κατόπτρῳ γεγραμμένα, ὡς ἐπὶ τῆς σελήνης γεγραμμένα. There is a Trick of Pythagoras's Invention, which is performed with a Looking-glass in this manner. The Moon being at Full, some Body writes on a Looking-glass any thing that he has a mind to with Blood, and having given notice of it to another, he stands behind him, and turns towards the Moon the Letters written in the Looking-glass, and then the other looking fixedly on the Globe of the Moon, reads in it all that is written on the Looking-glass, as if it were written on the Moon. I have corrected two Faults in that Passage, reading πανσελήνου instead of πανσελήνης, according to the Opinion of the learned Meursius, in his Book concerning the Græcian Games, who had this Correction from Suidas; and reading also ἀτενίσαντα instead of ἀτενίσας. As for Suidas, it seems that he only transcribed that Passage Word for Word; but there are many Faults in all the printed Books of that Author. You will find the Correction of those Faults in Meziriac. Consult the Remarks (d) on the Berger Extravagant. The impertinent Story of Natalis Comes has crept into many Books: so true it is, that any one who prints Hear-says, does the Publick wrong. There are but too many Authors who will adopt it one after another. Because Saint Romuald inserted that Story in his Chronological Treasure, Father l'Enfant has inserted it in his General History of all the Centuries of the New Law. " The manner, says he (e), how to " know what passes abroad, without Magick: write " those things in large Letters upon a Looking-" glass, and hold it against the Moon, and the same " things will be read in another Looking-glass " wherein the Moon is to be seen. Thus Francis I. " being at War with Charles V. for the Dutchy of " Milan, it was known the next Night at Paris. " If such things were related to be laugh'd at, one might avoid being censured for it. Thus John Leo relates a Fable, which was in vogue in Egypt. " Among the Ptolemies, says he (f), there was one " formerly King of Alexandria, who, for the secu-" rity of the City, and to make it impregnable, " and put it in a condition of avoiding, without " any Danger, the Assaults of the Enemy, caused " a Column to be erected, and a Steel-Looking-glass " to be set on the Top of it, which had such a " Virtue, that all the Ships of the Enemies that " sailed by that Column (the Looking-glass being " uncovered) were miraculously set on Fire, which " was the only Reason why he caused it to be e-" rected in that manner, in the Mouth of the Port. " But 'tis said that the Mahometans spoiled the " Looking-glass at their Arrival, whereby it lost " that Vertue, no less admirable than unusual, and " then they carried the Column away. But this is a " ridiculous Story, and only fit for Children, and not " for those who have any Judgment. " Add to this what I have said in the Remark L, of the Article Hercules, and these Words of William Bouchet, (g) " That Woman's Looking-glass must needs have " been inchanted and full of Diabolical Magick of " Toledo: seeing the Inhabitants of Rhodes could

STORIES about Looking-glasses.

(c) Meziriac upon Ovid's Epistles p.
607, 608.

(d) Upon the 7th Book p. m. 321.

(e) David l'Enfant a Dominican, Hist. Generale de tous les Siecles, on the 21st of June, p. 347. He quotes Tresor Chronol. p. 519. tom. 1.

(f) Descript. of Africa, fol. 358. Antwerp 1556. I make use of the French Translation of John Temporal.

(g) Will. Bouchet, Serée 19. p. m. 171, 172.

" see tho' he ſpeaks of the Metempſychoſis, I ſhall ſay (M) ſomething of it. I fancy that 'twas by reaſon of this Opinion that he diſapproved the ſacrificing of Beaſts, and 'tis obſerved, that he adored an Altar on which no Sacrifice had ever been offered, as a (M△) Place which had never been profaned or polluted. I have not mentioned the Native Country of Pythagoras, becauſe there are ſeveral Opinions about it; ſome ſay he was a Tyrrhenian, others a Syrian, others affirm that he was born in the Iſle of Samos, others, in the Iſle * of Cephalonia †, &c. The Heathen Philoſophers never ſaid any thing truer, than what he ſaid concerning (N) God, and the End of all our Actions; and 'tis likely

" ſee the Ships that ſailed into Syria or Egypt in a Looking-glaſs, which hung at the Sun's Neck upon their Coloſſus."

The Story of Noſtradamus's Looking glaſſes is not better than the foregoing. 'Tis ſaid that he ſaw in ſome Taliſmanick Looking-glaſſes, Things to come, which he happily foretold, as 'tis pretended. (h) Fuit, qui narravit, ſpeculis quibuſdam Aſtrologicis Noſtradamum ad has prædictiones uſum. Nam, qui arcaniora Phyſica & Aſtrologica cognita habent, ajunt è metallis, tanquam Planetis terreſtribus, eâdem configuratione, quâ Planetæ in Thematibus Natalitiis ponuntur, ſub certis conſtellationibus ſpecula fieri poſſe, in quibus futura cernantur. Talia ſpecula non pro hominibus tantum, ſed & nationibus, urbibus, ſeculis, ut illi ajunt, fabricari poſſunt.

(M) I ſhall ſay ſomething of the Metempſychoſis.] They ſay that Pythagoras bragg'd of a ſpecial Privilege about it; for he boaſted that he could remember in what Body he had been before he was Pythagoras. But he went no farther back than the Age of the City of Troy. He had been firſt Æthalides, who was reputed the Son of Mercury, and it being in his Choice to demand of that God whatever he would, he begged of him that he might remember every thing after his Death. Some time after he was Euphorbus, and was wounded by Menelaus at the Siege of Troy. After the Death of Euphorbus, he was Hermotimus, and then a Fiſher at Delos named Pyrrhus, and at laſt Pythagoras, a Man who remembred all thoſe Tranſmigrations, and what he had ſuffered in Hell, and what other Souls ſuffer there (i). Here is a little Contradiction; for if the Souls of Men go from one Body into another, they don't go into Hell. Our Philoſopher goes up no higher than Euphorbus in Ovid:

Morte (l) carent animæ, ſemperque priore relictâ
Sede, novis domibus vivunt, habitantque receptæ.
Ipſe ego (nam memini) Trojani tempore belli
Panthoides Euphorbus eram: cui pectore quondam
Hæſit in adverſo gravis haſta minoris Atridæ.
Cognovi clypeum lævæ geſtamina noſtræ
Nuper Abanteis, templo Junonis, in Argis.

O happy Memory, ſays Lactantius, (m) O miram, & ſingularem Pythagoræ memoriam. O miſeram oblivionem noſtrum omnium, qui neſciamus, qui ante fuerimus; ſed fortaſſe vel errore aliquo, vel gratia ſit effectum, ut ille ſolus lethæum gurgitem non attigerit, nec oblivionis aquam guſtaverit. Videlicet ſenex vanus (ſicut otioſæ aniculæ ſolent) fabulas tanquam infantibus credulis finxit. Quod ſi benè ſenſiſſet de iis, quibus hæc locutus eſt, ſi homines eos exiſtimaſſet, nunquam ſibi tam petulanter mentiendi licentiam vendicaſſet. Sed deridenda hominis leviſſimi vanitas. Lactantius ſhould have known that Pythagoras aſcribed his Memory to the favour of the Gods; he might have read it in Heraclides; and it will be ſaid, that without this one might eaſily fancy, that Pythagoras prevented the Objection which other Men would raiſe againſt him, becauſe they did not remember any Pre-exiſtence. I anſwer to that Objection, that in ſome reſpects it is not likely he would have been ſo bold as to boaſt of ſuch a thing: otherwiſe his Contempt of other Men, as Lactantius obſerves, had been very great; but if we conſider the thing another way, we ſhall find nothing in it that is againſt likelihood. He had acquired ſo great a Reputation and made ſo many Experiments of the blind Docility, and great Credulity of his Hearers, that he might eaſily flatter himſelf, that what he ſhould ſay concerning his Memory would not be diſbelieved. If you deſire to know his ſeveral Tranſmigrations ſince the Death of Pythagoras, you need but read the following Words, and you'll ſee that he proved a Curtezan at the third Change. (a) Pythagoram verò ipſum ſicuti celebre eſt Euphorbum primo ſe fuiſſe dictitaſſe; ita hæc remotiora ſunt his, quæ Clearchus & Dicæarchus memoriæ tradiderunt, fuiſſe eum poſtea Pyrandrum, deinde Callicleam, deinde feminam pulchra facie meretricem, cui nomen fuerat Alce. He invented not the Metempſychoſis: he learned it of the Egyptians (b); which made him ſpoil the fine Doctrine he had heard of Pherecydes, about the Immortality of the Soul, wherewith he had been ſo moved, that he gave over the Trade of an Athlete all of a ſudden, to ſtudy Philoſophy. (c) Quis nunc extremus idiota, vel quæ abjecta muliercula non credit animæ immortalitatem, vitamque poſt mortem futuram? Quod apud Græcos olim primus Pherecydes Aſſyrius cum diſputaſſet, Pythagoram Samium illius diſputationis novitate permotum ex athleta in Philoſophum vertit.

(M△) That he adored an Altar ..... as a Place which had never been profaned or polluted.] 'Twas an Altar conſecrated to Apollo in the Iſle of Delos. Read theſe Words of Macrobius: (‡) Conſtat (ſicut Cloatius Verus ordinatorum libro ſecundo docet) eſſe Deli aram apud quam hoſtia non cæditur, ſed tantum ſolemni deum prece venerantur: verba Cloatii hæc ſunt. Deli ara eſt Apollinis Γενέτορος in qua nullum animal ſacrificatur, quam Pythagoram quaſi inviolatum adoraviſſe produnt ..... Meminit hujus aræ & Cato de liberis educandis in hæc verba: Nutrix hæc omnia faciebat, in verbenis & tubis ſine hoſtia ut Deli ad Apollinis Genitivi Aram.

(N) Than what he ſaid concerning God, and the End of all our Actions.] He acknowledged the Unity of God; for he ſaid that Unity was the Principle of all things, and that out of it came the Subject it made uſe of as its Matter, and that out of its Action upon that Matter came out Numbers, Figures, Elements, the viſible World, &c. (d) Ἀρχὴν μὲν τῶν ἁπάντων, μονάδα· ἐκ δὲ τῆς μονάδος ἀόριστον δυάδα, ὡς ἂν ὕλην τῇ μονάδι αἰτίῳ ὄντι ὑποστῆναι, &c. (e) Omnium rerum id quod unum eſt, eſſe initium; ex eo geminum quod infinitum eſt, profectum tanquam materiem illi ipſi uni, quod cauſa eſt, ſubjectum eſſe, &c. He ſaid, that that Unity was God, the Good, the Underſtanding, the Mind. (f) Τὴν μὲν μονάδα θεόν, καὶ τἀγαθόν, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἡ τοῦ ἑνὸς φύσις, αὐτὸς ὁ νοῦς. Unitatem Deum ac bonum quæ ſit Unius natura, ipſa mens. Caſaubon (g) the Son, alledges a Paſſage out of Stobæus which ought to be mended. Πυθαγόρας τῶν ἀρχῶν τὴν μὲν μονάδα θεὸν καὶ τ' ἀγαθόν. ἥτις ἐστὶν ἡ τοῦ νοὸς φύσις· ὁ αὐτὸς ὁ νοῦς. καὶ τὴν ἀόριστον δυάδα, καὶ τὸ κακὸν περὶ ἥν ἐστι τὸ ὑλικὸν πλῆθος. Stobæus had it from Plutarch (h), we muſt therefore read τοῦ ἑνὸς inſtead of τοῦ νοὸς. The Doctrine of Pythagoras is not ſo Orthodox in that Paſſage, as in that of Diogenes Laertius; for, according to Plutarch, he admitted of Two Independent Principles, Unity and Binary, and aſcribed to the firſt the Divine Eſſence, Goodneſs and Underſtanding, and to the ſecond, the Nature of a Dæmon, Evil and Matter. We ſhall judge more advantageouſly of his Doctrine, if we take it out of Clemens Alexandrinus. (i) Οὐκ ἀποκρυπτέον οὐδὲ τοὺς ἀμφὶ τὸν Πυθαγόραν, οἵ φασιν, Ὁ μὲν Θεὸς, εἷς· χ' οὗτος δὲ οὐχ, ὥς τινες ὑπονοοῦσιν, ἐκτὸς τᾶς διακοσμήσιος, ἀλλ' ἐν αὐτᾷ ὅλος, ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κύκλῳ, ἐπίσκοπος πάσας γενέσιος, κρᾶσις τῶν ὅλων· ἀεὶ ὤν, καὶ ἐργάτας τῶν αὐτοῦ δυναμίων καὶ ἔργων ἁπάντων, ἐν οὐρανῷ φωστήρ, καὶ πάντων πατήρ, νοῦς καὶ ψύχωσις τῷ ὅλῳ κύκλῳ, πάντων κίνασις. Nec verò prætermittendi ſunt Pythagoræ ſectatores, quippe qui dicant, Deum quidem unum eſſe, non ita tamen, ut quidam opinantur, quaſi ſit extra mundi adminiſtrationem, ſed eſt totus in ipſa, in toto circulo, ſpeculator totius generationis, univerſorum contemperatio, qui ſemper eſt, & ſuas facultates deducit ad opus, omnium operum in cœlo illuſtrator, pater omnium, mens & animatio totius circuli, omnium motus. The worſt of it is that Pythagoras repreſenting God to himſelf as the Mover of the Univerſe, and the Soul of the World,

---

* At Samos a Town of that Iſland.

† Vid. Farnab. in Ovid. Met. l. 15. v. 60.

(h) Morhofius, Polyhiſt. l. 1. c. 10. p. 98.

(i) Ex Heraclide Pontico ap. Laert. ub. ſup. n. 4. & 5.

(l) Ovid. Met. l. 15. v. 158.

(m) Lactant. Div. Inſt. l. 3. c. 18. p. m. 196.

(a) Aul. Gell. l. 4. c. 11.

(b) Herodot. l. 2. c. 123. 'Tis true, he did not mention the Name of Pythagoras, but Diodorus Siculus, l. 1. mentions him.

(c) August. Ep. 3. p. m. 9.

(‡) Macrob. Saturn. l. 3. c. 6. p. m. 415.

(d) Diog. Laert. ub. ſup. n. 25.

(e) St Aldobrandinus renders it in the beginning of his Note upon these words of Laertius. See alſo Mer. Caſaubon on Laert. ib. n. 25.

(f) Plut. in plac. philoſoph. l. 1. c. 7. p. 881.

(g) Not. in Diog. Laert. in Alcmæon. l. 8. n. 83.

(h) The next Words of Plutarch are Τὴν δ' ἀόριστον δυάδα δαίμονα καὶ τὸ κακόν, περὶ ἣν ἐστὶ τὸ ὑλικὸν πλῆθος. Infinitam autem binarii naturam, genium & malum unde eſt multitudo materiæ, & viſa likely that he had carried his Orthodoxy much farther, had he had Courage enough to expose himself to Martyrdom. The Circumstances (O) of his Death are variously World, affirmed that our Souls are some Portions of God. There is an Objection against this Doctrine of Pythagoras to be found in Tully, which cannot be answered. (k) Nam Pythagoras, qui censuit (Deum) animum esse per naturam rerum omnem intentum & commeantem, ex quo nostri animi carperentur, non vidit distractione humanorum animorum discerpi & dilacerari Deum: & cum miseri animi essent, quod plerisque contingeret, tum Dei partem esse miseram: quod fieri non potest. Cur autem quicquam ignoraret animus hominis, si esset Deus? quomodo porro Deus iste, si nihil esset nisi animus, aut infixus, aut infusus esset in mundo. St. Epiphanius ascribes to that Philosopher an ill Opinion, viz. that God has a Corporeal and Organized Nature, being nothing else but Heaven, and making use of the Sun and Moon as two Eyes, and so of the other parts of the Firmament (l). But here is a Thought which is absolutely true: Clemens Alexandrinus compares it with St. Paul's Words. None but God is Wise, said Pythagoras (m). The Author of the Jewish Antiquities seems to be very well satisfied with the Doctrines of many Philosophers, especially of Pythagoras concerning the Nature of God, and he doubts not but they had spoken more soundly still, had they not been afraid of a Persecution; for as Plato says, it is not safe to tell Ignorant Men the Truth concerning the Divine Nature. (n) Καὶ γὰρ Πυθαγόρας καὶ Ἀναξαγόρας καὶ Πλάτων, καὶ οἱ μετ' ἐκείνους ἀπὸ τῆς στοᾶς φιλόσοφοι, καὶ μικροῦ δεῖν ἅπαντες οὕτω φαίνονται περὶ τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ φύσεως πεφρονηκότες. ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν πρὸς ὀλίγους φιλοσοφοῦντες εἰς πλῆθος δόξαις προκατειλημμένον τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ δόγματος ἐξενεγκεῖν οὐκ ἐτόλμησαν...... (o) Αὐτὸς δὲ Πλάτων ὡμολόγηκεν, ὅτι τὴν ἀληθῆ περὶ θεοῦ δόξαν εἰς τὴν τοῦ ὄχλου ἄγνοιαν οὐκ ἦν ἀσφαλὲς ἐξενεγκεῖν. Pythagoras enim, & Anaxagoras, & Plato, & post illos philosophi Stoici, & pene cuncti, videntur de divina sapuisse natura. Sed hi quidem ad breve philosophantes, populo superstitionum opinionibus jam præoccupato veritatem dogmatis proferre timuêre...... Ipse siquidem Plato confessus est, quia veram de Deo opinionem propter ignorantiam plebis proferre securum non est. The same Josephus affirms, (p) that Pythagoras exceeded all the Ancient Philosophers in Piety and Wisdom. We must not forget an Observation of Plutarch: when he shews the conformity there was between the Thoughts of Numa and those of Pythagoras, he says (q), that Numa would not have the Deity to be represented by any Images, and that God, according to Pythagoras, is an Impassible Nature, which does not fall under our Senses, and can only be the Object of the Understanding. (r) Οὔτε γὰρ ἐκεῖνος αἰσθητὸν ἢ παθητόν, ἀόρατον δὲ καὶ ἀκήρατον καὶ νοητὸν ὑπελάμβανεν εἶναι τὸ πρῶτον. Neque enim ille sensui aut ulli dolori expositum rerum principium esse, sed invisibile, incorruptum, sola mente existimavit apprehensibile.

(i) Clem. Alexandr. in admonit. ad Gentes p. 47. C. See alſo Juſt. Mart. Oratione ad Gentes p. 58.

As for the End of our Actions and Studies, nothing can be more admirable, nor more Christian, than what Pythagoras said about it; for he taught that the Study of Philosophy should tend to make Men like God. (s) Πρὸς τὴν θείαν ὁμοίωσιν ἀνάγει, καὶ τῆς Πυθαγορικῆς φιλοσοφίας τὸν τελεώτατον σκοπὸν ἐκκαλύπτει: ad divinam similitudinem ducunt, Pythagoricæque philosophiæ finem perfectissimum ostendunt. This is an Encomium bestowed on a piece of Poetry, which contains the Doctrines of that Philosopher. They consist of two parts, which may be very well compared to the Purgative and Unitive Ways so much talk'd of by our Mysticks. Hierocles, qui commentarios eruditissimos in Carmen Aureum Pythagoræ reliquit, statim ab initio de Pythagorica philosophia differens, appellat eam κάθαρσιν καὶ τελειότητα, purgationem, & perfectionem. Quæ duo cum subindicent officium ipsius duplex ac propositum, ut loco alio monstravi, duplicem videri possunt Pythagoras & Pythagorici habuisse philosophiam, quarum illa sit καθαρτικὴ, hæc vero τελικὴ, illa, quæ purgat à malis, separat à materia & corpore, liberat à vinculis & carcere; hæc, quæ perficiat, evehat & reportet sursum, & εἰς τὸ εἶδος τῆς ἀρχαίας ἕξεως, ut loquitur Hierocles, id est habitus prioris formam inducat, similesque faciat Deo.... Id quod ipse indicat Hierocles in sequentibus, quando dicit, αὕτη γὰρ (carmen aureum) πάντα περιείληφε πρακτικῆς καὶ θεωρητικῆς τὰ κεφάλαια δόγματα, δι' ὧν ἄν τις ἑαυτὸν καθαίρειν δύναιτο καὶ τὴν πρὸς θεὸν ὁμοίωσιν ἐπιτηδεύειν. Continet philosophiæ omnis practicæ ac theoreticæ decreta summa quibus quis & purgare se, & similem Deo facere valeat (t). The Author whom I have quoted, alledges (v) several Passages, whereby it appears, that according to that Philosopher, the Acquisition of Truth was the only way to attain to the Likeness of God; but that Truth cannot be known, unless it be enquired after with a purified Soul, and such as has overcome the Passions of the Body; from whence he concludes thus: (a) Ex iis, quæ superiori capite attulimus, manifestum est, philosophiam Pythagoricam id habere sibi maxime propositum, ut ad quandam similitudinem cum Deo sectatores suos ducat; id vero fieri aliter non posse, quam si veritati atque sapientiæ pura integraque mente incumbatur. I add to this the Testimony of the Anonymous Author, who wrote the Life of Pythagoras. He says (b), that the Followers of that Philosopher taught, that Men make themselves perfect three ways. 1. By conversing with the Gods; for during that Commerce, they abstain from every evil Action, and become like the Gods, as much as such a thing is possible. 2. By (c) doing good to others; for it is God's Property, it is an Imitation of God. 3. By going out of this Life. The best Presents which Heaven gave to Men, according to Pythagoras (d), are to speak Truth, and do good Offices: those two things, said he, resemble the Works of God.

(O) The Circumstances of his Death are variously reported.] He lived at Crotona, in Milo's House with his Disciples, and was burnt in it. A Man whom he refused to admit into his Society, set the House on Fire (e). 'Tis likely that he had not a good Physiognomy; for Pythagoras received none for his Disciples, but those whose Look he liked, after he had examined it according to the Rules of Art. It was his first Step. (f) Jam à principio adolescentes qui sese ad discendum obtulerant, ἐφυσιογνωμόνει. Id verbum significat, mores naturasque hominum, conjectatione quadam de oris & vultus ingenio, deque totius corporis filo atque habitu, sciscitari. Eum, qui exploratus ab eo idoneusque fuerat, recipi in disciplinam statim jubebat. Some say that (g) he was suspected of endeavouring to usurp the Sovereignty; and that to prevent his Design, the Crotoniates set his House on Fire. He made his Escape thro' the Flames, and went out of the City; but as he was going into a Field of Beans, he stopt, and chose rather (h) to be kill'd, than to open his Mouth and spoil the Beans. According to Dicæarchus (i) he fled to the Temple of the Muses at Metapontum, and died there with Hunger, after he had fasted 40 Days. Others say (k), that at his Return from the Isle of Delos, whither he went to shut the Eyes of his Master Pherecydes, and to Bury him, he himself put a stop to his Life, by abstaining from Food. According to some other Writers (l), he brought all his Disciples to the Assistance of the Agrigentins against the Syracusans; and having been worsted, he was killed whilst he was running about a Field of Beans. Which does not very well agree neither with the 80 Years which they say (m) he lived, nor with the (n) 90, much less still with the (o) 99, or (p) 104 Years mentioned by others. See upon this the learned Collections of Menagius (q). He has not forgot to quote Arnobius, who affirms, that Pythagoras was burnt alive in a Temple. (r) Pythagoras Samius suspicione dominationis injusta vivus concrematus in fano est: numquid ea, quæ docuit vim propriam perdiderunt, quia non spiritum sponte, sed crudelitate appetitus effudit? Justin intimates that he died without any violence at Metapontum, whither he retired after he had been 20 Years at Crotona, and that he died there, being so much admired, that his House was converted into a Temple, and that he was honoured as a God. Cum annos viginti Crotonæ egisset, Metapontum migravit, ibique decessit, cujus tanta admiratio fuit, ut ex domo ejus tem-

(k) Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. p. m. 41. See Minutius Felix, who says p. m. 151. Pythagoræ Deus est animus per universam rerum naturam commeans, & intentus: ex quo etiam animalium omnium vita capiatur. Lactantius says the same l. 1. c. 5. p. m. 14.

(l) Epiph. hær. 13. p. 14.

(m) Apud Clement. Alexand. Strom. l. 4. p. 477.

(n) Jo... pn. cont. ...ppi n. l. ...p. 1071.

(o) Id. ib. p. 1076.

(p) Σοφίᾳ ... τὰ περὶ ... θεῖον ...εβείᾳ ... Sapientia & divina pietate philosophos omnes excellens. Id. l. 1. contra Appion. p. ...45.

(q) Plut. ... Numa ...65.

(r) Id. ... B.

(s) Hierocles in ...gat. ad ...mina ...ea cir- ...fin. See ...Stro ...s Ec- ... 11. c. ... where ... says ...gánt, Πλάτων ταῦτα τῷ Πυθαγόρᾳ, τέλος ὁμοίωσιν ... Socrates & Plato quemadmodum Pythagoras finem dixerunt, dei similitudinem.

(t) Jean. Scheffer. de Natur. & constitutione philosophiæ Italicæ c. 10. p. 78.

(v) Ib. c. 7.

(a) Id. ib. c. 8. p. 56.

(b) Apud Photium cod. 249. p. 1313.

(c) Δεύτερον ἐν τῷ εὖ ποιεῖν: θεοῦ γὰρ τοῦτο καὶ θεῖον μιμητικόν. Deinde bene de aliis merendo: Dei enim hoc proprium est, in eoque Deum imitatur. Phot. ib.

(d) Ælian. var. hist. l. 12. c. 59.

(e) Diog. Laert. ub. sup. n. 39.

(f) Aul. Gell. l. 1. c. 9.

(g) Laert. ib.

(h) Ἁλῶναι μᾶλλον ἢ πατῆσαι αἱρετώτερον ἢ χρεῖττον ἢ λαλῆσαι. Capi præstat quam has dare pessum, cadique satius est quam quicquam loqui. Id. ib. Meric Casaubon thinks that 'tis better to read ἀλῶσαι, vagari, to wander miserably, instead of λαλῆσαι.

(i) Id. ibi n. 40.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Id. ib. n. 44. (n) Id. ib. (o) Tzetzes, Chil. 11. v. 366. (p) Anonymus ap. Photium p. 1313. (q) Menag. in Diog. Laert. p. 371. & seq. (r) Arnob. l. 1. p. 23.

ouſly reported. I ſhall name ſome Authors who have treated (P) of his Doctrine. One may ſee in the Hiſtory ‡ of Phyſick, what concerns him as a Phyſician.

PYTHEAS, was born at Marſeilles. I think that the moſt certain thing that can be ſaid concerning the Time wherein he lived, is, that he lived (A) in the time plum facerent, eumque pro Deo colerent (s). Valerius Maximus does not ſay ſo much of him; but he is none of thoſe who ſay he was ill uſed. (t) Cujus ardentem rogum plenis venerationis oculis Metapontus aſpexit: oppidum Pythagoræ quam ſuorum cinerum nobilius clariuſve monumentum.

St. Epiphanius was groſly miſtaken when he ſaid (v) that Pythagoras died in the Country of the Medians.

(P) Some Authors who have treated of his Doctrine.] I ſhall confine my ſelf to Modern Authors. William Canterus tranſlated into Latin the Fragments of Pythagoras, collected by Stobæus. Eraſmus (w), Philip Beroaldus, Gyraldus, Claudius Minos, Franceſ Berni, Nicolas Scutelli, and ſome others, made ſome Notes upon the Symbols of that Philoſopher. See alſo Lipſius (x); the Commentaries of Ritterſhuſius upon Malchus; the Diſſertation of Holſtenius, De vita & ſcriptis Pythagoræ; Rodericus à Caſtro's Pythagoras; Paganinus Gaudentius De Pythagorea animarum tranſmigratione; the Dialogue of Ambroſius Rhodius de Tranſmigratione; the Diſſertation of Claudius Lignier de ſecta Pythagorica; the Theſis of Mark Mappus de Ethica Pythagoræ, maintained at Straſburg under the Profeſſor Schallerus; Schilterus's Diſſertation de Diſciplina Pythagorica; the above-mentioned Book of John Schefferus; the Book intitled Ethica Pythagorica (y) written by Magnus Daniel Omeis, Profeſſor at Altdorf. See alſo La Mothe le Vayer in his Book de la Vertu des Payens. 'Tis thought that the Golden Verſes of Pythagoras, are the Work of his Diſciple Lyſis. An Ancient Philoſopher of Alexandria, named Hierocles, wrote a Commentary on them, and we have that Commentary commented by Caſaubon's Son. We have alſo ſome Commentaries made upon the ſame Verſes by Vitus Amerbachius, Theodorus Marcilius, Henry Brem, Michael Neander, John Straſelius, William Diezius, and Magnus Daniel Omeis. I had almoſt forgot Joachim Zehnerus's (z) Book.

(A) That he lived in the time of Alexander the Great.] Voſſius is ſomewhat more (aa) preciſe: he ſays that Pytheas lived under Ptolemy Philadelphus. Father (bb) Hardouin follows him. Moreri ſays that it was in the 440th or 445th Year of Rome; but he ſhould have known, that the firſt Year of the Reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus falls, according to Calviſius, on the Year of Rome 468. We have ſome Reaſons to believe that Pytheas flouriſhed before that time. Voſſius ſhews (cc), that Eratoſthenes wrote after Pytheas; but he did not make uſe of the cleareſt Proof of it: he was contented to alledge this Reaſon, that Polybius having pitched amongſt other Geographers upon Dicæarchus, Eratoſthenes and Pytheas, to cenſure them, ſays (dd) that Eratoſthenes wrote the laſt of all. There is a Proof more poſitive than that in the ſame Page, ſeeing Strabo ſays in that place, that Polybius wondered that Eratoſthenes did believe what Pytheas had written. Polybius wondered ſo much the more at it, becauſe he obſerved that Eratoſthenes believed ſeveral things which Dicæarchus did not believe. Pytheas was therefore (ee) an Author before Eratoſthenes and Dicæarchus wrote their Geographical Books. We ſhall draw ſome Conſequences from it. But I ſhall firſt give my Opinion concerning the Words wherein Strabo thinks that Polybius's way of Reaſoning is ridiculous. Perhaps he underſtood not well what Polybius meant. I am apt to think that that Great Man argued thus: Dicæarchus is a very credulous Author, and has committed abundance of Miſtakes; yet he would not believe ſeveral things related by Pytheas; one may therefore wonder how Eratoſthenes, who lived after him, could believe thoſe very things which he knew were rejected by Dicæarchus. But Strabo pretends that Polybius argued thus: Dicæarchus is a very judicious Author, and to be look'd upon as a Model; it is therefore very ſtrange that Eratoſthenes believed Pytheas in ſeveral things, which Dicæarchus did not believe. Suppoſing that Polybius reaſons after that manner, Strabo might very well laugh at him, conſidering the great number of Faults which Polybius had criticized in Dicæarchus's Writings. But once more, I would not Swear that he underſtood well Polybius's Meaning. I wiſh we could verifie it; we might then learn many other Facts, which we are ignorant of, by reaſon of the Loſs of ſo many Books of that Author. I ſhall obſerve by the by, a Fault in the Latin Tranſlation of Strabo. The whole ſtrength of this Repetition, μὴ τῷ Δικαιάρχῳ πιστεύσαντος, is altogether enervated: to render that Place well, the ſame Repetition which is in the Original, ſhould have been made uſe of. The Reader may judge of it, if he will give himſelf the trouble to examine this Citation. (ff) Ἐρατοσθένη δὲ τὸν μὲν Εὐήμερον Βεργαῖον καλεῖν, Πυθέᾳ δὲ πιστεύειν· καὶ ταῦτα δὲ μὴ τῷ Δικαιάρχῳ πιστεύσαντος. Τὸ μὲν οὖν μὴ τῷ Δικαιάρχῳ πιστεύσαντος, γελοῖον ὥσπερ ἐκείνῳ χρῆσθαι κανόνι προσῆκον, καθ' οὗ τοσούτους ἐλέγχους αὐτὸς προφέρεται. Interim Eratoſthenem qui Euemerum Bergæum appellet, Pytheæ credere, atque hoc ne Dicæarcho quidem credente. Id quidem ridiculum eſt quod Dicæarchum profert, quaſi vero conveniat eum veluti normam ſequi quem ipſe Polybius tot reprehenſionibus inceſſit. However we learn from thence that Pytheas's Books were written not only before thoſe of Eratoſthenes, but alſo before thoſe of Dicæarchus. We know that the latter was Diſciple of Ariſtotle, and dedicated a Book to Theophraſtus, Ariſtotle's beloved Diſciple. It is therefore very likely that Pytheas lived before the Reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, ſince his Writings came out before thoſe of Dicæarchus, who muſt needs have been an old Man under the Reign of that Prince. In effect, the beginning of that Reign falls in the laſt Year of the 123 Olympiad; Ariſtotle gave over Teaching (a) before the End of the 114th Olympiad, and his Scholars were moſt of them grown Men. We learn from Pliny that (b) Pytheas publiſhed his Works before Timæus publiſhed his; for the latter affirms upon the other's Word, what I have ſaid concerning Amber, in the Text of this Article. But neither Timæus nor Eratoſthenes, who wrote after Pytheas, can prove any thing againſt Voſſius, becauſe they (c) lived ſo long, that they might have ſeen the Relations of Pytheas, tho' they had not been publiſhed before the Reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus; and 'tis well known that an Author who relates what he has read in another, may be older than he, and even Die before him; ſo that tho' Timæus and Eratoſthenes wrote after Pytheas, we can infer from it nothing that is certain concerning the Age of Pytheas. The beſt proof we can have to place him before the Reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, is, becauſe he was cited by Dicæarchus. Voſſius did not remember it, when he (d) placed Dicæarchus before Pytheas. If Sanſon, one of the beſt Geographers of the XVII. Century, had conſidered this little Point of Chronology, he had not ſaid (e), that Pytheas mentioned the Converſations which the Father of Scipio Africanus had with the Deputies of Marſeilles in the Year of Rome 532. One of Pytheas's Lyes in the Opinion of (f) Polybius, was, that None of the Inhabitants of Marſeilles could tell Scipio any remarkable thing concerning Britain. I have obſerved in the Article Abbeville the other Miſtakes of Sanſon about that Matter. It remains to ſay, that he ſhould not have underſtood that Scipio, who landed at the Mouth of the Rhone, to obſerve the Motions of Annibal, ſince it is impoſſible that Pytheas ſhould have writ any thing ſince that Voyage of Scipio, his Works having been read by Dicæarchus, Ariſtotle's Diſciple; for there was a hundred Years at leaſt between the Time when Ariſtotle left off teaching School, and the Beginning of the ſecond Punick War. It would be a difficult thing to know who was that Scipio, who, as Pytheas relates it, inquired about Britain of the Inhabitants of Marſeilles, Narbonne and Corbilon; but it is certain he was not the Father of that Scipio who overcame Carthage. I wonder that Father Labbe did not obſerve that Miſtake of Sanſon, and I don't believe that he was willing to ſpare him. He might alſo have been cenſured for (g) reckoning near a hundred Years between Pytheas and Polybius. Which does not agree with his Hypotheſis, viz. that Pytheas wrote his Relations after the Year of Rome 532, which was but 16 Years before the Birth of Polybius (b). Nay, according to that Suppoſition, Pytheas was not returned from his Travels in 532, for if he was returned then, the Deputies of Marſeilles ‡ Printed at Geneva in the year 1696, and written by D. L. C. D. M. that is to ſay David le Clerc Doctor of Phyſick. He is Brother of Mr. le Clerc Profeſſor at Amſterdam.

(s) Juſt. l. 20. c. 4. p. m. 395.

(t) Val. Max. l. 8. c. 7. n. 2. in ext.

(v) Epiph. hær. 15. p. 14.

(w) In the Beginning of his Chiliads of Proverbs.

(x) Manuduct. ad Philoſoph. Stoic. l. 1. diſſert. 6.

(y) Printed at Altdorf 1693.

(z) Paſtor ac Superintendens Schleugenſis. He publiſhed at Leipſick in 1603. Vitam & fragmenta Pythagoræ.

(aa) Voſſ. de Philologia p. 55. in his Treatiſe de Hiſt. Græc. p. 457. He adds vel certè proximus huic tempori fuit.

(bb) In Indice Plin.

(cc) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Græc. p. 110.

(dd) Ap. Strab. l. 1. p. 71.

(ee) See the Rem. F.

(ff) Strab. l. 1. p. 71.

(a) Apol. Ind. apud Diog. Laert. in Ariſt.

(b) Plin. l. 37. c. 2.

(c) Eratoſthenes lived 80 Years. He was born in the 126*th Olympiad, and died in the* 146*th. See Voſſ.* de Hiſt. Græc. p. 108. Lucian ſays he lived 82 Years, and that Timæus lived 96 Years. But Timæus wrote the War of Pyrrhus againſt the Romans, and therefore lived under Ptolemy Philadelphus.

(d) De Philolog. c. 11. n. 7. Moreri hath quoted wrong, de Philoſ. c. 11. n. 6.

(e) Nicol. Sanſon, An Enquiry into the Antiquities of Abbeville.

(f) Ap. Strab. l. 4. p. 131.

(g) Sanſon ub. ſup. p. 85.

(b) He was born in the year of Rome 548. See Voſſ. de Hiſt. Græc. p. 122.

Time of Alexander the Great. He wrote ſome Geographical (B) Books, which in all likelihood were nothing elſe but a Relation of his Travels. He ſtrangely abuſed this Maxim, A Traveller may Lie with Authority; for he fill'd his Books with Fables concerning the Northern Countries, where he pretended to have been. He knew that few Ocular Witneſſes could convict him of his Lies; but Poſterity left not his Boldneſs unpuniſhed. Polybius was very hard upon him; Strabo falls upon him on ſeveral Occaſions with great * Severity. Thoſe two Authors could not endure that he ſhould ſay with Impunity, that in the Iſle (C) of Thule, ſix Days Journey from Great Britain towards the North, and in all thoſe Parts, there was neither Land, nor Sea, nor Air, but a Compound of thoſe three Things, like the Pulmo (D) Marinus, over which the Sea and Land hung up, and which was a kind of a Tie to all the parts of the World, and that it was impoſſible to go thither on Foot, or in a Ship. He boaſted that he had ſeen that Subſtance which reſembled the Pulmo Marinus: as for the reſt, he confeſt that he knew nothing of it but by Hear-ſay. He boaſted alſo, that he had travelled in all the Countries of Europe which lie on the Ocean, from Cadiz to the River Tanais; which Polybius could not believe of a meer † Private-Man, and not well provided with Money. However, 'tis confeſt χ, that he underſtood well enough the Properties of the Northern Countries, for what concerns the Aſpects of the Sun; and what he ſaid ‡, that the Barbarians ſhewed him the Place where the Sun went to Sleep, and that in ſome of thoſe Countries the Night laſted not above three Hours, and in others not above two, does not at all look like a Fable, and does him a great deal more Honour than another thing which Pliny relates after him, viz. that there was an Iſland, a Days Journey from the Country of the Guttones, a People of Germany, wherein ⸸ they uſed Amber inſtead of Wood for their Fuel. The Reader may conſult the Apology which (E) Peter Gaſſendus wrote for Pytheas at the Deſire of Peireskius. Thoſe two illuſtrious Men born in Provence, were very willing to raiſe the Glory of their Country, by defending the Reputation of a Writer who was born in Marſeilles. Gaſſendus, tho' a learned Man, was (F) miſtaken in his Conjectures ſeilles might have anſwered the Queſtions of the Roman Conſul.

I ſhall acquaint the Reader that Mr. Sanſon, worthy Son of the Great Geographer, who publiſhed the Antiquities of Abbeville, has done me the Favour to ſend me the Copy of an Anſwer to Father Labbe, which his Father deſign'd to Print. It is a learned and ingenious Piece. I hope I ſhall find an occaſion to publiſh ſome Fragments thereof.

(B) Some Geographical Books.] The Scholiaſt (i) upon Apollonius mentions a Book of Pytheas, intitled γῆς περίοδος, the Circuit of the Earth. The Abridgment of Artemidorus the Epheſian, printed with the Ancient Geographers, names Pytheas among thoſe who wrote the Circuit of the World, periplum (k) Orbis. The Deſcription of the Iſle of Thule was, in all likelihood, part of that Work. His Book de Oceano is quoted by Geminus. Nicolas Sanſon (l) is not the only one who entered the Liſts with Strabo, for the ſake of Pytheas. We ſhall ſee by and by that Gaſſendus undertook very zealouſly the Defence of that Ancient Marſeillois.

(C) That in the Iſle of Thule.] Having proved with ſolid Reaſons, that Pytheas publiſhed his Books about the time of Alexander, I may reject one of the Arguments which Father Vavaſſeur made uſe of againſt Photius. I have refuted another in the Article (m) Antony. Photius thinks that Antonius Diogenes lived near the Reign of Alexander the Great. Father Vavaſſeur anſwers to it amongſt other things, that he (n) does not believe that the Iſle of Thule was very well known at that time. Antonius Diogenes was the Author of a Romance, intitled Incredibilia de Inſula Thule. It matters not whether that Iſland was not known to the common People, or whether it was not very well known in general; for if a Traveller, ſuch as Pytheas, publiſhed a Relation of it, a Romantick Writer might eaſily pitch upon that Iſland to make it the Scene of his Chimerical Narrations. I will not examine whether Photius is in the right or not, 'tis enough for me to prove that he has not been well refuted.

(D) Like the Pulmo Marinus.] La Mothe le Vayer (o) obſerves, that it is a Spongious Zoophyte, upon which the Italians have beſtowed a very obſcene Name; and having ſaid that Pytheas maintained that that Matter was the Tie of the Univerſe, and that he was ſo Impudent, as to ſpeak of it as of a Thing which he had ſeen, he ſpeaks of an Anachoret, who boaſted that he had been at the very End of the World, and who ſaid, that being there, he was obliged to bend his Shoulders, becauſe the Heaven and Earth touched one another at that Extremity.

(E) Which Peter Gaſſendus wrote for Pytheas.] This was the occaſion of it. When Peireskius cauſed the Solſtitial Elevation of the Sun to be obſerved at Marſeilles in 1636, the Proportion between the Shadow and the Style of the Dial was compared with what Hipparchus (p) ſays that Pytheas found out. Gaſſendus was deſired to write about that Aſtronomical Operation, and to juſtifie Pytheas againſt Strabo's Invectives. (a) Voluit rurſus (Peireskius) ut quoniam Strabo multa congeſſit adverſus Pytheam, ipſe in gratiam comprovincialis apologiam conſcriberem, purgaremque virum qui primus Thulen inſulam demonſtravit, & quo non habet Occidens totus quem antiquiorem in doctis habeat. What he wrote thereupon is to be found in the 4th Vol. of his (b) Works. He did not forget that Cleomedes ſtiles Pytheas a Philoſopher; and that Hipparchus having cenſured Eudoxus, for ſaying, that there is a certain Star which never goes out of its Place, and is the Pole of the World, praiſes Pytheas for having taught that the Pole is a place void of Stars, which makes a kind of a Square with the three neighbouring Stars. Hipparchus, in imitation of Eratoſthenes, inriched his Geography with Pytheas's Diſcoveries; and 'tis no wonder if the latter was miſtaken about the Tanais, conſidering the Ignorance of thoſe Times about Pontus Euxinus, the Caſpian Sea and the Palus Meotis. When Alexander came to the Banks of the Caſpian Sea, it was taken for Pontus Euxinus. Gaſſendus adds ſeveral other Remarks in Pytheas's behalf. The Reader may have ſeen in the Nouvelles de la Republique des (c) Lettres, that Olaus Rudbeckius took warmly the part of that Traveller.

(F) Was miſtaken in his Conjectures.] He believed that the Marſeillois being aſhamed becauſe they could not Anſwer Scipio's Queſtions about Britain, and beſides, being ſtirred up by his Advices, reſolved to ſend ſome Body to take a View of that Country, and in order to it, pitch'd upon Pytheas, who was a good Mathematician. The Republick of Marſeilles was already powerful by Sea, and very much addicted to Trade; they might therefore be deſirous to know whether their Trade might be improved by the Diſcovery of thoſe unknown Countries. Polybius's Objection may be ſolved thereby; it would be no wonder how Pytheas, a poor Private-Man, could be at the Charges of ſo long a Journey. Beſides, it may be anſwered, that a Company of Merchants, or a rich Citizen, might have pitch'd upon Pytheas to make that Diſcovery, and furniſh him with all Neceſſaries. If Gaſſendus had ſaid no more, I ſhould not find Fault with him; but jectures about that Author; nevertheleſs, the reading of his Apology may be of ſome uſe. Our Pytheas (G) ought not to be confounded with the Athenian Orator of the ſame Name, who lived in the time of Demoſthenes.

---

* Πυθέας ἀνὴρ ψευδίστατος ἐξήτασται. Pytheas homo mendaciſſimus inventus eſt. l. 1. p. 41. Vid. etiam p. 44. & l. 2. p. 71, 79. l. 4. p. 139.

† Φησὶ δ' ὁ Πολύβιος ἄπιστον καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, πῶς ἰδιώτῃ ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ πένητι τὰ τοσαῦτα διαστήματα πλωτὰ καὶ πορευτὰ γένοιτο. Polybius autem id quoque incredibile ait eſſe, privatum hominem, cumque pauperem tantum ſpacii mari terraque obiviſſe. Strab. l. 2. p. 71.

χ Id. l. 4. p. 139.

‡ Apud Geminum Iſagog. ad Phænom.

⸸ Incolas pro ligno ad ignem uti eo, proximiſque Teutonis vendere. Plin. l. 37. c. 2.

(i) In. l. 4.

(k) See Voſſ. ib. p. 110.

(l) Ub. ſup.

(m) See the Rem. B.

(n) Suſpicio quoque eſt nondum cognitam vulgo Thulen inſulam de qua illi feruntur inſcripti libri. Vavaſſor, de Lud. Dict. p. 148, 149.

(o) Let. 89. tom. 11. of his Works in 12. *p.*255.

(p) Apud Strab. l. 2. p. 78.

(a) Gaſſendus in vit. Peiresk. l. 5. Oper. tom. 5. p. 327.

(b) Pag. 524. & ſeq.

(c) February 1685, p. 133.

P Y T H I A S, Ariſtotle's Daughter, was married thrice, firſt to Nicanor, according to her Father's (A) laſt Will, afterwards to Procles, who deſcended from Demaratus King of Sparta, and laſtly to Metrodorus the Phyſician, Diſciple of Chryſippus a Cnidian, and Maſter of Eraſiſtratus. The two Sons † ſhe had by her ſecond Huſband, ſtudied Philoſophy under Theophraſtus. The Son ſhe had by Metrodorus (B) was called Ariſtotle *. It appears by ſome Sentences which are aſcribed (C) to her, that her Father beſtowed a good Education upon her. Note, that her Mother's Name was PYTHIAS.

† The one was called Procles, and the other Demaratus.

* Taken from Sextus Empiricus adv. Mathem. c.12. p. 51.

P I T H O M, a City of Egypt. It was one β of the two Towns which Pharaoh cauſed to be built by the Poſterity of Jacob. It is the ſame with Peluſium, and with that which Manetho calls Abaris, if we believe Marſham γ. The City of Abaris was ſo called δ according to the Ancient Theology. It ζ was in the Saites Nomos, Eaſtward of the River Bubaſtus. The Beauty of its Situation moved Saltis, King of certain Nations who ſubdued Egypt, to Inlarge and Fortifie it. He kept in it a Garriſon of 240 thouſand Men. The ſame People intrenched themſelves there after they had loſt the reſt of Egypt. They defended themſelves for a long time, but at laſt they capitulated, and obtained the Liberty of going whither they pleaſed. They retired into Syria, and ſettled in Judea η. One may eaſily perceive by this Diſcourſe of Manetho, that he means the Iſraelites. He adds θ that Amenophis, who reigned over the Egyptians about five Ages after, deſired to ſee the Gods, and that a Great Prophet entertained him in the hopes of ſuch an Advantage, provided Egypt were purged from all manner of People infected with Leproſy, or other like Infirmities. That ſort of People were gathered together, and amounted to 80 thouſand Men: they were employed in drawing and cutting Stones β Exod. ch. 1. v. 8.

γ Marſh. Chron.Can. Ægypt. ſacul 8. p. m. 107.

δ Manethon apud Joseph. l. 1. cont. Appion. p. 1040.

ζ Id. ap. eumd. ib. p. 1039.

η Ex eodem ap. eumd. p. 1040.

θ Id. ap. eumd. ib. p. 1052.

but he ſays, that he who enquired about Britain of the Marſeillois, in the time of the ſecond Punick War, which began in the 140th Olympiad, was either Scipio Africanus, or the Father or Uncle of that Scipio. Which cannot be true, ſince Dicearchus had read Pytheas's Travels. Gaſſendus ſays, to elude that Proof, that the Words of Strabo may bear this Senſe, viz. that Pytheas's Relations might have diſpleaſed Dicaarchus. But it is certain that this is not Strabo's meaning: his Participle (d) πιστεύσας, and the whole force of his Argument are againſt this Explication. Godefridus Wendelinus, to whom Gaſſendus wrote thoſe things, anſwered his (e) Queſtion, viz. In what Time Pytheas lived, thus, that it was in the Time of Alexander the Great: which he proved 1. by Dicaarchus's railing at Pytheas: 2. Becauſe Timaus, an Enemy of Agathocles, was familiarly acquainted with Pytheas at Marſeilles during his Exile; from whence Wendelinus concludes, that Pytheas lived before Agathocles. But it is a wrong Conſequence; for it does not follow becauſe a Traveller grows familiarly acquainted with a baniſhed Perſon, that he is therefore older than he who baniſhed that Perſon. Beſides, Wendelinus makes his Author ſay more than he ſaid; for he refers us to Pliny (f), who only ſays that Timaus believed what Pytheas related about Amber.

(G) Ought not to be confounded.] Father (g) Hardouin applies to Pytheas of Marſeilles, what Plutarch ſays of one Pytheas in the Life of Demoſthenes, p. 855; but there is doubt that Pytheas mentioned by Plutarch in that Place, is the ſame Athenian Orator whom he ſpeaks of p. 849. where he ſays, that Pytheas told Demoſthenes in Jeſt, (h) that his Orations ſmelt of Oyl. He ſpeaks of the ſame Pytheas in the Life of Phocion (i), as of a talkative and inſolent Orator, whom Phocion was forced to ſnub. Suidas, who gives us the ſame Notion of him, tells us, that he made his Eſcape from the Priſon wherein his Creditors kept him, and retired into Macedonia. Plutarch ſays, that Pytheas having fled from Athens, went to Antipater, and ſerved him as much as he was able with his Harangues. He had then (k) a Quarrel with Demoſthenes in Arcadia, who, tho' a baniſh'd Man, joyn'd with the Athenian Ambaſſadors, to oblige the Gracian Towns to make a Confederacy againſt Antipater, whoſe Cauſe was defended by Pytheas.

Plutarch relates in his Precepts about Government, a quick Repartee of Pytheas. "And Pytheas "the Orator, ſays he (l), when he oppoſed the "Honours decreed to Alexander, anſwered one who "told him, How dareſt thou ſpeak of ſo great "Things, being ſo young? Alexander, whom you "make a God by your Decrees, is younger ſtill "than I am."

(A) To Nicanor, according to her Father's laſt Will.] We don't find that Circumſtance in Sextus Empiricus; but he ſays, that Ariſtotle, after the Death of his Father and Mother, was bred up in the Houſe of Proxenus, a Native of Atarna, and to requite that good Service, he bred up Nicanor, Son of Proxenus, and took care that he ſhould learn all manner of good things, and adopted him, and even ordered by his Laſt Will that he ſhould marry his Daughter Pythias (m).

(B) The Son ſhe had by Metrodorus was named Ariſtotle.] Pliny has confounded that Genealogy; for he thought that Ariſtotle's Daughter had a Son, who was Eraſiſtratus the Phyſician. Horum placita, ſays he (n), Chryſippus ingenti garrulitate mutavit, plurimumque & ex Chryſippo diſcipulus ejus Eraſiſtratus Ariſtotelis filia genitus. Let us conſider the Greek Words of Sextus Empiricus. (o) Τρίτῳ δὲ Μητροδώρῳ ἰατρῷ, Χρυσίππου μὲν τοῦ Κνιδίου μαθητῇ, Ἐρασιστράτου δὲ ὑφηγητῇ· ᾧ γίνεται παῖς Ἀριστοτέλης. Tertio autem Metrodoro Medico, (Pythias filia Ariſtotelis nupſit) Chryſippi quidem Cnidii diſcipulo, praceptori autem Eraſiſtrati, cui natus eſt filius Ariſtoteles. It is not very difficult to underſtand thoſe Words; they ſignifie that Ariſtotle was the Son of Metrodorus the Phyſician, and of Pythias; but one may conjecture, that all the Authors who ſpoke of the ſeveral Marriages of Ariſtotle's Daughter, placed not their Words right, and that a Reader who was not attentive enough, might think that their meaning was that Eraſiſtratus was born of the Marriage of Metrodorus and Pythias. Let us ſuppoſe that thoſe Authors ſaid: Τρίτῳ δὲ Μητροδώρῳ ἰατρῷ Χρυσίππου τοῦ Κνιδίου μαθητῇ, οὗ Ἐρασίστρατος, γίνεται παῖς Ἀριστοτέλης. Tertio autem Metrodoro Medico (Pythias filia Ariſtotelis nupſit) Chryſippi Cnidii diſcipulo, cujus Eraſiſtratus (p) diſcipulus, natus eſt filius Ariſtoteles We may eaſily apprehend, that a Reader might believe, for want of Attention, that Eraſiſtratus was the Son of Pythias. How do we know but that Pliny made uſe of an Author, who had placed his Words ſo, or in a more deceitful manner? Obſerve the Latin Tranſlation of Sextus Empiricus, which I have ſet down: one would think by it that Eraſiſtratus was Ariſtotle's Father. However, I ſhould prefer thoſe Conjectures before that of Father Hardouin (q). He believes that Eraſiſtratus was adopted by Pythias, as the Emperor Galba was adopted by his Step-Mother. He muſt therefore ſuppoſe, that Eraſiſtratus was Metrodorus's Son, but Sextus Empiricus ſays only that he was his Diſciple.

(C) By ſome Sentences which are aſcribed to her.] She ſaid amongſt other things, that the beſt Colour that can be ſeen in a Man's Face, is that of Modeſty. (a) Celebrantur quidem multa dicta Pythiades filia

(d) See the Rem. A.

(e) Vid. Gaſſend. tom. 6. p. 483.

(f) Lib. 37. c. 2.

(g) In Indice Plinii.

(h) See Ælian. hiſt. div. l. 7. c. 7. He mentions him alſo l. 14. c. 28.

(i) Pag. 751.

(k) Plut. in Demoſt. p. 858.

(l) Plut. de gerenda Repub. p. 804. See alſo Plutarch in Apophth. p. 187.

(m) Taken from Ammonius in vit. Ariſtotel. init. See alſo the laſt Will of Ariſtotle in Diog. Laert. l. 5. n. 12. and the Note of Caſaubon.

(n) Plin. l. 29. c. 1. p. m. 663.

(o) Sext. Empir. adv. Mathem. p. 51.

(p) That Word is very often underſtood when the Greeks ſpeak of the Succeſſion of Philoſophers.

(q) Hardouin. in Plin. ub. ſup. p. 664.

(a) Pet. Alcyonius in medices legato poſteriore fol. h 1. verſo.

Stones all along the Nile. After they had undergone that Fatigue for some Years, they besought the King to assign a City to them for their Security and Quiet. He granted 'em Abaris, which was then deserted, and did before belong to the a Shepherds, and was called the City of Typhon, according to the Ancient Theology. They no sooner came into it, but they began to think of taking Advantage of that Place to Revolt; they took care to fortifie it, and chose for their Head a Priest of Heliopolis, who changed his Name of Osarsiphus into that of Moses, they were assisted by the Inhabitants of Jerusalem, whose Ancestors had been in possession of Abaris, &c. Their Victories were great and cruel, but at last the King of Egypt overcame them, and expell'd 'em out of the Country x. You'll find in Josephus the Refutation of those Stories, and some learned Observations of Marsham (Z) in my Remark.

PITISCUS (Bartholomew) Preacher to the Elector Palatin, was born the 24th of August 1561, at Schlauna, a Village of Silesia near Grunberg. The Poverty of his Family moved the Minister of that Place, to recommend him to the Lord of that Village, as a Child who was fit to Study, and who deserved to be put in the way of improving himself. That Gentleman undertook to be at the Charges of it, and sent him to the College of Grunberg. He exceeded all his School-Fellows in a short time. He was sent to Breslaw, being 18 Years of Age, and was there a Preceptor in the House of an Honest Man, who had a very fine Library. He often shut up himself in it with Amandus Polanus, which proved a very useful thing to both of them. Having lost his Mæcenas, when it was time to go to the Universities, he was so happy as to be assisted by the Liberality of a Protestant † Lady, who maintained, at her own Charges, a certain number of young Men, who studied Divinity. He pitch'd upon the Academy of Servesta, by reason of the great Reputation of Wolfgang Amlingus, and was there all the Year 1583. The next Year he went into the Palatinate, and having given many Proofs of his Merit there, he was made one * of the Preceptors of Prince ‡ Frederic IV. He acquitted himself so well in his Employment, that Prince Casimir, Administrator of the Palatinate, made him the Second Preacher of his Pupil, who when he came of Age, was so well pleased with his Preceptor's Sermons, that he made him his First Preacher. Pitiscus did gloriously exercise that Employment till he died, which happened the 17th of July 1613 ‡. I must not forget that he became (A) a very great Mathematician, and published a Book, wherein he shewed that it would be very necessary that Protestants should leave off writing (B) Controversial Books a That is to say, the Israelites, who, as Manetho says, had subdued Egypt, and whose K. Salis had inlarged and fortified the City of Abaris.

x Ex ead. ib. p. 1052. & seq.

† The Wife of Joachim de Berge.

* It was in the year 1588. Scultetus in narrat. Apologet. p. 11.

‡ He was Elector since.

‡ Taken from Melchior Adam in vit. Theolog. Germ. p. 833. & seq.

(b) Pag. m. 621.

(c) Marsh. Chron. Can. Ægypt. sec. 8. p. 107.

filiæ Aristotelis gravissima, ut appareat eandem ipsam non tam in gremio educatam quam in sermone patris, quo nemo unquam fuit vel acumine præstantior, vel festivitate & lepore politior, vel suavitate conditior. Ex illis autem id etiam accepimus, nullum esse pulchrius coloris genus in facie hominis ingenui quam id quod ob verecundiam superveniret. See Erasmus in the (b) 8 Book of the Apophthegms.

(Z) And some learned Observations of Marsham in my Remark.] He says (c), that the City of the Shepherds called Abaris by Manetho, is called Pelusium by (d) another Historian of Egypt. Marsham is not exact in this: that Historian said only, that the maim'd and infirm People, that were turned out of Egypt, retired to Pelusium, and joyned with 380 thousand Men whom Amenophis had left there. I shall observe, that Josephus (e) took Advantage of the Difference that is between Manetho and Charemon, as to the Place to which those maim'd and leprous People were sent. Marsham adds, that Ptolomæus Mendesius (f) made mention of the City of (g) Abaris, and that the Fables about Typhon belong to that City. The Lake Serbonis, as he goes on, where (h) Typhon hid himself, and the City of Heropolis, where (i) he was Thunder-struck, were not far from those Parts. The Name πιθὼν, or πιθὼμ, given to one of the Towns built by the Children of Israel, alluded to that of Typhon. The Egyptians used to call Typhon by the Name (k) of Seth, hence it is that they called the City of Typhon, Sethron. The Sethroites Nomos took its Name from that City. What Josephus says is not therefore true, that the City of Abaris was built in the Saites Nomos, for it was situated on the Eastern Banks of the River Bubastus, and that Nomos was situated in the Western part of the Delta. It is therefore better to follow (l) Africanus's Manetho, quoted by Syncellus; for according to that Citation, that People took Memphis, and built a Town in the Sethroites Nomos. Let us conclude, that the City of Abaris, that of Sethron, and that of Pithom, which is mentioned in Exodus, are the same with that which the Grecians call Pelusium. So says Marsham.

(A) He became a very great Mathematician.] He published in Latin Five Books of Trigonometry, in 1599, which were re-printed with some Additions in 1612. That Work contains 6 Books of Astronomical Problems; a Book Problematum Geodæticorum sive agro plano metiendo ac dividendo: problemata geographica: a Book Problematum Gnomonicorum ac architectonicorum, in quo se ait præcipua architecturæ militaris mysteria reserasse (m). Tycho Brahe did very much esteem Pitiscus's Capacity in the Mathematicks, and wished that the number of Mathematician Preachers was greater, for he believed that it would give 'em a more solid Judgment, and put an end to several Disputes. Here are his Words: (n) Doctissimi illius Bartholomæi Pitisci de triangulis acutum & compendiosum libellum lubens accepi: rogoque ut illi ex me gratias agas. Optarem, plures ejusmodi concionatores reperiri, qui Geometrica gnaviter callerent: forte plus esset in iis circumspecti & solidi judicii, rixarum inanium & logomachiarum minus. Si is mihi aliquando scripserit; & de iis studiis mecum contulerit: inveniet responsorem non invitum. That Wish of Tycho Brahe is grounded upon a very good Reason, but it is liable to some Inconveniencies. A pompous and florid Eloquence is necessary to Preachers: a dry and close way of Reasoning, like that of Mathematicians, is not proper for them, and would not make such an Impression upon their Hearers, as the State of Man requires. Note, that Pitiscus learned of (a) himself all that he knew of the Mathematicks.

(B) That the Protestants should leave off Writing Controversial Books one against another.] In the Year 1608, the Ecclesiastical Senate of the Elector Palatin deliberated about the (b) means of putting a stop to the sad Disputes of the Protestant Divines. Scultetus, Preacher to his Electoral Highness, and some others were of Opinion, that it was for the Advantage of the Church, that for the time to come the Reformed should make neither Apologies, nor Antilogies, nor any such like Pieces of Controversie; that it was not possible to say or to write any thing but what had been said or written a

---

(d) Named Charemon. Joseph. l. 1. cont. Appion. p. 1057. alleges his Words.

(e) Joseph. ub. sup.

(f) Ptol. Mendesius ap. Euseb. præp. Evang. l. 10. c. 12. p. 497. A.

(g) He calls it Ἀυάρις.

(h) Herod. l. 3. c. 5.

(i) Steph. Byzant. in Ἡρῶ.

(k) Plut. de Iside p. 357. D.

(l) Rectius ex Manethone Africanus. Marsh. ub. sup. p. 108. He quotes Syncellus p. 61. a.

(m) See Vossius de scient. Mathem. p. 306. & alibi.

(n) Tycho Brahe Epist. ad Conradum Assachum ap. Melch. Adamum in vitis Theolog. p. 840.

(a) Illud verò mirandum, quod homo Theologus, in Mathematum studiis, nullo, nisi se magistro, eo usque progressus est, ut editis scriptis, disciplinæ illius gloriam magnis Matheseos professoribus præripuerit. Melchior. Adam. ib. (b) Quænam tristissimis Theologorum Evangelicorum certaminibus medicina reperiri queat. Scultet. narrat. apologet. p. 45.

great

Books one againſt another. There was a Conſultation about that Subject, after which he was charged with that Work. He (C) publiſhed ſome other Books.

PLANTEVIT-LA-PAUSE (John), in Latin Plantavitius Pauſanus, Biſhop of Lodeve, was born in the Caſtle of Marcaſſargues, a Houſe belonging to his Mother, in the Dioceſs of Nîmes. He was very learned in the Knowledge of the Oriental Languages, as it appears from the Books (T) he publiſhed. He was not only born a Proteſtant, but he had been alſo Miniſter of the Church of Beziers *. He turn'd Catholick in the Year 1604, and was preſently ſent for to Court, where Henry the Great careſſed him very much. He went to La Fleche, and performed a new Courſe of Divinity under the Jeſuits. He left that Place in 1609, to go to Rome †. He was one of the Biſhops of Languedoc, who ‖ ingaged in the Rebellion of Mr. de Montmorency. Moreri has (Z) committed ſome Faults.

PLATINA (Bartholomew γ) Author of a Hiſtory of the Popes, flouriſhed in the XV. Century. He was born in the Year 1421, in a (A) Village called Piadena, between Cremona and Mantua. His firſt Profeſſion was that of a Soldier μ; he followed it a conſiderable time, and then he applied himſelf to Study, and made a conſiderable Progreſs in it. He went to Rome ‡ in the time of ⸸ Calixtus III. and having got Cardinal Beſſarion's Acquaintance, he obtained ſome ſmall Benefices of Pius II. and then the Place of Apoſtolick Abbreviator. Paul II. Succeſſor of Pius II. turn'd all the Abbreviators out of their Places †, without any regard to the Money they had laid out to buy that Employment, or to the Remonſtrances of Platina, who humbly beſought him to Order, that their Cauſe ſhould be judged by the Auditors of the Rota. The Pope was offended at the Liberty they took, and returned (B) a very haughty Anſwer. The poor Men being deprived of their Places, great while ago; that the Confeſſions of Faith, with their Expoſitions, were ſufficient for any one who ſincerely inquired after Truth; that there was no Example of ſuch obſtinate and eager Diſputes among the Prophets and Apoſtles; that ſuch Books increaſed Differences inſtead of terminating them, and that the Satyrical Sharpneſs of the Authors of thoſe Books, made profane Men Laugh, and was a Matter of Triumph for the Papiſts, and inſpired a great many People with Irreligion. This is expreſt more at large, and with greater Energy in the Latin Words. (c) Nec componi, ſed multiplicari controverſias iſtis contentionibus: paucos veritatis inquirendæ, gloriolæ vanæ aucupandæ gratiâ, multos in arenam diſputandi deſcendere: Diabolum hoc agere, ut totus Spiritus Theologicus, & quicquid ferè DEI providentia donorum huic ſeculo contulit, contentionibus impendatur: ut Fratres ſtylo Satyrico ſe mutuò exagitent & deforment, utque adeò per ejuſmodi ſcriptiones boni à vocationis ſuæ officiis avocentur, mali in capitali, quo ab antagoniſtis diſſident, odio firmentur; denique mutuis iſtis convitiis, quibus libri inter ſe litigantium ſcatent, creari profanis riſum, Pontificiis jubilum & magnæ auditorum parti omnis religionis contemtum. It was reſolved in that Aſſembly, that our Pitiſcus ſhould pathetically and gravely repreſent thoſe things in a publick Book. He performed it (d) very well, and (e) exhorted the Proteſtants to re-unite themſelves againſt the common Enemy, and to lay aſide all Diſputes de Perſona Chriſti & de Cœna Domini; he ſhewed them that they might eaſily live in a perfect Union, tho' they differed about the Senſe of ſome Paſſages of the Scripture. That Book did more harm than good, the Divines of Saxony and Tubingen took up Arms every where, and maintained with an extream eagerneſs, that the Lutherans could make no Peace with thoſe that deny the Oral Manducation. (f) Verax & hic fuit, quod proverbii locum obtinuit, ſapientis effatum: Sæpè optimè cogitata peſſimè cadunt. Vix enim lucem publicam aſpexerat pia exhortatio illa, cùm quaſi claſſicum cecinissent noſtri, ad arma undique concurritur in Saxoniâ & Sueviâ, magnoque ſtudio & labore orbi Chriſtiano demonſtratur, oralis manducationis in Euchariſtiâ patronos non poſſe pacem colere cum Reformatis. Scultetus was extreamly deſirous to ſee the Lutherans and Reformed re-united. He exhorted the Divines of Wirtemberg to it viva voce, and in Writing; he (g) repreſented to them the Miſchiefs which ariſe from Diſcord, the Contempt of the Miniſters, and the Joy of the Papiſts. But it was to no purpoſe, for he was anſwered, that as for Political Friendſhip it was never refuſed to the Reformed, and would never be refuſed to them for the Time to come, but that Theological Friendſhip would never be granted them. (h) Fruſtra omnia: Reſponſum enim: ſe in amicitiam politicam nos ſemper recepiſſe, recepturoſque deinceps, in Theologicam, hoc eſt, fraternitatem Chriſtianam nunquam.

(C) He publiſhed ſome other Books.] Moſt of 'em in High-Dutch: but the Book he wrote againſt a Jeſuit of Mentz, with this Title Anti-Roſarium, is in Latin. See Mr. Baillet's (i) Anti's.

(T) The Books he publiſhed.] Here are the Titles of ſome of 'em. Florilegium Biblicum, Heb. Lat. at Lodeve 1645. Florilegium Rabbinicum, Heb. Lat. cum Bibliotheca Rabbinica, ibid. in the ſame Year. Theſaurus Synonymicus Hebræo-Chaldæo-Rabbinicus, ibid. in the ſame Year. An Hebrew Lexicon. Colomeſius (k) ſpeaks of a Book of Michael Beraud, Miniſter of Montauban, about Juſtification againſt that Author.

(Z) Moreri has committed ſome Faults.] I. It does clearly appear from the Atteſtation which I have quoted, that Plantevit made his Abjuration at Beziers, and not at Bourges. Good Moreri miſtook without doubt, the Meaning of the Latin Word Biterrenſi, and took it to be the ſame with Biturienſi. II. I fancy that by the ſame Miſtake he tells us, that that Prelate retired to the Caſtle of Margon, in the Dioceſs of Bourges, and died there the 28th of May 1651. III. It cannot be ſaid that a Prelate behaved himſelf with great Prudence from the Year 1625 to the Year 1648, when it is certain that he declared for the Rebels in the Year 1632. That Omiſſion is leſs excuſable than that of Plantevit's Miniſtry, and of his Studies at La Fleche, and of ſome other Facts of which there is not the leaſt Footſtep in Moreri's Dictionary. IV. Thoſe Words, he made a particular Study of Divinity in the College of Foix at Toloſe, are captious and very improper; for they would make one believe, that the College of Foix is a Houſe wherein Sciences are taught, which is not true,

(A) He was born in the Year 1421, in a Village called Piadena.] I don't find any Author that mentions that Year, but ſince Jacobus Bergamas and Maſſæus (l) place his Death in the Year 1481, and Raphael Volaterranus (m), and Leander Albertus (n) affirm that he died being ſixty Years old, it follows that he was born in the Year 1421. Thoſe who ſay (o) as Moreri does, that he was born at Verona, are miſtaken: here is the Proof of it. Idem fecit Theodorus Hexarchus Ravennas cui quidem in magiſtratu mortuo non ita multo poſt Joannes Platina ſucceſſit. Hunc ego crediderim dediſſe nomen meo natali ſolo quod Platina appellatur in agro Cremonenſi poſitum. Theſe are the very Words of Platina (p). The Italians don't call that Village Platina, but Piadena: as it appears from the Italian Tranſlation (q) of a Journey into Italy, written in Latin by Andreas Schottus. I believe that Platina was ſo called from the Place of his Birth: the Name of his Family was Sacchus, or Saccus.

(B) Returned a very haughty Anſwer.] That Pope's Anſwer does very much ſavour of Antichriſtianiſm: he plainly declared that all Right, and all the Laws depended

---

* See the Atteſtation he gave to Fitz Simon, inſerted in the Britannomachia of that Jeſuit, p. 122. where he is falſly named John de Plantavil.

† See the ſame Atteſtation.

‖ See the Paſſage of Rivetus in Jeſuita Vapulante quoted by Colomeſius Biblioth. Orient. p. 182.

γ Not Baptiſt, as he is called by Jacobus Bergamas, Leander, Albertus, Floridus Sabinus, &c. See the Proofs of it in Voſſ. de hiſt. Lat. p. 589. See alſo the Rem. H at the end.

μ Volater. l. 21. p. 777.

‡ Jovius. elog. c. 19.

⸸ Not Calixtus II. as Moreri ſays.

† Platina in Paulo II. fol. m. 350. verſo.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) His Book was written in High-Dutch.

(e) Id. ib. p. 45.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Expoſitis malis, quæ ex mutuis Evangelicorum digladiationibus orirentur, atheiſmo auditorum, contemptu miniſtrorum verbi, jubilo Papiſtarum, Id. ib. p. 72. ad ann. 1616.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Tom. 6. p. 361.

(k) Colom. Bibl. Orient. p. 182.

(l) In Chronic. They ſay that he died of the Plague.

(m) Comm. Urban. l. 21. p. 777.

(n) In deſcript. Ital. p. m. 626.

(o) Hofman. in voce Platina, & Cave in Cartophyl. Eccleſiaſt. Edit. Lipſ. p. 369. are cenſured upon that Account by Daniel Will. Mollerus, Diſſert. de Platina p. 4. Sir Thomas Pope Blount Cenſura Author. p. 339. ſets down a long Paſſage of Boiſſardus in Iconib. where Platina is called Veronenſis.

(p) In vit. Cononis fol. m. 104. That Pope reigned in the Year 686.

(q) Da Cremona à Mantoua ſi va per una ſtrada piana e diritta ove ſi trova Piadena Patria di Bartolomeo Platina. My Edit. of Vicenza 1622. fol. Pianeda.

Places, did for some Days whatever they could to obtain Audience of the Pope, but they were denied with the greatest Contempt. Which moved Platina to write a (C) Letter to him, wherein he acquainted him, that they were ready to go into Foreign Countries, and to exhort the Princes to call a Council, in order to examin whether the Abbreviators had been justly deprived of their Places. His Letter was look'd upon as an Act of Felony. He was imprisoned and kept in Irons, and left in that Condition four Months, being exposed (D) to a thousand Miseries. Afterwards he was set at Liberty, at the Request of Cardinal Francis de Gonzaga, and was ordered not to go out of Rome. He lived quietly in it for the space of three Years, and then he fell again into a new and more cruel Persecution. The Pope had been made to believe that Callimachus had conspired against him, and that Platina was one of his Accomplices. Several Persons were imprisoned, and put to the Rack upon that Account. Platina was as severely used as the rest. That Conspiracy proved a Chimera, yet not one Prisoner was set at Liberty; for they had been ashamed (E) to acknowledge, that several Persons of Merit had been cruelly treated upon an ill-grounded Suspicion. When it appeared that the Accusation of Treason was too ill-grounded to insist upon it, they came (F) to the Accusation of Heresie, which vanished away as the other. The Prisoners were not set at Liberty depended upon his Will. Here are the Latin Words of Platina. (a) Tentarunt tamen ii ad quos res ipsa pertinebat hominem è sententia dimovere: atque ego certe qui horum de numero eram rogando etiam ut causa ipsa judicibus publicis (quos Rotæ auditores vocant) committeretur. Tum ille torvis oculis me aspiciens, ita nos inquit ad judices revocas? ac si nescires omnia jura in scrinio pectoris nostri collocata esse? Sic stat sententia, inquit: loco cedant omnes, eant quo velint, nihil eos moror: pontifex sum, mihique licet pro arbitrio animi aliorum acta & rescindere & approbare.

(C) Which moved Platina to write a Letter to him.] You'll see the Contents of it in the next Words: Ego vero, says he (b), tanta ignominia excitus quod mihi ac sociis meis coram non licebat, id agere per literas institui. Scripsi itaque epistolam his verbis. Si tibi licuit indicta causa spoliare nos emptione nostra justa ac legitima, debet & nobis licere conqueri illatam injuriam injustamque ignominiam. Rejecti à te ac tam insigni contumelia affecti dilabemur passim ad reges, ad principes, eosque adhortabimur ut tibi concilium indicant, in quo potissimum rationem reddere cogaris cur nos legitima possessione spoliaveris.

REFLECTIONS on that Letter, which shew the Character of Platina.

The Character of Platina may be known from this Letter: it appears by it that he was too impatient, and too much conceited, but at the same time, a sincere Man; for since he was pleased to acquaint the Publick with his Conduct, tho' it was not agreeable to his Duty, one may reasonably suppose that he loved to write Truth. It is certain, that a Subject who is turned out of his Place by his Master, has no right to threaten him that he will complain of him to some other Princes, that he may right himself. The Pope is a Sovereign in Rome, with respect to the suppression or establishment of certain Employments, and cannot be subjected to a Council in that respect. Besides, the Pope could not but be extremely offended at Platina's Menaces about a Council. He treated the Pope as a young Boy, when he is told that his Tutor shall know of it. Besides, I should be glad to know, whether the Suppression of a College of Secretaries deserves so great a Bustle, and is worth the calling of a Council. But this is the Character of such Men, to fancy that there is nothing wherein the World is so much concerned, as what concerns 'em. Platina did not much trouble himself about other Abuses; he would have the Council chiefly to mind the Loss which the Apostolical Abbreviators had lately sustained.

(D) Exposed to a thousand Miseries.] For (c) he was in the middle of the Winter, without a Fire, in a Tower which lay open to all sorts of Winds.

(E) To acknowledge that several Persons of Merit, &c.] Of all the Defects of Men, Vanity is, perhaps, the Cause of most Crimes committed by them. How many Men are there who begin an Unjustice, being fully persuaded that they act justly? They soon perceive they were mistaken, but their Pride not permitting them to acknowledge their Fault, they go on in their Unjustice, lest any Body should come to know that they began it without Reason. Every Body had rather save his Reputation that that of his Neighbour: from whence come the numberless Shifts and Cavils of Informers, who know they are guilty of Calumny, and are afraid of being convicted of it. Here is a Pope (d) who for a false Point of Honour, persisted to Persecute those who were found Innocent, notwithstanding his Suspicions. See the Article Experiens, Rem. A and B.

(F) They came to the Accusation of Heresie.] So says Platina, Neque hoc quidem contentus Paulus quos paulo ante conjurationis & majestatis accersierat, eosdem mutata sententia ob divulgatam fabulam hæreseos accusat (e). Pomponius Lætus was apprehended at Venice, and carried to Rome. He was accused of changing the Names of young Men, and giving them a Heathenish Name instead of a Christian. 'Tis pretended that he did so, to inspire young Men with a greater Desire of Honour and Virtue; but he was contented to answer, What's that to you or to the Pope, if I have a mind to go by the Name of Fennel, provided it be without any Malice? Rogatus cur nomina adolescentibus immutaret, ut homo liber erat, quid ad vos, inquit, & Paulum si mihi fæniculi nomen indo, modo id sine dolo ac fraude fiat. Amore namque vetustatis antiquorum præclara nomina repetebat quasi quædam calcaria quæ nostram juventutem æmulatione ad virtutem incitarent (f). Besides, those Prisoners were accused of having embraced the Sect of Plato, of disputing in a doubtful manner about the Immortality of the Soul, and the Existence of God, and of valuing Paganism too much. (g) Multa nobis objicit (Paulus) sed illud potissimum quod de immortalitate animorum disputaremus, teneremusque opinionem Platonis ..... in dubium, inquit Paulus, disputando Deum vocabatis...... Præterea vero Paulus crimini nobis dabat, quod nimium gentilitatis amatores essemus. To which they answered, 1. That if they loved Plato, they did but imitate the Great St. Augustin. 2. That all the Divines and Philosophers of that Time disputed about the same Truths, and called them in Question, in order to find the Certainty of them; for it is one of the Laws of Dispute, not to take for certain what is in question, but to suppose for a time the uncertainty of it, in order to inquire without any prejudices into the Reasons and Grounds of its Belief (h). 3. That according to St. Augustin, Obstinacy in maintaining one's Errors makes one to be a Heretick, but as for them, they had always submitted to the Discipline of the Church. Platina, in particular, represented the Innocency of his Actions; that he had never forgot to confess his Sins and communicate once a Year, and that he never uttered a Word against the Apostles Creed, or that savour'd of Heresie. Nullum mihi facinus impingi potest, non furtum, non latrocinium, non sacrilegium, non depeculatus, non parricidium, non rapina, non simonia. Vixi ut Christianum decebat: confessionem & communionem in anno semel præsertim intermisi nunquam. Nil ex ore meo excidit quod contra symbolum esset, aut hæresim saperet. He observes, that no Body appear'd so fond of Pagan Antiquities as the Pope, who gathered together all the Ancient Statues to adorn his Palace (i), &c. Notwithstanding that Apology, the Pope set a Mark of Ignominy upon the Name Academick, and declared Hereticks all those who, for the Time to come, should mention the Word Academy, either in Jest or Earnest. (k) Veteres Academicos sequebamur, novos contemnentes qui in rebus ipsis nil certi ponebant. Paulus tamen hæreticos eos pronunciavit qui nomen Academiæ vel serio vel joco deinceps commemorarent. Juncta est hæc ignominia Platoni, ipse se tueatur. I have read in more than one Place, but I cannot tell where, that

that

(a) In Vita Pauli II. fol. m. 358. verso.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Revinctus compedibus & quidem gravissimis media hieme sine foco, celsa in turri ac ventis omnibus exposita coerceor mensibus quatuor. Platina ub. sup. fol. 351.

(d) Christophorus Veronensis Pauli Medicus ad me veniens, bono inquit animo te esse jubet Paulus: ac de se bene sperare brevique liberum futurum: sciscitor quando id fore speraret. Respondet homo liber audientibus omnibus qui tum aderant: non ita cito fieri posse ne levitatis & sævitiæ argueretur pontifex, quod illos quos tanto tumultu concitato cepisset ac torsisset, statim veluti innoxios dimitteret. Ib. fol. 358.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Platina ib. fol. 358. verso.

(g) Ibid. fol. 359.

(h) In dubium, inquit Paulus disputando Deum vocabatis. Quod quidem omnibus Philosophis & Theologis nostrorum temporum objici potest qui & animos & Deum & omnes intelligentias separatas disputandi ac veri inveniendi causa in dubium plerumque vocant. Ib. See the Art. Maldonat.

(i) Cum nemo eo hujus rei studiosior esset, quippe qui & statuas veterum undique ex tota urbe conquisitas in suas illas ædes quas sub Capitolio extruebat congereret. Ibid.

(k) Ibid. fol. 359. verso & fol. 360.

Liberty before (G) the Year's End. The Pope entertained Platina with the hopes of a good Settlement, and ſo kept him from going out of Rome. He expected in vain, for the ſpace of two Years, the Effect of thoſe Promiſes, and then the Pope died of an Apoplexy [*]. Sixtus IV. his Succeſſor, made Platina Library-Keeper of the Vatican [†]. Platina found himſelf, by that means, in his Element. He lived very quietly till the Year 1481, he died then of the Plague [‖]. He left to Pomponius Lætus the Houſe he had built upon Mount Quirinal, with the Grove of Laurels, out of which the Poetical Crowns were taken [‡]. I ſhall give the Catalogue (H) of his Writings. M. Daniel William Mollerus, Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Altorf, has publiſhed that Pope was ſo great an Enemy to Learning, that he forbad to pronounce the Word College or Academy. Thoſe who ſaid ſo were groſly miſtaken: Paul II. did not condemn thoſe who ſhould mention the Word Academy in the Senſe of a College or a Houſe wherein Sciences are taught. He only condemned the Sceptical and Pyrrhonian Spirit of the Wits of his Time, who under pretence of Philoſophizing in the way of Plato, the Founder of the Ancient Academy, brought every thing in Queſtion, and grew dangerous with reſpect to the Foundations of the Goſpel.

(G) Not ſet at Liberty before the Years end.] Trithemius is thereby convicted of a Lye, for ſaying that Platina was ſet at Liberty only by Sixtus IV. after the Death of Paul II. (a) Multas à Paulo Papa II. calamitates ſuſtinuit, adeo ut bonis omnibus & dignitate ſpoliatus poſt capulei ſuſpenſionem in carcerem crudeliſſime detruſus, uſque ad mortem ipſius Pauli detentus ſit, qui à Sixto mox liberatus, &c. When an Author writes the Hiſtory of his own Misfortunes, we ought to truſt him, and not believe that he wants our Amplifications. Trithemius ſhould have followed that Maxim, and conſulted the Life of Paul II. written by the ſame Perſon whoſe Elogy he made: he might have known exactly how long he was a Priſoner, and many People would not be deceived by him, as they are ſtill. A Paulo II. in carcerem conjectus, menſeſque quatuor ipſe detentus eſt, donec à ſucceſſore Sixto IV. liberatus (b).

(H) I ſhall give the Catalogue of his Writings.] The moſt conſiderable is the Hiſtory of the Popes, from St. Peter to Sixtus IV. to whom he dedicated it. It is variouſly ſpoken of: the Proteſtants like it well enough, and have placed that Author in the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of Truth (c). See the Paſſage of Illyricus, which I ſhall quote by and by. Some Roman Catholicks accuſe him of want of Sincerity and Diligence. Nevertheleſs, Panvinius did not ſcruple to publiſh that Hiſtory, with Notes of his own, and to add to it the Lives of the Popes from Sixtus IV. to Pius IV. Cicarella went on, and added to it the Lives of the Popes from Pius V. to Clemens VIII. That Book of Platina was printed firſt of all at Venice in the Year 1479. in folio. (d) Olearius was therefore miſtaken, who believed that the Nuremberg Edition 1481. is the firſt. You will find this Remark (e) in Mr. Mollerus's Diſſertation, with the Liſt of ſeveral other Editions. That which I make uſe of, is not mentioned by him; it is a Lyons Edition 1512. in 8o. Theſe Words are to be found at the end of it: Excellentiſſimi hiſtorici Platinæ in vitas ſummorum Pontificum uſque ad Julium II. Ponti. Maxi. præclarum opus fœliciter explicit. Ludun. impreſſum à Gilberto de Villiers Borbonnio: impenſis honeſtiſſimi viri domini Vincentii de Prothonariis & Conſtantini Fradin. Anno domini milleſimo quingenteſimo duodecimo. Die vero XXII menſis Februarii. A Reader might be deceived by the beginning of that Diſcourſe: one would think that Platina lived to the Time of Julius II. yet it appears by ſome Latin Verſes printed the ſame Year, and in the ſame Printing-Houſe, that Platina died under Sixtus IV. Bartholomew Ariſtophilus, Author of a Latin Poem inſerted in the Collection of the Funeral Verſes publiſhed to the Honour of Platina, ſays in his ſmall Preamble, that having ſucceeded by Sixtus's Choice, to the Place of Library-Keeper, which Platina enjoyed, and finding himſelf lodged in the ſame Room where Platina lived, he felt, &c. Mr. Mollerus has not forgot the Liſt of ſome German, Italian and French Tranſlations of that Book of Platina. He ſpeaks of a French Tranſlation printed at Paris in 1519. in fol. but ſays nothing of a later Tranſlation, made by Mr. Coulon, and publiſhed at Paris in 4o. 1651. Here is the Paſſage of Illyricus, which I have promiſed: (f) Etſi Platina turpiter & impudenter Papis adulatus ſit: tamen nimia ipſorum turpitudine ac malitiâ coactus aliquando, etiam ſubindicat Babyloniæ Meretricis nefanda ſcelera. In Marcellino queritur Paparum ſcelera eo excreviſſe, ut vix apud Deum miſericordiæ locum reliquerint: avaritiam, ſuperbiam, neglectum Doctrinæ, & Religionis ſimulationem, mores etiam in prophanis deteſtandos, propalam eſſe, ut inde laudem quærere videantur. In Pontificibus poſt milleſimum annum, ſubinde repetit, Omnem pietatem & ſanctitatem à Papis ad Cæſares migraſſe. I ſhould willingly ſubſcribe to the Judgment which Robert Chreyghton made of that Work of Platina. Platinam, ſays he (g), auctorem ſiccum & ſtrigoſum ſæpe verba, ſæpe ſenſus, multoties rerum experientia, nonnunquam integritas deſtituunt. Et quod magis miremur nunquam lapſus eſt gravius quam in Eugenii vita, ſub cujus temporibus floruit.

Here are the Titles of the other Books of Platina. De naturis rerum: epiſtolæ ad diverſos: de honeſta voluptate & valetudine: de falſo & vero bono: contra amores: de vera nobilitate: de optimo cive: Panegyricus in laudem Beſſarionis: oratio ad Paulum II. de pace Italiæ componenda & bello Turcico indicendo: de flosculis linguæ Latinæ. Gryphius printed at Lyons in 1541, in 8o, at the End of Cælii Apicii de re culinaria libri decem, this other Book: P. (h) Platinæ Cremonenſis viri undecunque doctiſſimi de tuenda valetudine, natura rerum & popinæ ſcientia ad ampliſſimum D. D. B. Roverellam S. Clementis Preſbyterum Cardinalem libri decem. That Work was unworthy of that Author, and I don't wonder that Sannazar ridiculed it by this Epigram;

> Ingenia & mores vitaſque obituſque notaſſe
> Pontificum, arguta lex fuit hiſtoriæ.
> Tu tamen hinc lautæ tractas pulmenta culinæ;
> Hoc Platina eſt ipſos paſcere pontifices.

The Edition of Lyons 1541, came out after thoſe of Cologne 1529 and 1537, in 8o. The Italian Book which I have ſeen quoted with the Title of B. Scacchi Cuoco ſecreto di Papa Paolo II. opera, dove ſi tratta di diverſe vivande, &c. con le figure in 4o. Venet. 1570, is not a Tranſlation of Platina's ten Books de tuenda valetudine & popinæ ſcientia. That Italian Book is quoted otherwiſe by Lanzius: Extat, ſays he (i), memorabilis liber artis Apicianæ de culina & architriclini officio di M. Bartholomeo Scappi cuoco ſecreto di Papa Pio V. qui nunc præfectus eſt (ait (1) ille) noſtris intimis coquis, non ſine ejuſdem privilegio & approbatione inquiſitorum hæreticæ pravitatis, Venetiis editus anno M. D. L X X I, ſed & ante hunc Bartholomæum extant Platinæ, Suetonii Pontificii de popinæ ſcientia libri x. ad Cardinalem Rovarellam. It appears that Lanzius was perſuaded that his Bartholomew Scappi, named by others Bartholomew Scacchi, is different from Platina. He is in the right, for the Work of B. Scappi contains a Relation of the Funeral Obſequies of Paul III. at which the Author aſſiſted. Note, that 'tis a large Quarto divided into ſix Books, where all the ways of dreſſing Fleſh and Fiſh, &c. are treated of: they have not been ſparing of Figures (‡).

As to the Hiſtory of Mantua compoſed by Platina, Mr. Mollerus (k) affirms that Lambecius publiſhed it in the Year 1674. But he owns that he could never get a Copy of it, and that Martin Difenbachius (l) maintains, that that Work never came out in Print. The Original of that Hiſtory of Mantua was left by the Author himſelf to Gaudentius Merula, who ſent it to Oporinus, a Bookſeller of Baſil, to get it printed. Oporinus died before he could print it, and left it to the Eldeſt Son of his good Friend Theodorus Zwingerus (m). It is certain that Lambecius publiſhed it with Notes at Vienna in 1675 in 4o. The 10th Giornale de Letterati gives an Abſtract of it, and tells us that that Work is divided into 6 Books, and not into 7, as Poſſevinus (n) affirms, or into 3, as Voſſius (o) believed, and that Lambecius, who maintains againſt Trithemius, Angelus Roccæ, Raphael Volaterranus

---

[*] Taken from Platina in vit. Pauli II.

[†] The Library of the Vatican was ſet up by that Pope. Jovius ib.

[‖] See the Rem. A. Letter I.

[‡] Jovius ib.

(a) Trith. de Script. Eccleſ. Boiſſardus ſays the ſame thing ap. Pope Blount, Cenſ. Author. p. 339.

(b) Boſius de comparanda prudentia civili, p. 377. of the 2. tom. of the Treatiſes de ratione ſtudiorum collected and commented by the learned Crenius, at Leyden 1696.

(c) See Simon Goulart. in Catal. teſtium veritatis col. 194.

(d) In abaco Patrolog. p. 68.

(e) He might have ſaid that Labbæus de ſcript. Eccl. tom. 1. p. 174. has committed the ſame Miſtake with Olearius.

(f) Illyricus l. 19. Catal. teſtium verit. ap. Pope Blount ub. ſup. p. m. 337.

(g) Robert. Creyghton, not. ad Sylveſtri Sguropuli Hiſt. Concilii Florentini Sect. 5. c. 2.

(h) They have put a P. inſtead of a B. Mr. Mollerus p. 7. obſerves that in the Catalog. of Thuanus's Library p. 119. part 1. We read Joh. Bapt. Platina, and p. 182. part 2. Petri Platinæ. But it is not the Fault of thoſe who made that Catalogue, but of thoſe who printed Platina's Works.

(i) Orat. cont. Italiam p. m. 845, 846.

(1) M. Freher. Comm. ad Conſtant. Donat.

(‡) This I had from the Mazarin Library.

(k) De Platina p. 26.

(l) De Henrico VII. Imp. p. 47.

(m) Difenbachius ib. apud Mollerum p. 27.

(n) In Apparatu ſacro.

(o) De Hiſt. Lat. p. 582.

‡ Intitled Disputatio circularis de Platinis. Altdorf. [illegible] published a curious ‡ Book, which was very useful to me for the Composition of this Article. He observes, that Andrew Corbinus has † made three Platina's of one; for he speaks of Platina the Orator, Platina the Historian, and Platina a Father of the Church. He observes also, that Barthius (I) thinks to have found out a very Criminal Mystery, because Platina has not mentioned the Resurrection of CHRIST, nor his Ascension. Varillas has committed (K) some Faults.

† In [illegible] Historiæ fol. 104. n. 10. & pl. 105. n. 4.

PLOTINUS, a Platonick Philosopher, flourished in the III. Century. He was very much above common Philosophers, and his Ideas were very singular and extraordinary. He was ashamed of being lodged in a Body; and therefore took no Pleasure in saying what * Countrey, or what Family he was of. His Contempt for every thing Material that was in him, was the Reason why he would never (A) suffer his Picture to be Drawn; and had it not been for a Man who Drew it by Memory, his Disciples had been without the satisfaction they long'd for. I believe that

* Nevertheless we know that he was born at Lycopolis, a City of Egypt. Eunapius in Plotino.

ranus, Boissardus and Vossius, that Platina's Name was Baptist, and not Bartholomew, is refuted by the Pope's Brief to be found in the Vatican Library. 'Tis the Brief wherein Platina is declared to be Keeper of that Library. He is named Bartholomew in it. That Proof was unknown to Vossius. Mr. Wharton (p) observes that Richard Flemyngus, who knew Platina very well, and bestowed great Encomiums (q) upon him, calls him Bartholomew.

(p) In Append. ad Cave hist. litt script. Eccles. p. 153.

(q) In libro 1. Lucubrationum Constantinopol.

(I) That Barthius thinks to have found out a very Criminal Mystery.] Here are Mollerus's Words: (a) Improbitatis alicujus Platinam accusatum ad Casp. Barth. animadvers. in Guil. Briton. lib. 6. Philipp. p. 459. provocare solent, quippe ubi verba reperire liceat sequentia Augusti hoc dictum (nempe melius est Herodis porcum esse quam filium, de quo vid. Macrob. in jocis Augusti lib. 2. c. 4.) illustravit renascentibus literis B. Platina in primo suorum Pontificum nempe Domino & Deo nostro Jesu Christo. Qui improbe tamen hoc & profane, quod vita servatoris obituque utcunque commemoratis, gloriosissimam resurrectionem è mortuis & ascensionem in cælum, ne uno quidem verbo attigit. Caussa facile à sagacibus hominibus odoranda. Mollerus does not grant that Platina supprest the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus Christ, Sed tamen Platinam, says he, mortis & resurrectionis Christi meminisse ex principio statim vitæ S. Petri inspecto apparebit ubi verba occurrunt ista: post Christi mortem & resurrectionem completis jam diebus Pentecostes Spiritum S. accepere Discipuli. You see how he proves that Platina mentioned those two Mysteries; notwithstanding, he suspects that this Author had an ill Design, under pretence, that the Chapter which concerns the Life of Christ, contains nothing touching the Resurrection and Ascension of the Messias. He mentions, without any Refutation, the suspicion which some have had, that Platina designed thereby to increase the Glory of the Popes. Certum autem est in vitæ Christi descriptione neque resurrectionis è mortuis neque ascensionis in cælum mentionem ullam esse injectam, non tam ob brevitatis caussam, ut aliqui suspicati sunt, quam ut nonnullorum ex opinione, insignior insequentes Pontifices gloria maneret (b). I confess, that all I can apprehend herein is, that several People make themselves ridiculous, by their affecting too great a penetration. They look for Political Views in the most simple and most indifferent Things. I should be glad to know how it can be any Advantage to the Popes, that Platina mentioned the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus Christ, not in the Chapter wherein he treats of Jesus Christ, but in the next Chapter, which treats of St. Peter? I believe Platina would be very much surprised, if he knew that such Subtleties are ascribed to him, which are so unworthy of his Country.

(a) Moller. [illegible] p.

(b) Id. ib.

(K) Varillas (c) has committed some Faults.] I. He says that Platina was born at Cremona. II. It is not true that Cardinal Bessarion put Platina upon Writing the Lives of the Popes. III. Nor that that Work was written before the Time of Paul II. Those two Falsehoods are clearly refuted by the Epistle Dedicatory, where Platina says twice, that he wrote the History of the Popes by order of Sixtus IV. Tu itaque Theologorum ac Philosophorum princeps Maxime Pontifex hac hominum utilitate motus simulque dignitati ecclesiasticæ consulens, non frustra MANDASTI ut res gestas Pontificum scriberem .... si quid emolumenti ex hac scriptione nostra perceperint, tibi soli Pontifex optime gratias agant, cujus sanctissimo IMPERIO libenter OBTEMPERAVI. IV. It is not true that Paul II. made him his Secretary; Pius II. gave him that Place, and Paul II. took it away from him.

(c) In the Anecdotes de Florence p. 171.

(A) Why he would never suffer his Picture to be Drawn.] Amelius his Disciple desired it of him, but it was in vain: Is it not (d) enough, answered he, to drag every where with us that Image in which we have been shut up by Nature: do you think that we must, besides, transmit to future Ages an Image of that Image, as a Spectacle worthy of their Attention? How Great is that Thought! None but little Souls will deny it. Madam Des Houlieres has made some admirable Verses (e) about the Vanity which induces Men to have their Pictures drawn. The Elevation and Depth of her Morality is incomparable; a Lady who thinks so nobly should have lived in the Age of Plotinus, our's was not worthy of her: the Men of this Age have too mean Souls, they set too great a value upon the Body, and the Goods of Fortune. Madam Des Houlieres herself has (f) yielded to the Temptation of having her Picture Drawn; She was pleased to see her self grown young again by the Pencil of Mrs. Cheron, and to think that she would not be unknown in that respect when she ceased to be. She speaks thus of Mrs. Cheron, who Drew her. "She has at last restored my first "Colour to me; Posterity will know, by the help "of her Art, the Presents which Nature was "pleased to bestow upon me: and I may hope that "with such a help, I shall be able still to do some "Honour to our Time, whilst I shall wander about "the shady Banks. Yes, I may flatter my self of "it: to please and last for ever are the Fate of her "Works.„ Perhaps it will be said, that to grow young again in a Picture and in Effigie is a very small thing; and that to rejoyce at this Thought, that future Ages will not be ignorant that one has been Young and Beautiful, is to content oneself with a very Chimerical Honour. But who knows that better than the Lady whom I speak of? Is it not from thence that she takes the nicest part of her Reflection? Here is the Sense of the last Verses of her Poem. "How could I pretend to cure Mortal Men "of that inveterate Error, which they are so fond "of, if I, who condemn it, have much ado not to "fall into it? That Picture, of which Apelles might "have been Jealous, fills me, against my Will, with "a flattering Expectation, which I could not "see in others without Anger. How weak is Humane Reason so much boasted of! How little can "we relie upon it! We are always Vain, False and "Unjust, and we exclaim in all our Discourses "against Passions, Weaknesses and Vices, to which "we yield every Day.„ This does very much set off the Victory which Plotinus got over so general a Weakness; and all true Philosophers ought to rejoyce that so noble a Triumph was reserved for one of their great Hero's. 'Tis true, that Plotinus was Drawn, but he knew nothing of it: Amelius brought an excellent Painter into the Auditory. That Painter look'd upon Plotinus as long as he would, and Drew him after the Image he had drawn of him in his Head: the Picture was very like, Amelius took care that all the Strokes that wanted mending, should be corrected (g). Here is another Triumph of Plotinus. He would (h) never tell the Day nor the Month wherein he was born. The Reason of it is, that he did not desire that the Day of his Birth should be celebrated with Feasts and Sacrifices. He did not fail to celebrate in that manner that of Socrates and that of (i) Plato. He knew well how to despise the Smoak of an Immortal Fame.

(d) Οὐ γὰρ ἀρκεῖ φέρειν ὃ ἡ φύσις εἴδωλον ἡμῖν περιτέθεικεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ εἰδώλου εἴδωλον συγχωρεῖν αὐτὸν ἀξιοῦν πολυχρονιώτερον καταλιπεῖν ὡς δή τι τῶν ἀξιοθεάτων ἔργων. Quasi vero non satis hanc imaginem ferre sit quam natura nobis ab initio circumdedit: etiam censes imaginis hujus imaginem diuturniorem insuper posteris ut opus spectaculo dignum relinquendum? Porphyr. in vita Plotini init.

(e) They are in the Mercure Gallant of Nov. 1693.

(f) She was still alive when I wrote this. She died the 17 of Feb. 1694.

(g) Idem Porphyr. ib. p. 2. C.

(h) See Porphyr. in the Life of Plotin.

(i) See the same Life.

A SIGN of a Cocquet.

Not knowing whether I shall find a better opportunity to make use of a Remark which I have read in Fureteriana, I shall set it down here. (k) "One may easily know Women that are Coquets by "their (k) Fureteriana, p. 171. of the Dutch Edit.

that out of the ſame Principle, he refuſed to make uſe of (B) many things which were look'd upon as very good for the Health: but it was for another Reaſon that he rejected the uſe of Gliſters, which he was adviſed to take as a good Remedy for the Cholick; he thought that it was neither becoming †, nor ſuitable to the Gravity of an old Philoſopher to make uſe of ſuch a Remedy. He began very early to appear very ſingular in his Taſte and Manners; for being eight Years of Age, when he went already to School, he would go to his Nurſe, and uncover her Breaſt to Suck, which he did very greedily. He left it off, when he had been Chid for it, as a troubleſome Child. Being 28 Years of Age, he appeared extremely deſirous to ſtudy Philoſophy: he was recommended to the moſt famous Profeſſors of Alexandria; but he did not like 'em, and uſed to come from their Lectures very Melancholick. One of his Friends knowing the Reaſon of his Diſtaſte, thought that the beſt Remedy for it was to carry him to the Lectures of Ammonius. He gueſt right; for as ſoon as Plotinus heard that Philoſopher, he confeſt to his Friend that he was the Man he would have. He was eleven Years under that excellent Maſter, and became a great Philoſopher. But the great Learning he had acquired, inſpired him with an eager deſire of encreaſing it, and of knowing what the Perſian and Indian Philoſophers ſaid. He took hold of an Occaſion which offered itſelf, when the Emperor Gordian went to make War againſt the Perſians *: he followed the Roman Army, and repented of it without doubt; for he had much ado to ſave his Life, when the Emperor had been kill'd. He was then 39 Years of Age. The next Year he came to Rome, and read Lectures of Philoſophy there. 'Tis true, that he taught what he had heard of his Maſter Ammonius; but he imitated not Erennius and Origen his School-Fellows, who having promiſed, as well as he, not to impart to the Publick the beſt things they had learned of Ammonius, kept not exactly their Promiſe. As for him, he was ten Years at Rome without compoſing any Book, and when he had compoſed twenty, he communicated them only to ſuch Perſons, whoſe Judgment was known to him. He was in the 50th Year of his Age, when Porphyrius became his Diſciple. Such a Diſciple could not but keep him buſie. Porphyrius did not reſt ſatisfied with ſuperficial Anſwers; he would have all Difficulties to be throughly explained to him: Plotinus was therefore obliged to write ſome Books, that he might treat his Subjects more (C) exactly. He compoſed 24 Books during the ſpace of ſix Years that Porphyrius was with him, and thoſe 24 Books, together with 21 which he had compoſed before the Arrival of Porphyrius, and together with the 9 which he writ after his Diſciple had left Rome, make up in all 54 Books. They are divided into ſix (D) Enneades, and run upon very abſtruſe Matters. One may obſerve in them three different Ages (E) of the Mind of their Author.

† Κωλικῇ δὲ νόσῳ πολλάκις πιεζόμενος οὔτε κλυστῆρος ἀνέσχετο, οὐκ εἶναι πρὸς τοῦ πρεσβύτου λέγων ὑπομένειν τὰς τοιαύτας θεραπείας. Proinde cum ſæpe colico vexaretur morbo, ſemper clyſteres renuit, negans decere ſenem curationes ejuſmodi. Porphyr. in vita Plotini p. 1. inſtead of colico the Tranſlator ſhould have ſaid cœliaco.

* In the Year 243.

"their Dreſs, the Company they keep at Home, "their Servants, and their way of Speaking; but "they may be known alſo by the ſeveral Copies of "their Pictures which they cauſe to be made. One "of thoſe Women, who had been Drawn by "Mrs. le Hay, cauſed five Copies of her Picture "to be made. Good Lord, ſaid a Gentleman, why "does that Woman get ſo many Pictures? Mrs. le "Hay anſwered him pleaſantly, Quoniam multiplicatæ "ſunt iniquitates ejus."

(B) Of many things which were look'd upon as very good for the Health.] He never made uſe of any Preſervative, nor of the Bath, and never eat of the Fleſh of tamed Beaſts (a). He eat little (b), and abſtained very often from Bread, which together with his ſtrong Meditations kept him from ſleeping well.

(C) To write ſome Books, that he might treat his Subjects more exactly.] It is almoſt impoſſible to determine any Queſtion with meer Conferences or Verbal Diſputes. One may eaſily put the Change upon another, and have it put upon one's ſelf, and the Beginning may be forgotten before one comes to the End. Therefore I don't wonder that Porphyrius reduced his Maſter to the neceſſity of explaining himſelf in Writing. Plotinus owned, that it was the beſt way to inſtruct a Diſciple throughly; but he found it alſo very neceſſary to hear Objections, and exerciſe himſelf by way of a Conference, before he took Pen in Hand. This is what he anſwered to a Man, who complained of Porphyrius's frequent Interrogations and Replies. (c) Niſi dubitationes interrogante Porphyrio diſſolvamus, commentari oratione perpetua quicquam in librum non valebimus. He diſputed three Days together about the Doubts which Porphyrius propoſed to him, concerning the manner how our Souls are united to our Bodies.

(D) Divided into ſix Enneades, and run upon very abſtruſe Matters.] The Order, Diviſion and Titles of Plotinus's Works, are to be aſcribed to Porphyrius. They concern moſt of 'em the ſubtileſt Notions of Metaphyſicks, and it ſeems that that Philoſopher differed not much from Spinoza in ſome things. There is ſcarce any Age wherein the Doctrine of Spinoza has not been taught. That impious Man has only the unhappy advantage of being the Firſt, who reduced it into a Syſtem according to a Geometrical Method. What did Plotinus mean, when he writ two Books to prove, (d) Unum & idem ubique totum ſimul adeſſe? Did he not teach thereby, that the Being which is every where, is one and the ſame thing? This is what Spinoza would be at. Plotinus examines in another Book, whether there are many Souls, or One only: Utrum omnes animæ una ſint. He applied himſelf very much to the Study of Ideas; he wrote a Book to examine whether there are any Ideas of ſingular Things, and another, wherein he proved that Intellectual Objects are not out of the Underſtanding, ὅτι οὐκ ἔξω τοῦ νοῦ τὰ νοητά, quod intelligibilia non ſint extra intellectum.

(E) Three different Ages of the Mind of their Author.] The firſt and laſt Books he wrote are much inferior to the others. One may perceive in the Firſt a Strength that is not come yet to its full Growth, and in the Laſt, a Strength which began to Decay; but one may ſee in the Middle Writings, a Strength that was come to its higheſt Degree. Thus we have here Three Orders of Books, 21 in the Firſt, 24 in the Second, and 9 in the Laſt. Of thoſe Nine, the Five firſt were leſs weak than the other Four; ſo true it is, generally ſpeaking, that the Mind undergoes the ſame Viciſſitudes with the Body: The Age of an Author (e) may be almoſt as eaſily known by the Strokes of his Pen, as by the Features of his Face. Here are Porphyrius's Words according to the Latin Tranſlation. Quemadmodum verò conſcripti ſunt alii quidem in ætate prima, alii verò in ipſo vigore vitæ, alii denique defeſſo jam corpore; ſic ferme libri vim ſimilem ipſi declarant. Primi namque unus atque viginti, ſi cum proximè ſequentibus conferantur, leviorem vim habere videntur, nondum ſatis conſtans robur habentem. Qui vero medio tempore compoſiti ſunt, virtutis florem præferunt ad ſummum uſque vigentem. Taleſque ſunt quatuor & viginti (exceptis quibuſdam paucis) perfectiſſimi. Ultimi denique novem remiſſiorem jam referunt facultatem; idque poſtremi quatuor magis quam antecedentes quinque declarant. This Tranſlation was made by Marſilius Ficinus. That

---

(a) Οὔτε τὰς θηριακὰς ἀντιδότους λαβεῖν ὑπέμεινε, μηδὲ τῶν ἡμέρων ζώων τὰς ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τροφὰς προσίεσθαι λέγων. λουτροῦ δὲ ἀπεχόμενος. Neque theriaca antidota unquam accepit, cum nec ex animalium quoque manſuetorum corporibus capere etiam ſe diceret. Abſtinebat & balneis. Porphyr. ib. p. 1.

(b) Id. p. 6. ſub. fin.

(c) Porphyr. ib.

(d) Τὸ ἓν πανταχοῦ ὅλον εἶναι ἓν καὶ ταὐτόν. Porphyr. p. 4. C.

(e) Mr. Baillet in the 1. tom. of the Jugemens des Savans p. 381. has many curious things about this.

Author. His way of compoſing (F) did very much favour of his great Singularity, and therefore a faithful Friend was very neceſſary to him to reviſe his Writings. He choſe Porphyrius to do it, rather than Gentilianus Amelius, who had been his Diſciple 24 Years, and whom he very much eſteemed, as you may ſee in † another Place. The Eſteem which the Romans had for Plotinus is incredible. He had ſome Diſciples in the very Senate; and ſome Senators, not contented to go regularly to his Auditory, reſign'd the Magiſtracy to live a Philoſophical Life. He inſpired ſome Perſons of the Fair Sex with a ſtrong Inclination for the Study of Philoſophy. A Lady § would have him to Lodge in her Houſe, and ſhe, as well as her Daughter, took great delight in hearing him. He had the Reputation of being ſo learned and virtuous a Man, that ſeveral Perſons of both Sexes, intruſted him, before they died, with their Eſtates and Children, Sons and Daughters, as if he had been a kind of Guardian Angel *. He refuſed not to be at that Trouble. He had often the Patience to be preſent when Guardians gave up their Accounts. He was the Arbitrator of a thouſand Law-Suits, with ſo much Equity and Honeſty, that he had not one Enemy for the ſpace of 26 Years that he lived in Rome. Thoſe of his Profeſſion proved not all ſo juſt to him; for a Philoſopher ‡ of Alexandria, who affected the Firſt Rank, did his utmoſt to expoſe him to Contempt, and even made uſe of Magick to deſtroy him. I ſhall ſay in the Remarks by what means the Magical Operations (G) of that Man proved ineffectual; and occaſionally I ſhall ſay ſomething of Plotinus's Familiar Spirit, and of the ſurpriſing (H) Sagacity which is aſcribed to him. The Emperor Gallienus and the Empreſs Salonina

† In the Art. Amelius.

§ Her's and her Daughter's Name was Gemina.

* Πολλοὶ δὲ καὶ ἄνδρες καὶ γυναῖκες ἀποθνήσκειν μέλλοντες τῶν εὐγενεστάτων, φέροντες τὰ ἑαυτῶν τέκνα ἄῤῥενάς τε ὁμοῦ καὶ θηλείας, ἐκείνῳ παρεδίδοσαν μετὰ τῆς ἄλλης οὐσίας, ὡς ἱερῷ τινι καὶ θείῳ φύλακι. Multi quinetiam viri multæ & mulieres generis nobilitate pollentes cum morti jam propinquarent, filios ſuos tum mares tum fœminas una cum omni eorum ſubſtantia Plotino tanquam ſacro cuidam divinoque cuſtodi tradebant atque commendabant. Porphyr. ib.

‡ His Name was Olympius.

That Learned Man had no ſooner ended the Tranſlation of Plato's Works, but he was told by John Picus Mirandula, that Coſmo de Medicis deſired to have Plotinus tranſlated. Marſilius knew nothing of it, becauſe Coſmo would not aſk him the Verſion of thoſe two Authors at one time, and thought it more reaſonable to let him know his Deſire, when he had finiſhed Plato's Tranſlation. Marſilius undertook that new Work, and made an End of it. He has not only tranſlated Plotinus, but he has alſo made ſome Summaries and Analyſes upon each Book (f). This is what goes by the Name of Marſilius Ficinus's Commentaries. That Word is fallacious on this occaſion; for one would expect ſome Critical Notes upon the Greek Text, and ſome Explications of the difficult Paſſages and intricate Thoughts of the Author: this is what is meant by a Commentary. But the Signification of that Word is quite different here. I thought myſelf obliged not to leave my Reader in the Obſcurity of that Equivocation, as Moreri has done.

(F) His way of compoſing did very much favour of his great Singularity.] He never read again what he had compoſed; he formed his Letters very ill, and diſtinguiſhed not his Syllables; his Orthography was not at all exact; he was only attentive to things, and Thoughts; and perſiſted as long as he lived in the ſame Courſe. But here is a very admirable thing. His Meditation was ſo ſtrong, that he placed in his Head a whole Work from the Bginning to the End, and followed ſo cloſely what he had meditated, that he made no manner of Alteration in it in Writing. One would have thought, that the Inward Original of his Work was the Rule of his Pen, with the ſame punctuality as a Written Original is the Rule of a Copiſt. He never loſt the ſight of his Meditation, when he was interrupted for ſome Buſineſs: he took cognizance of that Affair, and examined and ended it without leaving off the Ideas of his Work; ſo that after the departure of thoſe who had interrupted him, he needed not read the laſt Lines of his Writing, to know where he was and to reſume the Series of his Thoughts. His Ideas had been all along preſent to his Mind; therefore he uſed to write on without looking upon his Paper for the Place where he ſtopt, and made the Connexions as well as if he had not ſtirred out of his Place (a).

(G) By what means the Magical Operations of that Man proved ineffectual.] He found by Experience that his Malefices returned upon him, which obliged him to confeſs to his Friends, that Plotinus had a Soul endowed with an extraordinary Force, ſeeing it retorted upon his Enemies the Darts which they ſhot at him. What is moſt admirable, is, that Plotinus perceived the Magical Devices contrived againſt him, and the Effect which they produced upon the Author of 'em. At this very Moment, ſaid he to his Friends, the Body of Olympius is folded as a Purſe, and his Members bruiſe one another. Porphyrius, who relates this as a certain Fact, endeavours to perſuade it by this Suppoſition: he ſays that Plotinus was under the Protection of a Genius ſuperior to that of other Men, and that he was none of thoſe who are called Dæmons, but of thoſe who are called Gods. He ſays, that an Egyptian Prieſt conjured, in the Temple of Iſis at Rome, the Familiar Spirit of Plotinus, and that he perceived that the Spirit who preſented himſelf was a God, and not a meer Dæmon; that immediately he congratulated (b) Plotinus upon that excellent Prerogative; that he prepared himſelf to aſk that Spirit ſome Queſtions, but he vaniſhed away preſently, becauſe a common Friend of theirs, who was brought to the Spectacle, ſtifled the Birds that were given him to keep. Plotinus knowing that his Familiar Spirit was of ſo eminent an Order, directed with greater Application the ſight of his Underſtanding towards him. He compoſed a Book about Familiar Spirits, in which he carefully inquired into the Cauſe of their Differences. I obſerve all thoſe things for two Reaſons: Firſt, that one may ſee here a ſmall Pattern of the Platonick Doctrine concerning the Genius's: Secondly, that one may know that the Doctrine of Guardian-Angels, ſo much ſpoken of in the Church of Rome, and which is a Practical Doctrine, and attended with all the Train of Religious Worſhip, is much ancienter than the Chriſtian Religion. There is no Syſtem more proper to ſet up the Doctrine of the Platoniſts duly rectified, than that of Occaſional Cauſes. I don't know what will happen; but I am apt to think that ſome time or other, Philoſophers will be forced to lay aſide Mechanical Principles, unleſs the Wills of ſome Intelligences be aſſociated with them; and truly there is no Hypotheſis more capable of giving an Account of Events, than that which admits of ſuch an Aſſociation. I mean chiefly ſuch Events as go by the Names of Caſualty, Fortune, Good Luck, Ill Luck; Things, the Cauſes whereof are, without doubt, regulated and determined by ſome General Laws unknown to us, which 'tis likely are only Occaſional Cauſes, like thoſe which cauſe our Souls to act upon our Bodies. See Mr. Dodwell's Learned Diſſertation (c) about the Genius, or Fortune of the Emperors. To return to Plotinus, I ſhall obſerve, that the Superiority of his Tutelar Genius filled him with an extreme Confidence. Amelius deſiring him to aſſiſt at his Devotions, I mean, to the Sacrifices he offered upon a Solemn Day: Plotinus anſwered, They (d) ought to come to me, but I ought not to go to them. No Body could apprehend, nor durſt aſk him the Reaſon of ſo proud an Anſwer. Did ever any Body hear of ſuch a bold Theology?

(H) Of the ſurprizing Sagacity which is aſcribed to Plotinus.] A very honeſt (e) Widow who lived

(f) His Latin Tranſlation and his Commentaries were reprinted without the Greek at Baſil 1559. fol.

(a) See Porphyr. in it. Plotini.

f Ploti- s's FA- ILIAR PIRIT.

(b) Μακάριος εἶ θεὸν ἔχων τὸν δαίμονα, καὶ οὐ τοῦ ὑφειμένου γένους τὸν συνόντα. Beatus es, ô Plotine, qui habeas pro Dæmone Deum, neque ex inferiori genere iis ducem ſortitus familiarem. Porphyr. ib.

(c) Prælect. 2. ad Spartiani Hadrianum p. 174. & ſeq.

(d) Ἐκείνους δεῖ πρὸς ἐμὲ ἔρχεσθαι, οὐκ ἐμὲ πρὸς ἐκείνους. τοῦτο δ' ἐκ ποίας διανοίας οὕτως ἐμεγαληγόρησεν, οὔτ' αὐτοὶ συνεῖναι δεδυνήμεθα, οὔτ' αὐτὸν ἐρέσθαι ἐτολμήσαμεν. Illos decet ad me, non me ad illos accedere. Qua vero mente tam excelſa de ſe loqueretur neque intelligere ipſi potuimus, neque auſi ſumus interrogare. Porphyr. ib.

(e) Her Name was Chione.

Salonina had a very great respect for him; and had it not been for the opposition of some jealous and malicious Courtiers, he had obtained what he demanded, viz. that a Town of Campania should be rebuilt, and yielded to α him with its whole Territory. He designed to settle there a Colony of Philosophers, and to put into practice the Ideal Laws of Plato's Republick. Some envious Men accused him of having inriched himself with the Thoughts of Numenius: but Amelius took Pen in Hand to refute that Accusation. Longinus, who suffered himself to be pre-possest against that great Philosopher, did afterwards value his Writings very much, tho' he confesses that he found (I) some very obscure things in 'em. He writ against his Treatise of Ideas, and against Porphyrius's Answer to maintain that Treatise. Plotinus had several Illnesses in the last Years of his Life, an Inflammation in his Throat, which was so swell'd, that it hindred him from speaking, Ulcers in his Hands and Feet, and a great Weakness of Sight. When he found himself in that condition, he left Rome, and went into Campania, to one of his Friends Heirs, who furnished him with all Necessaries; and he had the Comfort to know, that Castricius β, whose Estate was in the Neighbourhood, would let him want nothing. He died as Noble a Death as a Heathen Philosopher could do; for these were his dying Words, † I use my utmost endeavours to bring that which is Divine in me, to that which is so in the Universe. He died in the 66th Year of his Age, the 3d of the Emperor Claudius II. that is in the 270th Year of the Christian Æra. There was very good News (K) of the State of his Soul. Amelius, who consulted the Oracle of Apollo, received it γ, and imparted it to his Friends.

PLOTINA (Pompeia) the Wife of the Emperor Trajan, is mightily praised by some Writers. She was not handsome, δ and it appears by her Medals, that she had more Gravity than Charms in her Face; but she was very Prudent and Modest. Trajan married her (A) before he was adopted by Nerva. What she said, when she first entered into the Emperor's Palace, is very remarkable: going up the Stairs, she ζ turned to the People, and said She came in (B) just such as she desired to go out. Her Conduct was such, during the Time she reigned η, that no Complaints in his House with her Children, had lost a Neck-Lace; Plotinus called for all the Servants, and having well considered them, There is he that stole the Neck-Lace, said he, pointing at one of them. The Servant denied the Fact, notwithstanding the Lashes that were given him; but at last he confest it, and restored what he had stolen. Plotinus foretold the Fate of his Scholars; he said that Polemo would be a Man of an Amorous Temper, and would not live long. Those two things happened as he foretold 'em. Porphyrius had resolved to kill himself; Plotinus guest at it, and went immediately to him, and dissuaded him from it (f). To conclude, tho' Plotinus had very much studied Astrology, he minded (g) not its Predictions, but perceived the Vanity of them, and refuted Astrologers very often.

(I) Longinus . . . . . . confesses that he found very obscure things in them.] He was very desirous to have all the Books of Plotinus; and to have 'em correct, he desired Porphyrius to send him his Copy; but at the same time he wrote to him these following Words. Hoc equidem tibi tum præsenti, tum procul absenti, tum habitanti Tyrum semper significavi, me scilicet non multa admodum Plotini librorum argumenta capere: ipsam vero scribendi formam intelligentiarumque frequentiam & quæstionum dispositionem admodum philosophicam me amare supra modum atque venerari (h). This Passage alone sufficiently shews the exquisite Judgment and Penetration of Longinus. It can't be denied, that most of the things that Philosopher examines, are incomprehensible; nevertheless we see in his Works a sublime, fruitful and vast Genius, and a close Method of Reasoning. If Longinus had been a false Critick, and a Man of no great Parts, he would not have so easily discover'd Plotinus's Obscurity. This is no Paradox. There's none who complains less of the Obscurity of a Book, than those whose Thoughts are confused, and whose Penetration is shallow.

(K) Very good News of the State of his Soul.] Apollo was so warm'd with a Poetical Rapture, when Amelius consulted him concerning the State of his dead Master, that his Answer contained fifty Verses. Porphyrius gives us this Exposition of it. Apollo declared that Plotinus had been peaceable, gracious, and vigilant; that he continually elevated his pure Soul towards God; that he loved God with all his Heart; that he disingaged himself from this miserable World, as much as possibly he could; and that lifting up his Soul with all his might, by the several Degrees mentioned by Plato, to the supreme Deity which surpasses all Understanding, he had been enlightned by it, and enjoyed the Vision of that supreme Being, not by the help of Ideas, but in a manner, which is beyond all Understanding. (a) Ἐφάνη ἐκεῖνος ὁ μήτε μορφὴν μήτε τινα ἰδέαν ἔχων, ὑπὲρ δὲ νοῦν καὶ πᾶν τὸ νοητὸν ἱδρυμένος. Ipsi protinus coruscavit Deus ille nec formam nec ideam aliquam habens, sed super intellectum universumque intelligibile in se ipso consistens. Porphyrius stops here to tell us, that in his 68th Year he was once honoured with that Vision; that the (b) End to which Plotinus directed all his Thoughts, was to unite himself with that great God, who fills up the Universe, and that he obtained that End four times, not in Power only, but by an ineffable Efficacy, during the space of six Years that he (Porphyrius) had been acquainted with him. Have we not here the Unitive way so much spoken of by the Mysticks? May not one say, that they took it from the Platonists? Don't we see likewise in this place the Seeds of Quietism? But to return to the Oracle. Plotinus had this Advantage, that when he was in the wrong, the Gods enlightned him so, that it might be said, that he wrote his Books by the Rays of that Celestial Light which illuminated his Mind. Thus much for what concerns this Life. After his Death, he went to the Assembly of the Blessed, where Charity, Joy, and the Love of Union with God reign; he was with the three Judges of the other World, Minos, Radamanthus, Æacus, not to give an Account of his Actions, but to Converse with them, and with the other Gods who visit them: In a Word, he enjoyed a happy Life. I make no Excuse for the length of these Remarks. I suppose no Body will be displeased to find in this Place, not only what concerns the Person of Plotinus, but also what concerns his Opinions, so far as a general Notion requires it.

(A) Before he was adopted by Nerva.] Which appears by these Words of Pliny's Panegyrick. Idem estis invicem, says he to Trajan, quod fuistis, probatis ex æquo, nihilque vobis felicitas addit, nisi quod scire cœpistis quam bene uterque vestrum felicitatem ferat. And a little after, speaking of Plotina and Marciana, he takes notice, that they lived in the Emperor's Palace with the same Modesty, as if they had been still in a private Condition. Neque enim unquam periclitabuntur esse privatæ, quæ non desierunt.

(B) Just such as she desired to go out.] Moreri has spoiled this Thought of Plotina; he says, that she protested, when she entered first into the Palace, that she was ready to go out of it whenever it should be required. This was not her Meaning: she desired that the Grandeur of her Fortune should not change her Manners, and that when she should be obliged to quit α It was to be called Platonopolis.

---

β He was one of his Disciples.

† Ἤδη πειρᾶσθαι τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν θεῖον ἀνάγειν πρὸς τὸ ἐν τῷ παντὶ θεῖον . . . ἀφῆκε τὸ πνεῦμα. Equidem jam annitor, quod in nobis divinum est ad divinum ipsum quod viget in universo redigere, spiritumque his verbis emisit. Porphyr. in vita Plot.

γ Taken from Plotinus's Life written by Porphyrius.

δ Tristan. comment. hist. tom. 1. p. 428.

ζ Xiphilin. in Trajan.

η Id. ib.

(f) Porphyr. p. 8.

(g) Id. p. 10.

(h) Idem Porphyr.

(a) Porphyr. in vita Plot.

(b) Τέλος γὰρ αὐτῷ καὶ σκοπὸς ἦν τὸ ἑνωθῆναι καὶ πελάσαι τῷ ἐπὶ πᾶσι θεῷ. ἔτυχε δὲ τετράκις που, ὅτε συνήμην αὐτῷ, τοῦ σκοποῦ τούτου, ἐνεργείᾳ ἀρρήτῳ καὶ οὐ δυνάμει. Finis namque Plotino signumque erat quò aciem mentis intenderet propinquare conjungique ipsi Deo omnibus ubique præsenti: quater autem dum cum ipso versaretur hunc finem est assecutus, non potentia duntaxat, inquam, sed actu quodam ineffabili consecutus. Id. i

Complaints were made of her. She refused ‡ the Title of Augusta, so long as her Husband refused that of Father of his Country. The Advices * she gave Trajan, proved wonderfully advantageous to the Provinces, since a great many Exactions and Disorders were by that means redress'd. The Friendship between her and Marciana, Trajan's Sister, is no inconsiderable Sign of her Wisdom and good Temper; for generally there's nothing but Quarrels and Factions between (C) the Wives and Sisters of Princes. She was with Trajan when he died at Selinus in Cilicia, the 117th Year of CHRIST, and ‡ she carried her Husband's Ashes to Rome, being accompanied by Tatian and Matidia, Trajan's Niece. She did many good (D) Offices to Hadrian, and procured him the Empire. The World was always so full of Slanderers, that Plotina's Modesty, and (E) so many other good Qualities, could not preserve her from some ill Suspicions. It was thought that she was in Love (F) with Hadrian, and all his great Preferments were ascribed to that Passion. Some maintain that Trajan did not adopt (G) him, but that Plotina concealed his Death, and made some Body imitate a languishing Voice, that it might be thought that Hadrian was declared Son and Successor to that Prince. It does not appear that she ever had any Children. When she died, Hadrian, who always appeared very thankful (H) for her Favours, expressed his Grief several ways. He put on Mourning for nine Days, he made some Hymns for her, and built her a Temple *, he placed her amongst the Goddesses †. He had already built her a Palace at Nimes §. We know nothing of Plotina's Family, or Birth-place; and 'tis very strange that the Historians of those Times should be so negligent, as to take no notice of them. Nay, they have not mentioned neither the Time of her Death. Mr. de Tillemont ‡ fancies he has found something in Dion, from which one may conclude, that she died in the Year 129; but I would advise no Body to believe it, till he shews for what Reason he pretends to draw this Conclusion. Moreri can't prove what he says, that Plotina died in the Year 122. What he adds of Hadrian's building her a Temple, a Palace and an Amphitheater at Nimes, cannot be more easily proved. Spartian speaks only of a ‡ Basilica, without taking any notice whether Plotina was then alive or no.

‡ Plinius in Panegyr.

* Aurel. Victor. epitom. in Juliano.

‡ Spartian. in Adriano c. 5. p. m. 51.

* Xiphilin. in Adriano.

† There are some Inscriptions in Gruterus's Thesaurus, where mention is made of the Priests of the Goddess Plotina, Sacerdos Divæ Plotinæ. See Tristan's Comment. tom. 1. p. 430.

§ Spartian in Adrian. c. 12. p. m. 110.

‡ Hist. des Empereurs in the Life of Hadrian, p. m. 425.

‡ Per idem tempus in honorem Plotinæ Basilicam apud Nemausum opere mirabili extruxit. Spart. ib.

POITIERS

quit that Post, she should find in herself the same Disposition and Moderation, which she had when she took possession of the Imperial Palace. This Wish is worthy of a great Soul, and concerns a thing which seldom happens, Honores mutant mores.

(C) Factions between the Wives and Sisters of Princes.] Let's hear what Trajan's Panegyrist says about it. Nihil est tam pronum ad simultates quam æmulatio, in feminis præsertim: ea porro maxime nascitur ex conjunctione, alitur æqualitate, exardescit invidia, cujus finis est odium. Quo quidem admirabilius existimandum est quod mulieribus duabus in una domo, parique fortuna, nullum certamen, nulla contentio est: suspiciunt invicem, invicem cedunt, cumque te utraque effusissimè diligat, nihil sua putat interesse utram tu magis ames; idemque utrique propositum, idem tenor vitæ, nihilque ex quo sentias duas esse. No better Notion can be given of the Merit of two Princesses. Pliny knew admirably well how to describe Characters, and had reason to think that this Concord was a Happiness, for which he ought to compliment Trajan; for Sovereigns are generally unhappy at Home, however Happy they may be Abroad, if they have a Mother, a Wife, a Sister, a Mother-in-Law, a Daughter, &c. under the same Roof: they'll give them more trouble than the Government of their States, nay, half this Number will do it. But when I consider that some Panegyrists, now adays, represent Princesses not as they were, but as they should have been, according to the sublime Ideas of an Orator, I say, when I consider this, I am apt to think that Pliny went beyond the Truth.

(D) She did many good Offices to Hadrian.] 'Twas she who (a) got him married to Trajan's Niece, and (b) procured him a Government in the time of the Expedition against the Parthians, afterwards the second (c) Consulship, and at last the Empire (d).

(E) So many other good Qualities.] Pliny opposes, as often as he can, the Perfections of Trajan to the Imperfections of other Princes. He doth not forget Marriage, and says, that many illustrious Men have dishonoured themselves upon that Account; but as for Trajan, 'twas one of the most glorious Passages of his Life. Multis illustribus dedecori fuit aut inconsultius uxor assumpta, aut retenta patientius, ita foris claros domestica (e) destruebat infamia, & ne maximi cives haberentur hoc efficiebat quod mariti minores erant. Tibi uxor in decus & gloriam cedit. Quid enim illa sanctius? Quid antiquius? Nonne si Pontifici Maximo deligenda sit conjunx, aut hanc, aut similem (ubi est autem similis) elegerit? Quam illa nihil sibi ex fortuna tua nisi gaudium vendicat? Quam constanter non potentiam tuam, sed ipsum te reveretur! .... Eadem quàm modico cultu, quàm parca comitatu, quàm civilis incessu! In one of his (f) Letters, he calls her a most holy Wife. Injungis mihi jucundissimum ministerium, ut ad Plotinam sanctissimam fœminam literæ tuæ perferantur.

(F) It was thought that she was in Love with Hadrian.] Dion does plainly say so. Ἐξ ἐρωτικῆς φιλίας, says he in one place, and in another, ἐρώσης αὐτῷ διαφερόντως. See how malicious the World is: a Woman can't shew her Affection to a Man, and endeavour to load him with Honours and Riches, but they conclude she loves him criminally. The difference of Age is so far from silencing the Satyrists, that it rather provokes them. They pretend, that when a Woman is in her Decay, a Grand-Mother, if you will, her Eagerness to raise a young Man, is a more certain sign of a Criminal Commerce, than if she was but Twenty. She would not express so much Affection in her old Days, will a Satyrist say, if she did not think herself obliged to pay for the Nights, which her Gallant might have spent more agreeably elsewhere; she would not be so forward to serve and recommend a Man, and lay out Money for him, if she did not desire that the Sport should continue. In a Word, he thinks of these Verses of Juvenal:

> Cum (g) te summoveant qui testamenta merentur
> Noctibus, in cœlum quos evehit optima summi
> Nunc via processus, vetulæ vesica beatæ.

(G) Trajan did not adopt him.] Dion (h) says that Apronian his Father, who was Governor of Cilicia, told him, that the Death of Trajan was concealed for some Days, that the Intrigue of the Adoption might the better succeed; and that the thing was known by the Letter of that Prince to the Senate, which was not Signed by him, but by Plotina, a thing that had never happened before. See how Mr. Dodwell refutes Dion in his learned Lectures upon (i) Spartian. Dion is not the only Author who said this. Nec desunt, says another (k), qui factione Plotinæ mortuo jam Trajano Adrianum in adoptionem adscitum esse prodiderint, supposito qui pro Trajano fessa voce loqueretur. How difficult is it to confute a probable Slander!

(H) Appeared very thankful.] Tristan says (l), that Hadrian left great Legacies to Plotina by his Will, if he should die first, which I learn, says he, from the Law, Si Augustæ legaveris, ff. de legat. & fideicommiss. lib. 2. which thus relates this matter. Si Augustæ legaveris, & ea inter homines esse desierit, deficit quod ei relictum est, sicuti divus Hadrianus in Plotina, & proxime Imperator Antoninus in Faustinæ Augustæ

(a) Spartian. in Adriano, c. 2. p. 23.

(b) Id. c. 4. p. 38.

(c) Id. p. 40.

(d) Id. p. 46.

(e) Com- are with his what Tacitus ays Chap. 4. of the 3 ook of his Annals, t valida ivo Au- usto in emp. ortuna, a domi mprospe- fuit ob mpudici- am filiæ neptis uas urbe pulit. e He- sa Rem.

(f) The 28. of the 9. Book.

(g) Juven. sat. 1. v. 37.

(h) In Adriano init.

(i) Pag. 538.

(k) Spartian. c. 4. p. 45.

(l) Comment. hist. tom. 1. p. 430.

POITIERS (Diana de) Miſtreſs to Henry II. and Daughter (A) of the Count de St. Vallier, made an ill uſe of her Favour, either to heap up Riches, or to bring into Places, or exclude ſuch as ſhe thought fit. Her Age occaſioned a Belief that ſhe could not thus captivate a young Prince, without (B) the help of Magick. But ſome judicious Perſons don't believe it, and make very good Reflections (C) upon the power of an old Curtezan: They obſerve amongſt other things the Amorous Temper (D) of Diana. The greateſt Scandal proceeded from the perſona conſtituit, cum ea ante inter homines eſſe deſiiſſet quam teſtator decederet.

(A) And Daughter of the Count de St. Vallier.] His Name was (m) John de Poitiers, and he deſcended from a very ancient Family; for one Aymar de Poitiers " (n) thus called, whether becauſe he deſcen" ded from the Counts de Poitiers, or for ſome " other Reaſon, married about the Year 1184, the " Heireſs of the Houſe of Valentinois, in conſideration " of the Aſſiſtance he had given to her Mother, " who was a Widow, againſt the Biſhop of Valence, " who was her great Enemy .... The ſame Aymar " had from Raymond, Earl of Toulouſe, his Relation, " the County of Diois, about the Year 1190, ſo that " theſe two Counties remained two hundred Years " in the Houſe of Poitiers, and were poſſeſſed by " ſeven ſucceſſive Counts. Lewis II. the laſt of 'em, " having no Male Iſſue, nor much Affection for " Charles de St. Vallier, his Uncle by his Father's " Side, who was to ſucceed him, and being very " much in Debt, by his ill Management and Debau" cheries, made over and conveyed theſe two Coun" ties to Charles, Dauphin of France, and his Suc" ceſſors, for a hundred thouſand Gold Crowns, on " Condition, that they ſhould remain inſeparably " united to Dauphiné. After his Death, which was " in the Year 1419, Lewis, the Son of Charles de " St. Vallier, would take on him the Titles and " Poſſeſſion of 'em; but the Dauphin, being then " King, obliged him to yield up all his Pretenſions " to him for a yearly Rent of ſeven thouſand Flo" rins to him and his Heirs for ever." As for St. Vallier, Diana's Father, he was arreſted, as being concerned in the Rebellion of the Conſtable Charles de Bourbon and would have been beheaded in Greve, if his Daughter, in order to ſave his Life, had not granted the laſt Favour to Francis I. Mezerai ſpeaks of it thus in his large Hiſtory. (o) St. Vallier had his Pardon on the Scaffold in Greve, by reaſon of the Beauty of his only Daughter Diana. And in another place, ſpeaking of the ſame Diana, he ſays, (p) " The Charms of her Beauty were ſo powerful " ſince the Year 1524, that all the Court interced" ed for her Father, who was convicted of the Re" bellion of Charles de Bourbon, ſo that King Francis " ſent him his Pardon on the Scaffold." It cannot be concluded from theſe two Paſſages, that the Chaſtity of the Daughter was a Sacrifice offered to Francis I. to obtain her Father's Pardon. But here is a third place, where the Hiſtorian ſpeaks plainly of this propitiatory Victim. (q) " St. Vallier was " tried and condemned to loſe his Head; but as he " was in Greve on the Scaffold, he received his Par" don inſtead of the fatal Stroke. It was ſaid that the " King ſent it to him, after he had got from his " Daughter Diana, who was then 14 Years of Age, " the moſt precious Thing ſhe had. A ſweet Ex" change to thoſe who prefer Life to Virtue, or who " place their Honour in the Glory of enjoying a Fa" vour, which is more envied than it is innocent." The Author of the Galanteries des Rois de France does not ſpeak ſo roundly, but what he ſays is ſufficient to underſtand what he means. I ſhall ſet down his Words, becauſe they contain ſome Particulars relating to the Hiſtory of Diana. " She was, ſays " he (a), the Daughter of John de Poictiers, Seigneur " de St. Vallier, who placed her very young to the " Counteſs of Angouleme. Afterwards ſhe went into " the Service of Queen Claudia, as a Maid of Ho" nour. St. Vallier, who hoped that the Charms " of his Daughter would procure him ſome Pro" tection at Court, was not deceived in it; for it " may be ſaid, that ſhe ſaved his Life by her pri" vate Contrivances. He had a Hand in the Rebel" lion of the Conſtable de Bourbon, and was ſo un" fortunate as to be taken. He was tried and con" demned to be beheaded. Diana was ſo ſtruck " with this News, that ſhe thought nothing was to " be omitted in order to free her Father from ſuch " a preſſing Danger. She threw herſelf at the King's " Feet, melting in Tears, and begg'd of him her " Father's Life. She appeared ſo beautiful and ſo " moving to that Prince, that ſhe obtained her Re" queſt, and inſpired him with Love. She preſer" ved that Conqueſt till the fatal Journey the King " made into Italy; and that Prince endeavoured to " conceal his Unfaithfulneſs from the Counteſs de " Chateau-Brian, for whom he always had a great " regard."

(B) Without the help of Magick.] Thuanus ſeems to believe it. (b) Diana ..... amiſſo viro, is fuit Ludovicus Brezæus magnus Normanniæ Seneſcallus, cum jam inclinata eſſet ætate, philtris & magicis, ut creditur, artibus adeo ſibi animum Henrici devinxit, ut nunquam alienata voluntate ad exitum uſque vitæ in amore illo conſtanter perſeveraverit. Mezerai gives an exact Account of all the Reaſons which gave occaſion to believe that this Woman made uſe of Enchantments, and yet does not ſeem to be perſuaded of it. " (c) As the fineſt Features of her Face " vaniſhed away, the Charms of her Wit and her " Addreſs increaſed to ſuch a Degree, that at 35 " Years of Age, when ſhe ſhould have preferred " Virtue to Beauty, ſhe abſolutely conquered the " Heart of King Henry; and becauſe People, in or" der to make Favourites odious, and excuſe the " baſeneſs of the Princes, who become their Slaves, " are uſed to ſay that their Affection has been ex" torted by Magical Charms, ſome gave out that " ſhe had bewitched him with Philtres. Indeed it " was a ſad thing, to ſee a young Prince fond of a " Woman, who had a Face diſcoloured and full of " Wrinkles, a Head that grew gray-hair'd, lan" guiſhing, and ſometimes Blood-ſhot and running " Eyes, in a Word, who was ſaid to be the baſe " Remains of many others; and one might very " well wonder, that neither Time, nor Honour, nor " wiſe Counſels, nor any other Object among ſo ma" ny great Beauties he might have pitch'd upon, " could bring him off from her. But it is neither " a new thing, nor a wonderful one, to ſee a Man " thus bewitched without any Inchantments: there " are many (d) Inſtances of it, and 'tis no difficult " thing to give ſome Reaſons for it." Thoſe Reaſons will be ſeen in the following Remark.

(C) Good Reflections upon the power of an old Curtezan.] Here is the ſequel of the Paſſage I have juſt now quoted out of Mezerai. " Not to menti" tion thoſe unknown Qualities, like thoſe of the " Load-Stone, which meeting in ſome Perſons do " cloſely unite them; 'tis obſerved, that Phlegma" tick People are conſtant in their Love, tho' they " are not ſo in their Deſigns and other Paſſions; " And therefore a cunning and crafty Woman is no " leſs dangerous to a young Man, who begins to be " acquainted with the World, than a Rock to an " ignorant Pilot. Beſides, the Suſpicions he enter" tained of his Wife's Honeſty, made him more " fond of another Woman. Laſtly, in point of Love, " as well as in point of War, the Stratagems of old " People are not leſs to be feared, than the Strength " and Vigour of the young, and therefore 'tis no " wonder if he fell into the Snares of ſo experi" enced a Woman." Ovid, (e) who was ſo great a Maſter in the Art of Love, might have afforded Mezerai another Reaſon, and perhaps that Hiſtorian would not have omitted it in a Latin Hiſtory. A Woman, who is the baſe Remains of many others, has been in a good School, ſhe can do her Exerciſes much better, and knows how to play her Game to the beſt Advantage. However it be, this Hiſtorian rightly obſerves that there are many Inſtances of the great Power of an old Curtezan. See the Marginal Note d.

(D) The amorous Temper.] " The Love of a young " King for a Woman of 40 Years of Age, who " had two or three Children by her Huſband, might " well be called an Enchantment without Charms. " ..... The King loved her becauſe ſhe was very " ſenſible of Love, and her Temper prompted her " ſome-

---

(b) Thuan. l. 3. p. 55. ad ann. 1547.

(c) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, at the Beginning of Henry II. p. 1058. of the 2 vol. in folio.

(d) See Caligula Rem. H. Cyrus Rem. F. and Dellius Rem. A. See alſo the Articles Lais and Lamia.

(e) Nec quotus annus eſt, nec quo ſit nata requiret Conſule, quæ rigidus munera Cenſor habet. Præcipue, ſi flore caret, meliuſque peractum Tempus, & albentes jam legit illa comas. Utilis, ô juvenes, aut hæc, aut ſerior ætas; Iſte feret ſegetes, iſte ſerendus ager. .... Hoc quoque militiæ eſt: hoc quoque quærit opes. Adde, quod eſt illis operum prudentia major: Solus & artifices qui facit, uſus adeſt. Illæ munditiis annorum damna rependunt: Et faciunt curâ, ne videantur anus. Utque velis, Venerem jungunt per mille figuras: Invenit plures nulla tabella modos. Ovidius de arte amandi l. 2. p. 151.

(m) And not Aymar, as Mezerai calls him, Hiſt. de Henry II. at the Beginning.

(n) Mezerai, Hiſt. de Charles VI. p. 578. of the 2 vol. in fol. ad ann. 1418.

(o) Tom. 2. p. 936. ad ann. 1523.

(p) Hiſt. de Henry II. at the Beginning, p. 1058. of the 2 Vol.

(q) Mezerai, Abregé Chronol. vol. 4. p. m. 520. ad ann. 1523.

(a) Tom. 1. p. 195. See in the Rem. F. a Fault that he has committed.

the common Report, that ſhe had yielded * to the Deſires of Francis I. to (E) ſave her Father's Life; ſo that People could not ſee, without Indignation, that a Woman, who had been a Concubine to the Father and the Son ſucceſſively, ſhould have the chief Authority in the Kingdom. It is a Chimerical Fancy to pretend (F) that Henry the Second's Intimacy with that Woman went no farther than Friendſhip. She was known at Court for a long time, by the Name of Grande Seneschalle, and then by that of Dutcheſs of Valentinois. She went by the firſt of thoſe two Names, “ ſometimes to look elſewhere for the heighth of “ Pleaſure, as ſhe found in him the heighth of Riches and Honours. „ They are Mezerai's (f) Words, which give me occaſion to compare, in this point, Henry II. with a Man, who, in all other things, was infinitely ſhort of that Prince's Merit. We read in Suetonius, that Caligula, in the Flower of his Youth, fell deſperately in Love with Cæſonia, who was not young, and had had three Children by her Husband; but then ſhe was a Woman of a moſt laſcivious Temper. Ovid, one of the greateſt Maſters in that Art, intimates plainly enough, that ſuch a Temper ſerves a voluptuous Man inſtead of many other things, and that as the Inſenſibility of a Chaſt Woman is an inconveniency, the Eagerneſs of a lewd Miſtreſs gives a wonderful reliſh. 'Tis the unhappy Cauſe of the Unfaithfulneſs of Husbands.

Odi (h) quæ præbet, quia ſit præbere neceſſe,
Siccaque de lana (i) cogitat ipſa ſua.
Quæ datur officio, non eſt mihi grata voluptas;
Officium faciat nulla puella mihi.
Me voces audire juvat ſua gaudia feſſas,
Utque morer memet ſuſtineamque roget.
Aſpiciam Dominæ victos amentis ocellos,
Langueat, & tangi ſe vetet illa diu.

What has been ſaid, ſhews that Mezeray hit the matter: the lewd Temper of Henry's Miſtreſs ſupplied her want of Youth.

(E) To ſave her Father's Life.] Beſides what has been ſaid upon this Subject in the firſt Remark of this Article, I ſhall obſerve a Circumſtance mentioned by Thuanus, concerning the Fright of the Count de St. Vallier. That unhappy Man being brought to the Place of Execution, was ſtruck with ſuch a Conſternation, that he fell dangerouſly ill. He was let Blood ſeveral times, but this, and the good News of his Pardon, could not recover his Spirits and cure him. St. Vallier's Fever became afterwards a Proverb. (k) Diana . . . . patrem habuit Joannem Pictavienſem Sanvalerium, qui Caroli Borbonii conjurationis particeps, cum apud Sacerdotem ſecreto rem confeſſus eſſet à Sacerdote delatus, & ad mortem damnatus eſt: cum ad ſupplicium duceretur ex pavore in tam acutam febrem incidit, ut venia in gratiam filiæ, quæ pulchritudine ſua multorum procerum benevolentiam demeruerat, à Franciſco impetrata vix ad mentem & ſanitatem ſæpius miſſo ſanguine reduci potuerit, unde Sanvaleriana febris apud nos in proverbium abiit. Some ſay (l), That he ſaw Death ſo near him, and was ſo frighted at it, that when he was brought back to his Houſe (m), a continual Fever ſeized him ſo violently, that he died of it. Thuanus tells us, that St. Vallier was accuſed by the Prieſt, to whom he had confeſt his Conſpiracy. But moſt Hiſtorians ſay, that two Gentlemen of Normandy, who were concerned in the ſame Plot, diſcovered it to Francis I. Some (a) will have it, that in this they followed the Inclination, which is ſaid to be natural to their Countrymen: others ſay, that their Confeſſor made a ſtep, which obliged them to reveal that Secret. Varillas ſticks to this laſt Opinion. “ Matignon and “ d'Argouges, ſays he (b), having confeſt at Eaſter “ to a Curate of their Country, that they had a “ hand in a Conſpiracy againſt the State, he or- “ dered them to diſcover it to the King; and he “ himſelf ſet out immediately to acquaint Breze, “ Great Senechal of Normandy, with it. Matignon “ and d'Argouges, who thought they were undone, “ took Poſt, and overtook the King at Saint Pierre “ le Monſtier, where they threw themſelves at his “ Feet, and obtained their Pardon, by making an “ exact Diſcovery of what they knew of the Con- “ ſtable's Negociation with the Emperor. „

(F) To pretend that Henry the Second's Intimacy . . . . . . went no farther than Friendſhip.] I wonder how le Laboureur could ever bring himſelf to believe ſuch a Chimera. I ſhall ſet down his Words, which contain a curious Paſſage concerning the Origin of that Paſſion, and it will appear that he owns at leaſt that our Diana was one of Francis the Firſt's Miſtreſſes. “ He was further prompted to go thi- “ ther, ſays he (c), ſpeaking of a Running at the Ring, “ which Henry II. took great delight in, by his Love “ to his Miſtreſs Diana de Poitiers, Dutcheſs of Va- “ lentinois, who was the firſt Object of his Inclina- “ tions, and had given him ſome Briskneſs. 'Tis “ ſaid that King Francis, his Father, who firſt “ loved that Lady, having one Day, after the Death “ of his Son the Dauphin Francis, expreſſed ſome “ Grief to her, for the little Briskneſs he perceived “ in Prince Henry, ſhe told him, that he wanted to “ be in Love, and that ſhe would make a Gallant of “ him. The King, whoſe Affection was divided “ between her and the Dutcheſs d'Etampes, gave “ his Conſent to it; but tho' the Court was then “ very Licentious, we ought to believe, that no- “ thing paſt between 'em that might occaſion any “ Slanders, and that the Imprecation and Curſe ut- “ tered againſt Ruben (d), was thrown into Henry's “ Chamber out of a Calumny: nay (e), it is not “ certain that Diana de Poitiers ſuffered that this “ Friendſhip ſhould go beyond a noble Eſteem and “ a meer Gallantry. To prove this, 'tis to be ob- “ ſerved, that ſhe had had ſome Children by her “ Husband Lewis de Breze, Count de Maulevrier, Se- “ nechal of Normandy; and Henry II. left behind “ him ſome Legitimate and Natural ones, but it does “ not appear that he had any by her. „ The Proof alledged by le Laboureur is of no force; nay, it is inſignificant, and even makes againſt him; for at this rate he ſhould not have ſaid, that the Affection of Francis I. was divided between Diana de Poitiers and the Dutcheſs d'Etampes. We don't find that this Prince, who was the Father of many Children, had ever any by Diana, who was not ſo old when he loved her, as when ſhe was Henry the Second's Miſtreſs. I don't alledge againſt this Proof, the great Age of Diana, according to Varillas, when the Dauphin began to be in Love with her; I don't think ſhe was near ſo old as that Hiſtorian will have it. But I ſhall only ſay two things; Firſt, That Diana might have grown Barren before ſhe was 40 Years of Age by a great Lewdneſs: Secondly, That it frequently happens that Widowers and Widows, who had Children by their firſt Marriage, get none when they are married together.

If one had a Mind to deny the Inceſt, it were better to go about it as Varillas did; it were better to deny that Diana lay with the Father, than to deny it of the Son. However it be, let us ſee what Varillas ſays. (f) “ I expect to be blamed “ for having ſaid nothing of the pretended Inceſt “ of the ſame Dutcheſs of Valentinois, with the Fa- “ ther and the Son, that is, with King Francis I. “ and King Henry II. But to this I anſwer two “ things: Firſt, That of all the Authors of thoſe “ Times, whom I have ſeen in the King's Library, “ in a Collection divided into thirty ſeven Volumes, “ I have not found any Catholick Writer who men- “ tions that Inceſt, and that the Catholicks have “ been as careful to ſay nothing of it, as the Calvi- “ niſts appeared eager and paſſionate in giving a “ particular Account of it. Beſides, the ſame Cal- “ viniſts don't agree in their Satyrs; for ſome will “ have it, that this Dutcheſs, who was then known “ only by the Name of Diana de Poitiers, yielded “ to the Deſires of King Francis I. only to ſave by “ the loſs of her Virginity, the Life of St. Vallier, “ her Father, who was to loſe it upon a Scaffold, “ for being an Accomplice in the Rebellion of the “ Conſtable de Bourbon; and others affirm that ſhe “ proſtituted herſelf to the Conſtable de Montmo- “ rency, Chief Miniſter and Favourite of Francis I. „ If he goes upon no better Grounds as to this, than in what he adds concerning the Reaſon why the Calviniſts hated the Dutcheſs de Valentinois, he has loſt his Cauſe; for it is an abſurd thing to alledge the (g) Laſt-Will of the Dutcheſs, as the true Reaſon of their Hatred, and not the cruel Perſecution which they ſuffered under a Reign, in which every thing was managed according to the Caprices of that Woman. This is certainly the Sophiſm à non cauſa pro cauſa.

---

* See the Rem. A.

(f) Abregé Chron. tom. 4. p. 644. ad ann. 1547.

(h) Ovid. ub. ſup.

(i) See Martial, Epig. 51. & 105. l. 11.

(k) Thuan. ub. ſup.

(l) Father Anſelme, Palais de l'honneur p. 555.

(m) See the Rem. B.

(a) Fran…cus Lu…ttia pro…ctus ad …anum …etri Mo…tallerien…s . . . ap…ulit . . . . …i duo …orbonii …omeſtici …atione …ormani (quæ na…o vulgo … parum …da notari …let) Ar…gius ac …atigno …orboni…n cum …a fare …nveniſſe …que ad…rſus …anciſ…m mul…moliri …dicant. …carius 17. n. … p. 530.

(b) Varil-… Hiſt. … Fran…is I. l. 4. …269.

(c) Addit. … Me- …res de …lelnau … 1. p. …5.

(d) See the 49 Chap. of Geneſis v. 4.

(e) This nay is needleſs here, ſince the Author ſays nothing that is of more validity than what goes before.

(f) Varillas, Preface to the Hiſtory of Henry II.

(g) By which ſhe diſinherited the D. of Bouillon, her Son in-Law, in caſe he ſhould embrace the new Religion.

Names, becauſe ſhe had been married to Lewis de Breze, Great Seneſchal of Normandy, by whom ſhe had two Daughters (G), whom ſhe married very advantageouſly. As for the other Name, ſhe took it, becauſe Henry II. gave her the Dutchy of Valentinois. I don't think that when ſhe ſet up in oppoſition to the Dutcheſs d'Etampes, in the Reign of Francis I. ſhe was ſo old (H) as Varillas will have it. We are (G) Two Daughters, whom ſhe married very advantageouſly.] Frances de Brezé, the Eldeſt, (h) married in 1538, Robert de la Mark, IVth of that Name, Duke of Bouillon, Sovereign Prince of Sedan, who was made Marſhal of France in 1547. Louiſe (i) de Brezé, the other Daughter of the Great Seneſchal, was married to Claudius de Lorraine, Duke d'Aumale, Brother to the Duke of Guiſe, who was killed by Poltrot. Varillas is very much out here. (k) He ſuppoſes, that in the Beginning of Henry the Second's Reign, the Dutcheſs de Valentinois and Cardinal de Lorraine, mutually endeavoured to unite their Intereſts, in order to keep up and increaſe their Credit, and that the Cardinal upon ſuch a proſpect, propoſed to marry the Prince of Joinville his Eldeſt Brother, with the Eldeſt Daughter of the Dutcheſs: which not ſucceeding, the Dutcheſs was obliged to be contented to marry her Eldeſt Daughter to the Duke d'Aumale, the Cardinal's younger Brother; after which ſhe married (l) her ſecond Daughter to the Son of the Marſhal de Fleuranges, Prince of Sedan. Varillas confounds Times and Things; for the Eldeſt Daughter of Diana married Robert de la Mark, Prince of Sedan, in (m) the Year 1538. Would Henry Robert de la Mark, their Son, have married (n) in 1558 the Daughter of the Duke of Montpenſier, if his Mother had married under the Reign of Henry II? I ſay nothing of Antoinette de la Mark, Siſter of Henry Robert, who was married to Damville, ſecond Son to the Conſtable de Montmorency, in the Year 1558, according to Varillas (o); for, becauſe he obſerves that ſhe was almoſt Marriageable, he might get out of my Objection, and I don't know what Age that Lady was of at that time. Having deſired a Friend (p) to conſult Mr. d'Hozier, who has a vaſt Knowledge of Hiſtory and Genealogies, I have been informed that Frances de Brezé, Eldeſt Daughter of Diana de Poitiers, was married in 1538 to Robert de la Mark, and that Louiſe de Brezé, her ſecond Daughter, was married to Claudius de Lorraine, Duke d'Aumale, in (q) 1546; for William de Poitiers, her Uncle, mentions her, as being that Prince's Wife in the Laſt-Will he made the 12th of March 1546. Preſident de la Place obſerves, that the Duke d'Aumale married under the Reign of Francis I. by ſuch a Token that the King would not ſuffer the Bride (r) to be dreſt like a Princeſs on her Wedding Day. Which ſhews the Miſtakes of the Modern Author of the Life of Admiral de Coligny. He ſuppoſes, that the Conſtable de Montmorency having attained again to the top of Favour after the Death of Francis I. had a mind to marry Coligny to the Heireſs of Laval. Coligny did not like the Match, and put in his Brother d'Andelot for it. The Conſtable thinking that Coligny had refuſed it, becauſe he was in Love with the Lady de Brezé, deſired that young Lord (ſ) to forbear viſiting that Lady ſo frequently, or to do it at leaſt with a Deſign to try whether ſhe would be of her Mother's Humour. Nevertheleſs, the Viſits continued to be as frequent as before. That Author having related ſeveral Intrigues, tells us, that Diana having two Daughters (t) to marry, look'd out for ſome Husbands, who might help her to keep up her Credit, and ſhe caſt her Eyes upon the Prince of Joinville, and ſpoke to the Cardinal de Lorraine about it. He adds, (a) that Coligny repreſented to that Prince, that it was no Honourable Match for him, and put him out of Conceit with it, and that afterwards, Diana married her Daughter to the Duke d'Aumale, younger Brother to that Prince. See the Remark Q. I admire the many Particulars mentioned by this Author, and his vaſt Commentaries upon a few Words of Brantome. He is a faithful Imitator of Varillas, an Hiſtorian who will ſpoil a great many Authors, if it be not prevented. But omitting his Hiſtorical Miſtakes, I ſhall only obſerve that Diana had no Daughters to marry, when Henry II. her Lover, came to the Crown the 31ſt of March 1547; for, as I have already ſaid, the eldeſt of her two Daughters was married in the Year 1538, and the youngeſt in the Year 1546.

(H) So old as Varillas will have it.] I ſhall ſet down his own Words, which concern the Year 1544. "(b) Diana de Poitiers was the Dauphin's "Miſtreſs, as the (c) Dutcheſs was loved by the "King; but this was the only thing wherein they "were alike. The Dutcheſs had never been ſo beautiful as ſhe was then: ſhe had loſt nothing of the "Luſtre, which procured her the Reputation of being the greateſt Beauty in Europe, in the Opinion "of the niceſt Judges, and even of the Emperor himſelf: but Diana had ſcarce any of thoſe Charms, "which ſaved her Father's Life one and twenty "Years before. The Dutcheſs was but one and thirty "Years of Age, and it was ſuſpected that Diana "was near ſixty Years old; for the care that was "taken to know her Age, by enquiring where ſhe "was Chriſten'd, proved ineffectual. . . . . The Dutcheſs . . . . . ſpoke freely of Diana, whereas Diana concealed under feigned Demonſtrations of "Reſpect and Complaiſance, her Vexation for the "Slight that was put upon her. The Dutcheſs's "Freedom made her ſay upon a certain Occaſion, "that ſhe was born the ſame Day that Diana had "been married. Theſe Words were the more offenſive, becauſe they might be true, and reflected "upon Diana as if ſhe had been uncapable of inſpiring any Love, ſince it was known that ſhe had "been a long time (d) without finding a Husband. "Nevertheleſs, ſhe concealed her Reſentment as "long as the King enjoyed a perfect Health; but "when ſhe perceived that his Majeſty began to "decline, ſhe hinted to the Dutcheſs, that the Time "was coming on when ſhe would be revenged on "her." I cannot tell from whence this Author had theſe Stories, but I very much queſtion the Truth of 'em. I heard one Day a certain Perſon argue againſt it in the following manner. In the I. place, ſaid he, if Diana de Poitiers had been 40 Years of Age when her Father was tried, 'tis not likely that the Hiſtorians would have repreſented her as a Tid-bit for Francis I. A married Woman and a Widow will be more eaſily accounted handſome at 40 Years of Age, than a Maid of the ſame Years. The latter will be ſooner called an old Maid, than the former will be called an old Woman, and thro' an ill effect of Prejudices, ſhe is not look'd upon as ſo good a Fortune. II. Mezeray ſays, (e) that Diana was but 14 Years of Age, when ſhe ſaved her Father's Life; which is much more likely than to ſay that ſhe was 40. The Exchange of a Criminal's Life for an old Maidenhead, is not ſo eaſily apprehended by the Readers, as when they are told (as they are by Mezeray) that this Exchange was made by one that was but 14 Years of Age; and the Fault of King Francis may be better excuſed by it. III. If Diana had been near 60 Years old in 1544, ſhe muſt have been 75 Years old when Henry II. died, that is, on the Day of the famous Turnament, in which that Prince received a Wound of which he died, he took (f) White and Black for his Livery, on account of the handſome Widow he ſerved: Would an old Woman of 75 Years have been ſerved as a handſome Widow? Would the Proteſtants, to whom ſhe was ſo violent an Enemy, and who revenged themſelves upon her by their Satyrical Books, have forgot her great Age? A young King deſperately in Love with an old Woman of 70 Years, lies ſo open to be ridiculed, that Henry II. would have been banter'd and rail'd at in the moſt inſulting manner, on account of his old Miſtreſs, if the Dutcheſs of Valentinois had been of ſuch an Age. The Silence of the Satyrical Writers, who only ſay, that Diana was between 40 and 50 Years of Age, ſeems to me a very ſtrong Reaſon againſt Varillas. But this is not the main part of the Objection: what Brantome ſays in his Memoires des Dames Galantes was more inſiſted upon. He ſays (g), that two Years after the Death of that Prince, the Enemies of the Dutcheſs of Valentinois courted her Friendſhip. She muſt therefore have lived at leaſt 77 Years: how comes it then that, according to Brantome (h), ſhe died being 70 Years and a half old? IV. One can hardly believe that the Dutcheſs d'Etampes was but 31 Years of Age in 1544: if this were true, ſhe muſt have been but 13 when Francis I. made a Miſtreſs of her. But not

---

(h) Anſelme, Hiſt. des Officiers de la Couronne p. 179.

(i) Idem, Palais de l'honneur p. 448.

(k) Hiſt. de Henry II. l. 1. p. 44, 49. ad ann. 1547.

(l) Ibid. p. 47.

(m) Anſelme ub. ſup.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Ub. ſup. l. 7. p. 361.

(p) Mr. Janniçon Advocate in the Council.

(q) 'Tis perhaps by reckoning the Beginning of the Year from Eaſter.

(r) Commentaires de l'état de la religion & republique fol. 59. verſo edit. 1565.

(ſ) Vie de Gaſpard de Coligny. Book 2. p. 87. edit. 1686.

(t) Ibid. p. 102.

(a) Ibid. p. 106.

(b) Varillas, Hiſt. de François I. liv. 11. p. [illegible] Dutch Edit.

(c) That is, the Dutcheſs d'Etampes.

(d) This is not true. See the Rem. P.

(e) Abreg. Chronol. Tom. 4. p. 520. This agrees with what he ſays in the 2 Vol. of his large Hiſtory, p. 1058. that Diana got the Dauphin's Love at 14 Years of Age. La Planche in his Hiſt. of Francis II. ſays much the ſame. In her younger Years, ſays he p. 14. ſhe redeem'd her Father's Life with her Maidenhead, and afterwards, to the misfortune of France, became King Henry's Miſtreſs, being far advanced in Years.

(f) Brantome, Eloge de Henri II. p. 39. of the 2 Tome.

(g) Tome 2. p. 328.

(h) Ibid. 228.

are told very remarkable things about the great (I) Resolution she shewed after the Death of Henry II. and about the Continuance of (K) her Beauty. She was a mortal Enemy to the (L) Protestants; and doubtless, the Religious Zeal of such a Woman, was one of the most remarkable parts of the Comedy that is acted upon the not to insist upon this, I further observe, that she was Maid of Honour to the Lady Regent, before the King fell in Love with her; and I question whether at that Time, when the Education of Children was not so forward as it is in our Age, a Maid of 12 Years would have been qualified to be a Maid of Honour to the Lady Regent. V. I own, that Jealousie prompts the Court Ladies, as well as others, to use passionate Expressions, and to tell strange Lyes; but when a Woman knows that her Enemies have an Eye upon her, she will take care not to say any thing that is palpably absurd, and she will forbear telling gross and impertinent Lies. The Dutchess d'Etampes took quite another Course, if she said that she was born on the Day that Diana de Poitiers was married. Every Body knew at Court, at what Time the Dutchess had lost her Honour: the Return of King Francis from Spain was too remarkable a thing to be easily forgotten. Now this was the very Time when Mademoiselle de Heilli began to set up for a Gallant Woman. The Court did not less remember the Pardon that was sent to St. Vallier on the Scaffold; and consequently they knew when Diana lost her Honour, and they were not ignorant that those two Ladies began to play the same Game not long one after another. Wherefore, since it was known to the whole Court, that St. Vallier's Daughter had not been married to the great Senechal of Normandy (i), till Francis I. had lain with her, the Dutchess d'Etampes would have been a mad Woman, if she had said what we read in Varillas, I was born on the same Day that Diana married; for it had been an easie thing to prove it an Imposture and a silly Jest. We shall see in the Remark P, that all these Reflections are not well grounded.

(i) This is not true: See the Rem. P.

The Author of the Galanteries des Rois de France has adopted all these Mistakes of Varillas, and made 'em worse, by referring to (k) the Year 1547 what the other had referred to the Year 1544; which occasions many new Falsities. Mademoiselle de Heilli was but 10 Years, when the King lay with her. St. Vallier obtained his Pardon in 1526. Epernay and Chateau-Thierry were taken, and the Treatise of Creſpy was made after the Year 1546. Here follows another Fault of that Author. He says, (l), that the Love which King Francis conceived for Mademoiselle de Heilli, at his Return from Spain, made him insensible with respect to all the Persons of the Court, and that Diana, who had been married a long time to Lewis de Brezé, Senechal of Normandy, endeavoured to ease her Grief for the Inconstancy of that Prince, considering that the Dauphin gave her several Marks of Love. You must know that Henry II. was but 8 Years of Age when his Father returned from Spain in 1526. You must further know, that he was not Dauphin till the Year 1536, and that Diana was a Widow when the Dauphin fell in Love with her. From this you may judge, whether the Author of the Galanteries is an exact Writer.

(k) Tom. 1. p. 204. Edition of 1695.

(l) Pag. 187.

(I) The great Resolution she shewed after the Death of Henry II.] Brantome gives an Account of it. (m) "When Henry II. was a dying, the Dutchess "of Valentinois was ordered to retire to her House "at Paris, and to come no more into the King's "Chamber, lest she should disturb his Godly "Thoughts, and because some bore her an ill Will. "She retired, and then a Messenger was sent to her "to ask of her some Rings and Jewels that belonged to the Crown. She immediately asked him, "is the King dead? No, Madam, replied he, but "he can't live long. Well, said she, I will have my "Enemies to know, that I am not afraid of 'em, "and will not obey them as long as he is alive. "I have still an undaunted Courage; but when he "dies, I will not live after him, and tho' my Life "be never so bitter, I shall think it sweet in comparison of my loss, and therefore, whether my "King be dead or alive, I am not afraid of my Enemies. That Lady shewed herself very generous: "but some will say that she did not die, tho' she "said she would. 'Tis true: however, she came "very near Death; and I think it was well done "of her not to die, in order to let her Enemies "know that she did not fear them, and that if she "had seen 'em tremble and humble themselves in "her Presence, she would not do the same. And "indeed, she appeared so stout and resolute that "they could never vex her: nay, two Years after, "they courted her more than ever, and were Friends "again; as it is usual with Great People, whose "Friendship and Enmity are of no long continuance, and whose Differences are quickly made "up. It is not so with us inconsiderable People; "for we must either fight and die, or put an end "to our Quarrels by a very nice Agreement, and "after all we are never the better Friends."

(m) Dames Galantes, Tom. 2. p. m. 327.

What Brantome says, that Great People are easily reconciled, and that the Little ones are very eager in their Quarrels, puts me in mind of what was said to a Parisian, during the Wars between the Houses of Orleans and Burgundy. (a) "Whilst this "War lasted, things were carried on with such a "heat, that after many Sieges, and the destruction "of many Towns, the Peace was concluded on at "Auxerre. For, as the Duke of Burgundy told a "Parisian, who went to meet him, We, that are "descended from the Royal Blood, grow angry one with "another, whenever we have a mind to it, and in like "manner, we make a Peace whenever we have a mind "to it. Monstrelet further says, that a Burgundian "was of Opinion, that it was a great folly to kill "one another for the sake of Princes, who are reconciled whenever they please."

(a) Rouillard, Hist. de Melun p. 5.

(K) And about the Continuance of her Beauty.] (b) "I saw, says Brantome, the Dutchess of Valentinois "as beautiful, at threescore and ten Years of Age, "and as fresh and lovely as when she was but thirty; and therefore 'tis no wonder if she was beloved by one of the greatest and most valiant "Kings in the World. This I may freely say, without doing any Prejudice to the Beauty of that "Lady; for whenever a Lady gains the Love of a "King, 'tis a sign that she is a most accomplish'd "Person: besides, Beauty, which is a Present of "Heaven, ought to be enjoyed by the Demi-Gods. "I saw that Lady half a Year before she died: she "was still so Beautiful, that none but a hard-hearted Man would have been insensible to her Charms, "tho' sometime before she had broke one of her "Legs in the Streets of Orleans. She rid then as "dextrously as ever she did; but her Horse fell. "One would have thought, that the great Pains she "felt, would have made some Alteration in her "Face; but on the contrary, her Beauty, and her "Charming and Majestical Air were the same "as before. She had a very white Skin without "any Paint; only 'tis said that she drank every "Morning some Broth, with potable Gold and other "Drugs in it. I think, if that Lady had lived an "hundred Years longer, she had never been an old "Woman; her Face was so well formed, and her "Body of such a good Temper and Constitution. "'Tis pity such a fine Body should lie under the "Ground."

(b) Brant. Dames Galantes tom. 2. p. 228.

(L) A mortal Enemy to the Protestants.] Beza ascribes the cruel Persecution which the Protestants suffered under the Reign of Henry II. to the Counsels of three Persons, viz. the Cardinal de Lorraine, the Dutchess of Valentinois, and the Marshal de St. André. The Cardinal, says he (c), had the King's Conscience at his Disposal. The Dutchess was in possession of his Body, not without suspicion of Witchcraft, since she had lived in a very bad Reputation, and had nothing in her that might reasonably (if there is any Reason in such Passions) win the Heart of such a Prince. Those three Persons, who continually endeavoured to make him believe these two things, that the Protestants were Enemies to the Kingly Power, and great Lovers of Confusion, and that the right way of making amends for all the Vices, in which they themselves indulged him, was to exterminate the Enemies of the Romish Religion, did so work upon him, that from the very Beginning of his Reign, he made it his business to persecute and destroy the Churches, as his late Father had done before him. Here is a Passage out of Brantome. (d) But above all, she was a very good Catholick, and hated the Protestants very much. Which is the reason why they hated and slandered her. But Varillas's Words are very remarkable. "(e) She declared in the principal Articles of her Will, which the Stage of the World. If there is any thing in Brantome's Memoirs, that is not only inſipid, but alſo execrable, 'tis the Baſeneſs he is guilty of in praiſing this Dutcheſs, and the (M) exceſſive Complaiſance of Henry II. Thuanus is far from being guilty of ſuch a baſe Flattery: he does not (N) ſpare the Conſtable de Montmorency, who, notwithſtanding all his Haughtineſs, cring'd to that lewd Woman. Mezeray (O) did not act the Part of a Flatterer. She has been praiſed * for not revenging her ſelf of the Dutcheſs d'Etampes as much as ſhe might have done after the Death of Francis I. The great Riches ſhe got proved very uſeful to her after the Death of Henry II. She made uſe of 'em to pacifie the Queen Mother, and ſhe retired to her fine Seat at Anet; not without receiving †, as 'tis ſaid, a ſevere Reprimand from Catherine de Medicis. That Queen was amazed, when Tavannes offered to cut off the Noſe of the Dutcheſs of Valentinois: She told him, that he would undo himſelf by it; and he anſwered, that he would willingly die to put an end to Vice, and to the Miſfortune of the King and his Kingdom ‡. To conclude, I ſhall examine what ſome ſay, that her (P) Virginity ſaved her Father's Life, and I'll produce “ ſhe made when ſhe was moſt in Favour, and which ſhe did not revoke when ſhe died ten or twelve Years after, that ſhe was ſo zealous for the Catholick Faith, that if the Dutcheſſes d'Aumale and de Bouillon, her Daughters, ſhould forſake it upon any pretence whatſoever, and embrace a new Sect, ſhe deprived them of her Eſtate, and gave it to the Hoſpitals of the Places where the ſeveral parts of it lay. If one of her Daughters only renounced the Catholick Faith, ſhe gave her Share to her Siſter; and if her Relations were not careful to execute her Laſt Will, ſhe applied herſelf to the Parliament, and intreated them by the good Offices ſhe had formerly done 'em with Henry II. to ſupply the Fault of her Relations. „ This Hiſtorian obſerves, that this Article of her Will was not executed; the Dutcheſs of Bouillon made an open Profeſſion of the Reformed Religion, and yet had an equal Share of her Mother's Eſtate with the Dutcheſs d'Aumale. Varillas takes occaſion from hence to commend the Generoſity of the Guiſes. So true it is, ſays he, that the Houſe of Guiſe has ſometimes performed ſome generous Actions, which are not to be found in the Princes of other Houſes. He quickly (g) overthrows the Foundation on which he builds this Encomium. I ſhall ſet down another Paſſage, which clearly ſhews how much the Dutcheſs hated the Proteſtants. (h) “ She durſt not explain her Thoughts to d'Andelot; for tho' ſhe made no ſcruple, for the ſpace of twenty Years, to live an unchaſt Life, contrary to the Laws of the Goſpel, yet ſhe had ſuch a nice Conſcience, that ſhe would not ſo much as ſpeak to thoſe who were ſuſpected of Hereſie. „ What Extravagance! I deſire the Readers to make their Reflections upon this odd Zeal, which is ſo common.

(c) Histoire Ecclesiastique l. 2. p. 68.

(d) Brant. Eloge de Henry II. in the 2 tom. of his Memoirs, p. 9.

(e) Histoire de Henri II. l. 1. p. 36. & 37.

(M) In praiſing ...... the exceſſive Complaiſance.] If Brantome had ſaid only that the Dutcheſs of Valentinois had a great deal of Courage, that ſhe was ſtill handſome at 70 Years of Age, and that ſhe was a good Horſe-woman, no Body would find fault with him for it. But 'tis an intolerable thing that he ſhould ſay, “ That ſhe (i) never adviſed the King to any thing but what was Great, Noble and Generous. .... (k) That ſhe was very Mild, Charitable to the Poor, Devout and Pious, for which reaſon ſhe had a Grave for her Device... ..... as living only in God, and that the French ought to wiſh, that their Kings may never have a worſe Favourite than ſhe was. (l) The great and vaſt Preſent, which the King made to the ſaid Dutcheſs of Valentinois at his coming to the Crown, upon the Confirmation of all the Officers of France, as 'tis uſually practiſed in the Beginning of a new Reign, was thought a very ſtrange thing. The Money, that was raiſed by it, amounted to a prodigious Sum, becauſe King Francis had reigned a long time. Such a King might very well make ſuch a Preſent to ſuch a Lady; for it was a caſual Forfeiture, which made no part of his Revenues, Demeſnes, Subſidies or Taxes, and our former Kings were very free of ſuch things, as I have it from good Hands, and were blamed when they did not diſpoſe of 'em in favour of their Servants. They uſed to do it; but our late Kings keep 'em for themſelves, and Farm them to ſupply their Neceſſities. Beſides, this Lady did not make an ill uſe of that Money, for ſhe built that fine Houſe at Anet, that will be for ever an Ornament to France. „ One cannot read this without Indignation: the Praiſes beſtowed upon her by Francis de Billon, on account of (a) her being a Woman of her Word and Beneficent, are ſtill leſs offenſive.

(N) Thuanus ...... does not ſpare the Conſtable de Montmorency.] I ſhall ſet down his own Words, which are more energical than a Tranſlation would be. (b) Hæc violenta & acerba regni initia, ſub miti & moderato principe & qui alieno potius quam ſuo ingenio uteretur, facile Miniſtris tributa ſunt, ſed præcipue Dianæ Pictavienſi ſuperbi & impotentis animi feminæ, apud quam plurimum gratia valebant Lotharingi fratres & Santandreanus. .... Hujus feminæ arbitrio omnia regebantur, & Momorantius ipſe ut auctoritatem & potentiam quam apud regem obtinebat incolumem tueretur morem gerere, & prudentiam ad turpe obſequium flectere ſatagebat, peſſimo exemplo ſummi imperii ad impotentis feminæ libidinem proſtituti, quæ poſtremo ut jam in homines ſic & ærarium quod hominibus imperat poteſtatem arripuit, expulſo Joanne Vallo ſanctioris ærarii quæſtore, & in ejus locum ſuffecto Blando Rupicuriano homine ſuo. He mentions afterwards many other Extorſions (c) which that Blood-ſucker made uſe of to ſatisfie her Avarice. Mezeray (d) obſerves, that the King changed immediately the whole Court to pleaſe that crafty Woman.

(O) Mezeray did not act the part of a Flatterer.] Speaking of the poſture of Affairs after the Death of Henry II. he expreſſes himſelf thus. (e) “ The Dutcheſs of Valentinois made no long Stay at Court after Bertrandi, Keeper of the Seals: She was turn'd out when Olivier came in, whom ſhe had expell'd, and ſhe was ſhamefully obliged to reſtore the Keys of the King's Cloſet, and the Jewels of the Royal Family, which were given to the Queen reigning. However, this was not done to pleaſe Olivier, but to ſatisfie the juſt Reſentment of Catherine, who could no longer ſuffer, without diſgracing herſelf, a Woman who had robb'd her of the King's Affection. We may gueſs that this Princeſs did not let her go without reproachful and injurious Words. The Duke d'Aumale, her Son-in-Law, obtained that ſhe ſhould not receive a worſe Uſage, and that ſhe ſhould keep the vaſt Wealth ſhe had got by the forfeited Eſtates of Criminals, and the Sale of Benefices, and by many other unlawful means, becauſe ſhe promiſed to make him her only Heir. But ſhe was forced to give the Queen-Mother her fine Seat of Chenonceaux upon the Cher. „ This is a mollified Extract (f) out of La Planche.

(P) That her Virginity ſaved her Father's Life, and I'll produce ſome Dates.] I have been informed by Mr. d'Hozier, that ſhe married the Great Seneſchal of Normandy the 29th of March 1514. And therefore Mezeray advances a great falſity, when he ſays, (g) that the King ſent St. Vallier's Pardon, after he had got from his Daughter Diana, who was then 14 Years of Age, the moſt precious thing ſhe had. Doubtleſs he means, that ſhe granted her Virginity to Francis I. he is therefore miſtaken in two things: he did not know that ſhe was at leaſt 20 Years of Age in 1523, and that ſhe had been married 8 or 9 Years. 'Tis plain, his Words are only a Paraphraſe upon thoſe of La Planche, which I have quoted (h). He gives the following Judgment about that Hiſtorian. Regnier de la Planche, ſays he (i), was the Son of the Lieutenant General of Poitiers, a cunning Man, and of a quick Wit, but malicious, and imbued with Calvin's Opinions, and beſides, a Confident of the Marſhal de Montmorency, and conſequently an Enemy to the Guiſes. 'Tis no wonder if a Man

---

* Varillas, Hiſtoire de Henry II. l. 1. p. m. 33, 34.

† See the Rem. O.

‡ Memoires de Tavannes apud le Laboureur, addit. to Caſtelnau tom. 2. p. 573.

(g) He ſays p. 49. that the Cardinal de Lorraine who neglected nothing, took care to get ſome Clauſes inſerted in the Contract of the Count d'Aumale, which were ſo advantageous to that Count, that he inherited afterwards the beſt part of the Succeſſion of his Mother-in-Law.

(h) Varillas, ibid. b. 7. p. 301. ad ann. 1558.

(i) Eloge de Henry II. p. 9.

(k) Ibid. p. 11.

(l) Ibid. p. 10.

(a) See the Book intitled, Le fort inexpugnable de l'honneur du ſexe feminin conſtruit par François de Billon Secretaire printed in the Year 1555. fol. 170.

(b) Thuan. hiſtor. l. 3. p. 58.

(c) See Lewis de Reinier Sieur de la Planche in his Hiſt. of Francis II. p. 14.

(d) Hiſtoire de France tom. 2. p. 1058. ad ann. 1547.

(e) Ibid. tom. 3. p. 6.

(f) Page 15. & 16. of the Book intitled, Hiſtoire de l'eſtat de France, tant de la Republique que de la Religion, ſous le regne de François II.

(g) Mezerai, Abregé Chronol. tom. 4. p. 520. ad ann. 1523.

(h) In the Rem. H, letter e.

(i) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. p. 26.

duce ſome Dates, which will compoſe the Differences of ſome Hiſtorians. 'Tis a ſhameful thing that they ſhould diſagree in Matters of Fact, ſo Modern as thoſe are.

What has been ſaid in a Book printed at Baſil in the Year 1698, that the Duke of Guiſe had a mind to marry (Q) Diana de Poitiers, is not true. It is one of thoſe Miſtakes ſo common in Converſation; thoſe who have the beſt Memory, do ſometimes miſtake the Time, the Father for the Son, and the Daughter for the Mother.

POLY-

ſo qualified, did not inquire whether our Diana had been married a long time, when ſhe ſaved her Father's Life. Thoſe, who find a Myſtery in the leaſt things, fancy that it was not without Reaſon that Francis I. expreſſed himſelf thus in the Pardon he granted to St. Vallier. Whereas our dear and truſty Couſin, Counſellor and Chamberlain, the Count de Maulevrier, Great Seneſchal of Normandy, and the Friends and Relations of John de Poitiers, Sieur de St. Vallier, have moſt humbly ſupplicated and intreated us to take pity on the ſaid de Poitiers, Sieur de St. Vallier, &c. Care was taken, ſay thoſe ſpeculative Men, not to mention the Affinity that was between the Great Seneſchal and the Criminal, and not to ſay, that he interceeded for his Wife's Father; leſt it ſhould occaſion ſome Suſpicions and Slanders, conſidering the Youth and Beauty of the Lady, who begg'd her Father's Life. But laying aſide theſe vain Subtilties, I ſhall conſider Varillas's Remark. He has not found, ſays he (k), any Catholick who mentions that Inceſt: the Catholicks have been as careful to ſay nothing of it, as the Calviniſts have been paſſionate in their Accounts of it. He only mentions the Writers of that Time, whoſe Works make up thirty ſeven Volumes. I wiſh I had the time to examine whether there were any Books written by the Catholicks in the Reign of Francis I. or in that of Henry II. which mentioned this Cauſe of the Pardon granted to St. Vallier; and I deſire all thoſe to inquire into the Matter, who are able to do it, or concerned in it. However, Varillas cannot deny, that in the XVII. Century the Catholick Writers tell us, that Francis I. was in Love with Diana de Poitiers. Le Laboureur (l) does not deny it. Mezeray ſpeaks of it more clearly than la Planche; and I have quoted a Modern Author, who never was a Proteſtant, and who confirms what is to be found in the Proteſtant Hiſtorians. I have ſet down his Words, but I have not obſerved that he falſly ſays, that young Diana was admitted into the Service of Queen Claudia, as a Maid of Honour. That Queen was the Daughter of Lewis XII. ſhe married Francis I. the 14th of May 1514, and was not a Queen till January following. But Diana married Lewis de Brezé the 29th of March 1514, and therefore ſhe was not Maid of Honour to Queen Claudia. A (n) Friend of mine has been pleaſed to acquaint me, that ſhe loſt her Husband in 1531, and that ſhe erected to him a ſtately Monument in the Church of Noſtre-Dame at Rouen; that ſhe died in 1566, at 66 Years and 27 Days of Age, and that ſhe lies buried at Anet. Beſides, Hilarion de Coſte (o) obſerves, that ſhe died the 26th of April 1566. The Reſult of all which is, that ſhe was born the 31ſt of March 1500, and that the Dutcheſs d'Etampes was ridiculous in making herſelf ſo young, in compariſon of her Rival. This will give me occaſion to rectifie the want of Exactneſs in the Paſſages above-mentioned, concerning the Age of the Dutcheſs of Valentinois.

The Minime I have quoted, does plainly enough intimate the Inceſt. I ſhall ſet down his Words ſomewhat at large, which contain ſome Particulars belonging to this Article. "(a) After the Death "of Lewis de Brezé, her Husband, King Henry II. "who was very much in Love with her, gave her "the Title of Dutcheſs of Valentinois, which ſhe "enjoyed till the Day on which ſhe died, which was "the 26th of April 1566, and ſhe was buried in the "fine Chapel which ſhe had built in her Houſe at "Anet, (which the Poets of her Time call'd Dianet) "after ſhe had divided her Eſtate between her Second Daughter Louiſe, Dutcheſs d'Aumale, and "the Children of the Eldeſt. She ordered by her "Laſt Will, that if ſhe died at Paris, her Corps "ſhould be carried firſt to the Church of the Filles "Penitentes, and from thence to Anet, and ſhe ſhewed her great Averſion for the pretended Reformed Religion. The Devices of Diana, Dutcheſs of "Valentinois, were more proper for Diana, Dutcheſs of Angouleſme. The firſt was a Dart or an "Arrow, (the Symbol of the Arms of Chaſt Diana, "Goddeſs of Hunting) with this Motto upon a Ribbon that went round the Dart, CONSEQUITUR "QUODCUMQUE PETIT, She obtains whatever "ſhe asks. She deſign'd to expreſs by this Device, "how much ſhe was in Favour with Henry II. and "the great Aſcendant ſhe had over that Prince, who "could not deny her any thing, and likewiſe over "all the Great Men of this Kingdom, and Francis I. "having obtained from him a Pardon for her Father, who by that King's Order, had been taken "up, and condemn'd to be beheaded, for favouring "the Retreat of Charles, Duke of Bourbon, out of "the Kingdom. The Sentence was not executed "upon him; his Majeſty having ſent him his Pardon at the Requeſt of that Lady..... Diana (b) "de Poitiers had alſo another Device, viz. a Grave, "out of which ſprung an Arrow, ſurrounded with "ſome Boughs and Shoots of a green Tree, with "this Motto, SOLA VIVIT IN ILLO, She alone "lives in it, meaning, that the only hope of a "Reſurrection makes us live in the loweſt part of "our Graves. This fine Device, and the third, which "was a Diana triumphing over Cupid, with this "Latin Inſcription, (1) OMNIUM VICTOREM "VICI I have vanquiſhed the Vanquiſher of all, were "not actually practiſed by Diana Dutcheſs of Valentinois, but by Diana, Dutcheſs of Angouleſme." Note, That all the Authors I have quoted, miſrepreſent the Favour obtained for St. Vallier: it was not ſo great as 'tis thought; the puniſhment of Death was only changed into that of a perpetual and very ſevere Impriſonment. The Pardon was expreſſed in theſe Words: (c) "We make it known that for "theſe Cauſes, and conſidering the ſaid Services, "and particularly that which the ſaid Great (d) "Seneſchal has done us, we have with our certain "Knowledge, full Power and Royal Authority, "changed, and do change the puniſhment of Death "into that hereafter mention'd. That is to ſay, the "ſaid de Poitiers ſhall be ſhut up for Life between "four Stone Walls, built above and underneath, "having but one Window to give him Meat and "Drink. In all other things the Contents of the "Sentence pronounced againſt him ſhall remain in "their force, and be entirely executed." If one ſhould infer from thence, that what is ſaid of Diana's Favours beſtowed upon Francis I. is falſe, he might be told that the King cauſed a Superſedeas to be immediately drawn up, wherein he ordered the Parliament to keep the ſaid St. Vallier (e) where he was, till he ſhould give further Orders about it. Beſides, Paſquier may be alledged, who was perſuaded that (f) if Death had not prevented it, St. Vallier had been reſtored in time to all his Honours. If it be further ſaid, that the Crime of that Priſoner was one of thoſe, that leaſt deſerve a Pardon, one may anſwer, that the laſt Favour granted by his Daughter, was paid for to its full value; for her Father was involved in a Plot, wherein the King was perſonally concerned. 'Tis what the King declares in his (g) Pardon.

(Q) That the Duke of Guiſe had a mind to marry Diana de Poitiers.] I find in the 2d Volume (h) of the Melange Critique de literature, "That the "Dutcheſs of Valentinois occaſioned a Difference "between Admiral de Coligny and the Duke of Guiſe, "which produced afterwards very diſmal Effects. "Thoſe two Lords playing one Day at Tennis, the "Admiral told the Duke of Guiſe, that he wondered "a Wiſe Man, and one of his Quality ſhould be willing "to marry a Whore, meaning that Dutcheſs: the "Duke of Guiſe, who loved her, was offended at "his Diſcourſe, declared himſelf his Enemy, and "endeavoured to undo him. So that the Whore, as "the Admiral call'd her, or the Quarrel that happened upon her Account, did, perhaps, contribute "more to the Paris-Maſſacre than Religion, which "in all likelihood was only a pretence for it. Perhaps, "that Herodias ask'd the Admiral's Head........ "(i) I believe this Quarrel did very much contribute to the Maſſacre. What confirms me in this "Opinion is, that ſince the Maſſacre, the Duke of "Guiſe was often heard to ſay, that they had done "more than he deſired, and that he deſign'd a "Miſchief to no Body but the Admiral." The Author

(k) Above Rem. F, Letter f.

(l) See the Rem. F.

(n) Mr. Jannicon, Advocate in the Council at Paris.

(o) Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 1. p. 519.

(a) Hilarion de Coſte ib.

(b) Id. ib. p. 520.

(1) In the Cabinet of Medals of the Library of the Minimes in the Place Royale.

(c) See the Recueil de divers Memoires printed at Paris in 1623. p. 58.

(d) A Prieſt having told him that two Gentlemen of Normandy had confeſt to him, that they were guilty of a State-Crime, he gave notice of it to the Court, and heard the Depoſitions of the two Gentlemen.

(e) That is, in the Priſons of the Palace at Paris.

(f) Paſquier, Recherches de la France, b. 8. c. 39. p. m. 741.

(g) The ſaid Great Seneſchal ..... has diſcovered to us the Plots formed againſt our Perſon, our Children, and our Kingdom.

(h) Pag. 113.

(i) Ibid. p. 114.

POLYDAMUS (Valentinus) an Italian Physician, in the XVI. Century, published not only some * Books of Physick, but also an History, of which Bembus speaks † with Contempt.

POLYÆNUS, a Greek Author of a Collection of (T) Stratagems, was born in Macedonia. He dedicated that Work to the Emperors Antoninus and Verus, when they were engaged in a War with the Parthians. He was then a very old Man, and he told them, that if it had not been for his great Age, he would willingly have served upon such an occasion, but that instead of his Service he would present them with something Warlike, viz. the Stratagems made use of by the Ancients. I don't know whether Casaubon had a better Authority than this, to maintain that Polyænus * was a Soldier as well as a Gown-Man; but if he had none but this, I think he does not go upon very good Grounds. What he says that Polyænus was an Orator and an Advocate is more certain, for Suidas calls him a Rhetor. Suidas may be likewise alledged, to shew that Polyænus was a Man of War; for he ascribes to him not only a Book concerning the Taking of Thebes, but also three Books of Tacticks, or of the Art of drawing up an Army in Battalia. Yet this is no convincing Proof that a Man was a Soldier. Is it not an usual thing for several People to write about a thing, tho' they have only the Theory of it? Suidas mentions one POLYÆNUS a Sophist, a Native of Sardis, who lived (Z) in Julius Cæsar's Reign, and who published some Pleadings, and three Books of the Parthian Triumph, &c. There is a third POLYÆNUS, an Athenian, quoted in Eusebius's † Chronicle. I can't tell who he was. Scaliger β himself knew nothing of him. Cicero γ speaks of one POLYÆNUS, who was accounted a great Mathematician, but having afterwards embraced the Opinions of Epicurus, he maintained that Geometry was false.

POLITIAN (Angelo), in Latin Politianus, was born at ꝺ Monte Pulciano in Tuscany, the 14th of July 1454. He was one of the most (A) learned and polite Writers of his Age. He learn'd the Greek Tongue ‡ under Andronicus of Thessalonica, and made a great Progress in it. 'Tis said that he was bred up a Scholar with Marsilius Ficinus, at the Charges of (B) Cosmo de Medicis. The first thor of these Words supposes, that the same Duke of Guise, who had a mind to marry Diana de Poitiers, had frequently declared, that the Paris-Massacre had been carried farther than he intended. Which is to confound the Father and the Son; for the Duke of Guise, who is here said to have been in Love with Diana, had been dead above 9 Years when the Massacre was performed. But the greatest Mistake lies in saying, that the Duke of Guise, who had been the Admiral's intimate Friend, fell in Love with the Dutchess of Valentinois, &c. than which nothing can be more false. Here is what has occasioned that Mistake. The Admiral advised against marrying the Dutchess's Daughter; which was taken as if he design'd to prevent the Elevation of the Guises, and it was one of the Reasons why those two Friends became Enemies. Here follows a Passage out of an Author of that Time. " (k) The first Cause of " the late M. de Guise's Enmity was this. The late " M. de Guise your (l) Father, was desirous that M. " d'Aumale should marry the Second Daughter of " the Dutchess of Valentinois, to bring your House " into Credit. M. de Guise, your Brother, was a" gainst that Marriage, but durst not openly op" pose it, for fear of displeasing the King. Where" upon he applied himself to the Admiral, as being " his particular Friend, desiring him to advise him " what Answer he should make about it, adding, " that he would never consent to it upon any " Terms whatsoever. The Admiral being willing " to ease his Grief, did his best towards it, and af" ter some Discourse on both sides, his Conclusion " was, that it were better to have an Inch of Au" thority with Honour, than a Fathom without Ho" nour, and then they parted. But M. de Guise was " so far from approving that Advice, that in order " to exasperate King Henry against the Admiral, he " told the Marshal de Vieille-ville, who was their " common Friend, that he could never have be" lieved that the Admiral designed to prevent his " Advancement, by advising him against such a " Marriage.,,

It was the more necessary to rectifie this, because some learned Persons might have been deceived by it, and look'd upon it as a curious and secret Piece of History, concerning the Causes of the Paris-Massacre. The learned Journalists of Leipsick (m) who have published an Extract of the Melange Critique de Literature, took what has been said above concerning Admiral de Coligny and the Duke of Guise, who was in Love with our Diana, &c. as a very remarkable Matter of Fact. One can never be too careful in preventing some Readers from being imposed upon.

(T) Of a Collection of Stratagems.] It is divided into 8 Books. Casaubon is the first who published it in Greek. He added to it some Notes and the Latin Translation of Vulteius, which had been printed in 1550. There is a better and more correct Edition of it since the Year 1690, published by Pancratius Maasvicius, Principal of a College at Delft.

(Z) Who lived in Julius Cæsar's Reign.] Vossius (a) makes Suidas say, that this Sophist lived under Caligula. Moreri and Konig place him under the same Emperor; but it is certain that Suidas places him under Julius Cæsar, ἐπὶ τȣ͂ πρώτȣ καίσαρος γαΐȣ. According to Charles Stephens, he lived in Cæsar's and Mark Antony's Time, and this Author will have it, that the Triumph mentioned by Suidas was that which Mark Antony obtained over the Parthians: but he should have said, that it was Ventidius's Triumph (b).

(A) One of the most learned and polite Writers.] The Learned are little divided in their Opinions about Politian's Merit, and perhaps, no Author was ever more unanimously praised. The two Scaliger's have bestowed great Encomiums upon him, which is no small Glory to him. This, and several other Passages in his Praise, may be seen in (c) Sir Thomas Pope Blount. You may also consult M. Baillet (d), and Barthius (e).

(B) At the Charges of Cosmo de Medicis.] I shall quote Boissard for it. Is sumptu, says he (f), & promotione Cosmi Florentinorum principis, cum Marsilio Ficino bonis literis institutus est. I don't know from whence Varillas had the following Circumstances. " (g) He was a Native of Florence, and his Parents " were so poor, that he was obliged to wait upon " Julian and Laurence de Medicis, when they went " to the College, and to carry their Books, that " he might make use of 'em.,, 'Tis not true that Politian was a Native of Florence, as Varillas and Bullart (b) affirm: he was born at (i) Monte Pulciano. Observe 1. That Cosmo de Medicis died in the Year 1464, and therefore Politian could not have enjoyed the Favours of such a Patron but till he was 10 Years of Age. 2. That Marsilius Ficinus was a grown Man when Cosmo died; and therefore Boissard expresses himself very ill. Politian says, in one of his Works, that being very (k) young he

---

* See Lindenius renovatus p. 1034.

† Petrus Bembus epist. 58. l. 5. dated the 1. of March 1545.

* Polyænus scriptor antiquus, elegans, acutus, eruditus & quod ad rem facit haudquaquam ἀπειροπόλεμος, sed qui utramque militiam (sagatam inquam & togatam) secutus est. Casaub. epist. dedicat. Polyæn.

† Euseb. Chron. l. 1. apud Vossium de histor. Græcis p. 404.

β Notis in eum locum Eusebii apud Vossium ib.

γ Academ. quæst. l. 2.

ꝺ In Latin Mons Politianus.

‡ Vossius de histor. Latin. p. 628.

(a) De hist. Græc. p. 227. See also p. 480.

(b) Plutarch in Antonio, & Valerius Maximus l. 5. c. 10. mentions Ventidius's Triumph.

(c) Sir Tho. Pope Blount, censura author. p. 357.

(d) Baillet tom. 3. p. 88. & tom. 4. p. 350. and in the Jugemens sur les Poetes, tom. 3. p. 61.

(e) Barthius, advers. l. 47. c. 5.

(f) Boissard. in Iconib. ap. Blount ub. sup.

(g) Varillas, Anecdot. de Florence, p. 193.

(b) Bullart. Academ. des sciences tom. 1. p. 277.

(i) Leand. Albert. descript. Italiæ p. m. 89.

(k) Tenera adhuc ætate. Polit. in fine Miscellan.

(k) Responſe à l'Epiſtre de Charles de Vaudemont Cardinal de Lorraine .... maintenant ſimple gentilhomme de Hainault printed in 1565. See also Brantome's Memoirs p. m. 146. of the 3*d Vol. in the Discourse about Admiral* de Chaſtillon

(l) These Words are spoken to Cardinal de Lorraine. (m) See the Acta Eruditorum for June 1698. p. m. 293, 294.

The firſt (C) Work that procured him ſome Reputation, was a Poem upon the Turnament of Julian de Medicis. Every Body owned that he had better Succeſs than Luke Pulci, an Illuſtrious Poet, who did likewiſe make a Poem on the Turnament of Laurence de Medicis, Julian's Brother. The Hiſtory of the Conſpiration of the Pazzi, which he wrote ſometime after, was wonderfully cried up †; and being made Profeſſor of the Greek and Latin Tongues at Florence, he got ſo much Glory by it, that the Scholars (D) left Demetrius Chalcondylas, who was a Native of Greece, and a very Learned Man; but his Lectures, if compared with thoſe of Politian, were dry and barren. Politian's Reputation increaſed more and more, when he publiſh'd his Latin Verſion of Herodian, his Miſcellanea, and his Latin Poems. Had he lived longer, he would have enrich'd the Commonwealth of Learning with many * excellent Compoſures; but he died at (E) Forty Years of Age in 1494. If † Taken from Paul Jovius Elog. c. 38.

* See the Preface of his Works written by Aldus Manutius. You'll find ſome Paſſages out of it in Geſner's Bibliotheque, f. 45.

he ſtudied the Platonick Philoſophy under Marſilius Ficinus, and that of Ariſtotle under Argyropylus.

(C) The firſt Work that procured him ſome Reputation, was a Poem upon the Turnament.] So ſays Paul Jovius: (l) Politianus à prima ſtatim juventa admirabilis ingenii nomen adeptus eſt, quum novo, illuſtrique poemate Juliani Medicis equeſtres ludos celebraſſet, Luca Pulcio nobili poeta omnium confeſſione ſuperato, qui Laurentii fratris ludicrum equeſtris pugnæ ſpectaculum, iiſdem modis, & numeris decantarat. Theſe Words intimate, that Pulci's Poem was compoſed before that of Politian; and what confirms it is, that Julian de Medicis was Laurence's younger Brother. Baillet and Varillas underſtood thoſe Words in the ſame ſenſe. "(m) Julian de Medicis won "the Prize at a Turnament, and was deſirous to "get a Paranymph not inferior to Luke Pulci, who "had ſignalized himſelf upon ſuch an occaſion, to "the advantage of Laurence de Medicis. Politian "undertook it, and as he perceiv'd that Pulci's "Poem was not all of the ſame force . . . . . . he "choſe the fineſt Thoughts of the ancient Panegyricks . . . . . and made ſo fine a Piece, that after "he had read it, Pulci had a Mind to ſuppreſs his "out of ſhame and ſpite." Baillet (n) relates the ſame thing in different Terms. But if we may believe the ſame Jovius in a Book wherein he ſpeaks more largely of thoſe two Turnaments, that of Laurence was celebrated after that of Julian, and Pulci made his Poem after he had ſeen that of Politian. (o) Ejus glorioſi laboris præmium fuit triumphus Politiani divini poetæ carminibus celebratus. Nec MULTO POST Laurentius ut fraternis laudibus æquaretur, novum ſpectaculum periculoſiſſimæ pugnæ edidit. . . . . . . Hujus quoque ſpecioſiſſimi certaminis memoriam (p) Pulcius ipſe Politiani æmulus perjucundo edito poemate ſempiternam fecit. I don't know that this Author ever ſaid that Pulci was ſo aſham'd and vex'd, that he had a Mind to ſuppreſs his Poem. It might very well be an Invention of Varillas, as well as the pretended Method that Politian pitched upon to outdo a Work that was not yet in being.

(l) Jovius, elog. c. 38. pag. 88.

(m) Varillas Anecdotes de Flor. p. 194.

(n) Baillet, Enfans celebres ch. 27. p. 87, 88.

(o) Jovius in vita Leonis X. lib. 1. pag. m. 15.

(p) Some Lines before he calls him Aloyſius Pulcius. In his Elogia he calls him Luke. There were at that time three Brothers at Florence, who were good Poets, Luke, Lewis, and Bernard Pulci.

(D) The Scholars left Demetrius Chalcondylas.] I find this particular in Jovius: (q) Tantos de ſe excitavit clamores favente juventute ut Demetrius Chalchondyles vir Græcus præſtantique doctrina, uti aridus atque jejunus à Diſcipulis deſereretur. Here is an Inſtance of the exorbitant Liberty that Varillas took in his Paraphraſes. When Argyropilus, ſays he (r), "left his Greek Profeſſorſhip at Florence, Politian "took Poſſeſſion of it. Being a Man of wonderful "Parts, and leaving nothing unattempted to ſucceed "in his deſigns, he ſo pleas'd his Hearers that he "excluded all the Greeks who contended for that "Place. Chalcondylas, notwithſtanding his great "Humility, and the little Care he took of his own "Glory, could not brook the Affront that was put "upon his Countrymen. He uſed his Intereſt with "Laurence de Medicis, who deſign'd that he ſhould "teach his Children the Greek Tongue, and obtain'd "leave to read Lectures in competition, and at the "ſame time with Politian, to ſhew which of the "two ſhould have more Hearers. But Chalcondylas's "harſh Accent, which he could never leave off, and "his difficulty to pronounce ſome Latin Words, made "him contemptible in compariſon of Politian, whoſe "agreeable Tone, and handſome Expreſſions "charm'd every Body. Laurence de Medicis, who "deſir'd by all means that Chalcondylas ſhould ſtay "at Florence, was oblig'd to procure him ſome "Scholars, and endeavour'd to perſuade Politian "to be more Civil to him. He undertook ſeveral "times to reconcile 'em, but he found by his own "experience, that it was more eaſy to reſtore "Peace to Italy, than between two Learned Men. "However, he prevented an open Rupture between "'em during his Life." This Narrative is grounded upon the following Words of Jovius. (a) Demetrius Chalcondyles . . . . ſcholam Florentiæ inſtauravit, deſertam ab Argyropylo, & à Politiano deficientibus Græcis occupatam, ſed ambitioſo, peracrique æmulo, multis bonis, maliſque artibus ſuggeſtus locum, & nomen defendenti Demetrius ceſſit; Latina præſertim facundia inferior, & ob id raveſcente auditorio à juventute deſtitutus, quandoquidem vel apprimè doctus, facilè jejunus, & hebes, laſcivis & delicatis auribus videri poterat: quibus Politiani decantantis, & varios ſpargentis flores, jucunda argutaque vox, & ſalſa comitas mira dulcedine placuiſſet. Sed manſit Demetrio honeſtus gratiæ locus apud Laurentium, vel infeſto, & obliquè ſemper inceſſente Politiano, qui quum neminem è Latinis ſibi parem pateretur, Græcis ipſis eruditior exiſtimari volebat. Diviſit idcirco munera Laurentius, ut æmulationis lites dirimeret, & filii præceptorum contentione ad diſcendum accenderentur. The Reader will not find in this Paſſage, that Politian excluded all the Greeks who undertook to diſpute the Chair, nor that Chalcondylas look'd upon it as an intolerable Affront, nor that Laurence de Medicis procured him ſome Hearers. The laſt Period of Jovius ſeems to be obſcure; the Meaning of it is, that Laurence divided that Imployment to compoſe the Differences ariſing from Emulation, and to excite in his Children a greater deſire of Studying, by the Diſputes of their Maſters. Methinks thoſe two Motives are hardly conſiſtent. Mr. Bullart ſays, (b) that Chalcondylas was forced to reſign his Place to Politian, who diſpoſſeſt him of it by his Intrigues and Artifices, and that Laurence de Medicis gave 'em different Imployments to . . . . remove the cauſe of ſuch a troubleſome Emulation.

(q) Paulus Jovius in elog. c. 38. p. m. 88.

(r) Varillas, Anecdotes de Flor. pag. 179, 180.

(a) Paulus Jovius, elog. c. 29. p. m. 69.

(b) Bullart Academ. des ſcienc. tom. 1. pag. 281.

(E) He died at 40 Years of Age in 1494.] It was (c) at Florence the 24th of September. Volaterran is more exact in his Computation than Jovius: the latter will have it (d) that he was in his 44th Year; the other ſays, (e) he was only 40 Years of Age. Several Authors are miſtaken, as to the time of his Death, which they place in 1509. Eber (f) and Reuſnerus (g) do ſo, as Voſſius obſerves. Nathan Chytræus mentions this Epitaph of Politian, as having been tranſcribed in St. Mark's Church at Florence:

Politianus in hoc tumulo jacet Angelus, unum
Qui caput & linguas, res nova, tres habuit.
Obiit an. 1509. Septemb. 24.

This we find in the 110th Page of the Variorum in Europa itinerum deliciæ, collected by Nathan Chytræus, in the 2d Edition of the Year 1599. apud Chriſtophorum Corvinum in 8; but Father Mabillon (h) affirms, that there is no Epitaph on Politian's Tomb. What he further ſays does not differ from Chytræus, and he places that Tomb in St. Mark's Church at Florence, and Politian's Death in 1509. as does alſo St. Romuald (i). Voſſius has ſolidly confuted this Date; he alledges a Proof grounded upon this, viz. That John Picus Mirandula, Hermolaus Barbarus, and Politian died in the ſame Year. Palmerius's Continuator affirms it; and we have a Letter of Marſilius Ficinus, wherein Politian's Death is lamented, as having quickly followed that of John Picus. Now every body owns that John Picus died in 1494. Theſe are Voſſius's Proofs, to which I add, That Peter Crinitus, a Diſciple of Politian ſays (k), that the three Learned Men abovemention'd died the ſame Year that Charles VIII. made an Irruption into Italy, which plainly denotes the Year 1494.

(c) Voſſius de hiſtor. Lat. pag. 629.

(d) Vix quadrageſimum quartum ætatis annum attigerat. Jovius, elog. c. 38. pag. 89.

(e) Deceſſit quadragenarius. Volater. lib. 21. pag. 777. See a Paſſage of Marcilius Ficinus in Voſſius, ib.

(f) In Faſtis apud Voſſium ubi ſupra.

(g) In Diario hiſtorico apud eumd. ib.

(h) Mabill. in Muſeo Ital. tom. 1. p. 178.

(i) Peter de St. Romuald, Abregé Chronol. tom. 3. p. m. 262. ad ann. 1509.

(k) Crinitus de honeſta diſcipl. l. 15. c. 9.

If what is ſaid to have occaſion'd (F) his Death was true, one might ſay, that his (G) Morals were more anſwerable to the Uglineſs of his Face, than to the Beauty of his Wit. Some of his Poems were ſo much admir'd, that ſeveral Learned Men (H) made it their Buſineſs to comment upon them. I muſt not forget that he was * a Prieſt and Canon of Florence, and Preceptor † to the Children of Laurence de Medicis. He is ſaid to have ſpoke of the (I) Bible with great Contempt, where-

(F) What is ſaid to have occaſion'd his Death.] I'll make uſe of Varillas's Words. " (l) Death ſurpriſed him at 42 (m) Years of Age. Not being " able to ſatisfy the unchaſte Love he had conceiv'd " for one of his Scholars, he fell into a Fever, and " in the Violence of the Fit he made a Song for the " beloved Object, got out of his Bed, took his Lute, " and fell a ſinging ſuch a moving and doleful Tune, " that he expir'd as he was ending the ſecond Couplet, the ſame (n) Day that Charles VIII. croſs'd " the Alps, in order to conquer Naples. „ Thus Varillas has been pleas'd to tranſlate this Paſſage of Jovius: (o) Ferunt eum ingenui adoleſcentis inſano amore percitum, facilè in letalem morbum incidiſſe. Correpta enim cithara, quum eo incendio, & rapida febre torreretur, ſupremi furoris carmina decantavit; ita, ut mox delirantem, vox ipſa, & digitorum nervi, & vitalis denique ſpiritus, inverecundè urgente morte, deſererent. Some ſay, that not being able to reſiſt the violence of his Love, he broke (p) his Head againſt a Wall. Another Author gives a different Account of the Death of this Learned Man. " (q) " His Death, ſays he, was not very edifying. Mr. " Balzac ſpeaks of it in the following manner: We " are now certainly inform'd of the Circumſtances " of Politian's Death, which have been diſguiſed " by Cardinal Bembo in his Epitaph upon him. " As he was ſinging upon a Lute, at the top of a " Stair-caſe, a Song which he had formerly made " for a Young-Woman, with whom he was in Love, " when he came to ſome Verſes that were very " moving, his Lute fell from his Hands, and he " himſelf fell down Stairs and broke his Neck. " That Cardinal ſaid in his Epitaph, that he died " as he was ſinging ſome mournful Verſes upon the " Death of Alexander Duke of Florence, who had " been wickedly kill'd by his Couſin. „ There is a groſs Falſity in theſe Words; for this Alexander Duke of Florence, was kill'd 43 Years after Politian's Death. The Epitaph (r) upon the latter, made by Peter Bembo imports, that he died as he was ſinging ſome doleful Verſes on the Death of Laurence de Medicis. Bullart (ſ) advances a Falſity, when he makes Cardinal Bembo ſay, that Politian fell down Stairs as he was ſinging upon his Lute an Elegy he had made on the Death of Laurence de Medicis. The Verſes of that Cardinal, mention'd by him, ſay nothing of that Fall. What does an Author dream of, when he alledges a Paſſage that is plainly againſt him? 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that ſome ſay, that the Story mention'd by Jovius is a meer Calumny. Read theſe fine Words of Pierius Valerianus. (t) Angelus Politianus, nullius ignarus eruditionis, & diſciplinæ, cùm in adverſa Medicorum procerum tempora incidiſſet, inclinantibus jam Petri, quem ipſe literis inſtituerat, rebus, in eam incidit ægritudinem, ut in multis, & variis moleſtiis, cogitationibuſque conſolationem nullam admittere voluerit, atque ita demum dolore, mæſtitiaque confectus expiravit. Quodque illi longè fuit infelicius confiſta in eum turpitudinis fabula maledicentiſſimis obtrectationibus proſciſſus, calumniatuſque eſt, utque ea gens promptiſſima eſt ad inſimulandum in invidiam Petri ipſius ignominioſam aliam mortis voluntariæ cauſam univerſo terrarum orbi magna cum ejus infamia propalavunt. According to this Account, Politian died only of the Grief he conceived for the decay of the Houſe of Medicis.

(G) His Morals were more anſwerable to the Uglineſs of his Face, than to the Beauty of his Wit.] 'Tis likely that his great Zeal for the Houſe of Medicis expoſed him to horrid Calumnies, whilſt the Florentins, fond of a Republican Liberty, inſulted that Family in their Exile, and vented all ſorts of Paſquinades. I will not therefore affirm, that Jovius's Story is well grounded; but I may boldly ſay, that Politian contracted a Pride and Envy, which Learning is but too commonly attended with. We have ſeen, that in order to maintain himſelf againſt his Rival, he indifferently made uſe of lawful and unlawful Means. The following Paſſage will diſcover to us his Envy and Preſumption. (b) Erat diſtortis ſæpe moribus, uti facie nequaquam ingenua, & liberali, ab enormi præſertim naſo, ſubluſcoque oculo perabſurda, ingenio autem aſtuto, aculeato, occulteque livido, quum aliena ſemper irrideret, nec ſua, vel non iniquo judicio expungi pateretur. If you had rather have Varillas's Paraphraſe upon thoſe Words, read what follows. " (c) He had a very ugly Face, and a very large " and long Noſe; he ſquinted with his left Eye, " and was a pliant and nicely Ambitious Man. He " uſed a great deal of Art to diſguiſe himſelf, " eſpecially with reſpect to thoſe whom he was " moſt Converſant with; he could not bear that " any Body ſhould be praiſed, and equally envied " his Friends and his Enemies. He never liked the " Compoſures of other Men, and hated to be adviſed, tho' he was very free of adviſing others. " It appear'd ſometimes that he was ſenſible of his " Faults, and that he oppoſed Truth meerly out of " Malice; and yet he never owned that he had been " in a Fault. „

(H) Several Learned Men made it their buſineſs to comment upon them.] Nicolas Beraldus wrote a Commentary (d) upon Politian's Sylva, Intituled Ruſticus; and John Murmelius did the ſame. Francis Sanchez, Profeſſor at Salamanca, a Grammarian, ſo much praiſed by Scioppius, publiſh'd his Notes in the Year 1544 upon the Four Sylva's of Politian. John Alexander Braſſicanus publiſh'd a Commentary at Nuremberg in 1538, upon that which is Intitled Nutricia. Jodocus Badius added ſome Notes of his own making to Politian's Works, which he publiſh'd at Paris, in the Year 1519. in Folio. He likewiſe added to them the Notes of Francis Sylvius upon Politian's Epiſtles. Thoſe Epiſtles were reprinted in Quarto, for the ſame Badius, in the Year 1526. with the ſame Obſervations. Braſſicanus makes great Complaints againſt a Plagiary. Meminit, ſays he (e), & Politianus in Nutritiis, ubi quidam nugator arrogantiſſimus noſtra ante nos dixit: Expungendus jam & plane radendus è Philologiæ faſtis quoniam, ut Cicero dixit, maluit improbè tollere quàm humaniter ſumere & agnoſcere. This Complaint ſeems to concern a Man who ſtole Manuſcripts.

(I) To have ſpoken of the Bible with great Contempt.] Ludovicus Vives is, perhaps, the firſt who taxed him with it: Angelus Politianus, ſays he (f), totam ſacram lectionem aſpernabatur. Melanchthon expreſſes the thing with greater Energy; for he ſays, that Politian having read the Bible but once, complain'd, that he had never ſpent his Time ſo ill. (g) Melanchthon ait ſemel ſolum ſacras literas legiſſe, dixiſſeque nullum ſe tempus pejus collocaſſe. Which has been repeated (h) by a thouſand Writers. Voſſius (i) denies it as a thing little credible, and alledges two Reaſons for it: 1. That Politian was a Prieſt and a Canon of Florence. 2. That he preach'd a whole Lent, as it appears from theſe Words: (k) Cum per hos quadrageſimæ proximos dies enarrandis populo ſacris literis eſſem occupatus, perlegi tamen libros carminum tuorum quos mihi pro ſingulari humanitate tua mutuoque inter nos amore dedicaveras. Some (l) think that the ſecond Reaſon alledged by Voſſius, is a ſolid Confutation of Melanchthon's Paſſage; but others value neither of 'em. (m) Hæc ratio nimis tenuis videbitur iis qui norunt quantopere Atheiſmus ſeu Epicureiſmus ſive libertiniſmus graſſetur inter Sacerdotes non tantum Canonicos & Monachos papales, ſed etiam inter Prælatos, Cardinales, Pontifices. This is what Voetius ſays againſt the firſt Reaſon; and what he ſays againſt the ſecond is contain'd in the following Words: (n) Quaſi vero poſtilliſtæ coram populo iſtic concionantes ut plurimum abſque lectione ſcripturæ, ex inſpectis legendis, poſtillis, homiliariis, dormi ſecurè, theſauris pauperum concionatorum & ſimilibus myrotheciis prædicare non ſoleant. Prædicavit etiam aliquando coram populo Cæſar Atheorum Vaninus, quod tamen illum è numero profanorum non eximit. This Author obſerves, that one muſt not think, that Melanchthon and Mornay cried down Politian, being acted by a factious Spirit; for, adds he, Gabriel Putherbeus, a paſſionate Author againſt the Proteſtants, taxed (o) Politian with the ſame thing. But 'tis fit the Reader ſhould know that Putherwhereupon ſome make it a Queſtion, whether he ought not (K) to be reckon'd an Atheiſt; but others juſtify him, ‡ by denying the Fact. I could eaſily believe what we are told of the Judgment he made (L) of David's Pſalms, and the Odes of Pindar. He is alſo charged with being (M) a Plagiary. George Merula

---

* See the Remark I.

† Volaterr. l. 21. p. 777.

(l) Varillas ubi ſupra pag. 195.

(m) It ſhould be 40.

(n) This is not true. Charles VIII. went over the Alps, before the 24 of Sept. 1494.

(o) Jovius elog. c. 38. pag. 89.

(p) Vulgo fertur obiiſſe Politianum fœdi amoris impatientia capite in parietem illiſo. Voſſius ubi ſupra pag. 629.

(q) Peter de St. Romuald ubi ſupra.

(r) It is in Jovius, ubi ſupra, p. 90, 91.

(ſ) Bullart Academ. tom. 1. pag. 278.

(t) Pierius Valerianus de litterator. infelic. lib. 2. pag. 70, 71.

(b) Jovius ubi ſupra pag. 89.

(c) Varillas ubi ſupra pag. [illegible]

(d) Printed at Paris in the Year 1518. See [illegible] animadv. Philol. parte 2. pag. [illegible] but inſtead of Beraldus, read there Beraldus.

(e) Jo. Alexander Braſſicanus Schol. in Petronium.

(f) Ludov. Vives de veritate fid. Chriſt. lib. 2. pag. 264. edit. Baſil. 1544.

(g) Voſſius de poet. Lat. p. 80. He quotes tom. 3. declamationum pag. 545.

(h) Mr. Teiſſier, among others, in his Additions to the Elogies, tom. 1. p. 11 but inſtead of quoting Melanchthon, he quotes Vives, who does not ſay what he mentions.

(i) Voſſius ubi ſupra.

(k) Angelus Politianus epiſt. 10. lib. 4. ad Joannem Gottium Raguſinum fol. m. 106.

(l) Boxhorn. in monument. illuſtr. vir. apud Pope Blount, cenſ. author. pag. 359. Borremanſ. var. lect. pag. 125.

(m) Voetius diſput. theolog. tom. 2. p. [illegible]

(n) Id. ib. pag. 12[illegible]

(o) Putherbeus de tollendis & expurgandis malis libris l. 1.

‡ See the Rem. I.

Putherbeus did but tranſcribe Ludovicus Vives Word for Word, and that Du Pleſſis Mornay (p) alledged the Teſtimony of the ſame Vives; and therefore the ſeveral Evidences amount only to one.

M. Crenius has lately imparted to the Publick the Obſervations which his great Reading afforded him concerning this Particular. He does not think the Reaſons alledged by Voſſius to be ſolid, and quotes (q) ſome Authorities, whereby it appears, that the Preachers did not much mind the Bible at that Time. What he quotes out of Ariſtarchus Philoſophicus (r), a Book little (ſ) known in this Country, is very curious. I have read in Manlius's Common Places, taken moſt of 'em from Melanchthon's Lectures, that it was not the Bible but the Breviary, of which Politian ſpoke with ſo much contempt. (t) Politianus Canonicus Florentinus interrogatus an legiſſet horas Canonicas? Dixit ſemel perlegi iſtum librum & nunquam pejus collocavi tempus.

(K) Make it a Queſtion whether he ought not to be reckon'd an Atheiſt.] Voetius (v) asks whether Politian ought not to be ſuſpected of Indifference in Point of Religion, as Lucian was, or of Epicureiſm; and he anſwers that, according to Mornay, (w) Politian complain'd, that he had never ſpent his Time ſo ill, as when he read the Holy Scripture. He adds, That he does not know how that Critick, and ſome others died; but that if one may gueſs at it from their Studies, they were like the Philoſopher Averroes, who ſlighting the Chriſtian Religion, wiſh'd his Soul might be among the Philoſophers. Note, That Mornay does not ſay what Voetius aſcribes to him. Authors are full of ſuch Falſities; which proceeds from their truſting to the Quotations of others, without taking the pains to verify them. I muſt not forget theſe Words of Peter de St. Romuald: (x) Some Writers ſay, that Politian profeſs'd Atheiſm privately with Marcilius Ficinus, and Domitius Calderinus a Prieſt.

(L) What we are told of the Judgment he made of David's Pſalms, and the Odes of Pindar.] He did not deny that there are many good and fine things in the Pſalms; but he pretended that the ſame things appeared in Pindar with more brightneſs and ſweetneſs. One of his Scholars is ſaid to have related this. Here are Melanchthon's own Words. (y) Dionyſius Capnio, qui adoleſcens audivit Angelum Politianum, narrabat eum interrogatum aliquando, quid de Pſalmis Davidis ſentiret, & ad quid prodeſſe eorum lectionem judicaret, reſpondiſſe, ſibi vero placere illa antiqua carmina, & continere ea partim honeſta præcepta, partim graviſſimas conciones de providentia & de ſceleratorum pœnis: partim querelas de infirmitate hominum utiles ad frenandos immoderatos impetus: partim hiſtorias ejus gentis. Sed addidit Politianus hanc collationem, res eaſdem dulcius & ſplendidius narrari in odis Pindaricis, ibi pingi Ixionem in rota clamantem, Diſcite juſtitiam moniti, & non ſpernere divos.

Ibi deſcribi Bellerophontem propter priores victorias factum inſolentiorem, & vehi Pegaſo intra cælum volantem, id eſt, res non neceſſarias ambitioſe moventem, excuti à Pegaſo & dejici in Ciliciam. Ibi celebrari Pelei caſtitatem, qui expetitus ab Acaſti conjuge, & ab ea falſo accuſatus, & objectus Centauris, ſervatur accepto gladio divinitus. Denique multas imagines pulcherrimas, multas hiſtorias & graviſſima præcepta tradi. Hæc Politiani oratio & ſi ſpecioſa eſt, tamen eſt hominis ignorantis diſcrimen inter genera doctrinarum, inter legem & Evangelium. Manlius in the Book above quoted, does not aſcribe this Opinion to Politian, but to Lazarus Bonamicus. (z) Lazarus Bonamicus vir doctus cum eſſet interrogatus quomodo ei placeret Pſalterium reſpondit placere ſibi, recitari enim ibi egregias ſententias de providentia: ſed tamen nihilo melius eſſe quam Pindari poëma. It does not appear from theſe Latin Words, that Bonamicus preferr'd Pindar to David, but only that he made 'em equal: And yet the Commentator upon Gaffarel affirms, on the Credit of a German Divine, that Bonamicus ſet a greater value upon Pindar, than upon David's Pſalms: Ejuſdem blaſphemiæ veneno correptus fuit Lazarus Bon-Amicus Italus, qui vociferabat ſe Odas Pindaricas præferre hymnis Davidicis. Vid. beatus Dn. Selneccerus Explicat. in 1 Cor. 8. p. 405. (a). He had been ſaying that Politian uttered the ſame Blaſphemy. This ſhews that Melanchthon, or his Tranſcribers, are not uniform in their Accounts, which is an uſual thing when People go only upon a Hear-ſay. Peucerus (b) has inſerted in a Letter what I have quoted above out of Melanchthon.

(M) He was alſo accuſed of being a Plagiary.] Every Body knows it has been ſaid, that he appropriated to himſelf the Latin Tranſlation of Herodian made by Tiphernas. Leo X. ſaid, that this Calumny had been vented by thoſe who envied Politian's Glory. (c) Quamquam æmuli eam tranſlationem, uti nos à Leone Pontifice accepimus, Gregorii Tiphernatis fuiſſe dicerent, quod paſſim indoctis fuco, & falſis novorum coloribus interlita alieni ſtyli habitum mentiretur. This is all that Jovius ſays of it: I ſhould be glad to know in what Author Varillas found the Particulars contained in the following Narrative. "(d) He "publiſhed a Tranſlation of Herodian, which did "not procure him all the Satisfaction he expected "from it, for tho' it was generally admired, a Re"port went about, that Politian had found it among "the Papers of the famous Gregorio de Citta di Caſtello, which he had bought; and this Report was "grounded upon ſome Conjectures, that were but "weakly confuted. Pope Leo, who was then Poli"tian's Scholar, and heard whatever was ſaid pro "and con at his Father's Table, being deſired twen"ty Years after, by the Academiſts of Rome, to "tell 'em what he thought of it, left the thing "doubtful, and owned that the Style of that Tranſ"lation was not at all like the other Works of Poli"tian, and favoured much more of the Art and "Flouriſhes that were to be ſeen in the Compo"ſures of Gregorio de Citta di Caſtello. However, he "added (as if he had been afraid of having ſaid "too much) that this Gregorio had done nothing "that came up to the Tranſlation of Herodian.,, I am apt to believe that the Author of this Narrative went only upon Jovius's Words, which he inlarg'd upon and paraphras'd, at Pleaſure, as if he had been writing a Romance. However, he did not underſtand 'em, for the Art and Flouriſhes that were obſerved in that Verſion, were not aſcribed to Tiphernas, but to Politian. If Leo X. had ſpoken about it, as Varillas will have it, Jovius (e) would not have rejected that Accuſation as a thing that deſerved no Credit. Note, that the beſt Criticks reject it; they find the ſame Spirit and the ſame Character in every Part of that Tranſlation. Tiphernas was not able to produce (f) ſuch a Maſter-piece. It had been an eaſier thing for Politian to Tranſlate the whole Work, than to give ſuch a Form to the Tranſlation of another.

It is more difficult to clear him of ſome other Thefts; for what can one Anſwer for him to theſe Words of Budæus? (g) Plutarchus in eo libro, quem de Homero compoſuit; qui liber nondum Latinus ex profeſſo factus eſt, licet Politianus, vir ille quidem excellentis doctrinæ, ſed animi non ſatis ingenui, ex eo libro rerum ſummas ad verbum tranſcribens, quaſique flores præcerpens, non erubuit id opus pro ſuo edere, in quo nullam præterquam tranſcribendi ac vertendi operam navaverat. Budæus told a Story, which has been printed, and we find in it a notable Trick of Politian. The thing is this. That Profeſſor ſet forth with an Emphaſis in his Auditory, many things as his own, which he had from Herodotus. John Laſcaris, who was one of his Hearers, took him aſide and reproved him for his Boldneſs. I could never have believed, anſwered Politian, that ſuch a Græcian as you are, ſhould have been Ignorant of the Artifice that is made uſe of in order to get the Eſteem of the Publick. You are three or four, at moſt, among my Hearers, who have read Herodotus. What's that in compariſon of that Crowd of Scholars, who applaud and extol me to the Sky? I am apt to believe that you will not be ſo malicious as to undertake to prejudice 'em againſt me; and I think it would be to little purpoſe if you went about it. I ſhall ſet down the Original Words. (h) Non poſſum mihi temperare, quin tibi nunc referam, quod Budæus noſter de Angelo Politiano quondam nobis domi ſuæ narrare ſolebat, idque ſe ex Jano Laſcare, qui Politiani fuerat

(p) Mornay, Verit. de la Relig. ch. 18. fol. m. 316.

(q) Thomas Crenius animadv. Philolog. & Hiſt. part. 4. pag. 21. & ſeq. Leyden 1698.

(r) Written by Henry Erneſtius Counſellor to the K. of Denmark, and printed at Hamburg in 1678. in 8.

(ſ) Admodum raro & inde hic paucis noto. Crenius ib. p. 25.

(t) Joannes Manlius in Locorum Communium Collectaneis titulo de ſatisfactione p. m. 99.

(v) Voet. diſp. theol. Tom. 1. p. 205.

(w) De Politiano refert Pleſſeus in libro de veritate religionis Chriſtianæ, quod diceret nunquam ſe bonas horas ſuas pejus collocaſſe quam in lectione Scripturæ. Id. ibid.

(x) Peter de St. Romuald ub. ſup.

(y) Melancth. in Epiſtola ad Adamum Cratonem præfixa Exegeſi Nicolai Aſclepii Barbati de antiquo & profundo conſilio Dei.

(z) Manlius ub. ſup. titulo de veteri & novo Teſtamento p. 81.

(a) Gregorius Michael, præpoſitus Regius Flensburgenſis, notis in Jacobi Gaffarelli curioſitates p. 110.

(b) Peucerus epiſt. ad Chriſt. Carlowitz. See Saldenus de libris p. 434.

(c) Paulus Jovius ub. ſup. p. 88.

(d) Varillas ub. ſup. p. 195.

(e) Paulus Jovius elog. c. 117. p. 259.

(f) Henry Stephens did very much criticize it. Conſult M. Crenius ub. ſup. p. 52. & ſeq.

(g) Budæus annot. in Pandectas fol. m. 151. verſo.

(h) Franciſcus Duarenus operum p. 1478. edit. 1584. apud Colomeſium in opuſcul. c. 31. p. m. 65.

Merula (N) was one of his Adverſaries. Some ſay that he was very much abus'd (O) by the Poet Marullus. He has been rightly placed in the Catalogue of Illuſtrious Children; but Varillas, who is the occaſion of it, (P) is wrong in his Chronology.

æqualis, crebro audiviſſe confirmabat. Cum enim Politianus Florentiæ Interpretationem Homericæ Iliados in magna celebritate aggrederetur, non ſine ingenti oſtentatione quæ de Homeri Poemate perſcripta ſunt ab Herodoto, auditoribus ſuis è ſuggeſtu recitabat, quo tempore Herodoti liber Græcè ſcriptus, à nullo adhuc converſus in linguam Latinam, nec Typographorum formis excuſus erat. Itaque Laſcaris, qui tum honoris cauſa auditorum numerum augebat, cum paucis quibuſdam aliis Græcè doctis hominibus, qui non ignorarent unde omnia, quæ pro ſuis recitaverat, hauſiſſet. Is igitur paulo poſt ad hominem converſus, eumque ſalutans, Dic mihi quæſo, inquit, Politiane, quo me Herodoti Opus inſigne, quod ante tot ſæcula conſcriptum eſt, in tanto cœtu ut tuum recitaſti? Cui mox ſubridens Politianus, Nunquam, inquit, putaſſem, Jane, hominem Græcum adeo ejus artificii rudem & ignarum eſſe, quo apud multitudinem exiſtimatio & fama comparari ſolet. Quaſi vero, inquit, non ſatis intelligam tres aut ad ſummum quatuor fortaſſis vos hic adeſſe, quibus Herodoti libros aliquando inſpicere contigerit. Sed quoniam hic ſit turba nobis applaudentium & in cœlum Laudibus ferentium vides, apud quos ſi exiſtimationem noſtram (quod minimè ſpero) vel tantillum lædere volueritis, Oratio profeſſoris veſtra non multum fidei ponderiſque habitura eſt.

I muſt not forget what concerns his Miſcellanea. He ſhewed them to his Friends in Manuſcript, which was the reaſon why this Work was very much talk'd of before it was printed; but a Story went about, that Politian had ſtolen many things from a Compilation, entitled Copiæ Cornu, and made by Nicolas Perotus: It was ſaid that the Duke of Urbino had lent him the Original, thinking it would be a thing acceptable to Laurence de Medicis. When Politian heard this News, he put off the Publication of his Work. In the mean time, the Book of Nicolas Perotus came out, and put an end to the Slander; for thoſe who compared it with Politian's Miſcellanea, did not find that the latter had ſtolen any thing from the other. Politian gives a large Account of this towards the End of the Book. I ſhall only ſet down ſome of his Words. (i) Fit concurſus. Eſt in manibus (Copiæ Cornu). Effunditur. Excutitur. Quid multa? Calumnia me liberat. Vidiſſes continuo nonnullorum vultus lugubre quiddam tacentes . . . . . & erubeſcentes. . . . . . . Tantum conſiterit in præſentiarum, non idem ſpectâſſe me, quod ejus voluminis autorem, nec par utrique deſtinatum præſtitumque faſtigium. Quod ſi locos eoſdem pro re natâ forte uterque tractavimus, (id autem incidere alicubi fuit neceſſe), craſſior tamen inter nos, quàm inter Pyramum Thysbenque paries. Notwithſtanding this, Heresbachius (k) called him a great Thief. Note, that Politian (l) complained that ſome Plagiaries had ſtolen from him, and he threatned to purſue them in order to recover his own.

(N) George Merula was one of his Adverſaries.] He was Profeſſor in the College of Milan: "He "(m) did not ſpare Politian, tho' the latter had ac"quired a ſufficient Reputation to ſtand upon his "own bottom. He ſhewed him, that though Na"ture had beſtowed upon him all the neceſſary "Qualifications to become a Learned Man, yet ſhe "had not made him ſuch. He obſerved to him above "thirty conſiderable Faults, which had eſcaped "him, and told him in a charitable Way (as he "ſaid) that whoever pretends to keep the firſt "Rank in the Commonwealth of Learning, muſt "have read and ſtudied more than all the reſt to"gether. . . . . (n) Politian was the greateſt Gainer "by his Death. He had publiſhed the firſt Century "of his Miſcellanea, and Merula being offended at "the Boldneſs of the Word Century, threaten'd to "alledge a World of Paſſages and Authorities, to "juſtifie the contrary to what was contained in it; "but he had only time to draw a rough Draught "of his Project." The laſt part of this Narrative is grounded upon Jovius's (o) Words; but I don't know what Authority may be alledged for the firſt. Obſerve, that Politian (p) wrote very ſharp Letters to Merula, and ſeem'd to deſire that Ludovicus Sforza would permit his Adverſary to publiſh his Critical Remarks.

(O) Abuſed by the Poet Marullus.] This we read in St. Romuald. Marullus, ſays he (q), uſed him very ill under the Name of Mabilius: which may ſignifie two things; either that Marullus took the Name of Mabilius in the Verſes he made againſt him, or that he gave it to Politian. I have lately peruſed his Poems, and found nothing in 'em under that Name: Nor is there any thing in Politian's Poem, to make one believe that this Monk is in the right. I find among his Poems ſome cutting Epigrams in Mabilium Novatum Insubrem, in which there is nothing whereby it may appear that they are levell'd at Marullus. And indeed, how can the Epithet Insuber agree with him, ſince he was a Native of Conſtantinople? Tho' I have not read the Poems of this Mabilius, I believe Politian was very much abuſed in ſome of 'em; for I find that Politian reviles him at a ſtrange rate, as it will appear from the following Verſes:

Si (a) jam carmina noſtra te Mabili
Urgent ad laqueum miſer crucemque,
Ne quæſo propera mori, tuum ne
Fraudes carnificem ſuo lucello:
Namque eſt percupidus tui, ac libenter
Is tantum tibi dempſerit Laborem.
Quid? noſtin hominem? negas: at idem eſt
Aurem qui ſecuit tibi ſiniſtram.

Mabilius jeſted upon Politian, becauſe his Neck was not ſtrait. The latter replied in the following manner:

Sed quid te cruciat reflexa colla
Si interdum gero? num parum videtur
Si pronos ſtatuis tuos cinædos,
Si pronum ſtatuent miſer Mabili
Mox te carnificis manus, velut nunc
Pronum te ſtatuunt Mutoniati.

Hard Words are ſtill thicker in the following Verſes:

Heres relictus à parente ſordido
Ille impudicus, temulentus aleo,
Spurcus, lutoſus, pedecoſus, hiſpidus,
Pannoſus, unctus, horridus, caprimulgus,
Edax, ineptus, inſolens Mabilius
Uno expatravit patrimonium die,
Gula belluante, &c.

Politian imitated the horrid Licentiouſneſs of Catullus and Martial, a ſort of Men, who made an ill uſe of a (b) Maxim of the Stoicks,

——— Apud quos
Nomen adeſt rebus, nominibuſque pudor.

He carried this Imitation too far in ſome other Poems, particularly in his (c) Invective againſt an Old Woman, who had loſt all the Signs of Youth, excepting Lewdneſs. That Satyrical Piece contains moſt of the Thoughts that are to be found in (d) two Odes of Horace, and thoſe Thoughts are there expreſſed more at large. The laſt Verſes are full of Obſcenities, the more offenſive, becauſe immediately after there are two very devout Hymns to the Holy Virgin. The wrong placing of thoſe Hymns ought not to be imputed to the Poet; 'tis the Fault of thoſe who got his Works printed. But to return to Mabilius, I ſhall obſerve, that his Epitaph is to be found among Politian's Verſes:

Flecte viator iter, fetet nam putre Mabili
Hac fovea corpus conditur atque animus.

If this be not a good Proof againſt Peter de St. Romuald, it ſeems at leaſt to be a ſign that he is miſtaken; for Marullus ſurvived Politian ſome Years. But I will not inſiſt upon this Reaſon; for an Epitaph affords an Opportunity of uſing ſo many injurious Words, that ſeveral Poets have falſly ſuppoſed that their Adverſaries were dead, in order to make uſe of ſuch a common Topick. I will not diſſemble, that a very learned Man, who made ſome Notes upon Sannazarius's (e) Poems, is of Opinion that Marullus and Mabilius mentioned by Politian, are one and the ſame Perſon.

(P) Varillas . . . . is wrong in his Chronology.] "Politian (f) was a Man of ſo wonderful a Ge"nius, that the like had not been ſeen ever ſince "Ovid. When he was but twelve Years of Age, "he made ſuch fine Verſes, that one would have "thought they had been compoſed in Alexander's "or Auguſtus's Time. And when he had a mind "to ſurpriſe the Learned, and to give out his Pro"ductions for ſome Fragments of Anacreon or Ca"tullus, which he had lately found out in ſome "old Manuſcripts of the Library of the Houſe of "Medicis,

---

(i) Politian. in fine Miſcellan. apud Thomaſium de plagio literario p. 235.

(k) Heresbachius in præfat. librorum ſuorum de re ruſtica furaciſſimum vocat Politianum, atque in Panepiſtemone aliorum non intellecta congeſſiſſe. Thomaſius ib. p. 235, 236.

(l) Id. Polit. ib. ap. eumd. p. 234.

(m) Varillas ub. ſup. p. 192.

(n) Id. ib. p. 193.

(o) Politiano obiter vehementi metu liberato, cum in miſcellaneam ejus centuriam cohortes & alas quas impetu obruerent emiſſurus eſſe diceretur. Jovius elog. c. 37. p. 87.

(p) See the 11 Book of Politian's Letters.

(q) St. Romuald ub. ſup.

(a) Politianus lib. Epigrammatum.

(b) [illegible] ens ſine circuitu omnia efferat.

(c) It begins thus, Huc huc Iambi arripite mi jam mordicus Anum hanc furenti Percitam libidine Tentiginoſam, catulientem ſpurcidam:

(d) The 8th Epode in anum libidinoſam, and the 12th of the ſame Book ad mulierem fœdam & anum.

(e) See the Notes upon Sannazarius p. 22[illegible] Amſterd. 168[illegible].

(f) Varillas ub. ſup. p. 1[illegible] nology. I have ſomething to ſay (Q) againſt Moreri. Thoſe who ſay, that Baſſo, or Baſſus, was the Name of Politian's Family, are miſtaken. Menage † alledges a Letter of M. Magliabechi to prove that his Name was Cino, and not Baſſo. He is called Meſſer Agnolo de Montepulciano in Machiavel's Hiſtory * of Florence; and we read in a Speech of Majoragius, that he changed his Name Angelus de Monte Policiano into that of Angelus Politianus. Sannazarius ‡ in two Satyrical Epigrams he made againſt him, calls him Pulicianus, alluding to the Word Pulex, a Flea.

POLITIAN (Giovanni Angelo), a Native of the ſame Town with the foregoing, taught Logick at Poitiers, about the Beginning of the XVIIth Century. M. Daillé was one of his Scholars †. He wrote two Controverſial (Z) Books againſt Cardinal Bellarmin, his Country-man; which makes me think that he renounced Popery, and turn'd Proteſtant.

POLITIAN (Antony Laurentin) was Profeſſor of Logick β in the Univerſity of Piſa. He was at Padua in the Year 1604, as it appears from the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Second γ Edition of his Dialogue de riſu, to which he annexed his Treatiſe de cælis eorumque motibus, and his Book de natura Logicæ. His Mother was deſcended from the Family δ of St. Agnes, to whom the Inhabitants of Monte Pulciano pay a great Veneration ζ.

POMPONATIUS (Peter) was born at Mantua, η the 16th of September 1462. He was a Man of ſo ſmall a Stature, that he wanted but little of being

" Medicis, the beſt Judges were impoſed upon by " him." M. Baillet (g) relates the ſame thing more at large in his Hiſtory of Illuſtrious Children, in which he places our Politian with great Reaſon; for tho' what Varillas ſays of him were not true, we know that Politian was very young when he made his Greek Verſes, which, in the Judgment of the Criticks (h), are better than the Latin Poems he compoſed long after. But here is a Chronological Fault. " (i) A Marriage was propoſed to Virginia " de' Urſini, between her Daughter, who was but " twelve Years of Age, and Laurence de Medicis, " the Eldeſt Son of Peter, who was not yet fifteen. " . . . . The Wedding was not celebrated with " great Pomp, becauſe the Circumſtances of the " Time did not allow of it. However, there were " many Epithalamiums, among which, that of Po- " litian, whoſe Verſes were worthy of Auguſtus's " Age, tho' he was not older than the Bridegroom, " was beſt approved. Some few Days after, young " Laurence, hearing of Colligne's Approach, was ob- " liged to leave his dear Spouſe, and to get on " Horſe-back, in order to learn the Art of War un- " der the Diſcipline of his Father-in-Law." Laurence was born in the Year 1448; and therefore Politian was four Years older than he. Machiavel (k), who is a more credible Author than Varillas, ſays, that the Wedding of Laurence de Medicis, and Clarice de' Urſini, was celebrated with a very magnificent Pomp after the Peace, that is, when the War, which Colligne made with the Florentines, was fully ended. He does not ſet down the Year of that Marriage, which is a great Fault in an Hiſtorian; but it may be inferred from his Narrative, that it was in the Year 1471. Laurence was therefore 23 Years of Age. Thus you ſee how little Varillas minded Chronology. He places all the chief Exploits of (l) Colligne's War after the Death of Peter de Medicis, the Father of Laurence. He might have ſeen in Jovius (m) that the Peace was made before the Death of Peter de Medicis.

(Q) Something to ſay againſt Moreri.] I. Theſe Words are not exact, Laurence de Medicis kept at Florence Angelo Politian, who was already a Prieſt; for they give us to underſtand, that it was the firſt Favour Politian received from the Houſe of Medicis. Which is not true: we have ſeen above (n) that he ſtudied at the Charges of Coſmo, Grandfather of Laurence. II. Moreri ſhould not have ſaid that Laurence made him Tutor to the Children of Coſmo de Medicis; for he put his own Children under his (o) Tuition. If a Man ſhould give a Tutor to his Grandfather's Children, it would be a very rare thing. III. John de Medicis, who was afterwards Pope Leo X. was the Son of this Laurence, and not of Coſmo. IV. In order to ſay that Politian wrote thoſe fine Greek and Latin Epiſtles, which are ſo much commended by the Learned, the Publick ſhould have ſeen ſeveral Greek Letters of that Author; but if I am not very much miſtaken, there is but one in the Collection of his Letters. The following Words of Volaterranus, which Moreri read in Voſſius (p), were probably the occaſion of his Miſtake: (q) Mihi ſolebat Epiſtolas cum Græcas tum Latinas ſcribere ſed ſermone vernaculo plures quod frequenter faciebat occupatus, ne naſutus aliquis ſtilo offenſus impræmeditato, præjudicata jam de eo opinione abſcederet. Whereupon, without any farther conſideration, he fancied that we have ſome Greek Letters of Politian in Print. Obſerve by the by, the great Caution of Politian. He knew that he was famous for the Politeneſs of his Style, and that in order to keep up his Reputation, nothing ſhould come from him but what was elaborate. But becauſe his Occupations did not permit him to beſtow a great deal of Time upon the compoſition of his Letters, he reſolved to write often in Italian; for 'tis likely he dealt with his other Friends as he did with Volaterranus. Such is the Slavery of thoſe, who have the Reputation of Writing fine Letters; they dare not write familiarly and careleſly to their Friends. They know their Letters will be ſeen, and deſpiſed, unleſs they be written in a polite Style. Balzac did often groan under that heavy Yoak, and I have read that an ingenious Man envied the Happineſs of his Attorney, who might without any fear begin his Letters thus, I have received yours: This is to let you know. The Manutius's, and the Latin Writers of the ſame Rank, found themſelves reduced to the ſad neceſſity (a) of beſtowing ſeveral Months upon a Letter. I am not therefore ſurprized at what we have juſt now ſeen in the Words of Volaterranus. 'Tis to be obſerved, that this Slavery reaches ſometimes as far as Converſation (b). But to return to Moreri. V. It cannot be ſaid that Politian had a ſhare in the Calamity of the Houſe of Medicis, in which all the Men of Letters that were at Florence, found themſelves involv'd; for he died whilſt Peter de Medicis was ſtill Maſter in his Country. 'Tis true, ſome think he vexed himſelf, when he foreſaw that this Lord would not be able to maintain himſelf, conſidering what Courſe things were ready to take: However, Jovius is of Opinion, that he was a happy Man, (c) becauſe he died before the Fall of that Family. VI. We are not told that he fell into Deſpair, becauſe he could not win the Love of a Lady. He is ſaid to have had a more vicious Paſſion, as we have ſeen (d) above. Don't mind the Paſſage of Peter de St. Romuald. VII. It cannot be ſaid that Jovius believes thoſe Stories; he only mentions them, without affirming them, and makes uſe of the Word ferunt. He is only to blame for not adding, that it was an uncertain Report; for he knew, without doubt, that People were divided in their Opinions about it; which is a ſufficient Reaſon for an Hiſtorian, when he ſays, ſuch a ſlandering Report went about, to add, but ſome look'd upon it as a Calumny. VIII. Ludovicus Vives does not ſay what (e) Moreri fathers upon him.

(Z) Two Controverſial Books againſt Cardinal Bellarmin.] One of 'em is intitled Philoſophia Euchariſtica being a Dwarf θ; but he was endowed with excellent Parts, and accounted one of the greateſt Philoſophers of his Age. He taught Philoſophy at Padua with a wonderful Reputation, having the famous Achillini for his Antagoniſt, whoſe puzzling Objections would have often confounded him, had it not been for his Skill in ſhifting them off (A) with a witty Jeſt. During the dreadful War in which the Venetians were engaged againſt the League of Cambray, he removed to Bologne, where he taught Philoſophy. Tho' he κ was married thrice, he never had but one Daughter, to whom he gave twelve thouſand Ducats for her Portion λ. I know that he did not Die μ in the Year 1512, as Moreri will have it; but the Time of his Death is unknown to me: I only know that ſome ſay he * attained to a great old Age, and ‡ others, that he died of a Retention of Urine in the 63d Year of his Life. His dead Body was removed to Mantua, where Cardinal Hercules de Gonzaga had it decently buried †. That great Philoſopher was brought into Trouble by the Monks, on account of (B) his Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and was ſuſpected of Impiety. The Clamours raiſed againſt him, and the

---

† See his Origines Italiennes at the Word Poliziano, & the 14th Chap. of his Anti-Baillet.

* Towards the end of the 8th Book p. m. 419.

‡ The 66 and 67 of the 1 Book.

† See M. Daillé's Life p. 4.

β See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Dialogue de riſu.

γ The 1ſt came out at Francfort. I make uſe of that of Marpurg 1606. in 8o.

δ Ant. Laurent. Politianus de riſu p. m. 144.

ζ Leand. Albert. deſcript. Italiæ p. 89.

η Lucas Gauricus in Schemat. tract. 4. fol. 57. verſo.

(g) Baillet, Enfans celebres p. 89. 90.

(h) Græcis vero quæ puerum ſe conſcripſiſſe dicit, ætatem nimis prudenter appoſuit ſuam. Tam enim bona ſunt ut ne virorum quidem Latina æque bene ſcripſiſſe putem. Jul. Cæſar Scaliger poët. l. 6. p. m. 740.

(i) Varillas ib. p. 40.

(k) Machiav. Hiſt. Florentine l. 7. p. m. 289.

(l) See his 2d Book of the Anecdotes de Florence.

(m) Jovius in vita Leonis X. l. 1. p. 14.

(n) In the Rem. B.

(o) See the 2d Letter of the 4th Book of Politian's Letters pag. m. 94.

(p) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Lat. p. 618.

(q) Volaterr. l. 21. p. 777.

(a) See Scioppius de ſtilo hiſtorico p. m. 61, 62.

(b) You'll find the following Words in the Menagiana p. 164. of the 1 Dutch Edition, upon occaſion of a Converſation of ſome learned Men. Every Body ſtrived . . . . to ſpeak well, for, contrary to what is now practiſed, People took care to ſpeak correctly, and to avoid Faults, when they met to Diſcourſe together. At laſt every Body being gone, Balzac and I happened to be alone. Then he took me by the Hand, and told me, now that we are alone, let's ſpeak freely, and without fearing to be guilty of a Soleciſm. (c) Eo præpropero vitæ exitu profecto felix fuit quod imminentem convulſæ Medicæ domus ruinam effugerit. Jovius p. 89. (d) In the Rem. F. (e) 'Tis the ſame thing that Voetius aſcribes to Mornay in the Rem. K.

Books

ſtica de potentia & voluntate Dei ex tertio libro Bellarmini de Euchariſtia, expoſita & refutata, Amberg 1604. in 4o. And the other, Philoſophiæ ſeu potius Sophiſticæ Euchariſticæ Bellarmini pars altera refutata, Amberg 1606. in 4o.

(A) His Skill in ſhifting them off with a witty Jeſt.] This I find in Jovius. In coronis, ſays he (f), conſeſſuque doctorum, quum exercitatione perutili ad prætoriam porticum diſputaretur, ita mirus evadebat, ut ſæpe ancipiti, & cornuto Achillini enthymemate circumventus, ſuperfuſo facetiarum ſale, adverſarii impetum, ex illis gyris, & mæandris explicatus eluderet. Nothing can be more convenient in a Diſpute than this Talent of Pomponatius: If you are not able to anſwer an Argument, if you find it puzzling and inſoluble, you may eaſily get off with a witty Jeſt; all the laughing Men will be of your Side, and your Adverſary will be confounded. (g) Solventur riſu tabulæ, tu miſſus abibis. 'Tis upon ſuch an occaſion that this Maxim proves true,

> (h) Ridiculum acri
> Fortius & melius magnas plerunque ſecat res.

I knew a Profeſſor of Philoſophy, who made himſelf dreaded only upon that Account. He was a Man of no Depth, and would have been eaſily confounded in a Publick Diſputation, had it not been for his Jeſts and ſcurrilous Anſwers, which ſet the Aſſembly a laughing. The ſtrongeſt Objections came to nothing by that Means, and he was ſo fully perſuaded that it was the beſt way of anſwering a puzzling Argument, that he made uſe of it, even when he might have made a ſerious and ſolid Anſwer. But after all, Men of Senſe don't reſt ſatisfied with ſuch a Method; they laugh as well as others, but they adjudge the Victory to thoſe who deſerve the Honour of it. Jovius obſerves, that Achillini prevailed in a Diſputation by the inſuperable ſtrength of his Doctrine; tho' Pomponatius, his Antagoniſt, made the Aſſembly merry with his Jeſts, and uſed many ſly Tricks. (i) Æmulum in corona veteratoriè diſputantem, & riſum ſalſa dicacitate ſæpius excitantem, ipſo invicto doctrinæ robore ſuperabat. I muſt obſerve by the by, that Pomponatius made uſe of his Talent like a cunning Man, (k) to get the Scholars of Achillini, who was a plain Man, and unfit for Intrigues.

(B) Brought into Trouble by the Monks, on account of his Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul.] Theſe are Jovius's Words: (l) Exorto bello Veneto, poſt Achillini mortem Bononiæ profeſſus eſt; ubi cucullatos ſacerdotes contra ſe in caput, & nominis famam vehementiſſimè concitavit; edito ſcilicet volumine, quo animas poſt corporis mortem interituras, ex ſententia Ariſtotelis probare nitebatur; ſecutus Aphrodiſæi placita, cujus dogmate ad corrumpendam juventutem, diſſolvendamque Chriſtianæ vitæ diſciplinam, nihil peſtilentius induci potuit. Jovius acts the part of an Hiſtorian, and of a Judge: he ſays not only that Pomponatius endeavouring to prove, that the Soul of Man is not Immortal, according to Ariſtotle's Opinion, expoſed himſelf to the Perſecutions of the Monks, but alſo, that it is the moſt pernicious Doctrine that ever was, and the moſt proper to corrupt Youth and Chriſtian Morality. He is certainly much more in the right, when he keeps within the Bounds of an Hiſtorian, than when he ſets up for a Judge; for it is not at all material, whether Ariſtotle believed the Mortality of the Soul, or whether, according to the Principles laid down by him, one cannot well prove that it is not Mortal. And therefore if Pomponatius maintained only, that any one who ſticks to Ariſtotle's Principles, muſt needs own that it dies with the Body, his Opinion is not pernicious, provided he acknowledges the Immortality of the Soul: but he expreſly and formally acknowledges it. He examines Ariſtotle's Hypotheſis, he declares what may be ſaid for or againſt that Hypotheſis; he brings in the Philoſophical Reaſons that were alledged at that Time, to prove that the Soul is Mortal or Immortal; he obſerves wherein the Strength or the Weakneſs of the Arguments lies on both ſides, and then he concludes, that there being no demonſtrative Reaſon for the Mortality or Immortality of the Soul, that Queſtion ought to be looked upon as a Problematical one. Now, ſays he, ſince it belongs to God to decide the Problematical Queſtions about which Men diſpute, let us enquire whether he teaches us that our Souls are Immortal, and let us keep to his Deciſion, as a definitive and infallible Sentence. Afterwards, he proves by the Old and New Teſtament, that there is a future Life, and declares that his Faith is grounded upon that. Theſe are his Words: (a) His itaque ſic ſe habentibus, mihi (ſalva ſaniori ſententia) in hac materia dicendum videtur, quod quæſtio de immortalitate animæ eſt neutrum problema, ſicut etiam de mundi æternitate: mihi namque videtur quod nullæ rationes naturales adduci poſſint cogentes animam eſſe immortalem, minuſque probantes animam eſſe mortalem, ſicut quamplures Doctores tenentes eam immortalem declarant . . . . . quapropter dicemus ſicut Plato 1. de Legibus certificare de aliquo cum multi ambigunt ſolius eſt Dei; cum itaque tam illuſtres viri inter ſe ambigant, non niſi per Deum hoc certificari poſſe exiſtimo . . . (b) Quapropter dico quod ante donum vel adventum gratiæ, multifariam per Prophetas, & bona ſupernaturalia hanc quæſtionem Deus terminavit, ut manifeſtè per vetus Teſtamentum eſt videre; noviſſimè autem per Filium, quem conſtituit hæredem univerſorum, per quem fecit & ſæcula, eam quæſtionem dilucidavit, ſicut ſcribit Apoſtolus epiſt. ad Hebræos . . . . . (c) Quantò lux diſtat à lucido, & veritas à vero, & quantò cauſa infinita eſt potior effectu finito, tantò efficacius hoc demonſtrat immortalitatem animæ; quare ſi quæ rationes probare videntur mortalitatem animæ, ſunt falſæ & apparentes, cum prima lux, & prima veritas oſtendant oppoſitum, ſi quæ vero videntur probare ejus immortalitatem, veræ quidem ſunt & lucidæ, ſed non lux & veritas; quare hæc ſola via inconcuſſa & ſtabilis eſt, cætera vero ſunt fluctuantes . . . . (d) QUARE INDUBIE (e) ipſam immortalem eſſe aſſerendum eſt: verùm ea non via incedendum eſt quà hujus ſeculi ſapientes inceſſerunt, qui cum ſapientes ſe dixerant ſtulti facti ſunt, quiſquis enim hac via procedet ut exiſtimo ſemper incertus & vagus fluctuabit. How can ſuch a Man be accuſed of Impiety? How can he be taxed with denying the Immortality of the Soul? At this rate one might affirm, that all Divines bring into Queſtion the Trinity, the Incarnation, the Reſurrection, and in general, all the Doctrines which they ground only on Revelation, without pretending that they are diſcovered to us by the Light of Reaſon. The Holy Scriptures being once acknowledged to be the Word of God, will as effectually produce the Belief of the Immortality of the Soul, as a Geometrical Demonſtration. Jovius gives a very wrong Judgment of that Work of Pomponatius. Had he ſaid in general, that the denying of the Immortality of the Soul deſtroys Morality, he would have ſaid a thing which is look'd upon as a common Notion, tho' ſome are of Opinion it is not ſo certain as it ſeems to be; for, ſay they, if we conſider what ſort of Life the Chri-θ Erat puſillus corpore homuncio quodammodo nanus. Id. ib.

ſtians

κ Id. ib.

λ Id. ib.

μ See the Rem. B towards the end.

* Obiit ſenio confectus. Id. ib.

‡ Sexageſimo tertio ætatis anno ſtranguria oborta Bononiæ fato functus eſt. Jovius in elog. c. 71. p. m. 165.

† Id. ib.

(f) Paulus Jovius, in elog. c. 71. p. m. 164.

(g) Horat. ſat. 1. l. 2. verſu ult.

(h) Id. ſat. 10. l. 1. v. 14.

(i) Jovius ib. c. 57. p. 134.

(k) Ipſo Pomponatio acri æmulo inſidioſa ambitione ſcholam ejus depopulante. Erat enim à ſumma ingenii ſimplicitate ambiendi, adulandique prorſus imperitus. Id. ib.

(l) Jovius ub. ſup. c. 71. p. 164.

(a) Petrus Pomponatius de immortalitate animæ c. 15. & ult. p. m. 124.

(b) Id. ib. p. 125.

(c) Id. ib. p. 126.

(d) Id. ib. p. 128.

(e) Note, that his laſt Chap. is intitled, In quo ponitur ultima concluſio in hac materia, quæ ſententia mi videtur indubie ſuſtinenda.

Books publiſhed againſt his Tract, did not make him alter his Opinion: he made ſeveral Replies, and inſtead of giving Ground, (C) went on ſtill, keeping to his firſt Corrective, viz. that the Divine Authority of the Scripture was the Foundation ſtians live, their Lewdneſs, Slanders, Cheats, and whatever they do to get Money and Preferments, or to ſupplant their Competitors, we ſhall find that they could not be worſe, tho' they did not believe a future State. It will be found, generally ſpeaking, that they only forbear doing ſuch things as are attended with Infamy, or a capital Puniſhment: two Curbs, which would put a ſtop to the Corruption of an impious Man, cæteris paribus, as well as to theirs. But this is a Subject that requires a particular Treatiſe.

